Ex tit. 29. Moreover, in the 15th year of the Reign of the foresaid King, it was accorded, for that Sir William Brian Knight, had purchased from Rome a Bull directed from the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, to Excommunicate such as had broken up his House, and had taken away divers Letters, Priviledges and Charters; the same Bull, being read in the Parliament House, was adjudged prejudicial to the Kings Crown, and in derogation of the Lawes: for the which he was by the King, and assent of the Lords, committed to the Tower, there to remain at the Kings will and pleasure.

Vide supra tom. tit. 29. In the said Parliament also, William Archbishop of Canterbury maketh his Protestation in the open Parliament, saying, That the Pope ought not to excommunicate any Bishop, or to intermeddle, for, or touching any presentment to any Ecclesiastical Dignity recorded in any the Kings Courts. He further protested, that the Pope ought to make no translation to any Bishoprick within the Realm against the Kings will; for that the same was to the destruction of the Realm and Crown of England, which hath always been so free, as the same hath had none earthly Sovereign, but hath been subject to God only, in all things touching regalities, and to none other. The which Protestation he prayed might be entred.

Ex An. 17. Reg. Ric. 2. Trini. 33. In the 17th year of the Reign of the King aforesaid, it was desired that remedy might be had against such religious persons as caused their villains or underlings to marry free women inheritable, whereby the Lands came to those religious mens hands by collusion.

Item, That sufficient persons might be presented to Benefices, who may do well on the same, so as their stock for want thereof do not perish.

Item, That remedy might be had against the Abbots of Colchester and Abingtan, who in the Towns of Colchester and Colnham claim to have Sanctuary.

Ex An. 20. Reg. Ric. 2. Tit. 22. To come to the Parliament holden in the 20th year of this Kings Reign; we find moreover in the said Rolls, how that the Archbishops of Canterbury and York for themselves, and the Clergy of their Provinces, declared to the King in open Parliament, That (forasmuch as they were sworn to the Pope and See of Rome) if any thing were in the Parliament attempted in restraint of the same, they would in no wise assent thereto, but verily withstand the same, the which their Protestation they require to be enrolled.

Here the Archbishop of Canterbury goeth contrary to himself.

Upon the Petition of the begging Friers, there at large it was Enacted, That none of that Order should passe over the Seas without licence of his Sovereign, nor that he should take upon him any order of Mr. of Divinity, unless he were first apposed in his Chapter provincial, on paine to be put out of the Kings protection.

Tit. 31.

Tit. 36. Item, That the Kings Officers, for making Arrests or Attachments in Churchyards, are therefore excommunicated, whereof remedy was required.

Ex 21. An. Reg. Ric. 2. p. 15. In the 21st year of the same Kings Reign the Parliament being holden at Westminster, we find how the Commons in full Parliament, accused Thomas Arundel Archbishop of Canterbury, for that he as Chancellor procured, and as chief doer executed the same Commission, made traiterously in the tenth year of the King. And also, That he the said Archbishop procured the Duke of Glocester, and the Earls of Arundel and Warwick, to incroach to themselves Royal Power, and to judge to death Simon de Burley, and Sir John Bernes without the Kings assent. Whereupon the Commons required that the same Archbishop might rest under safe keeping; whereunto, for that the same Impeachments touched so great a person, they would be advised. } KING 2. Ric. 2.

Item, The 25th day of September, the Commons prayed the King to give Judgment against the said Archbishop, according to his deserts. The King answered, that privately the said Archbishop had confessed to him, how he mistook himself in the said Commission, and therefore submitted himself to the Kings mercy: Wherefore the Kings, Lords, and Sir Thomas Percy, Procter for the Clergy, adjudged the fact of the said Archbishop to be Treason, and himself a Traitor; and therefore it was ordered, that the said Archbishop should be banished, his Temporalties seized, his Lands and Goods forfeited, as well in use, as in possession. Ex Thad.

Tho. Arundel Archbishop of Canterbury protected by Parliament by Parliament.

The King further prescribed, that the said Archbishop should take his passing on Friday, within six Weeks of Michaelmas, at Dover, towards the parts of France. Ex tit. 17.

Thus having hitherto sufficiently touched and comprehended such things as have happened in the Reign of this King, necessary for the Church to know, by course of story; we come now to the 22d year of K. Richard's Reign which is the year of our Lord 1399. In the which year happened the strange and also lamentable deposing of this K. Richard the 2d aforesaid from his Kingly Scepter. Strange, for that the like example hath not often been seen in Seats Royal. Lamentable, for that it cannot be but grievous to any good mans heart, to see him either so to deserve, if he were justly deposed, or if he were unjustly deprived, to see the Kingly Title there not able to hold his right, where by force it is compelled to give place to might. { Ann. 1399 The deposing of K. Richard the second. The story strange and lamentable.

As concerning the order and process of whose deposing, for that it neither is greatly pertinent to my argument, and is sufficiently contained in Robert Fabian, and in the Kings Records in the Chronicle of St. Albans, and in other Histories at large, it were here tedious and superfluous to intermeddle with repeating thereof. What were the conditions and properties of this King, partly before hath been touched. In whom as some good vertues may be noted, so also some vices may seem to be mixed withal. But especially this, that he starting out of the steps of his Progenitors, ceased to take part with them, which took part with the Gospel. Whereupon it so fell, not by the blind Wheel of Fortune, but by the secret hand of him which directeth all estates, that as he first began to forsake the maintaining of the Gospel of God, so the Lord began to forsake him. And where the protection of God beginneth to fail, there can lack no causes to be charged withal, whom God once giveth over to mans punishment. So that to me, considering the whole life and trade of this Prince, among all other causes alledged in stories against him, none seemeth so much to be weighed of us, or more hurtful to him than this forsaking of the Lord and his Word. Although to such as list more to be certified in other causes concurring withal, many and sundry defects in that King may appear in stories, to the number of thirty three Articles alledged, or forced rather against him. Vices and vertues what is to be noted in K. Richard. What is to forsake the maintenance of the Gospel.

In which as I cannot deny, but that he was worthy of much blame; so to be displaced therefore from his Regal Seat, and rightfull state of the Crown, it may be thought perhaps the causes not to be so rare, or so material in a Prince, which either could or else would have served; had not he given over before to serve the Lord and his Word, chusing rather to serve the humor of the Pope and bloudy Prelates, than to further the Lords proceedings in preaching of his Word. And then, as I said, how can enemies lack where God standeth not to friend? or what cause can be so little, which is not able enough to cast down, where the Lords arm is shortned to sustain? Wherefore it is a point of principal wisdom in a Prince, not to forget, that as he standeth always in need of Gods helping hand, so always he have the discipline and fear of him before his eyes, according to the counsel of the godly King David, Psal. 2. Articles 33. laid against K. Richard. Gods speciall favour necessary for Princes Psalm 2.

And

{ KING 1 Ric. 2. } And thus much touching the time and race of this King Richard, with the tragical story of his deposing. The order and manner whereof purposely I pretermit, only contented briefly to lay together a few special things done before his fall, such as may be sufficient, in a brief summ, both to satisfie the Reader inquisitive of such stories, and also to forewarn other Princes to beware of the like dangers. In such as write the life and acts of this Prince, thus I read of him reported, that he was much inclined to the favouring and advancing of certain persons about him, and ruled all by their counsel, which were then greatly abhorred and hated in the Realm: The Names of whom were Robert Vere Earl of Oxford, whom the King made Duke of Ireland, Alexander Nevil Archbishop of York, Michael de la Pool Earl of Suffolk, Robert Trisilian Lord Chief Justice, Nicholas Brembre, with other. The King hid with lewd counsel.

These men, being hated and disdained of divers of the Nobles, and of the Commons, the King also by favouring them, was less favoured himself. Insomuch, that the Duke of Glocester, named Thomas Woodstock the Kings Uncle, with the Earl of Warwick, and Earl of Darby, stood up in Arms against those counsellers and abusers (as they named them) of the King. Insomuch that the King for fear was constrained against his mind to remove out of his Court, Alexander Nevil Archbishop of York, John Ford Bishop of Duresme, Frier Thomas Rushoke Bishop of Chicester, the Kings Confessor, with the Lord Haringworth, Lord Burnel, and Bemond, Lord Vere, and divers other.

The Nobles up in arms against certain of the Kings Counsellers. And furthermore, in the Parliament the same year following, Robert Trisilian the Justice was hanged and drawn. Also Nicholas Brembre Knight, James Salisbury also, and James Barnese both Knights, John Bewcamp the Kings Steward, and John Blake Esquire in like manner: All these by the counsel of the Lords being cast in the Parliament against the Kings mind, did suffer, which was in the 11th of his Reign, he being yet under governours; but coming after the same, the King claiming his own liberty, being come to the age of twenty, began to take more upon him. And this was one thing that stirred up the Kings stomach against the Nobles. Ex Chron. Alban. Ex Chron. D. Alban.

The second occasion of the Kings deposing. 2. Another thing that stirred him up as much against the Londoners, was this, for that he would have borrowed of them a Thousand pound, and they denied him, to their double and treble disadvantage, as after ensued upon it. Ibidem. Another occation, betides this between the King and the Londoners happened thus, by reason of one of the Bishop of Salisburys servants, named Roman, and a Bakers man; who then carrying a Basket of Horsebread in in Fleetstreet, the foresaid Roman took a Horse-loaf out of the Basket. The Baker asking him why he did so, the Bishops lusty Yeoman turned back again and brake his head; whereupon the neighbours came out, and would have arrested this Roman, but he escaped away into the Bishops House. Then the Constable would have had him out; but the Bishops men shut fast the Gates, that they should not approach, thus much people gathered together, threatning to burst open the gates, and fire the house, unless they had the foresaid party to them brought out. Whereby much ado there was, till at length the Mayor and Sheriffs came and quieted the rage of the Commons, and sent every man home to his house, charging them to keep peace. Here as yet was no great harm done, but if the Bishop for his part had been quiet, and had not stirred the coals of debate, which were well slacked already, all had been ended without further perturbation. But the stomach of the Bishop not yet digested (although his man had done the wrong) having no great cause so to do, whose name was John Waltam, being then Treasurer of England, went to Thomas Arundel, Archbishop the same time of York, and Lord Chancellor of England, to complain of the Londoners. Where is to be noted, or rather revealed, by the way, a privy mystery, which although it be not in this story touched of the Writers, yet it touched the hearts of the Bishops not a little. For the Londoners at that time were notoriously known to be favourers of Wickliff's side, as partly before this is to be seen, and in the story of S. Albans more plainly doth appear: Where the Author of the said History, writing upon the 15th year of Kings Richard's Reign, reporteth in these words of the Londoners, that they were Male credulii in Deum & traditiones The King banished the Bishop of Salisbury Waltham. Tho. Arundel Archbish. of York. Londoners favourers of Wickliff. Doctrine. Ex Hist. D. Alban. in fine Regis Richardi Willelmi Arg. gentis, &c. avitae, Lollardorum sustentatores, religiosorum detractatores, decimarum detentores, & communis vulgi depauperatores, &c. i. Not right believers in God, nor in the traditions of their forefathers, sustainers of the Lollards, depravers of religious men, withholders of Tithes, and impoverishers of the common people, &c.

Thus the Londoners, being noted and suspected of the Bishops, were the more maliced (no doubt therefore) of the said Bishops which were the more ready to find and take all occasions to work against them, as by their doing herein may well appear. For the Bishop of Salisbury, and Archbishop of York, having no greater matter against them, than was declared, with a grievous complaint went to the King, complaining of the Mayor and Sheriffs of London. What trespass the Mayor and Sheriffs had done, as ye have heard before, so may you judge. Now what followed after let us hear. The King, incensed not a little, with the complaint of the Bishops, conceived offcons against the Mayor and Sheriffs, and against the whole City of London, a great stomach: Insomuch, that the Mayor and both the Sheriffs were sent for, and removed from their Office. Sir Edward Darlington then was made Warden and Governour of the City; who also, for his gentleness shewed to the Citizens, was also deposed, and another named Sir Baldwin Radington, placed in that room. Moreover, so much grew the Kings displeasure against the City, that he also removed from London the Courts, and Terms to be kept at York, that is to say, the Chancery, the Eschequer, the Kings-Bench, the Hamper, and the Common Pleas; where the same continued from Midsummer till Christmas, to the great decay of the City of London; which was Anno 1393. Londoners complained of to the King by the Bishops. Bears pacified. The Court removed from London to York.

3. Another great cause, which purchased the King much evil with amongst his Subjects, was the great murthering of his own Uncle named Thomas Woodstock, Duke of Glocester, of whom mention was made before; where was declared, how the said Duke, with the Earl of Arundel, the Earl of Warwick, and the Earl of Darby, with other, were up in Armour against certain wicked Counsellors about the King. Whereupon the King, watching afterward his time, came into Chelmsford, and so to the place named, where the Duke lay; where with his own hands he arrested the said Duke his Uncle, and sent him down by water immediately to Calis; and there, through the Kings commandment, by secret means he was put to death, being strangled under a Featherbed, the Earl Marshal being then the Keeper of Calis, whereby great indignation rose in many mens hearts against the King. The ad preparative to the Kings deposing. The King arresting his own Uncle, caused him to be put wrongfully to death.

With the same Duke of Glocester also, about the same time, was arrested and imprisoned the Earl of Warwick, and the Earl of Arundel, who, being condemned by Parliament, were then executed, whereby great grudge and great indignation rose in the hearts of many against the King. An. 1397.

Fourthly, to omit here the blank Charts sent over all the Land by the King; and how the King was faid to let out his Realm to farm: Over and beside all these above premised, fell another matter, which was the principal occation of this mischief; The banishment, I mean, of Henry Earl of Darby, made Duke of Hereford a little before, being Son of John of Gaunt the Duke of Lancaster (who died shortly after the banishment of his Son, and lieth buried in the Church of S. Paul in London) and the Duke of Northfolk; who was before Earl of Nottingham, and after by this King made Duke of Northfolk the year before. At which time the King made five Dukes, a Marquess, and four Earls, to wit, Duke of Hereford, which was before Earl of Darby; Duke of Aumerle, which was before Earl of Rutland; Duke of Southrey, who was before Earl of Kent; Duke of Exeter, which was before Earl of Huntington; and this Duke of Northfolk, being before Earl of Nottingham, as is aforesaid, &c. The occasion of banishing these foresaid Dukes was this. Earl of Nottingham made Duke of Northfolk.

About this prefent time the Duke of Hereford did appeach the Duke of Northfolk upon certain words to be spoken against the King: whereupon calling their Gloves one against the other, they appointed to fight out the quarrel, a day being for the same appointed at Coventry. But the King took up the matter in his own hands, banishing the Duke of Northfolk for ever, which after died at Venice; The Duke of Northfolk and Duke of Hereford banished.

Venice; and the other Duke, which was the Duke of Hereford, for 10 years. Beside these, also was exiled into France for ever, for 20 years. Beside these, also was exiled into France for ever, for 20 years. Beside these, also was exiled into France for ever, for 20

Examination about the Sacrament, lasted from 8 of the Clock of the same day, until 11 of the Clock, or thereabouts; insomuch that during all this time the foresaid William would no otherwise answer, neither yet touching the same Sacrament receive Catholick information, according to the institution of the Popes Church, and his Christian Faith. Wherefore the said Canterbury, by the counsel and assent of his whole Covent then and there present, did promulgate and give sentence, by the mouth of Robert Hall, against the same Sir William Sautre (being personally present, and refusing to revoke his Heresies, that is to say, his true Doctrine, but constantly defended the same) under the tenor of words as followeth:

The sentence against Wil. Sautre.

IN the Name of God, Amen. We Thomas by the grace of God Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of England, and Legate of the See Apostolical, by the authority of God Almighty, and blessed Sr. Peter and Paul, and of holy Church, and by our own authority, sitting for Tribunal or chief Judge, having God alone before our eyes, by the counsel and consent of the whole Clergy our fellow brethren and Suffragans, assistants unto us in this present Council Provincial, by this our sentence definitive do pronounce, decree and declare by these presents, thee William Sautre, otherwise called Chawrey, Parish Priest pretensed, personally appearing before us, in and upon the crime of Heresie, judicially and lawfully convict, as an Heretick, and as an Hertick to be punished.

Which sentence definitive being thus read, the foresaid Archbishop of Canterbury continued in the same Provincial Council till Wednesday next and immediately ensuing, to wit, the 24th day of the same Month of February, which being expired, the Bishop of Norwich, according to the commandment of the said Archbishop of Canterbury, presented unto the foresaid William Sautre by a certain friend of his, being present at the same Council, a certain Process inclosed and sealed with his Seal, giving the names of credible witnesses sealed with their seals, the tenor whereof followeth in this wise:

A certain process against Wil. Sautre presented by the Bishop of Norwich.

Memorandum, That upon the last day of April, in the year of our Lord 1399. in the 7. Indiction, and 10 year of the Papacy of Pope Boniface the 2. in a certain Chamber within the Manor House of the said Bishop of Norwich, at South Helingham (where the Register of the said Bishop is kept) before the 9th hour, in a certain Chappel within the said Manor situate, and the first day of May then next and immediately insuing, in the foresaid Chamber Sir W. Chawtrie, Parish Priest of the Church of S. Margaret in the Town of Lin, appeared before the Bishop of Norwich, in the presence of John de Derlington, Archdeacon of Norwich, Doctor of the Decrees, Frier Walter Disse, and John Rikinghal, Professors in Divinity, William Carlton, Doctor of both Laws, and William Frisseby, with Hugh Brisham, Publick Notaries, and there publickly affirmed and held the Conclusions, as before is specified.

All and singular the premisses the foresaid William affirmeth upon mature deliberation. And afterwards, to wit, the 19th day of May in the year, Indiction and Papacy aforesaid, in the Chappel within the Manor house of the said Henry Bishop of Norwich situate at South Helingham, the foresaid Sir William revoked and renounced all and singular the foresaid his Conclusions; abjuring and correcting all such Heresies and Errors, taking his Oath upon a Book before the foresaid Henry the Bishop of Norwich, that from that time forward he would never preach, affirm nor hold, privily nor apertly, the foresaid Conclusions; and that he would pronounce, according to the appointment of the said Bishop, the foresaid Conclusions to be erroneous and heresies in the Parish Churches of Lin, and Timey, and in other places at the affignment of the said Bishop; and further sware, that he would stand to the ordinance of the said Bishop touching the premisses, in the presence of the discreet and worshipful men afore-recited, with divers other more.

As concerning the first Conclusion, that he said he would not worship the Cross, &c. he confessed himself to have erred, and that the Article was erroneous, and submitted himself. And as touching the second Article, that he said he would rather worship a King, &c. he confessed himself to have erred, and the Article to be erroneous, and submitted himself, and so forth of all the rest. {KING 1. Hen. 4.}

Then next after this, upon the 25th day of May in the year of our Lord aforesaid, in the Churchyard of the Chappel of St. James within the Town of Lin, the foresaid William, in presence of the foresaid Bishop and Clergy, and the people of the said Town of Lin standing round about, publickly declared in the English Tongue, the foresaid Conclusions to be erroneous and Heresies, as was contained in a certain Scrole. And after this, the 26th day of May in the year abovesaid, in the Church of the Hospital of S. Johns in the Town of Lin, the said Sir William, before the said Bishop sitting as judge, sware and took his Oath upon the holy Evangelists, that he would never after that time preach openly and publickly the foresaid Conclusions, nor would hear the confessions of any of the Subjects of his Diocese of Norwich, without the special licence of the said Bishop, &c. In the presence of Frier John Smermen, Mr. John Rikinghal Doctor of Divinity, William Carlton Doctor of both Laws, and Thomas Bulton Officer of the liberty of Lin aforesaid, with divers others.

The tenor of the Scrole and Recantation.

IMprimis, Touching the first and second, where I said, That I would adore rather a temporal Prince, and the lively bodies of the Saints, than the wooden Cross whereupon the Lord did hang, I do revoke and recant the same, as being therein deceived. 1. 2.

To this I say, that the Article is false and erroneous, and by false information I held it; the which I renounce and ask forgiveness thereof, and say, that it is a precious Relick, and that I shall hold it while I live, and that I swear here. 3.

I know well that I erred wrongfully by false information; for I wot well, that a Deacon or a Priest is more bound to say his Mattens and hours, than to preach; for thereto he is bounden by right; wherefore I submit me, &c. 4.

Touching that Article, I know right well that I erred by false information. Wherefore I ask forgiveness. 5.

As concerning Vous, I say that opinion is false and erroneous, and by false information I held it; for a man is holden to hold his Vow, &c. 6.

To the 7th Article I say, that I did it by authority of Priesthood, wherethrough I knowledge well that I gave guilt and trespassed; wherefore I submit me to God and to holy Church, and to you father, swearing that I shall never hold it more. 7.

To the 8th I say, that I held it by false and wrong information. But now I know well that it is Heresie, and that bread, anon as the word of the Sacrament is said, is no longer bread material, but that it is turned into very Christs body; and that I swear here. 8.

I say, that this is false and erroneous, &c. 9.

I say as I said, &c. 10.

This being done the 22d of February aforesaid, in the year of our Lord 1400. in the Chapter house of S. Paul in London aforesaid; the foresaid Archbishop of Canterbury, in the Convocation of his Prelates, and Clergy, and such like men there being present, caused the fore-recited process of the Bishop of Norwich, to be read openly and publickly to Sir William Sautre, otherwise called Chautris. And afterward he asked the said Sir William, whether he plainly understood and knew such Process and the contents within the same; and he said, yea. And further he demanded of him, if he would or could say or object any thing against the Process, and he said, No. And after that incontinent, the foresaid Archbishop of Canterbury demanded and objected against the said Sir William, as divers others more did; That after he had before the Bishop of Norwich revoked and abjured judicially divers errors and heresies, among other errors and heresies by him taught, holden, and preached, he affirmed, That in the same Sacrament of the Altar, after the Consecration made by the Priest, as he taught, there remained material bread; which heresie amongst others as errors alfo he abjured before the foresaid Bishop of Norwich. Hereunto the foresaid William answered, smiling, or in mocking wise, saying, and denying that he knew of the premisses. Notwithstanding, he publickly Process presented W. Sautre.

Ex Regist. Cantuar.

{KING 1. Hen. 4.} lickly affirmed, That he held and taught the foresaid things after the date of the said Process made by the said Bishop of Norwich, and that in the same Council also he held the same. Then finally it was demanded of the said Sir William, why he ought not to be pronounced as a man fallen into Heresie, and why they should not further proceed unto his degradation according to the Canonical Sanctions: whereunto he answered nothing, neither could he alledge any cause to the contrary.

Whereupon the foresaid Archbishop of Canterbury by the counsel and assent of the whole Council, and especially by the counsel and assent of the Reverend Fathers and Bishops, as also Priors, Deans, Archdeacons, and other worshipful Doctors and Clerks then and there present in the Council, fully determined to proceed to the degradation, and actual deposing of the said William Sautre, as resallen into Heresie and as incorrigible, according to the Sentence definitive put in writing, the tenor whereof is in words as followeth.

Sentence of degr.

In the Name of God, Amen. We Thomas by the Grace of God Archbishop of Canterbury, Legate of the See Apostolical, and Metropolitan of all England, do find and declare, That thou William Sautre, otherwise called Chautris Priest, by us with the counsel and assent of all and singular our fellow brethren and whole Clergy, by this our Sentence definitive declared in writing, hast been for Heresie convict and condemned, and art (being again fallen into Heresie) to be deposed and degraded by these presents.

And from that day being Wednesday, there was in the said Council Provincial nothing further prosecuted, but was continued with all dependents till the Friday next ensuing. Which Friday approaching, Master Nicholas Rifhton, by the commandment of the said Archbishop of Canterbury, being then buised, as he said, in the Parliament House, continued this Council and Convocation with all incidents, dependents, and occasions, growing and annexed thereunto the next day, to wit, Saturday next and immediately after ensuing. Upon Saturday, being the 26th of the said month of February, the foresaid Archbishop of Canterbury sate in the Bishops Seat of the foresaid Church of S. Paul in London, and solemnly apparelled in his Pontifical attire, fitting with him as his assistants there Reverend Fathers and Bishops, of London, Lincoln, Hereford, Exeter, Menevensis & Roffensis Episcopi, above mentioned, commanded and caused the said Sir William Sautre, apparelled in Priestly Vestments, to be brought and appear before him. That done, he declared and expounded in English to all the Clergy and people there in great multitude assembled; That all Process was finished and ended against the said Sir William Sautre. Which thing finished, before the pronuncing of the said Sentence of Relapse against the said Sir William, as is premised, he often then and there recited and read. And for that he saw the said William in that behalf nothing abashed; he proceeded to his degradation and actual depofition in form as followeth.

Sentence of deprivation.

IN Nomine patris, & filii, & spiritus sancti. We Thomas by Gods permission Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apostolick See, do denounce thee William Sautre, otherwise called Chautris, Chaplain fained, in the habit and apparel of a Priest, as an Heretick, and one resallen into Heresie, by this our Sentence definitive, by counsel, assent, and authority to be condemned; and by conclusion of all our fellow Brethren, fellow Bishops, Prelates, Council Provincial, and of the whole Clergy, do degrade and deprive thee of thy Priestly Order. And in sign of degradation and actual depofition from thy Priestly Dignity, for thine incorrigibility and want of amendment, we take from thee the Patent and Chalice, and do deprive thee of all power and authority of celebrating the Mass, and also we pull from thy back the Casule, and take from thee the Vestment, and deprive thee of all manner of Priestly honour.

The Patent and Chalice taken from him.

Also, we Thomas the aforesaid Archbishop by authority, counsel, and assent, which upon the foresaid William we have, being Deacon pretensed, in the habit and apparel of a Deacon, having the New Testament in thy hands, being an Heretick, and twice fallen, condemned by Sentence as is aforesaid, do degrade and put thee from the Order of a Deacon. And in token of this thy degradation and actual depofition, we take from thee the Book of the New Testament, and the Stole, and do deprive thee of all authority in reading of the Gospel, and of all and all manner of Dignity of a Deacon.

The Book of the New Testament taken from him.

Item, We Thomas Archbishop aforesaid, by authority, counsel, and assent, which over thee the foresaid William we have, being a Sub-deacon pretensed, in the habit and Vestiment of a Sub-deacon, an Heretick, and twice fallen, condemned by sentence, as is aforesaid, do degrade and put thee from the Order of a Sub-deacon; And in token of this thy degradation and actual depofition, we take from thee the Albe and Maniple, and do deprive thee of all manner of Sub-diaconical Dignity.

The Albe taken from him.

Also, we Thomas Archbishop aforesaid, by counsel assent, and authority which we have over thee the foresaid William, an Acolyte pretensed, wearing the habit of an Acolyte, and Heretick, twice fallen, by our sentence, as is aforesaid, condemned, do degrade and put from thee all Order of an Acolyte; and in sign and token of this thy degradation, and actual depofition, we take from thee the Candlestick and Taper, and also Urceolum, and do deprive thee of all and all manner dignity of an Acolyte.

The Candlestick and Taper taken from him.

Also we Thomas Archbishop aforesaid, by assent, counsel, and authority, which upon thee the foresaid William we have, an Exorcist pretensed, in the habit of an Exorcist or Holy-water Clerk, being an Heretick, twice fallen, and by our sentence as is aforesaid, condemned, do degrade and depose thee from the Order of an Exorcist; And in token of this thy degradation and actual depofition, we take from thee the Book of Conjurations, and do deprive thee of all and singular dignity of an Exorcist.

The Holy-water Book taken from him.

Also, we Thomas Archbishop aforesaid, by assent, counsel, and authority, as is abovesaid, do degrade and depose thee the foresaid William, Reader pretensed, clothed in the habit of a Reader, an Heretick, twice fallen, and by our sentence as is aforesaid, condemned from the order of a Reader; And in token of this thy degradation and actual depofition, we take from thee the Book of the Divine Lections (that is the Book of the Church Legend) and do deprive thee of all and singular manner of dignity of such a Reader.

He meaneth the Legend Book, as saith the Registers.

Item, We Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury aforesaid, by authority, counsel and assent, the which we have, as is aforesaid, do degrade and put thee the foresaid William Sautre, Sexton pretensed, in the habit of a Sexton, and wearing a Surplice, being an Heretick twice fallen, by our sentence definitive condemned, as aforesaid from the Order of a Sexton; And in token of this thy degradation and actual depofition, for the causes aforesaid, we take from thee the Keys of the Church-door, and thy Surplice, and do deprive thee of all and singular manner of commodities of a Door-keeper.

The Surplice taken from him.

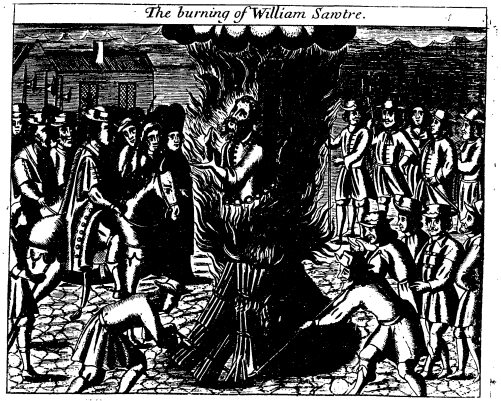
The Church door Keys taken from him.

And also, by the authority of Omnipotent God the Father, the Son, and Holy Ghost, and by our authority, counsel, and assent, of our whole Council Provincial above written, we do degrade thee, and depose thee, being here personally present before us, from Orders, Benefices, Privileges and Habit in the Church; and for thy pertinency incorrigible we do degrade thee before the secular Court of the High Constable and Marshal of England, being personally present; and do depose thee from all and singular Clerkly honours and dignities whatsoever, by these writings. Also, in token of thy degradation and depofition, here actually we have caused thy Crown and Ecclesiastical Tonsure in our presence to be razed away, and utterly to be abolished, like unto the form of a secular Lay-man; and here we do put upon the head of thee the foresaid William the Cap of a Lay secular person; beseeching the Court aforesaid, that they will receive favourably the said William unto them thus recommitted.

Privileedge of the Clergy taken from him.

The Priests Cap taken from his head, meeth up all in all.

Thus William Sautre the servant of Christ, being utterly thrust out of the Popes Kingdom, and metamorphosed from a Clerk to a secular Lay-man, was committed (as ye have heard) unto the secular power. Which so done, the Bishops, yet not herewith contented, cease not to call upon the King, to cause him to be brought forth to speedy Execution. Whereupon the King, ready enough and too much to gratifie the Clergy, and to retain their favours, directeth out a terrible Decree against the said William Sautre, and sent it to the Major and Sheriffs of London to be put in execution; the tenour whereof hereunder ensueth.



The Decree of the King againſt William Sawtre.

The cruel decree of the King againſt Sawtre.

THE Decree of our Soveraign Lord the King and his Council in the Parliament, againſt a certain new ſprung up Heretick. To the Major and Sheriffs of London, &c. Whereas the Reverend Father Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See, by the aſſent, conſent, and counſel of other Biſhops, and his Brethren Suffragans, and alſo of all the whole Clergy within his Province or Dioceſs, gathered together in his Provincial Council, the due order of the Law being obſerved in all points in this behalf, hath pronounced and declared, by his definitive ſentence, William Sawtre ſometime Chaplain fallen again into his moſt damnable Herſie, the which before time the ſaid William had abjured, thereupon to be a moſt manifeſt Heretick, and therefore hath decreed that he ſhould be degraded, and hath for the ſame cauſe really degraded him from all prerogative and priviledge of the Clergy, decreeing to leave him unto the ſecular power; and hath really ſo left him, according to the Laws and Canonical Sanctions ſet forth in this behalf, and alſo that our Holy Mother the Church hath no further to do in the premiſſes: we therefore being zealous in Religion, and reverend lovers of the Catholick Faith, willing and minding to maintain and defend the Holy Church, and the Laws and the Liberties of the ſame, to root all ſuch Errors and Herefies out of our Kingdom of England, and with condigne puniſhment to correct and puniſh all Hereticks or ſuch as be convict; provided always that both according to the Law of God and Man, and the Canonical inſtitutions in this behalf accuſtomed, ſuch Hereticks convict and condemned in form aforeſaid ought to be burned with fire: We command you, as ſtraitly as we may, or can, firmly enjoyning you that you do cauſe the ſaid William, being in your cuſtody, in ſome publick oropen place within the liberties of your City aforeſaid (the cauſe aforeſaid being publiſhed unto the people) to beput into the fire, and there in the ſame fire really to be burned, to the great horror of his offence, and the manifeſt example of other Chriſtians. Fail not in the execution thereof, upon the peril that will fall thereupon: Teſte Rege, apud Weſtm. 26. Febr. Ao. Regni ſui.

{KING. Hen.4.} Precedents ſeldom without knowledge.

The burning of William Sawtre.

Admoniſtion to Princes.

Thus it may appear how Kings and Princes have been blinded and abuſed by the falſe Prelates of the Church, inſomuch that they have been their ſlaves and butchers, to ſlay Chriſts poor innocent members. See therefore what danger it is for Princes not to have knowledge and underſtanding themſelves, but to be led by other Mens eyes, and ſpecially truſting to ſuch guids, who through hypocriſie both deceive them, and through cruelty devour the people.

King Henry the firſt of Engliſh Kings that tormented the Chriſtians with fire.

As King Henry the Fourth, who was the depoſer of King Richard, was the firſt of all Engliſh Kings that began the unmerciful burning of Chriſts Saints for ſtanding againſt the Pope: ſo was this William Sawtre, the true and faithful Martyr of Chriſt, the firſt of all them in Wickliffs time, which I find to be burned in the Reign of the foreſaid King, which was in the year of our Lord, 1400.

After the Martyrdom of this godly Man, the reſt of the ſame Company began to keep themſelves more cloſely for fear of the King, who was altogether bent to hold with the Popes Prelacy. Such was the Reign of this Prince, that to the godly he was ever terrible, in his actions immeaſurable, of few Men heartily beloved; but Princes never lack flatterers about them. Neither was the time of his Reign very quiet, but full of trouble, of blood and miſery. Such was their deſire of King Richard again in the Reign of this King, that many years after he was rumored to be alive (of them which deſired belike that to be true which they knew to be falſe) for the which divers were executed. For the ſpace of ſix or ſeven years together almoſt no year paſſed without ſome conſpiracy againſt the King. Long it were here to recite the blood of all ſuch Nobles and others, which was ſpilt in the Reign of this King, as the Earl of * Kent, Earl of Salisbury, Earl of Huntington, named John Holland, &c. as writeth the ſtory of S. Albans. But the Engliſh writers differ ſomthing in their names, and make mention of four Earls, of Surrey, of Exceſter, of Salisbury, and Lord Spencer Earl of Gloceſter. Ex lib. cui tit. Calendarium Brutt.

Much murder and bleeding in the time of King Henry the Fourth. * It is to be doubted.

And the next year following Sir John Clarendon Knight, with two of his ſervants, the Prior of Launde, with eight Friers, were hanged and quartered. And after theſe Henry Percy the younger, the Earl of Worceſter, named Thomas Percy his Uncle, Lord of Kinderton, and Lord Richard de Vernova. The Earl of Northumberland ſcarce eſcaped with his pardon, An. 1403. In the which year the priſon in Cornhil called the Tun, was turned into the Conduit there now ſtanding.

{KING. Hen.4.} Winterſel Eſquire; Alſo the ſame year was taken and Executed Sir Bernard Brookes Knight, Sir John Shilley Knight, Sir John Mandelin and William Frierby. After all theſe Lord Henry Earl of Northumberland, and Lord Bardolf, conſpiring the Kings death, were taken in the North and beheaded, which was in the eighth year of this King Henry.

Archbiſhop of York and Lord Mowbray againſt King Henry the Fourth.

This civil Rebellion of ſo many Nobles, and other, againſt the King, declared what grudging hearts the people then bare toward this King Henry. Among whom I cannot pretermit here alſo the Archbiſhop of York named Richard Scrope, who with the Lord Moubray, Marſhal of England, gathered a great company in the North Country againſt the foreſaid King, to whom alſo was adjoyned the help of Lord Bardolf, and Henry Percy Earl of Northumberland. Ex Chron. D. Albani. And to ſtir up the people more willingly to take their parts, they collected certain Articles againſt the ſaid King, to the number of ten, and faſtned them upon the doors of the Churches and Monaſteries, to be read of all Men in Engliſh. Which Articles if any be diſpoſed to underſtand, forſomuch as the ſame alſo contain a great part of the doings between King Henry and King Richard aforeſaid, I thought, for the better opening of the matter hereunder to inſert the ſame, in ſuch form as I found them in the ſtory of Scala mundi expreſſed.

Lord Bardolf, Henry Percy Earl of Northumberland againſt the King. Ex Hiſtor. Scala Mundi. Articles fet upon Church doors againſt King Henry 4.

Articles ſet upon Church Doors againſt King Henry the Fourth.

{ANNO 1401.} IN the Name of God, Amen. Before the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, judge of the quick and dead, &c. We A. B. C. D. &c. not long ſithence became bound by oath upon the Sacred Evangelical Book, unto our Soveraign Lord Richard, late King of England and France, in the preſence of many Prelates, Potentates and Nobility of the Realm; that we, ſo long as we lived, ſhould bear true allegiance and fidelity toward him and his heirs ſucceeding him in the Kingdom by juſt title, right, and line, according to the ſtatutes and cuſtom of this Realm of England: By vertue whereof we are bound to foreſee that no vices, or hainous offences ariſing in the Common-weal, do take effect or wiſhed end, and we ought to give our ſelves and our goods to withſtand the ſame, without fear of the ſword or death whatſoever, upon pain of perjury, which pain is Everlaſting Damnation. Wherefore we ſeeing and perceiving divers horrible crimes, and great enormities daily without ceaſing to be committed by the Children of the Devil and Satans Souldiers againſt the ſupremacy of the Church of Rome, the liberty of the Church of England, and the Laws of the Realm, againſt the perſon of King Richard and his heirs, againſt the Prelates, Noble-men, Religion, and Commonalty, and finally againſt the whole Weal publick of the Realm England, to the great offence of the Majeſty of Almighty God, and to the provocation of his juſt wrath and vengeance toward the Realm and people of the ſame. And fearing alſo the deſtruction both of the Church of Rome and England, and the ruine of our Country to be at hand, having before our eyes the juſtice and the Kingdom of God, calling always on the name of Jeſus, having an aſſured confidence in his Clemency, Mercy and Power; Have here taken unto us certain Articles, ſubſcribed in form following, to be propounded, tried, and heard before the juſt Judge, Jeſus Chriſt, and the whole world, to his honor, the delivery of the Church, the Clergy, and Commonalty, and to the utility and profit of the Weal Publick. But if (which God forbid) by force, fear, or violence of wicked perſons we ſhall be caſt in priſon, or by violent death prevented, ſo as in this world we ſhall not be able to prove the ſaid Articles as we would wiſh, then do we appeal to the high Celeſtial Judge, that he may judge and diſcern the ſame, in the day of his ſupreme judgment.

King Henry perjured.

A Bill of Articles ſet up againſt King Henry the Fourth.

1. Firſt, We depoſe, ſay, except, and intend to prove againſt the Lord Henry Darby, Son of the Lord John of Gaunt, late Duke of Lancaſter, and commonly called King of England (himſelf pretending the ſame, although without all right and title thereunto) and againſt his adherents, fautours, and complices; that ever they have been, are, and will be Traitors, invaders, and deſtroyers of Gods Church in Rome, England, Wales, and Ireland, and of our Soveraign Lord Richard late King of England, his heirs, his Kingdom, and Common-wealth, as ſhall hereafter manifeſtly appear.

2. Secondarily, We depoſe, &c. againſt the ſaid Lord Henry, for that he had conceived, deviſed, and conſpired certain hainous crimes and traiterous offences againſt his ſaid Soveraign Lord Richard his State and Dignity, as manifeſtly did appear in the contention between the ſaid Lord Henry, and the Lord Thomas Duke of Northfolk begun at Coventry, but not finiſhed throughly. Afterwards he was ſent into exile by ſentence of the ſaid King Richard, by the agreement of his Father the Lord John Duke of Lancaſter, by the voice of divers of the Lords Temporal, and Nobility of the Realm, and alſo by his own conſent; there to remain for a certain time appointed unto him by the ſaid Lords, and withal he was bound by oath not to return into England before he had obtained favour and grace of the King. Not long after, when the King was departed into Ireland for reformation of that Country appertaining to the Crown of England, but as then rebelling againſt the ſame; the ſaid Lord Henry in the mean time contrary to his oath and fidelity, and long before the time limited unto him was expired, with all his fautours and invaders ſecretly entred into the Realm, ſweaning and proteſting before the face of the people, that his coming into the Realm in the abſence of the King was for none other cauſe, but that he might in humble ſort with the love and favour of the King, and all the Lords Spiritual, and Temporal, have and enjoy his lawful inheritance deſcending unto him of right after the death of his Father: which thing as it pleaſed all Men, ſo cryed they, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. But how this bleſſing afterward turned into curſing, ſhall appear in that which followeth: and alſo ye ſhall underſtand his horrible and wicked conſpiracy againſt his Soveraign Lord King Richard, and divers other Lords as well ſpiritual as temporal; beſides that his manifeſt perjury ſhall well be known, and that he remaineth not only forſworn and perjured, but alſo Excommunicate, for that he conſpired againſt his Soveraign Lord our King. Wherefore we pronounce him by theſe preſents aſwel perjured, as Excommunicate.

King Henry charged with untruth.

3. Thirdly, We depoſe, &c. againſt the Lord Henry, that he the ſaid Lord Henry, immediately after his entry into England, by craftly and ſubtil policy cauſed to be proclaimed openly throughout the Realm, that no tenths of the Clergy, fifteens of the people, ſealing up of Cloth, diminution of Wool, impoſt of Wine, nor other extortions or exactions whatſoever, ſhould hereafter be required or exacted; hoping by this means to purchaſe unto him the voice and favour of the Prelates Spiritual, the Lords Temporal, the Merchants, and Commonalty of the whole Realm. After this he took by force the Kings Caſtles and Fortreſſes, ſpoiled and devoured his goods wherſoever he found it, crying, Havock, Havock. The Kings Majeſties ſubjects as well Spiritual as Temporal, he ſpoiled and robbed, ſome he took Captive and Imprifoned them, and ſome he ſlew and put to miſerable death, whereof many were Biſhops, Prelates, Prieſts, and Religious Men. Whereby it is manifeſt, That the ſaid Lord Henry is not only perjured, in promiting and ſwearing that there ſhould be hereafter no more exactions, paiments, or extortions within the Realm, but alſo Excommunicate for the violence and injury done to Prelates and Prieſts. Wherefore by theſe preſents we pronounce him, as afore, as well perjured, as Excommunicate.

King Henry charged with Treaſon againſt his Soveraign.

4. Fourthly, We depoſe, &c. againſt the ſaid Lord Henry, That he, hearing of the Kings return from Ireland into Wales, roſe up againſt his Soveraign Lord the King with many thouſands of armed Men, marching forward with all his power towards the Caſtle of Flint in Wales, where he took the King and held him priſoner, and ſo led him Captive as a Traitor unto Liceſter; from whence he took his journey towards London, miſuſing the King by the way, both he and his, with many injuries and opprobrious contumelies and ſcoffs. And in the end committed him to the Tower of London, and held a Parliament, the King being abſent and in priſon: wherein for fear of death he compelled the King to yield and reſign unto him all his right and title of the Kingdom and Crown of England. After which reſignation being made, the ſaid Lord

Henry standing up in the Parliament House, stoutly and proudly before them all, said and affirmed, That the Kingdom of England and Crown of the same, with all thereunto belonging, did pertain unto him at that present, as of very right, and to no other; for that the said King Richard by his own Deed was deprived for ever of all the right, title, and interest that ever he had, hath, or may have in the same. And thus at length by right and wrong he exalted himself unto the Throne of the Kingdom: since which time, our Common-weal never flourished nor prospered, but altogether hath been void of vertue, for that the spiritualty was so oppressed, exercise and war-like practices have not been maintained, Charity is waxed cold, and covetousness and misery hath taken place, and finally mercy is taken away and vengeance supplieth the room. Whereby it doth appear (as before is said) That the said Lord Henry is not only perjured and false by usurping the Kingdom and Dominion belonging to another, but also Excommunicate for the apprehending, unjust imprisoning, and depriving his Soveraign Lord the King of his Royal Crown and Dignity. Wherefore, as in the Articles before, we pronounce the said Lord Henry to be Excommunicate.

5. Fifthly, We depose, &c. against the said Lord Henry, that he the same Lord Henry with the rest of his favourers and complices, heaping mischief upon mischief, have committed and brought to pass a most wicked and mischievous fact, yea, such as hath not been heard of at any time before. For after that they had taken and imprisoned the King, and deposed him by open injury against all humane nature; yet, not content with this, they brought him to Pomfret Castle, and there imprisoned him, where fifteen days and nights they vexed him with continual hunger, thirst, and cold, and finally bereft him of life with such a kind of death as never before that time was known in England, but by Gods Providence it is come to light. Who ever heard of such a deed, or who ever saw the like of him? Wherefore, O England, arise, stand up, avenge the cause, the death and injury of thy King and Prince: which if thou do not, take this for certain, that the Righteous God will destroy thee by strange invasions and foreign power, and avenge himself on thee for this so horrible an act. Whereby doth appear not only his perjury, but also his Excommunication most execrable; so that, as before, we pronounce the said Henry not only perjured, but also Excommunicate.

King Henry charged with murdering of his Prince.

6. Sixthly, We depose, &c. against the said Lord Henry, That after he had attained to the Crown and Scepter of the Kingdom, he caused forthwith to be apprehended divers Lords Spiritual, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, and Religious Men of all Orders, whom he arrested, imprisoned, and bound, and against all order brought them before the secular Judges to be examined; not sparing the Bishops whose bodies were annointed with Sacred Oyl, nor Priests nor Religious Men, but commanded them to be condemned, hanged, and beheaded by the Temporal Law and judgment, notwithstanding the priviledge of the Church and Holy Orders, which he ought to have reverenced and worshipped, if he had been a true and lawful King: for the first and chiefest Oath in the Coronation of a lawful King is, to defend and keep inviolate the liberties and rights of the Church, and not to deliver any Priest or Religious Man into the hands of the Secular Power, except for Heresie only, and that after his degradation, according to the order of the Church. Contrary unto all this hath he done; so that it is manifest by this Article as afore in the rest, that he is both perjured, and Excommunicate.

King Henry charged with orders of the Church.

7. Seventhly, We depose, &c. against the said Lord Henry, That not only he caused to be put to death the Lords Spiritual and other Religious Men, but also divers of the Lords Temporal and Nobility of the Realm, and chiefly those that studied for the preservation of the Common-weal, not ceasing as yet to continue his mischievous enterprise, if by Gods Providence it be not prevented, and that with speed: Amongst all other of the Nobility, these first he put to death; the Earl of Salisbury, the Earl of Huntington, the Earl of Gloucester, the Lord Roger Clavendon the Kings Brother, with divers other Knights and Esquires; and afterwards, the Lord Thomas Percy Earl of Worcester, and the Lord Henry Percy Son and Heir to the Earl of Northumberland; the which Lord Henry he not only slew, but to the uttermost of his power again and again he caused him to be slain. For after that he was once put to death, and delivered to the Lord of Furnile to be buried (who committed his body to Holy Sepulture, with as much honor as might be, commending his soul to Almighty God with the Suffrages of blessed Mass and other Prayers) the said Lord Henry, most like a cruel beast still thirsting his blood, caused his body to be exhumate and brought forth again, and to be reposed between two Mil-stones in the Town of Shrewsbury, there to be kept with armed men; and afterwards to be beheaded and quartered, commanding his head and quarters to be carried into divers Cities of the Kingdom. Wherefore, for so detestable a fact never heard of in any age before, we pronounce him, as in the former Articles, Excommunicate.

{KING Hen.4.}

8. Eighthly, We depose, &c. against the said Lord Henry, For that after his attaining to the Crown he willingly ratified, allowed, and approved a most wicked Statute set forth and renewed in the Parliament holden at Winchester. The which Statute is directly against the Church of Rome, and the power, and principality thereof given by our Lord Jesus Christ unto blessed S. Peter and his successors Bishops of Rome; unto whom belongeth by authority the free disposing of all spiritual promotions as well superior as inferior: which wicked Statute is the cause of many mischiefs, viz. of Simony, Injury, Adultery, Incest, Misorder, and Disobedience; for that many Bishops, Abbots, Priors, and Prelates (we will not say by vertue, but rather by error of this Statute) have bestowed the Benefices vacant upon young Men, rude and unworthy persons, which have compacted with them for the same, so that scarce one Prelate is found that hath not covenanted with the party promoted for the half yearly, or, at the least, the third part of the said Benefice so bestowed. And by this means the said Statute is the destruction of the right of S. Peter, the Church of Rome and England, the Clergy and Universities, the whole Common-weal, and maintenance of Wars, &c.

The King charged with evil government

9. Nimthly, We say and depose, &c. against the said Lord Henry, That after he had Tyrannously taken upon him the Government of the Realm, England never flourished since, nor prospered, by reason of his continual exactions of money, and oppressions yearly of the Clergy and Commonalty: neither is it known how this money so extorted is bestowed, when as neither his Souldiers, nor his Gentlemen are payed as yet their wages and fees for their charges, and wonderful toil and labor, neither yet the poor Country people are satisfied for the victual taken of them: And nevertheless the miserable Clergy, and more miserable Commonalty, are forced still to pay by menaces and sharp threatnings. Notwithstanding he sware, when he first usurped the Crown, that hereafter there should be no such exactions nor vexations, neither of the Clergy nor Laity. Wherefore, as afore, we pronounce him Perjured, &c.

King Henry charged with oppression and perjury.

10. In the tenth and last Article we depose, say, and openly protest by these presents, for our selves, and all our assistants in the cause of the Church of Rome and England, and in the cause of King Richard, his Heirs, the Clergy and Commonalty of the whole Realm; that neither our intention is, was, nor shall be, in word or deed to offend any state either of the Prelates Spiritual, Lords Temporal, or Commons of the Realm; but rather, foreseeing the perdition and destruction of this Realm to approach, we have been brought before you certain Articles concerning the destruction of the same, to be circumspectly considered of the whole Assembly, as well of the Lords Spiritual as Temporal, and the faithful Commons of England; beseeching you all in the bowels of Jesus Christ the Righteous Judge, and for the merits of our blessed Lady the Mother of God, and of Saint George our Defender, under whose displayed Banner we with to live and die, and under pain of Damnation, that ye will be favourable to us, and to our causes wich are three in number. Whereof the first is, That we exalt unto the Kingdom the true and Lawful Heir, and him to Crown in Kingly Throne with the Diadem of England. And secondly, That we revoke the Welsh-men, the Irish-men, and all other our Enemies unto perpetual peace and amity. Thirdly, and finally, That we deliver and make free our Native Country from all Exactions,

Three causes declared.

Extortions,

{KING Hen.4.} extortions, and unjust payment; beseeching our Lord Jesus Christ to grant his blessing, the remission of their sins, and life everlasting to all that assist us to their power in this godly and meritorious work; and unto all those that are against us we threaten the Curse of Almighty God, by the authority committed unto us by Christ and his Holy Church, and by these presents we pronounce them Excommunicate.

These Articles being seen and read, much concourse of people daily resorted more and more to the Archbishop. The Earl of Westmorland (being then not far off, with John the Kings Son) hearing of this, mustred his Souldiers with all the power he was able to make, and bent toward the Archbishop: but seeing his part too weak to encounter with him, he useth practice of policy, where strength would not serve. And first coming to him under colour of friendship dissembled, he laboured to seek out the causes of that great stir. To whom the Archbishop again answering no hurt to be intended thereby, but profit rather to the King and Common-wealth, and maintenance of publick peace: but forsomuch as he stood in great fear and danger of the King, he was therefore compelled so to do. And withal he shewed unto him the contents of the Articles aforesaid; which when the Earl had read, setting a fair face upon it, he seemed highly to commend the purpose and doings of the Bishop: promiting moreover, that he would help also forward in that quarrel to the uttermost of his power. And he required upon the same a day to be set, when they with equal number of Men might meet together, in some place appointed, to have further talk of the matter. The Archbishop easily perswaded, was content, although much against the counsel of the Earl Marshal, and came. Where the Articles being openly publisht and read, the Earl of Westmerland with his Company pretended well to like the same, and to joyn their assents together. Which done, he exhorted the Archbishop, that forsomuch as his Garison had been unlong in Armor and from home, he would therefore discharge the needless multitude of his Souldiers, and dismiss them home to their works and business, and they would together drink and joyn hands in the sight of the whole Company. Thus they shaking hands together, the Archbishop sendeth away his Souldiers in peace, not knowing himself to be circumvented, before he was immediately arrested by the hands of the aforesaid Earl of Westmerland; and shortly after the King coming with his power to York, he was there beheaded the Monday in Whitson-week, and with him also Lord Thomas Moubray Marshal, with divers other moreover of the City of York, which had taken their parts. After whose slaughter the King proceedeth farther to persecute the Earl of Northumberland, and Lord Thomas Bardolph; who then did flie to Barwick. From thence they removed to Wales. At length within two years after, fighting against the Kings part, they were slain in the field, An. 1408. In the which year divers other also in the North parts, for favouring the foresaid Lords, were likewise condemned by the King, and put to death. Among whom the Abbot of Hales for the like Treason was hanged.

The King after the shedding of so much blood, seeing himself so hardly beloved of his Subjects, thought to keep in yet with the Clergy, and with the Bishop of Rome, seeking always his chiefest stay at their hands. And therefore he was compelled in all things to serve their humor, as did appear as well in condemning William Sautre before, as also in other which consequently we have now to intreat of. In the number of whom cometh now by the course of time to write of one John Badby a Taylor and a Layman; who by the cruelty of Thomas Arundel Archbishop, and other Prelates, was brought to his Condemnation in his Kings Reign, Anno. 1409. according as by their own Registers appeareth, and followeth by his Narration to be seen.

John Badby Artificer.

John Badby Martyr. Ex Regist. T. Arundel.

IN the year of our Lord, 1409. on Sunday being the first day of March, in the Afternoon, the examination following of one John Badby Taylor, being a Lay-man, was made in a certain House or Hall within the Precinct of the preaching Friers of London, in an utter Cloister, upon the crime of Heresie, and other Articles repugnant to the determination of the erroneous Church of Rome, before Thomas Arundel Archbishop of Canterbury and other his assistants, as the Archbishop of York, of Lond'n, of Winchester, of Oxford, of Norwich, of Salisbury, of Bath, of Bangor, Et Menevensis Episcopi, and also Edmund Duke of York, Thomas Bewford the Chancellor of England, Lord de Roos the Clerk of the Rolls, and a great number of other Lords both Spiritual and Temporal, being then at the self same time present; Master Morgan read the Articles of his opinions to the hearers, according as it is contained in the instrument read by the foresaid Master Morgan, the tenor whereof followeth, and in effect is such.

The Articles read.

In the name of God, Amen. Be it manifest to all Men by this present publick Instrument, that in the year after the Incarnation of our Lord, according to the course and computation of the Church of England, otherwise in the year 1409. in the second Indiction, in the third year of the Popedom of the most Holy Father in Christ and Lord, Lord Gregory the 11th. by the Divine permission Pope, the second day of January, in the Chappel Carvariæ, of Saint Thomas Martyr, nigh unto the Cathedral Church of Worcester, being situate in the said Diocese, in the presence of me the Publick Notary, and of the witnesses under written, the foresaid John Badby a Lay-man, of the said Diocese of Worcester, appearing personally before the Reverend Father in Christ and Lord, Lord Thomas, by the Grace of God Bishop of Worcester, sitting in the said Chappel for chief Judge, was detected of and upon the crime of Heresie being Heretically taught, and openly maintained by the foresaid John Badby: That is, That the Sacrament of the body of Christ, Consecrated by the Priest upon the Altar, is not the true body of Christ by the vertue of the words of the Sacrament. But that after the Sacramental words spoken by the Priests to make the body of Christ, the material bread doth remain upon the Altar as in the beginning, neither is it turned into the very body of Christ after the Sacramental words spoken of the Priests. Which John Badby being examined, and diligently demanded by the foresaid Reverend Father concerning the premises, in the end did answer, That it was impossible that any Priest should make the body of Christ, and that he believed firmly that no Priest could make the body of Christ by such words Sacramentally spoken in such fort. And also he said expressly that he would never while he lived believe that any Priest could make the body of Christ Sacramentally, unless that first he saw manifestly the like body of Christ to be handled in the hands of the Priest upon the Altar, in his corporal form. And furthermore he said, That John Baker of Bristol had as much power and authority to make the like body of Christ, as any Priest had. Moreover he said, That when Christ sate at Supper with his Disciples, he had not his body in his hand, to the intent to distribute it to his Disciples; and he said expresly, that he did not this thing. And also he spake many other words teaching and fortifying the Heresie in the same place, both grievous, and also out of order, and horrible to the ears of the hearers, sounding against the Catholick Faith.

The Sacrament of Christs body.

Upon which occasion the same Reverend Father admonished and requested the said John Badby oftentimes, and very instantly to Charity; forsomuch as he would willingly that he should have forsaken such Heresie and opinion holden, taught and maintained by him, in such fort against the Sacrament, to renounce, and utterly abjure them, and to believe other things which the Holy Mother the Church doth believe. And he informed the said John on that behalf both gently, and yet baudably. Yet the said John Badby, although he were admonished and requested both often and instantly by the said Reverend Father, said and answered expresly, That he would never believe otherwise than before he had said, taught, and answered. Whereupon, the foresaid Reverend Father Bishop of Worcester seeing, understanding, and perceiving the foresaid John Badby to maintain and fortifie the same Heresie, being stubborn and proceeding in the same stubbornness, pronounced the said John to be before this time convicted of such an Heresie, and that he hath been and is an Heretick, and in the end declared it in these words.

I cannot blame ye that ye are so angry, for it is not for your profit.

The sentence of the Bishop of Worcester against John Badby.

In the name of God, Amen. We Thomas Bishop of Worcester do accuse thee John Badby, being a lay-man of our Diocese, of, and upon the crime of Heresie, before us sitting for Chief Judge, being oftentimes confessed and convicted of, and upon that, That thou hast taught, and openly affirmed, as hitherto thou dost teach, boldly affirm, and defend; that the Sacrament of the Body of Christ, Consecrated upon the Altar by the Priest, is not the true Body of Christ; But after the Sacramental words, to make the Body of Christ, by vertue of the said Sacramental words pronounced, to have been in the crime of Heresie; and we do pronounce thee both to have been and to be an Heretick, and do declare it finally by those writings.

These things were done accordingly as is above written, and are recited in the Year, Indiction, Popedom, Month, Day, and Place aforesaid, being present the same time John Malme, Prior of the Cathedral Church of Worcester, John Dudle Monk, and Haul the sub-Prior of the said Church, Thomas Penings of the order of the Carmelites, Thomas Fekenham of the order of the preaching Friers, William Pomfret of the order of the Minorites, being Professors and Masters of Divinity; William Hailes, Gualter of London, John Swirpedew, being publick Notaries, and William Banchampe and Thomas Gerbis being Knights, Richard Wyth of Tredington, Thomas Wilks of Hembury, John Weston of Tewley, being Parsons of Churches, and Thomas Baleinges, the Master of St. Wolston in Worcester, and also Henry Haggely, John Penerel, Thomas Trogmorton and William Wastebois Esquires, of the Dioces of Worcester and Norwich, and many other worthipful and honest men being Witnesses and called specially to the things aforesaid.

Scribes with Hypocrites.

And I John Chew, Clerk of the Dioces of Bath and Wells, and by the authority Apostolical, publick Notary of the said Bishop, have in Testimony of the Premisses put my Hand and Seal to the Examination, Interrogation, Monition, and Answer of the same John Badby, and to his obstinacy, and also to the proceedings of all and singular other doings as is aforesaid, which against him before the said Bishop were handled and done, in the Year, Indiction, Popedom, Month, Day, and Place aforesaid, which with the fore-named Witnesses was personally present: and the same, even as I heard them and saw them to be done (being occupied with other matters) I caused to be written and published, and into this publick form have compiled the same. I the foresaid Notary am also privy unto the words and examinations interlined between seven or eight lines of the beginning of this Instrument; which lines I also the foresaid Notary do approve and make good.

Quere forasmuch as he was not present?

The answer of John Badby to the Articles

And I Walter London, Clerk of the Dioces of Worcester, and by the Authority Apostolical, publick Notary, to all and singular the foresaid things as afore by the foresaid Notary is recited, and in the Year, Indiction, Popedom, Month, Day, and Place aforesaid handled and done, being with other the fore-recited Witnesses personally present, and to all and every of the same (as I saw and heard them to be done, being thereunto faithfully desired and required:) In Testimony of the Premisses have signed and subscribed according to the acustomed manner. Hæc ex Reg. Cant.

And when the Articles, in the foresaid Instrument contained, were by the Archbishop of Canterbury publickly and vulgarly read and approved; he publickly confessed and affirmed, that he had both said and maintained the same. And then the Archbishop to convince the constant purpose of the said John Badby, commanded the same Articles again to be read, often instructing him both by words and examples, informing and exhorting him that thereby he might be brought the sooner to the Religion that he was of. And furthermore, the said Archbishop said and affirmed there openly to the same John, That he would (if he would live according to the Doctrine of Christ) gage his Soul for him at the Judgment day. And after that again he caused those Articles in the said Instrument expressed to be read by the foresaid Philip Morgan, and the said Archbishop himself expounded the same in English as before; whereunto John Badby answered: As touching the first Article concerning the Body of Christ, he expressly said, That after the Consecration at the Altar, there remaineth material Bread, and the same Bread which was before: notwithstanding (said he) it is a Sign or Sacrament of the living God. {KING Hen. 4.}

The substance of Bread not changed in the Sacrament.

Also, when the second Article was expounded unto him, That it is impossible for any Priest, &c. To this Article he answered and said, That it could not sink into his mind that the words are to be taken as they literally lie, unless he should deny the Incarnation of Christ.

Also being examined of the third Article concerning Jack Raker, he said, That if Jack Raker were a man of good living, and did love and fear God, he hath as much power so to do, as hath the Priest: and said further, That he hath heard it spoken of some Doctors of Divinity, that if he should receive any such Consecrated Bread, he were worthy to be damned, and were damned in so doing.

Furthermore he said, That he would believe the Omnipotent God in Trinity; and said moreover, That if every Host being Consecrated at the Altar were the Lords Body, that then there be 20000 gods in England. But he believed (he said) in one God Omnipotent, which thing the foresaid Archbishop of Canterbury denied not.

And when the other conclusion was expounded, That Christ sitting with his Disciples at Supper, &c. To this he answered and said, That he would greatly marvel, that if any man had a Loaf of Bread, and should break the same and give to every man a mouthful, that the same Loaf should afterwards be whole.

When all these things were thus finished, and all the said conclusions were often read in the vulgar Tongue; the foresaid Archbishop demanded of him, whether he would renounce and forsake his Opinions and such like conclusions or not, and adhere to the Doctrine of Christ and Catholick Faith? He answered, That, according to that he had said before, he would adhere and stand to those words, which before he had made answer unto. Then the Archbishop oftentimes required the said John, in the bowels of Jesus Christ, that he would forsake those Opinions and conclusions, and that henceforth he would cleave to the Christian Faith; which thing to do in the audience of all the Lords and others that were present, he expresly denied and refused.

The conversation of John Badby before the Archbishop.

After all this, when the foresaid Arbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of London had consulted together, to what fase keeping the said John Badby (until the Wednesday next) might be committed; it was concluded, that he should be put into a certain Chamber or safe House within the Mansion of the Friers preachers, and so he was: and then the Archbishop of Canterbury said, That he himself would keep the Key thereof in the mean time. And when the foresaid Wednesday was expired, being the 15th day of March, and that the foresaid Archbishop of Canterbury, with his fellow Brethren and Suffragans, were assembled in the Church of St. Paul in London; the Archbishop of Canterbury taking the Episcopal Seat, called unto him the Archbishop of York, Richard London, Henry Winchester, Robert Chichester, Alexander Norwich, and the Noble Prince Edmund the Duke of York, Ralph Earl of Westmerland, Thomas Beaufort Knight, Lord Chancellor of England, and the Lord Beamond, with other Noble men as well Spiritual, as Temporal, that stood, and sate by, whom to name it would be long. Before whom the said John Badby was called personally to answer unto the Articles premised in the foresaid Instrument. Who when he came personally before them, the Articles were read by the Official of the Court of Canterbury, and by the Archbishop (in the vulgar Tongue) expounded publickly and expresly: and the same Articles, as he had before spoken and depoled, he full licht and defended, and said, that whilst he lived, he would never retract the same. And furthermore, he said specially and nominated, That the Lord Duke of York, personally there present, as is aforesaid, and every man else for the time being, is of more estimation and reputation, than the Sacrament of the Altar, by the Priest in due form Consecrated. And whilst they were thus in his examination, the Archbishop considering and weighing that he would in no wise be altered, and seeing moreover his countenance stout and heart confirmed, so that he began to perswade other as it appeared in the same: these things considered, the Archpreiate, when he saw that by his allurements it was not in his power, either by Exhortations, Reasons, or Arguments, to bring the said John Badby from his constant truth to his Catholick Faith (executing and doing the office of his Great Master) proceeded to {KING Hen. 4.} confirm and ratify the former Sentence given before by the Bishop of Worcester against the said John Badby, pronouncing him for an open and publick Heretick. And thus shifting their hands of him, they delivered him to the Secular Powers; and defired the said Temporal Lords, then and there present very instantly, that they would not put the same John Badby to death for that his offence, nor deliver him to be punished or put to death, in the presence of all the Lords above-recited.

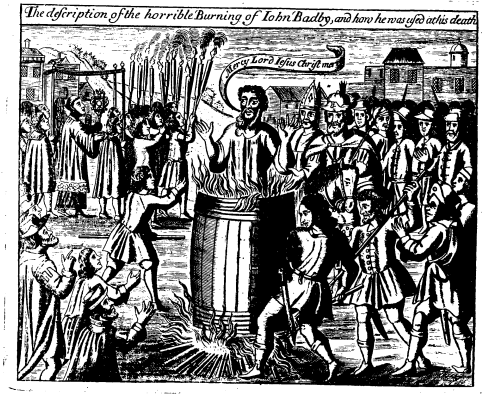
Note here murdering Wolves in Sheeps clothing.

These things thus done and concluded by the Bishops in the forenoon: in the afternoon, the Kings Writ was not far behind. By the force whereof John Badby, still persevering in his constancy unto the death, was brought into Smithfield, and there being put in an empty Barrel, was bound with Iron Chains fastened to a Stake having dry Wood put about him.



And as he was thus standing in the Pipe or Tun (for as yet Perillus Bull was not in use among the Bishops) it happened that the Prince, the Kings eldest Son, was there present: who, shewing some part of the good Samaritan, began to endeavour and assay how to save the life of him, whom the hypocritical Levites and Pharisees fought to put to death. He admonished and counselled him, that having respect unto himself he should speedily withdraw himself out of these dangerous Labirinths of Opinions, adding oftentimes threatnings, the which might have daunted any mans stomach. Also Courtney, at that time Chancellor of Oxford, preached unto him, and enformed him of the Faith of holy Church.

The Prince laboureth to turn Badby. The Sacrament Solemnly brought to Smithfield at the burning of Badby.

In this mean season the Prior of St. Bartholomews in Smithfield brought with all Solemnity the Sacrament of Gods Body, with twelve Torches born before, and so

John Badby constant to the end.

But this valiant Champion of Christ, neglecting the Princes fair words, as also contemning all mens devices, refused the offer of worldly promises, being no doubt more vehemently inflamed with the Spirit of God, than with any earthly desire. Wherefore, when as yet he continued unmovable in his former mind, the Prince commanded him straight to be put again into the Pipe or Tun, and that he should not afterward look for any grace or favour. But as he could be allured by no rewards, even so was he nothing at all abashed at their torments, but, as a valiant Champion of Christ, he persevered invincible to the end. Not without a great and most cruel Battel, but with much more greater triumph of victory: the Spirit of Christ having always the upper hand in his members, maugre the fury, rage, and power of the whole World. For the manifestation of which torment, we have here set forth the Picture of his burning, in such manner as it was done.

All the power of man set against the Gospel.

This godly Martyr John Badby having thus consummate his Testimony and Martyrdom in fire, the persecuting Bishops yet not herewith contented, and thinking themselves as yet either not strong enough, or else not sharp enough against the poor innocent flock of Christ, to make all things sure and substantial on their side, in such sort, as this Doctrine of the Gospel now springing should be suppressed for ever, laid their conspiring heads together; and having now a King for their own purpose, ready to serve their turn in all points (during the time of the same Parliament above-recited yet continuing) the foresaid Bishops and Clergy of the Realm exhibited a Bill unto the Kings Majesty; subtily declaring, what quietness had been maintained within this Realm by his most Noble Progenitors, who always defended the ancient Rites and Customs of the Church, and enriched the same with large gifts, to the honour of God and the Realm: and contrariwise, what trouble and disquietness was now risen by divers, as they termed them, wicked and perverse men, teaching and preaching openly and privily a certain new, wicked, and heretical kind of Doctrine, contrary to the Catholick Faith and determination of holy Church. Whereupon the King, always oppressed with blind ignorance, by the crafty means and subtil pretences of the Clergy granted in the said Parliament (by consent of the Nobility assembled) a Statute to be observed, called Ex Officio, as followeth:

The Gospel of Christ counted wicked and Heretical.

The

The Statute Ex Officio.

The cruel Statute Ex Officio.

That is to say, That no man within this Realm, or other the Kings Majesties Dominions, presume to take upon him to preach privily or apertly, without special License first obtained of the Ordinary of the same place (Curates in their own Parish Churches, and persons heretofore priviledged, and others admitted by the Canon Law, only excepted.) Nor that any hereafter do preach, maintain, teach, inform openly or in secret, or make or write any Book contrary to the Catholick Faith, and determination of the holy Church. Nor that any hereafter make any Conventicles or Assemblies, or keep and exercise any manner of Schools touching this Sect, wicked Doctrine and Opinion. And further, That no man hereafter shall by any means favour any such preacher, any such maker of unlawful Assemblies, or any such Book-maker or writer; and finally any such Teacher, Informer, or Harrer up of the people. And that all and singular persons having any the said Books, Writings, Schedules containing the said wicked Doctrines and Opinions, shall within forty days after this present Proclamation and Statute, really and effectually deliver, or cause to be delivered all and singular the said Books and Writings unto the Ordinary of the same place. And if it shall happen any person or persons, of what kind, state or condition soever he or they be, to do or attempt any manner of thing contrary to this present Proclamation and Statute, or not to deliver the same Books in form aforesaid: That then the Ordinary of the same place in his own Diocese, by Authority of the said Proclamation and Statute shall cause to be Arrested and detained under safe custody the said person or persons in this case defamed and evidently suspected, or any of them, until he or they so offending have by order of Law purged him or themselves as touching the Articles laid to his or their charge in this behalf; or until he or they have denied and recanted (according to the Laws Ecclesiastical) the said wicked Sect, Preachings, Teachings, and Heretical and Erroneous Opinions. And that the said Ordinary by himself or his Commissaries proceed openly and judicially to all the effect of Law against the said persons so Arrested and remaining under safe custody, and that he end and determine the matter within three months after the said Arrest (all delaies and excuses set apart) according to the order and custom of the Canon Law. And if any person, in any cause above-mentioned, shall be Lawfully convicted before the Ordinary of the Diocese or his Commissaries; that then the said Ordinary may Lawfully cause the said person so convicted (according to the manner and quality of his fact) to be laid in any of his own Prisons, and there to be kept so long as his discretion shall be thought expedient.

A bloody Law of King Henry the fourth.

And further, The said Ordinary (except in cases by the which according to the Canon Law the party offending ought to be delivered unto the Secular power) shall charge the said person with such a Fine of money to be paid unto the Kings Majesty, as he shall think competent for the manner and quality of his offence. And the said Diocesan shall be bound to give notice of the said Fine, into the Kings Majesties Exchequer, by his Letters Patent under his Seal; to the intent that the said Fine may be Levied to the Kings Majesties use of the Goods of the person so convict.

And further, If any person within this Realm and other the Kings Majesties Dominions shall be convicted before the Ordinary of the place, or his Commissaries, of the said wicked Preachings, Doctrines, Opinions, Schools, and Heretical and Erroneous Informations or any of them; and will refuse to abjure and recant the said wicked Sect, Preachings, Teachings, Opinions, Schools and Informations or if, after his abjuration once made, the relapse be pronounced against him by the Diocesan of the place, or his Commissaries (for so by the Canon Law he ought to be left to the Secular Power, upon credit given to the Ordinary or his Commissaries) that then the Sheriff of the same County, the Mayor, Sheriffs, or Sheriff, or the Mayor, or Bayliffs of the same City, Village, or Borough of the same County, and nearest inhabiting to the said Ordinary, or his said Commissaries, shall personally be present, as oft as they shall be required, to confer with the said Ordinary or his Commissaries in giving Sentence against the said persons offending or any of them: And, after the said Sentence so pronounced, shall take unto them the said persons so offending, and any of them, and cause them openly to be burned in the sight of all the people; to the intent that this kind of punishment may be a terror unto others, that the like wicked Doctrines and Heretical Opinions, or Authors and favourers thereof be no more maintained within this Realm and Dominions, to the great hurt (which God forbid) of Christian Religion, and Decrees of holy Church. In all which and singular the Premisses, concerning the Statute aforesaid, let the Sheriff, Mayors, and Bailiffs of the said Counties, Cities, Villages and Boroughs be attendant, aiding and favouring the said Ordinaries and their Commissaries.

KING 5 Hen. 4. A bloody Statute.

By this bloody Statute so severely and sharply enacted against these simple men, here hast thou (gentle Reader) a little to stay with thy self, and to consider the nature and condition of this present World, how it hath been set and bent ever from the beginning, by all might, counsel, and ways possible to thrive against the ways of God, and to overthrow that which he will have set up. And although the World may see by infinite stories and examples, that it is but in vain to thrive against him; yet such is the nature of this World (all set in malignity) that it will not cease still to be like it self.

The like Law and Statute in the time of Diocletian and Maximinus was attempted, as before appeareth, and for the more strength was written also in Tables of Brass, to the intent that the Name of Christ should utterly be extinguished for ever. And yet the Name of Christ remaineth, where that Brazen Law remained not three years. The which Law written then in Brass, although it differ in manner and form from this our Statute Ex Officio, yet to the same end and cruelty, to spill the Blood of Saints, there is no difference between the one and the other. Neither is there any diverity touching the first Original doer, and worker of them both. For the same Satan which then wrought his uttermost against Christ, before he was bound up; the same also, now after his loosing out, doth what he can, though not after the same way, yet to the same intent. For then with outward violence, as an open Enemy, he did what he could: Now by a more covert way, under the title of the Church, he impugneth the Church of Christ, using a more subtile way to deceive, under gay pretenced titles; but no less pernicious in the end whereto he shooteth, as well appeareth by this bloody Statute Ex Officio, the sequel whereof coft afterward many a Christian mans life. As in proceis of story remaineth more hereafter (Christ willing) to be declared.

The Law of Maximinus, and the Statute Ex Officio compared.

Furthermore, for the more fortification of this Statute of the King aforesaid, concerneth also another constitution made much about the same time by the Archbishop of Canterbury Thomas Arundel. So that no industry nor policy of man here did lack to set the matter forward, but specially on the Bishops parts, who left no means unattempted, how to subvert the right ways of the Lord.

First, In most diligent and exquisite execution of the Kings Statute set forth; the execution whereof they did so exactly apply, that marvel it is to consider, all other Laws of Kings (commonly, be they never so good) to be so coldly kept, and this only among all the rest so nearly followed. But herein is to be seen the diligence of the Romish Prelates, which never let any thing fall, that maketh for the dignity of their Estate.

Secondly, Beside their vigilant care in seeing the Kings Statute to be executed, no less industrious also were they in adding thereunto more constitutions of their own, as from time to time appeareth as well by other Archbishops hereafter, and by Pope Marvine, as also by this constitution here present made by Thomas Arundel the Archbishop.

But before we enter to the relation of these aforesaid constitutions of the Clergy-men, here cometh in more to be said and noted touching the foresaid Statute Ex Officio, to prove the time not only to be cruel and impious, but also to be of it self of no force and validity for the burning of any person for cause of Religion: for the disproof of which Statute we have sufficient Authority remaining as yet in the Parliament Rolls to be seen in her Majesties Court of Records; which here were to be debated at large, but that upon special occasion we have deferred the ample ample discourse thereof to the cruel persecution of the Lord Cobham hereafter ensuing, as may appear in the defence of the Lord Cobham against Nicolas Harpesfield, under the title and name of Alanus Copus. And thus referring them for the examination of this Statute to the place aforesaid, let us now return to Thomas Arundel, and his bloody constitutions above-mentioned. The style and tenor whereof, to the intent the rigor of the same may appear to all men, I thought here-under to adjoyn, in words as followeth:

A cruel Constitution by the Archbishop against the Lollerians, with thirteen Articles.

Thomas by the permission of God, Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the See Apostolick; To all and singular our Reverend Brethren fellow Bishops, and our Suffragans; and to Abbots, Priors, Deans of Cathedral Churches, Archdeacons, Provosts and Canons; also to all Parsons, Vicars, Chaplains, and Clerks in Parish-Churches, and to all Lay-men, whom and wheresoever dwelling within our Province of Canterbury, greeting, and grace to stand firmly in the Doctrine of the holy Mother-Church. It is a manifest and plain case, that he doth wrong and injury to the most reverend Counsel, who so revolteth from the things being in the said Counsel once discussed and decided. And whosoever dare presume to dispute of the Supreme or Principal Judgment here in Earth, in so doing incurreth the pain of Sacrilege, according to the Authority of civil wisdom and manifold tradition of human Law. Much more then they, who trusting to their own wits are so bold to violate and with contrary Doctrine to resist, and in word and deed to contemn the Precepts of Laws and Canons, rightly made and proceeding from the Key-bearer and Porter of Eternal Life and Death; bearing the room and person not of pure man, but of True God here in Earth: which also have been observed hitherto of the holy Fathers our predeceffors unto the glorious effusion of their blood, and voluntary sprinkling out of their brains, are worthy of greater punishment, deserving quickly to be cut off, as rotten members from the body of the Church Militant. For such ought to consider what is in the Old Testament written; Moses and Aaron among his priests, that is, were chief Heads amongst them. And in the New Testament, among the Apostles there was a certain difference. And though they were all Apostles, yet was it granted of the Lord to Peter, that he should bear preeminence above the other Apostles; and also the Apostles themselves would the same, that he should be the Chieftain over all the rest. And being called Cephas; that is, Head, should be a Prince over the Apostles. Unto whom it was said, That being once converted, confirm thy Brethren: as though he would say, If there happen any doubt among them, or if any of them chance to err and stray out of the way of Faith, of just Living, or right Converfation, do thou confirm and reduce him in the right way again. Which thing no doubt the Lord would never have said unto him, if he had not so minded, that the rest should be obedient unto him. And yet all this notwithstanding, we know and daily prove that we are sorry to speak, how the old Sophister, the Enemy of mankind, forefeeing and fearing left the found Doctrine of the Church, determined from ancient times by the Holy fore-Fathers should withstand his malice, if it might keep the people of God in Unity of Faith under one Head of the Church, doth therefore endeavour by all means possible to extirpe the said Doctrine, faining vices to be vertues. And so, under false pretences of verity disfimuled, he soweth discord in Catholick people, to the intent that some going one way, some another, he in the mean time may gather to himself a Church of the malignant, differing wickedly from the universal Mother holy Church. In the which, Satan transforming himself into an Angel of Light, bearing a lying and deceitful ballance in his hand, pretendeth great Righteousness, in contrarying the ancient Doctrine of the holy Mother-Church, and refuling the Traditions of the same determined and appointed by holy Fathers; perswading men (by fained forgeries) the same to be naught, and so inducing other new kinds of Doctrine, leading to more goodness, as he by his lying perswasions pretendeth, although he in very truth neither willeth nor mindeth any goodness, but rather that he may sow Schisms, whereby divers Opinions, and contrary to themselves, being raised in the Church, Faith thereby may be diminished, and also the Reverend Holy Mysteries through the same contention of words may be prophaned with Pagans, Jews, and other Infidels, and wicked Miscreants. And so that Figure in Apoc. 6. is well verified, speaking of him that take on the black Horse, bearing a pair of Ballance in his hand, by the which Heresticks are underflood. Who at the first appearance, like to Weights or Ballance, make as though they would set forth right and just things, to allure the hearts of the hearers. But afterward appeareth the black Horse, that is to say, their intention, full of curfed speaking. For they under a divers shew and colour of a just Ballance, with the Tail of a black Horse sprinkling abroad Heresies and Errors, do strike. And being Poisoned themselves, under colour of good, raise up infinite slanders, and by certain persons fit to do mischief do publish abroad as it were the fugred taste of Hony mixt with Poyson, thereby the sooner to be taken: working and causing through their flight and subtilties, that error should be taken for verity, wickedness for holiness and for the true will of Christ: Yea and moreover the forefaid persons thus pricked out do preach before they be sent, and presume to sow the Seed, before the Seed discreetly be separate from the Chaff. Who not pondering the Constitutions and Decrees of the Canons, provided for the same purpose against such Pestilent sowers, do prefer sacrifice Diabolical (so to term it) before obedience to be given to the holy Church Militant.

That no manner of person, Secular or Regular, being Authorized to preach by the Laws now prescribed, or Licenced by special priviledge, shall take upon him the Office of preaching the Word of God, or by any means preach unto the Clergy or Laity, either within the Church or without, in English, except he first present himself, and be examined of the Ordinary of the place, where he preacheth. And so being found a fit person, as well in manners as knowledge, he shall be sent by the said Ordinary to some one Church or more, as shall be thought expedient by the said Ordinary, according to the quality of the person. Nor any person aforesaid shall presume to preach, except first he give faithful fignification in due form of his sending and Authority, that is, that he that is Authorized do come in form appointed him in that behalf; and those, that affirm they come by special priviledge do shew their priviledge unto the Parson or Vicar of the place where they preach. And those, that pretend themselves to be sent by the Ordinary of the place, shall likewise shew the Ordinaries Letters made unto him for that purpose, under his Great Seal. Let us always understand, the Curate (having the perpetuity) of no person aforesaid shall be forbidden by the Ordinary of the place, or any other Superior, to preach by reason of his Errors or Heresies which before peradventure he hath preached and taught; that then and from thence-

A jolly mean to bring the World into ſuch darkneſs.

Moreover the Pariſh-Prieſts or Vicars Temporal, not having perpetuities, nor being ſent in form aforeſaid, ſhall ſimply preach in the Churches where they have charge, only thoſe things which are expreſly contained in the Provincial conſtitution fet forth by John our predeceſſor, of good memory, to help the ignorance of the Prieſts, which beginneth, Ignorantia Sacerdotum. Which Book of Conſtitutions we would ſhould be had in every Pariſh-Church in our Province of Canterbury, within three months next after the publication of theſe Preſents, and (as therein is required) that it be effectually declared by the Prieſts themſelves yearly, and at the times appointed. And leſt this wholſom Statute might be thought hurtful to ſome, by reaſon of payment of money, or ſome other difficulty: we therefore Will and Ordain, That the Examinations of the perſons aforeſaid, and the making of their Letters by the Ordinary be done gratis and freely, without any exaction of money at all by thoſe to whom it ſhall appertain: And if any man ſhall willingly preſume to violate this our Statute grounded upon the old Laws after the publication of the ſame he ſhall incur the ſentence of greater Excommunication ipſo facto: whoſe Abſolution we ſpecially reſerve by Tenor of theſe Preſents to us and our ſucceſſors. But if any ſuch preacher deſpiſing this wholſom Statute, and not weighing the ſentence of greater Excommunication, do the ſecond time take upon him to preach; ſaying and alledging, and ſtoutly affirming, that the ſentence of greater Excommunication aforeſaid cannot be appointed by the Church in the perſons of the Prelates of the ſame; That then Superiors of the place do worthily rebuke him, and forbid him from the Communion of all Faithful Chriſtians.

And that the ſaid perſon hereupon Lawfully convicted (except he recant and abjure after the manner of the Church) be pronounced an Heretick by the Ordinary of the place. And that from thenceforth he be reputed and taken for an Heretick and Schiſmatick, and that he incur (ipſo facto) the penalties of Hereſie and Schiſmatie, expreſſed in the Law; And chiefly that his goods be adjudged confiſcate by the Law, and apprehended, and kept by them to whom it ſhall appertain. And that his fautors, receivers, and defenders being convicted, in all caſes be likewiſe puniſhed, if they ceaſe not off within one month being lawfully warned thereof by their Superiors.

Conſtit. 2. Furthermore, no Clergy-man, or Parochians of any Pariſh or Place within our Province of Canterbury ſhall admit any man to preach within their Churches, Church-yards, or other places whatſoever, except firſt there be manifeſt knowledge had of his Authority, Priviledge, or finding thither, according to the order aforeſaid: Otherwiſe the Church, Church-yard, or what place ſoever, in which it was ſo preached, ſhall ipſo facto receive the Eccleſiaſtical Interdict, and ſo ſhall remain Interdicted, until they that ſo admitted and ſuffered him to preach, have reformed themſelves, and obtained the place ſo Interdicted to be releaſed in due form of Law, either from the Ordinary of the place, or elſe his Superior.

Conſtit. 3. Moreover, like as a Houſholder caſteth Wheat into the Ground (well ordered for that purpoſe) the cheap to get the more increaſe: even ſo we will and command, That the preacher of Gods Word, coming in form aforeſaid, preaching either unto the Clergy or Laity, according to his matter propoſed, ſhall be of good behavior, ſowing ſuch ſeed as ſhall be convenient for his Auditory. And chiefly preaching to the Clergy, he ſhall touch the vices commonly uſed amongſt them, and to the Laity he ſhall declare the vices commonly uſed among them, and not otherwiſe. But if he preach contrary to this order, then ſhall he be ſharply puniſhed by the Ordinary of that place, according to the quality of that offence.

What tyranny is this to bind the preachers mouth what to ſay?

Conſtit. 4. Item, Foraſmuch as the part is vile, that agreeth not with the whole; we do Decree and Ordain, That no preacher aforeſaid, or any other perſon whatſoever, ſhall otherwiſe teach or preach concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, Matrimony, confeſſion of Sins, or any other Sacrament of the Church, or Article of the Faith, than that already is diſcuſſed by the holy Mother-Church, nor ſhall bring any thing in doubt that is determined by the Church; nor ſhall to his knowledge privily or openly pronounce Blaſphemous words concerning the ſame, nor ſhall teach, preach, or obſerve any Sect, or kind of Hereſie whatſoever, contrary to the wholſom Doctrine of the Church. He that ſhall wittingly and obſtinately attempt the contrary after the publication of theſe Preſents, ſhall incur the ſentence of Excommunication ipſo facto. From the which (except in point of death) he ſhall not be Abſolved, until he hath reformed himſelf by abjuration of his Hereſie, at the diſcretion of the Ordinary in whoſe Territory he ſo offended, and hath received wholſom Penitence for his offences. But if the ſecond time he ſhall ſo offend, being Lawfully convicted, he ſhall be pronounced an Heretick, and his Goods confiſcate, and apprehended, and kept by them to whom it ſhall appertain. The Penance beforementioned, ſhall be after this manner: If any man contrary to the determination of the Church, that is, in the Decrees, Decretals, or our Conſtitutions Provincial, do openly or privily teach or preach any kind of Hereſie or Sect: he ſhall in the Pariſh-Church of the ſame place, where he ſo preached, upon one Sunday or other Solemn day, or more, at the diſcretion of the Ordinary, and as his offence is more or leſs, expreſly revoke that he ſo preached, taught or affirmed, even at the time of the Solemnity of the Maſs, when the people are moſt aſſembled, and there ſhall effectually and without fraud preach, and teach the very truth determined by the Church: and further ſhall be puniſhed after the quality of his offence, as ſhall be thought expedient to the diſcretion of the Ordinary.

Item, Foraſmuch as a new Veſſel, being long uſed, ſa- Conſtit. 5.
voureth after the head, we Decree and Ordain, That no School-maſters and Teachers whatſoever, that inſtruct Children in Grammar, or others whoſoever in Primitive Sciences, ſhall in teaching them intermingle any thing concerning the Catholick Faith, the Sacrament of the Altar, or other Sacraments of the Church, contrary to the determination of the Church. Nor ſhall ſuffer their Scholars to expound the Holy Scriptures, (except the Text as hath been uſed in ancient time) nor ſhall permit them to diſpute openly or privily concerning the Catholick Faith, or Sacraments of the Church. Contrariwiſe, the offender herein ſhall be grievouſly puniſhed by the Ordinary of the place, as a favourer of Errors and Schiſms.

A Caveat for Schoolmaſters.

Item, For that a new way doth more frequently lead Conſtit. 6.
aſtray, than an old way: we Will and Command, That no Book or Treatiſe made by John Wickliff, or other whomſoever, about that time or lithence, or hereafter to be made, be from henceforth read in Schools, Halls, Hoſpitals, or other places whatſoever, within our Province of Canterbury aforeſaid, except the ſame be firſt examined by the Univerſity of Oxford or Cambridge, or at the leaſt by twelve perſons, whom the ſaid Univerſities or one of them ſhall appoint to be choſen at our diſcretion, or the laudable diſcretion of our predeceſſors: and the ſame being examined, as aforeſaid, to be expreſly approved and allowed by us or our ſucceſſors, and in the name and authority of the Univerſity, to be delivered unto the Stationers to be Copied out, and the ſame to be ſold at a reaſonable price, the Original thereof always after to remain in ſome Cheſt of the Univerſity. But if any man ſhall read any ſuch kind of Book in Schools or otherwiſe, as aforeſaid, he ſhall be puniſhed as a fower of Schiſm, and a favourer of Hereſie, as the quality of the fault ſhall require.

Books of John Wickliff forbidden.

Item, It is a dangerous thing (as witneſſeth bleſſed Conſtit. 7.
St. Hierom) to Tranſlate the Text of the Holy Scripture out of one Tongue into another: for in the Tranſlation the ſame ſenſe is not always eaſily kept, as the ſame St. Hierom confeſſeth, that although he were inſpired, yet oftentimes in his he erred: We therefore Decree and Ordain, That no man hereafter by his own Authority Tranſlate any Text of the Scripture into Engliſh, or any other Tongue, by way of a Book, Libel or Treatiſe, and that no man read any ſuch Book, Libel or Treatiſe, now lately ſet forth in the time of John Wickliff, or lithence, or hereafter to be ſet forth, in part or in whole, privily, or apertly, upon pain of greater Excommunication, until the ſaid Tranſlation be allowed by the Ordinary of the place, or (if the caſe ſo require) by the Counſel Provincial. He that ſhall do

He confeſſeth that St. Hierom erred in his tranſlation. And yet the ſaid Archbiſhop condemneth Scripture, for being the Scripture in Engliſh.

{KING Hen. 4.} do contrary to this, ſhall likewiſe be puniſhed as a favourer of error and hereſie. {KING Hen. 4.}

Conſtit. 8. Item, For that Almighty God cannot be expreſſed with any Philoſophical terms, or otherwiſe invented of man: And St. Auguſtine ſaith, That he hath oftentimes revoked ſuch concluſions as have been moſt true, becauſe they have been offenſive to the ears of the Religious: We do ordain and ſpecially command, that no manner of perſon of what ſtate, degree, or condition ſoever he be, do alledge or propone any Concluſions or Propoſitions contrary to the Catholick Faith, or repugnant to good manners, (except neceſſary Doctrine pertaining to their faculty of teaching or diſputing in their ſchools or otherwiſe) although they defend the ſame with never ſo curious terms and words. For as ſaith bleſſed St. Hugh of the Sacraments, That which oftentimes is well ſpoken is not well underſtood. If any man therefore, after the publication of theſe preſents, ſhall be convict wittingly to have proponed ſuch Concluſions or Propoſitions, except (being monished) he reform himſelf in one month by vertue of this preſent conſtitution, he ſhall incur the ſentence of greater Excommunication ipſo facto, and ſhall be openly pronounced an Excommunicate, until he hath confeſſed his fault openly in the ſame place where he offended, and hath preached the true meaning of the ſaid Concluſion or Propoſition in one Church or more, as ſhall be thought expedient to the Ordinary.

Terms and Petitions in Diſputings to be obſerved.

Conſtit. 9. Item, No manner of perſon ſhall preſume to diſpute upon the Articles determined by the Church, as is contained in the Decrees, Decretals, or Conſtitutions Provincial, or in the general Councils: But only to ſeek out the true meaning thereof, and that expreſly, whether it be openly or in fecret: nor ſhall call in doubt the Authority of the ſaid Decretals or Conſtitutions, or the authority of him that made them, nor teach any thing contrary to the determination thereof: And chiefly concerning the adoration of the Holy Croſs, the worſhipping of Images, of Saints, going on Pilgrimage to certain places, or to the relicks of Saints, or againſt the Oaths, in caſes accuſtomed to be given in both common places, that is to ſay, Spiritual and Temporal. But of all it ſhall be commonly taught and preached, that the Croſs and Image of the Crucifix, and other Images of Saints, in the honour of them whom they repreſent, are to be worſhipped with Proceſſion, bowing of Knees, offering of Frankincenſe, Kiſſing, Obſtrations, lighting of Candles, and Pilgrimages, * and with all other kind of ceremonies and manners that have been uſed in the time of our predeceſſors, and that giving of Oaths in caſes expreſſed in the Law, and uſed of all men to whom it belongeth in both common places, ought to be done upon the Book of the Goſpel of Chriſt. Contrary unto this whoſoever doth preach, teach, or obſtinately affirm (except he recant in manner and form aforeſaid) ſhall forthwith incur the penalty of Hereſie, and ſhall be pronounced an Heretick, in all effect of Law.

Authority of the Popes Decretal not to be doubted under pain of Hereſie.

Adoration of the Croſs.

* With all abominations.

Conſtit. 10. Item, We do Decree and Ordain, That no Chaplain be admitted to celebrate in any Dioceſs within our Province of Canterbury, where he was not born, or received not Orders; except he bring with him his Letters of Orders, and Letters commendatory from his Ordinary, and alſo from other Biſhops in whoſe Dioceſs of a long time he hath been converſant, whereby his converſation and manners may appear: ſo that it may be known, whether he hath been defamed with any new Opinions touching the Catholick Faith, or whether he be free from the ſame: otherwiſe, as well he that celebrateth, as he that ſuffereth him to Celebrate, ſhall be ſharply puniſhed at the diſcretion of the Ordinary.

No Prieſt to Celebrate without their Letters of order.

Conſtit. 11. Finally, Becauſe thoſe things which newly and unaccuſtomably creep up, ſtand in need of new and ſpeedy help: and where more danger is, there ought to be more wary circumſpection and ſtronger reſiſtance; and not without good cauſe, the leſs noble ought diſcreetly to be cut away that the more noble may the more perfectly be nouriſhed. Conſidering therefore, and in lamentable wiſe ſhewing unto you how the ancient Univerſity of Oxford, which as a fruitful Vine was wont to extend forth her fruitful branches to the honour of God, the great perfection and defence of the Church: now partly being become wild, bringeth forth bitter Grapes, which being undiſcreetly eaten of ancient Fathers, that thought themſelves skilful in the Law of God, hath ſet on edg the Teeth of their Children: and our Province is infected with divers and unfruitful Doctrines, and defiled with a new and damnable name of Lollardy, to the great reproof and offence of the ſaid Univerſity being known in Foreign Countries, and to the great irkſomneſs of the Students there, and to the great damage and loſs of the Church of England, which in times paſt by her vertue as with a ſtrong Wall, was wont to be defended, and now is like to run into ruin not to be recovered: At the ſupplication therefore of the whole Clergy of our Province of Canterbury, and by the conſent and aſſent of all our Brethren and Suffragans, and other the Prelates in this Convocation aſſembled, and the Proctors of them that are abſent, left the River being cleanſed, the Fountain ſhould remain corrupt, and ſo the Water coming from thence ſhould not be pure, intending moſt wholſomly to provide for the honour and utility of the holy Mother the Church and the Univerſity aforeſaid; We do Ordain and Decree, that every Warden, Provoſt, or Maſter of every College, or Principal of every Hall within the Univerſity aforeſaid, ſhall once every month at the leaſt diligently inquire in the ſaid Colledge, Hall, or other place where he hath Authority whether any Scholar or inhabitant of ſuch College or Hall, &c. have holden, alledged, or defended, or by any means propoued any concluſion, propoſition or opinion concerning the Catholick Faith, founding contrary to good manners, or contrary to the determination of the Church otherwiſe than appertaineth to neceſſary Doctrine. And if he ſhall find any ſuſpected or deformed herein, he ſhall according to his office admoniſh him to deſiſt. And if after ſuch monition given, the ſaid party offend again in the ſame or ſuch like, he ſhall incur ipſo facto (beſides the penalties aforeſaid) the ſentence of greater Excommunication. And nevertheleſs, if it be a Scholar that ſo offendeth the ſecond time, whatſoever he ſhall afterward do in the ſaid Univerſity, ſhall not ſtand in effect. And if he be a Doctor, a Maſter, or Bachellor, he ſhall forthwith be ſuſpended from any Scholars Act, and in both caſes ſhall loſe the right that he hath in the ſaid Colledge or Hall, whereof he is, ipſo facto; and by the Warden, Provoſt, Maſter, Principal, or other to whom it appertaineth, he ſhall be expelled, and a Catholick by Lawful means forthwith placed in his place. And if the ſaid Wardens, Provoſts, or Maſters of Colledges, or Principals of Halls ſhall be negligent concerning the inquiſition and execution of ſuch perſons ſuſpected and defamed by the ſpace of ten days, from the time of the true or ſuppoſed knowledge of the publication of theſe preſents: that then they ſhall incur the ſentence of greater Excommunication, and nevertheleſs ſhall be deprived ipſo facto, of all the right which they pretend to have in the Colledges, Halls, &c. and the ſaid Colledges and Halls, to be effectually vacant. And after Lawful declaration hereof made by them to whom it ſhall appertain, new Wardens, Provoſts, Maſters, or Principals, ſhall be placed in their places as hath been accuſtomed in Colledges and Halls, being vacant in the ſaid Univerſity. But if the Wardens themſelves, Provoſts, Maſters, or Principals aforeſaid, be ſuſpected and defamed of and concerning the ſaid Concluſions or Propoſitions, or be favourers and defenders of ſuch as do therein offend, and do not ceaſe, being thereof warned by us, or by our Authority, or by the Ordinary of the place: that then by Law they be deprived as well of all ſuch priviledge Scholaſtical within the Univerſity aforeſaid, as alſo of their Right and Authority in ſuch Colledge, Hall, &c. Beſides other penalties aforementioned, and that they incur the ſaid ſentence of greater Excommunication.

Inquiſition to be made through Colledges and Halls of Oxford.

I would the like were uſed now for the baniſhing of Papiſtry.

But if any man in any caſe of this preſent Conſtitution, or any other above-expreſſed, do raſhly and wilfully preſume to violate theſe our Statutes in any part thereof (although there be another penalty expreſly there limited) yet ſhall he be made altogether unable and unworthy by the ſpace of three years after (without hope of pardon) to obtain any Eccleſiaſtical Benefice within our Province of Canterbury: and nevertheleſs according to all his demerits and the quality of his excels, at the diſcretion of his Superior, he ſhall be Lawfully puniſhed.

Conſtit. 12.

Constit. 13. And further, that the manner of proceeding herein be not thought uncertain, considering with our selves, that although there be a kind of equality in the crime of Herefie and offending the Prince, as is avouched in divers Laws; yet the fault is much unlike, and to offend the Divine Majefty requireth greater punifhment, than to offend the Princes Majefty; And where it is fufficient (for fear of danger that might enfue by delaies) to convince by judgment the offender of the Princes Majefty, proceeding against him fully and wholly, with a Citation fent by Meffenger, by Letters, or Edict not admitting proof by Witneffes, and Sentence definitive to be: We do ordain, will, and declare, for the eafier punifhment of the offenders in the premifes, and for the better Reformation of the Church divided and hurt, that all fuch as are defamed, openly known, or vehemently fufpected in any of the cafes aforefaid, or in Article of the Catholick Faith, founding contrary to good manners, by the Authority of the Ordinary of the place or other Superior, be cited perfonally to appear either by Letters, publick Meffenger being Sworn, or by Edict openly fet at that place where the faid offender commonly remaineth, or in his Parifh-Church, if he have any certain dwelling-Houfe: Otherwife, in the Cathedral Church of the place where he was born, and in the Parifh-Church of the fame place where he fo preached and taught: And afterwards certificate being given, that the Citation was formerly executed againft the party cited being abfent and neglecting his appearance, it fhall be proceeded againft him fully and plainly without found or fhew of Judgment, and without admitting proof by Witneffes and other Canonical probations. And alfo after Lawful information had, the faid Ordinary (all delaies fet apart) fhall fignify, declare, and punifh the faid offender, according to the quality of his offence, and in form aforefaid; and further, fhall do according to Juftice, the abfence of the offender notwithftanding.

Eafier to offend againft the Princes Laws than againft the Bifhops.

Who would have thought by thefe Laws and Conftitutions fo fubftantially founded, fo circumfpectly provided, fo diligently executed, but that the name and memory of this perfecuted fort, fhould utterly have been rooted up, and never could have ftood? And yet fuch be the works of the Lord, paffing all mens admiration, all this notwithftanding fo far was it off, that the number and courage of thefe good men was vanquifhed, that rather they multiplied daily and increafed. For fo I find in Regifters Recorded, that thefe forefaid perfons, whom the King and the Catholick Fathers did fo greatly deteft for Hereticks, were in divers Countries of this Realm difperfed and increafed; efpecially at London, in Lincolnfhire, in Norfolk, in Herefordfhire, in Shrewesbury, in Calice, and divers other quarters mo, with whom the Archbifhop of Canterbury Thomas Arundel the fame time had much ado, as by his own Regifters doth appear. Albeit fome there were that did fhrink, many did revolt and renounce, for danger of the Law. Among whom was John Purvey, which recanted at Paul's-Croft, of whom more followeth (the Lord willing) to be faid in the Year 1421. The Examination of the conftant Servant of God, William Thorpe.

THus much briefly being fignified by the way, touching thefe which have been forced in time of this King, to open abjuration: Next coming to our hands the worthy Hiftory of Mafter William Thorpe, a valiant Warrier, under the Triumphant banner of Chrift, with the proceffe of his examinations before the foresaid Thomas Arundel Arch-bifhop of Canterbury, written by the faid Thorpe, and ftoried by his own Pen, at the requeft of his Friends, as by his own words in the proceffe hereof may appear. In whofe Examination (which feemeth firft to begin, Anno 1407) thou fhalt have good Reader, both to learn and to marvel. To learn, in that thou fhalt hear truth difcoured and difcuffed, with the contrary reafons of the adverfary diffolved. To marvel, for thou fhalt behold here in this man the marvellous force and ftrength of the Lords Might, Spirit, and Grace, working and fighting in his Soldiers, and alfo fpeaking in their mouths, according to the Word of his promife, Luke 21. To the Text of the Story we have neither added nor diminifhed: but as we have received copied out, and corrected by Mafter William Tindal (who had his own hand writing) fo we have here fent it, and fet it out abroad. Although for the more credit of the matter, I rather wifhed it in his own natural fpeech, wherein it was firft written. Notwithftanding, to put away all doubt and fcruple herein, this I thought before to pre-monifh and teftify to the Reader, touching the certainty hereof, that they be yet alive which have feen the felfe-fame Copy in his own old Engliſh, refembling the true antiquity both of the fpeech and of the time. The name of whom, as for Record of the fame, to avouch, is M. Whitehead: who as he hath feen the true ancient Copy in the hands of George Conſtantine, fo hath he given credible relation of the fame, both to the Printer and to me. Furthermore, the faid Mafter Tindal (albeit he did fomewhat alter and amend the Engliſh thereof, and frame it after our manner) yet not fully in all words but that fomething doth remain, favouring of the old fpeech of that time. What the caufes were why this good man and fervant of Chrift, W. Thorpe, did write it, and pen it out himfelf, it is fufficiently declared in his own Preface, fet before his Book, which here is prefixed in manner as followeth:

This Hiſtory firſt ſet forth and corrected by M. Will. Tindal.

The Preface of William Thorpe.

The Preface.

THe Lord God that knoweth all things, wotteth well that I am right forrowful to write to make known this fentence beneath written: whereby of mine even Chriftian, fet in high ftate and dignity, fo great blindnefs and malice

{KING Hen. 4.} malice may be known; that they which do preſume of themſelves to deſtroy Vices, and to plant in Men vertues, neither dread to offend God, nor luſt to pleaſe him, as their works do ſhew. For Certes the bidding of God and his Law, which in the praiſing of his moſt Holy name he commandeth to be known and kept of all Men and Women, Young and Old, after the cunning and power that he hath given to them, the Prelates of this Land and their Miniſters, with the covent of Prieſts chiefly conſenting to them, enforce them moſt buſily to withſtand, and deſtroy the Holy Ordinance of God. And there through God is greatly wroth and moved to take hard vengeance, not only upon them that do the evil, but alſo on them that conſent to theſe Antichriſts Limms: which know, or might know their malice and falſhood, and dreſs them not to withſtand their malice and their great pride. Nevertheleſs, four things move me to write this ſentence beneath.

Gods Laws muſt be known and followed.

Four cauſes of ſetting forth his examination.

The firſt thing that moveth me hereto is this, That whereas it was known to certain Friends, that I came from the Priſon of Shrewsbury, and as it befel indeed that I ſhould to the Priſon of Canterbury, then divers Friends in divers places ſpake to me full heartily and full tenderly, and commanded me then if it ſo were that I ſhould be examined before the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, that if I might in any wiſe, I ſhould write mine appoſing, and mine anſwering. And I promiſed to my ſpecial Friends, that if I might, I would gladly do their bidding as I might.

The ſecond cauſe.

The ſecond thing that moveth me to write this ſentence is this: Divers Friends, which have heard that I have been examined before the Archbiſhop, have come to me in Priſon, and counſelled me buſily and coveted greatly that I ſhould do the ſame thing. And other Brethren have ſent to me, and required on Gods behalf, that I ſhould write out and make known both mine appoſing and mine anſwering, for the profit that (as they ſay) upon my knowledging may come thereof. But this they bad me, that I ſhould be buſie in all my wits, to go as near the ſentence and the words as I could, both that were ſpoken to me, and that I ſpake: peradventure this writing may come another time before the Archbiſhop and his Council. And of this Counſelling I was right glad: for in my conſcience I was moved to do this thing, and to ask hitherto the ſpecial help of God. And ſo then I conſidering the great deſire of divers Friends of ſundry places, according all in one, I occupied all my mind and my wits to buſily, that through Gods grace I perceived, by their meaning and their charitable deſire, ſome profit might come there through. For ſoothfaſtneſs and truth hath theſe conditions: whereſoever it is impugned, it hath a ſweet ſmell, and thereof cometh a ſweet ſavour. And the more violently the Enemies dreſs themſelves to oppreſs and to withſtand the truth, the greater and the ſweeter ſmell cometh thereof. And therefore this Heavenly ſmell of Gods Word, will not as a ſmoke paſs away with the Wind: but it will deſcend and reſt in ſome clean ſoul that thirſteth thereafter. And thus ſome deal by this writing may be perceived through Gods grace, how that the Enemies of the truth (ſtanding boldly in their malice) inforce them to withſtand the Freedom of Chriſts Goſpel, for which Freedom Chriſt became Man and ſhed his heart blood. And therefore it is great pity and ſorrow, that many Men and Women do their own wayward will, and buſie them not to know nor to do the pleaſant will of God.

Truth feeth always a ſweet ſmell behind it.

The Men and Women that hear the truth and ſoothfaſtneſs, and hear or know of this (perceiving what is now in the Church) ought herethrough to be the more moved in all their wits to able them to grace, and to ſet leſſer price by themſelves, that they without tarrying forſake wilfully and bodily all the wretchedneſs of this life, ſince they know not how ſoon, nor when, nor where, nor by whom God will teach them and aſſay their patience. For no doubt, who ever will live piteouſly, that is charitably in Chriſt Jeſus, ſhall ſuffer now here in this life perſecution, in one wiſe or another: That is, if we ſhall be ſaved, it behooveth us to imagin full buſily the vility and foulneſs of ſin, and how the Lord God is diſpleaſed therefore: and ſo of this vility and hideouſneſs of ſin, it behooveth us to buſie us in all our wits, to abhor and hold in our mind a great ſhame of ſin ever, and ſo then we ought to ſorrow heartily therefore, and ever fleeing all occaſion thereof. And then it behooveth us to take upon us ſharp penance, continuing therein, to obtain of the Lord forgiveneſs of our foredone ſins, and grace to abſtain us hereafter from ſin. And if we inforce us not to do this wilfully, and in convenient time, the Lord (if he will not utterly deſtroy and caſt us away) will in divers manners remove Tyrants againſt us, to conſtrain us violently to do penance, which we would not do wilfully. And truſt that this doing is a ſpecial grace of the Lord, and a great token of life and mercy. And no doubt who ever will not apply himſelf (as is ſaid before) to puniſh himſelf wilfully, neither will ſuffer patiently, meekly, and gladly the Rod of the Lord, howſoever that he will puniſh him: their wayward wills and their impatiency are unto them earneſt of everlaſting damnation. But becauſe there are but few in number that do able them thus faithfully to grace, to live here ſo ſimply and purely, and without Gall of malice and of Grudging: therefore the lovers of this World hate and purſue them that they know patient, meek, chaſte, and willfully poor, hating and fleeing all Worldly vanities and Fleſhly luſts. For ſurely their vertuous conditions are even contrary to the manners of this World.

The cauſe why perſecution is ſuffered to come.

The third cauſe.

The third thing that moveth me to write this ſentence is this, I thought I ſhall buſie me in my ſelf to do faithfully, that all Men and Women (occupying all their buſineſs in knowing and in keeping of Gods Commandments) able them ſo to grace, that they might underſtand truly the truth, and have and uſe vertue and prudence, and ſo deſerve to be lightned from above with Heavenly Wiſdom: ſo that all their words and their works may be hereby made pleaſant Sacrifices unto the Lord God; and not only for help of their own ſouls, but alſo for edification of Holy Church. For I doubt not, but all they that will apply them to have this foreſaid buſineſs, ſhall profit full meekly both to Friends and Foes. For ſome Enemies of the truth, through the grace of God, ſhall through Charitable folks be made aſtoniſhed in their conſcience, and peradventure converted from Vices to Vertues: and alſo, they that labour to know and to keep faithfully the biddings of God, and to ſuffer patiently all adverſities, ſhall hereby comfort many friends.

Edification of others neceſſary to be conſidered.

The fourth cauſe.

And the fourth thing that moveth me to write this ſentence is this: I know by my ſudden and unwarned appoſing and anſwering, that all they that will of good heart without ſaining able themſelves wilfully and gladly, after their cunning and their power, to follow Chriſt patiently, travelling buſily, privily and apertly in work and in word, to withdraw whomſoever that they may from Vices, planting in them (if they may) Vertues comforting them and furthering them that ſtand in grace; ſo that therewith they be born up in vain-glory through preſumption of their wiſdom, nor inflamed with any worldly proſperity, but ever meek and patient; purpoſing to continue ſtedfaſtly in the will of God, ſuffering wilfully and gladly without any grudging whatſoever Rod the Lord will chaſtiſe them with; that then this good Lord will not forget to comfort all ſuch Men and Women in all their Tribulations, and at every point of Temptation that any Enemy purpoſed for to do againſt them. To ſuch faithful Lovers ſpecially, and patient Followers of Chriſt, the Lord ſendeth by his wiſdom from above them which the adverſaries of the truth may not know nor underſtand. But through their old and new unſhamefaſt ſins, thoſe Tyrants and Enemies of ſoothfaſtneſs ſhall be ſo blinded and obſtinate in evil, that they ſhall ween themſelves to do pleaſant Sacrifices unto the Lord God in their malicious and wrongful purſuing and deſtroying of innocent Mens and Womens bodies; which Men and Women, for their vertuous living, and for their true knowledging of the truth, and their patient, wilful and glad ſuffering of perfecution for righteouſneſs, deſerve through the grace of God, to be Heirs of the endleſs bliſs of Heaven. And for the fervent deſire and great love that theſe men have, as to ſtand in ſoothfaſtneſs and witneſs of it, though they be ſuddenly and unwarnedly brought forth to be appoſed of their Adverſaries; the Holy Ghoſt yet, that moveth and ruleth them through his charity, will in that hour of their anſwering ſpeak in them, and ſhew his wiſdom, that all their Enemies ſhall not gainſay, nor againſtand, lawfully.

The caſe of Godly counſel given, if it may be followed.

Perſecution followeth the true Church.

And therefore all they that are stedfast in the Faith of God, yea, which through diligent keeping of his Commandments, and for their patient suffering of whatsoever adversity that cometh to them, hope surely in his mercy, purposing to stand continually in perfect charity; For those Men and Women dread not so the advertities of this life, that they will fear (after their cunning and their power) to knowledge prudently the truth of Gods Word, when, where, and to whom they think their knowledging may be profit. Yea, and though therefore persecution come to them in one wife or another, Certes they patiently take it, knowing their conversation to be in Heaven. It is an high reward and a special grace of God to have and injoy the everlasting Inheritance of Heaven, for the suffering of one persecution in so short time as is the term of this life. For lo, this Heavenly Heritage and endless reward, is the Lord God himself, which is the best thing that may be. This sentence witnesseth the Lord God himself, whereas he said to Abraham, I am thy meed: And as the Lord said, he was and is the meed of Abraham, so he is of all other his Saints. This most blessed and best meed, he grant to us all for his holy Name, that made us of nought, and sent his only most dear worthy Son, our Lord Jesus Christ to redeem us with his most precious Heart Blood. Amen.

Examination of William Thorp before Thomas Arundel Archbishop.

KNown be it to all Men that read or hear this writing, that on the Sunday next after the Feast of S. Peter, that we call Lammas, in the year of our Lord 1407. I William Thorp, being in prison in the Castle of Saltwood, was brought before Thomas Arundel Archbishop of Canterbury, and Chancellor then of England. And when that I came to him, he stood in a great Chamber and much people about him: and when that he saw me, he went fast into a Closet, bidding all secular Men that followed him to go forth from him soon, so that no man was left then in that Closet but the Archbishop himself: and a Phytitian that was called Masoveren, Parson of Saint Dunstans in London, and two other Persons unknown to me, which were Ministers of the Law. And I standing before them, by and by the Archbishop said to me; William I know well that thou hast this twenty Winters and more, Travelled about busily in the North Country, and in divers other Countries of England, sowing about false Doctrine, having great business if thou might, with thine untrue teaching and shrewd Will to infect and poison all this Land. But through the Grace of God thou art now withstanded and brought into my ward, so that I shall now Sequester thee from thine evil purpose, and let thee to invenom the sheep of my province. Nevertheless, S. Paul saith: If it may be, as much as in us is, we ought to have peace with all men. Therefore William, if thou wilt now meekly and of good heart, without any feigning kneel down, and lay thy hand upon a Book and kiss it, promiting faithfully as I shall here charge thee, that thou wilt submit thee to my correction, and stand to mine Ordinance, and fulfil it duly by all thy cunning and power, thou shalt yet find me gratious unto thee. Then said I to the Archbishop: Sir, Since ye deem me an Heretick, and out of belief, will you give me here audience to tell my believe? And he said, Yea, tell on. And I said, I believe that there is not but one God Almighty, and in this Godhead, and of this Godhead are three Persons, that is; the Father, the Son, and the holy ghost. And I believe that all these three Persons are even in power and in cunning, and in might, full of grace of all goodness. For whatsoever that the Father doth, or can, or will, that thing also the Son doth and can and will; and in all their power, cunning and will, the Holy Ghost is equal to the Father, and to the Son.

Sorcerers professors cannot endure Preachers.

The grace of God and of my Lord of Canterbury be two things.

Your ordinance, and why not Gods ordinance, if it please your grace?

Over this I believe that through counsel of this most blessed Trinity in most convenient time before ordained for the salvation of mankind, the second person of this Trinity was ordained to take the form of Man, that is, the kind of man. And I believe, that this second person, our Lord Jesus Christ, was conceived through the Holy Ghost in the Womb of the Blessed Virgin Mary, without mans seed. And I believe that after nine months Christ was Born of this most Blessed Virgin, without any pain or breaking of the Cloister of her Womb and without filth of her Virginity. {KING 1 Hen.4. / KING 1 Hen.4.}

And I believe, that Christ our Saviour was Circumcised in the Eighth day after his Birth, in fulfilling of the Law, and his name was called Jesus, which was so called of the the Angel, before that he was conceived in the Womb of Mary his Mother.

And I believe that Christ, as he was about xxx. years old, was Baptised in the Flood of Jordane of John Baptist: and in the likeness of a Dove the Holy Ghost descended there upon him, a voice heard from Heaven, saying: Thou art my welbeloved Son, in thee I am full pleased.

And I believe that Christ was moved then by the Holy Ghost to go into the Desart, and their he fasted 40. days and 40. nights without bodily Meat and Drink. And I believe that by and by after this fasting, when the manhood of God hungred, the Fiend came to him, and tempted him in Gluttony, in vain glory, and in covetise: But in all those temptations Christ concluded the Fiend, and withstood him. And then without tarrying Jesus began to Preach, and to say unto the people; Do ye penance, for the Realm of Heaven is now at hand.

I believe that Christ in all his time here lived most holily, and taught the Will of his Father most truly: And I believe that he suffered therefore most wronfully greateft reproofs and despitings.

And after this, when Christ would make an end here of this temporal Life, I believe that in the day next before that he would suffer passion in the morn, in form of Bread and of Wine he ordained the Sacrament of his Fleth and his Blood; that is, his own precious Body, and gave it to his apostles to eat: commanding them, and by them all their after-comers, that they should do it in this form that he shewed to them, use themselves, and teach and commune forth to other Men and Women this most worshipful and holieft Sacrament, in mindfulneſs of his holieft living, and of his most true Preaching, and of his wilful and patient suffering of the most painful passion. This is under the textures of Bread and Wine.

And I believe that this Christ our Saviour, after that he had ordained this most worthy Sacrament of his own precious Body, went forth willfully against his Enemies, and he suffered them most patiently to lay their hands most violently upon him, and to bind him, and to lead him forth as a Thief, and to scorn him and buffet him, and all to blow or file him with their spittings. Over this, I believe that Christ suffered most meekly and patiently his Enemies, to ding out with sharp scourges the Blood that was between his skin and his flesh: Yea without grudging Christ suffered the cruel Jews to Crown him with most sharp thorns, and to strike him with a reed. And after, Christ suffered wicked Jews to draw him out upon the Cross, and to nail him thereupon Hand and Foot. And so through his pitiful nailing, Christ shed out willfully for mans Blood, the Blood that was in the Veins. And then Christ gave willfully his Spirit into the hands or power of his Father, and so, as he would, and when he would, Christ died willfully for Mans sake upon the Cross. And notwithstanding that Christ was willfully, painfully, and most shamefully put to death, as to the World, there was left Blood and Water in his heart, as before ordained, that he would shed out this Blood and this Water for Mans salvation. And therefore he suffered the Jews to make a blind Knight to thrust him in the heart with a Spear, and this Blood and Water that was in his heart, Christ would shed out for Mans love: And after this, I believe that Christ was taken down from the Cross and Buryed. And I believe that on the third day by the power of his Godhead. Christ rose again from death to life. And the Fortieth day thereafter, I believe that Christ ascended up into Heaven, and that he there sitteth on the right hand of the Father Almighty. And the Fiftieth day after his up-going, he sent to his Apostles the Holy Ghost, that he had promised them before; and I believe that Christ shall come and judge all mankind, some to everlasting peace, and some to everlasting pains.

And

{KING 1 Hen.4. / KING 1 Hen.4.} And as I believe in the Father, and in the Son, that they are one God Almighty, so I believe in the Holy Ghost that he is also with them the same God Almighty.

What is the Holy Church. And I believe an Holy Church, that is, all they that have been, and that now are, and always to the end of the World shall be, a people the which shall endeavour them to know and to keep the Commandments of God, dreading over all things to offend God, and loving and seeking to please him: and I believe, that all they that have had, and yet have, and all they that yet shall have the foresaid vertues, surely standing in the belief of God, hoping stedfastly in his merciful doings, continuing to their end in perfect charity, wilfully, patiently, and gladly suffering persecutions, by the example of Christ, chiefly and his Apostles, all these have their names written in the Book of Life.

The true notes of the true Church. Therefore I believe, that the gathering together of this people, living now here in this life, is the Holy Church of God, fighting here on Earth against the Fiend, the prosperity of the World, and their filthy lusts. Wherefore, seeing that all the gathering together of this Church before said, and every part thereof, neither coveteth; nor willeth, nor loveth, nor seeketh any thing but to eschew the offence of God, and to do his pleasing will meekly, gladly, and willfully, with all mine heart, I submit my self unto this Holy Church of Christ, to be ever buxom and obedient to the ordinance of it, and of every member thereof, after my knowledge and power by the help of God. Therefore I knowledge now and evermore shall, if God will, that with all my heart, and will all my might, I will submit me only to the rule and governance of them, whom after my knowledge I may perceive by the having and using of the beforesaid vertues, to be Members of the Holy Church. Wherefore these Articles of belief and all other (both of the Old Law, and of the New, which after the Commandment of God any man ought to believe) and believe verily in my soul, as a sinful deadly wretch, of my cunning and power, ought to believe: praying the Lord God for his holy name to increase my belief, and to help my unbelief.

What Heresie in this belief, I pray you my Lord? And because to the praising of Gods name, I desire above all things to be a faithful Member of Holy Church, I make this protestation before you all four that are now here present, coveting, that all Men and Women that now be absent knew the same: That is, what thing soever before this time I have said or done, or what thing here I shall do or say at any time hereafter, I believe, that all the Old Law and New Law, given and ordained by council of the three Persons of the Trinity, were given and written to the salvation of mankind. And I believe, that these Laws are sufficient for mans salvation. And I believe every Article of these Laws, to the intent that these Articles ordained and commanded of these three Persons of the most blessed Trinity are to be believed.

The Old Testament and New. And therefore to the rule and the ordinance of these Gods Laws, meekly, gladly, and willfully, I submit me with all mine heart; that whosoever can or will by authority of Gods Law, or by open reason, tell me that I have erred or now erre, or any time hereafter shall erre in any Article of belief (from which inconvenience God keep me for his goodness) I submit me to be reconciled, and to be buxsome and obedient unto those Laws of God, and to every Article of them. For by authority specially of these Laws I will, through the Grace of God be united charitably unto these Laws. Yea Sir, and over: this, I believe and admit all the sentences, authorities and reasons of the Saints and Doctors according unto the Holy Scripture, and declaring it truly.

Doctors to be followed, as they follow the word. I submit me willfully and meekly to be ever obedient, after my cunning and power, to all these Saints and Doctors, as they are obedient in work and in Word to God and to his Law, and further not (to my knowledge) not for any earthly power, Dignity or State, through the help of God. But Sir I pray you tell me, if after your bidding I shall lay my hand upon the Book, to what intent; to swear thereby? And the Archbishop said to me, yea wherefore elle? And I said to him; Sir, a Book is nothing elle but a thing coupled together of divers creatures, and to swear by any creature, both Gods Law and Mans Law is against it. To swear by a Book whether it be lawful.

But Sir, this thing I say here to you before these your Clerks, with my foreseid protestation, that how, where, when, and to whom men are bound to swear or to obey in any wife after Gods Law, and Saints, and true Doctors, according with Gods Law; I will through Gods grace be ever ready thereto, with all my cunning and power. But I pray you Sir for the Charity of God, that ye will before that I swear (as I have here rehearsed to you) tell me how or whereto that I shall submit me: and shew me that whereof ye will correct me, and what is the ordinance that ye will thus oblige me to fulfil. How, where, and when to swear.

And the Archbishop said unto me: I will shortly that now thou swear here to me, that thou shalt forsake all the opinions which the Sect of Lollards hold, and is slandred with: So that after this time, neither privily nor apertly, thou hold any opinion which I shall (after thou hast sworn) rehearse to thee here. Nor shalt thou favour any Man or Woman, young or old, that holdeth any these aforesaid opinions: But after thy knowledge and power thou shalt force thee to withstand all such disproubers of Holy Church in every Diocese that thou comest in; and them that will not leave their false and damnable opinions, thou shalt put them up, publishing them and their names, and make them known to the Bishop of the Diocese that they are in, or to the Bishops Ministers. And over this I will that thou Preach no more unto the time that I know by good witnes and true, that thy conversation be such, that thy heart and thy mouth accord truly in one, contrarying all the lewd learning that thou hast taught here before.

Behold the Popish proceedings whereto they tend. And I hearing these words thought in my heart that this was an unlawful asking; and deemed my self Cursed of God, if I consented hereto, and I thought how Susan said: Anguish is to me on every side. And in that I stood still and spake not, the Archbishop said to me; Answer one way or other: and I said; Sir, if I consented to you thus as ye have herebefore rehearsed to me, I should become an appealer, or every Bishops espie, Somoner of all England. For if I should thus put up and publish the names of Men and Women, I should herein deceive full many persons: Yea Sir, as it is likely by the doom of my conscience, I should herein be cause of the death both of Men and Women, yea both Bodily and Ghostly. For many Men and Women that stand now in the way of Salvation, if I should for the learning and reading or their belief publish them therefore up to the Bishops or to their unpiteous Ministers, I know some deal by experience that they should be so distroubled and disseased with persecution or otherwise, that many of them (I think) would rather chuse to forsake the way of truth than to be travelled, scorned, slandred or punished, as Bishops and their Ministers now use to constrain Men and Women to confent to them.

No marvel why for Christ and Antichrist have can they agree? But I find in no place in Holy Scripture, that this Office, that ye would now infoofe me with, accordeth to any Priest of Christs Sect, nor to any other Christian Man: and therefore to do this were to me a full noyous bond to be bounden with, and over grievour charge. For I suppose, that if I thus did, many Men and Women would, yea Sir, might justly to my confution say to me, that I wer a Traytor to God and to them: since (as I think in mine heart) many Men and Women trust so mickle in this case, that I would not for saving of my life do thus to them. For if I thus should do, full many Men and Women would (as they might full truly) say that I had falsly and cowardly forsaken the truth, and slandered thamefully the Word of God. For if I consented to you to do here after your will, for bonchief or mischief that may befal unto me in this life, I deem in my conscience, that I were worthy heretofore to be Cursed of God and also of all his Saints: from which inconvenience keep me and all Christian people, Almighty God, now and ever for his Holy Name. And then the Archbishop said unto me: Oh, thine heart is full hard indurate, as was the heart of Pharao, and the Devil hath overcomen thee, and perverted thee, and he hath so blinded thee in all thy wit, that thou haft no grace to know the truth, nor the measure of mercy that I have profered to thee. Therefore, as I perceive now by thy foolish answer, thou haft no will to leave thine old errors. It is pretty when Pharaoh judged Moyses hard hearted. What learned you my Lord to call your Brother Rachel bring me to such an end. And in mine heart I was nothing afraid with this menacing of the Archbishop. And I considered there two things in him. One, that he was not yet sorrowful that he had made William Sautre wrongfully to be burnt: and as I considered, that the Archbishop thirsted yet after more shedding out of innocent Blood: And fast therefore I was moved in all my wits, to hold the Archbishop neither for Prelate nor for Priest of God: And for that mine inward Man was thus altogether departed from the Archbishop, me thought I should not have any dread of him. But I was right heavy and sorrowfull, for that there was no audience of secular Men by; but in my heart I prayed the Lord God to comfort me and strength me against them that there were against the foothfastnes. And I suppose to speak no more to the Archbishop and his Clerks than me need behooved: and all thus I prayed God for his goodnes to give me then and alway grace to speak with a meek and an easie Spirit: and whatsoever thing that I should speak, that I might thereto have true authorities of the Scriptures or open reason. And for that I stood thus still and nothing spake, one of the Archbishops Clerks laid unto me; What thing museth thou? Do thou as my Lord hath now commanded to thee here.

But I say to thee lewd loffel, either quickly consent thou to mine ordinance, and submit thee to stand to my decrees, or by Saint Thomas thou shalt be degraded, and follow thy Fellow into Smithfield. And at this saying I stood still and spake not, but I thought in mine heart, that God did to me great grace, if he would of his great mercy He meaneth Gods Martyrs, Wil. Sautre.

The order and manner of his bringing up.

And yet I stood still and answered him not: and then soon after the Archbishop said to me: Art thou not yet bethought, whether thou wilt do as I have said to thee? And I said then to him; Sir, my Father and my Mother, on whose souls God have mercy (if it be his will) spent mickle Money in divers places about my learning, for the intent to have made me a Priest to God. But when I came to years of Discretion, I had no will to be Priest, and therefore my Friends were right heavy to me, and then me thought their grudging against me was so painful to me, that I purposed therefore to have left their company. And when they perceived this in me, they spake sometime full fair and pleasant words to me: But for that they might not make me to consent of good heart to be a Priest, they spake to me full oftentimes very grievous words, and menaced me in divers manners, shewing to me full heavy cheer. And thus one while in fair manner, another while in grievous, they were long time (as me thought) full busie about me, ere I consented to them to be a Priest.

But at the last, when in this matter they would no longer suffer mine excortations, but either I should consent to them, or I should ever bear their indignation, yea their Curse (as they said) then I seeing this, prayed them that they would give me licence to go to them that were named wise Priests, and of vertuous conversation, to have their counsel, and to know of them the office and the charge of Priesthood. And hereto my Father and my Mother consented full gladly, and gave me their blessing and good leave to go, and also Money to spend in this Journey. And so I went to those Priests whom I heard to be of best name, and of most holy living, and best learned, and most wise of Heavenly wisdom; and so I communed with them unto the time, that I perceived by their vertuous and continual occupations, that their honest and charitable works passed their fame which I had heard before of them.

Wherefore Sir, by the example of the Doctrine of them, and specially for the godly and innocent works which I perceived then of them, and in them, after my cunning and power, I have exercised me then and in this time, to know perfectly Gods Laws, having a will and desire to live thereafter, which willeth that all Men and Women should exercise themselves faithfully thereabout. If then Sir, either for pleasure of them that are neither so wise, nor of so vertuous conversation to my knowledge, nor by common fame to any other mens knowledge in this Land, as these men were of whom I took my counsel and information, I should now forsake thus suddenly and shortly, and unwarned, all the learning that I have exercised my self in these thirty winters and more, my conscience should ever be herewith out of measure unquieted: and Sir, I know well, that many Men and Women should be therethrough greatly troubled and slandered. And as I said, Sir, to you before, for mine untruth and false cowardnes, many a one should be put into full great reproof: Yea Sir, I dread that many one (as they might then justly) would Curse me full bitterly; and Sir I fear not, but the Curse of God, which I should deserve herein, would bring me to a full evil end, if I continued thus. And if through remorse of conscience I repented me any time, returning into the way, which you do your diligence to constrain me now to forsake: Yea Sir, all the Bishops of this Land, with full many other Priests, would defame me, and pursue me as a relapse: and they that now have (though I be unworthy) some confidence in me, hereafter would never trust to me, though I could teach and live never so vertuously, more than I can or may. For if after your counsel I left utterly all my learning, I should hereby first wound and defile mine own soul, and also I should herethrough give occasion to many Men and Women of full sore hurting; Yea Sir, as it is likely to me, if I consented to your will, I should herein by mine evil example in it, as far as in me were, slea many folk Ghostly, that I should never deserve to have grace of God to the edifying of his Church, neither of my self, nor of any other Mans life, and should be undone both before God and Man.

But Sir, by example chiefly of some, whose names I will not now rehearse, of H.of J.P. and B. and also by the present doing of Philip Rampington, that now is become Bishop of Lincoln, I am now learned (as many more hereafter through Gods grace shall be learned) to hate and to flee all such slander that these forefaid men chiefly have defiled principally themselves with. And in it that in them is, they have invenomed all the Church of God, for the flandrous revoking at the Cros of Paul's, of H.P. and of B. and how now Philip Rampington pursueth Christs people. And the feigning that these men dissembled by worldly prudence, keeping them cowardly in their Preaching and communing within the bonds and terms (which without blame may be spoken and shewed out of the most Worldly livers) will not be unpunished of God. For to the point of truth, that these men shewed out sometime, they will not now stretch forth their lives but by example each one of them as their words and their works shew, busie them through their feigning to slander and to pursue Christ in his Members, rather than they will be pursued.

Philip Repington made Bishop, and a persecutor.

And the Archbishop said to me: These men, the which thou speakest of now, were Fools and Heretics, when they were counted wise men of thee and other such Lofels. But now they are wise men, though thou and other such deem them unwise. Nevertheless, I never wist any that right said, that any while were invenomed with your contagiousnes, that is, contaminated and spotted Doctrine.

Happy be they that continue to the end.

And I said to the Archbishop: Sir, I think well that these men and such other are now wise as to this World: But as their words founded sometime, and their works shewed outwardly, it was like to move me that they had earnest of the wisdom of God, and that they should have deserved mickle grace of God to have saved their own souls and many other mens, if they had continued faithfully in wilful poverty, and in other simple vertuous living: and specially if they had with these forefaid vertues continued in their busie fruitful sowing of Gods Word: as to many mens knowledge they occupied them a season in all their wits; full busily to know the pleasant will of God, travelling all their Members full busily to do thereafter, purely and chiefly to the praising of the most holy name of God, and for grace of edification and salvation of Christian people. But woe worth false covetise, and evil Counsel and Tyranny, by which they and many Men and Women are led blindly into an evil end.

Woe worth false covetise.

Then the Archbishop said unto me; Thou, and such other Lofels of thy Sect, would have your heads full near to have a Benefice. For by Jesus I know none more covetous shrews than ye are, when that ye have a Benefice. For loe, I gave to John Purvy a Benefice but a Mile out of this Castle, and I heard more complaints about his covetousnes for Tithes, and other misdoings, than I did of all men that were advanced within my Diocefs.

It is pity these Prelates cannot swear. Covetousness joyned with Pilfulness.

And I said to the Archbishop; Sir, Purvy is neither with you now for the Benefice that you gave him, nor holdeth he faithfully with the learning that he taught and writ before time: and thus he sheweth himself neither to be hot nor cold, and therefore he and his Fellows may fore {KING Rich. 2.} fore dread, that if they turn not hastily to the way that they have forsaken, peradventure they be put out of the number of Christs chosen people.

And the Archbishop said: Though Purvey be now a false Harlot, I quit me now to him: But come he more for such cause before me (ere we part) I shall know with whom he holdeth. But I say to thee: which are these holy men and wife, of whom thou hast taken thine information?

A worthy commendation of M. John Wickliff.

And I said: Sir, Master John Wickliff was holden of full many Men the greatest Clerk that they knew then living, and therewith he was named a passing ruly Man and an innocent in his living: and therefore great men communed oft with him, and they loved fo his learning, that they writ it, and busily inforced them to rule themselves thereafter. Therefore Sir, this forefaid learning of M. John Wickliff's ye holden, of full many Men and Women, the most agreeable learning unto the living and teaching of Christ and of his Apostles, and most openly shewing and declaring how the Church of Christ hath been and yet fhould be ruled and governed. Therefore so many Men and Women covet this learning, and purpose through Gods grace, to conform their living like to this learning of Wickliff. M. John Ashton taught and writ accordingly and full busily, where, and when, and to whom that he might, and he used it himself right perfectly unto his lives end. And also Philip of Rampington, while he was a Canon of Leicester, Nicholas Herford, Davy Gotray of Pakring, Monk of Byland, and a Master of Divinity, and John Purvey, and many other which were holden right wise men and prudent, taught and writ busily this forefaid learning, and conformed them thereto. And with all these men I was right homely, and communed with them long time and oft: and so before all other men I chose willingly to be informed of them and by them, and specially of Wickliff himself, as of the most vertuous and godly wise man that I heard of or knew. And therefore of him specially, and of these men I took the learning that I have taught; and purposed to live thereafter (if God will) to my lives end. For though some of those men be contrary to the learning that they taught before, I wot well that their learning was true which they taught: and therefore with the help of God I purpose to hold and to use the learning which I heard of them, while they sate on Moses Chair, and specially while that they sate on the Chair of Christ. But after the works that they now do, I will not do with Gods help. For they feign and hide, and contrary the truth, which before they taught out plainly and truly. For as I know well, when some of those men have been blamed for their flandrous doing: they grant not that they have taught amiss or erred before time, but that they were constrained by pain to leave to tell out the sooth, and thus they chuse now rather to blaspheme God, than to suffer a while here persecution bodily, for foothfastnes that Christ fhed out his heart-blood for.

M. John Ashton, M. Philip Rampayne, Nicholas Herford, Davy Gotray, John Purvey.

The Testimony for Wickliff out of the mouth of his own adversary.

And the Archbishop said; That learning, that thou calleft truth and foothfastnes, is open flander to Holy Church, as it is proved of Holy Church. For albeit that Wickliff your Author was a great Clerk, and though that many men held him a perfect liver: yet his Doctrine is not approved of Holy Church, but many sentences of his learning are damned as they well worthy are. But as touching Philip of Rampington, that was first Canon, and after Abbot of Leicester, which is now Bishop of Lincoln, I tell thee, that the day is commen, for which he fasted the even. For neither he holdeth now, nor will hold the learning that he taught, when he was a Canon of Leicester. For no Bishop of this Land purfueth now more sharpely them that hold thy way, than he doth.

Many such vigils have our English Kalenders. Repington became a persecutor, after he was made Bishop.

Ane I said: Sir, full many Men and Women wondreth upon him, and speaketh him mickle shame, and holdeth him for a curfed Enemy of the truth.

And the Archbishop said to me: Wherefore tarieft thou me thus here with fuch Fables, wilt thou fhortly (as I have faid to thee) fubmit thee to me or no?

And I said: Sir, I tell you at one word; I dare not for the dread of God fubmit me to you, after the tenor and fentence that ye have above rehearsed to me.

And thus as if he had been wroth, he faid to one of his Clerks; Fetch hither quickly the certification that came to me from Shrewsbury under the Bailifs seal, witnessing the Errors and Heresies, which this Losel hath venemously sown there.

Then hafily the Clerk took out, and laid forth on a Cupboord divers Rolls and Writings, among which there was a little one, which the Clerk delivered to the Archbishop. And by and by the Archbishop read this Roll containing this sentence.

The third Sunday after Easter, the year of our Lord 1407. William Thorp came unto the Town of Shrewsbury, and through leave granted unto him to Preach, he faid openly in S. Chads Church in his Sermon, that the Sacrament of the Altar, after the consecration, was material Bread. And that Images fhould in no wife be worfhipped. And that men fhould not go on Pilgrimages. And that Priests have no Title to Tithes. And that it is not lawful to Swear in any wife.

The Sacrament after consecration, material bread. Articles objected against Wil. Thorp. Wholesome enough for mans soul, though not for your kitchin.

And when the Archbishop had Read thus this Roll, he rolled it up again, and faid to me. Is this wholefome learning to be among the people?

And I faid: Sir, I am both aftamed on their behalf, and right forrowful for them that have certified you thefe things thus untruly: for I never Preached, nor taught thus privily nor apertly.

And the Archbishop faid to me, I will give credence to thefe worthipful men which have written to me, and witnefled under their Seals there among them. Though now thou denieft this, weeneft thou that I will give credence to thee? Thou Lofel haft troubled the worfhipful Communalty of Shrewsbury, fo that the Bailifs and Communalty of that Town have written to me, praying me that am Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate and Chancellor of England, that I will vouchfafe to grant them, that if thou fhalt be made (as thou art worthy) to fuffer open joureſs for thine Herefies, that thou may have thy joureſs openly there among them; So that all they whom thou and fuch other Lofels have there perverted, may through fear of thy deed be reconciled again to the unity of Holy Church. And alſo they that ſtand in true Faith of Holy Church, may through thy deed be more eſtablished therein. And as if this asking well pleafed the Archbishop, he faid; By my thrift this hearty prayer and fervent requeſt fhall be thought on.

O Shrewsbury, thou haſt a cauſe to repent here in that thou wouldeſt not receive the truth when it was offered thee.

The Romiſh Church muſt be ſtabliſhed by perſecuting of true Preachers.

But certainly, neither the prayer of the men of Shrewsbury, nor the menacing of the Archbishop made me any thing afraid. But in rehearing of this malice, and in the hearing of it, my heart greatly rejoyced, and yet doth. I thank God for the grace that I then thought, and yet think fhall come to all the Church of God herethrough, by the ſpecial merciful doing of the Lord. And as having no dread of the malice of Tyrants, by truſting ſtedfaſtly in the help of the Lord, with full purpoſe to knowledge the foothfaſtneſs, and to ſtand thereby after my cunning and power, I ſaid to the Archbishop, Sir, if the truth of Gods word might now be accepted as it ſhould be, I doubt not to prove by likely evidence, that they that are feigned to be out of the Faith of Holy Church in Shrewsbury, and in other places alſo, are in the true Faith of Holy Church. For as their words found, and their works ſhew to Mans judgment (dreading and loving faithfully God) their delire, their will, their love, and their buſineſs are moſt ſet to dread to offend God, and to love to pleaſe him in true and faithful keeping of his commandments. And again, they that are ſaid to be in the Faith of Holy Church in Shrewsbury and in other places, by open evidence of their proud, envious, malicious, covetous, lecherous, and other foul words and works, neither know, nor have will to know, nor to occupy their wits, truly and effectfoully in the right Faith of Holy Church. Wherefore neither all theſe, nor any that follow their manners, ſhall any time come verily in the Faith of Holy Church, except they inforce them more truly to come in the way which now they deſpiſe. For theſe Men and Women, that are now called faithful and holden juſt, neither know, nor will exerciſe themſelves to know (of faithfulneſs) commandment of God.

A ſure truſt in Gods truth confounderh the malice of Tyrants.

If the truth ſtand might try, truth ſhould be known.

The deſcription of the right chriſtian Shrewsbury. The Catholicks of Shrewsbury, Shrewsbury, except thou turn from thy wicked ways, thou ſhalt not receive the truth.

And thus ſhall many Men and Women now, and ſpecially men that are named to be principal Limbs of Holy Church, ſtir God to great wrath, and deſerve his Curſe for that they call or hold them juſt men, which are full unjuſt, as their vicious words, their great cultomable ſwearing, and their ſlandrous and ſhameful works ſhew openly and witneſs. And therefore ſuch vicious men and unjuſt in their own confeſſion call them unjuſt men and women, which after their power and cunning baſtle themſelves to live juſtly after the commandment of God. And where, Sir, ye ſay that I have diſtroubled the Communalty of Shrewſbury, and many other men and women with my teaching: If it thus be, it is not to be wondred of wiſe men, ſince all the Communalty of the City of Jeruſalem was diſtroubled of Chriſts own perſon, that was very God and Man, and the moſt prudent Preacher that ever was or ſhall be. And alſo all the Synagogue of Nazareth was moved againſt Chriſt, and ſo fulfilled with ire towards him for his preaching, that the men of the Synagogue roſe up and caſt Chriſt out of their City, and led him up to the top of a Mountain to caſt him down there headlong: alſo accordingly hereto the Lord witneſſeth by Moſes, that he ſhall put diſſention betwixt his people, and the people that contrarieth and purſueth his people. Who, Sir, is he that ſhall preach the truth of Gods Word to the unfaithful people, and ſhall let the foothfaſtneſs of the Goſpel, and the Prophetie of God Almighty to be fulfilled?

Jeruſalem troubled by the preaching of Chriſt.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, It followeth of theſe thy words, that thou and ſuch other thinkeſt, that ye do right well to preach and teach as ye do, without authority of any Biſhop. For you preſume that the Lord hath choſen you only to preach, as faithful Diſciples and ſpecial Followers of Chriſt.

The word of God ought truly to be preached.

And I ſaid, Sir, by authority of Gods Law, and alſo of Saints and Doctors I am learned to deem, that it is every Prieſts office and duty to preach buſily, freely, and truly the Word of God. For no doubt every Prieſt ſhould purpoſe firſt in his Soul, and covet to take the Order of Prieſthood, chiefly to make known to the people the word of God, after his cunning and power; approving his words ever to be true by his vertuous works: and for this intent we ſuppoſe that Biſhops and other Prelates of holy Church ſhould chiefly take and uſe their Prelacy, and for the ſame cauſe Biſhops ſhould give to Prieſts their Orders.

If this Leſſon had been well followed, the world had not been brought to ſuch darkneſs by blind and dumb Prieſts.

For Biſhops ſhould accept no man to Prieſthood, except that he had good will and full purpoſe, and were well diſpoſed, and well learned to preach. Wherefore Sir, by the bidding of Chriſt, and by the example of his moſt holy living, and alſo by the witneſſing of his holy Apoſtles and Prophets, we are bound under full great pain, to exerciſe us after our cunning and power (as every Prieſt is likewiſe charged of God) to fulfil duly the Office of Prieſthood. We preſume not here of our ſelves to be eſteemed (neither in our own reputation, nor in none other mans) faithfull Diſciples, and ſpecial Followers of Chriſt. But Sir, as I ſaid to you before, we deem this by authority chiefly of Gods Word that it is the chief duty of every Prieſt to bulie him faithfully to make the Law of God known to his people; and ſo to commune the Commandment of God charitably, how that we may beſt, where, when, and to whom that ever we may, is our very duty: and for the will and buſineſs that we owe of due debt to do juſtly our Office through the ſtirring and ſpecial help (as we truſt) of God, hoping ſtedfaſtly in his mercy, we debire to be the faithful Diſciples of Chriſt, and we pray this gracious Lord for his holy Name, that he make us able to pleaſe him with devout prayers, and charitable Prieſtly works, that we may obtain of him to follow him thankfully.

An effectuous prayer, God grant in all Miniſters.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Lewd Loſſel, whereto makeſt thou ſuch vain reaſons to me? Asketh not S. Paul, How ſhould Prieſts preach except they be ſent? But I ſent thee never to preach. For thy venomous Doctrine is known throughout England, that no Biſhop will admit thee to preach by witneſſing of their Letters. Why then lewd Idiot, will thou preſume to preach, ſince thou art not ſent nor licenſed of thy Soveraign to preach? Saith S. Paul, That Subjects ought to obey their Sovereigns, and not only good and vertuous, but alſo Tyrants that are vicious.

Why he preached without the Biſhops Licence.

He anſwereth to the queſtion concerning the Letter of Licence.

And I ſaid to the Archbiſhop, Sir, as touching your Letter of Licence, or other Biſhops, which, ye ſay, we ſhould have to witneſs that we are able to be ſent to preach: we know well that neither you Sir, nor any other Biſhop of this Land will grant to us any ſuch Letters of Licence, but if we ſhould oblige us to you, and to other Biſhops by unlefull Oaths, not to paſs the bounds and terms which ye, Sir, or other Biſhops will limit to us. And ſince in this matter your terms be ſome too large, and ſome too ſtrait; we dare not oblige us thus to be bounden to you to keep the terms, which you will limit to us, as you do to Friers and ſuch other Preachers: and therefore, though we have not your Letter Sir, nor Letters of any other Biſhops written with ink upon Parchment, we dare not therefore leave the Office of preaching (to which preaching all Prieſts after their cunning and power are bound, by divers Teſtimonies of Gods Law, and great Doctors) without any mention making of Biſhops Letters. For as mikle as we have taken upon us the Office of Prieſthood (though we are unworthy thereto) we came and purpoſe to fulfil it with the help of God, by authority of his own Law, and by witneſs of great Doctors and Saints, accordingly hereto truſting ſtedfaſtly in the mercy of God. For that he commandeth us to do the Office of Prieſthood, he will be our ſufficient Letters and Witneſs, if we by example of his holy living and teaching, ſpecially occupy us faithfully to do our Office juſtly; yea the people to whom we preach (be they faithful or unfaithful) ſhall be our Letters; that is, our witneſs-bearers: for the truth where it is ſown may not be unwitneſſed. For all that are converted and ſaved by learning of Gods Word, and by working thereafter, are witneſs-bearers, that the truth and foothfaſtneſs, which they heard and did after, is cauſe of their ſalvation. And again, all unfaithful men and women which heard the truth told out to them, and would not do thereafter: alſo all they that might have heard the truth, and would not hear it, becauſe that they would not do thereafter, all theſe ſhall bear witneſs againſt themſelves, and the truth which they would not hear, or elſe heard it and deſpiſed to do thereafter through their unfaithfulneſs, is and ſhall be cauſe of their damnation. Therefore Sir, ſince this aforeſaid witneſſing of God, and of divers Saints and Doctors, and of all the people good and evil, ſufficeth to all true Preachers; we think that we do not the Office of Prieſthood, if that we leave our preaching, becauſe that we have not, or may not have duly Biſhops Letters, to witneſs that we are ſent of them to preach. This ſentence approveth S. Paul, where he ſpeaketh of himſelf and of faithful Apoſtles and Diſciples, ſaying thus, We need no Letters of Commendations as ſome Preachers do, which preach for covetouſneſs of Temporal goods, and for mens praiſing. And where ye ſay Sir, that Paul biddeth Subjects obey their Soveraigns, that is ſooth, and may not be denied. But there be two manner of Soveraigns, vertuous Sovereigns, and vicious Tyrants. Therefore to theſe laſt Sovereigns neither men nor women, that be ſubject, owe to obey in two manners. To vertuous Sovereigns and charitable Subjects they owe to obey willfully and gladly, in hearing of their good counſel, in conſenting to their charitable biddings, and in working after their fruitful works.

The inconvenience of ceaſing of the Biſhops Letter of Licence.

The witneſs of the Preacherin the good life of the Followers.

Two manner of Soveraigns.

He meaneth Prelates that be unvertuous.

This ſentence Paul approveth, where he ſaith to Subjects, Be ye mindful of your Sovereigns, that ſpeak to you the word of God, and follow you the Faith of them, whoſe Converſation you know to be vertuous. For as Paul ſaith after, theſe Sovereigns to whom Subjects ought to obey in following of their manners, work buſily in holy ſtudying, how they may withſtand and deſtroy vices, firſt in themſelves, and after in all their Subjects, and how they may beſt plant in them vertues. Alſo their Sovereigns make devout and fervent Prayers to purchaſe Grace of God, that they and their Subjects may over all things dread to offend him, and to love to pleaſe him. Alſo theſe Sovereigns to whom Paul biddeth us obey, as it is ſaid before, live ſo vertuouſly, that all they that will live well, may take of them good example, to know and to keep the Commandments of God. But in this foreſaid wife, Subjects ought not to obey nor to be obedient to Tyrants, while they are vicious Tyrants, ſince their will, their counſel, their biddings and their works are ſo vicious, that they ought to be hated and left. And though ſuch Tyrants be maiſterful and cruel in boaſting and menacing, in oppreſſions and divers puniſhings: S. Peter biddeth the ſervants of ſuch Tyrants, to obey meekly ſuch Tyrants, ſuffering patiently their malicious cruelneſs. But Peter counſelleth not any ſervant or ſubject to obey any Lord, or Prince, or Soveraign, in any thing that is not pleaſing to God.

Two manners of Subjects.

1. In following their doings and examples.
2. In affecting their wrong-wicked Rulers are not to be followed in evil.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid unto me, If a Soveraign bid his ſubject do that thing that is vicious, this Sovereign herein is to blame: but the ſubject for this Obedience deſerveth

{KING Ethe. 4.}

Obedience not to be given but to things leſul and lawful.

deſerveth meed of God. For Obedience more pleaſeth God, than any Sacrifice.

And I ſaid, Samuel the Prophet ſaid to Saul the wicked King, That God was more pleaſed with the Obedience of his Commandments, than with any Sacrifice of Beaſts. But David ſaith, and S. Paul, and S. Gregory accordingly together, That not only they that do evil, are worthy of death and damnation, but alſo they that conſent to evil doers. And Sir, the Law of the holy Church teacheth in the Decrees, That no Servant to his Lord, nor Child to the Father or Mother, nor Wife to her Husband, nor Monk to his Abbot ought to obey, except in leſul things, and lawful.

All is preſumption that ſtandeth againſt your maiſterful ambition.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, All theſe alledgings that thou bringeſt forth, are not elſe but proud preſumptuouſneſs. For hereby thou inforceſt thee to prove, that thou and ſuch other are ſo juſt, that ye ought not to obey to Prelates. And thus againſt the learning of Saint Paul, that teacheth you not to Preach, but if ye were ſent; of your own authority, ye will go forth and Preach, and do what ye liſt.

Prieſts in that they take Prieſthood, they are ſent to preach. Mat. 10. Mar. alt. Luk. 10.

The Office of Prieſthood is the Office of preaching.

And I ſaid, Sir, preſenteth not every Prieſt the Office of the Apoſtles, or the Office of the Diſciples of Chriſt? And the Archbiſhop ſaid, Yea. And I ſaid, Sir, as the tenth Chapter of Matthew and the laſt Chapter of Mark witneſſeth, Chriſt ſent his Apoſtles to preach. And the tenth Chapter of Luke witneſſeth, That Chriſt ſent his two and ſeventy Diſciples to preach in every place that Chriſt was to come to: and S. Gregory in the Common Law ſaith, That every man that goeth to Prieſthood, taketh upon him the Office of Preaching: For as he ſaith, That Prieſt ſtirreth God to great wrath, of whoſe mouth is not heard the voice of preaching. And as other more gloſſes upon Ezekiel, witneſs. That the Prieſt that preacheth not buſily to the people, ſhall be partaker of their damnation that periſh through his default. And though the people be ſaved by other ſpecial Grace of God, than by the Prieſts preaching, yet the Prieſts, in that they are ordained to preach and preach not, as before God they are Manſlayers. For as far as on them is, ſuch Prieſts as preach not buſily and truly, ſlay all the people ghoſtly: in that they withhold from them the Word of God, that is the life and ſubſtance of mens ſouls. And S. Iſidore ſaid, Prieſts ſhall be damned for wickedneſs of the people, if they teach not them that are ignorant, or blame not them that are ſinners. For all the work or buſineſs of Prieſts ſtandeth in preaching and teaching, that they edifie all men as well by cunning of Faith, as by diſcipline of Works; that is, Vertuous teaching: And as the Goſpel witneſſeth, Chriſt ſaid in his teaching, I any born and comen into this World, to bear witneſs to the Truth, and he that is of the Truth heareth my voice.

Prieſts that preach not, be ſlayers of the people. Iſidor.

Diſcipline of Faith. Diſciplene of Works.

Prieſts not only ſent to preach, but commanded to preach. Propriet. Lincolnien. Whatſoever a man doth, leaving that undone which he is chiefly bound to do, in ſin. Yet this he may plainly ſhew that him not by the bond, a new burnith not of his hand, as Bonaventure ſaid.

Then Sir, ſince by the word of Chriſt ſpecially, that is, his Voice, Prieſts are commanded to preach; whatſoever Prieſt that it be, that hath not good will and full purpoſe to do thus, and ableth not himſelf after his cunning and power to do his Office by the Example of Chriſt and of his Apoſtles, whatſoever other thing that he doth, diſpleaſeth God. For lo, S. Gregory ſaith, That thing left that a man is bound chiefly to do, whatſoever other thing that a man doth, it is unthankful to the Holy Ghoſt; and therefore ſaith Lincoln, The Prieſt that preacheth not the Word of God, though he be ſeen to have none other default, he is Antichriſt and Satans, a night-Thief, and a day-Thief, a Slayer of Souls, and an Angel of Light turned into Darkneſs. Wherefore Sir, theſe Authorities and other well conſidered, I deem my ſelf damnable, if I either for pleaſure or diſpleaſure of any Creature apply me not diligently to preach the Word of God. And in the ſame damnation I deem all thoſe Prieſts, which of good purpoſe and will enforce them not buſily to do thus, and alſo all them that have purpoſe or will to let any Prieſt of this buſineſs.

Holy Church.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to thoſe three Clerks that ſtood before him, Lo Sirs, this is the manner and buſineſs of this Loſſel and ſuch other, to pick out ſuch ſharp ſentences of holy Scripture and Doctors, to maintain their Sect, and lore againſt the Ordinance of holy Church. And therefore Loſſel, it is thou that coveteſt to have again the Pſalter that I made to be taken from thee at Canterbury, to record ſharp Verſes againſt us. But thou ſhall never have that Pſalter, nor any other Book, till that I know that thy heart and thy mouth accord fully to be governed by holy Church.

And I ſaid, Sir, all my will and power is, and ever ſhall be (I truſt to God) to be governed by holy Church.

And the Archbiſhop asked me, What was holy Church?

And I ſaid, Sir, I told you before what was holy Church. But ſince ye aſk me this demand; I call Chriſt and his Saints holy Church.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid unto me; I wot well that Chriſt and his Saints are holy Church in Heaven, but what is holy Church in Earth?

Two parts of the Church.

And I ſaid, Sir, though holy Church be every one in Charity, yet it hath two parts. The firſt and principal part hath overcomen perfectly all the wretchedneſs of this life, and reigneth joyfully in Heaven with Chriſt. And the other part is here yet in Earth, buſily and continually fighting day and night againſt temptations of the Fiend; forſaking and hating the Proſperity of this World, deſpiſing and withſtanding their fleſhly luſts, which only are the Pilgrims of Chriſt, wandering towards Heaven by ſtedfaſt Faith, and grounded Hope, and by perfect Charity. For theſe heavenly Pilgrims may not, nor will not be letted of their good purpoſe, by the reaſon of any Doctors diſcording from holy Scripture, nor by the floods of any Tribulation Temporal, nor by the wind of any pride, of boaſt, or of menacing of any Creature: For they are all faſt grounded upon the ſure Stone Chriſt, hearing his Word and loving it, exerciſing them faithfully and continually in all their wits to do thereafter.

Materiall Bread.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to his Clerks, See ye not how his heart is indurate, and how he is travelled with the Devil, occupying him thus buſily to inedge ſuch Sentences to maintain his Errors and Hereſies. Certain, thus he would occupy us here all day, if we would ſuffer him.

Weſt helpt Edward M. Clerk.

One of the Clerks anſwered, Sir, he ſaid right now, that this Certification, that came to you from Shrewsbury, is untruly forged againſt him. Therefore Sir, appoſe you him now here in all the points which are certified againſt him, and ſo we ſhall hear of his own mouth his anſwers, and witneſs them.

And the Archbiſhop took the Certification in his hand, and looked thereon a while, and then he ſaid to me:

The foreſaid Articles renewed againſt Thorp.

Lo here it is certified againſt thee by worthy men and faithful of Shrewsbury, that thou preachedeſt there openly in S. Chad's Church, that the Sacrament of the Altar was material Bread after the Conſecration; what ſayeſt thou? Was this truly preached?

The vertue of the Sacrament ſtandeth in the belief, more than in the outward ſigne.

And I ſaid, Sir, I tell you truly that I touched nothing there of the Sacrament of the Altar, but in this wiſe as I will with Gods Grace tell you here. As I flood there in the Pulpit, buſying me to teach the Commandment of God, there knelled a ſacred Bell, and therefore mickle people turned away haſtily, and with noiſe ran fro towards me. And I ſeeing this, ſaid to them thus, Good men, ye were better to ſtand here ſtill and to hear Gods Word. For certes the vertue and the meed of the moſt holy Sacrament of the Altar ſtandeth mickle more in the belief thereof that you ought to have in your Soul, than it doth in the outward ſight thereof. And therefore ye were better to ſtand ſtill quietly to hear Gods Word, becauſe that through the hearing thereof, men come to very true belief. And otherwiſe Sir, I am certain I ſpake not there of the worthy Sacrament of the Altar.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, I believe thee not whatſoever thou ſayeſt, ſince ſo worſhipful men have witneſſed thus againſt thee. But ſince thou denieſt that thou ſaidſt thus there, what ſayeſt thou now? Reſteth there after the Conſecration in the Hoſt, material Bread or no?

And I ſaid, Sir, I know in no place in holy Scripture where this term material Bread is written: and therefore Sir, when I ſpeak of this matter, I uſe not to ſpeak of material Bread.

Then the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, How teacheſt thou men to believe in this Sacrament?

And I ſaid, Sir, as I believe my ſelf, ſo I teach other men.

He ſaid, Tell out plainly thy belief thereof.

And

And I said with my protestation, Sir, I believe that the night before that Christ Jesus would suffer (wilfully) passion for us, Mankind on the morn after, he took Bread in his holy and moft worfhipful hands, lifting up his eyes, and giving thanks to God his Father, bleffed this Bread, and brake it, and gave it to his Difciples, faying to them; Take and eat of this all you, this is my Body. And that this is and ought to be all mens belief, Matthew, Mark, Luke and Paul witneffeth. Other belief Sir I have none, nor will have, nor teach: for I believe, that this fufficeth in this matter. For in this belief, with Gods Grace, I purpofe to live and die, knowledging as I believe and teach other men to believe, that the worfhipful Sacrament of the Altar is the Sacrament of Chrifts flefh and blood in the form of Bread and Wine.

And the Archbifhop faid to me, It is footh that this Sacrament is very Chrifts Body in form of Bread. But thou and thy Sect teacheft it to be fubftance of Bread. Think you this true teaching?

And I faid, Neither I, nor any other of the Sect that ye damn, teach any otherwife than I have told you, nor believe otherwife to my knowing. Nevertheleſs Sir, I ask of you for Charity, that you will tell me plainly, how ye ſhall underſtand the text of S. Paul, where he ſaith thus, This thing feel you in your ſelf, that is in Chriſt Jeſus, while he was in the form of God. Sir, calleth not Paul here the form of God, the ſubſtance or kind of God? Alſo Sir, ſaith not the Church in the hours of the moſt bleſſed Virgin accordingly hereto, where it is written thus? Thou Author of Health remember, that ſometime thou took of the undefiled Virgin the form of our body. Tell me for charity therefore, whether the form of our bodies be called here the kind of our body or no?

The Papiſts have none other defence for them, but only the Church. Every Ordinance of Churchmen biddeth not our faith.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Wouldſt thou make me to declare this Text after thy purpoſe, ſince the Church now hath determined, that there abideth no ſubſtance of Bread, after the Conſecration, in the Sacrament of the Altar? Believeſt thou not this Ordinance of the Church?

And I ſaid, Sir, whatſoever Prelates have ordained in the Church, our belief ſtandeth ever whole, I have not heard, that the Ordinance of men under belief ſhould be put into belief.

The greateſt Doctors of the Church be Apoſtles. S. Paul calleth it Bread.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, If thou haſt not learned this before, learn now to know that thou art out of belief, if in this matter and other thou believeſt not as the holy Church believeth. What ſay Doctors treating of this Sacrament?

And I ſaid, Sir, Saint Paul that was a great Doctor of holy Church, ſpeaking to the people, and teaching them in the right belief of this moſt holy Sacrament, calleth it Bread that we break. And alſo in the Canon of the Maſs after the Conſecration, this moſt worthy Sacrament is called holy Bread. And every Prieſt in this Land, after that he hath received this Sacrament, ſaith in this wiſe, That thing that we have taken with our mouth, we pray God that we may take it with a pure and clean mind; That is, as I underſtand, we pray God that we may receive, through very belief, this holy Sacrament worthily. And Sir, Saint Auguſtine ſaith, That thing that is ſeen is Bread; but that mens faith asketh to be informed of is very Chriſt's Body. And alſo Fulgence an ententive Doctor ſaith, As it were an Error to ſay that Chriſt was but a Subſtance; that is, very Man, and not very God; or to ſay that Chriſt was very God, and not very Man: So is it (this Doctor ſaith) an Error to ſay, that the Sacrament of the Altar is but a Subſtance: And alſo Sir, accordingly hereto, in the ſecret of the mid Maſs on Chriſtmas-day, it is written thus, Idem refulſit Deus, ſic terrena ſubſtantia nobis conferat quod divinum eſt; which ſentence Sir, with the ſecret of the fourth Ferie, quatuor temporum Septembris, I pray you Sir declare here openly in Engliſh.

The ſecret of the Maſs on Chriſtmas-day nameth it a ſecret ſubſtance.

My Lord can reveile apace, he can declare but a little. Choke him up my Lord.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, I perceive well enough whereabout thou art, and how the Devil blindeth thee, that thou may not underſtand the Ordinance of holy Church, nor conſent thereto. But I command thee now, anſwer me ſhortly; Believeſt thou, that, after the Conſecration of this foreſaid Sacrament, there abideth ſubſtiance of Bread, or not?

And I ſaid, Sir, as I underſtand, it is all one to grant or believe that there dwelleth ſubſtance of Bread, and to grant and to believe, that this moſt worthy Sacrament of Chriſts own Body is accident without ſubject. But Sir, for as mikle as your asking paſſeth my underſtanding, I dare neither deny it, nor grant it; for it is a School-matter about which I buſied me never to know: and therefore I commit this term, accidens ſine ſubjecto, to thoſe Clerks which delight them ſo in curious and ſubtil ſophiſtry, becauſe they determine oft ſo difficult and ſtrange matters, and wade and wander ſo in them from argument to argument, with pro & contra, till that they wot not where they are, and underſtand not themſelves. But the ſhame that theſe proud Sophiſters have to yield them to men, and before men, maketh them oft fools, and to be concluded ſhamefully before God.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, I purpoſe not to oblige thee to the ſubtil arguments of Clerks, ſince thou art unable hereto; but I purpoſe to make thee obey to the determination of holy Church.

And I ſaid, Sir, by open evidence and great witneſs, a M. year after the Incarnation of Chriſt, the determination which I have here before you rehearſed, was accept of holy Church as ſufficient to the ſalvation of all them that would believe it faithfully, and work thereafter charitably. But Sir, the determination of this matter was brought in, ſince the Fiend was looſed, by Frier Thomas again, eſpecially calling the moſt worſhipful Sacrament of Chriſts own Body an accident without ſubject: which term, ſince I know not that Gods Law approveth it in this matter, I dare not grant, but utterly I deny to make this Friers ſentence, or any ſuch other, my belief; do with me God what thou wilt.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Well, well, thou ſhalt ſay otherwiſe ere that I leave thee. But what ſayeſt thou to this ſecond point that is recorded againſt thee by worthy men of Shrewsbury, ſaying, That thou preacheſt there, that Images ought not to be worſhipped in any wiſe?

And I ſaid, Sir, I preached never thus, nor through Gods Grace will I at any time conſent to think, or to ſay thus, either privily or apertly. For lo, the Lord wiſneſſeth by Moſes, That the things which he made were right good; and ſo then they were, and yet they are and ſhall be good and worſhipful in their kind. And therefore, to the end that God made them ſo, they are all praiſeable and worſhipful, and ſpecially man, that was made after the Image and likeneſs of God, is full worſhipful in his kind, yea, this holy Image, that is man, God worſhipped. And therefore every man ſhould worſhip other, in kind, and alſo for heavenly Vertues that men uſe charitably. And alſo I ſay, Wood, Tin, Gold, Silver, or any other matter that Images are made of, all theſe Creatures are worſhipful in their kind, and to the end that God made them for. But the carving, caſting, and painting of an imagery, made within mans hand, albeit that this doing be accept of man of higheſt ſtate and dignity, and ordained of them to be a Calendar to lewd men, that neither can, nor will be learned to know God in his Word, neither by his Creatures, nor by his wonderful and divers workings; yet this imagery ought not to be worſhipped in form, nor in the likeneſs of mans craft. Nevertheleſs, that every matter the Painters paint with, ſince it is Gods Creature, ought to be worſhipped in the kind, and to that end that God made and ordained it to ſerve man.

Then the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, I grant well that no body ought to do worſhip to any ſuch Images for themſelves. But a Crucifix ought to be worſhipped for the paſſion of Chriſt that is painted therein, and ſo brought there through to mans mind: and thus the Images of the bleſſed Trinity, and of the Virgin Mary Chriſts Mother, and other Images of Saints ought to be worſhipped. For lo, earthly Kings and Lords which uſe to ſend their Letters enſealed with their Arms, or with their privy Signet to them that are with them, are worſhipped of theſe men. For when theſe men receive their Lords Letters, in which they ſee and know the wills and biddings of the Lords in worſhip of their Lords, they do off their Caps to theſe Letters. Why not then, ſince in Images made with mans hand, we may read and know many and divers things of God, and of his Saints, ſhall we not worſhip their Images?

And

{ KING Hen. 4. } To grant the real being of the Body without God, is as much as to grant the accident to be without the ſubject.

Againſt proud Sophiſters. Pro pium Domino, Templum Domini.

The Church found found till the fiend brake tools.

Tranſubſtantiation brought in by Frier Th. Aquin.

It is happy he did not dy in his hereſie, Anno Dom. 1280.

The ſecond point touching Images. Thop clerk yet with as untruth. Man a worſhipful Image of God.

Though man accept the pleaſing or carving of Images, yet is it not the right way to learn to ſerve God.

The right ſervice of a chriſtian.

Note this well ye worſhippers and unbelievers of images.

{ KING Hen. 4. } No ſimilitude to be made between earthly things and ſpiritual, namely when Gods word doth expreſs to the contrary. So you ſay my Lord, but God's faith contrary in his commandments. Painters devotion and the Popes do well agree. Prepariſon of the painters to make a fair and a devout Image.

And I ſaid, within my foreſaid proteſtation I ſay, That theſe worldly uſages of Temporal Laws that ye ſpeak now of, may be done in caſe without ſin. But this is no ſimilitude to worſhip Images, made by mans hand, ſince that Moſes, David, Solomon, Baruch, and other Saints in the Bible forbid ſo plainly the worſhipping of ſuch Images.

Then the Archbiſhop ſaid to me, Lewd Loſſel, in the Old Law before that Chriſt took Mankind, was no likeneſs of any perſon of the Trinity neither ſhewed to man, nor known of man: But now ſince Chriſt became man, it is leful to have Images to ſhew his Manhood, yea, though many men which are right great Clerks, and other alſo, held it an Error to paint the Trinity; I ſay, it is well done to make and to paint the Trinity in Images. For it is great mowing of devotion to men, to have and to behold the Trinity and other Images of Saints carved, caſt, and painted. For beyond the Sea are the beſt Painters that ever I ſaw. And Sirs, I tell you, this is their manner, and it is a good manner: when that an Image-maker ſhall carve, caſt in mold, or paint any Images, he ſhall go to a Prieſt, and ſhrive him as clean, as if he ſhould then die; and take Penance, and make ſome certain vow of Faſting or of Praying, or Pilgrimages doing, praying the Prieſt ſpecially to pray for him, that he may have Grace to make a fair and a devout Image.

And I ſaid, Sir, I doubt not if theſe Painters that ye ſpeak of, or any other Painters, underſtood truly the text of Moſes, of David, of the Wiſeman, of Baruch, and of other Saints and Doctors; theſe Painters ſhould be moved to ſhrive them to God with full inward ſorrow of heart, taking upon them to do right ſharpe Penance for the finful and vain craft of painting, carving, or caſting they had uſed: promiſing God faithfully never to do ſo after, knowledging openly before all men their reproveable learning. And alſo Sir, theſe Prieſts that ſhrive (as you do ſay) Painters, and enjoyn them to do Penance, and pray for their ſpeed, promiſing to them help of their prayers to be curious in their finful crafts, ſin herein more grievouſly than the Painters. For theſe Prieſts do comfort and give them counſel to do that thing, which of great pain, yea under the pain of Gods curſe, they ſhould utterly forbid them. For certes Sir, if the wonderful working of God, and the holy living and teaching of Chriſt, and of his Apoſtles and Prophets, were made known to the people by holy living, and true, and buſie teaching of Prieſts; theſe things (Sir) were ſufficient Books and Kalenders to know God by, and his Saints, without any Images made with mans hand. But certes, the vicious living of Prieſts and their covetouſneſs, are chief cauſe of this Error; and all other viciouſneſs that reigneth among the people.

The true books and kalenders to know God.

A better light my Lord then to the blind ſtocks there is to be worſhipped.

Then the Archbiſhop ſaid unto me, I hold thee a vicious Prieſt and accurſt, and all they that are of thy Sect; for all Prieſts of holy Church, and all Images that move men to devotion, thou and ſuch other go about to deſtroy. Loſſel, were it a fair thing to come into the Church, and ſee therein none Image?

And I ſaid, Sir, they that come to the Church, to pray devoutly to the Lord God, may in their inward wits be the more fervent, that all their outward wits be cloſe from all outward feeing and hearing, and from all diſturbance and lettings. And ſince Chriſt bleſſed them that ſaw him not bodily, and have believed faithfully in him; it ſufficeth then to all men (through hearing and knowing Gods word, and doing thereafter) to believe in God, though they never ſee Images made with mans hand after any perſon of the Trinity, or of any other Saint.

My Lord, your tea will not ſuffice Gods ear.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid to me with a fervent Spirit: I ſay to thee Loſſel, that it is right well done to make and to have an Image of the Trinity: Yea, what ſayeſt thou? is it not a ſtiring thing to behold ſuch an Image?

And I ſaid, Sir, ye ſaid right now that in the Old Law, ere Chriſt took Mankind, no likeneſs of any Perſon of the Trinity was ſhewed to men: wherefore Sir, ye ſaid it was not then leful to have Images, but now ye ſay, ſince Chriſt is becomen man, it is leful to have and to make an Image of the Trinity, and alſo of other Saints. But Sir, this thing would I learn of you: ſince the Father of Heaven, yea and every perſon of Trinity was without beginning God Almighty, and many holy Prophets that were deadly men, were martyred violently in the Old Law, and alſo many men and women then died Confeſſors; Why was it not then as leful and neceſſary as now, to have made an Image of the Father of Heaven, and to have made and had other Images of Martyrs, Prophets, and holy Confeſſors, to have been Kalendars to adviſe men and move them to devotion, as ye ſay that Images now do?

And the Archbiſhop ſaid, The Synagogue of the Jews had not authority to approve thoſe things as the Church of Chriſt hath now.

The Synagogue of Antichriſt will have authority.

And I ſaid, Sir, S. Gregory was a great man in the new Law, and of great Dignity, and as the Common Law witneſſeth, he commended greatly a Biſhop, in that he forbad utterly the Images made with mans hand ſhould be worſhipped.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid, Ungracious Loſſel, thou ſavoureſt no more truth than an Hound. Since at the Rood at the Northdoor at London, at our Lady at Walſingham, and many other places in England, are many great and praiſeable Miracles done: ſhould not the Images of ſuch holy Saints and places at the reverence of God, and of our Lady, and other Saints, be more worſhipped than other places and Images, where no Miracles are done?

Great miracles done before Images, but my Lord doth not tell by whoſe power.

And I ſaid, Sir, there is no ſuch vertue in any Imagery, that any Image ſhould heretofore be worſhipped with: wherefore I am certain that there is no Miracle done of God in any place in Earth, becauſe that any Images made with mans hand ſhould be worſhipped. And therefore Sir, as I preached openly at Shrewsbury and other places; I ſay now here before you, That no body ſhould truſt that there were any vertue in imagery made with mans hand; and therefore no body ſhould vow to them, nor ſeek them, nor kneel to them, nor bow to them, nor pray to them, nor offer any thing to them, nor kiſs them, nor incenſe them. For lo the moſt worthy of ſuch Images, the brazen Serpent (by Moſes made, at Gods bidding) the good King Ezechias deſtroyed worthily and thankfully, and all becauſe it was incenſed. Therefore Sir, if men take good heed to the writing and the learning of Saint Auguſtine, of Saint Gregory, and of Saint John Chryſoſtome, and of other Saints and Doctors, how they ſpake and wrote of Miracles, that ſhall be done now in the laſt end of the world: It is to be dread, that for the unfaithfulneſs of men and women, the Fiend hath great power to work many of the Miracles that now are done in ſuch places. For both men and women delight now more to hear and know Miracles, than they do to know Gods word, or to hear it effectuouſly. Wherefore, to the great confuſion of all them that thus do, Chriſt ſaith, The Generation of Adulterers requireth Tokens, Miracles, and Wonders. Nevertheleſs, as divers Saints ſay, Now when the Faith of God is publiſhed in Chriſtendom, the Word of God ſufficeth to mans ſalvation, without ſuch Miracles: And thus alſo the Word of God ſufficeth to all faithful men and women without any ſuch Images. But good Sir, ſince the Father of Heaven, that is, God in his Godhead, is the moſt unknown thing that may be, and the moſt wonderful Spirit, having in it no ſhape nor likeneſs, and members of any deadly Creature; in what likeneſs or what Image may God the Father be ſhewed or painted?

Miracles ſhould not be done to Images may well be ſuſpected not to come of God.

A Chriſtian man ought not to vow, fleek, nor bow, nor pray, nor offer, nor kiſs an Image.

For the unfaithfulneſs of men, the devil may work miracles.

The word of God ſufficeth to ſalvation, without miracles.

That which is of nature unknown, cannot be repreſented by any viſible creature known.

And the Archbiſhop ſaid, as holy Church hath ſuffered the Images of the Trinity, and all other Images to be painted and ſhewed; it ſufficeth to them that are Members of holy Church. But ſince thou art a rotten Member, Holy Church of cut away from holy Church; thou favoureſt not the Ordinance thereof. But ſince the day paſſeth, leave we this matter.

your own building.

And then he ſaid to me, What ſayeſt thou to the third point that is certified againſt thee, preaching openly in Shrewsbury, that Pilgrimage is not leful? And over this thou ſaidſt that thoſe men and women that go on Pilgrimages to Canterbury, to Beverly, to Karlington, to Walſingham, and to any other ſuch places, are accurſed and made fooliſh, ſpending their goods in waſte.

The 13th Article. Pilgrimages

And I ſaid, Sir, by this Certification I am accuſed to you that I ſhould teach, that no Pilgrimage is leful. But I ſaid never thus. For I know that there be true Pilgrimages and leful, and full pleaſant to God: and therefore Sir, howſoever mine Enemies have certified you of me, I told at Shrewsbury of two manner of Pilgrimages.

Two manner of pilgrimages.

And

The true pilgrimage is to travel in heavenly things.

And the Archbishop said to me, Whom calleth thou true Pilgrims?

And I said, Sir, with my protestation I call them true Pilgrims travelling toward the bliss of Heaven, which in the state, degree, or order that God calleth them to, do busie them faithfully to occupy all their wits bodily and ghostly, to know truly, and to keep faithfully the biddings of God, hating and fleeing all the seven deadly sins, and every branch of them: Ruling them vertuously (as it is said before) with all their wits, doing discreetly, wisfully, and gladly, all the Works of Mercy, bodily and ghostly, after their cunning and power, abiding them to the Gifts of the Holy Ghost, disposing them to receive them in their Souls, and to hold therein the right blessings of Christ's Soules, and to hold therein the right blessings of Christ's husfsing them to know and to keep the seven principal Vertues, and so then they shall obtain here through Grace, to use thankfully to God all the conditions of Charity. And then they shall be moved with the good Spirit of God, to examine oft and diligently their conscience, that neither wilfully nor wittingly they err in any Article of Belief, having continually (as frailty will suffer) all their business, to dread and to fly the offence of God, and to love over all, and to seek ever to do his pleasant will. Of these Pilgrimages I said, whatsoever good thought that they at any time think, what vertuous work that they speak, and what fruitful work that they work; Every such thought, word, and work is a step numbered of God toward him into Heaven. These foresaid Pilgrims of God, delight sore when they hear of Saints or of vertuous men and women, how they forsook wilfully the prosperity of this life, how they withstood the suggestion of the Fiend, how they restrained their fleshly lusts, how discreet they were in their penance doing, how patient they were in all their Adversities, how prudent they were in counselling of men and women, moving them to hate all sins, and to fly them, and to shame ever greatly thereof, and to love all vertues, and to draw to them, imagining how Christ and his Followers by example of him suffered scorns and slanders, and how patiently they abode and took the wrongful menacing of Tyrants: How homely they were, and serviceable to poor men to relieve and comfort them bodily and ghostly, after their power and cunning, and how devout they were in prayers, how fervent they were in heavenly desires, and how they absented them from Spectacles of vain sayings and hearings, and how stable they were to let and destroy all Vices, and how laborious and joyful they were to sow and to plant Vertues? These heavenly conditions, and such other have Pilgrims, or endeavour to have them, whose pilgrimage God accepteth.

Every good work is a good step to Heaven.

The manner and exemples of Saints.

And again, I said, As their Works shew, the most part of men and women, that go now on Pilgrimages, have not these foresaid conditions, nor love to husie them faithfully to have. For as I well know, since I have full oft assaid, examine whosoever will, 20 of these Pilgrims, and he shall not find three men or women that know surely a Commandment of God, nor can say their Pater noster and Ave Maria, nor their Creed readily in any manner of Language. And as I have learned and also know somewhat by experience of these same Pilgrims, telling the cause why that many men and women go hither and thither now on pilgrimage, it is more for the health of their bodies, than of their Souls: more to have riches and prosperity of this World, than to be inriched with vertues in their Souls: more to have here worldly and fleshly friendship, than to have friendship of God and of his Saints in Heaven: for whatsoever thing man or woman doth, the friendship of God, or of any other Saint, cannot be had, without keeping of Gods Commandments. Further with my protestation, I say now, as I said in Shrewsbury, though they that have fleshly Wills, travel far their bodies, and spend mikle-money, to seek and to visit the Bones or Images (as they say they do) of this Saint or of that: such Pilgrimage going is neither praiseable nor thankful to God nor to any Saint of God, since in effect all such Pilgrims despise God and all his Commandments and Saints. For the Commandments of God they will neither know, nor keep, nor conform them to live vertuously by Example of Christ and of his Saints. Wherefore Sir, I have preached and taught openly, and so I purpose all my life time to do with Gods help, saying, That such fond people waste blamefully Gods goods in their vain Pilgrimages, spending their goods upon vicious Hostelars, which are oft unclean women of their bodies; and at the least, those goods with the which they should do works of Mercy, after Gods bidding, to poor needy men and women.

Pilgrimage displeaseth to God.

Goods evil bestowed in pilgrimage.

{KING Hen. 4.}

These poor mens goods and their livelode, these Runners about offer to rich Priests, which have mikle more livelode than they need. And thus those goods they waft wilfully, and spend them unjustly against Gods bidding upon strangers, with which they should help and relieve after Gods will their poor needy Neighbours at home: yea and over this folly, oftentimes divers men and women, of these Runners thus madly hither and thither into Pilgrimage, borrow hereto other mens goods, yea and sometime they steal mens goods hereto, and they pay them never again. Also Sir, I know well that when divers men and women will go thus after their own wills, and finding out one Pilgrimage; they will ordain with them before, to have with them both men and women, that can well sing wanton Songs, and some other Pilgrims, will have with them Bagpipes: so that every Town that they come through, what with the noise of their singing, and with the sound of their piping, and with the tangling of their Canterbury Bells, and with the barking out of Dogs after them, they make more noise, than if the King came thereaway with all his Clarions, and many other Minstrels. And if these men and women be a month out in their Pilgrimage, many of them shall be an half year after, great Janglers, Taletellers and Lyars.

The incontinence that comforteth rich pilgrims.

You serve my Lord.

And the Archbishop said to me, Lewd Lossel, thou seest not far enough in this matter, for thou considerest not the great travel of Pilgrims, therefore thou blamest that thing that is praiseable. I say to thee, that it is right well done, that Pilgrims have with them both Singers and also Pipers: that when one of them that goeth barefoot striketh his toe upon a stone, and hurteth him sore, and maketh him to bleed, it is well done that he or his Fellow begin then a Song, or else take out of his bosome a Bagpipe, to drive away with such mirth the hurt of his Fellow. For with such solace the travel and weariness of Pilgrims is lightly and merrily born out.

The fourth Article concerning rich tythes.

Well spoken my Lord for Lincolnshire bagpipes. And why than blamed Peter Pilchard for feeding his sheep in the flocks.

And I said, Sir, Saint Paul teacheth men to weep with them that weep.

A Pardon without Gods word.

And the Archbishop said, What jangleth thou against mens devotion? Whatsoever thou or such other say, I say that the Pilgrimage that now is used, is to them that do it a praiseable and a good mean to come the rather to Grace. But I hold thee unable to know this Grace, for thou enforcest thee to let the devotion of the people's since by authority of holy Scripture, men may lefully have and use such solace as thou reprovest. For David in his last Psalm teacheth men to have divers Instruments of Musick to praise God therewith.

A new found way to grace of the Bishops making.

And I said, Sir, by the Sentence of divers Doctors expounding the Psalms of David, that Musick and Minstrelsie that David and other Saints of the Old Law spake of, ought now neither to be taken nor used by the Letter, but these Instruments with their Musick ought to interpreted ghostly: For all those Figures are called Vertues and Grace, with which Vertues men should please God, and praise his Name. For S. Paul saith, All such things befel to them in figure. Therefore, Sir, I understand that the letter of this Psalm of David, and of such other Psalms and Sentences that slay them that take them now literally: This Sentence as I understand Sir, Christ himself approveth, putting out the Minstrels, that he would quicken the dead Damsel.

A difference to be put betwixt the Old Law and the new.

Psalm had the tenth part of the Tythes given to the Levites.

Instruments and musick of the old Testament, how they are to be applied and used in the New Testament.

And the Archbishop said to me, Lewd Lossel, is it not lefful to us to have Organs in the Church to worship therewithall God? And I said, Yea Sir, by mans Ordinance: but by the Ordinance of God, a good Sermon, to the peoples understanding, were mikle more pleasant to God.

Organs in the Church. A fit comparison my Lord, and like your self.

And the Archbishop said, That Organs and good delectable Songs quickned and sharpned more mens wits, than should any Sermon.

But I said, Sir, lustly men and worldly lovers delight and covet, and travel to have all their wits quickned and sharpned with divers sensible solace: But all the faithful Lovers and Followers of Christ, have all their delight to hear Gods Word, and to understand it truly, and Tythes by whom and when they were first commanded in the new Law.

and to work thereafter faithfully and continually. For no doubt, to dread to offend God, and to love to please him in all things quickneth and sharpneth all the wits of Christ's chosen people's and ableth them so to Grace, that they joy greatly to withdraw their ears and all their wits and members from all worldly delight, and from all fleshly solace. For S. Hierome (as I think) saith, No body may joy with this world, and Reign with Christ.

The saying of Hierome.

And the Archbishop (as if he had been displeased with my Answer) said to his Clerks, What ghest ye that this Idiot will speak there, where he hath no dread; since he speaketh thus now here in my presence? Well, well, by God thou shalt be ordained for. And then he spake to me all angerly.

WHat sayst thou to this fourth Point, that is certified against thee, preaching openly and boldly in Shrewsbury, that Priests have no title to Tythes?

And I said, Sir, I warned there no word of Tythes in my preaching. But more than a month after that I was arrested there in prison, a man came to me into the prison, asking me what I said of Tythes: and I said to him, Sir, in this Town are many Clerks and Priests, of which some are called religious men, though many of them be Seculars: Therefore ask ye of them this question. And this man said to me, Sir, our Prelates say, That we also are obliged to pay our Tythes of all things that renew to us; and that they are accursed that withdraw any part wittingly from them of their Tythes. And I said (Sir) to that man, as with my protestation I say now before you, That I wonder that any Priest dare say men to be accursed, without the ground of God's Word. And the man said, Sir, our Priests say, That they curse men thus by the authority of Gods Law. And I said, Sir, I know not where this sentence of cursing is authorised now in the Bible. And therefore, Sir, I pray ye that ye will ask the most cunning Clerk of this Town, that ye may know where this Sentence of cursing them that tythe not, is now written in Gods Law: for if it were written there, I would right gladly be learned where. But shortly this man would not go from me to ask this question of another body: But required me there, as I would answer before God, if in this case that cursing of Priests were lawful and approved of God? And shortly herewith came to my mind the learning of Saint Peter, teaching Priests specially to follow the Lord Christ in their hearts: being evermore ready (as fast as in them is) to answer through faith and hope to them that ask of them a reason. And this lesson Peter teacheth men to use with a meek spirit, and with dread of the Lord. Wherefore Sir, I said to this man in this wise: In the Old Law, which ended not fully till the time that Christ rose up again from death to life, God commanded Tythes to be given to the Levites, for the great business and daily travel that pertained to their Office. But Priests, because their travel was mikle more ease and light, than was the Office of the Levites: God ordained the Priests should take for their livelode to do their Office, the tenth part of those Tythes that were given to the Levites. But now (I said) in the New Law, neither Christ nor any of his Apostles took Tythes of the people, nor commanded the people to pay Tythes, neither to Priests, nor to Deacons. But Christ taught the people to do Alms's that is, works of mercy, to the poor needy men (of surplus, that is, superfluous of their Temporal goods) which they had more than them needed reasonably to their necessary livelode. And thus (I said) not of Tythes, but of pure Alms of the people, Christ lived and his Apostles, when they were so busie in preaching of the Word of God to the people, that they might not travel otherwise to get their livelode. But after Christ's Ascension, and when the Apostles had received the Holy Ghost, they travelled with their hands to get their livelode, when that they might then do so busie preaching. Therefore by example of himself, Saint Paul taught all the Priests of Christ to travel with their hand, when for busie teaching of the people they might thus do. And thus all these Priests, whose Priesthood God accepteth now, or will accept, or did in the Apostles time, and after their decease, will do to the worlds end. But (as Cisterciensis telleth) in the thousand year of our Lord Jesus Christ, 211. year, one Pope Gregory the Tenth ordained new Tythes first to be given to Priests now in the New Law. But Saint Paul in his time, whose trace or trample all Priests of God inforce them to follow, seeing the covetousness that was among the people, desiring to defray that foul sin through the Grace of God and true vertuous living and example of himself, wrought and taught all Priests to follow him as he followed Christ, patiently, willingly, and gladly in high Poverty: Wherefore Paul saith thus, The Lord hath ordained that they that preach the Gospel, shall live of the Gospel. But we (saith Paul*)* that covet and busie us to be faithful Followers of Christ, use not this power. For lo (as Paul witnesseth afterward) when he was full poor and needy, preaching among the people: he was not chargeous unto them, but with his handy he travelled not only to get his own living, but also the living of other poor and needy Creatures: and since the people was never so covetous, nor so avaritious (as they are now) as they are now; it were good counsel that all Priests took good heed to this heavenly learning of Paul following him here in wilful poverty, nothing charging the people for their bodily livelode. But because that many Priests do contrary to Paul in this foresaid Doctrine, Paul biddeth the people take heed to those Priests that follow him as he had given them example. As if Paul would say thus to the people, Accept ye none other Priests than they, that live after the form that I have taught you. For certain, in whatsoever Dignity or Order that any Priest is in, if he conform him not to follow Christ and his Apostles in wilful poverty, and in other heavenly vertues, and especially in true preaching of Gods Word's though such a one be named a Priest, yet he is no more but a Priest in name, for the work of every Priest in such an one wanteth. This sentence approveth Augustine, Gregory, Chrysostome, and Lincoln plainly.

Paul having power to take, yet used it not.

Paul would not be chargeous. If Priests were covetous then, what be they now?

This rule with the rule of begging Friers cannot stand together.

And the Archbishop said to me, Thinkest thou this wholesome learning to sow openly, or yet privily among the people? Certain this Doctrine contrarieth plainly the Ordinance of holy Fathers, which have ordained, granted and licensed Priests to be in divers degrees, and to live by Tythes and Offerings of the people, and by other duties.

Wholesome enough my Lord if your taste were good to savour it. But contrarieth not the Ordinance either of God, or of his Word.

And I said, Sir, if Priests were now in measurable measure and number, and lived vertuously, and taught busily and truly the Word of God, by example of Christ and of his Apostles, without Tythes, Offerings, and other duties that Priests now challenge and take, the people would give them freely sufficient livelode.

Priests would not sort luck in their duty, they should not luck in having sufficient.

And a Clerk said to me, How wilt thou make this good, that the people will give freely to Priests their livelode's since that now by the Law every Priest can scarcely constrain the people to give them their livelode?

Fellow argumentum ferarium now ceaseth to ceasse. The evil demeanour of the Priests is the cause why the people be so slack in their tythes.

And I said, Sir, it is now no wonder though the people grudge to give Priests the livelode that they ask: Mekill people know now, how that Priests should live, and how that they live contrary to Christ and to his Apostles. And therefore the people is full heavy to pay (as they do) their Temporal goods to Parsons, and to other Vicars and Priests, which should be faithful Dispensators of the Parishes goods: taking to themselves no more but a scarce living of Tythes, nor of Offerings, by the Ordinance of the Common Law. For what soever Priests take of the people (be it tythe or offering, or any other duty or service) the Priests ought to have thereof no more, but a bare living: and to depart the residue to the poor men and women, specially of the Parish of whom they take this Temporal living. But the most deal of Priests now wasteth their Parishes goods, and spendeth them at their own will after the World, in their vain lusts: So that in few places poor men have duly (as they should have) their own sustenance, neither of Tythes, nor of Offerings, nor of other large wages and foundations that Priests take of the people in divers manners above that they need for needful sustenance of meat and clothing: but the poor needy people are forsaken and left of Priests to be sustained of the Parishioners, as if the Priests took nothing of the Parishioners to help the people with.

Priests being content with sufficiency, and a bare living ought to exact the residue to the poor.

Priests did so then, but our Priests do not so now.

And thus Sir, into over great Charges of the Parishioners they pay their Temporal goods twice, where once might suffice, if Priests were true Dispensators. Also Sir, the Parishioners that pay their Temporal goods (be they Tythes or Offerings) to Priests that do not their Office as they should, are Partners of every sin of the Priests; because that they sustain those Priests folly in their

Whether tythes are to be paid to Priests doing not their duty.

their sin, with their Temporal goods. If these things be well considered; what wonder is it then Sir, if the Parishioners grudge against these Distensators?

Ghostly Mother, may an ungodly fire-dame, to all Gods Children.

Then the Archbishop said to me, Thou that shouldst be judged and ruled by holy Church, presumptuously thou deemest holy Church to have erred in the Ordinance of Tythes and other duties to be paid to Priests. It shall be long ere thou thrivest Lossel, that thou defilest thy ghostly Mother. How darest thou speak this (Lossel) among the people? Are not Tythes given to Priests to live by?

By the law none could challenge Tythes, but only the seed of Levi: Our Priests be not of the seed of Levi: Ergo by the Law our Priests can not challenge Tythes. As the Priesthood is changed, so is the law changed.

And I said, Sir, S. Paul saith, That Tythes were given in the Old Law to Levites and to Priests, that came of the Lineage of Levi. But our Priests, he saith, came not of the Lineage of Levi, but of the Lineage of Juda, to which Juda no Tythes were promised to be given. And therefore Paul saith, since the Priesthood is changed from the Generation of Levi to the Generation of Juda; It is necessary that changing also be made of the Law. So that Priests live now without Tythes and other Duties that they claim. following Christ and his Apostles in wilful Poverty, as they have given them example. For since Christ lived (all the time of his Preaching) by pure Alms of the people; and by Example of him his Apostles lived in the same wise, or else by the travel of their hands, as it is said above: every Priest, whose Priesthood Christ approveth, knoweth well, and confesseth in word and in work, That a Dificiple ought not to be above his Master, but it sufficeth to a Disciple to be as his Master, simple and pure, meek and patient; and by Example especially of his Master Christ every Priest should rule him in all his living; and so after his cunning and power, a Priest should busie him to inform and to rule whomsoever he might charitably.

Bless, but curse not, saith S. Paul. He goeth near you my Lord, when he toucheth your tythes. The difference of the freedoms between the Old and New Law.

And the Archbishop said to me with a great spirit, Gods Curse have thou and mine for this teaching: for thou wouldst hereby make the Old Law more free and perfect than the New Law. For thou sayst that it is lesful to Levites and to Priests to take Tythes in the Old Law, and so to enjoy their Priviledges: but to us Priests in the New Law, thou sayst it is not lawful to take Tythes: and thus thou givest to Levites of the Old Law, more freedom than to Priests of the New Law.

For what cause tythes were given in the old Law.

And I said, Sir, I marvel that ye understand this plain Text of Paul thus; Ye wot well, that the Levites and Priests in the Old Law that took Tythes, were not so free nor so perfect, as Christ and his Apostles that took no Tythes. And Sir, there is a Doctor (I think that it is Saint Hierome) that saith thus, The Priests that challenge now in the New Law, Tythes; say in effect, that Christ is not become man, nor that he hath yet suffered death for mans love. Wherefore this Doctor saith this Sentence: Since Tythes were the heirs and wages limited to Levites and to Priests of the Old Law for bearing about of the Tabernacle, and for slaying and flaying of Beasts, and for burning of Sacrifice, and for keeping of the Temple, and for trumping of battel before the Host of Israel, and other divers Observances that pertained to their Office: those Priests that will challenge or take Tythes, deny that Christ is come in the flesh, and do the Priests Office of the Old Law, for whom Tythes were granted, for else (as this Doctor saith) Priests take now Tythes wrongfully.

If you take away tithes you undo the Church.

And the Archbishop said to his Clerks, Heard you ever Lossell speak thus? Certain this is the Learning of them all, that wheresoever they come, and they may be suffered, they enforce them to expugn the freedom of holy Church.

And I said, Sir, why call ye the taking of Tythes, and of such other duties that Priests challenge now (wrongfully) the freedom of holy Church: since neither Christ nor his Apostles, challenged nor took such duties? Therefore these takings of Priests now are not called justly the freedom of holy Church, but all such giving and taking ought to be called and holden, the slanderous covetousness of men of the holy Church.

And the Archbishop said to me, Why Lossell, wilt not thou and other that are confederate with thee, seek out of holy Scripture and of the sense of Doctors, all sharp Authorities against Lords, Knights, and Squires, and against other secular men as thou dost against Priests?

And I said, Sir, whatsoever men or women, Lords or Ladies, or any other that are present in our preaching especially, or in our communing, after our cunning, we tell out to them their Office and their Charges: but Sir, since Chrysostome saith, That Priests are the stomach of the people, it is needful in preaching, and also in communing, to be most busie about this Priesthood: Since by the viciousness of Priests both Lords and Commons are most sinfully infected and led into the worst. And because that the covetousness of Priests and pride, and the boast that they have and make of their Dignity and Power, defyeth not only the vertues of Priesthood in Priests themselves, but also over this, it stirreth God to take great vengeance both upon the Lords, and upon the Commons, which suffer these Priests charitably.

And the Archbishop said to me, Thou judgest every Priest proud that will not go arrayed as thou dost: by God I deem him to be more meek that goeth every day in a scarlet Gown, than thou in thy thread-bare blue Gown. Wherely knowest thou a proud man?

And I said, Sir, a proud Priest may be known, when he demeth to follow Christ and his Apostles in wilful Poverty and other Vertues: and coveteth worldly worship, and taketh it gladly, and gathereth together with pleading, menacing, or with flattering, or with simony, any worldly goods; and most; if a Priest lusie him not chiefly in himself, and after in all other men and women after his cunning and power to withstand sin.

A Priest finds proud when he goeth gay.

And the Archbishop said to me, Though thou knewest a Priest to have all these vices, and though thou sawest a Priest lovely lie now by a woman knowing her fleshly, wouldst thou therefore damn this Priest damnable? I say to thee, that in the turning about of thy hand, such a Sinner may be verily repented.

God shall judge all Forthermore What say you Lord?

And I said, Sir, I will not damn any man for any sin that I know done or may be done, so that the Sinner leaveth his sin. But by authority of holy Scripture, he that sinneth thus openly as you shew here, is damnable for doing of such a sin; and most specially, a Priest that should be example to all other to hate and fly sin. And in how short time soever ye say that such a Sinner may be repented: he ought not of him that knoweth his sinning, to be judged verily repentant, without open evidence of great shame and hearty sorrow for sin. For whosoever (and specially a Priest) that useth pride, envy, covetousness, lechery, simony, or any other Vices, sheweth not as open evidence of repentance as he hath given evil example and occasion of sinning, if he continue in any such sin as long as he may; it is likely that sin leaveth him, and he not sin. And as I understand, such a one sinneth unto death, for whom no body oweth to pray, as S. John saith.

Priests ought rule example of holy living

And a Clerk said then to the Archbishop, Sir, the longer that ye apposse him, the worse he is; and the more you busie you to amend him, the waywarder he is. For he is of so shrewd a kind, that he shameth not only to be himself a foul nest, but without shame he busieth him to make his nest fouler.

Clerkly spoken, and like a parable.

And then the Archbishop said to his Clerk, Suffer a while, for I am at an end with him, for there is another point certified against him, and I will bear what he saith thereto.

Forget not to bring I pray you my Lord.

And so then he said to me, Lo it is here certified against thee, that thou preachedst openly as Wicliffe, that it is not lawful to swear in any case.

Not lawful to swear by any Creature.

And I said, Sir, I never preached so openly, nor have I taught in this wise in any place. But Sir, as I preached in Shrewsbury, with my protestation I say to you now here, That by the authority of the Epistle of Saint James, and by witnes of divers Saints and Doctors, I have preached openly in one place or other, that it is not lawful in any case to swear by any Creature. And over this Sir, I have also preached and taught by the foresaid authorities, that no body should swear in any case, if that without Oath in any wise he that is charged to swear might excuse him to them that have power to compel him to swear in lesful thing and lawful. But if a man may not excuse him, without Oath, to them that have power to compel him to swear, then he ought to swear only by God, taking him only; that is, southfastnesse, to witness to southfastnesse

Either Malvern, or else Sir Rob. de Blemeale. Standeth Chrysostome here, saying it to be sin to swear well.

And so the Archbishop asked me, how I understood here Chrysostome.

Christ prohibiteth and alloweth oath and utterance.

And certain, I was somewhat afraid to answer hereto. For I had bulled me to study about the sense thereof, but lifting up my mind to God, I prayed him of grace. And as fast as I thought how Christ said to his Apostles, When for my name ye shall be brought before Judges, I shall give into your mouth wisdom that your adversaries shall not against say; and trusting faithfully in the Word of God, I said, Sir, I know well that many men and women have now swearing so in custom, that they neither know or will know, that they do evil to swear as they do; but they think and say, that they do well to swear as they do, though they know well that they swear untruly. For they say, they may by their swearing (though it be false) void

KING. I see, as I will Gods, the Judge, of your own law, your brake your head.

Thus Priests would be thought to be good, as they ne-ver so bad.

And then a Clerk asked me, If it were not lesful to a Subject, at the bidding of his Prelate, to kneel down and touch the holy Gospel book, and kiss it, saying, So help me God and this holy dome? for he should after his cunning and power do all things that his Prelate commandeth him.

A Gospel book-kneeled that is to Slavon. The Spire and mitre of proud Priests.

And I said to them, Sirs, ye speak here full generally or largely. What if a Prelate commanded his Subject to do an unlawful thing, should he obey thereto?

And the Archbishop said to me, A Subject ought not to suppose, that his Prelate will bid him do an unlawful thing. For a Subject ought to think that his Prelate will bid him do nothing, but that he will answer for before God, that it is lesful: And then, though the bidding of the Prelate be unlawful, the subject hath no peril to fulfil it, since that he thinketh and judgeth, that what soever thing his Prelate biddeth him do, that it is lesful to him for to do.

A comunication betwixt a Lawyer and a Divine.

And I said, Sir, I trust not thereto. But to our purpose; Sir, I tell you, that I was once in a Gentlemans house, and there were then two Clerks there, a Master of Divinity, and a Man of Law, which Man of Law was alfo communing in Divinity. And among other things, these Men spake of Oaths; and the Man of Law said, at the bidding of his Sovereign which had power to charge him to swear, he would lay his hand upon a Book and bear his charge; and if his charge, to his understanding, were unlesful, he would hastily withdraw his hand upon the Book, taking there only God to witness, that he would fulfil that lesful charge after his power. And the Master of Divinity said then to him thus; Certain he that layeth his hand upon a Book in this wise, and maketh there a promise to do that thing that he is commanded, is obliged thereby by Book-oath, then to fulfil his charge. For no doubt, he that chargeth him to lay his hand thus upon a Book (touching the Book, and swearing by it, and kissing it, promising in this form to do this thing or that) will say and witness that he that toucheth thus a Book, and kisseth it, hath sworn upon that Book. And all other men that see that man thus do, and also all those that hear hereof, in the same wise will say and witness, that this man hath sworn upon a Book. Wherefore, the Master of Divinity said, It was not lesful either to give or to take any such charge upon a Book: for every Book is nothing else, but divers creatures of which it is made of. Therefore to swear upon a Book is to swear by creatures, and this swearing is ever unlesful. This sentence witnesseth Chrysostome plainly, blaming them greatly that bring forth a Book to swear upon, charging Clerks that in no wife they constrain any body to swear, whether they think a man to swear true or false.

To swear by a book, his swear by creatures.

Chrysostome blameth Book-oaths.

Here now lacked fewer to scratch him by the face.

And the Archbishop and his Clerks scorned me, and blamed me greatly for this saying. And the Archbishop menaced me with great punishment and sharp, except I left this opinion of swearing.

And I said, Sir, this is not mine opinion, but it is the opinion of Christ our Saviour, and of S. James, and of Chrysostome, and of other divers Saints and Doctors.

Then the Archbishop had a Clerk read this Homily of Chrysostome; which Homily this Clerk held in his hand written in a Roll; which Roll the Archbishop caused to be taken from my fellow at Canterbury. And so then this Clerk read this Roll, till he came to a clause where Chrysostome saith, that it is sin to swear well.

And then a Clerk (Malverea as I guess) said to the Archbishop, Sir, I pray you weete of him, how he understandeth Chrysostome's Homily.

And so the Archbishop asked me, how I understood here Chrysostome.

And certain, I was somewhat afraid to answer hereto. For I had bulled me to study about the sense thereof, but lifting up my mind to God, I prayed him of grace. And as fast as I thought how Christ said to his Apostles, When for my name ye shall be brought before Judges, I shall give into your mouth wisdom that your adversaries shall not against say; and trusting faithfully in the Word of God, I said, Sir, I know well that many men and women have now swearing so in custom, that they neither know or will know, that they do evil to swear as they do, but they think and say, that they do well to swear as they do, though they know well that they swear untruly. For they say, they may by their swearing (though it be false) void blame or temporal harm, which they should have if they swear not thus. And Sir, many men and women maintain strongly that they swear well, when that thing is sooth that they swear for. Also full many men and women say now, that it is well done to swear by creatures, when they may not (as they say) otherwise be believed. And also, full many men and women say now, that it is well done to swear by God, and by our Lady, and by other Saints, to have them in mind. But since all these sayings are but excusations, and in us me thinketh Sir, that this is false of Chrysostome may be alledged well against all such swearers; witnessing that all these sin grievously, though they think themselves to swear in this forefaid wise well; for it is evil done, and great sin to swear truth, when in any manner a man may excuse himself without Oath.

The place of Chrysostome from expounded, how it is sin to swear well. What it is to swear well.

And the Archbishop said, That Chrysostome might be thus understood.

And then a Clerk said to me, Wilt thou tarry my Lord no longer, but submit thee here meekly to the Ordinance of holy Church, and lay thy hand upon a Book, touching the holy Gospel of God, promising not only with thy mouth, but also with thine heart to stand to my Lords Ordinance.

Pope holy Church.

And I said, Sir, have I not told you here, how that I heard a Master of Divinity say, That in such a case it is all one to touch a book, and to swear by a book?

To touch a book is to swear by a book.

It is happy he called not for a Candle, and made a Sacrifice of him: a Sinner died of Tenkesbury.

And the Archbishop said, Yea.

And I said, if Chrysostome proveth him worthy of great blame, that bringeth forth a book to swear upon: it must needs follow, that he is more to blame that sweareth on that book.

It is happy that Chrysostome was not here, or else he would have had him by the beard. But that word cannot be touched. They reason not to sweat.

And the Archbishop said, If Chrysostome meant accordingly to the Ordinance of holy Church, we will accept him.

And then said a Clerk to me, Is not the Word of God and God himself equipollens, that is, of one authority?

And I said Yea.

Then he said to me, Why wilt thou not swear then by the Gospel of God, that is, Gods Word, since it is all one to swear by the Word of God, and by God himself?

And I said, Sir, since I may not now otherwise be believed, but by swearing, I perceive (as Augustine saith) that it is not speedful that ye that should be my brethren, should not believe me; therefore I am ready by the Word of God (as the Lord commanded me by his Word) to swear.

Then the Clerk said to me, Lay then thine hand upon the book, touching the Holy Gospel of God, and take thy charge.

And I said, Sir, I understand that the holy Gospel of God may not be touched with mans hand.

And the Clerk said I fonded, and that I said not truth.

And I asked this Clerk, whether it were more to read the Gospel, than to touch the Gospel.

And he said, it was more to read the Gospel.

Whether the book be the Gospels. Hieromes faith, the Gospel is not the Gospel for reading, but for believing.

Then I said, Sir, by authority of St. Hierome the Gospel is not the Gospel for reading of the letter, but for the belief that men have in the Word of God. That it is the Gospel that we believe, and not the Letter that we read; because the letter that is touched with mans hand, is not the Gospel, but the sentence that is verily believed in mans heart is the Gospel. For so Hierome saith, The Gospel, that is the vertue of Gods Word, is not in the leaves of the book, but it is in the root of reason. Neither the Gospel (he faith) is in the writing alone of the letters, but the Gospel is in the marking of the sentence of Scripture. This sentence approveth St. Paul, saying thus, The Kingdom of God is not in word, but in vertue. And David saith, The voice of the Lord, that is, his Word is in vertue. And after David saith, Through the Word of God the Heavens were formed, and in the spirit of his mouth is all the vertue of them.

The G-God is not the leavest of book, but the root of reason. St. Paul. David.

And I pray you, Sir, understand ye well how David saith then, In the spirit of the mouth of the Lord is all the vertue of Angels and of Men.

This Clerk was well seen in the Mass-book.

And the Clerk said to me, Thou wouldst make us too fond with thee. Say we not that the Gospel is written in the Mass-book?

And I said, Sir, though men use to say thus, yet it is an unperfect speech. For the principal part of a thing is properly the whole thing. For so Mans soul that may not now be seen here, nor touched with any sensible thing, is properly Man. And all the vertue of a tree is in the root thereof, that may not be seen; for do away the root, and the tree is destroyed. And Sir, as ye said to me right now, God and his Word are of one authority; And Sir, St. Hierome witnesseth that Christ (very God and very Man) is hid in the letter of the Law; thus also, Sir, the Gospel is hid in the letter. For Sir, as it is full likely, many and divers Men and Women here in the earth, touched Christ and saw him, and knew his bodily person, which neither touched, nor saw, nor knew, ghostly his Godhead: Right thus Sir, many Men now touch and see, and write, and read the Scriptures of Gods Law; which neither see, touch, nor read effectually the Gospel. For as the Godhead of Christ (that is, the vertue of God) is known by the vertue of belief, so is the Gospel, that is, Christs Word.

The Gospel is not the letter, but hid in the letter.

Misty matters for your blind eyes.

And a Clerk said to me, These be full misty matters and unsavoury, that thou shewest here to us.

And I said, Sir, if ye that are Masters know not plainly this sentence, ye may fore dread that the Kingdom of Heaven be taken from you, as it was from the Princes of Priests, and from the Elders of the Jews.

And then a Clerk (as I guess Malvoren) said to me, Thou knowest not thine equivocations: for the Kingdom of Heaven hath divers understandings. What calleth thou the Kingdom of Heaven in this sentence that thou shewest here?

The Kingdom of God taken for the understanding of Gods word. This fait was somewhat too sharp for their rotten flesh to abide.

And I said, Sir, by good reason and sentence of Doctors, the Realm of Heaven is called here the understanding of Gods Word.

And a Clerk said to me, From whom thinkest thou that this understanding is taken away?

And I said, Sir, (by authority of Christ himself) the effectual understanding of Christs Word is taken away from all them chiefly, which are great lettered Men, and presume to understand high things, and will be holden wise men, and desire Mastership, and high state and dignity; but they will not conform them to the living and teaching of Christ and of his Apostles.

Then the Archbishop said, Well, well, thou wilt judge thy Sovereigns. By God, the King doth not his duty, unless he suffer thee to be condemned.

Help down with him Sir John.

And then another Clerk said to me, Why, (on Friday that last was) counselledst thou a Man of my Lords, that he should not shrieve him to no man, but only to God?

And with this asking I was abashed; and then by and by I knew that I was subtilly betrayed of a man that came to me in Prison on the Friday before, communing with me in this matter of confession. And certain, by his words I thought that this man came then to me of full fervent and charitable will; but now I know he came to tempt me and to accuse me; God forgive him, if it be his will. And with all my heart when I had thought thus, I said to this Clerk: Sir, I pray you that you would fetch this man hither; and all the words, as near as I can, repeat them, which I spake to him on Friday in the Prison, I will rehearse now here before you all, and before him.

Note here the crafty practice of this holy Church.

And (as I guess) the Archbishop said then to me, They that are now here suffice to repeat them. How saidst thou to him?

A false brother.

And I said, Sir, that man came and asked me in divers things, and after his asking, I answered him (as I understood) that good was. And as he shewed to me by his words, he was sorry of his living in Court, and right heavy for his own vicious living, and also for the viciousness of other men, and specially of Priests evil living; and therefore he said to me with a sorrowful heart (as I guessed) that he purposed fully within short time to leave the Court and to bulie him to know Gods law, and to conform all his life thereafter. And when he had said to me these words and more other which I would rehearse if he were present, he prayed me to hear his confession. And I said to him, Sir, wherefore come ye to me, to be confessed of me? Ye wot well that the Archbishop putteth and holdeth me here, as one unworthy either to give or to take any Sacrament of holy Church.

Auricular Confession.

And he said unto me, Brother, I wot well, and so I wot many other more, that you and such other are wrongfully vexed, and therefore I commune with you the more gladly. And I said to him, certain I wot well, that many men of this Court, and specially the Priests of this Houshold would be full evil apaid both with you and me, if they wist that ye were confessled of me. And he said, that he cared not therefore for he had full little affection in them. And as me thought, he spake these words and many other, of a good will and of a high desire, to have known and done the pleasant will of God. And I said to him, as with my forefaid protestation I say to you now here: Sir, I counsel you to absent you from all evil company, and to draw you to them that love and bulie them to know and to keep the precepts of God; and then the good Spirit of God will move you to occupy bulily all your wits in gathering together of all your sins, as far as ye can bethink you, shaming greatly of them, and sorrowing heartily for them: yea Sir, the Holy Ghoft will then put in your heart a good will and a fervent desire to take and to hold a good purpose, to hate ever and to fly (after your cunning and power) all occasion of sin; and so then wisdom shall come to you from above, lightning (with divers beams of grace and of heavenly delire) all your wits, enforming you how ye shall truft stedfastly in the mercy of the Lord, knowledging to him only all your vicious living, praying to him ever devoutly of charitable counsel and continuance, hoping without doubt, that if ye continue thus, bulying you faithfully to know and to keep his biddings, he will (for he only may) forgive you all your sins. And this man faid to me, Though God forgive men their sins, yet it behoveth men to be assoyled of Priests, and to do the penance that they enjoyn them.

God only forgiveth sin, Men can only consell to have sin.

And I said to him, Sir, it is all one to assoil Men of their sins, and to forgive Men their sins. Wherefore since it pertaineth only to God to forgive sin; it sufficeth in this case, to counsel Men and Women to leave their sin, and to comfort them that bulie them thus to do, to hope stedfastly in the mercy of God. And again, Priests ought to tell sharply to customable sinners, that if they will not make an end of their sin, but continue in divers sins while that they may sin, all such deserve pain without any end. And therefore Priests should ever bulie them to live well and holily, and to teach the people bulily and truly the Word of God, shewing to all folk in open preaching, and in privy counselling, That the Lord God only forgiveth sin. And therefore, those Priests that take upon them to assoil men of their sins, blaspheme God; since that it pertaineth only to the Lord to assoil men of all their sins. For no doubt, a thousand year after that Christ was Man, no Priest of Christ durst take upon him to teach the people, neither privily nor apertly, that they behoved needs to come to be assoiled of them as Priests now do. But by authority of Christs Word Priests bound indurate, customable sinners to everlasting pains, which in no time of their living would bulie them faithfully to know the biddings of God, nor to keep them. And again, all they that would occupy all their wits to hate and to fly all occasion of sin, dreading over all things to offend God, and loving to please him continually; to these men and women Priests shewed how the Lord assoiled men of all their sins; and thus Christ promised to confirm in Heaven all the binding and losing that Priests by authority of his Word, bind men in sin that are indurate therein, or loose them out of sin here upon Earth that are verily repentant. And this man hearing these words said, that he might well in Conscience consent to this sentence. But he said, Is it not needful to the lay people that cannot thus do, to go shrieve them to the Priests? And I said, if a man feel himself so distroubled with any sin, that he cannot by his own wit avoid this sin without counsel of them that are herein wiser than he; in such a case the counsel of a good Priest is full necessary. And if a good Priest fail, as they do now commonly, in such a case, Saint Augustine saith, That may be a man may lawfully commune and take counsel of a vertuous secular man. But certain, that man or woman is overladen and too beastly, which cannot bring their own sins into their mind, bulying them night and day to hate and to forsake all their sins, doing a sigh for them after

A good counsellor may be a Priest, or a Lay man.

KING Hen. 4.

after their cunning and power. And Sir, full accordingly to this sentence upon Midlent Sunday (two year as I guess now agone) I heard a Monk of Feversham, that Men called Mordem, preach at Canterbury at the Cross within Christ-Church Abbey, saying thus of Confession: That as though the suggestion of the fiend, without counsel of any other body, of themselves many men and women can imagine and find means and ways enough to come to pride, to theft, to lechery, and other divers vices; in contrariwise this Monk said, Since the Lord God is more ready to forgive sin than the fiend is or may be of power to move any body to sin, then whosoever will shame and sorrow heartily for their sins, knowledging them faithfully to God, amending them after their power and cunning, without counsel of any other body than of God and of himself (through the grace of God) all such men and women may find sufficient means to come to Gods mercy, and so to be clean assoiled of all their sins. This sentence I said, Sir, to this Man of yours, and the self words as near as I can guess.

Mordem Monk of Feversham preaching of Confession.

Hearty repentance to God, needeth no confession to a Priest.

A crafty train of a Popish disciple.

No nor any thing else that is good

And the Archbishop said, Holy Church approveth not this learning.

And I said, Sir, holy Church, of which Christ is Head in Heaven and in Earth, must needs approve this sentence. For lo, hereby all men and women may, if they will, be sufficiently taught to know and keep the Commandments of God, and to hate and to fly continually all occasion of sin, and to love and to feek vertues bulily, and to believe in God stably; and to truft in his mercy stedfastly, and so to come to perfect charity, and continue therein perseverantly. And more the Lord asketh not of any man here now in this life. And certain, since Jesus Christ died upon the Cross, wilfully to make men free; Men of the Church are too bold and too bulie to make men thrall, binding them under the pain of endless curse (as they say) to do many observances and ordinances, which neither the living nor teaching of Christ nor of his Apostles approveth.

Christ giveth freedom the Pope giveth thraldom.

And a Clerk faid then to me, Thou shewest plainly here thy deceit, which thou hast learned of them that travelled to sow the popple among the wheat. But I counsel thee to go away clean from this learning, and submit thee lowly to my Lord, and thou shalt find him yet to be gracious to thee.

And as fast then, another Clerk faid to me, How wast thou so bold at Paul's Cross in London, to stand there hard with thy tippet bounden about thine head, and to reprove in his Sermon the worthy Clerk Alkerton, drawing away all that thou mightest? yea, and the same day at afternoon; thou meeting the worthy Doctor in Watlingstreet, calledst him false flatterer and hypocrite.

And I said, Sir, I think certainly, that there was no man nor woman that hated verily sin, and loved vertues (hearing the Sermon of the Clerk at Oxford, and also Alkerton's Sermon) but they said, or might justly say, that Alkerton reproved that Clerk untruly, and slandred him wrongfully and uncharitably. For no doubt, if the living and teaching of Christ chiefly and of his Apostles be true, no body that loveth God and his Law will blame any sentence that the Clerk then preached there; since by authority of Gods Word, and by approved Saints and Doctors, and by open reason, this Clerk approved all things clearly that he preached there.

And a Clerk of the Archbishop faid to me, his Sermon was false, and that he shewed openly, since he dare not stand forth and defend his preaching that he then preached there.

And I said, Sir, I think that he purposeth to stand stedfastly thereby, or else he slandereth foully himself, and also many other that have great truft that he will stand by the truth of the Gospel. For I wot well, this Sermon is written both in Latine and English, and many men have it, and they set great price thereby. And Sir, if ye were present with the Archbishop at Lambeth when this Clerk appeared, and was at his answer before the Archbishop, ye wot well that this Clerk denied not there his Sermon, but two days he maintained it before the Archbishop and his Clerks.

And then the Archbishop or one of his Clerks said (I wot not which of them) That harlot shall be met with for that Sermon. For no Man but he and thou, and such other false harlots, preacheth any such preaching.

And then the Archbishop said, Your cursed Sect is bulie, and it joyeth right greatly to contrary and to destroy the privilege and freedom of holy Church.

And I said, Sir, I know no man that travel so bulily as this Sect doth (which you reprove) to make reft and peace in holy Church. For pride, covetousness, and simony, which distrouble most holy Church, this Sect hateth and fleeth, and travelleth bulily to move all other men in like manner, unto meekness and wilful poverty, and charity, and free ministring of the Sacrament, this Sect loveth and useth, and is full bulie to move all other folks thus to do. For these vertues ow all members of holy Church to their Head Christ.

The true freedom of holy Church not destroyed but increased by true preachers.

Then a Clerk faid to the Archbishop, Sir, it is far day, and ye have far to ride to night; therefore make an end with him. For he will none make: but the more Sir, that ye bulie you to draw him toward you, the more contumax he is made, and the further from you.

And then Malvoren faid to me, William, kneel down, and pray my Lords grace, and leave all thy fantasies, and become a child of holy Church.

Take my Lords blessing and rise and stand up.

And I said, Sir, I have prayed the Archbishop of, and yet I pray him for the love of Christ, that he will leave his indignation that he hath against me: and that he will suffer me after my cunning and power, to do mine office of Priesthood, as I am charged of God to do it. For I covet nought else but to serve my God to his pleasing in the state that I stand in, and have taken me to.

And the Archbishop faid to me, If of good heart thou will submit thee now here meekly, to be ruled from this time forth by my counsel, obeying meekly and wilfully to my Ordinance, thou shalt find it most profitable and best to thee to do thus. Therefore tarry thou me no longer, grant to do this that I have said to thee now here shortly, or deny it utterly.

My Lord hath hath for being benighted.

And I said to the Archbishop, Sir, owe we to believe that Jesus Christ was and is very God and very Man?

And the Archbishop said Yea.

And I said, Sir, owe we to believe that all Christs living and his teaching is true in every point?

And he said, Yea.

And I said, Sir, owe we to believe that the living of the Apostles, and the teaching of Christ and all the Prophets, are true which are written in the Bible for the health and salvation of good people?

And he said Yea.

And I said, Sir, owe all Christian Men and Women after ther cunning and power, to conform all their living to the teaching specially of Christ, and also to the teaching and living of his Apostles and of Prophets, in things that are pleasant to God and edification of his Church?

And he said, Yea.

And I said, Sir, ought the Doctrine, the bidding, or the counsel of any body to be accepted or obeyed unto; except this Doctrine, thele biddings, or this counsel may be granted and affirmed by Christs living and his teaching specially, or by the living and teaching of his Apostles and Prophets?

And why compel you the man to the contrary.

And the Archbishop said to me, Other Doctrines ought not to be accepted, nor owe we to obey to any mans bidding or counsel, except we can perceive that this bidding or counsel accordeth with the life and teaching of Christ, and of his Apostles and Prophets.

They consent to submit himself to the ordinance of Councils.

And I said, Sir, is not all the learning, and biddings and counsels of holy Church, means and healful remedies, to know and to understand the privy suggestions and the apert temptations of the fiend? and also ways and healful remedies to flay pride and all other deadly sins, and the branches of them, and sovereign means to purchase grace, to withstand and overcome all the flethly lusts and movings?

And the Archbishop faid Yea.

And I said, Sir, whatsoever thing ye or any other body bid or counsel me to do, accordingly to this forefaid learning, after my cunning and power, through the help of God, I will meekly with all my heart obey thereto.

And the Archbishop faid to me, Submit thee then now here meekly and wilfully to the ordinance of holy Church, which I shall shew to thee.

And I said, Sir, accordingly as I have here now before you rehearsed, I will now be ready to obey full gladly to Christ the Head of the holy Church, and to the learnings and bidding, and counsels of every pleasing member of him.

If Boner had been here, he would not have stricken the Cupboard.

Then the Archbishop, striking with his hand fiercely upon a Cupboard, spake to me with a great spirit, saying, By Jesus, but if thou leave not such additions, obliging thee now here without any exception to mine Ordinance (ere that I go out of the place) I shall make thee as sure as any Thief that is in the Prison of Lanterne; advise thee now what thou wilt do. And then, as if he had been angred, he went from the Cupboard where he stood, to a Window.

The multitude is not to be followed in evil.

And then Malveren and another Clerk came nearer me, and they spake to me many words full pleasantly; and another while they menaced me, and counselled full busily to submit me, or else, they said, I should not escape punishing over measure; for they said, I should be degraded, curfed, and burned, and so then damned. But now they said, Thou mayst eschew all these mischiefs, if thou wilt submit thee wilfully and meekly to this worthy Prelate, that hath cure of thy soul. And for the pity of Christ (said they) bethink thee, how great Clerks the Bishop of Lincoln, Hereford and Purvey were, and yet are, and also B. that is a well understanding man. Which also have forsaken and revoked all the learning and opinions that thou and such other hold. Wherefore since each of them is mickle wiser than thou art, we counsel thee for the best; that by the example of these four Clerks, thou follow them, submitting thee as they did.

See what man by God giving him up to himself.

And one of the Bishops Clerks said then there, that he heard Nicholas Herford say, That since he forsook and revoked all the learning and Lollards opinions, he hath had mickle greater favour, and more delight to hold against them, than ever he had to hold with them, while he held with them.

As clean from thrift as from sin.

And therefore Malveren said to me, I understand, and thou wilt take thee to a Priest, and shrieve thee clean, forsake all such opinions, and take the penance of my Lord here, for the holding and teaching of them; within short time thou shalt be greatly comforted in this doing.

And I said to the Clerks, that thus busily counselled me to follow these forefaid men: Sirs, if these men, of whom ye counsel me to take example, had forsaken Benefices of temporal profit, and of worldly worship, so that they had absented them, and eschewed from all occations of covetousness and of fleshly lust, and had taken upon them simple living, and wilful poverty; they had herein given good example to me and to many other, to have followed them. But now, since all these four men have slanderously and shamefully done the contrary, consenting to receive, and to have and to hold temporal Benefices, living now more worldly, and more fleshly than they did before, conforming them to the manners of this World: I forsake them herein, and in all their forefaid slanderous doing. For I purpose, with the help of God (into remission of my sins, and of my foul cursed living,) to hate and to flee privily and openly to follow these men, teaching and counselling whomsoever that I may, to flee and to eschew the way that they have chosen to go in, which will lead them to the worst end, (if in convenient time they repent them not) verily forsaking and revoking openly the slander that they have put, and every day yet put to Christs Church. For certain, so open blasphemy and slander as they have spoken and done in their revoking and forsaking of the truth, ought not, nor may not privily be amended duly. Wherefore Sirs, I pray you that you bathe not to move me to follow these men in revoking and forsaking the truth, soothfastness as they have done, and yet do; wherein by open evidence they flit God to great wrath, and not only against themselves, but also against all them that favour them, or consent to them herein, or that commune with them, except it be for their amendment. For whereas these men first were pursued of enemies, now they have obliged them by Oath to slander and pursue Christ in his Members. Wherefore (as I trust stedfastly in the goodness of God) the worldly covetousness, and the lusty living, and the sliding from the truth, of these runagates, shall be to me, and to many other men and women an example and an evidence to stand more stiffly by the truth of Christ.

Other mens examples are so to be followed, as they be the followers of Christ.

For certain, right many men and women do mark and abhor the foulness and cowardness of their forefaid untrue men, how that they are overcome and flopped with Benefices, and withdrawn from the truth of Gods Word, and forsaking utterly to suffer therefore bodily Persecution. For by this unfaithful doing, and apostasie of them (specially that are great lettered men) and have knowledged openly the truth, and now either for pleasure or displeasure of Tyrants have taken hire and temporal wages to forsake the truth, and to hold against it, slandering and pursuing them that covet to follow Christ in the way of righteousness; many men and women therefore are now moved. But many more, through the grace of God shall be moved hereby to learn the truth of God to do thereafter, and to stand boldly thereby.

Then the Archbishop said to his Clerks, Buste you no longer about him, for he, and other such as he is, are confederate together, that they will not sweare to be obedient, and to submit them to Prelates of holy Church. For now since I stood here, his fellow also sent me word that he will not swear, and that this fellow counselled him that he should not swear to me. And Lo sel, in that thing that in thee is, thou hast busted thee to lose this young man, but blessed be God, thou shalt not have thy purpose of him. For he hath forsaken all thy learning, submitting him to be buxome and obedient to the ordinance of holy Church, and weepeth full bitterly, and curseth thee full heartily for the venomous teaching which thou haddest shewed to him, counselling him to do thereafter.

And for thy false counselling of many other and him, thou hast great cause to be right sorry. For long time thou hast busted thee to pervert whomsoever thou mightest. Therefore as many deaths thou art worthy of, as thou hast given evil counsels. And therefore, By Jesus, thou shalt go thither, where Nicholas Herford and Thomas Purvey were harboured. And I undertake, ere this day eight days, thou shalt be right glad to do what thing that ever I bid thee to do. And Lossel, I shall assey, if I can make thee there as sorrowful (as it was told me:) thou wast glad at my last going out of England. By S. Thomas, I shall turn thy joy into sorrow.

And I said, Sir, there can no body prove lawfully that I joyed ever of the manner of your going out of this Land.

But Sir, to say the sooth. I was joyful when ye were gone; for the Bishop of London, in whose Prison ye left me, found in me no cause to hold me longer in his Prison, but at the request of my friends, he delivered me to them, asking of me no manner of submitting.

The gentle nefs of the Bishop of London to Thorp.

Then the Archbishop said to me, Wherefore that I yede out of England, is unknown to thee: But be this thing well known to thee, that God (as I wote well) hath called me again, and brought me into this Land, to destroy thee and the false Sect that thou art of: as, By God, I shall pursue you so narrowly, that I shall not leave a slip of you in this land.

So promised Winchester in Queen Mary time but that cafed his power to perform.

And I said to the Archbishop, Sir, the holy Prophet Jeremy said to the false Prophet Anany, When the word, that is the prophesie of a Prophet, is known or fulfilled; then is shall be known, that the Lord sent the Prophet in truth.

A notable prayer of Thorp to the Bishop, to destroy all the Gospellers.

And the Archbishop (as if he had not been pleased with my saying) turned him away ward hither and thither, and said, By God, I shall set upon thy Shins a pair of Pearls, that thou shalt be glad to change thy voice.

Such Pearls would better become my Lord, your golden Shoes.

These and many more wonders and convicious words were spoken to me, menacing me and all other of the same Sect to be punished and destroyed unto the uttermost.

And the Archbishop called then to him a Clerk, and rowned with him; and that Clerk went forth, and soon he brought in the Constable of Saltwood Castle, and the Archbishop rowned a good while with him; and then the Constable went forth, and then came in divers Seculars, and they scorned me on every side, and menaced me greatly, and some counselled the Archbishop to burn me by and by, and some other counselled him to drown me in the Sea, for it is near hand there.

As little obedient disposed unto the temporalty, as the spiritualty.

And a Clerk standing beside me, there kneeled down to the Archbishop, praying him, that he would deliver me to him to say Matins with him, and he would undertake, that within three days I should not resist any thing that were commanded me to do of my Prelate.

And

Promotions commonly, and great livings cheke truth.

Men following the ways of Balaam.

And the Archbishop said, that he would ordain for me himself.

And then after, came again the Constable and spake privily to the Archbishop; and the Archbishop commanded the Constable to lead me forth thence with him, and so he did. And when we were gone forth thence, we were sent after again. And when I came in again before the Archbishop; a Clerk bad me kneel down and ask grace, and submit me lowly, and I should find it for the best.

Obedience to God and to his law would not serve.

And I said then to the Archbishop, Sir, as I have said to you divers times to day, I will wilfully and lowly obey and submit me to be ordained ever, after my cunning and power, to God and to his Law, and to every Member of Holy Church, as far forth as I can perceive that these Members accord with their Head Christ, and will teach me, rule me, or chastise me by authority, specially of Gods law.

And the Archbishop said, I wist well he would not without such additions submit him.

And then I was rebuked, scorned and menaced on every side; and yet after this divers persons cried upon me to kneel down and submit me; but I stood still, and spake no word. And then there was spoken of me, and to me, many great words, and I stood and heard them menace, curse, and scorn me, but I said nothing.

In patience and silence puts your foes.

Then a while after the Archbishop said to me, Wilt thou not submit thee to the Ordinance of Holy Church?

And I said, Sir, I will full gladly submit me, as I have shewed you before.

And then the Archbishop bad the Constable to have me forth thence in hast.

And so then I was led forth, and brought into a foul unhoneft Prison, where I came never before. But thanked be God, when all men were gone forth then from me, and had sparred fast the Prison door after them; by and by after, I therein by my self, buried me to think on God, and to thank him for his goodness. And I was then greatly comforted in all my wits, not only for that I was then delivered for a time from the sight, from the hearing, from the presence, from the scorning, and from the menacing of mine enemies; but much more I rejoyced in the Lord, because that through his grace he kept me so, both among the flattering specially, and among the menacing of mine adversaries, that without heaviness and anguish of my Conscience, I passed away from them. For as a Tree laid upon another Tree, overthwart or cross-wise, so was the Archbishop and his three Clerks always contrary to me, and I to them.

They cast into prison. Their counsellors and favourers of the Lord after his confli with the Bishop.

Wife Sapra. Arundels Clerk going out of England.

Now good God for thine holy Name, and to the praising of thy most blessed Name, make us one together, if it be thy will, (by authority of thy Word, that is true perfect charity) and else not. And that it may thus be, all that thus writing read or hear, pray heartily to the Lord God, that he for his great goodness, that cannot be with tongue expressed, grant to us, and to all other which in the same wise, and for the same cause specially, or for any other cause be at distance, to be knit and made one in true faith, in stedfast hope, and in perfect charity. Amen.

Besides this Examination here above described, came another Treatise also to our hands of the same Will. Thorp, under the Name and Title of his Testament; which rather by the matter and handling thereof might seem to be counted a complaint of vicious Priests; which Treatise or Testament, in this place we thought not meet to be left out.

Christs example of perfect meekness.

'Matthew an Apostle of Christ, and his Gospeller, witnesseth truly in the holy Gospel, the most holy living, and the most wholesome teaching of Christ. He rehearseth how that Christ likeneth them that hear his words, and keep them, to a wise Man that buildeth his house upon a stone, that is a stable and a sure ground. This house is Mans Soul, in whom Christ delighteth to dwell, if it be grounded, that is, stablished faithfully in his living and in his true teaching, adorned or made fair with divers vertues, which Christ used and taught without any medling of any errour, as are chiefly the conditions of Charity.

Christ dwelleth in a faithful soul.

Christ is the stone whereon we must build.

'This foresaid stone is Christ, upon which every faithful soul must be builded, since upon none other ground, than upon Christs living and his teaching, any body may make any building or houling wherein Christ will come and dwell. This sentence witnesseth St. Paul to the Corinthians, shewing to them that no body may set any other ground than is set, that is Christs living and teaching. And because that all men and women should give all their business here in this life, to build them vertuously upon this sure foundation: St. Paul, knowledging the fervent desire, and the good will of the people of Ephesy, wrote to them comforrably, saying, Now ye are not strangers, guests, nor yet comelings, but ye are the Citizens, and of the Household of God, builded above upon the foundament of the Apostles and Prophets. In which foundament, every building that is builded or made through the grace of God, it increaseth or groweth into an holy Temple; that is, every body that is grounded or builded faithfully in the teaching and living of Christ, is there-through made the holy Temple of God.

How we are made the Temple of God.

'This is the stable ground and sted fast stone Christ, which is the sure corner-stone, fast joyning and holding mightily together two Walls. For through Christ Jesus, mean or middle Person of the Trinity, the Father of Heaven is pitious or mercifully joyned and made one together to Mankind. And through dread to offend God, and fervent love to please him, men be unseparably made one to God, and defended surely under his protection. Also this forefaid stone Christ was figured by the square stones of which the Temple of God was made. For as a square stone, wherefoever it is cast or laid, it abideth and lieth stably; so Christ and every faithful Member of his Church by example of him, abideth and dwelleth flably in true faith, and in all other heavenly vertues in all adversities that they suffer in the valley of tears.

Mark what we have by Christ.

The property of a square stone.

'For lo, when these forefaid square stones were hewen and wrought to be laid in the Walls or Pillars of Gods Temple, no noise or stroke of the Workman was heard. Certain, this silence in working of this stone figureth Christ chiefly and his faithful Members, which by example of him have been, and yet are, and ever to the worlds end shall be so meek and patient in every adverfity, that no sound, nor yet any grudging shall any time be perceived in them.

Christs example of perfect meekness.

'Nevertheless, this chief and most worshipful cornerstone, which only is the ground of all vertues, proud beggers reproved; but this despite and reproof Christ suffered most meekly in his own Person, to give example of all meekness and patience to all his faithful followers. Certain, this world is now so full of proud beggers, which are named Priests; but the very office of working of Priesthood which Christ approveth true, and accepteth, is far from the multitude of Priests that now reign in this world.

Priests seek not the glory of this World.

'For from the highest Priest to the lowest, all (as who say) study, that is, they imagine and travel busily, how they may please this world and their flesh. This sentence of Gods Word, and many such other dependeth upon them, if it be well considered, either God the Father of Heaven hath deceived all Mankind by the living specially and teaching of Jesus Christ, and by the living and teaching of his Apostles and Prophets: or else all the Popes that have been since I had reigned and yet reign, and increase damnably from sin into sin, have been, and yet be proud obstinate Hereticks, covetous simoners, and defouled adulterers in the ministring of the Sacraments, and specially in the ministring of the Sacrament of the Altar. For as their works shew whereto Christ biddeth us take heed; the highest Priests and Prelates of this Priesthood, challenge and occupy unlefful temporal Lordships. And for temporal favour and mede, they fell and give Benefices to unworthy and unable persons; yea, these simoners sell sin, suffering men and women in every degree and estate to lie and continue from year to year, in divers vices flanderously. And thus, by evil example of high Priests in the Church, lower Priests under them are not only suffered, but they are maintained to sell full dear (to the people for temporal mede) all the Sacraments.

Great odds betwixt the life of the Popes, and Christ and his Apostles.

When Priests forget Gods truth, ye see whither they run headlong.

The great infect the small.

'And thus all this forefaid Priesthood is blown so high, and born up in pride and vain glory of their estate and dignity, and so blinded with worldly covetousness, that they disdain to follow Christ in very meekness and wil-

Flefhly Priests cannot away with those things.

'ful poverty, living holily, and preaching Gods Word truly, freely and continually, taking their livelihood at the free will of the people of their pure alms, where and when they suffice not for their true and busie preaching to get their sustenance with their hands. To this true sentence, grounded on Christs own living, and teaching of his Apostles, 'these foresaid worldly and fleshly Priests will not consent effectually. But as their works and also their words shew, 'boldly and unshamefastly these forenamed Priests and Prelates covet and enforce them mightily and busily, that all 'holy Scripture were expounded and drawn accordingly to 'their manners, and to their ungrounded usages and findings. For they will not (since they hold it but folly and 'madness) conform their manners to the pure and simple 'living of Christ and his Apostles, nor will they follow freely their learning. Wherefore all the Emperors and Kings, 'and all other Lords and Ladies, and all the common people in every degree and state, which have before time 'known, or might have known, and also all they that now 'yet know, or might know, this foresaid witness of Priesthood and would not, nor yet will inforce them after their cunning and power, to withstand charitably the foresaid enemies and Traitors of Christ, and of his Church: All these 'strive with Antichrist against Jesus, and they shall hear the 'indignation of God Almighty without end, if in convenient time they amend them not, and repent them verily, 'doing therefore due mourning and sorrow, after their cunning and power. For through presumptuousness and negligence of Priests and Prelates (not of the Church of Christ, but occupying their Prelacy unduly in the Church) and also flattering, and false covetousness of other divers named 'Priests; Lousengers and Lounderers are wrongfully made 'and named Hermites, and have leave to defraud poor and 'needy creatures of their livelode, and to live by their false 'winning and begging, in sloth and in other divers vices. 'And also of these Prelates, these coker nose's are suffered to 'live in pride and hypocrisie, and to defoul themselves both 'bodily and ghostly. Also by the suffering and counsel of 'these foresaid Prelates and other Priests, are made both wan 'brotherhoods and sisterhoods, full of pride and envy, which 'are full contrary to the brotherhood of Christ, since they 'are cause of mickle distension, and they multiply and sustain 'it uncharitably; for unjustly eating and drinking unmeasurably and out of time, they exercise themselves. Also 'this vain confederacy of brotherhood is permitted to be of 'one clothing, and to hold together.

'And in all these ungrounded and unlesful doings, Priests 'are partners, and great medlers and counsellers; and over 'this viciousness, hermites and pardoners, ankerers and strange 'beggers, are licensed and admitted of Prelates and Priests; 'to beguile the people with flatterings and leasings fraudelently against all good reason and true belief; and so to increase divers vices in themselves, and also among all them 'that accept them, or consent to them.

'And thus the viciousness of these foresaid named Priests 'and Prelates hath been long time, and yet is, and shall be 'cause of wars both within the Realm and without. And in 'the same wise these unable Priests have been, and yet are, 'and shall be chief cause of pestilence of Men, and murren 'of Beasts, and of barenness of the earth, and of all other mischiefs, to the time that Lords and Commons able them 'through grace to know and to keep the commandments 'of God, inforcing them then faithfully and charitably by 'one assent, to redress and make one this foresaid Priesthood, 'to the wilful, poor, meek and innocent living and teaching, 'specially of Christ and his Apostles.

'Therefore all they that know, or might know the vicious'nesses that reigneth now cursedly in these Priests, and in 'their learning, if they suffice not to understand this contegious viciousness: let them pray to the Lord heartily for 'the health of his Church, abstaining them prudently from 'their indurate enemies of Christ and of his people, and 'from all their Sacraments, since to them, all that know 'them, or may know them, they are but fleshly deeds and 'false; as S. Cyprian witnesseth in the first question of decrees, 'and in the first cause, Cap. Siquis inquit. For as this St. and 'great Doctor witnesseth there, that not only vicious Priests, 'but also all they that favour them, or consent to them in 'their viciousness, shall together perish with them, if they 'amend them not duly, as all they perished that consented to 'Dathan and Abiram. For nothing were more confusion to 'these foresaid vicious Priests, than to eschew them prudently 'in all their unlawful Sacraments, while they continue in their 'sinful living slanderously as they have long time done, and 'yet do. And no body needs to be afraid (though death did 'follow by one wise or other) to die out of this world without taking of any Sacrament of these foresaid Christs enemies, since Christ will not fail to minister himself all lesful 'and lawful Sacraments, and necessary at all time (and especially at the end) to all them that are in true faith, in steadfast hope, and in perfect charity.

'But yet some mad fools say (to eschew slander) they will 'be shriven once in the year, and communed of their proper 'Priests, though they know them defouled with flanderous 'vices. No doubt but all they that thus do or consent, privily or apertly to such doing are culpable of great sin; since S. Paul witnesseth, that not only they that do evil are worthy of death and damnation, but also they that consent to 'evil doers. Also (as their slandrous works witness) these 'foresaid vicious Priests, despise and cast from them heavenly 'cunning that is given of the Holy Ghost. Wherefore the 'Lord throweth all such despisers from him, that they neither use, nor do any Priesthood to him.

'No doubt then, all they that wittingly or willfully take 'or consent that any other body should take any Sacrament 'of any such named Priest, sinneth openly and damnably against all the Trinity, and are unable to any Sacrament of 'health.

'And that this foresaid sentence is altogether true, into 'remission of all my sinful living, trusting steadfastly in the 'mercy of God, I offer to him my soul.

'And to prove also the foresaid sentence true, with the 'help of God, I purpose fully to suffer meekly and gladly my 'most wretched body to be tormented where God will, of 'whom he will and when he will, and as long as he will, and 'what temporal pain and death he will, to the praising of 'his name, and to the edification of his Church.

'And I that am a most unworthy and wretched Caitiff 'shall now through the special grace of God, make to him 'pleasant Sacrifice with my most sinful and unworthy body. 'Beseeching heartily all folk that read or hear this end of my 'purposed testament, that through the grace of God they 'dispose verily and vertuously all their wits, and able in like 'manner all their members to understand truly, and to keep 'faithfully, charitably and continually all the commandments 'of God, and so then to pray devoutly to all the Blessed 'Trinity, that I may have grace with wisdom and prudence 'from above, to end my life here in this foresaid truth, and 'for this cause, in true faith and stedfast hope, and perfect charity. Amen.

The end of W. Thorp is certain.

What was the end of this good man, and blessed servant of God William Thorp, I find as yet in no story specified. By all conjectures it is to be thought that the Archbishop Thomas Arundel, being so hard an adversary against those men, would not let him go. Much less it is to be supposed, that he would ever retract his sentence and opinion, which he so valiantly maintained before the Bishop; neither doth it seem that he had any such recanting spirit. Again, neither is it found that he was burned, wherefore it remaineth most like to be true, that he being committed to some strait Prison (according as the Archbishop in his examination before did threaten him) there (as Thorp confesseth himself) was so straitly kept, that either he was secretly made away, or else there he died by sickness.

The like end also I find to happen to John Ashton, another good follower of Wickliff, who for the same Doctrine of the Sacrament was condemned by the Bishops, and because he would not recant, he was committed to perpetual Prison, wherein the good man continued till his death: An. 1382.

Cypri. q. 1. cap. Si quis inquit.

[KING Hen. 4.]

¶ John Purvey.

FUrthermore, in the said Examination of William Thorp, mention is made (as ye heard) of John Purvey, of whom also something we touched before: promising of the said John Purvey more particularly to intreat in order and process of time. Of this Purvey, Thomas Walden writeth thus in his second Tome: John Purvey, saith he, was the Library of Lollards, and Glosser upon Wicklif. He [KING Hen. 4.] He said that the worshipping of Abraham was but a salutation. And in his third Tome he saith, That John Purvey, with Herford a Doctor of Divinity, were grievously tormented and punished in the Prison of Saltwood, and at the length recanted at Pauls Cross at London, Thomas Arundel being then Archbishop of Canterbury. Afterward again, he was imprisoned under Henry Chicheley Archbishop of Canterbury, in the year of our Lord 1421. Thus much writeth Walden. The Works of this man which he wrote were gathered by Richard Lavingham his adversary, which I think worthy to be remembred. First, as touching the Sacrament of the last Supper, the Sacrament of Penance, the Sacrament of Orders, the power of the Keys, the preaching of the Gospel, of Marriages, of Vows, of Possessions, of the punishing and correcting of the Clergy, of the Laws and Decrees of the Church, of the state and condition of the Pope and the Clergy; of all these generally, he left divers Monuments gravely and exactly written, part whereof here in the end of his story we thought to exhibit, being translated out of Latine into English.

John Purvey purished after his recantation.

The Articles which he taught, and afterward was forced to recant at Pauls-Cross, were these hereafter following:

Articles of John Purvey inserted.

1. That in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the Consecration, there is not, neither can be any accident without the subject; but there verily remaineth the same substance, and the very visible and corruptible bread, and likewise the very same Wine the which before the Consecration were set upon the Altar to be consecrate of the Priest; likewise as when a Pagan or Infidel is baptised, he is spiritually converted into a member of Christ through grace, and yet remaineth the very same man which he before was in his proper nature and substance.

2. Auricular confession, or private Penance, is a certain whispering, destroying the liberty of the Gospel, and newly brought in by the Pope and the Clergy, to intangle the consciences of men in sin, and to draw their souls into Hell.

He speaketh of Priests late and out of publick Ministery, represented in the Church.

3. Every lay man being holy and predestinate unto everlasting life (albeit he be a lay man) yet is he a true Priest before God.

4. That divers Prelates and other of the Clergy do live wickedly, contrary to the Doctrine and Example of Christ and his Apostles. Therefore they which so live, have not the Keys either of the Kingdom of Heaven, or yet of Hell; neither ought any Christian to esteem his censure any more than as a thing of no force. Yea, albeit the Pope should peradventure, interdict the Realm, yet could he not hurt, but rather profit us, forsomuch as thereby we should be dismissed from the observation of his laws, and from saying of service according to the custom of the Church.

Vows.

5. If any man do make an Oath or Vow, to keep perpetual chastity, or do any thing else whereunto God hath not appointed him, giving him grace to perform his purpose; the same Vow or Oath is unreasonable and indiscreet, neither can any Prelate compel him to keep the same, except he will do contrary unto Gods ordinance. But he ought to commit him unto the governance of the Holy Ghost and of his own conscience; forsomuch as every Man, which will not fulfil his Vow or Oath, cannot do it for that cause.

The charge of Priests.

6. Whosoever taketh upon him the office of Priesthood, although he have not the charge of souls committed unto him, according to the custom of the Church, not only may, but ought to preach the Gospel freely unto the people; otherwise he is a thief, excommunicated of God, and of the holy Church.

Against Transubstantiation.

7. That Innocentius the third Pope, and six hundred Bishops, and a thousand other Prelates, with all the rest of the Clergy, which together with the same Pope agreed and determined, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the conversion of the bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ, the accidents of the said bread and wine do remain there without any proper subject of the same; the which also ordained, that all Christians ought to confess their sins once a year unto a proper Priest, and to receive the reverend Sacrament at Easter, and made certain other laws at the same time: All they, saith he, in so doing, were fools and blockheads, heretics, blasphemers, and seducers of Christian people. Wherefore we ought not to believe the determinations of them, or of their successors, neither ought we to obey their laws or ordinances, except they be plainly grounded upon the holy Scripture, or upon some reason which cannot be impugned.

Other Articles drawn out of Purvey's Books more at large by Richard Levingham.

Articles out of Purvey's Books collected by Rich. Lavingham.

AS touching the Sacrament of thanksgiving, he saith, That that Chapter of repentance and remission, Omnis utriusque sexus, wherein it is ordained, That every faithful man ought once every year at the least, that is to say at Easter, to receive the Sacrament of the Eucharist, is a beastly thing, heretical and blasphemous.

Item, That Innocentius the third Pope, was the head of Antichrist, who after the letting loose of Satan, invented a new Article of our Faith, and a certain feigned verity touching the Sacrament of the Altar, that is to say, that the Sacrament of the Altar is an accident without a substance, or else an heap of accidents without a substance. But Christ and his Apostles do teach manifestly, that the Sacrament of the Altar is bread and the body of Christ together, after the manner that he spake. And in that he calleth it bread, he would have the people to understand, as they ought with reason, that it is very and substantial bread, and no false nor feigned bread.

The Sacrament of the Popish Altar.

And although Innocentius, that Antichrist, doth alledge, that in the Council at Lions, where this matter was decided, were six hundred Bishops with him, and one thousand Prelates, which were in one opinion of this determination; All those notwithstanding, he calleth Fools, according to that saying of Eccles. 1. Of fools there are an infinite number. And so in like manner he calleth them false Christs and false Prophets, of whom Christ speaketh in the 24th of Matthew, Many false Christs and false Prophets shall arise, and deceive many. And therefore every Christian man ought to believe firmly, that the Sacrament of the Altar is very bread indeed, and no false nor feigned bread. And although it be very bread indeed, yet notwithstanding, it is the very body of Christ in that sort he spake, and called it his body; and so it is very bread, and the very body of Christ. And as Christ concerning his humanity was both visible and passible, and by his Divinity was invisible and impassible: so likewise this Sacrament in that it is very bread, may be seen with the corporal eye, and may also abide corruption. But although a man may see that Sacrament, yet notwithstanding cannot the body of Christ in that Sacrament be seen with the corporal eye, although it be the body of Christ in that manner he spake it; for that notwithstanding, the body of Christ is now incorruptible in Heaven. So the Sacrament of the Cup is very wine, and the very blood of Christ, according as his manner of speaking was. Also Innocentius the third, with a great multitude of his secular Priests, made a certain new determination. That the Sacrament of the Altar is an accident without a substance, whereas neither Jesus Christ, nor any of his Apostles taught this Faith (but openly and manifestly to the contrary) neither yet the holy Doctors, for the space of a thousand years and more, taught this Faith openly.

Pope Innocentius head of Antichrist.

The Sacrament is visible, substance bread and in signification the body of Christ.

Transubstantiation not openly taught 1000 years after Christ.

Therefore when Antichrist or any of his shavelings doth ask of thee that art a simple Christian, Whether that this Sacrament be the very body of Christ or not? affirm thou it manifestly so to be. And if he ask of thee whether it be material bread, or what other bread else? say thou, that it is such bread as Christ understood and meant by his proper word; and such bread as the Holy Ghost meant in S. Paul, when he called that to be very bread which he brake; and wade thou no further therein. If he ask thee how this bread is the body of Christ? say thou, as Christ understood the same to be his body, which is both omnipotent and true, and in whom is no untruth: say thou also as the holy Doctors do say, That the terrestrial matter or substance may be converted into Christ, as the Pagan or Infidel may be baptised, and hereby spiritually be converted, and be a member of Christ, and so after a certain manner become Christ, and yet the same man remain still in his proper nature. For so doth Saint Augustine grant, that a sinner forsaking his sin, and being made one Spirit with with God by faith, grace and charity, may be converted into God, and be after a manner God; as both David and Saint John do testifie, and yet be the same person in substance and nature, and in soul and vertue be altered and changed. But yet men of more knowledge and reason may more plainly convince the falsity of Antichrist both in this matter and in others, by the gift of the Holy Ghost working in them. Notwithstanding, if those that be simple men will humbly hold and keep the manifest and apparent words of the holy Scripture, and the plain sense and meaning of the holy Ghost, and proceed no further, but humbly commit that unto the Spirit of God, which passeth their understanding; then may they safely offer themselves to death, as true Martyrs of Jesus Christ.

The Sacrament both bread, and the body in divers respects.

Auricular confession and penance.

As touching the Sacrament of Penance; that Chapter Omnis utriusque sexus, by which a certain new-found Auricular Confession was ordained, is full of hypocrisie, heresie, covetousness, pride, and blasphemy, he saith, and reproveth the same Chapter verbatim, and that by the sentences of the same processe. Also, that the Penance and pains limited by the Canons be unreasonable and unjust, for the austerity and rigorousness which they contain more than are taxed by Gods law. He also doth exemplifie, of the solemn and publick denial of penitents to be received into Orders, according to the Decree of the General Council, Dist. 50. cap. Ex panitentibus. Also of the seven-fold penitence of a Priest committing fornication, according to the Chapter, *Presbyter, Dist.*82. And further sheweth another example of the penitence of Priests, according to that Chap. Qui presbyterium, &c. Whereas the Decretal of the General Council saith, That such a one ought to remain continuing his life in the wars, and not to marry. And how Innocent the 3d. brought in a new-found confession, whereby the Priests do oppress the simple Lay men. And that many other things they do, compelling them to confess themselves to blind and ignorant Priests, in whom is nothing else but pride and covetousness, having such in contempt as are learned and wise. Also that the Decretal of Innocentius the third, touching the foresaid auricular or vocal confession, was brought in and invented to intricate and intangle mens consciences with sin, and to draw them down to Hell. And furthermore, that such manner of confession destroyeth the Evangelical liberty, and doth lett men to enquire after, and to retain the wise counsel and Doctrine of such as be good Priests, which know faithfully how to observe his precepts and commandments, and which would willingly teach the people the right way to Heaven. For which abuse all Christian men, and specially all Englishmen ought to exclaim against such wicked laws.

The order of Priesthood.

As touching the Sacrament of Order, he saith, That all good Christians are predestinate, and be ordained of God, and made true Priests to offer Christ in themselves, and to Christ themselves; as also to teach and preach the Gospel to their neighbours, as well in word, as in example of living. But the worldly shavelings do more magnifie the naked and bare signs of Priesthood (invented by sinful men) than the true and perfect Priesthood of God, grounded by a true and lively faith, annexed with good works. Also, if it were needful to have such shavelings, God knoweth how, and can make, when it pleaseth him, Priests (without mans working and sinful signs, that is to say, without either Sacraments or Characters) to be known and discerned of the people by their vertuous life and example, and by their true preaching of the law of God. For so made he the first-made Priests and Elders before the law of Moses; and so made he Moses a Priest before Aaron, and before the ceremonies of the Law, without Mans operation at all; and even so hath God made all such as are predestinate, to be his Priests. But such as be true Christians receive none such as Priests, unless they follow Christ and his Apostles: neither do they believe that they make the Sacrament of the Altar (which they affirm to be Gods body) when it pleaseth them, lest happily God be not with them, foras much as they do this thing for covetousness sake, or else to brag of their own power. And therefore such as be simple men will worship that Sacrament in this doubtfulness, with a silent condition; that is, if it be made by Gods authority, and have their devotion to the body of Christ in Heaven. Also, that such as be Elders, if they be Gods Priests, be Bishops, Prelates and Curates of their Christian brethren, whom they may lead to Heaven by the example of their holy conversation, and by preaching of the Gospel, although they make no Sacrifice to that Antichrist of Rome for their confirmation; neither be they dedicated to the world by secular divine things, and by conforming the livings of the poor, as be those secular Bishops, Prelates and Curates. Also, that although there were no Pope, according as the custom of the Church is, yet Christ, which is the Head of his Church, doth ordain such a Pope as pleaseth him; and that is, whosoever is most humble and lowly, and best doth the office of a true Priest, although he be unknown to the world; and although there were no such proud Bishop above all the rest, as the Church doth use, yet all the Priests might well govern the Church by common assent, as once they did, before such worldly pride crept in amongst the Bishops, &c. And admit that no such Priests were according to the accustomed use now of receiving of order and tonsure, by such a Mitred Bishop and his tonsure; yet Christ knoweth both how to make and chuse such as shall well please him both in conversation of life, and sincere preaching of the Gospel, in ministring to his people all necessary Sacraments. And every holy Man which is a Minister of Christ, although he be not shaven, is a true Priest ordained of God, although no Mitred Bishop ever lay his Character upon him. So that the Pope and Prelates do make more estimation of their Characters (as tonsures and crowns by them invented) than of the true and perfect Priesthood ordained of God; whereas all those that are predestinate are true Priests made of him.

The Pope censures like the blast of Lucifer.

As touching the authority of the Keys and Censures, no Christian Man ought to esteem Satan (whom Men call the Pope) and his unjust censures, more than the hissing of a Serpent, or the blast of Lucifer. Also, that no Man ought to trust or put confidence in the false Indulgences of covetous Priests, which Indulgences do draw away the hope, which men ought to repose in God, to a sort of sinful men, and do rob the poor of such alms as is given to them. Such Priests be manifest betrayers of Christ and of the whole Church, and be Satans own stewards to beguil Christian souls by their hypocrisie and feigned Pardons. Also, foras much as those Prelates and Clergymen lived so execrable a life, contrary to the Gospel of Christ and examples of his Apostles, and teach not truly the Gospel, but only Lies and the Traditions of sinful wicked men; it appeareth most manifestly, that they have not the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, but rather the keys of Hell. And they may be right well affured, that God never gave unto them authority to make and establish so many Ceremonies and Traditions which be contrary to the liberty of the Gospel, and are blocks in Christian mens ways, that they can neither know nor observe the same his Gospel in liberty of Conscience, and so attain a ready way to Heaven.

Popish Priests have not the Keys of Heaven, but rather of Hell.

Also, That all manner of Religious Men, notwithstanding the Chapter Religiosi, touching the privileges in the Clementines, may lawfully minister all Sacraments to them that are worthy the same; forasmuch as the same is a work of charity, which only the Will and Ordinance of the Pope in his tautors in this case is to hinder and lett. Item, If the Pope shall interdict this our Realm, that cannot hurt us, but much profit us, because that thereby he should separate us from all his wicked laws, and from the charges of sustaining of so many thousand shavelings, which with small devotion, or none at all, patter and chatter a new-found Song, Secundum usum Sarum. So that not whatsoever the Pope in his General Council bindeth on Earth, is bound of God in Heaven, either for that he bindeth unreasonably, and contradictorily doth against himself, or else for that he hath forsaken the judgment of God.

The Popes Curse hurteth not, but resteth.

As touching the preaching of the Gospel, Whosoever receiveth or taketh upon him the office of a Priest, or of a Bishop, and discharged th not the same by the example of his good conversation and faithful preaching of the Gospel, is a thief, excommunicate of God and of holy Church. And further, If the Curates preach not the Word of God, they shall be damned, and if they know not how to preach, they ought to resign their Benefices. So that those Prelates which preach not the Gospel of Christ (although they could excuse themselves from the doing of any other evil) are dead in themselves, are Antichrists, and Satans, transfigured into Angels of Light, night Thieves, Manquellers by day light, and betrayers of Christ his people.

Con-

Concerning the Sacrament of Matrimony: Notwithstanding any spiritual kindred or Gossoprie, a man and woman may lawfully marry together by the Law of God, without any dispensation Papistical. And in the same place he saith, That if our Realm do admit one not born in Matrimony, or illegitimate, to the Imperial Crown, so that he doth well discharge the office of a King, God maketh him a King, and by consequence doth reject another King or heir of the Kingdom, being born in Matrimony and legitimates so for such spiritual kindred there ought no divorce to be made. Also notwithstanding the Cap. Si inter de sponsalibus: If any man shall make any contract with any woman by the words of the future tense, by an oath taken, and afterwards shall with another woman make the like contract by the words of the present tense; that then the second contract standeth. Also if a man make any contract with a woman by the words of the future tense, upon his oath taken, and maketh afterwards the like contract with another, not altering the words, and hath carnal copulation upon the same, the first contract maketh the Matrimony good, and not the second. Also if a man before witness assure himself to a woman by a contract made in the present tense, and hath children by the same woman, and afterward the same man marrieth another woman, with the like words in the present tense before witness, although the first witnesses be dead, or else by bribes corrupt, and the second bring his witnesses before the Judg to prove the second contract, the first contract yet standeth in force, although the Pope (allowing the second contract) doth compel them to live in adultery against the Commandment of God. Also he condemneth the Decretal of the restitution of things stollen, Cap. Literas tuas; which willeth that a man and woman having carnal copulation in the degree of consanguinity forbidden, and hath no witness hereof; if the woman will depart from the man, the shall be compelled by the censures to remain with him, and to yield her debt. Also in case where a man hath made contract with two women, with one secretly having no witness, and with the other openly having witness, then were it better to acknowledg the insufficiency of the Law, and to suffer men to be ruled by their own Consciences, than by the Censures to compel them to commit and live in adultery.

{KING} {Hen. 4.}

Gossoprie not sufficient cause to obtain Matrimony.

The first Marriage lawfully by two witnesses made standeth.

Keeping and making Vows.

As touching the keeping and making of Vows: that Vow or Oath is beastly, and is without all discretion made, which to perform and keep a man hath no power but by grace given him of God; because that some such there be, whom God doth not accept to persevere in the state of chastity and perpetual virginity; and such a one cannot keep his vow, although he make the same. Also that every one making a vow of continency or chastity, when making the same he shall not be accepted of God, doth very undiscreetly, and as one without all reason maketh the same, when he is not able of himself, without the gift of God to fulfil his promise, according to that saying of the wise man, Chap. 8. No man hath the gift of continency, unless that God give it unto him. For otherwise if God help not such a one to perform the vow or oath which he hath made and taken, no Prelate can compel him, unless he do contrary to Gods ordinance; but he ought to commit himself to the Government of Gods holy Spirit, and his own Conscience.

Possessions of the Church.

For the possessions of the Church, In another Treatise it is declared, how the King, the Lords, and Commons, may without any charge at all keep fifteen Garrisons, and find 15000 Souldiers (having sufficient lands and revenues to live upon) out of the Temporalties gotten into the hands of the Clergy, and fained Religious men, which never do that which pertaineth to the office of Curates to do, nor yet to secular Lords. And moreover the King may have every year 20000 pound to come freely into his Coffers, and above. Also he may find or sustain fifteen Colledges more, and 15000 Priests and Clerks with sufficient living, and an hundred Hospitals for the sick, and every house to have one hundred Marks in lands. And all this may they take of the foresaid Temporalties, without any charge to the Realm; whereunto the King, the Lords, and the Commons are to be invited. For otherwise there seemeth to hang over our heads a great and marvellous alteration of this Realm, unless the same be put in execution. Also, if the Secular Priests and fained religious, which be Simonicks and Hereticks, which fain themselves to say Mass, and yet say none at all, according to the Canons, which to their purpose they bring and alledg, 1.q.3. Audivimus, & Cap. Pudenda, & Cap. Schisma; by which Chapter such Priests and religious do not make the Sacrament of the Altar, that then all Christians, especially all the Foundors of such Abbies, and Endowers of Bishopricks, Priories, and Chanteries, ought to amend this fault and treason committed against their Predecessors, by taking from them such secular Dominions which are the maintenance of all their sins. And also that Christian Lords and Princes are bound to take away from the Clergy such secular Dominion as nourisheth and nourisheth them in Heresies, and ought to reduce them unto the simple and poor life of Christ Jesus and his Apostles.

1. q. 3. 25. Pudenda.

Belly-cheer of ill disposed Prelates and of Monasteries, not to be nourished with temporalties and Appropriations.

And further, that all Christian Princes (if they will amend the malediction and blasphemy of the name of God) ought to take away their Temporalties from that shaven generation, which most of all doth nourish them in such malediction. And so in like wise the fat Tythes from Churches appropriate to rich Monks, and other religious, fained by manifest lying, and other unlawful means; likewise ought to debar their gold to the proud Priest of Rome, which doth poyson all Christendom with simony and heresie. Further, that it is a great abomination that Bishops, Monks, and other Prelates, be so great Lords in this world, whereas Christ with his Apostles and Disciples never took upon them secular dominion, neither did they appropriate unto them Churches, as these men do, but led a poor life, and gave a good testimony of their Priesthood. And therefore all Christians ought to the uttermost of their power and strength to swear that they will reduce such shavelings to the humility and power of Christ and his Apostles; and whosoever doth not thus, consenteth to their heresie. Also that these two Chapters of the immunity of Churches are to be condemned, that is, Cap. Non minus, and Cap. Adversus; because they do decree, that Temporal Lords may neither require Tallages nor Tenths of any Ecclesiastical persons.

Correction of the Clergy.

Now to the correction of the Clergy. By the Law of God, and by reason the King and all other Christians may of the Clergy. take revenge of Italy and of all the false Priests and Clerks within the same, and reduce them unto the humble Ordinance of Jesus Christ. Also that the Law of Silvester the Pope, which is declared in 2. q. 5. Cap. Presul, and Cap. Nullam, is contrary to the Law of Christ, and either Testament. And that proud and ambitious Silvester by his Law fal. Ibid. Nullam. so defended two Cardinals which were not to be defended by the Law of Christ, that by no means they might be convinced; although they were both vicious and evil. And although Christ sustained and suffered the judgment of unjust temporal Judges; our Mitred Prelates in these days fo magnifie themselves beyond Christ and his Apostles, that they refuse and will none of such judgments. Also that those Decretals of accusations, Cap. Quando & Qualiter; which do prohibit that any Clerks should be brought before a secular Judge to receive judgment, do contain both herefie, blasphemy, and error, and bring great gain and commodity to Antichrists coffers.

Further more that all Christian Kings and Lords ought to exclaim against the Pope, and those that be his tautors, and banish them out of their lands, till such time as they will obey God and his Gospel, Kings, and other Ministers of Gods justice. Also that Bishops and their favourers, that say it appertaineth not to Kings and secular Lords (but unto them and their Officials) to punish adultery and fornication, do fall into manifest treason against the King, and herefie against the Scripture. Also that it appertaineth to the King to have the Order both of Priests and Bishops, as these Kings Solomon and Josaphat had.

Punishing of adultery belongeth to secular Magistrates rather than to Prelates.

Furthermore that Chapter, Nullus judicium de foro competenti, by the which secular Judges are forbidden, without the Bishops commandment, to condemn any Clerk to death, is manifestly against the holy Scripture, declaring that Kings have power over Clerks and Priests to punish them for their deserved crimes. Also that the Decree of Boniface de pœnis in 6. cap. Felicis, made against the prosecutors, strikers, and imprisoners of Cardinals, is contrary both to the holy Scripture, and to all reason. Also that by the law of God and reason, a secular Lord may lawfully take a Cardinal and put him in prison for committing the crime of open simony, adultery, and manifeſt blaſphemy. Alſo that the Chapter Si Papa, Diſt.40. which ſaith that the Pope ought to be judged of none, unleſs he be Deuius a fide, is contrary to the Goſpel, which ſaith, If thy brother ſin againſt thee, correct him. Alſo whereas St. Gregory and St. Auguſtine called themſelves the ſervants of Gods ſervants, this proud Biſhop of Rome, which will not be judged by his ſubjects (which be in very deed his Lords, if they be juſt and good men) doth deſtroy the order of Gods law, and all humility, and doth extoll himſelf above God and his Apoſtles. Alſo that Chriſtian Kings ought not only to judge this proud Biſhop of Rome, but alſo to depoſe him by the example that Ceſtrenſis, Lib. 6. Cap. 8. declareth of Otho the Emperor, which depoſed Iohn the twelfth, and did inſtitute Leo in his place. And further he maketh an exhortation to the Princes to judge the Church of Rome, which he calleth the great and curſed ſtrumpet, of whom St. John writeth in Revel. 17.

the

Good Kings ought to depoſe wicked Popes.

Laſtly, touching the Laws and determinations of the Church; Chriſtians have reaſonable excuſes and cauſes to repell the ſtatutes of the Pope and of his ſhavelings, which be not expreſly grounded on the holy Scripture, or elſe upon reaſon inevitable. Alſo he ſaith, that that law which is ſet forth of conſecration, Diſtinctione 2. cap. Seculares, 2 cap. Sacerdotes. & cap. Et ſi non frequentius. & cap. In cœna Domini: That ſuch ſecular men as do not receive the Sacrament of the Altar at Chriſtmas, Eaſter, and Whitſuntide, are not to be counted amongſt the number of Chriſtians, nor are to be eſteemed as Chriſtians; whereby it followeth that all Clerks and Laymen that obſerve not the ſame, it ſeemeth they go ſtraight to Hell. But if this law be of no force, for that the cuſtom and uſe in receiving is contrary to the ſame; then may we bleſs ſuch rebellion and diſobedience to the Pope, and his law; for otherwiſe we ſhould flee to Hell without any ſtay or let. Whereby we may conclude, that all Chriſtians ought well to practiſe this School of diſobedience againſt the Pope and all his laws (not founded upon the Scripture) which do let men to climb to Heaven by the keeping of charity, and the liberty of the Goſpel. Alſo that Chriſtian men have great cauſe to refuſe the laws and ſtatutes of theſe worldly Clerks, which the people call the Papal laws, and Biſhoplike ſtatutes, for the covetouſneſs and voluptuouſneſs of them; without the which the Church and congregation of God might fitely run towards Heaven by the ſweet yoke of the Lord, as it did a thouſand years before the ſaid laws were preſcribed and ſent to the Univerſities, and withdrew men from ſtudying of the holy Scripture, for the deſire of Benefices and worldly goods. Alſo that ſimple men do reverently receive the ſentences of the Doctors and other laws, ſo far forth as they be expreſly grounded upon the holy Scripture or good reaſon. Alſo that whereas the Popes laws, and laws of his Miniſters and Clerks be both contrary to themſelves, and have not their foundation either upon the Scripture, or yet upon reaſon, ſimple men ought to bid them farewell. Alſo that when all the Apoſtles faith failed them in the time of the Lords Paſſion, faith then reſted in the Bleſſed Virgin; much more might that proud Prieſt of Rome with all his rabble, eaſily err in the faith; and yet is the Chriſtian faith preſerved whole and ſafe in the faithful members of Chriſt, which are his true Church; but the Pope and all his rabblement cannot prove that they be any part of his Church. Alſo that the Pope with all his fautors may as well be deceived by a lying ſpirit, as was Achab and all his Prophets; and that one true Prophet, as was Micheas, may have the verity ſhewed unto him, contra Concilium. Alſo that all good Chriſtians ought to caſt from them the Popes laws, ſaying, Let us break their bands in ſunder, and let us caſt from our necks thoſe heavy yokes of theirs. Alſo that where theſe Prelates do burn one good Book for one error perhaps contained in the ſame, they ought to burn all the Books of the Canon-Law, for the manifold Hereſies contained in them.

To conſerue, vid. 28 cap. Sacerdotes.

The Popes Laws contrary to themſelves.

The Pope and his Cardinals no part of the true Church.

The Canon Law full of hereſie.

¶ And thus much out of a certain old written Book in Parchment, borrowed once of I.B. which Book containing divers ancient Records of the Univerſity, ſeemeth to belong ſometime to the Library of the Univerſity, bearing the year of the compiling thereof, 1396. Which computation if it be true, then was it written of him, ere that he recanted before Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop, at Saltwood, where he was impriſoned. Whereunto I thought good to annex a certain godly and moſt fruitful Sermon of like antiquity, preached at Pauls-Croſs much about the ſame time, which was in the year of our Lord 1388, by a certain learned Clerk, as I find in an old Monument, named R. Wimbeldon. Albeit among the ancient Regiſters and Records belonging to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, I have an old worn Copy of the ſaid Sermon, written in very old Engliſh, and almoſt half conſumed with age, purporting the ſaid Author hereof, bearing alſo the foreſaid name. The true copy of which Sermon, in his own ſpeech wherein it was firſt ſpoken, and preached at the Croſs on the Sunday of Quinquageſima, and after exhibited to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury (being then as it ſeemeth William Courtney) here followeth.

{KING} Line. 4.

A Sermon no leſs godly than learned, preached at Pauls-Croſs on the Sunday of Quinquageſima, Anno 1389, by R. Wimbeldon.

Redde rationem villicationis tuæ. Lucæ xvi.

Matth. 20. The Sermon of R. Wimbelden.

MY dere Frends, ye ſhullen underſtand that Chriſt Autor and Doctor of Truth, in his Book of the Goſpel (likening the Kingdom of Heaven to an Houſholder) ſaith on this manner: Like as the Kingdom of Heaven to an houſholding man, that went out firſt on the morrow to hire werkmen into his Vine. Alſo about the third, ſixth, ninth, and eleventh hours he went out, and found men ſtanding idle, and ſaid to them, Go ye into mine Vineyard, and that right is, I will give you. When the day was ago, he cleped his ſteward, and bigh to give each man a peny.

The ſpiritual underſtanding of this houſholder is our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that is head of the houſhold of Church. And thus clepeth men in diverſe hours of the day, that is in diverce agees of the world. As in time of law of kind, he cleped by enſpiring Abel, Enoch, Noe, and Abraham. In time of the old Law, Moſes, David, Iſay, and Jeremy: and in time of Grace, Apoſtles Martyrs, and Confeſſors, and Virgins. Alſo he cleped men in divers agees, ſome on childhode, as John Baptiſt; ſome on ſtate of wexing, as John the Evangeliſt; ſome in ſtate of manhode, as Peter and Andrew; and ſome in old agee, as Gamaliel, and Joſeph of Arimathie; and all theſe he clepeth to travaile in his vine, that is the Church, and that in divers manner. For right as yee ſeeth, that in tilling of the material vine there ben divers labours, for ſome kutten away the voide branches, ſome maken forkis and nailes to beren up the vine, and ſome diggen away the old earth fro the rote, and leyn there fatter. And all this offices ben ſo neceſſary to the vine, that if any of them fail, it ſhall harm greatly, other deſtroy the vine. For but if the vine be kut, ſhe ſhall wax wild; but if the be railed, ſhe ſhall be overgo with netles and wedis; but if the rote be fatted with dong, ſhe for feblenes ſhuld wax barraine.

The calling of God is divers.

Job 10. 2 Cor. 7. 1 Pet. 2. 1 Theſ. 4.

Prov. 8. 2 Tim. 4.

Right ſo in the Church beth nedeful theſe three offices, Prieſthode, Knythode, and Laborers. To Prieſts it falleth, to kut away the void braunches of ſins with the ſwerd of her tong. To Knightode it falleth to letten wrongs and theftis to be done, and to maintaine Goddis law, and them that ben teachers thereof, and alſo to kepe the lond from enemies of other londs. And to Laborers it falleth to travaile bodelich, and with their fore ſwete, geten out of the earth bodilich lifelode for hem, and other parties. And theſe ſtates beth alſo nedeful to the Church, that none may well ben without other: for if Prieſthode lacked, the people for default of knowing of Gods law, ſhould wax wild in vices, and deyen ghoſtlily; and if the Knithode laked, and men to rulen the pople by law and hardineſs, theeves and enemies ſhulden ſo encres, that no man ſhuld live in peace. And if the labourers were nought, both Knights and Prieſts muſt become acre men and herdis, and elſe they ſhuld for default of bodily ſuſtenance dey. And therefore ſaith Clerk Aviceme, that every unreaſonable beaſt, if he have that that kind hath ordained for him, as kind hath ordained, he is ſuffiſance to live by himſelf, without any help of other of the ſame kind.

kind. As if there were but one horſe, other one ſhepe in the world, yet if he had graſſe and corne, as kind hath ordained for ſuch beaſts, he ſhuld live well now. But if there ne were but O man in the world, though he had all that good that is therein, yet for default he ſhuld dey, or his life ſhould be wors than if he were naught; and the cauſe is this, for that thing that kind ordaineth for a mans ſuſtenance, without other arraieng than it hath of kind, accordeth nought to him. As though a man have corne as it commeth from the earth, yet it is no meat accerding to him, untill it be by mans craft changed into bread: and though he have fleſh other fiſh, yet while it is raw, as kind ordained it, till it bee by mans travaile ſodden, roſted, or baken, it corded not to mans lifelode. And right ſo, wolle that the ſheepe beareth, not by mans divers craftis and travailes be changed or it bee able to cloth any man; and certis O man, by himſelf ſhuld never doe all theſe labours. And therefore, ſaith this Clearke, It is need that ſome bee acre men, ſome bakers, ſome makers of cloth, and ſome merchaunts to fetch that, that one lond fetcheth from another there it is plenty.

And certis this ſhould bee a cauſe why every ſtate ſhould love other. And men of a craft ſhould not deſpiſe ne hate men of none other craft, ſith they bee ſo nedeful everich to other. And oft thelke crafts that been moſt unneſt, might worſt been forebore: and O thing I dare well ſay, that he that is neither travailing in this world, on ſtudying, on prayers, on preaching, for helpe of the people as it falleth to Prieſts, neither ruling the people, maintaining ne defending fro enemies, as it falleth to knights, neither travelling on the earth, in divers crafts, as it falleth to labourers: When the day of rekening cometh, that is, the end of this life, right as hee lived here withouten travaile, ſo hee ſhall there lacke the reward of the peny, that is, the endleſs joy of Heaven. And as hee was here living after none ſtate ne order, ſo he ſhall bee put then in that place that no order is in, but everlaſting horror and forrow, that is, in Hell. Herefore, everich man ſee to what ſtate God hath cleped him, and dwell hee therein by travaile, according to his degree.

Thou that art a labourer or a crafty man, doe this truly. If thou art a ſervant or a bondman, be ſuget, and low in drede of diſpleating of thy Lord. If thou art a merchaunt deceive not thy brother in chaffering. If thou art a Knight, or a Lord, defend the poor man and needy fro hands that will harme them. If thou art a Juſtice or Judge, goe not on the right hand by favour, neither on the left hand, to puniſh any man for hate. If thou art a Prieſt, undermine, pray, and reprieve, in all manner patience and doctrine. Undermine thilke that been negligent, pray for thilke that been obedient, reprove tho that been unobedient to God. So every man travaile in his degree. For when the even is come, that is, the end of this world, then every man ſhall take reward, good or evil, after that he hath travailed here.

Note.

The words that I have taken to make of my Sermon, be thus much to ſay: Yeld reckoning of thy baily. Chriſt autor of pitie, and lover of the ſalvation of his people, in the proceſs of this Goſpel, enformeth every man what is his baily, by manner of a Parable of a baily that he ſpeaketh of, to array him to anſwer of the goods that God hath taken him, when the day of ſtrait reckoning ſhall bee come, that is, the day of doom. And ſo I at this time, through the helpe of God, following him that is ſo great a Maſter of authority, becauſe that I know nothing that ſhould more draw away mans unreaſonable love fro the paſſing joy of this world, than the minde of the dredful reckoning; as much as ſuffice, I ſhall ſhew you how yee ſhall diſpoſe you to avoid the vengeance of God, when theſe ſhall bee time of ſo ſtraight doom, that we ſhall geve reckoning of every idle word that we have ſpoken. For then it ſhall be ſaid to us, and we ſhall not flee it: Yeld reckoning of thy baily.

But for further proceſſe of this firſt party of this Sermon, ye ſhall were; that there ſhall bee three bailiffes that ſhall bee cleped to this ſtrait reckoning. Twaine to anſwer for themſelfe and for other, that been Prieſts that have cure of mens ſoules, and temporal men that have governale of people; and the third bailiffe ſhall account onely for himſelfe, and that is every Chriſten man, of that hee hath received of God. And every of theſe ſhall anſwer to three queſtions.

Three Queſtions. The firſt, Second, Third.

To the firſt queſtion, How haſt thou entred? The ſecond, How haſt thou ruled? And to the third, How haſt thou lived? And if thou canſt well aſſoile theſe three queſtions, was there never none earthly Lord that ever ſo well rewarded his ſervant without compariſon, as thy Lord God ſhall reward thee, that is, with bliſſe, and joy, and life that ever ſhall laſt. But on that other ſide, and thou wilt now be recheles of thine own welfare, and take none heed of this reckoning: If that day take thee ſuddenly, ſo that thou paſſe hence in deadly ſinne (as thou wooſt never what ſhall fall thee) all the tongues that ever were, or ever ſhall bee, mow not tell the forrow and woe that thou ſhalt ever bee in, and ſuffer. Therefore the deſire of ſo great joy, and the dread of ſo great paine, though love ne dread of God were not in thine heart, yet ſhould that make thee afeard to ſinne, for to thinke that thou ſhalt give reckoning of thy baily. Therefore as I ſay to thee, the firſt queſtion that ſhall bee propoſed to the firſt baily, that is a Prelat, other a Curate of mens ſoules, is this:

Aſſoile me. The Sermon.

How haſt thou entred: Matth. 22. Friend, how entredeſt thou hether? Who brought thee into this office? Truth or Simony? God or the Devil? Grace or mony? The fleſh or the ſpirit? Give thou the reckoning if thou canſt. If thou canſt not, I rede that thou tarry for to learne. For up hap ere night thou ſhalt be cleped. And if thou ſtand dombe for unkunning, or elſe for confuſion of thy conſcience, thou fall into the ſentence that anon followeth: Binde his hands and his feet, and caſt him into the utterward of darkneſs, there ſhall be weeping and grenning of teeth. Therefore I rede thee, that thou adviſe thee how thou ſhalt anſwer to this queſtion: How haſt thou entred? whether by cleping, or by thine own procuring? for that thou wouldeſt travaile in Gods Goſpell, other for that thou wouldeſt bee richly anaied? Anſwer now to thine owne conſcience as thou ſhalt anſwer to God, thou that haſt take now the order of Prieſt, whether thou bee Curate of none: who ſtirred thee to take upon thee ſo high an eſtate? Whether for thou wouldeſt live as a Prieſt ought to doe, ſtudying of Gods law to preach, and moſt heartily to pray for the people; or for to live a delicious life upon other mens travaile, and thy ſelf travaile nought. Why alſo ſetten men their ſonnes, either their couſins to ſchoole? Whereto but for to get them great advancements, or to make them the better to know how they ſhulden ſerve God? This men may fee openly by the ſciences that they ſet them to. Why I pray you put men their ſonnes to the Law Civill, or to the Kings Court to write Letters and Writs, rather than to Philoſophy or Divinity, but for the hope that theſe occupations ſhould be ever meanes to make them great in the world. I hope that there will no man ſay, that they ne ſhould better learne the rule of good living in the Book of Gods Law, than in any Bookes of mans worldly wiſdome. But certes now it is ſoothe, that John Chryſoſtom faith, Mothers bee loving to the bodies of their children, but the foule they deſpiſe; they deſire them to welfare in this world, but they take none heed what they ſhall ſuffer in the tother; ſome ordainen fees for their children, but none ordaine them to Godward; the luſt of their bodies they woll deere buy, but the health of their ſoule they reke nought of. If they fee them poore or ſicke, they ſorrow and ſigheth, but though they ſee them ſinne they ſorrow not. And in this they ſhew that they brought forth the bodies, but not the ſoules.

Solution. Chryſoſt. Hom. 27.

And if wee take heed truely, what abominations bee ſcattered and ſpread abroad in holy Church now adaies among Prieſts, we ſhull well wit, that they come not all to the fold of Chriſt by Chriſts cleping for to profit, but by otherwaies to get them worldly wealth, and this is the cauſe of leſing of ſoules, that Chriſt bought ſo deare, and of many errours among the people; and therefore it is iwrit in the Book of Mourning, where the Prophet ſpeaketh thus to God, Thren. 1. The enemy hath put his hand to all things deſirable to him; for hee hath let lawles folke enter into the Sanctuary, of the which thou hadſt commanded, that they ſhould not enter into the Church, This enkemy is Satanas, as his name ſowneth, that

The raſh ordaining of Miniſters.

'that hath put his hand to all that him liketh. What 'sinne I pray you, will the fiend have sow on men, that 'nis now yused? In what plenty is now pride, envy, 'wrath, and covetise? when were they so great as they 'be now? and so of all other sinnes. And why trow- 'est thou? But for there be a lawleſſe people entred into 'thy Sanctuary, that neither keepe in themſelfe the law of 'God, ne konne teachen other; and to every ſuch faith 'God by the Prophet, Oſe 4. For that thou haſt put away Oſe 4. 'cunning, I ſhall put thee away, that thou ſhalt uſe no 'Prieſthood to mee. Lo that God expreſſly here in Holy 'Writ forbiddeth men to take the ſtate of Prieſthood on 'them, but they have cunning that needeth them. Thou 'then that canſt neither rule thy ſelfe, ne other, after the 'Law of God, beware how thou wilt anſwer to God, at 'his dreadfull dome, when he ſhall ſay to thee, that which 'I took to my Theame:

Yeld the reckening of thy baily, how thou haſt entred.

'The ſecond Queſtion that every Curate and Prelate of 'Holy Church ſhall anſwere to, is this: How haſt thou 'ruled? That is to ſay, the ſoules of thy ſuggets, and 'the goods of poor men: Geve now thine accounts. Firſt, 'how thou haſt governed Gods folke that were take thee 'to keepe? Whether art thou an herd or an hired man, 'that doſt all for love of bodelich hire? As a father, or as 'a wolfe that eaten his ſheepe, and keepeth them nought? 'Say, whom haſt thou turned from his curſed living by 'thy devout preaching? Whom haſt thou taught the law 'of God that was earſt uncunning? There ſhall been 'heard a grievous accuſing of fatherleſs children, and a 'hard alledging, that Prieſts have liveden by their wages, 'and not done anwy their ſinnes. Yeld alſo reckoning 'how thou haſt ruled, and ſpended the goods of poore Bernardus. 'men. Harke what Saint Bernard ſaith: Dread Clerkes, 'dread the Miniſters of the Church, the which been in 'the place of Saints, that they doe ſo wickedly, nought 'holding them apaid with ſuch wages that were ſufficient 'to them; that overplus that needy men ſhould be ſuſtai- 'ned by, they bee not athamted to waſte in the houſe of 'their pride and lechery, and withholden to themſelfe 'wickedly and curſedly that which ſhould bee the lifelode 'of poore men. With double wickedneſs truely they 'ſinne. Firſt, for they reeven other mens goods, and 'faith, they miſuſe holy things in their vanities and in 'their filths. Every ſuch baily therefore beware, for anon 'to the laſt farthing bee ſhall recken with Chriſt. Troweſt 'thou not then that thou ne ſhalt be diſallowed of God, of 'that thou haſt miſpended in feeding of fat Paſtreys, of 'Hounds, of Hawkes, and if it ſo bee, that is worſt of 'all, on lecherous women? Heare what is ſaid of ſuch. 'They had led their daies in wealths: And in a point they 'ben gone downe into Hell. Think therefore I rede thee, 'that thou ſhalt yeld reckening of thy baily.

'The third Queſtion that this baily ſhall anſwere to, is 'this: How haſt thou lived? What light of holineſſe haſt 'thou ſhewed in thy living to the people, or what mirror 'haſt thou ben of holineſſe to them? Geve now thy 'reckoning how thou haſt lived, as a Prieſt, or as a leude 'man, as a man, or as a beaſt. That is to wonder truely 'how the life of Prieſts is changed. They bee clothen as 'Knights, they ſpeaken as unhoneſtly as carles; other of 'winning as Merchaunts; they riden as Princes, and all 'that is thus ſpended, is of the goods of poore men, and 'of Chriſts heritage. Therefore ſaith an holy Doctor, The 'clay of Egypt was tough and ſtinking, and medled with 'blood. The ſtates were hard to be undone, for they 'were baked with fire of covetiſe, and with the light of 'luſt. In this travaileth rich man, in this they wake, 'awaiting poore men. In theſe travaileth Prelates, that 'ben too much blent with too much ſhining of riches, 'that make them houſes like Churches in greatneſſe, that 'with divers paintries coloren their Chambers, that with 'divers clothings of colors make images gay; but the 'poore man, for default of clothes, beggeth, and with 'an empty wombe crieth at the doore. And if I ſhall the Eſa. 22. 'ſooth ſay, faith this Doctor, oft time poore men bee Stas in hac aur gnaſi gaid dico. 'robbed for to clothe the trees and ſtones. Of ſuch ſpeak- 'eth the Prophet, How art thou here, or as who art thou? 'Here thou art occupying the place of Peter and of Paul, 'or of Thomas, or of Martine: But how, as Judas a- 'mong the Apoſtles, as Simon Magus among the Diſ- 'ciples, as a candle new quent that ſtincheth all the 'houſe inſtead of a light lanterne, as a ſmoke that blind- 'eth mens eien, in place of cleane fire? If thou contrary 'thus the forme of living that Chriſt and his Diſciples left 'to Prieſts, Lo what ſaith the Prophet Jeremy, They have 'entred, and they have had, and nought ben obedient. 'They haven with falſe title, or with their falſe and cor- 'rupt intention had poor mens goods to their miſuſing, 'and they have not bee obedient to the Law of God in 'their owne living. Therefore it is writ that the hardeſt 'dome ſhall fall on ſuch. An hard dome, for they have 'miſentred: An harder dome, for they have miſruled: 'And the hardeſt dome, for they have ſo curſedly lived. 'Think therefore I rede, how thou wilt give reckening of 'thy baily.

'The ſecond bailiffe that accounteth at this dome for 'himſelfe and alſo for other, is ſee that keeping hath of 'any communite, as Kings, Princes, Majors, and Shi- 'reves, and Juſtices. And theſe ſhall alſo anſwer to the 'ſame three Queſtions. The firſt Queſtion, How haſt 'thou entred, that is to ſay, into thine office? Other for 'helpe of the people to deſtroy falſhed and furtheren 'truth? Other for deſire of winning of worldly wor- 'ſhip: If thou take ſuch an office, more for thine owne 'worldly profit than for helpe of the communite, thou 'art a Tyrant as the Philoſopher ſeith. For it is to feare 'leſt there been too many that deſiren ſuch ſtates, that 'may the rather oppreſſe thilke that they hateth, and 'take gifts to ſpare to puniſh thilke that haven treſpaſſed, 'and ſo maketh them partners of their ſinnes. And many 'ſuch, when they been ſo high, they recke nought that 'they beth poore mens brethren, but they wene to paſſe 'them in kinde, as they paſſeth in worldly worſhip, that 'is but winde: Of which God ſaith by the Prophet, Oſe 8. 'They have raigned, but nought of mee, they have been 'Princes, but I know nought. So was of Rebo- 3 Reg. 12. 'boam, that was the ſonne of King Salomon, what time 'hee was firſt King, the people of Iſrael comen to him, 'and ſaid, Thy father in his laſt dayes put on us great 'charge. Wee pray thee ſome deale make it lighter, 'and we willen ſerve thee. And the King tooke 'counſell of the old wiſe men, and they counſailden 'to anſwer them faire, and that ſhould be for the 'beſt. But hee left theſe old wiſe mennis counſaile, 'and did after the counſaile of children that were his 'playferen, and ſaid to the people when they came 'againe: My left finger is greater than my fathers 'riegge: My father grieved you ſomewhat, but I will 'echen more thereto. And the people heard this, and 'rebeleden to him, and took them another King: 'and ſith, the Kingdom came never whole again: 'and therefore it is good, that every ruler of Com- 'monalties, that they bee not led by follies, ne by 'none other cure rowner, that he ne have an eygh of 'love to the comonty that hee hath to rule. For wete 'yee well, bee hee never ſo high, that he ſhall come 'afore higher, to yeld reckoning of his baily.

'The ſecond Queſtion is, How haſt thou ruled the How haſt thou ruled. 'people, and the office that thou haddeſt to governe? 'Thou that haſt been a Judge in cauſes of poore men, Deut. 9. 'how haſt thou kept this heſt of God. Thou ſhalt not 'take heed to the perſon of a poore man, to be to him 'the harder for his poverty, ne thou ſhalt not behold 'a rech mans ſemblance, to ſpare or to favour him in 'his wrong for his riches. O Lord, what abuſions is 'there among officers of both Lawes now adays: If a 'great man pleadeth with a poore man to have ought 'that he holdeth, every officer ſhall be ready to hie all 'that he may, that the rich man might have ſuch an 'end as he deſired. But if a poore man plead with a 'rich man, then there ſhall bee ſo many delayes, that 'though the poore mans right be open to all the coun- 'trie, for pure fault of ſpending he ſhall bee glad to 'ceaſe. Shrieves and Bailiffes willen returne poore 'mens Writs, with tarde venit, but gif they ſelen meed 'in their hands. And yet I here ſay, men that have ſeven 'both KING Liber. 4. 'both Lawes, and like Court that is cleped Chriſts Court, 'is much more Curſed. Therefore it is writ, gifts they 'taken out of Mens boſoms, to overcoum the right way 'of dome. But it is to dread the Word of Chriſt: In 'what dome ye deeme, ye ſhould be deemed when ye comen 'to yield a reckoning of your baily.

How haſt thou lived. 'The third Queſtion is, How haſt thou lived, thou that 'deemeſt and puniſheſt other men for their treſpaſs? A 'great Doctor ſaith; thee behooveth to flee the wickednes 'of other men that thou chaſtieſt them for their treſpaſs. 'For if thy ſelf do unlawfullich in deming other men, 'thou damneſt thy ſelf, ſyth thou doſt that thou damneſt. Sap. 6. Rom. 2. 'And Paul ſaith, why techeſt thou nought thy ſelf, that 'thou teacheſt other? Why ſtealeſt thou, that teacheſt 'nought other men to ſteal? S. Gregory ſaith, he ſhall 'not take governail of other, that cannot go before them 'in good living. And when any man ſtand before him 'in dome, he muſt take heed before what judge he ſhall 'ſtand himſelf, to take his dome after his deeds. But it 'is to dred, that many fareth as twe falſe Prieſts that 'woulden have damned to death Holy Suſan for the wold Suſan. 'not aſſent to their lechery. Of the which it is writ, 'they turned away their eyen, for they would not ſee 'Heaven, ne heve mind of rightful domes. So it hap- 'peth oft they that were more worthy to be hanged, 'damneth them that be leſs worthy, as a Clerk telleth Socrates. 'of Socrates the Philoſopher, ſaith he, upon a day a man 'asked of him why he laughed: And he ſaid, for I ſee 'great Theeves leading a little Theef to hanging. I pray 'thee, whether is he a greater Theef that benimmeth a 'Man his Houſe and his Land from him and from his Valerius Maximus, libro. 7. 'Heirs for evermore, other he that for making of great 'need ſtealeth a Sheep or a Calf? Whether trow we 'nought, that it happeth ſuch Extortioners to be other 'while Judges, and demeth men thus: But I read thee 'that thus deemeſt other, think on that dome thou ſhalt 'come to, to yeld the reckening of thy baily.

The third baily. The third admonition is general to every Chriſtian man. Auſtyn. 'The Third Bailiffe that ſhall be cleped to this dread- 'ful account ſhall be to every Chriſtian Man, that ſhall 'geve reckening to his Lord God for goods that he had 'had of his. And here I will ſpeak but of the firſt Que- 'ſtion, that is this: How entreſt thou? And here by the 'way, ye that have got any worldly good, other take 'by extortion, by ravine, by uſury, other by deceit: Woe 'ſhall be to him at this dreadful day, as S. Auſten ſaith. 'If he be caſt into the fire that hath not given of his 'own good; where troweſt thou ſhall he be caſtin, that 'hath reved other mens from them? And he ſhulle bren 'with the fend that hath nought clothed the naked Mesdi. Greg. 8. 'where troweſt ſhall he bren that hath made him naked that 'was erſt clothed. But as S. Gregory ſaith, Two things 'maketh men to live thus by ravaide of other Neighbours, 'that they deſire heynes and dread poverty, and what ven- Zacha. 6. 'geance falleth of this ſin of covetiſe, I may ſee by figure 'in holy writ, when the Angel ſaid to Prophet Zachery, 'Reare up they eien, and ſee what is that goeth out. 'And the Prophet ſaid, what is it? Then the Angel ſaid, 'This is the Pot going out, This is the eize of hem on all 'the Earth, and there was a weight of leade I bore, and 'there was a Woman ſitting in the middle of this Pot, 'And the Angel ſaid, This is impiety: and he took her 'and caſt her into the middle of this Pot, and he took 'the gobbet of lead and caſt it into the Pots mouth. 'And the Prophet lift up his eye, and he ſaw two Wo- 'men coming out, and Spirits in her Wingis like two 'Kytes other gledes, and they arerid up this Pot between Ezechiel. 5. 'the Heaven and the Earth, and then the Prophet ſpake to 'the Angel, wider wol theſe bear this Pot? And he 'ſaid, unto the Lord of Semnaar: This Pot is covetiſe. 'For right as a Pot hath a wide open mouth, ſo covetiſe 'gapeth after worldly good: and right as the licour in 'the Pot profiteth nought to the Pot, but to men that 'draweth and drinketh therof: ſo worldly good oft 'profiteth not to Churles, but to other that cometh after, 'as it is written. He that hath Money ſhall have no 'Fruit of it: and this covetiſe is the eie of covetous men, 'for they ben blind to ſee how they ſhould ſee to go to 'Heaven, but to the winning of worldly things they ſee 'many ways, like to Owles and night Crowes, that 'ſeen better by night than by day. The gobbet of lead, 'is the ſin of obſtination. The Woman that ſat in the 'Pot, is unpity, as the Angel ſaid, that followeth un- 'righteouſneſs and avarice. For through avarice a man 'leeſeth the pity that he ſhould have of the miſchief of 'his ſoul. For oft time men leeſe the life of their ſoul 'by deadly ſin, that they do to have the worldly win- 'ning, and alſo they leeſe the pity that they ſhould have 'of their body, putting themſelfes to many great bodi- 'ly travayls and perils both by Sea and Land, and all 'maketh covetiſe. This Pot is ſtopped with the gobbet 'of lead, when unpity is thus by ſin of obſtination cloſed 'in covetiſe, that he may not go out of the chinches Job. 21. 'hart by penance. For as Job ſaith; when he is ful- 'filled, he ſhall be ſtopped. The two Women that bare 'up this Pot, are pride and luſt of fleſh, that be cleped 'in holy writ the twe daughtren of the wate Lerbe, cry- 'ing, bring, bring. And they had wings, the firſt 'wing is grace ſpiritual, as cunning, wiſdom, and coun- 'ſel, with ſuch other many. For which giftes many 'men wexe proud. The ſecond wing is bodily grace, as 'ſtrength, fairehood, gentry; and many other ſuch; 'whereof men wexe proud. The wings of the ſecond 'Woman, that is, fleſhly deſire, beth gluttony and ſloth. 'Of gluttony ſpeaketh S. Gregory; when the wamb is 'fulfilled, the prickes of lechery beth meved. And of 'ſloth S. Auguſtine ſaith, Lot the while he dweled in 'buſineſs among ſhrewes in Sodome, he was a good man. 'But when he was in the hill flow, for ſykkernes he in his 'drunkenes lay by his daughtren. And theſe Women Agaſtt covetiſe. Gregory. Aug. de confeſſio viro- rum & uxo- rum Barthe- lomeus de propietati- bus rerum. Auſtin. 'had wings like Kytes, that with a crying voice feecheth 'their meate, as Bartholomeus ſaith.

'And thus fareth covetiſe of men; witneſſing Saint 'Auguſtine, what is the greedineſs of fleſhly deſire. In- 'aſmuch as the ravenous Fiſhes have ſometime meaſure; 'yet when they hunger, they rapine; and when they 'fulfil they ſpare: But only covetiſe of men may not 'be fulfilled. For ever he taketh, and never hath 'enough. Neither he dreadeth God, neither ſhame of 'men. He ne ſpareth his Father, ne knoweth his Mo- 'ther, ne accordeth with his Brethren, neither keepeth 'truth with his Friend. He overpreſſeth Widowes and 'Fatherleſs Children. Free men he maketh bond, and 'bringeth forth falſe witneſs, and occupieth dom mens 'things, as he ſhoulden never dye. What manhood is 'this, ſayth this Doctor, thus to leeſe life and grace, Auſtine. 'and get death of ſoul? Win Gold, and leeſe Heaven? Pſal. 54. Innocentius. 'And herefore ſaith the Prophet, have travalle in the 'midſt, and leave unrighteouſneſs.

'Alſo Innocent ſpeaking of the harmss that come of 'covetiſe, faith thus, O how many men have covetiſe 'decieved and ſpilt? when covetiſe Balaam would, for Nu. 22. 'gifts that the King profered him, have Curſed Gods Joſua 7. 'people, his own Aſs reproved him, and hurt his foot 2 Reg. 5. 'againſt a wall. Achor was ſtoned to death: for cove- Acts 5. 'tiſe made him ſteal gold and clothes, againſt the com- 'mandment of God, Gieſy was ſmit with Meſelry, for 'he ſold Naamans heal, that came of Gods grace. Judas 'for covetiſe ſold Chriſt, and afterward hong himſelf. Anany and Zaphira his Wife were dead ſodenly, for 'they forſoken to give Peter their Money that they had. 'And covetiſe maketh alſo that rich men eate the poor, 'as Beaſts done their leſous holding them low. This 'may we ſee all day in deed I dread. For if a rich 'man have a Field and a poor man have in the midſt or 'in the ſide thereof one Acre, and a rich man have all 'a Street faveth O Houſe, that ſome poor Brother of his 'oweth, he ceaſeth never till he get it out of the poor 'Mans hand, either by prayer, or by lying, or by pu- 'ſuing of deceit. Thus fared it by King Achab, that 3 Reg. 21. 'through his falſe Queenes gin ſlew the poor man Na- 'both, for that he would not ſell him his Vineyard that 'was nigh to the Kings Palace.

Ambroſe de Nabuthe Jeſu libelle. 'Upon which proceſs, thus ſayth Saint Ambroſe; 'How farre will ye Rich men ſtretch your covetiſe? 'Will ye dwell alone upon the Earth, and have no poor 'Man with you? Why put ye out your fellow by kind, 'and challenge to your ſelf the poſſeſſion comen by 'kind? In commune to all rich and poor the Earth 'was made. Why will ye rich challenge proper right 'hetein? Kind knoweth no riches, that bringeth forth 'all men poor. For we be not got with rich Clothes, 'ne born with Gold ne with Silver. Naked he bringeth 'them

'them to this World, needy of meat and of drink
'and clothing. Naked the Earth taketh us and she naked
'brought us hither. Shee cannot close with us our pos-
'session in the Sepulchre, for kind maketh no difference
'between poor and rich, in coming hither, ne in going
'hence. All in o manner she bringeth forth, all in o
'manner she closeth in grave. Who so will make differ'ence of poor and rich, abyde till they have a little 'while leyne in the grave. Then open and look among 'dead bones who was rich, and who was poor; but 'if it be thus that noe clothes rotteth with the rich
'than with the poor, and that harmeth to them that beth
'on live, and profit not to them that been dead; Thus Job. 24. 'saith the Doctor of such extortion as it is writ. O'ther mens Fields they repeth, and fro the vine of him
'that the harme oppressed they pluckе away the Grapes;
'they leveth men naked, and taketh away her Clothes
'that hath nought wherewith to helle them in cold, and 'listen up this Pot bytween Heaven and Earth. For cove-
'tous men nother haveth charity to their Brethren upon
'Earth, neither to God in Heaven; and they bare this pot
'into the Lond of Sennaar, that is to say, into the Lond
'of Stenche, that is Hell, for there shall be stench, in 'stead of sweet smelling, as Isay saith. Beware I read,
'that ye nought have to do with this Pot, ne with the 'Woman therein, and on all manner that ye be nought
'Weddid to her, for then ye must be both one. This is
'thilke foule lecherous Woman: the Kings and Morchaun-
'tis of the Earth have done lechery, and of her vertue they 'have been made rich, whose damnation is written in the 'Book of Privities in these words, In o day shall come all
'these vengeances of her death, weeping and hunger
'and fire shall brenne her, for strong is God that shall
'venge him on her, and then shulleth weepe and howle
'uppe on her, the Kings of the Earth, that haveth done
'lechery with her, and having lived in Delices when they
'shull see the Smoke of her brenning, stonding afeere
'weeping and weyling and saying; Alas! Alas! thilke
'great City that was clothed with bys and purple, and
'brasile, and over gilt with Gold and pretious Stones and
'Pearle. For in one hour all these great riches shall be de'stroyed, then shall they say that shall be damned with 'her. We have erred fro the way of trouth and right-
'wisnes, light have not shined to us, and the sunne of 'understonding have not risen to us: we have be made
'weery in everich way of wickednes and of lust, and have 'gone hard ways, but the ways of God we knew not:
'what hath Pride profited to us, or the boast of riches
'what hath it brought to us? All this is as a shadow of 'death, and we mow now shew no token of holines, in
'our wickednes we be wasted away. Think therefore
'I read, that thou shall yeld reckening of thy bayly. Here
'endeth the first part of this Sermon, and begineth the 'second part.

'IN the second part with the help of God I will
'shew first, who shall clepe us to this reckoning,
'Afterward, tofore what Judge we shall reckyn, and
'last what punishing shall be doe to them that been 'found false servants and wicked, and what reward shall
'be give to them that be found good and true. For 'the first, ye shall wetoen that there shall be twey
'domes. The first dome anone after the departing of Mat. 25. 'body and of soul, and this shall be special. And of 'this reckoning or dome speaketh the Gospel of Luke.
'The second reckoning or dome shall be anone after 'the general Resurrection, and shall be universal. And
'of this is to speken in the Gospel. To the first
'every man shall be cleped after other, as the world
'passeth. To the second shall come togedre in the 'stroke of an eye all mankind. To the first, men
'shall be cleped with three Sumners, other Sergeauntes:
'The first is Sickness, the second is Age, and the 'third is Death; the first warneth, the second threat-
3. Sumners. Sickness. Age. Death. 'neth, and the third taketh. This is a kindly order,
'but otherwise it faileth, for summe we seeth dieth
'that never wist what was Sickness ne Age, as Chil'dren that been suddenly slain. And summe, yea the 'most part that dyeth now adaies, deyeth before her
'kind agee of deeth. Therefore, I say, that the first
'that clepeth to this special reckoning is Sickness, that
'followeth all mankind, so that every man hath it: and { KING Hist. 4. }
'summe is Sickness that summe men haveth, but nought
'all. Yet the first Sickness is double, for summe is within
'in the mightes of the soul, and summe is without in feeble-
'nes of the body that needis mo be storied, when time
'by hemself is cause of corruption as Philosphy saith, and 'thereby feeblenes and sickness. And so may we see
'hereby, though that a man shut out of the house of his 'heart all manner of worldly and fleshly thoughts, yet
'unneth shall a man, for ought that he can do, think
'on God only, the space of o Pater noster, but that
'some other thing that is passing entreth into the soul,
'and draweth her from contemplation. But, O Lord
'God, what seekness is this, an heavy burden on the Sons
'of Adam, that one foule moocke and senn of the World
'we many think long ynow. But on that the soul
'should most delectation have by kind mow we nought
'think so little a space, but if the colde enter among
'the wheate. Of this seeknes speaketh Paul, where
'he saith: I see a Law in my limmes fighting agenes
'the Law of my Spirit, and taking me into the Law
'of Sinne. So that if fares by us, as by a man that would 'look agyens the Sunne, and may nought do it long for 'nothing. And forsooth, that is for no default that is in
'the Sunne, for she is most cleere in her self, and so by 'reason best should be seyn, but it is for feeblenes of mans
'eye. Right so, syth, Adam our first fader was put out
'of Paradise, all his Ofl-spring have been thus sicke, as
'the Prophet seyth. Our faders have eate a bytter Grape,
'and the teeth of the children be wexe an edge. The 'second sickeness, that is commune to all mankind, com-
'mith of feeblenes of the body, as hunger and thorst,
'colde and heate, sorrow and weatines, and many other,
'as Job 14. saith. A man that is ybore of a Woman, Job. 14.
'lyving a little while, is fulfilled with many miseases.
'Yet there is other sickness that cometh to some men,
'but not to all, as Lepyr, Palsye, Fever, Dropsie, Blind- Deut.
'nes, and many other, as it was seyden to the people
'of Israel, in holy writ. But thou keep the Commād-
'ments that be writ in this Book, God shall achen the
'sicknes of thee and of thy seed, great sickenes and 'long abiding. Yet ye shall understond, that God send-
'eth otherwhile such sickenes to other men, and o-
'therwhile to shrews. To good men, God doth it
'for two causes, and that is sooth. Of sickenes I wol
'to be understond also, of all manner of Tribulations.
'The first cause, for they should alway ever know,
'that they have none perfections of themself, but of 'God only, and to echen their meeknes. And thus
'saieth Paul, lest the greatnes of revelations rere me up 1.Co.12.
'into pride, is given a pricke of my flesh, the Angel of 'Sathanas to smite me on the neck, wherefore I have
'thrice prayed God, that he should go fro me, and he 'answered me: My grace is sufficient to thee, for vertue is 'fulfilled in sickness, whereon thus saith the glose. The 'Fiend, axing Job to be tempted, was heard of God,
'and nought the Apostle axing his temptation to be re'moved. God heard him that should be damned, and
'he heard nought him that he should save. For oft
'the sick man axit many things of the leche, that he wole
'not geve him, and that is for to make him whole of sick-
'nes. Also GOD sendeth saincts oft sickness and perse-
'cution, to give us sinful wretches example of patience:
'For if he suffer his saincts to have such Tribulation in this 'World, and they thankin him thereof, much more Tob. 2.
'wretchis, that God sendeth not the hundred aparty of 'their sorrow, shulden beare it meekly, sith we have de-
'served a thousand so much as they haveth. Whereof,
'Toby that one day when he was weary of burying of poor
'men, the which shulden have ley unburied, and have be
'etene of houndis, and foules, as Carynes, of other un-
'reasonable Beasts, when for weatines he had leyde him
'to rest, through Goddis sufferance the Swallowes that
'bredden above on his hous, mayden ordure into his eyen,
'and he waxet blind. Thus it is writ of this temptation
'forsooth; Therefore, GOD suffered to come to him,
'that to them that comen after should be given ensample
'of patience, as by the temptation of Holy Job. For
'sith from his Childhood evermore he dread God, and 'ever kept his Hestes; was not agreeved ayenst GOD
'that the mischief of blindnes fell to him; but un-
'moveable

{KING Hist. 4.} 'moveable dwelled in the dread of GOD, thanking him
'all the days of his life. Lo that holy Writ saith expreffly,
'That GOD suffered this holy man to have that sick-
'nes, to give them that should come after him ensample
'of patience. Also otherwhile GOD sendeth sickness
'and tribulation to wicked men, and for two causes:
'First, for that they should the rather dread God, and 'leave their sin. As it is writ, Their sickness hath been
'multiplied, and after, they have hied to Godward. For
'we see oft men in sickness knew their GOD, that ne-
'ver would have turned to him while they had been
'whole. Also God sendeth them sickness oft to agast
'other men, lest they follow their sin. As the sickness
'of King Antioche, whom GOD smote with such a Antioche. 'sickness, that Worms fell out of his body while he lived,
'in so far forth that he stank so foul, that his friends were
'so weary of it, that they might not suffer it. And at 'the last, when he himself might not suffer his own
'stinch, then he began to know himself, and said, It is
'rightful to be subject to GOD, and a deadly manne
'not to hold himself only even with God; and the story
'saith, He asked mercy of GOD, and made a vow to
'God, that he would make the City of Jerusalem free,
'and the Jews to make them as free as the men of 'Athens; and that he would honour GODS Temple
'with pretious ary, and multiply the holy Vessels, and
'lin of his own rent and spences perteining to the Sacri'fice. And he would become a Jew, and go over all
'the lond to preach Gods might. And yet God gafe him
'not such mercy as he desired. And I trow certain that it 'was for good. Insomch as GOD knew he would 'not afterward hold his Covenant, or else for he asket it
'too late. What meede was it for him to forsake his 'wickednes? when he was unmighty to do good or 'evil. Nevertheles, I trow he was not damned, in as 'much as he had such repentance; for repentance in this life
'come never too late if it be true. But by this Vengeance
'that GOD took on this King, should men see, what 'it is to be unobedient to God. And also it is to take 'heed, that when ever sickness cometh, ever it be weth,
'that he that sustereth this deadly, shall needs die. For 'though he may skape of his sickness, yet he may not
'skape death. And so thou must needs come give reckon-
'ing of thy Baily. The second Somnor that shall clepe
'thee to this particular dome, is elde or age. And the
The second Sumner. Properties of death. 'condition of him is this, though that he tarie with thee,
'he will not leave thee, till he bring thee to the third,
'that is death. But there be many that though they have
'this Somnor with them, they take none heed, though
'they see her hear hore, her back crooked, her breth stinke,
'her teeth fail, her yen derk, her visage rively, her crene
'weixt hevy to her. What meaneth all this, but that age
'sumneth to the dome?

'But what more madhead may be than a man to be
'cleped, and draw to so dreadful a reckening there,
'where but he answere well, he forfeteth both body and
'soule to damnation for ever? If seeing a little worldly
'mirth on the way, he thenketh so ever after them, that he
'forgetteth so drawneth him, or whether he drawneth:
'So doth he that is smitten with Age and liketh so on the 'false worlds wealth, that he forgeteth whether he is 'away: Herefore saith an holy Doctour, that among all
'abusions of the world most is of an old man that is ob-
'stinate: for he thinketh not on his outgoing of this 'world, ne of passing into the life that is to come: he
'beareth Messengers of death, and he leveth hem not, and
'the cause is this, for the threefold cord that such an old 'man is bounden with is hard to breke. This cord is
'custome, that is of three plightes, that is, of ydle thought,
'unhoneft speech, and wicked deed: the which if they
'groweth in a man from the childhoode into mans age,
'they maketh a treble cord to bind the old man on custom
'of sinne. Herefore saith Esay, breake the bondes of sinne. Esay.
'Thinke herefore whosoever that thou be that art thus 'sumned, that thou might not scape, that thou ne shalt
'yeld the reckening of thy baily.

The third Sumner. Difficulte mortis. 'The third sommer to this reckening, is death. And the 'condition of him is, that when ever he come, first, other
'the second, other the last hour he ne spareth, neyther
'power, ne yough, ne he dreadeth no threatning, ne he
'ne taketh hede of no prayer, ne of no gift, ne he grunt-
'eth no respit, but withouten delay he bringeth forth to 'the dome. Herefore seyth Saint Austin: Well ought Augustinus.
'every man drede the day of his death. For in what state
'a mans last day findeth him, when he dyeth out of this 'world, in the same state he bringeth him to his dome.
'Herefore seyth the wise man, Sonne thinke on thy last 'daye, and thou shalt never sinne. Therefore I rede that
'thou thinke, that thou shalt geve reckoning of thy baily.
The day of Judgment. 'I said also, that there shall be another doome, to the 'which all men shall come together, and this shall be uni'versal. And right as to the other doome, every man
'shall be cleped with these three sumnours; so to this dome
'all this world shall be cleped with three general clepers.
'And right as the other three Messengers tell a mans end, so
To know the worlds sickness. 'these tell the end of the world. The first cleper is the 'worldly sickness, the second cleper is feebleness, and the Mat. 24. 'third is the end. The sickeness of the world thou shalt
'know by charity accoling. His elde and feeblenes thou
'shalt know by tokens fulfilling, and his end thou shalt
'know by Antichristis pursuing. First I said, thou shalt
'know the worlds sickness by charity accoling. Clerkes
'that treate of kinde sayne; that a body is sicke, when
'his bodily heate is too lite, or when his unkindely heate is 'too much. Sythe then all mankinde is one body, whose 'kindelie heate is charity (that is, love to GOD and to 'our Neighbours) unkindely heate is lustful love to other
'creatures. When therefore thou seest that the love of men
'to Godward and to their neighbour is little and faint, and
'the love of worldly things and lustes of the flesh is great
'and fervent; then wit thou well, that unkindely heate is
'too great, and kindly heate is too little. That this be ac-
'knowlich of this sickeneſs, I may prove by authority of 'Christ. For he himselfe gave them as a sign of the draw-
'ing to the end of the World: For that wickednes shall 'be in plenty, charity shall acoole. Therefore when thou
'seest charity thus little in the world, and wickednes en-
'crease, know well that this world passeth and his wealth,
'and that this sumner is come. And thus seyth S. Paul,
'Writ ye well, that in the last daies shall come perillous
'times, and there shall be men loving themselfe, that is 'to say, their bodies, covetous by pride, unobedient to
'Father and Mother, unkynde felons, withouten affecti-
'on, withouten peace, blamers, incontinent, unmilde,
'withouten benignity, traitors, rebels, swelling, lovers of
'lusts more than of God, having a likeneſs of piety, and 'denying the vertue thereof. And these flee thou. If 'thou seest the people bulied with such conditions, wit
'thou well, that the first sumnour warneth all the world,
'that the day of reckoning draweth toward.

'The second sumnour, that warneth all the world, is
'elde or age of the world and his feebleneſs, and shewes
'tokens fulfilling. But I know well that we be nought
'fulfilsaunt to know the times other the whiles that the Fa'ther in Trinity hath put on his own power, to shew cer- Luke 21.

'hereof he taketh to smite servants and hynen of God,

'this day is at the hond; how ny nevertheles can I not 'to whom the endis of the world ben come, much rather

'may we seie the fame that been so much neere the end

'all darknes, and thou douteſt that the day is goe, first
'on the valeys is darknes than the day draweth down-
'ward: whan therefore thou seest the valeies yderked
'why douteſt thou whether it be nigh even, but if thou see
'the Sun so low that derknes is upon the hils, thou
'wolt seie doubtles that it is night: Right so, if thou see

'the laſt token that he gave, was this; When ye ſeene the 'abominatien of elengneſs ſaid of Danyel the Prophet,

'ſtond. Upon which text, thus argueth a Doctour in a 'Book that he maketh of the end of the world. If the 'words of Danyel haven authority (as G O D ſayth that 'they haven) it ſufficeth of the number of the years of the {KING Hen. 4.} 'In all this matter have I nought ſeid of my ſelf, but

'of other Doctors that beth proved, I feyd alſo in my 'ſecond principal part, that it were to wete ſofore what
'Judge we ſhall reken. Wherefore we ſhulleth wite that
'God himſelfe ſhall heare this reckening, he that ſeeth
'all our dedis, and all our thoughts fro the beginning of 'our life to the end, and he ſhall ſhew their the hid things
'of our hert, opening to all the world the rightfulneſs of 'his dome. So that with the might of God, every
'mans dedis to all the world ſhall be ſhewed, and ſo it
'ſeemeth by the words of S. John, in the Book of Pri-
'vities, there he ſeith thus: I ſawe dede men, little and Apoc. 'great, ſtonding in the ſight of the throne, and bookes
'weren opened: and another booke was opened that was
'of life, and dede men weren judged after the things that
'weren written in the bookes after their worchings. Theſe
'bookes beth mens conſciences that now beth cloſed,
'But then they ſhulleth be opened to all the world to re-
'den therein both dedis and thoughts. But the booke of 'life is Chriſts living and doctrine, that is now hid to
'men that ſhulleth be damned through their owne malice,
'that deemeth men to ſerve the world rather than God:
'In the firſt book ſhall be write all that we haveth
'doe, in that other booke ſhall be write that we ſhulden
'have doe, and then ſhulle dede men be demyd of thilke
'things that ben written in the Bookis: For if the dedis
'that we haven doe, be not which beene written in the bookis,
'of our conſcience, be according to the booke of Chriſts
'teaching and his living, the which is the booke of life
'we ſhulle be ſaved, or elſe we ſhulle be damned, for the 'doome ſhall be given after our workis. Looke therefore
'now what thing is written in the booke of thy conſci-
'ence, while thou art here: and if thou findeſt ought
'contrary to Chriſts life, other to his teaching, with the 'knife of penaunce and repentance ſcrape it away and
'write it better, evermore hertly thinking that thou ſhalt
'yelde reckening of thy bayly.

'Alſo I ſaid principally that it were to witen, what re-
'ward ſhall be geve on that doome, to wife ſervants and 'good, and what to falſe ſervants and wicked. For the
'which it is to wite, that our Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſhall
'come to the doome here into this world, in the ſame body
'that he tooke of our Ladie, having thereon the woundis
'that he ſuffered for our agein bieng. And all that ever
'ſhullen be ſaved, taking againe their bodyes clyving to
'their head Chriſt, ſhull be raviſhed metying him in the 'aire, as Paul ſaith: They that ſhall be damned lyen up-
'on the earth, as in a tonne of Wine the dreggis dwellen
'byneth, and the Cliere wine hoveth above. Then ſhall
'Chriſt axe reckening of the deedes of mercy, reproving
'falſe Chriſten men for the levying of them, reherling the
'deedes of the ſame and other truthis by the which his
'true ſeavants then followed him, that ſhulle thilke falſe
'ſervants goe with the Devil, whom they have ſerved
'in the Earth, then ſwallowing into the endleſs fire.
'And righteful men ſhullen goe into everlaſting life, then
'ſhall be fulfilled that is written in the booke of Privities;
'Woe, woe, woe, to hem that dwellen in the Earth.
'Woe to the paynym that gaſe that worſhip to dead
'Images wrought of mans hands, and to other crea-
'tures that he ſhould have gone to God that him wrought:
'Woe to the Jew that truſteth ſo muchil in 'the olde
'Lawe, then ſhall he ſe Maries ſonne deeming the world
'whom he deſpiſed and ſet on the Croſs: Woe to the falſe
'Chriſten man that knew the will of his Lord and fulfill-
'led it nought.

'Alſo woe for ſin of thinking to thee, that thou haſt
'ſhyt out the meine of God, that is, minde of his paſſion,
'holy contemplation of his goodneſs, and memory of
'his benefites, fro the chamber of thine hert; and haſt
'made it a houſe of Swyn and a den of Theeves, by un-
'cleane thoughtes and delightes. As thou here haſt ſperd
'God out of thine hert, ſo he ſhall ſpere thee out of Heaven:
'Thou haſt herberwid the meine of the Fiend, and with 'them in Hell thou ſhalt ever abide: Woe alſo for ſinne of
'ſpeech, for thou might nought open thy ſoule and ſtink-
'ing mouth with the which thou haſt ſpoken unhoneſtly,
'curſing, fraud, deceite, leaſings, forſwearing, ſcorning,
'and backebiting, to praiſe God in the fellowſhip of Saints.
'For loving is not comynlych in mouthes of ſinners. For 'in the which gift thou haddeſt kept thy mouth cleane, thou
'ſhouldeſt have fonged in fellowſhip of Angels this bleſſed
'ſong; Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus, Dominus Deus omnipo-

'Woe, Woe, Woe, How great beth theſe darkneſs? Wo
'alſo for ſinne of deede. Thou haſt bene proud, thy pride
'ſhall be drawne to Hell, as Eſay ſaith, or thou haſt bene
'brent with envie of the Devil. Envie entred into the 'world, and they ſhoulden followen him that ben on his
'ſide, as Salomon ſaith. Or thou haſt beſtirred with wrath,
'and everich man that beareth wrath to his brethren is
'guilty in doome, as Chriſt in the Goſpel ſaith of Mat-
'thew. Or thou be flow to good deedes, myſſawe ſhall
'come to thee as a wayfaring man, and thy poverty as a
'man armed, as the Book of Proverbes ſaith. Or thou
'haſt haunted lechery, gluttony, or covetiſe. That for-
'ſooth were ye, that everich avouterer, or uncleane man,
'that is a glutton, other chynch, ſhall never have Heritage
'in the Realm of Chriſt and of God, as Paul ſaith. But
'Fire, Brimſtone, and the Spirit of Tempeſtes, that is,
'the Fiend of Hell, ſhulen be a partie of their paine, as it
'is written in the Pſaulter, when theſe Damned men ben in
'this woe, they ſhulen ſing this uſeful Song that is ywrit-
'ten in the Book of Mourning: The joy of our heart is a
'go: our quiet is tumed into woe, the Crowne of our Note.
'head is fallen us fro. Alas for ſinne that we have do.
'But joy and joy, and joy to them that be ſaved. Joy in 'God, joy in himſelf, joy in other that ben ſaved. Alſo
'joy for their travel is brought to ſo gracious an end. Joy,
'for they ſcape the pain of Hell; Joy, for their bliſs that Concluſion.
'they han in the ſight of God, Cui ſit honor & gloria, in
'ſecula ſeculorum, Amen.

And thus much concerning this worthy and fruitful Sermon, which as by the ancientneſs of the phraſe ſeemeth to be Preached much about the time of John Wickliff's, ſo I thought here, by occaſion of William Thorpe's examination, beſt to place the ſame, for the apt coherence both of the ſpirit, and of the matter. Eſpecially having before our eyes, the publick utility of the Reader, to whom, by the ſtudious reading thereof, might riſe plentiful matter of true Chriſtian information, both of the wholeſome fearing of God, and of the right guiding of every Chriſtian mans life.

Which I thought good to annex further in our ſtory, after the examination of William Thorp, and the Martyrdom of William Sawtrey, and of John Badby thus deſcribed (as ye have heard) which was about the year 1409. By the way here is to be conſidered, at leaſt to be admoniſhed, that all this while the ſchiſm in the Church of Rome did yet continue, and ſo indured till the Council of Conſtance, which was in whole, the ſpace of twenty and nine years. The origine whereof (as was ſaid before) firſt began at Urbanus the Fifth; which Urbanus being dead, An. 1389. next followed Pope Boniface the Ninth, who fate fourteen years. He in ſelling his pardons was ſo impudent and ſo paſt ſhame, that he brought the Keys of Peter (as ſaith Platina) in contempt. After him ſucceeded Innocentius the Seventh, and fate two years: who being dead, the Cardinals conſulting together, and ſeeing the foul enormity and inconvenience growing upon this contentious ſchiſm in their Church of Rome (minding to provide ſome remedy for the ſame, after the beſt device they could) in their conclave where they were aſſembled for a new election for the Pope, took this order, promiſing among themſelves with ſolemn Vow made to God, to Mary the Bleſſed Virgin, to Peter and Paul, and to all the bleſſed company of Saints; That if any of them, within the College or without the College, ſhould be called to the high place of Apoſtolical Preeminence; he ſhould effectuouſly renounce the juriſdiction and title of his Popedom, if or whenſoever the contrary Pope for the time being would in like many renounce his place and title, and his Cardinals in the like manner condeſcend to the other Cardinals of Rome. So that both theſe two Colleges of Cardinals agreeing together, one chief Biſhop might be choſe and taken out of them both, to be made the true Pope. Provided moreover, that none ſhould ſeek any releaſment or abſolution from the ſaid promiſe, vow and bond, once paſſed among them; Unto all which things furthermore every one subscribed with his hand. These things thus prefixed and ratified upon the same, they proceeded to the Election. In which was chosen Gregorius the Twelfth, who the same day of his election, in the presence of all the Cardinals confirmed the Vow, Sacrament, and Promise made, subscribing the same with his hand in form as followeth. And I Gregory, this day being the last of November, in the year of our Lord, 1407. chosen and elected for Bishop of Rome, do swear, vow, and promise, and confirm all the premisses above contained, &c. This being done, shortly after he was crowned, being of the age of 80 years. As the time thus passed, the people and Cardinals were in great expectation, waiting when the Pope, according to his Oath, would give over, with the other Pope also. And not long after, the matter began indeed between the two Popes to be attempted, by Letters from one to another; affigning both day and place, where and when they should meet together; but yet no effect did follow.

The Oath and Vow of Pope Gregory the 12th.

Ex Chron. D. Albani.

This so passing on, great murmuring was among the Cardinals, to see their holy perjured Father so to neglect his Oath and Vow aforenamed. Insomuch that at length, divers of them did forsake the Pope, as being perjured (as no less he was) sending moreover to Kings and Princes of other Lands, for their counsel and assistance therein, to appease the Schism. Amongst the rest, Cardinal Bituriensis was sent to the King of England; who published divers Propositions and Conclusions (remaining in the Registers of Thomas Arundel) disputeth, that the Pope ought to be subject to Laws and Councils. Then King Henry (moved to write to Gregory the Pope) directeth his Letter here under-ensuing, which was the year of our Lord, 1409. The contents of the Letter be these.

The Pope fully perjured. Cardinals leave the perjured Pope.

The Letter of King Henry the Fourth to Pope Gregory the Twelfth.

King Henry the Fourth to Pope Gregory the Twelfth. Two hundred thousand slain by Schism of Rome. Thirty thousand slain in Camp fighting for the Bishoprick of Leodium.

MOst blessed Father, if the discreet Providence of the Apostolical See, would call to mind with what great perils the universal World hath been dammified hitherto under pretence of this present Schism; and especially would consider, what slaughter of Christian people to the number of two hundred thousand (as they say) hath been through occasion of War raised up in divers quarters of the World; and now of late, to the number of thirty thousand Souldiers, which have been slain through the dissention moved about the Bishoprick of Leodium between two set up, one by the Authority of one Pope, the other by the Authority of the other Pope, fighting in Camp for the Title of that Bishoprick. Certes ye would lament in spirit and be sore grieved in mind for the same. So that with good conscience ye would relinquish rather the honour of the See Apostolick, than suffer such horrible bloodshed hereafter to ensue, under the cloke of dissimulation, following herein the example of the true Mother in the Book of Kings: who pleading before Solomon for the right of her Child, rather would depart from the Child, than the Child should be parted by the Sword. And although it may be vehemently suspected by the new Creation of nine Cardinals, by your last made, contrary to your Oath (as other men do say) that you do but little heed or care for ceasing the Schism; Yet far be it from the hearing and noting of the World, that your circumspect Seat should ever be noted and distained with such an inconstancy of mind; whereby the last error may be worse than the first. Ex Chron. D. Albani, Part the second.

King Henry the Fourth to the Cardinals.

King Henry the Fourth to the Cardinals.

AND to the Cardinals likewise, the said King directeth another Letter with these Contents here following: We desiring to shew what Zeal we have had and have, to the reformation of peace of the Church; by the consent of the States of the Realm, have directed to the Bishop of Rome our Letters after the tenour of the Copy herewith in these presents inclosed to be executed effectually: wherefore we seriously beseech your reverend Colledge, That if it chance the said Gregory to be present at the Council of Pise, and to render up his Popedom, according to your desire, and his own Oath; you then so Ordain for his state totally, that chiefly God may be pleased thereby, and that both the said Gregory and also we which entirely love his honour and commodity, may have cause to give you worthily condign thanks for the same. Ibid.

{KING Hen. 4.}

This being done in the year of our Lord, 1409. afterward in the year next following, Anno 1410. the Cardinals of both the Popes, to wit, of Gregorius and Benedictus, by common advice assembled together at the City of Pise, for the reformation of Unity and Peace in the Church. To the which Assembly, a great multitude of Prelates and Bishops being convented, a new Pope was chosen, named Alexander the Fifth. But to this Election, neither Gregorius nor Benedictus did fully agree. Whereby there were three Popes together in the Roman Church (that is to understand) not three Crowns upon one Popes head, but three Heads in one Popish Church together. This Alexander, being newly made Pope, scarcely had well warmed his triple-Crown, but straight giveth out full remission, not of a few, but all manner of sins whatsoever, to all them that conserred any thing to the Monastery of S. Bartholomew by Smithfield, reforting to the said Church any of these days following; to wit, on Maundy-Thursday, Good-Friday, Easter even, the Feast of the Annunciation, from the first Even-song to the later. But this Pope, which was so liberal in giving remission of many years to other, was not able to give one year of life to himself, for within the same year he died. In whose stead stept up Pope John 23.

In the time of this Alexander great stir began in the Country of Bohemia, by the occasion of the Books of John Wickliff, which then coming to the hands of John Hus, and of other both men and women, especially of the Lay sort, and Artificers, began there to do much good. Insomuch, that divers of them not only men, but women also, partly by the reading of their Books translated into their Tongue, partly by the setting forward of John Hus, a notable learned man, and a singular Preacher at that time in the University of Prague, were in short time so ripe in judgment, and prompt in the Scriptures, that they began to move questions, yea and to reason with the Priests, touching matters of the holy Scriptures.

The pride and glory of the Clergy of Bohemia in their days.

By reason whereof, complaint was brought to the said Pope Alexander the Fifth, who caused estsoons the forenamed John Hus to be cited up to Rome. But when he came not at the Popes citation, then the said Pope Alexander addressed his Letters to the Archbishop of Swinco. Wherein he straitly charged him to prohibite and forbid, by the Authority Apostolical, all manner of Preachings or Sermons to be made to the people, but only in Cathedral Churches or Colledges, or Parish-Churches, or in Monasteries, or else in their Church-yards. And that the Articles of Wickliff should in no case of any person, of what state, condition, or degree soever, be suffered to be holden, taught, or defended, either privily or apertly. Commanding moreover and charging the said Archbishop, that he with four Bachelors of Divinity, and two Doctors of the Canon-Law joyned unto him, would proceed upon the same, and so provide that no person in Churches, Schools, or any other place, should teach, defend, or approve any of the aforesaid Articles. So that whosoever should attempt the contrary, should be accounted an Heretick, and unless he shall revoke solemnly and publickly the said Articles, and shall for ever abjure the Books wherein the foresaid Articles be contained, so that they may be utterly abolished out from the eyes of the faithful; the same should be apprehended and imprisoned, all appellation set apart, the help also of the secular Arm being called thereunto; if need shall require, &c. These were the contents of this mighty and fierce Bull of Pope Alexander.

The Popes cruel Bull against John Hus.

Against the which Bull on the other side John Hus, justly complaining, excepteth again and objecteth many things, as appeareth in his Book, intituled, De Ecclesia, cap. 18. Where he declareth this Mandate of the Pope to stand directly against the doings and sayings both of Christ and of his Apostles; considering how Christ himself preached to the people, both in the Sea, in the Desert, in Fields, in Churches, in Synagogues, in Villages; And the Apostles also in all places did the same, the Lord mightily working with them. He declared moreover, the said Mandate or Bull of the Pope to redound unto the great detriment of the Church

The notable Judgment of God in striking the Adversaries of the Gospel.

Church, in binding the Word of God, that it might not have his free passage. Also, the same to be prejudicial unto Chappels newly erected for the Word to be preached in them. Wherefore (saith he) from this Commandment or Mandate of Pope Alexander, I did appeal unto the said Alexander being better informed and advised. And as I was prosecuting my Appeal, the Lord Pope (saith John Hus) immediately died.

Then the Archbishop of Swinco aforesaid, to whom this present Bull was directed, when he saw the Process, Bulls and Mandates of the Bishop of Rome to be thus contemned of John Hus and his Fellows, neither having any hope of redress in Winceslaus the King, which seemed to neglect the matter, went out of his Country into Hungary, to complain unto Sigismund King of Hungary, and Brother to the said Winceslaus. But this quarrelling Archbishop, whether before (as the Bohemians say) or after (as Silvius saith) that he had spoken with Sigismund; immediately there (by the just Judgment of God) died in Hungary, as the story saith, for sorrow. Whereby a little more liberty and quiet was given by the Lord unto his Gospel, newly beginning to take root among the Bohemians. Albeit, this tranquility there did not long continue without trouble and persecution, neither could it in those furious days and Reign of Antichrist. For after this Alexander succeeded Pope John the 23. Who, likewise playing his part in this Tragedy, bent all his might and main to disturb the Bohemians, as more hereafter (Christ willing) shall be declared in further process of our History, coming to the year of our Lord, 1413.

The Gospel seldom rises long quiet.

Pope John 23.

Thus the poor Christians (as ye see) like to the silly Israelites under the tyranny of Pharaoh, were infested and oppressed in every place, but especially here in England, and that so much the more here, because that the King, not like to Winceslaus, went full and whole with the Pope and his Prelates against the Gospellers.

By reason whereof the Kingdom of the Pope and his Members here in this Realm began to be so strong, that none durst stir or once mute against them. The Bishops having the King so full on their side, armed moreover with Laws, Statutes, Punishments, Sword, Fire, and Fagot, reigned and ruled as they listed, as Kings and Princes within themselves. So strong were they of Power, that no humane Force was able to stand against them: so exalted in Pride, and puft up in Glory, that they thought all things to be subject to their reverend Majesties. Whatsoever they set forth or decreed, it must of all men be received and obeyed.

And such was their superstitious blindness and curious vanity, that whatsoever toy came once in their fantasie; it was straightways determined and stablished for a Law of all men to be observed, were it never so frivolous or superstitious; as well appeareth by Thomas Arundel Archbishop of Canterbury and other, who having now a little leisure from slaying and killing the innocent people, Martyrs and Confessors of the Lord, and having now brought their Enemies (as they thought) under feet; began to set up themselves, and to invent new custom, as the guise is of the Popes Church, ever to intrude into the Church of God some ceremony or custom of their own making, whereby the Church of Christ hath been hitherto exceedingly perfred. So likewise this Thomas Arundel, thinking the Church yet not sufficiently stuffed with Ceremonies and vain Traditions of men, bringeth in a new-found Gaud, commonly called The tolling of Aves, in honour of our Lady, with certain Aves to be said, and days of pardon to be given for the same. For the ratification whereof, under the pretence of the Kings request, he directed his Mandate to the Bishop of London, well stuffed with words of Idolatry, as by the reading thereof may appear, in form of terms as followeth.

Forty days of pardon given by 7. several Archbishops.

A Mandate of Thomas Arundel, directed to the Bishop of London, to warn men to say certain Prayers at the tolling of the Aves, or ringing of Curphew.

THomas, &c. To the right reverend Brother, the Lord Robert, by the Grace of God Bishop of London, greeting, &c. While we left our eyes round about us, and behold attentively with circumspect consideration, how the most high Word that was in the beginning with God, chose to him an holy and immaculate Virgin of the Kingly Stock, in whose womb he took true flesh by inspiral inspiration, that the merciful goodness of the Son of God, that was uncreate, might abolish the sentence of condemnation, which all the Posterity of Mankind, that was created, had by sin incurred: Amongst other Labours in the Vine of the Lord of Sabbath, we sung to God our Saviour with great joy in him, carefully thinking, that though all the people of the Christian Religion did extol with voices of praises so worthy a Virgin, by whom we received the beginnings of our Redemption, by whom the holy day first shined to us, which gave us hope of Salvation; And although all the same people were drawn to reverence her, which being a happy Virgin, conceived the Son of God, the King of Heaven, the Redeemer and Saviour of all Nations, mimifring light to the people that were miserably drowned in the darkness of death: We truly as the Servants of her own Inheritance, and such as are written of, to be of her peculiar Dower, as we are by every mans confession acknowledged to be, we I say ought more watchfully than any others to shew the endeawours of our devotion in praising her Who being hitherto merciful to us, yea being even Coward, would that our power, being as it were spread abroad every where through all the coasts of the World, should with a victorious Arm fear all foreign Nations; That our power, being on all sides so defended with the Buckler of her Protection, did subdue unto our victorious Standards, and made subject unto us, Nations both near at hand and far off.

Ringing of Curphew.

If this be not blasphemous and derogatory to Christ, let the Reader judge.

*Like wise our happy estate (all the time that we have passed since the beginning of our lives) may be well attributed only to the help of her Mediance; to whom also we may worthily ascribe now of late in these our times, under the mighty Government of our most Christian King, our deliverance from the ravening Wolves, and the mouths of cruel Beasts, which had prepared against our Banquets a mess of meat mingled full of gall, and hated us unjustly, secretly lying in wait for us, in recompence of the good will that we shewed to them. Wherefore, that he being on high sitting before the Throne of the heavenly Majesty, the Defendress and Patroness of us all, being magnified with all mens praises, may more plentifully exhibit to us the Sons of Adoption the treats of her * Grace, in all those things that we shall have to do; As the request of the special devotion of our Lord the King himself, we command your Brotherhood, straitly enjoyning you, that you commend the Subjects of your City and Diocese, and of all your Suffragans, to worship our Lady Mary the Mother of God, and our † Patroness and Protectress, evermore in all adversity, with such like kind of prayer and accustomed manner of ringing, as the devotion of Christs faithful people is went to worship her at the ringing of Coure le feu. And when before day in the morning ye shall cause them to ring, that with like manner of prayer and ringing she be every where honoured devoutly by the aforesaid our and your Suffragans, and their Subjects as well religious as secular, in your and their Monasteries and Collegiate-Churches: That we so humbly calling upon the mercy of the heavenly Father, she right hand of the heavenly Piety, may mercifully come to the help, the protection and defence of the same our Lord the King, who for the happy remedy of quietness, and for our succour from tempestuous Floods, is ready to apply his hands to work, and his eyes with all his whole desire to watching. We therefore coveting more earnestly to stir up the minds of all faithful people to so devout an exercise of God, &c. Heaping up Ceremonies in the Church.

By this frivolous and barbarous Constitution, with many other of like sort heaped into the Church by the Papists, appeareth the proper natures and condition of this Catholick Generation. Who being themselves not greatly exercised nor experienced in any serious cogitation of spiritual matter (as seemeth) take upon them to govern the Spiritual Church of Christ, whereof indeed they have no skill or very little. And therefore according to their unskilful handling, they lead and rule the Church after such outward sights and ceremonies, seemly perhaps to their own gross affection; but not agreeing (nay rather clean contrary) to the right nature and condition of the Spiritual House and Kingdom of the Lord. And like as in their inventions they swerve utterly from the right handling of all Spiritual Government; so in their manners and form of life likewise they do resemble little or no part almost of such as are and ought to be true Pastors and Ministers of the Mystical Body of Christ.

Examples hereof are plenty and plain, in these Roman Prelates to be noted; who so well considering the humble state and lowly spirit which ought to be in Pastoral Leaders of the Church, will compare the same with the usual pomp of these glorious Potestates.

The pomp of the Popes Church noted.

As for example, what can be more convenient for a true Pastor Ecclesiastical, than humility of heart and spirit, according to the example of the Head-Bishop himself? So what greater shew of Arrogancy and Pride could there be, than in this, whom I have oft named before, Thomas Arundel Archbishop of Canterbury? who, passing by the high street of London, did not only look and wait for the ringing of the Bells, for a triumph of his coming, but took great snuff, and did suspend all such Churches in London (not only with the Steeple and Bells, but also with the Organs) so many as did not receive his coming with the noise of Bells, according as out of his own Registers may appear; the word whereof annexed to his own Somner, I have hereto annexed in his own form, as followeth.

A Commission directed to the Somner, to suspend certain Churches of London, becaufe they rung not their Bells at the presence of my Lord the Archbishop of Canterbury.

THomas by the permission of God, &c. To our well-beloved Thomas Wilton, our Somner sworn, health, grace, and blessing. The comeliness of our holy Church of Canterbury, over which we bear Rule, deserveth and requireth, that while we pass through the Province of the same our Church (having our Cross carried before us) every Parish-Church in their turns ought and are bounden, in token of special reverence that they bear to us, to ring their Bells. Which notwithstanding, yea on Tuesday last past, when we, betwixt eight and nine of the Clock before Dinner, passed openly on foot as it were through the midst of the City of London, with our Cross carried before us: divers Churches, whose names are here beneath noted, shewed towards us willingly (though they certainly knew of our coming) unreverence rather than reverence, and the duty that they owe to our Church of Canterbury, ringing not at all at our coming. Wherefore we being willing to revenge this injury, for the honour of our Spouse, as we are bounden, command you, that by our authority you put all those Churches under our Inditement, suspending Gods holy Organs and Instruments in the same. Which we also suspend by the tenour of these presents, till the Ministers of the aforesaid Churches be able hereafter to attain of us the benefit of more plentiful Grace. Given, &c.

Churches of London fuspended for not ringing at the coming of the Archbishop.

* Obſerve this emptineſs to Chriſt his humility.

What great reason was in this, why this Archbishop either should thus look for the ringing of the Bells, or why he should be thus displeased with not ringing, I do not see. Be-like his mind in the mean time was greatly occupied with some great muse, as feeling of Gods fear, with repentance and remembrance of his sins, with zealous care and solicitude for his Flock, with the earnest meditation of the Passion and Life of our Saviour, who in this World was so despised: or else was set upon some grave study, while he so waited for the ringing of the Bells, which were wont to be so noisome to all Students. And why were not the Trumpeters also there as well, because they did not found before his Person? But though the Bells did not clatter in the Steeples, and therefore his Thunderbolt should have fallen upon the Steeples which had deserved; why should the body of the Church therefore be suspended? At least, the poor Organs (me thinketh) had some part of wrong to be put to silence in the Quire, because the Bells range not in the Tower.

Organs ſuſpended in the Church, becauſe the Bells did not ring.

Of the like matter also we read in the said Registers, falling between the Bishop of Worcester, and the Priory of the same Town, for not ringing at the Bishops coming into the Church. Whereupon much suit and contention was between them, till at length the Archbishop of Canterbury took up the matter, moderating it, as in the said Registers, fol. 441. appeareth to be seen as followeth:

Ex Regiſtro Tho. Arundell.

Variance between the Biſhop and Prior of Worceſter for not ringing at the Biſhops coming.

UNiversis, &c. Thomas, &c. Whereas there happened variance lately between our reverend Brother the Lord Bishop of Worcester on the one party, and the religious and discreet men the Prior and Covent of the same Church on the other party, for not ringing of Bells at the coming of our said Brother to his foresaid Church, at length the parties (considering the great inconvenience that might come thereof) at our instance and request did agree on this manner, that as often as it shall happen our reverend Brother to go to his aforesaid Church, either to celebrate Orders, or to visit his Church in the Head or in the Inferiors, or to make Cream and Oil in the same Church: Also in the Feast of the Assumption of the blessed Virgin Mary, which is the chiefest Feast in the Abbey aforesaid; then the Prior and the Covent, and their Successors for the time being, shall ring solemnly against his coming, or shall cause to be rung solemnly without all contradiction, or any reclaiming hereafter to be made against the same. Which agreement that it may be more firmely kept, we let you all understand by these presents, sealed with our Seal. Given at our Palace of Canterbury, July 12. the tenth year of our Government.

The like stir for Bell-ringing and for Processions, had almost happened between the Archbishop of Canterbury, Succeffor to this Thomas Arundel, named Henry Chichley on the one party, and the Abbey of S. Albans on the other party, had not the Abbot, in time submitting himself to the Archbishop, so provided, that the ringing of their Bells at his coming might not redound to any derogation of their Liberties. Whereunto the Archbishop granted by these his Letters as followeth:

Ex Regiſt. Hen Chicheley, fol. 365.

HEnry, &c. to the religious men, the Abbot and Covent of the Monastery of S. Albans in the Diocess of Lincoln, health, &c. When as of late there happened a matter of variance between us, and you the Abbot and Covent, by reason of not giving reverence to us, being due to our Province of Canterbury; that is, for not ringing the Bells, and meeting us with Processions when we passed by divers places of our Province, as well due of common custom, as of old use, and for the Prerogative of the Church of Canterbury, as also being due of every one being within the compass of this our said Province, when and as often as we shall pass by their places; at length your Lord Abbot (coming personally to us) did grant both for you and the Covent aforesaid, to do and to give of your gentleness all reverence and honour, with such reverence both to us and our Church of Canterbury, as often as we pass by your Monastery, or the places nigh or adjoyning thereto, or shall hereafter go by; so that it might not be prejudicial to your exemption, and nothing be attempted to the violating of your priviledge; and that it might not be challenged for duty hereafter. Wherefore we, desiring to keep you from damage, let you understand by these presents, that it is not our intent to derogate your exemptions or priviledge whatsoever herein; nor nor by any means to be prejudicial to you by these your reverences or other duties, whatsoever you have or shall grant to us of your devotion and liberality, both by you, and in places under your Dominion. In witness whereof, &c. Dated the 28*th* day of January, 1425. at S. Albans, the twelfth year of our Government.

To express moreover and describe the glorious pomp of these Prince-like Prelates in these blind days of Popish Religion reigning then in the Church, I thought to adjoyn hereunto another example not much unlike, neither differing much in time, concerning certain poor men cited up, and injoyned strait penance by William Courtney Predecessor of the said Thomas Arundel, for bringing litter to his Horse, not in Wains as they should do, but in privy sacks, in a secret manner under their Clokes or Coats. For the which so hainous and horrible Trespass, the said Archbishop sitting in his Tribunal-Seat, did call and cite before him the said persons (pro litera, i.e. for litter, after his own Latin) and after their submission injoyned them penance. Which penance what it was, and what were the names of the foresaid Parties, here followeth out of the said Archbishops Registers, both by his own words, and by picture of the persons in the same Registers annexed and painted, in all resemblance, as there standeth, and here is also to be seen.

IGnorance the mother of Error, so much hath blinded and deceived certain persons, to wit, Hugh Pennie, John Forstall, John Boy, John Wanderton, William Heyward, and John White, Tenants of the Lord of Wengham, that against the coming of the foresaid Archbishop to his Palace of Canterbury on Palmer-Sunday even, the year of our Lord, 1390. where they being warned by the Bayliff, to convey and carry Hay, Straw, and other litter to the aforesaid Palace, as they were bound by the tenour of their Lands, which they hold of the See of Canterbury; refuling and disdaining to do their service, as they were accuftomed, brought their straw and other litter, not in Carts and Wains openly and sufficiently, but by piece-meal, and closely in bags or sacks, in contempt of their Lord, and derogation of the Right and Title of the See of Canterbury. Whereupon they being accited and presented before the Archbishop, sitting in Judgment at his Mannor of Statewood, yielded and submitted themselves to his Lordships pleasure, humbly craving pardon of their Trespass. Then the aforesaid Archbishop absolved the above named Hugh Pennie, &c. they swearing to obey the Laws and Ordinances of holy Church, and to do the punishment that should be appointed them for their deserts; that is, that they going leisurely before the procession, every one of them should carry openly on his shoulder his bag stuffed with hay and straw; so that the faid hay and straw should appear hanging out, the mouthes of the Sacks being open.

Penance for ſuyned for bringing ſtraw to my Lords horſe.

Note

Notes of certain Parliament matters passed in this Kings days.

Notes of this Kings Parliament.

TO proceed now further in the Reign of this King, and to intreat also something of his Parliaments as we have done of other before. First, we will begin with the Parliament holden in the first year of his coming in.

Moreover, forsomuch as our Catholick Papists will not believe yet the contrary, but that the Jurisdiction of their Father the Pope hath ever extended throughout all the World, as well here in England, as in other places; Here therefore speaking of the Parliaments holden in this Kings days concerning this matter, I refer them to the Parliament of the said King Henry in his first year holden, and to the 27th Article of the same. Where they may read in the tenth Objection laid against King Richard in plain words, how that, forasmuch as the Crown of this Realm of England, and the Jurisdiction belonging to the same; as also the whole Realm it self, at all times lately past, hath been at such liberty, and injoyed such Prerogative, that neither the Pope, nor any other out of the same Kingdom, ought to intrude himself nor intermeddle therein; it was therefore objected unto the forenamed King Richard the Second, for procuring the Letters Apostolical from the Pope, to the confirming and corroborating of certain Statutes of his, and that his Censures might be profecuted against the Breakers thereof. Which seemed then to the Parliament to tend against the Crown and Regal Dignity, as also against the Statutes and Liberties of this the said our Realm of England, Vide Parl. An. 1. Reg. Henr. 4. Act. 27.

The Popes Jurisdiction excluded out of this Realm.

Ex an. 1. Reg. Henrici, Act. 27.

Furthermore, in the second year of the said King, this was in the Parliament required, that all such Persons as shall be arrested by force of the Statute made against the Lollards, in the second year of Henry the Fourth, may be bailed, and freely make their purgation; that they be arrested by none other than by the Sheriffs, or such like Officers, neither that any havock be made of their goods. The King granted to their advice therein.

An. 8 Reg. Henr. 4. Act. 116.

In the eighth year moreover of this Kings Reign, it was likewise propounded in the Parliament, that all such persons as shall procure, or sue in the Court of Rome any Process touching any Benefice, Collation, or Presentation of the same, shall incur the pain of the Statute of Provisors, made in the thirteenth year of Richard the Second, whereunto the King granted, that the Statutes heretofore provided should be observed.

An. 8. R. Henr. 4. Act. 114.

Item, in the said Parliament, there it was put up by Petition, that the King might enjoy half the profits of every Parsons Benence who is not resident thereon. Thereunto the King answered, That the Ordinaries should do their duties therein, or else he would provide farther remedy to stay their Pluralities.

Ibid. Act. 37.

Item, in the said Parliament it was required; that none do sue to the Court of Rome for any Benefice, but only to the Kings Courts.

¶ In the next year following, which was the ninth of this King, another Petition of the Commons was put in Parliament against the Court of Rome, which I thought good here to express, as followeth:

The Commons do beseech, that forasmuch as divers Provisors of the Benefices of holy Church, dwelling in the Court of Rome, through their singular covetousness now newly imagined to destroy those that have been long time Incumbents in divers their Benefices of holy Church peaceably, some of them by the Title of the King, some by Title ordinary, and by the Title of other true Patrons thereof, by colour of Provisions, Relations, and other Grants made to the same Provisors by the Apostoil of the said Benefices, do pursue Processes in the said Court by Citations made beyond the Sea, without any Citations made within the Realm in deed against the same Incumbents, whereby many of the said Incumbents, through such privy and crafty Processes and Sentences of privation and inhabilitation, have lost their Benefices, and others put in the places of the said Incumbents, before the publication of the same sentences, they not knowing any thing; and many are in great hazard to lose their Benefices through such Processes, to their perpetual destruction and mischief; And forasmuch as this mischief cannot be holpen without my especial remedy be had by Parliament: Pleaseth it the King to consider the great mischief and danger that may so come unto divers his Subjects without their knowledge, through such Citations out of the Realm, and thereupon to ordain by the advice of the Lords of this present Parliament, that none presented be received by any Ordinary unto any Benefice of any such Incumbent for any cause of privation or inhabilitation, wherof the Process is not founded upon Citation made within the Realm, and also that such Incumbents may remain in all their Benefices, until it be proved by due Inquest in the Court of the King, that the Citations, whereupon such privations and inhabilitations are granted, were made within the Realm: and that if such Ordinaries, or such presented, or others, do pursue the contrary, that then they and their Procurators, Fautors, and Counsellors, do incur the pains contained in the Statute made against Provisors in the thirteenth year of the Reign of the late Richard King of England the Second, by Process to be made, as is declared in the Statute made against such Provisors in the 27th year of the Reign of King Edward. Predecessor to our Lord the King that now is, any Royal Licences or Grants in any manner to the contrary notwithstanding; and that all other Statutes made against Provisors, and not repealed before this present Parliament, be in their full force, and be firmly kept in all points.

Ex Rotulo Parliamenti, an. 9 Hen. 4.

The wickedness of Popes Provisors inciting and depriving believed men in England, their citation being not known in the Realm.

That the Kings Council have Power by Authority of Parliament, in case that any man find himself grieved in particular, that he may pursue: and that the said Council by the advice of the Justices, do right unto the Parties. This to endure until the next Parliament, reserving always unto the King his Prerogative and Liberty.

Item, that no Popes Collector thenceforth should levy any money within the Realm for First-fruits of any Ecclesiastical Dignity, under pain of incurring the Statute of Provisions.

An. 9. Reg. Henr. 4. Act. 42.

Besides in the said Parliament holden the eleventh year of this King, is to be noted how the Commons of the land put up a Bill unto the King, to take the Temporal Lands out from Spiritual mens hands or possession. The effect of which Bill was, that the Temporalties disordinately waffed by men of the Church, might suffice to find to the King 15 Earls, 1500 Knights, 6200 Esquires, and a 100 houses of Almose, to the relief of the poor people, more than at those days within England. And over all these forefaid charges, the King might put yearly in his Coffers 20000 pound.

Ex Chron. D. Albin. Walsin. & alijs.

Provided, that every Earl should have of yearly rent three thousand mark; and every Knight a hundred mark and four plough-lands; every Esquire forty mark by year, with two plough-lands; and every house of Almose a hundred mark, with overplight of two true Seculars unto every house, and also with provision, that every Township should keep all poor people of their own dwellers, which might not labour for their living; with condition that if more fell in a Town than the Town might maintain, then the said Almose-houses to relieve such Townships.

A computation of Church-goods, to how much they do amount.

And to bear these Charges, they alledged by their said Bill, That the Temporalties, being in possession of Spiritual Churchmen, amounted to 3 C. and 22 M. mark by year. Whereof they affirmed to be in the See of Canterbury, with the Abbies of Christs Church, of S. Augustines, Shrewsbury, Coggeshale, and S. Osms, 20 M. mark by year. In the See of York and Abbies there 20 M. mark. In the See of Winchester and Abbies there 20 M. mark. In the See of London, with Abbies and other Houses there 20 M. mark. In the See of Lincoln, with the Abbies of Peterborough, Ramsey, and other, 20 M. mark. In the See of Norwich, with the Abbies of Bury, and other, 20 M. mark. In the See of Ely, Spalding and other, 20 M. mark. In the See of Bathe, with the Abbey of Okinborne and other, 20 M. mark. In the See of Worcester, with the Abbies of Evesham, Abingdon, and other, 20 M. mark. In the See of Chester, with the Precinct of the same, with the Sees of S. David, of Salesbury, and Exeter, with their precincts, 20 M. mark, The Abbies of Ravens or Revans, of Fountains, of Germons, and divers other, to the number of five more, 20 M. mark. The Abbies of Leicester, Waltham, Gosborne, Merton, Ticeter, Osney, and other, unto the number of six more, 20 M. mark. The Abbies of Dovers, Batil, Lewis, Coventry, Daventre, and Tourney, 20 M. mark. The Abbies of Northampton, Thorton, Bristow, Killingworth, Winchcomb, Hailes, Parchissor, Fridesswide, Notly, and Grimoisby, 20 M. mark.

{KING Hen. 5.}

The which forefaid Sums amount to the full of 3 C. M. mark. And for the odd of 22 M. mark, they appointed Hardford, Rochester, Huntingdon, Swinshed, Crowland, Malmesbury, Burton, Tewkesbury, Dunstable, Whirborn, Taunton, and Biland.

And over this, they alledged by the said Bill, that over and above the said sum of 3 C. and 22 M. mark, divers Houses of Religion in England possessed as many Temporalties as might suffice to find yearly 15 M. Priests and Clerks, every Priest to be allowed for his stipend 7 mark by the year.

To the which Bill no answer was made, but that the King of this matter would take deliberation and advisement, and with that answer ended, so that no further labour was made.

{Anno 1413.}

These things thus hitherto discoursed, touching such acts and matters as have been incident in the life time of this King, followeth next the thirteenth year of his Reign. In the which year the said King Henry the Fourth after he had sent a little before a certain company of Captains and Souldiers to aid the Duke of Burgundy in France (among whom was the Lord Cobham) keeping his Christmas at Eltham, fell grievously sick. From thence he was conveyed to London, where he began to call a Parliament, but tarried not the end. In the mean time, the infirmity of the King more and more increasing, he was taken and brought into a Bed in a fair Chamber at Westminster. And as he lay in his bed, he asked how they called the same Chamber; and they answered and said, Jerusalem. And then he said it was his Prophetie, That he should make his end in Jerusalem. And so disposing himself toward his end in the forefaid Chamber, he died; upon what sickness, whether of Leprosie, or of some other sharp Disease, I have not to affirm. Ex vetust. Chron. Anglicanis initium: That all men called.

The King had a Prophesie, that he should die in Jerusalem. Prophesies dentifable.

The like Prophetie we read of Pope Silvester the Second, to whom being inquisitive for the time and place where he should die, it was answered, That he should die in Jerusalem. Who then saying Mass in a Chappel (called likewise Jerusalem) perceived his end there to be near, and died. And thus King Henry the Fourth, Successor to the lawful King Richard the Second, finished his life at Westminster, and was buried at Canterbury by the Tomb of Thomas Becket, &c. Anno 1413.

Ex vetust. Chron. Anglicanis, qui incipiunt ab Eth. That all men called The Prophesie of Pope Silvester the Second.

King Henry the Fifth.

King Henry the Fifth.

AFter this Henry the Fourth reigned Henry the Fifth his Son, which was born at Monmouth in Wales, of whose other Vertues, and great Victories gotten in France, I have not greatly to intermeddle; especially seeing the memory of his worthy Prowess, being sufficiently described in other Writers in this our time, may both content the Reader, and unburden my labour herein; especially seeing these later Troubles and Perturbations of the Church offer me so much, that unneth any vacant leisure shall be left to intermeddle with matters prophane.

Great temptation at the Coronation of the new King.

After the Coronation then of this new King; which was the ninth day of April, called then Passion-Sunday, which was an exceeding stormy-day, and so tempestuous, that many did wonder at the portent thereof: not long after the same, a Parliament began to be called, and to be holden after the Feast of Easter, at Westminster. Anno 1413. At which time Thomas Arundel the Archbishop of Canterbury collected in Pauls Church at London an universal Synod of all the Bishops and Clergy of England. In that Synod, among other weighty matters and ponderous, it was determined; that the day of Saint George, and also of Saint Dunstan, should be double Feast, called Duplex Festum, in holy Kitchin, in holy Church I would say.

A Synod called at London, 8. Georgii and S. Dunstani, made double Feast.

And because the order and manner of those Pope-holy Feasts either yet is not sufficiently known to some rude and gross capacities, or may peradventure grow out of use, and be strange and unknown to our Posterity hereafter; therefore to give a little memorandum thereof (by the way for erudition of times hereafter to come) touching this mystical Science of the Popes deep and secret Divinity; here is to be noted, that the Feasts of the holy Mother Catholick-Church be divided into sundry members. Like as a plentiful Root in a fruitful Field riseth up and burgeneth into manifold Arms, and the Arms again do multiply into divers and sundry Branches, out of the which moreover, although no Fruit do come, yet both Leaves and Flowers do bud and blossom in most copious wise, right beautiful to behold; Even so this Festum, containing a large matter of great variety of Days and Feasts, groweth in it self and multiplieth, being thus divided; First, into Festum duplex, and into Festum simplex; that is, into Feast-double, and to Feast-simple. Again, this Festum duplex brancheth four-fold-wise, to wit, into Festum principale duplex, into Majus duplex, into Minus duplex, and Inferius duplex; that is, in principal double, in greater double, in lesser double, and inferiour or lower double. Unto these several sorts of Feasts what days were peculiarly assigned, it were too long to recite. For this present purpose it shall suffice to understand, that as unto the principal double Feast only belongeth eight days in the year; so the Majus duplex Festum had given unto him by this Convocation the day of Saint George and of Saint Dunstan, as is afore remembred; albeit by constitution it was so decreed, yet by custom it was not so used. Item, it is to be noted, that these two Feasts, to wit, Principale duplex, and Majus duplex, did differ and were known from all other by four Notes; by fervice in the Kitchin, and by fervice in the Church, which were both double, by ringing in the Steeple, which was with a double peal; by Copes in the Quire, and by thurifying or censing the Altars: For in these two principal and greater double Feasts, the seventh, eighth, and ninth lesson must be read with silken Copes. Also at the said Feasts, in the time of the Lessons, the Altars in the Church must be thurified; that is, smoked with Incense, &c. And likewise the Minus duplex, and Inferius duplex had also their peculiar fervice to them belonging.

The Feast of the Popes Church described and divided.

Festum duplex. Principale duplex, Majus duplex, Minus duplex, Inferius duplex. Constitution against Councel. Ex vet. Festiar.

Secondly, The Simplex Festum, which is the second Arm springing of this division, is thus divided: Either in having a triple invitory, or a double, or else a single invitory. Of the which moreover, some have three Lessons, some have nine, &c.

Simplex Festum in the Popes Church.

And thus much by occasion for Popish Feasts; not that I do so much deride them, as I lament, that so much and manifest Idolatry in them is committed, to the great dishonour of our Lord God, which is only to be honoured.

The Trouble and Persecution of the Lord Cobham.

The trouble of the Lord Cobham. Ex Chron. Mon. Alban.

BUt to let this by-matter pass, again to return to the forefaid universal Synod assembled by Thomas Arundel at S. Pauls Church in London, as is before remembred: the chief and principal cause of the assembling thereof (as reporteth the Chronicle of Saint Albans) was to repress the growing and spreading of the Gospel, and especially to withstand the noble and worthy Lord Cobham, who was then noted to be a principal Favourer, Receiver, and Maintainer of them, whom the Bishop misnamed to be Lollards, especially in the Diocesses of London, Rochester and Hereford, setting them up to preach whom the Bishops had not licensed, and sending them about to preach, which was against the Constitution Provincial, before remembred, holding also and teaching Opinions of the Sacraments, of Images, of Pilgrimage, of the Keys and Church of Rome, contrary and repugnant to the received determination of the Romish Church, &c.

Walden in Sacramentum Wicklevi.

In the mean time as these were in talk amongst them concerning the good Lord Cobham; it reported unto them the twelve Inquisitors of Heresies (whom they had appointed at Oxford the year afore, to search out Heretick with all Wickliffs Books) who brought 246 Conclusions, which they had collected as Heresies out of the said Books. The Names of the said Inquisitors were these:

1. John

1. John Whitnam, a Master in the new Colledge.
2. John Langedon, Monk of Christs Church in Canterbury.
3. William Offord, Regent of the Carmelites.
4. Thomas Claxton, Regent of the Dominicks.
5. Robert Gilbert.
6. Richard Earthisdale.
7. John Lacke.
8. Richard Southam.
9. Richard Fleming.
10. Thomas Rotorborne.
11. Robert Rombery.
12. Richard Crasdale.

These things thus done, and the Articles being brought in, further they proceeded in their Communication, concluding among themselves, that it was not possible for them to make whole Christs Coat without seam (meaning thereby their patched Popish Synagogue) unless certain great men were brought out of the way, which seemed to be the chief Maintainers of the said Disciples of Wickliff. Among whom this noble Knight Sir John Oldcastle, the Lord Cobham, was complained of by the general Proctors to be the chief Principal. Him they accused, first, for a mighty Maintainer of suspected Preachers in the Dioceses of London, Rochester, and Hereford, contrary to the minds of the Ordinaries. Not only they affirmed him to have sent thither the said Preachers, but also to have assisted them there by force of Arms, notwithstanding their synodal Constitution made afore to the contrary. Last of all, they accused him that he was far otherwise in belief of the Sacrament of the Altar, of Penance, of Pilgrimage, of Image-worshipping, and of the Ecclesiastical Power, than the holy Church of Rome had taught many years before.

The Lord Cobham accused for maintaining the Godhead of Christ.

The Lord Cobham accused for his Christian belief.

In the end it was concluded among them, that without any further delay, Process should be awarded out against him, as against a most pernitious Heretick.

Process against him.

Some of that Fellowship which were of more crafty experience than the other, thought it not best to have the matter so rashly handled, but by some preparation made thereunto before, considering the said Lord Cobham was a man of great birth, and in favour at that time with the King, their counsel was to know first the Kings mind to save all things upright. This counsel was well accepted, and thereupon the Archbishop Thomas Arundel, with his other Bishops, and a great part of the Clergy, went straitways unto the King then remaining at Kening-ton, and there laid forth most grievous Complaints against the said Lord Cobham, to his great infamy and blemish, being a man right godly. The King gently heard those bloodthirsty Prelates, and far otherwise than became his Princely Dignity: notwithstanding requiring, and instantly desiring them, that in respect of his noble Stock and Knighthood, they should yet favourably deal with him. And that they would, if it were possible, without all rigor or extreme handling reduce him again to the Churches unity. He promised them also, that in case they were committed to take some deliberation, his self would seriously commune the matter with him.

A fabrikal practice.

The King speaketh for him.

His gentle promise.

Anon after, the King sent for the said Lord Cobham, And as he was come, he called him secretly, admonishing him betwixt him and him, to submit himself to his Mother the holy Church, and as an obedient Child to acknowledge himself culpable. Unto whom the Christian Knight made this answer: You most worthy Prince, saith he, I am always prompt and willing to obey, forsomuch as I know you a Christian King, and the appointed Minister of God, bearing the Sword to the punishment of evil Doers, and for safeguard of them that be vertuous. Unto you (next my eternal God) owe I my whole Obedience, and submit thereunto (as I have done ever) all that I have, either of Fortune or Nature, ready at all times to fulfil whatsoever ye shall in the Lord command me. But as touching the Pope and his Spiritualty, I owe them neither fair nor service, forsomuch as I know him by the Scriptures to be the great Antichrist, the Son of Perdition, the open Adversary of God, and the Abomination standing in the holy place. When the King had heard this, with such like sentences more, he would talk no longer with him, but left him so utterly.

And as the Archbishop reported again unto him for an answer, he gave him his full authority to cite him, examine him, and punish him according to their devilish Decree, which they called the Laws of holy Church. Then the said Archbishop, by the counsel of his other Bishops and Clergy, appointed to call before him Sir John Oldcastle, the Lord Cobham, and to cause him personally to appear, to answer to such suspect Articles as they should lay against him. So he sent forth his chief Summoner, with a very sharp citation unto the Castle of Cowling, where as he at that time dwelt for his solace. And as the said Summoner was come thither, he durst in no case enter the Gates of so Noble a man without his licence, and therefore he returned home again, his Message not done.

KING Hen. 5.

Lord Cobham summoned by the Archbishop.

Then called the Archbishop one John Butler unto him, which was then the Doorkeeper of the Kings Privy-Chamber; and with him he covenanted, through promises and rewards, to have this matter craftily brought to pass under the Kings Name. Whereupon the said John Butler took the Archbishops Summoner with him, and went unto the said Lord Cobham, shewing him, that it was the Kings pleasure, that he should obey that citation, and so cited him fradulently. Then said he to them in few words, That he in no case would consent to those most devilish practices of the Priests. As they had informed the Archbishop of that answer, and that it was for no man privately to cite him after that, without peril of life, he decreed by and by to have him cited by publick Process or open Commandment. And in all the haste possible, upon the Wednesday before the Nativity of our Lady, in September, he commanded Letters citatory to be set upon the great Gates of the Cathedral-Church of Rochester (which was but three English miles from thence) charging him to appear personally before him at Ledis the eleventh day of the same month and year, all excuses to the contrary set apart. Those Letters were taken down the next morrow after by such as bare favour unto the Lord Cobham, and so conveyed aside. After that caused the Archbishop new Letters to be set up on the Nativity-day of our Lady, which also were rent down, and utterly consumed.

Then forasmuch as he did not appear at the day appointed at Ledis (where he sate in Consistory, as cruel as ever was Caiphas, with his Court of Hypocrites about him) he judged him, denounced him, and condemned him of most deep contumacy. After that, when he had been falsly informed by his hired Spies, and other glosing Glaverers, that the said Lord Cobham had laughed at him to scorn, disdained all his doings, maintained his old Opinions, contemned the Churches Power, the Dignity of a Bishop, and the Order of Priesthood (for all these was he then accused of) in his moody madness without just proof did he openly Excommunicate him. Yet was not with all this his fierce tyranny satisfied, but he commanded him to be cited afresh, to appear before him the Saturday before the Feast of S. Matthew the Apostle, with these cruel Threatnings added thereunto, that if he did not obey at the day, he would more extremely handle him. And to make himself more strong towards the performance thereof he compelled the Lay-power, by most terrible menacings of Curses and Interdictions, to assist him against that seditious Apostata, Schismatick, and Heretick, the Troubler of the publick Peace, that Enemy of the Realm, and great Adversary of all holy Church; for all these hateful Names did he give him.

Lord Cobham cited again before.

This most constant Servant of the Lord, and worthy Knight Sir John Oldcastle, the Lord Cobham, beholding the unpeaceable fury of Antichrist thus kindled against him, perceiving himself also compassed on every side with deadly dangers; he took paper and pen in hand, and so wrote a Christian confession or reckoning of his Faith (which followeth hereafter) both signing and sealing it with his own hand. Wherein he also answered to the four chiefest Articles that the Archbishop laid against him. That done, he took the Copy with him, and went therewith to the King, trusting to find mercy and favour at his hand. None other was that confession of his, than the common belief or sum of the Churches Faith, called The Apostles Creed, of all Christian men then used, with a brief Declaration upon the same, as here ensueth.

Lord Cobham confesseth his Faith.

The Apostles Faith.

The

The Christian Belief of the Lord Cobham.

The confession of Christian men.

I Believe in God the Father Almighty, maker of Heaven and Earth: And in Jesus Christ his only Son our Lord, which was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, Crucified, Dead and Buried, went down to Hell, the third day rose again from Death, Ascended up to Heaven, sitteth in the right hand of God the Father Almighty; and from thence shall come again to judge the Quick and the Dead. I believe in the Holy Ghost, the universal Holy Church, the Communion of Saints, the forgiveness of Sins, the uprising the flesh, and Everlasting Life, Amen.

A Declaration of his belief.

And for a more large Declaration (faith he) of this my Faith in the Catholick Church, I stedfastly believe, That there is but one God Almighty, in and of whose Godhead are these three persons, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, and that those three persons are the self same 1 Joh. 5. Gal. 4. John 1. Luke 2. God Almighty. I believe also, That the second person in this most blessed Trinity, in most convenient time appointed thereunto before, took flesh and blood of the most blessed Virgin Mary, for the safeguard and redemption of the universal kind of Man, which was before lost in Adams offence.

Christ is the only head of his Church.

Moreover I believe, That the same Jesus Christ our Lord, thus being both God and Man, is the only head of the whole Christian Church, and that all those that have been or shall be saved, be members of this most Holy Church. And this Holy Church I think to be divided into three sorts of companies.

The Church divided into three parts.

Whereof the first sort be now in Heaven, and they are the Saints from hence departed. These as they were here conversant, conformed always their lives to the most holy Laws and pure examples of Christ, renouncing Satan, the World, and the flesh with all their concupiscence and evils.

Contrary wrote by a Frenchwoman Re Vallens.

The second sort are in Purgatory (if any such place be in the Scriptures) abiding the mercy of God, and a full deliverance of pain.

The third sort are here upon the Earth, and be called the Church Militant. For day and night they contend against crafty assaults of the Devil, the flattering prosperities of this world, and the rebellious filthiness of the flesh.

The Church militant divided in three.

This later Congregation by the just Ordinance of God is also severed into three divers estates, that is to say, into Priesthood, Knighthood, and the Commons. Among whom the will of God is, That the one should aid the other, but not destroy the other. The Priests first of all, secluded from all worldliness, should conform their lives utterly to the examples of Christ and his Apostles. Evermore should they be occupied in preaching and teaching the Scriptures purely, and in giving wholesome examples of good living to the other two degrees of men. More modest also, more loving, gentle, and lowly in spirit should they be, than any other sorts of people.

What the Priests should do.

Knighthood what it should do.

In the Knighthood are all they which bear sword by Law of Office; These should defend Gods Laws, and see that the Gospel were purely taught, conforming their lives to the same, and secluding all false Preachers; yea those ought rather to hazard their lives, than to suffer such wicked Decrees as either blemish the Eternal Testament of God, or yet let the free passage thereof, whereby Heralds and Schisms might spring in the Church. For of none other arise they, as I suppose, than of erroneous constitutions, craftily writ creeping in under hypocritical lies, for advantage. They ought also to preferve Gods people from oppressors, tyrants and thieves, and to see the Clergy supported so long as they teach purely, pray rightly, and minister the Sacraments freely. And if they see them do otherwise, they are bound by the Law or Office to compel them to change their doings; and to see all things performed according to Gods prescript ordinance.

Men here a most Christian heart.

What the common people ought to do.

The latter fellowship of this Church, are the common people; whose duty is to bear their good minds and true obedience to the forefaid ministers of God, their Kings, Civil Governours and Priests. The right Office of these is justly to occupy every Man his faculty, be it Merchandise, Handicraft, o the Tithe of the ground. And so one of them to be as an helper to another, following always in their forts the just Commandments of the Lord God.

Over and besides all this, I most faithfully believe, That the Sacraments of Christs Church are necessary to all Christian believers; this always seen to, that they be truly ministred according to Christs first Institution and Ordinance. And forasmuch as I am maliciously and most falsly accused of a misbelief in the Sacrament of the Altar, to the hurtful slander of many; I signifie here unto all Men, that this is my faith concerning that. I believe in the Sacrament to be contained Christs very body and blood under the similitude of bread and wine, yea the same body that was conceived of the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, done on the Cross, died and was buried, arose the third day from the death; and is now glorified in Heaven. I also believe the universal Law of God to be most true and perfect, and they which do not so follow it in their faith and works (at one time or another) can never be saved. Whereas he that seeketh it in faith, accepteth it, learneth it, delighteth therein, and performeth it in love, shall taste for it the felicity of everlasting innocency.

Belief of the Lord Cobham concerning the Sacraments.

The Sacrament of the Altar.

Finally, this is my faith also, that God will ask no more of a Christian believer in this life, but only to obey the precepts of that most blessed Law. If any Prelates of Church require more, or else any other kind of obedience, than this to be used; he contemneth Christ, exalting himself above God, and so becometh an open Antichrist. All the premisses I believe particularly, and generally all that God hath left in his Holy Scripture, that I should believe; instantly desiring you my Liege Lord and most worthy King, that this confession of mine may be justly examined by the most godly wise, and learned Men of your Realm. And if it be found in all points agreeing to the verity, then let it be so allowed; and I thereupon holden for none other than a true Christian. If it be proved otherwise, then let it be utterly condemned; provided always, that I be taught a better belief by the word of God; and I shall most reverently at all times obey thereunto.

Gods Law to be preferred before mans Law.

A Christians desire of the Lord Cobham.

This request was lawful. Obedience unto his King.

This brief confession of his Faith the Lord Cobham wrote (as is mentioned before) and so took it with him to the Court, offering it with all meekness unto the King to read it over. The King would in no case receive it, but commanded it to be delivered unto them that should be his Judges. Then defired he in the Kings presence, that an hundred Knights and Esquires might be suffered to come in upon his purgation, which he knew would clear him of all Heresies. Moreover he offered himself, after the Law of Arms, to fight for life or death with any Man living, Christian or Heathen, in the quarrel of his Faith, the King and the Lords of his Council excepted. Finally, with all gentleness he protested before all that were present, that he would refuse no manner of correction that should after the Laws of God be ministred unto him, but that he would at all times with all meekness obey it. Notwithstanding all this the King suffered him to be summoned personally in his own Privy Chamber. Then said the Lord Cobham to the King, that he had appealed from the Archbishop to the Pope of Rome, and therefore he ought, he said, in no case to be his Judge. And having his appeal there at hand ready written, he shewed it with all reverence to the King. Wherewith the King was then much more displeased than afore, and said angerly unto him, that he should not pursue his appeal; but rather he should tarry in hold, till such time as it were of the Pope allowed. And then, would he, or not, he the Archbishop should be his Judge. Thus was there nothing allowed that the L. Cobham had lawfully afore required. But forsomuch as he would not be sworn in all things to submit himself to the Church, and so take what penance the Archbishop would enjoyn him; He was arrested again at the Kings Commandment, and so led forth to the Tower of London, to keep his day (so was it then spoken) that the Archbishop had appointed him afore in the Kings Chamber.

L. Cobham would not obey the death.

Then caused he the foresaid Confession of his Faith to be copied again, and the answer also (which he had made to the four Articles propounded against him) to be written in manner of an Indenture in two sheets of Paper: That sheet when he should come to his answer, he might give the one Copy unto the Archbishop, and reserve the other to himself. As the day of examination was come, which was the 23d day of September the Saturday before the Feast

The first Examination of the Lord COBHAM.

Antichrist was here in full power.

SIR John, in the last general Convocation of the Clergy of this our Province, ye were detected of certain Heresies, and by sufficient witnesses found culpable. Whereupon ye were, by form of spiritual Law cited, and would in no case appear. In conclusion upon your rebellious contumacy, ye were both privately and openly Excommunicated. Notwithstanding, we neither yet shewed our selves unready to have given you Absolution (nor yet do to this hour) would ye have meekly asked it. Unto this the Lord Cobham shewed, as though he had given no ear, having his mind otherwise occupied, and so desired no Absolution.

A sign of Gods true servant.

But said he would gladly before him and his Brethren make rehersal of that Faith which he held and intended always to stand to, if it would please them to license him thereunto. And then he took out of his bosom a certain writing intended, concerning the Articles whereof he was accused, and so openly read it before them, giving it unto the Archbishop as he had made thereof an end. Whereof this is the Copy.

The Sacrament of the Lords body.

I John Oldcastle Knight, Lord of Cobham, Will that all Christian Men, weet and understand, that I obey Almighty God into witness, that it hath been, now is, and ever, with the help of God, shall be mine intent and my will, to believe faithfully and fully all the Sacraments that ever God ordained to be done in Holy Church; and moreover do declare me in these four points, I believe that the most worshipful Sacrament of the Altar is Christs body in form of bread, the same body that was born of the blessed Virgin our Lady Saint Mary, done on the Cross, dead and buried, the third day rose from death to life, the which body is now glorified in Heaven.

Penance.

Also as for the Sacrament of Penance I believe, That it is needful to every Man that shall be saved to forsake sin, and to do due penance for sin before done, with true Confession, very Contrition, and due satisfaction as Gods Law limiteth and teacheth, and else may not be saved; which penance I desire all Men to do.

Images.

And as of Images, I understand that they be not of believe, but that they were ordained fith they believe was zewe of Christ, by sufferance of the Church, to be Calenders to lewd Men, to represent and bring to mind the Passion of our Lord Jesus Christ, and Martyrdom and good living of other Saints: And that whoso it be, that doth the worthip to dead Images that is due to God, or putteth fuch hope or truft in help of them, as he fhould do to God, or hath affection in one more than in another, he doth in that the greateft fin of Maumetry.

Pilgrimage.

Alfo I fuppofe this fully, That every Man in this Earth is a Pilgrim toward blifs, or toward pain; and that he that knoweth not, ne will not know ne keep the holy Commandments of God in his living here (albeit that he go on Pilgrimages to all the world, and he die fo) he fhall be damned: he that knoweth the holy Commandments of God, and keepeth them to his end, he fhall be saved though he never in his life go on Pilgrimage, as Men now use to Canterbury or to Rome, or to any other place.

The answers examined.

This answer to his Articles thus ended and read, he delivered it to the Bishops as is faid afore. Then counfelled the Archbishop with the other two Bishops and with diverse of the Doctors, what was to be done in this matter; commanding him for the time to ftand afide. In conclufion by their affent and information he faid thus unto him; Come hither, Sir John: In this your writing are many good things contained, and right Catholick alfo, we deny it not: but ye muft confider that this day was appointed you to anfwer to other points concerning thofe Articles, whereof, as yet no mention is made in this your bill. And therefore ye muft yet declare us your mind more plainly.

Quarrel picked where none was given.

And thus, whether that ye hold, affirm and believe that in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the Confecration rightly done by a Prieft, remaineth material bread, or not? Moreover, whether ye do hold, affirm and believe, that as concerning the Sacrament of Penance (whereas a competent number of Prieſts are) every Chriſtian Man is neceſſarily bound to be confeſſed of his ſins to a Prieſt ordained by the Church or not.

{KING. Hen. 5.} The Wolf was hungry, he took no heed to his blood.

After certain other communication, this was the anſwer of the good Lord Cobham, That none otherwiſe would he declare his mind, nor yet anſwer unto his Articles, than was expreſſly in his writing there contained. Then ſaid he as is afore, and in effect in other Biſhops did aſk him after that, he had them reſort to his Bill; for thereby would he ſtand to the very death. Other anſwer would he not give that day; wherewith the Biſhops and Prelates were in a manner amazed and wonderfully diſquieted.

At the laſt the Archbiſhop counſelled again with his other Biſhops and Doctors, and in the end thereof declared unto him, what the Holy Church of Rome (following the ſaying of Saint Auguſtine, Saint Hierome, Saint Ambroſe, and of the Holy Doctors) had determined in theſe matters, no manner of mention once made of Chriſt. Which determination (ſaith he) ought all Chriſtian Men both to believe and to follow.

Antichriſt ſereth not above God.

Then ſaid the Lord Cobham unto him, That he would gladly both believe and obſerve whatſoever Holy Church of Chriſts inſtitution had determined, or yet whatſoever God had willed him either to believe to do. But that the Pope of Rome with his Cardinals, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Prelates of that Church had lawful power to determine ſuch matter as ſtood not with his word throughly: that would he not (he ſaid) at that time affirm. With this the Archbiſhop bad him to take good adviſement till the Monday next following, (which was the 25*th* day of September) and then juſtly to anſwer, ſpecially unto this point; Whether there remained material bread in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Conſecration or not? He promiſed him alſo, to ſend unto him in writing thoſe matters clearly determined, that he might then be the more perfect in his anſwer making. And all this was nought elſe, but to blind the multitude with ſomewhat. The next day following, according to his promiſe, the Archbiſhop ſent unto him into the Tower, this foolish and blaſphemous writing, made by him and by his unlearned Clergy.

THE Faith and determination of the Holy Church touching the bliſsful Sacrament of the Altar, is this; That after the Sacramental words be once ſpoken by a Prieſt in his Maſs, the material bread, that was before bread, is turned into Chriſts very body. And the material wine that was before wine is turned into Chriſts very blood. And ſo there remaineth in the Sacrament of the Altar, from thenceforth, no material bread, nor material wine, which were there before the Sacramental words were ſpoken; How believe ye this Article? And as the Lord Cobham had read over this moſt wretched writing, he marvelled greatly of their mad ignorance. But that he conſidered again, That God had given them over, for their unbeliefs ſake, into moſt deep errors and blindneſs of ſoul. Again, he perceived hereby, that their uttermoſt malice was purpoſed againſt him, howſoever he ſhould anſwer. After that, came out before them Sir Robert Morley Knight, and Lieutenant of the Tower, and he brought with him the good Lord Cobham, there leaving him among them as a Lamb among Wolves, to his examination and anſwer.

Then ſpake the Lord Cobham with a chearful countenance, and ſaid, God ſaid by his holy Prophet, Maledicam benedictionibus veſtris, which is as much to ſay as, I ſhall curſe where you bleſs.

The Archbiſhop made then as though he had continued forth his tale and not heard him, ſaying, Sir, At that time I gently profered to have afforded you if you would have asked it. And yet I do the ſame if ye will humbly defire it in due form and manner as holy Church hath ordained.

A Wolviſh offer of gentleneſs.

Then ſaid the Lord Cobham, Nay forſooth will I not, for I never yet trefpaſſed againſt you, and therefore I will not do it. And with that he kneeled down on the pavement, holding up his hands towards Heaven, and ſaid; I fhrieve me here unto thee my Eternal Living God, that in my frail youth I offended thee (O Lord) moſt grievouſly in pride, wrath, and gluttony, in covetouſneſs, and in lechery. Many Men have I hurt in mine anger, and done many other horrible ſins; good Lord, I ask thee mercy. And therewith weepingly he ſtood up again and ſaid with a mighty voice; Lo, good people, lo; For the breaking of Gods Law and his great commandments, they never yet curſed me: But for their own Laws and Traditions moſt cruelly do they handle both me and other Men. And therefore, both they and their Laws, by the promiſe of God ſhall utterly be deſtroyed.

At this the Archbiſhop and his company were not a little blemiſhed. Notwithſtanding, he took ſtomach unto him again after certain words had, in excuſe of their tyranny, and examined the Lord Cobham of his Chriſtian belief.

Whereunto the Lord Cobham made this godly anſwer. I believe (ſaith he) fully and faithfully in the univerſal Laws of God. I believe that all is true which is contained in the holy facred Scriptures of the Bible. Finally, I believe all that my Lord God would I ſhould believe. Then demanded the Archbiſhop an anſwer of that Bill which he and the Clergy had ſent him into the Tower the day afore, in manner of a determination of the Church concerning the four Articles whereof he was accuſed, ſpecially for the Sacrament of the Altar, how he believed therein.

The true Chriſtian belief of the Lord Cobham.

Whereunto the Lord Cobham ſaid, That with that Bill he had nothing to do. But this was his belief (he ſaid) concerning the Sacrament. That his Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, ſitting at his laſt Supper with his moſt dear Diſciples, the night before he ſhould ſuffer took bread in his hand; And giving thanks to his Eternal Father, bleſſed it, brake it, and ſo gave it unto them, ſaying, Take it unto you, and eat thereof all, this is my body which ſhall be betrayed for you: Do this hereafter in my remembrance. This do I throughly believe (ſaith he) for this Faith am I taught in the Goſpel of Matthew, in Mark, and in Luke, and alſo in the firſt Epiſtle of S. Paul to the Corinthians Chap. 11.

Matt. 26. Mark 14. Luke 22. 1 Cor. 11

Antichriſt allowed not this faith.

Then asked the Archbiſhop, If he believed that it were bread after the Conſecration or Sacramental words ſpoken over it.

The Lord Cobham ſaid: I believe that in the Sacrament of the Altar is Chriſts very body in form of bread, the ſame that was born of the Virgin Mary, done on the Croſs, dead, and buried, and that the third day aroſe from death to life, which now is glorified in Heaven.

Then ſaid one of the Doctors of the Law: after the Sacramental words be uttered, there remaineth no bread, but only the body of Chriſt.

The Sacrament of the Altar.

The Lord Cobham ſaid then to one Maſter John Whitehead: You ſaid once unto me in the Caſtle of Cowling, that the faced Hoſt was not Chriſts body. But I held then againſt you, and proved that therein was his body though the Seculars and Friers could not therein agree, but held each one againſt the other in that opinion. Theſe were my words then, if ye remember it.

John Whitehead ſwerved from his opinions. All this would not help.

Then ſhouted a fort of them together and cryed with great noiſe: We ſay all, That it is Gods body.

A blaſphemous brood

And divers of them asked him in great anger, Whether it were material bread after the Conſecration or not?

Quarel picked.

Then looked the Lord Cobham earneſtly upon the Archbiſhop, and ſaid; I believe ſurely that it is Chriſts body in form of bread. Sir, believe not you thus?

And the Archbiſhop ſaid, Yes, many do I.

Then asked him the Doctors, whether it were only Chriſts body after the Conſecration of a Prieſt, and no bread, or not?

The Sacrament of Chriſts body is both the body and bread.

And he ſaid unto them, It is both Chriſts body and bread; I ſhall prove it thus: For like as Chriſts dwelling here upon the earth had in him both Godhead and manhood, and had the invisible Godhead covered under that manhood, which was only visible and seen in him: So in the Sacrament of the Altar is Christs very body and bread also, as I believe the bread is the thing that we see with our eyes, the body of Christ (which is his flesh and his blood) is thereunder hid, and not seen but in Faith.

Neither will Scripture nor reason serve this opinion hath Augustine.

Celsius contra Eutychen.

And moreover to prove, That it is both Christs body and also bread after the Consecration, it is by plain words expressed by one of your own Doctors writing against Eutyches, which saith, Like as the self same Sacraments do passe by the operation of the Holy Ghost into a divine nature, and yet notwithstanding keep the property still of their former nature; so that principal mystery declareth to remain one true and perfect Christ, &c.

The Popes divinity.

Then smiled they each one upon another, that the people should judge him taken in a great Heresie. And with a great brag divers of them said: It is a foul Heresie.

Then asked the Archbishop what bread it was? And the Doctors also inquired of him whether it were material or not?

Material.

The Lord Cobham said unto them; The Scriptures make no mention of this word material, and therefore my Faith hath nothing to do therewith. But this I say and believe, that it is Christs body and bread. For Christ said in the sixth of John's Gospel, Ego sum panis vivus, qui de cælo descendi: I which came down from Heaven am the living and not the dead bread. Therefore I say now again as I said afore, as our Lord Jesus Christ is very God, and very Man, so in the most blessed Sacrament of the Altar is Christs very body and bread.

John 6.

An Heresie after the Papists making.

Then said they all with one voice; It is an Heresie.

One of the Bishops stood up by and by, and said, What? it is an Heresie manifest, to say that it is bread after the sacramental words be once spoken, but Christs body only.

1 Cor. 10

The Lord Cobham said, S. Paul the Apostle was (I am sure) as wise as you be now, and more godly learned, and he called it bread, writing to the Corinthians, The bread that we break, saith he, is it not the partaking of the body of Christ? To he called it bread and not Christs body, but a mean whereby we receive Christs body.

The Sacrament is called bread.

Then said they again, Paul must be otherwise understood. For it is sure an Heresie to say that it is bread after the Consecration, but only Christs body.

The Lord Cobham asked, How they could make good that sentence of theirs?

They answered him thus: For it is against the determination of Holy Church.

The determination of the Church must stand, whatsoever Paul saith. A most Christian answer. The judgement of the Lord Cobham concerning the determination of the Church.

Then said the Archbishop unto him: Sir John, we sent you a writing concerning the faith of this blessed Sacrament, clearly determined by the Church of Rome our Mother, and by the holy Doctors.

Then he said again unto him, I know none holier than is Christ and his Apostles. And as for that determination, I wrote it is none of theirs: for it standeth not with the Scriptures, but manifestly against them. If it be the Churches, as ye say it is, it hath been hers only since she received the great poison of worldly possessions, and not afore.

Then asked they him, to stop his mouth therewith: If he believed not in the determination of the Church?

The Doctors confounded in their own question.

And he said unto them, No forsooth, for it is no God. In all our Creed, this word (in) is but thrice mentioned concerning belief: In God the Father, in God the Son, in God the Holy Ghost, Three Persons and One God. The Birth, the Death, the Burial, the Resurrection and Ascension of Christ, hath none (in) for belief, but in him. Neither yet hath the Church, the Sacraments, the forgivnes of sin, the later Resurrection, nor yet the life everlasting, nor any other (in) than in the Holy Ghost.

Then said one of the Lawyers, Tush, that was but a word of Office: But what is your belief concerning Holy Church?

The L. Cobham believeth not in the Pope.

The Lord Cobham answered: My belief is (as I said afore) that all the Scriptures of the sacred Bible are true. All this is grounded upon them I believe throughly. For I know it is Gods pleasure that I should so do. But in your lordly Laws and idle determinations have I no belief. For ye be no part of Christs holy Church, as your open deeds do shew: But ye are very Antichrists, obstinately set against his holy Law and Will. The Laws that ye have made are nothing to his glory, but only for your vain glory and abominable covetousnes.

KING Hen. 5.

An Heresie after the Papists.

This, they said, was an exceeding Heresie (and that in a great fame) not to believe the determination of holy Church.

Then the Archbishop asked him, What he thought of holy Church

Holy Church defined.

He said unto him, my belief is, That the Holy Church is the number of them which shall be saved, of whom Christ is the head. Of this Church one part is in Heaven with Christ, another in Purgatory (you say) and the third is here in Earth. This later part standeth in three degrees, in Knighthood, Priesthood, and the Commonalty, as I said afore plainly in the confession of my belief.

Confessing him to be then in strong handling.

Then said the Archbishop unto him; Can you tell me who is of the Church?

The Lord Cobham answered; Yes, truly can I.

Then said Doctor Walden the Prior of the Carmelites; It is doubt unto you who is thereof. For Christ faith in Matthew, Nolite judicare, presume to judge no man. If ye be here forbidden the judgment of your neighbour or Brother, much more the judgment of your superior.

Walden one of Wicliffes disciples. cap. 67. How we may judge or not judge by the Scriptures.

The Lord Cobham made him this answer, Christ faith also in the self same Chapter of Matthew, That like as the evil tree is known by his fruit, so is a false Prophet by his works, appear they never so glorious: But that ye left behind ye. And in John he hath this Text: Operibus credite, Believe ye the outward doings. And in another place of John: Justum judicium judicate; when we know the thing to be true, we may so judge it and not offend. For David said also; Recte judicate filii hominum; Judge rightly always ye Children of Men. And as for your superiority, were ye of Christ, ye should be meek Ministers, and no proud Superiors.

Matt. 7. John 1. John 7. Deut. 16. Psal. 56.

Diversity of judgments.

Then said Doctor Walden unto him, Ye make here no difference of judgments: Ye put no diversity between the evil judgments which Christ hath forbidden, and the good judgments, which he hath commanded us to have. Rash judgment and right judgment, all is one with you. So swift Judges always are the learned Scholars of Wickliff.

A perfect answer. Esay 5. Esay 55.

Unto whom the Lord Cobham thus answered: It is well sophistired of you forsooth. Prepositerous are your judgments evermore. For as the Prophet Esay saith, Ye judge evil good and good evil: and therefore the same Prophet concludeth, That your ways are not Gods ways, nor Gods ways your ways. And as for the vertuous Man Wickliff, whole judgments ye so highly disdain, I shall say here of my part, both before God and Man, that before I knew that despised Doctrine of his, I never abstained from sin. But since I learned therein to fear my Lord God, it hath otherwise I trust been with me: so much grace could I never find in all your glorious instructions.

The Religion of Bishops.

Note I pray you how those are counted traitors and seditious, that teach or exalt Gods truth to be taught.

Wicklin is a perfect doctrine.

Then said Doctor Walden again yet unto him: It were not well with me (so many vertuous Men living, and so many learned Men teaching the Scripture, being also so open, and the examples of Fathers so plenteous) if I then had no grace to amend my life, till I heard the Divel preach. S. Hieromе saith, That he which seeketh such suspected masters shall not find the mid-day light, but the mid-day Divel.

A great adversary.

Luke 23. John 19. Prophecy.

The Lord Cobham said, Your Fathers, the old Pharisees, ascribed Christs miracles to Belzebub, and his doctrine to the Divel. And you as their natural Children have still the self same judgment concerning his faithful followers. They that rebuke your vicious living must needs be Heretikes, and that must your Doctors prove, when you have no Scripture to do it. Then said he to them all; to judge you as you be we need go no further than to your own proper acts. Where do you find in all Gods Law, that ye should thus sit in judgment of any Christian Man, or yet give sentence upon any other Man unto death, as ye do here daily? no ground have ye in all the Scripture to lordly to take it upon you, but in Annas and Caiphas, which fate thus upon Christ, and upon his Apostles after his Ascension. Of them only have ye taken it to judge Christs members as ye do, and neither of Peter nor John.

Hieron. in Breviar. in Matt. 24. Prophecy. Priests. Deacons. Mark this working of Satan. Acts 6. The first Article. Transubstantiation of bread into the body.

Then said some of the Lawyers: Yes, forsooth, Sir, for Christ judged Judas.

The Lord Cobham said, No, Christ judged him not, but he judged himself, and thereupon went forth and so did hang hang himself: but indeed Christ said, Wo unto him, for that covetous act of his, as he doth yet still unto many of you. For since the venime of him was shed into the Church, ye never followed Christ, neither yet have ye stood in the perfection of Gods Law.

Then the Archbishop asked him, what he meant by that venime?

The Lord Cobham said, Your possessions and Lordships, For then cryed an Angel in the Air (as your own Chronicles mention) Wo, wo, wo, this day is venime shed into the Church of God. Before that time all the Bishops of Rome were Martyrs in a manner. And since that time we read of very few. But indeed since that same time, one hath put down another, one hath poisoned another, one hath cursed another, and one hath slain another, and done much more mischief besides, as all the Chronicles tell. And let all Men consider well this, That Christ was meek, and merciful; the Pope is proud, and a tyrant; Christ was poor and forgave, the Pope is rich and a malitious Man-slayer, as his daily acts do prove him. Rome is the very nest of Antichrist, and out of that nest come all the Disciples of him. Of whom, Prelates, Priests, and Monks, are the body, these pil'd Friers are the tail, which covereth his most filthy part.

26 Bishops of Rome together Martyrs save only four. A compact set between the Martyrs and the Popes time. A compact set between Christ and the Pope. Rome is Antichrists nest.

Then said the Prior of the Friers Augustines, Alack, Sir, why do you say so? that is uncharitably spoken.

And the Lord Cobham said, Not only is it my saying, but also the Prophet Esaias, long afore my time. The Prophet, saith he, which preacheth lies, is the tail behind. For as you Friers and Monks be (like Pharisees) divided in your outward apparel and visages, so make ye division among the people. And thus you with such other, are the very natural members of Antichrist.

Esay 9. Friers proved faithless, and yet found no traitors.

Matt. 23.

Then said he unto them all, Christ saith in his Gospel, Wo unto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hypocrites; for ye close up the Kingdom of Heaven before Men, neither enter ye in your selves, nor yet suffer any other that would enter into it, but ye stop up the ways thereunto with your own Traditions, and therefore are ye the houshold of Antichrist; ye will not permit Gods verity to have passage, nor yet to be taught of his true Ministers, fearing to have your wickednes reproved. But by such flatterers as uphold you in your mischiefs, ye suffer the common people most miserably to be seduced.

Then said the Archbishop, By our Lady, Sir, there shall none such preach within my Diocese (and God will) nor yet in my jurisdiction (if I may know it) as either make division, or yet distribution among the poor Commons.

The Lord Cobham said, both Christ and his Apostles were accused of sedition making, yet were they most peaceable Men. But Daniel and Christ Prophecyed, that such a troublous time should come, as hath not been yet since the worlds beginning. And this Prophecy is partly fulfilled in your days and doings: for many have ye slain already, and more will ye slay hereafter, if God fulfil not his promise. Christ faith also, If those days of yours were not shortned, scarcely should any flesh be saved; therefore look for it justly, for God will shorten your days. Moreover, though Priests and Deacons for preaching of Gods word, and for ministring the Sacraments, with provision for the poor, be grounded on Gods Law, yet have these other Sects no manner of ground hereof, so far as I have read.

Matt. 24. Prophecy. Priests. Deacons.

Then a Doctor of Law, called Master John Kemp, plucked out of his bosom a copy of the Bill which they had afore sent him into the Tower by the Archpishops Council, thinking thereby to make shorter work with him. For they were so amazed with his answers (not all unlike to them which disputed with Stephen) that they knew not well how to occupy the time, their wits and sophistry (as God would) so failed them that day.

My Lord Cobham (saith this Doctor) we must briefly know your mind concerning these four points here following. The first of them is this; and then he read upon the Bill. The Faith and determination of holy Church touching the blessed Sacrament of the Altar is this. That after the Sacramental words be once spoken of a Priest in his Mass, the material bread, that was before bread, is turned into Christs very body, and the material wine is turned into Christs blood. And so there remaineth in the Sacrament of the Altar from thenceforth no material bread nor material wine, which were there before the Sacramental words were spoken: Sir, believe you not this?

The Lord Cobham said, This is not my belief. But my Faith is (as I said to ye afore) That in the worthiful Sacrament of the Altar is Christs very body in form of bread.

The Lord Cobhams belief in the Sacrament.

Then said the Archbishop, Sir John, ye must say otherwise.

The Lord Cobham said, Nay, that I will not, if God be upon my side (as I trust he is) but that there is Christs body in form of bread, as the common belief is.

Then read the Doctor again.

The second Article.

The second point is this; Holy Church hath determined, that every Christian Man, living here bodily upon earth, ought to be shriven of a Priest ordained by the Church, if he may come to him. Sir, what say you to this?

The Lord Cobham answered and said, A diseased or sore wounded Man hath need to have a sure wise Chirurgion and a true, knowing both the ground and the danger of the same. Much necessary were it therefore to be first shriven unto God, which only knoweth our diseases, and can help us. I deny not in this the going to a Priest, if he be a Man of good life and learning; for the Laws of God are to be required of the Priest, which is godly learned. But if he be an Idiot, or a Man of vicious living that is my Curate, I ought rather to fly from him than to seek unto him; for sooner might I catch evil of him that is naught, than any goodnes towards my souls health.

Confession of sins to God only. Mal. 2.

Then read the Doctor again.

The third Article.

The third point is this; Christ ordained S. Peter the Apostle to be his Vicar here in Earth, whole See is the Church of Rome. And he granted that the same power which he gave unto Peter should succeed unto all Peter's successors, which we call now Popes of Rome. By whose special power in Churches particular be ordained Prelates and Archbishops, Parsons, Curates, and other degrees more, to whom Christian Men ought to obey after the Laws of the Church of Rome. This is the determination of holy Church. Sir, believe ye not this?

Who is next unto Peter.

To this he answered and said, He that followeth Peter most nigheth in pure living, is next unto him in succession. But your Lordly order esteemeth not greatly the lowly behaviour of poor Peter whatsoever ye prate of him. Neither care ye greatly for the humble manners of them that succeeded him till the time of S. Silvester, which for the more part were Martyrs, as I told you before. Ye can let all their good conditions go by you, and not hurt your selves with them at all. All the world knoweth this well enough by you, and yet ye can make boast of Peter.

Succession, not of place but of condition, manneth Peters heir.

With that, one of the other Doctors asked him; Then what do ye say of the Pope?

Antichrists head, body and tail.

The Lord Cobham answered, As I said before, so I say again; That he and you together make whole the great Antichrist. Of whom he is the great head, you Bishops, Priests, Prelates, and Monks, are the body, and the begging Friers are the tail, for they cover the filthiness of you both with their subtil Sophistry: neither will I in confidence obey any of you all, till I see you with Peter follow Christ in Conversation.

Then read the Doctor again.

The fourth Article. Pilgrimage.

The fourth point is this; Holy Church hath determined, That it is meritorious to a Christian Man, to go on Pilgrimage to holy places, and there specially to worship the holy Reliques and Images of Saints, Apostles, Martyrs, Confessors, and all other Saints besides, approved by the Church of Rome. Sir, what say you to this?

What is to done with images

Whereunto he answered, I owe them no service by any commandment of God, and therefore I mind not to seek them for your covetousnes. It were best ye swept them fare from Cobwebs and dust, and so laid them up for catching of feathe, or els to bury them fare in the ground as ye do other aged people which are Gods images.

Saints are become now covetous beggers.

It is a wonderful thing, that Saints now being dead should become so covetous and needy, and thereupon so bitterly beg, which all their life time hated all covetousnes and begging. But this I say unto you, and I would all the world should mark it, that with your Shrines and Idols, your fained Absolutions and Pardons, ye draw unto you the substance, wealth and chief pleasures of all Christian Realm.

A whelp of the Scots Heire.

Why Sir (said one of the Clerks) will ye not worship good Images?

Images not to be worshipped.

What worship should I give unto them? said the Lord Cobham.

Then said Frier Palmer unto him, Sir, will ye worship the Crosse of Christ, that he died upon?

Where is it, faid the Lord Cobham?

The Frier faid, I put you the cafe, Sir, that it were here even now before you.

The Crosse whether it is to be worshipped. Galat. 6.

The Lord Cobham answered, This is a great wise Man, to put me an easseft queftion of a thing, and yet he himself knoweth not where the thing it self is. Yet once again I ask you, What worship I should do unto it.

A Clerk faid unto him, Such worship as Paul speaketh of, and that is this; God forbid that I should joy, but only in the Crosse of Jesus Christ.

Then faid the L. Cobham, and spread his arms abroad; This is the very Crosse, yea, and so much better than your Crosse of Wood, in that it was created of God, yet will not I seek to have it worshipped.

The materiall Crosse is not materiall to our Faith.

Then faid the Bishop of London, Sir, Ye wot well that he died on a material Crosse.

What it is to rejoyce in the Crosse of Christ.

The Lord Cobham faid, Yea, and I wot alſo, that our ſalvation came not in by that material Croſs, but alone by him which died thereupon. And well I wot, That Holy Saint Paul rejoyced in none other Croſs, but in Chriſts Paſſion and Death only, and in his own ſufferings of like perſecution with him, for the ſelf ſame verity that he hath ſuffered for afore?

Another Clerk yet asked him, Will ye then do none honour to the Holy Croſs?

He anſwered him, Yes, if it were mine own, I would lay him up honeſtly, and ſee unto him that he ſhould take no more ſcath abroad, nor be robbed of his goods, as he is now adays.

Slandered with the truth. Theſe men ſeem to ſtand only upon their eſtimation amongſt the people.

Then ſaid the Archbiſhop unto him, Sir John, Ye have ſpoken here many wonderfull words to the ſlanderous rebuke of the whole Spirituality, giving a great evil example unto the common ſort here, to have us in the more diſdain. Much time have we ſpent here about you, and all in vain ſo far as I can ſee. Well we muſt now be at this ſhort point with you, for the day paſſeth away: ye muſt either ſubmit your ſelf to the Ordinance of Holy Church, or elſe throw your ſelf (no remedy) into moſt deep danger. See to it in time, for anon it will be elſe too late.

The Lord Cobham ſaid, I know not to what purpoſe I ſhould otherwiſe ſubmit me. Much more have you offended me, than ever I offended you, in this troubling me before this multitude.

A Wolviſh offer of gentleneſſe.

Then ſaid the Archbiſhop again unto him, We once again require you to remember your ſelf well, and to have none other manner of opinion in theſe maters, than the univerſall Faith and belief of the Holy Church of Rome is. And ſo like an obedient Child return again to the unity of your Mother. See to it I ſay in time, for yet ye may have remedy, whereas anon it will be too late.

The Lord Cobham ſaid expreſſly before them all; I will none otherwiſe believe in theſe points than that I have told you here afore. Do with me what you will.

Bloody murtherers.

Finally, then the Archbiſhop ſaid; Well, then I ſee none other but that we muſt needs do the law; we muſt proceed forth to the ſentence definitive, and both judge you and condemn you for an Heretick.

And with that the Archbiſhop ſtood and read there a Bill of his Condemnation, all the Clergy and Laity vailing their Bonets. And this was the tenor thereof.

¶ The Definitive Sentence of his Condemnation.

Suffered of God as a plague.

An heretick for confeſſing of Chriſt.

IN the name of God; So be it, We Thomas by the ſufferance of God, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Metropolitan and Primate of all England, and Legate from the Apoſtolick See of Rome, will this to be known unto all Men. In a certain cauſe of Hereſie and upon divers Articles, whereupon Sir John Oldcaſtle Knight, and Lord Cobham, after a diligent inquiſition made for the ſame, was detected, accuſed and preſented before us in our laſt Convocation of all our Province of Canterbury, holden in the Cathedral Church of Paul's at London, at the lawful denouncement and requeſt of our univerſal Clergy of the ſaid Convocation, we proceeded againſt him according to the Law (God to witneſs) with all the favour poſſible. And following Chriſts example in all that we might, which willeth not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he might be converted and live; we took upon us to correct him, and ſought all other ways poſſible to bring him again to the Churches unity, declaring unto him what the Holy and univerſall Church of Rome hath ſaid, holden, determined, and taught in that behalf. And though we found him in the Catholick Faith far wide, and ſo ſtiff-necked, that he would not confeſs his error, nor purge himſelf, nor yet repent him thereof; We yet pitying him of Fatherly compaſſion, and entirely deſiring the health of his ſoul, appointed him a competent time of deliberation, to ſee if he would repent and ſeek to be reformed: but ſince that time we have found him worſe and worſe. Conſidering therefore, that he is not corrigible, we are driven to the very extremity of the Law, and with great heavineſs of heart we now proceed to the publication of the Sentence definitive, againſt him.

¶ Then brought he forth another Bill, containing the ſaid Sentence, and that he read alſo in his beggerly Latine. Chriſti nomine invocato, ipſumque ſolum præ oculis habentes. Quia per acta inaſtitata, and ſo forth. Which I have alſo tranſlated into Engliſh that Men may underſtand it.

Ex magna præſumptione Thomæ Arundel.

¶ Chriſt we take unto witneſs, that nothing elſe we ſeek in this our whole enterpriſe, but his only glory. Foraſmuch as we have found by divers acts done, brought forth and exhibited, by ſundry evidences, ſigns and tokens, and alſo by many moſt manifeſt proofs, the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle Knight, and Lord Cobham, not only to be an evident Heretick in his own perſon, but alſo a myſty maintainer of other Hereticks againſt the Faith and Religion of the holy and univerſal Church of Rome; namely about the two Sacraments (of the Altar, and of penance) beſides the Popes power and Pilgrimages; And that he, as the Child of iniquity and darkneſs, hath ſo hardened his heart, that he will in no caſe attend unto the voice of his Paſtor; Neither will he be allured by ſtraight admoniſhments, nor yet be brought in by favourable words: The worthineſs of the cauſe firſt weighed on the one ſide, and his unworthineſs again conſidered on the other ſide, his faults alſo aggravated or made double through his damnable obſtinacy (we being loth that he which is naught ſhould be worſe, and ſo with his contagiouſneſs infect the multitude) by the ſage counſel and aſſent of the very diſcreet Fathers, our honourable Brethren and Lords, Biſhops here preſent, Richard of London, Henry of Winchester, and Bennet of Bangor, and of other great learned and wiſe Men here, both Doctors of Divinity, and of the Laws Canon and Civil, Seculars and Religious, with divers other expert Men aſſiſting us: we ſententially and definitively by this preſent writing judge, declare and condemn the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle Knight, and Lord Cobham, for a moſt pernicious deteſtable Heretick, convicted upon the ſame, and refuſing utterly to obey the Church again, committing him here from henceforth as a condemned Heretick, to the ſecular juriſdiction, power, and judgment, to do him thereupon to death. Furthermore we Excommunicate and denounce Accuſed, not only this Heretick here preſent, but ſo many elſe beſides, as ſhall hereafter in favour of his error either receive him or defend him, counſel him or help him, or any other way maintain him; as very favors, receivers, defenders counſellers, aiders and maintainers of condemned Hereticks.

The ſaid Richard Clifford ſent another Copy thereof incloſed within his own Letters, unto Robert Maſcal a Carmelite Frier, which was then Biſhop of Hereford in Wales, written from Haddam, the 23. of October in the ſame year, the beginning whereof is as followeth: Reverende in Chriſto Pater, &c.

Robert Maſcall.

This Robert Maſcal directed another Copy thereof from London, the ſeven and twentieth day of November in the ſame year, incloſed in his own Commiſſion alſo, unto his Archdeacon and Deans in Hereford and Shrewſbury. And this is thereof the beginning. Venerabilibus & diſcretis viris, &c. In like manner did the other Biſhops within their Dioceſs.

That Church is a whore.

A worſhipp beareth the voice of a true paſtor.

Ex magnæ præſumptionis.

After that the Archbiſhop had thus read the Bill of his Condemnation, with moſt extremity before the whole multitude; the Lord Cobham ſaid with a moſt cheerful countenance, Though ye judge my Body, which is but a wretched thing, yet am I certain and ſure, that ye can do no harm to my Soul, no more than could Satan unto the Soul of Job. He that Created that, will of his infinite Mercy and Pitty ſave it. I have therein no manner of doubt. And as concerning theſe Articles before-rehearſed I will ſtand to them even to the very death, by the Grace of my Eternal God.

Mat. 10. Job. 1.

And therewith he turned him unto the people, caſting his hands abroad, and ſaying with a very loud voice, Good Chriſtian people, for Gods Love be well ware of theſe men, for they will elſe beguile you, and lead you blinfold into Hell with themſelves. For Chriſt ſaith plainly unto you, If one blind man leadeth another, they are like both to fall into the ditch.

Mat. 10.

He prayeth for his Enemies.

After this, he fell down there upon his Knees, and thus before them all prayed for his Enemies, holding both his hands and his eyes towards Heaven, and ſaying, Lord God Eternal, I beſeech thee of thy great mercy take to forgive my purſuers, if it be thy bleſſed will. And then he was delivered to Sir Robert Morley, and ſo led forth again into the Tower of London; and thus there was an end of that days work.

Ex vetuſta exemplari Londinenſium.

While the Lord Cobham was thus in the Tower, he ſent out privily unto his Friends: And they at his requeſt wrote this little Bill here following: cauſing it to be ſet up in divers quarters of London, that the people ſhould not believe the ſlanders and lies that his Enemies the Biſhop's ſervants and Priests had made on him abroad. And thus was the Letter:

A teſtimonial made by his friends.

FOraſmuch as Sir John Oldcaſtle, Knight, and Lord Cobham, is untruly Convicted and Impriſoned, falſly reported and ſlandered among the common people by his Adverſaries, that he ſhould both otherwiſe think and ſpeak of the Sacraments of the Church, and ſpecially of the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, than was written in the Confeſſion of his belief; which was intended and taken to the Clergy, and ſo ſet up in divers open places of the City of London: Known be it here to all the World, that he (never ſince) varied in any point therefrom, but this is plainly his belief, That all the Sacraments of the Church be profitable and expedient alſo to all them that ſhall be ſaved, taking them after the intent that Chriſt and his true Church hath Ordained. Furthermore he believeth, That the Bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar is verily and truly Chriſts Body in form of Bread.

To ſtop by-ing ups. A rehearſall of his belief.

In form of Bread, but not without Bread be meaneth.

The Clergy in hate of the people.

A cradice of falſe Prieſts.

Theſe are common ſcates.

After this, the Biſhops and Prieſts were in great diſcredit both with the Nobility and Commons; partly for that they had ſo cruelly handled the good Lord Cobham; and partly again, becauſe his Opinion (as they thought at that time) was perfect concerning the Sacrament. The Prelates feared this to grow to further inconvenience towards them both ways, wherefore they drew their heads together, and at the laſt conſented to uſe another practice ſomewhat contrary to that they had done before. They cauſed it by and by to be blown abroad by their feed ſervants, friends, and babling Sir John's, that the ſaid Lord Cobham was become a good man, and had lowly ſubmitted himſelf in all things unto holy Church, utterly changing his Opinion concerning the Sacrament. And thereupon, they counterfeited an Abjuration in his name, that the people ſhould take no hold of his Opinion by any thing they had heard of him before, and ſo to ſtand the more in awe of them, confidering him ſo great a man, and by them ſubdued.

This is the Abjuration, ſay they, of Sir John Oldcaſtle, Knight, ſometime the Lord Cobham.

An Abjuration counterfeited of the Biſhops.

Wolden. lib. Perſecutor. Clericorum Wiclevi.

IN Dei nomine, Amen. I John Oldcaſtle denounced, detected and convicted of and upon divers Articles favouring both of Hereſie and Error, before the reverend Father in Chriſt and my good Lord, Thomas by the permiſſion of God, Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and my lawful and rightful Judge in that behalf, expreſſly grant and confeſs, that as concerning the eſtate and power of the moſt holy Father the Pope of Rome, of his Archbiſhops, his Biſhops, and his other Prelates, the degrees of the Church, and the holy Sacraments of the ſame, ſpecially of the Sacraments of the Altar, of Penance, and other obſervances beſides of our Mother holy Church, as Pilgrimages and Pardons; I affirm (I ſay) before the ſaid reverend Father Archbiſhop and elſewhere that I being evilly ſeduced by diverſ ſeditious preachers, have grievouſly erred, and heretically perſiſted, blaſphemouſly anſwered, and obſtinately rebelled; and therefore I am by the ſaid reverend Father, before the reverened Fathers in Chriſt alſo, the Biſhops of London, Winchester, and Bangor, lawfully condemned for an Heretick.

Mark from hence thiſe grace, cometh.

Fine worde munthed trow.

Neverthelefs, yet I now remembring my ſelf and covening by this mean to avoid that Temporal pain which I am worthy to ſuffer as an Heretick, at the aſſignation of my moſt excellent Chriſtian Prince and Liege Lord, King Henry the fifth, now by the Grace of God moſt worthy King both of England and of France; minding alſo to prefer the wholſom Determination Sentence, and Doctrine of the holy univerſal Church of Rome, before the unwholſom Opinions of my ſelf, my teachers, and my followers, I freely, willingly, deliberately, and throughly confeſs, grant, and affirm, That the moſt holy Fathers in Chriſt, St. Peter the Apoſtle, and his Succeſſors Biſhops of Rome, ſpecially now at this time, my moſt bleſſed Father Pope John, by the permiſſion of God, the three and twentieth Pope of that name, which now holdeth Peter's ſeat (and each of them in their ſucceſſion) hath full ſtrength and power to be Chriſts Vicar in Earth, and the Head of the Church Militant. And that by the ſtrength of his office (what though he be a great ſinner, and afore-known of God to be damned?) he hath full Authority and power to rule and govern, bind and looſe, ſave and deſtroy, accuſe and abſoil all other Chriſtian men.

Alas good man thou art dereed.

And agreeably ſtill unto this I confeſs, grant, and affirm all other Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and Prelates in their Provinces, Dioceſs, and Pariſhes (appointed by the ſaid Pope of Rome to aſſiſt him in his doings or buſineſs) by his Decrees, Canons, or vertue of his office, to have had in times paſt, to have now at this time, and that they ought to have in time to come, Authority and power to rule and govern, bind and looſe, accuſe and abſoil the ſubjects or people of their foresaid Provinces, Dioceſs, and Parishes, and that their said ſubjects or people ought of right in all things to obey them. Furthermore, I confeſs, grant, and affirm, that the ſaid Spiritual Fathers, as our moſt holy Father the Pope, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and Prelates, have had, have now, and ought to have hereafter, authority and power for the ſtate, order and governance of their ſubjects or people, to make Laws, Decrees, Statutes, and Conſtitutions, yea, and to publiſh, command, and compel their ſaid ſubjects and people to the obſervation of them.

How prove ye that by the Scriptures?

No Scripture have they to ſhew.

Moreover, I confeſs, grant, and affirm, that all theſe foreſaid Laws, Decrees, Statutes, and Conſtitutions, made, publiſhed, and commanded, according to the form or ſpiritual Law, all Chriſtian people, and every man in himſelf is ſtraightly bound to obſerve, and meekly to obey, according to the diverſity of the foreſaid Powers, as the Laws, Statutes, Canons and Conſtitutions of our moſt holy Father the Pope, Incorporated in his Decrees, Decretals, Clementines, Codes, Charts, Reſcripts, Sextiles, and Extravagants over all the World; and as the Provincial Statutes of Archbiſhops in their Provinces, the Synodal acts of Biſhops in their Dioceſs, and the commendable Rules and Cuſtoms of Prelates in their Colleges, and Curates in their Parishes, all Chriſtian people are both bound to obſerve, and alſo moſt meekly to obey. Over and beſides all this, I John Oldcaſtle utterly forſaking and renouncing all the foreſaid Errors and Hereſies, and all other Errors and Hereſies like unto them, lay my hand here upon this Book or holy Evangely of God, and Swear, that I ſhall never more from henceforth hold theſe aforeſaid Hereſies, nor yet any other like unto them wittingly. Neither ſhall I give counſel, aid, help, or favour at any time, to them that ſhall hold, teach, affirm and maintain the ſame, as God ſhall help me, and theſe holy Evangeliſts.

Intolerable yokes lay they.

Never made he ſuch an Oath. And this maintain they ſtill. The Popes holy Bible of Papiſts.

Mark this handling.

And that I ſhall from henceforth Faithfully obey and inviolably obſerve all the holy Laws, Statutes, Canons, and Conſtitutions, of all the Popes of Rome, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and Prelates, which are contained and determined in their holy Decrees, Decretals, Clementines, Codes, Charts, Reſcripts, Sextiles, Sums, Papal Extravagants, Statutes Provincial, Acts Synodal, and other ordinary Regulies and Cuſtoms conſtituted by them, or that ſhall chance hereafter directly to be determined or made. To theſe and all ſuch other will I my ſelf with all power poſſible apply. Beſides all this, the Penance which it ſhall pleaſe my faid reverend Father the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury hereafter to enjoyn me for my ſins, I will meekly obey and faithfully fulfil. Finally, all my ſeducers and falſe teachers, and all other beſides, whom I ſhall hereafter know ſuſpected of Hereſie or Errors, I ſhall effectually preſent, ſend or cauſe to be preſented unto my ſaid reverend Father Lord Archbiſhop, or to them which have his Authority, ſo ſoon as I can conveniently do it, and ſee that they be corrected to my uttermoſt power.

This charge give they commonly.

¶ This Abjuration never came to the hands of the Lord Cobham, neither was it compiled of them for that purpoſe, but only therewith to blear the eyes of the unlearned multitude for a time. After the which like fetch and ſubtil practice was alſo deviſed the recantation of the Archbiſhop Thomas Cranmer, to ſtop for a time, the peoples mouths. Which ſubtilty in like manner was alſo practiſed, with the falſe recantation of the Biſhop Hooper, and divers other, as in their places hereafter (Chriſt granting) ſhall be ſhewed.

For confirmation of this hiſtory.

And thus much hitherto concerning the firſt trouble of Sir John Oldcaſtle Lord Cobham, with all the circumſtances of the true time, place, occaſion, cauſes, and order belonging to the ſame, wherein I truſt I have ſufficiently ſatisfied all the parts, requiſite to a faithful Hiſtory, without corruption. For the confirmation whereof, to the intent the mind alſo of the wrangling caviller may be ſatisfied, and to ſtop the mouth of the Adverſary (which I ſee in all places to be ready to bark) I have therefore of purpoſe annexed with all my ground and foundation, taken out of the Archives and Regiſters of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Ex Epiſtola Thom. Arund. ad Rich. Lond. Whereby may appear the manifeſt error both of Polydorus, and of Edward Hall, who, being deceived in the right diſtinction of the times, aſſign this Citation and Examination of the Lord Cobham to be after the Council of Conſtance, when as Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury at the Council of Conſtance was not alive. The Copy and Teſtimony of his own Letter ſhall declare the ſame, being written and ſent to the Biſhop of London in form as followeth:

Ex archivis & regiſt. Thom. Arun. Archi. Cant. Polydor. Edward Hall deceived.

{KING Hen. 5.}

The Copy of the Epiſtle of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, written to the Biſhop of London, whereon dependeth the ground and certainty of this foreſaid Hiſtory of the Lord Cobham above premiſed.

To the Reverend Father in Chriſt and Lord, the Lord Robert, by the grace of God Biſhop of Hereford, Richard by the permiſſion of God, Biſhop of London, health and continual increaſe of ſincere love: We have of late received the Letters of the reverend Father in Chriſt, and Lord, the Lord Thomas by the grace of God Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See, to this effect: Thomas by the permiſſion of God, Archbiſhop of Cantebury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apoſtolick See, to our reverend Brother the Lord Richard Biſhop of London, health and Brotherly love in the Lord. It was lately concluded before us in the Convocation of Prelates and Clergy of our Province of Canterbury laſt Celebrate in our Church of St. Paul, intreating amongſt other things with the ſaid Prelates and Clergy upon the Union and Reformation of the Church of England, by us and the ſaid Prelates and Clergy; that it was almoſt impoſſible to amend the hole of our Lords Coat which was without ſeam, unleſs firſt of all certain Nobles of the Realm, which are authors, favourers, protectors, defenders, and receivers of theſe Hereticks called Lollards, were ſharply rebuked, and if need were by the cenſures of the Church and the help of the Secular Power, they be revoked from their errors. And afterward having made diligent inquiſition in the Convocation amongſt the Proctors of the Clergy and others which were there in number out of every Dioceſs of our Province; it was found out amongſt others, that Sir John Oldcaſtle, Knight, was and is the principal receivers, favourer, protector, and defender of them, and that ſpecially in the Dioceſs of London, Rochester and Hereford, he had ſent the ſaid Lollards to preach, not being licenſed by the Ordinaries and Biſhops of the Dioceſs or places, contrary to the Provincial Conſtitutions in that behalf made, and hath been preſent at their wicked Sermons, grievouſly puniſhing with threatnings, terrors, and the power of the Secular Sword, ſuch as did withſtand him: alledging and affirming amongſt others, that we and our fellow Brethren, Suffragans of our Provinces, had not neither have any power to make any ſuch Conſtitutions: Alſo he hath holden and doth hold Opinion, and teach as touching the Sacraments of the Altar, of Penance, of Pilgrimage, and the worſhipping of Saints, and of the Keys, contrary to that which the univerſal Church of Rome doth teach and affirm.

A thing thought right neceſſary that the Lord Cobham ſhould be made out of the way, or elſe not poſſible for Papiſtry to flourish.

Wherefore, on the behalf of the ſaid Prelates and Clergy, we were then required that we would vouchſafe to proceed againſt the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle upon the premiſſes. Notwithſtanding for the reverence of our Lord the King, in whoſe favour the ſaid Sir John at that preſent was, and no leſs alſo for honour of his Knighthood: we with our fellow Brethren, and Suffragans then preſent, with a great part of the Clergy of our Province, coming perſonally before the preſence of our Lord the King, being then at his Manour of Kenington, put up againſt the ſaid Sir John a complaint, partly reciting the faults of the ſaid Sir John, but at the requeſt of our Lord the King, we deſiring to reduce the ſaid Sir John to Unity of the Church, without any reproach, we deferred all the execution of the premiſſes for a great time. But at the laſt, foraſmuch as our ſaid Lord the King, and his great travels taken about the converſion of him, did nothing at all proffit, as our ſaid Lord the King vouchſafed to certify us by word and writing; we immediately decreed to call forth the ſaid Sir John perſonally to anſwer before us at a certain time already paſſed, in and upon the Premiſſes, and ſent our Meſſengers with theſe our Letters of Citation to the ſaid Sir John, then being at his Caſtle at Cowling. Unto the which Meſſenger we gave commandment, that he ſhould in no caſe go into the Caſtle, except he were Licenſed. But by the mean of one John Butler, Porter to the Kings Chamber, he ſhould require the ſaid Sir John, that he would either Licenſe the ſaid Meſſenger to come into the Caſtle, or that he would cite him, or at the leaſt, that he would ſuffer himſelf to be cited without his Caſtle. The which Sir John openly anſwered unto the ſaid John Butler, declaring the Premiſſes unto him on the behalf of our Lord the King; that he would by no means be Cited, neither in any caſe ſuffer his Citation. Then we being certified of the Premiſſes, lawfully proceeded further.

Firſt, Having faithful report made unto us, that he could not be apprehended by perſonal Citation, we Decreed to Cite him by an Edict, to be openly ſet up in the Porches of the Cathedral Church of Rochester next unto him, little more than three Engliſh Miles diſtant from the ſaid Caſtle of Cowling. As we had thus cauſed him to be Cited, and our Edict aforeſaid to be publickly and openly ſet upon the Porches of the ſaid Church, that he ſhould perſonally appear before us the eleventh day of September laſt paſt, to anſwer unto the Premiſſes, and certain other things concerning Hereſie: The which day being come, and we ſitting in the Tribunal Seat in our great Chappel within the Caſtle of Leeds of our Dioceſs, the which we then inhabited, and whereas we then kept reſidence with our Court, and having taken an Oath, which is requiſite in the Premiſſes, and the Information by us heard and received, as the common report goeth, in the parts whereas the ſaid Sir John dwelleth (fortifying himſelf in his ſaid Caſtle) defending his Opinions manifoldly, contemning the Keys of the Church and the Archbiſhops power; we therfore cauſed the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle, Cited as is aforeſaid, to be openly with a loud voice called by the Crier; and ſo being called, long looked for, and by no means appearing, we judged him as he was no leſs worthy) obſtinate, and for puniſhing of his ſaid obſtinacy we did then and there Excommunicate him. And foraſmuch as by the order of the Premiſſes, and other evident tokens of his doings, we underſtand that the ſaid Sir John for the defence of his errors doth fortify himſelf (as is aforeſaid) againſt the Keys of the Church, by pretence whereof a vehement ſuſpition of Hereſie and Schiſm reſteth againſt him; We have Decreed, if he may be apprehended, again perſonally to Cite him, or elſe, as before, by an Edict, that he ſhould appear before us the Saturday next after the Feaſt of St. Matthew the Apoſtle and Evangeliſt next coming, to ſhew ſome reaſonable cauſe, if he can, why he ſhould not proceed againſt him, to a more grievous puniſhment, as an open Heretick, Schiſmatick, and open Enemy of the univerſal Church. And perſonally to declare why he ſhould not be pronounced ſuch an one, or that the aid of the Secular Power ſhould not be ſolemnly required againſt him. And further to anſwer, do, and receive as touching the Premiſſes, whatſoever Juſtice ſhall require. The which time being come, that is to ſay, the Saturday next after the Feaſt of St. Matthew, being the twenty fourth day of September, Sir Robert Morley Knight, Lieutenant of the Tower of London, appeared perſonally before us, ſitting in the Chapter-houſe of the Church of St. Paul at London, with reverend fellow-brethren and Lords, Richard by the Grace of God Biſhop of London, and Henry Biſhop of Winchester, and brought with him Sir John Oldcaſtle Knight, and ſet him before us (for a little before he was taken by the Kings ſervants, and caſt into the Tower:) unto which Sir John Oldcaſtle ſo perſonally preſent we rehearſed all the order of the Proceſs, as it is contained in the Acts of the day before paſſed, with good and modeſt words and gentle means; that is to ſay, how he the ſaid Sir John was detected and accuſed in the Conſecration of the Prelates and Clergy of our ſaid Province, as is aforeſaid, upon the Articles before-recited, and how he was Cited, and for his contumacy Excommunicate. And when we were come to that point we offered our ſelves ready to Abſolve him. Notwithſtanding the ſaid Sir John not regarding our offer, ſaid, That he would willingly rehearſe before us, and my ſaid fellow Brethren, the Faith which he held and affirmed. So he having his deſire, and obtaining licenſe, took out of his Boſom a certain Schedule indented, and there openly read the contents of the ſame, and delivered the ſame Schedule unto us, and the Schedule of the Articles whereupon he was examined, which was in form following:

The Lord Cobham caſt into the Tower.

The tears of the Crocodile.

Popiſh Abſolution neglected.

The Catholick Faith and Confeſſion of the Lord Cobham.

I John Oldcaſtle, Knight, Lord of Cobham, deſire to make manifeſt unto all Chriſtians, and God to be taken to witneſs, that I never thought otherwiſe, or would think otherwiſe (by Gods help) than with a ſtedfaſt and undoubted Faith to embrace all thoſe his Sacraments which he had Inſtituted for the uſe of his Church.

The Sacrament of the Altar.

Furthermore, that I may the more plainly declare my mind in theſe 4 points of my Faith; firſt of all I believe the Sacrament of the Altar to be the Body of Chriſt under the form of Bread, the very ſame Body which was born of his Mother Mary, Crucified for us, dead and buried, roſe again the third day, ſitteth on the right hand of his Immortal Father, now being a triumphant partaker with him of his Eternal Glory. Then as touching the Sacrament of Penance, this is my belief, that I do think the correction of a ſinful life to be moſt neceſſary for all ſuch as deſire to be ſaved, and that they ought to take upon them ſuch Repentance of their former life, by true confeſſion, unfeigned contrition, and lawful ſatisfaction as the Word of God doth preſcribe unto us; otherwiſe there will be no hope of Salvation.

Of Penance.

Of Images.

Thirdly, As touching Images, this is my Opinion, That I do judge them no point of Faith, but brought into the World after the Faith of Chriſt by the ſufferance of the Church, and ſo grown in uſe, that they might ſerve for a Kalender for the Lay-people and ignorant; by the beholding whereof they might the better call to remembrance the godly Examples and Martyrdom of Chriſt and other holy men: But if any man do otherwiſe abuſe this repreſentation, and give the reverence unto thoſe Images, which is due unto the holy men whom they repreſent, or rather unto him to whom the holy men themſelves owe all their honour, ſetting all their truſt and hope in them which ought to be refered unto God: or if they be ſo affected toward the dumb Images, that they be in any behalf addict unto them, either be more addicted unto one Saint than another, in my mind they do little differ from Idolatry, grievouſly offending againſt God the Author of all honour.

The Keys of the Church fully ſtouted.

Laſt of all I am thus perſwaded, That there be no inhabitants here in Earth, but that we ſhall paſs ſtraight either to life or puniſhment: for whoſoever doth ſo order his life that he ſtumbleth at the Commandments of God, which either he knoweth not, or he will not be taught them, it is but in vain for him to look for Salvation, although he run over all the corners of the World. Contrariwiſe, he which obſerveth his Commandments cannot periſh, although in all his life time he walked no Pilgrimage, neither to Rome, Canterbury, nor Compoſtella, or to any other place, whither the common people are accuſtomed to walk.

Of Pilgrimages.

This Schedule, with the Articles therein contained, being read (as is aforeſaid) by the ſaid Sir John, we with our fellow Brethren aforeſaid; and many other Doctors and learned men had conference upon the ſame, and at the laſt by the counſel and conſent of them, we ſpake theſe words following unto the ſaid Sir John there preſent: Behold Sir John, there are many good and Catholick things contained in this Schedule; But you have at this time to anſwer unto other matters which favour of Errors and Hereſies: Whereunto (by the conſent of this Schedule) it is not fully anſwered, and therefore you muſt anſwer thereunto, and more plainly expreſs and declare your Faith and Opinions as touching thoſe points in the ſame Bill; that is to ſay, Whether you hold, believe, and affirm, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the Conſecration right-ly done, there remaineth material Bread or not.

See whether theſe men pick quarrels where they need not.

Item, Whether you hold, believe, and affirm, that it is neceſſary in the Sacrament of Penance for a man to confeſs his ſins unto a Prieſt appointed by the Church.

The which Articles in this manner delivered unto him, amongſt many other things he anſwered plainly, That he would make no other declaration or anſwer thereunto than was contained in the ſaid Schedule. Whereupon we favouring the ſaid Sir John, with benign and gentle means we ſpake unto him in this manner: Sir John take heed, for if you do not plainly answer to these things which are objected against you, within a lawful time now granted you by the Judges, we may declare you to be an Heretick: but the said Sir John perfevered as before, and would make no other answer. Consequently notwithstanding, we together with our said fellow Brethren, and others of our Counsel, took advice, and by their counsel declared unto the said Sir John Oldcastle, what the said holy Church of Rome in this matter, (following the saying of blessed St. Augustine, Hievom, Ambrose, and other holy men) hath determined, the which determinations every Catholick ought to observe. Whereupon the said Sir John answered, That he would believe and observe whatsoever the holy Church determined, and whatsoever God would he should observe and believe. But that he would in no case affirm, that our Lord the Pope, the Cardinals, Archbishops, and Bishops or other Prelates of the Church, have any power to determin any such matters. Whereunto, we yet favouring him, under hope of better advisement promised the said Sir John, that we would give him in writing certain determinations upon the matter aforesaid, whereunto he should more plainly answer, written in Latin, and for his better understanding translated into English: whereupon we commanded and heartily desired him, that against Monday next following he should give a plain and full answer: the which determination we caused to be translated the same day, and to be delivered unto him the Sunday next following. The tenor of which determinations here follow in this manner:

Here is no mention made of the Word of God.

Wolves cloathed in sheeps skins.

The sum of the Popish belief.

The Faith and Determination of the holy Church upon the holy Sacrament of the Altar is this: That after the Consecration done in the Mass by the Priest, the material Bread shall be changed into the material Body of Christ; and the material Wine into the material Blood of Christ; therefore after the Consecration there remaineth no more any substance of Bread and Wine, which was there before. What do you answer to this Article?

Confession.

And the holy Mother-Church hath determined, that every Christian dwelling upon Earth ought to confess his sins unto a Priest Ordained by the Church if he may come unto him. How think you by this Article?

The Popes Supremacy.

Christ Ordained St. Peter his Vicar on Earth, whose Seat is in the Church of Rome, giving and granting the same Authority, which he gave unto Peter, also to his successors, which are now called Popes of Rome, in whose power it is to Ordain and Institute Prelates in particular Churches, as Archbishops, Bishops, Curates, and other Ecclesiastical Orders, unto whom the Christian people owe obedience, according to the Tradition of the Church of Rome. This is the determination of the holy Church: What think you by this Article?

Pilgrimage.

Besides this the holy Church hath determined, That it is necessary for every Christian to go on Pilgrimage to holy places, and there specially to worship the holy Reliefs of the Apostles, Martyrs, Confessors, and all Saints whomsoever the Church of Rome hath allowed: What think you of this Article?

Upon which Monday being the five and twentieth day of the said Month of September, before us and our fellow Brethren aforesaid, having also taken unto us our reverend Brother Benedict, by the Grace of God, Bishop of Bangor, and by our Commandment our Counsellers and Ministers M. Hen. Ware Official of our Court of Canterbury, Philip Morgan Doctor of both Laws, Henel Kiffin Doctor of the Decrees, John Kempe and William Carlton Doctors of Law, John Witnam, Thomas Palmer, Robert Wombwell, John Withe, and Robert Chamberlain, Richard Dittington, and Tho. Walden, professors of Divinity; also James Cole, and John Stevens our Notaries appointed on this behalf: They all and every one being Sworn upon the Holy Gospel of God, laying their hands upon the Book, that they should give their Faithful Counsel in and upon the matter aforesaid, and in every such cause, and to the whole World: By and by appeared Sir Robert Morley Knight, Lieutenant of the Tower of London, and brought with him the foresaid Sir John Oldcastle, setting him before us. Unto whom we gently and familiarly rehearsed the Acts of the day before passed. And as before we told him that he both is and was Excommunicate, requiring and entreating him that he would desire and receive in due form the absolution of the Church. Unto whom the said Sir John then and there plainly answered, That in this behalf he would require no Absolution at our hands, but only of God. Then afterward by gentle and soft means we desired and required him to make plain answer unto the Articles which were laid against him. And first of all, as touching the Sacrament of the Altar. To the which Article, besides other things, he answered and said thus: That as Christ being here on Earth had in him both Godhead and Manhood; notwithstanding, the Godhead was covered and invisible under the humanity, the which was manifest and visible in him: so likewise in the Sacrament of the Altar there is the very Body and very Bread, Bread which we do see, the Body of Christ hidden under the same, which we do not see. And plainly he denied, that the Faith as touching the said Sacrament determined by the Romish Church and holy Doctors, and sent unto him by us in the said Schedule, was the determination of the holy Church. But if it be the determination of the Church, he said that it was done contrary unto the Scriptures, after the Church was endowed, and after that Poyson was poured into the Church, and not afore. Also, as touching the Sacrament of Penance and Confession, he plainly said and affirmed then and there, that if any Man were in any grievous sin, out of the which he knew not how to rise, it were expedient and good for him to go unto some holy and discreet Priest to take counsel of him: But that he should confess his sin to any proper Priest or to any other, although he might have the use of him, it is not necessary to Salvation, forasmuch as by only contrition such sin can be wiped away, and the sinner himself purged. As concerning the worshipping of the Cross, he said and affirmed, that the only Body of Christ which did hang upon the Cross, is to be worshipped; forasmuch as that Body alone was and is the Cross, which is to be worshipped.

The Sacrament hath Body and Bread in divers re-spects.

How confession is to be allowed.

They call light darkness and darkness light.

What honour is to be done to the Cross.

He likes well to like.

So did the Pharisees deliver Christ unto Pilate.

The Pope is Antichrist, the Bishops are blasphemers, and the Priests his tail.

The bold talk of the Lord Cobham.

And being demanded what honour he would do unto the Image of the Cross, He answered by express words, That he would only do it that honour that he would make it clean and lay it up safe. As touching the Power and Authority of the Keys, the Archbishops, Bishops, and other Prelates, he said, That the Pope is very Antichrist, that is, the head; that the Archbishops, Bishops, and other Prelates be his members, and that the Friers be his tail. The which Pope, Archbishops, and Bishops, a man ought not to obey, but so far forth as they be followers of Christ and of Peter, in their life, manners, and conversation, and that he is the successor of Peter which is best and purest in life and manners. Furthermore, the said Sir John, spreading his hands, with a loud voice said thus to those which stood about him: These Men, which judge and would condemn me, will seduce you all and themselves, and will lead you unto Hell; therefore take heed of them. When he had spoken those words, we again, as oftentimes before, with lamentable countenance, spake unto the said Sir John, exhorting him with as gentle words as we might, that he would return to the unity of the Church, to believe and hold that which the Church of Rome doth believe and hold. Who expressly answered, That he would not believe or hold otherwise than he had before declared. Wherefore, we perceiving, as it appeared by him, that we could not prevail, at the last with bitterness of heart we proceeded to the pronouncing of a definitive Sentence in this manner:

Consentiunt in nomen adorandum Dominum & Christum ejus. Psal. 2.

¶ In the Name of God, Amen. We Thomas by the permission of God, Archbishop and humble Minister of the holy Church of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apostolick See, in a certain cause or matter of Heresie upon certain Articles, whereupon Sir John Oldcastle Knight, Lord Cobham, before us in the last Convocation of our Clergy of our Province of Canterbury, holden in the Church of St. Paul in London, after diligent inquisition thereupon made, was detected and accused, and by our said Province notoriously and openly defamed. At the request of the whole Clergy aforesaid thereupon made to us in the said Convocation, with all favour possible that we might (God we take to witness) lawfully proceeding against him, following the footsteps and example of Christ, which would not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should be converted and live, we have endeavoured by all ways and means we might or could to reform him, him, and rather reduce him to the Unity of the Church, declaring unto him what the holy universal Church of Rome doth teach, hold, and determin in this behalf. And albeit that we found him wandring astray from the Catholick Faith, and so stubborn and stiff-necked, that he would not confess his Error, or clear himself thereof, to detest the same; notwithstanding we favouring him with a fatherly affection, and heartily wishing and desiring his preservation, prefixed him a certain competent time to deliberate with himself; and, if he would, to repent and reform himself. And last of all, forsomuch as we perceived him to be unreasonable, observing chiefly those things which by the Law are required in this behalf, with great sorrow and bitterness of heart we proceeded to the pronouncing of the Definitive Sentence in this wise.

The Name of Christ being called upon, setting him only before our eyes. Forasmuch as by act enacted, signs exhibited, evidences and divers tokens, besides sundry kind of proofs, we find the said Sir John to be and have been an Heretick, and a follower of Hereticks in the Faith, and observation of the Sacred universel Church of Rome, and specially as touching the Sacraments of the Eucharist and of Penance, and that as the son of iniquity and darkness he hath so hardened his heart, that he will not understand the voice of the Shepherd, neither will be allured with his monitions, or converted with any fair speech: having first of all searched and sought out, and diligently considering the merits of the cause aforesaid, and of the said Sir John, his deserts and faults aggravated through his damnable obstinacy; Not willing that he that is wicked should become more wicked, and infect other with his contagion, by the counsel and consent of the reverend Men of profound wisdom and discretion, our Brethren the Lords Richard Bishop of London, Henry Bishop of Winchester, and Benedict Bishop of Bangor, and also of many other Doctors of Divinity, the Decretals and Civil Law, and of many other Religious and Learned persons our assistants, we have judged and declared sentencially, and definitively condemned the said Sir John Oldcastle Knight, Lord Cobham, being convict in, and upon that most detestable guilt, not willing penitently to return unto the unity of the Church, and in those things which the Sacred universal Church of Rome doth hold, teach, determin, and shew forth. And especially as one erring in the Articles above-written, leaving him from henceforth as an Heretick unto the Secular judgment.

Anstice of Alanus Copus.

Moreover, we have Excommunicated, and by these writings do pronounce and Excommunicate him as an Heretick, and all other which from henceforth, in favour of his error, shall receive, defend, or give him counsel, or favour, or help him in this behalf, as favourers, defenders, and receivers of Heretieks. And to the intent that these Premises may be known unto all faithful Christians, we charge and command you, that by your sentence definitive you do cause the Curates which are under you, with a loud and audible voice in their Churches, when as most people is present, in their Mother-Tongue, through all your Cities and Dioces to publish and declare the said Sir John Oldcastle, as is before said, to be by us condemned as an Heretick, Schismatick, and one erring in the Articles above said; and all other which from henceforth in favour of his errors shall receive or defend him, giving him any counsel, comfort, or favour in this behalf, to be Excommunicate as receivers, favourers, and defenders of Heretieks; as is more effectually contained in the Process. That by such means the erroneous Opinions of the people (which peradventure hath otherwise conceived the matter) by those declarations of the truth, how the matter is, may be cut off. The which thing also we will and command to be written and signified by you, word for word, unto all our fellow Brethren, that they all may manifest, publish, and declare throughout all their Cities and Dioces, the manner and form of this our Process, and also of the Sentence by us given, and all other singular the contents in the same. And likewise cause it to be published by their Curates which are under them, as touching the day of receipt of these Presents, and what you have done in the Premises, how you and they have executed this our Commandment. We will that you and they duly and distinctly certify us the business being done, by your and their Letters Patents, according to this Tenor. Dated in our Mannor of Maidstone, the 10th of October, An. 1413. and in the 18th year of our translation.

Thus have you here the judicial Process of the Bishops against this most noble Christian Knight, described by their own Letters and style. After all this, the sentence of death being given, the Lord Cobham was sent away, Sir Robert Morley carrying him again unto the Tower, where after he had remained a certain space, in the night season, (it is not known by what means) he escaped out and fled into Wales, where he continued by the space of four years.

Sir Robert Morley. The Lord Cobham returned again to the Tower.

A defence of the Lord Cobham, against Nicholas Harpsfield, set out under the name of Alanus Copus.

AS I was entring into this story of the Lord Cobham, after the tractation of all the former Histories hitherto passed, having next to set upon this present matter, luckily, and as God would, in such opportunity of season, as God may seem to work himself for defence of his Saints, cometh to my hands a certain Book of new-found Dialogues, compiled in Latin by Nicholas Harpsfield, set out by Alanus Copus, an English-man, a person to me unknown, and obscure hitherto unto the World, but now to purchase himself a name with Erostratus, or with the Sons of Enachim, cometh out not with his five Eggs, but with his six railing Dialogues. In the which Dialogues the said Alanus Copus Anglus (whether he under the armour of other, or other under title of his name, I know not, nor pass not) uncourteously behaving himself, intemperately abusing his Time, Study, and Pen, forgetting himself, neglecting all respect of honesty, and mild modesty, neither dreading the stroke of God, nor passing for shame, neither favouring the living, nor sparing the dead, who being alive as they never offended him, so now cannot answer for themselves being gone; thus provoking both God and man against him, after an unseemly fort, and with a foul mouth and stinking breath, rageth and fareth against dead mens ashes, taking now the spoil of their good name, after their Bodies lie slain in the field; his Gall and Choler being so bitter against them, that he cannot abide any memory after them to remain upon Earth. Informach that for the hatred of them he spurneth alfo against me, and fleeth in my face, for that in my Acts and Monuments, describing the History of the Church, I would fay any thing in the favour of them, whom the Romish Catholicks have so unmercifully put to death. The answer to whofe Book although it would require a several tractation by it self (as if Christ grant space and leisure hereafter it shall not be forgotten) yet because such opportunity of the Book is offered to me at this present coming now to the matter of the Lord Cobham, Sir Roger Acton and other, with whom he first beginneth to quarrel, it shall be requisite a little by the way to cope with this Cope, whatsoever he be, so much as truth shall give me for their defence to fay something. And here to cut off all the offals of his railing talk and unhoneft rebukes, which I leave to scolds and men of his profession against they list to brawle, let us briefly and quietly consider the matter for discussing of the truth. Wherein first I shall desire the Reader with equality and indifferency to hear both the parties to speak, as well what the Martyrs hence gone and slain could say for themselves, if they were present, as also what this man here doth object against them now being gone. And so according to the same to judge both upon them as they deserve, and of me as they shall please.

They call light darkness and darkness light.

Copus a barker against dead men.

Indifferency of the Reader craved.

Now to the scope of Master Cope's matter, which is this: whether this foresaid Sir John Oldcastle Lord Cobham (first to begin with him) is rather to be commended for a Martyr, or to be reproved for a Traitor? And whether that I in writing of him, and of Sir Roger Acton, with other moe in my former Edition, have dealt fraudulently, and corruptly, in commending them in these Acts and Monuments, or no? Touching the discussion whereof, first I trust the gentle M. Cope, my friend, neither will nor well can deny any part of all that hitherto, touching the story of the Lord Cobham, hath been premised; who yet all this while was neither Traitor to his Country, nor Rebel to his Prince, as by the course of his History hitherto the Reader may well understand. First, in the time of King Henry the fourth, he was sent over to France to the Duke of Orleans,

Whether the Lord Cobham be to be judged a Traitor or a Martyr.

The Lord Cobhams true and obedient to King Henry the fourth.

The Lord Cobham in the beginning favoured of King Henry the 5.

The Kings displeasure procured against the Lord Cobham by Popish Prelates.

The Lord Cobham obedient to the King.

The Lord Cobham constant in his Faith to the sentence of death.

Orleans; he did obey. Afterward, King Henry the fifth coming to the Crown, he was of him likewise well liked and favoured, until the time that Thomas Arundel with his Clergy, complaining to the King, made bate between them. Then the Lord Cobham being Cited by the Archbishop, at his Citation would not appear. But sent for by the King, he obeyed and came. Being come, what lowly subjection he shewed there to the King, the story declareth. After he yielded an obedient confession of his Faith; it would not be received. Then did he appeal to the Bishop of Rome for the which the King took great displeasure with him, and so was he repealed by the King to the Archbishop, and committed to the Tower; which also he did obey. From thence he was brought to his Examination once or twice: there like a constant Martyr, and witness of the truth, he stood to his Confession, and that unto the very Sentence of death defined against him. If this be not the effect of a true Martyr, let Alanus Copus say what he will, or what he can: This I say, at least I doubt, whether the said Alanus Copus Anglus, put to the like trial himself, would venture so narrow a point of Martyrdom for his Religion, as this Christian Knight did for his. Certes it hath not yet appeared.

To proceed, after this deadly sentence was thus awarded against him, the said Lord Cobham was then returned again unto the Tower; which he with patience and meekness did also obey: from the which Tower if he afterward by the Lords Providence did escape, whether hath Alanus Copus herein more to praise God for offering to him the benefit, or to blame the Man for taking that which was offered? What Catholick in all Lovan, having his House over his head on fire, will not be glad to have, if he might, the door set open to fly the peril? or else why did Alanus Copus fly his Country, having so little need, if this man bleeding almost under the Butchers Axe, might not enjoy so great an offer of so lucky deliverance?

Thus hitherto, I trust, the cause of the Lord Cobham standeth firm and strong against all danger of just reprehension. Who being, as ye have heard, so faithful and obedient to God; so submiss to his King; so found in his Doctrine; so constant in his cause; so afflicted for the truth; so ready and prepared to death, as we have sufficiently declared, not out of uncertain and doubtful Chronicles, but out of the true Originals and Instruments remaining in ancient Records: What lacketh now, or what should let to the contrary, but that he declaring himself such a Martyr, that is, a witness to the verity, (for the which also at last he suffered the fire) may therefore worthily be adorned with the title of Martyr, which is in Greek as much as a witness-bearer?

The Lord Cobham worthy the name of a Martyr.

The name of a Martyr what it signifieth.

Calumnia.

But here now steppeth in Dame Διαβολὴ, with her cousin scold Alecto, &c. who neither learning to hold her Tongue, nor yet to speak well, must needs find her a knot in a Rush, and beginning now to quarrel, inferreth thus: But after (saith he) that the Lord Cobham was escaped out of the Tower, his fellows and confederates, conventid themselves together seditiously against the King, and against their Country. A great crime no doubt, M. Cope, if it be true; so if it be not true, the greater blame returneth unto your self, so to enter this Action of such slander, unless the ground whereupon ye stand be sure. First, what fellows of the L. Cobham were these you mean of? Sir Roger Acton ye say, Master Brown, and John Beverly, with thirty six other, hanged and burned in the said Field of St. Giles's A marvellous matter, that such a great multitude of twenty Thousand, specified in story, should rise against the King, and yet but three persons only known and named. And then to proceed further, I would ask of Master Cope what was the end of this Conspiracy, to rebel against the King, to destroy their Country, and to subvert the Christian Faith, for so purporteth the story? As like true the one as the other. For even as it is like that they being Turks went about to destroy the Faith of Christ wherein they died, and to subvert their Country wherein they were bred; even so like it is that they went about to destroy the King, whom God and their Conscience taught to obey.

Sir Roger Acton Knight, Master John Brown, Esq. Jo. Beverly, preacher.

Yet further proceeds this furnish promoter in his accusation, and saith moreover, That these forefaid fellows and adherents of the Lord Cobham were in the Field assembled, and there incamped in a great number against the King; and how is this proved? By Robert Fabian. Which appeareth to be as true as that which in the said Robert Fabian followeth in the same place, where he affirmeth, that John Cledon and Richard Turmin were burnt in the same year, being 1413, when indeed by the true Registers they were not burnt before the year of our Lord 1415. But what will Master Cope say, if the Original Copy of the Indictment of these pretensed Conspirators do testify that they were not there assembled or present in the field, as your accusation pretendeth? But they purposed (you will say) and intended to come. The purpose and intent of a mans mind is hard for you and me to judge, whereas no fact appeareth. But give their intent was to to come, yet might they not come to those Thickets near to the Field of St. Giles, having Beverly their preacher, with them (as ye say your self) as well to pray and to preach in that worthy place, as to fight? Is this such a strange thing in the Church of Christ in time of persecution, for Christians to resort in desolate Woods and secret Thickets, from the sight of Enemies, when they would assemble in praying and hearing the Word of God? In Queen Mary's time was not the same colour of Treason objected against George Egle, and other moe, for frequenting and uling into backsides and fields, who suffered for that whereof he was innocent and guiltless? Did not Adam Damlip die in like case of Treason, for having a French Crown given him at his departure out of Rome by Cardinal Pool? What cannot cankred Calumnia invent, when she is disposed to cavil? It was not the Cardinals Crown that made him a Traitor, but it was the hatred of his preaching that stirred up the accuser.

{KING *Hen.*5. Rob. Fabian proved with an untruth.

An untruth in Al. Cop.

Alan. Copus taken with another untruth.

Praying and preaching in back corners a common thing in time of persecution. Yet will Alanus taketh all things to ywoll meaning.

In France what assemblies have there been in late years, of good and innocent Christians congregating together in back fields and coverts in great routs, to hear the preaching of Gods Holy Word, and to pray; yea, and not without their weapon also, for their own safegard, and yet never intended nor minded any Rebellion against their King. Whereupon in cases of Religion it may and doth happen many times that such Congregations may meet without intent of any Treason meant. But howsoever the intent and purpose was of these forefaid Confederates of the Lord Cobham, whither to come, or what to do (seeing this is plain by Records, as is aforesaid, that they were not yet come unto the place) how will M. Cope now justify his words, so confidently affirming, that they were there assembled seditiously together in the Field of St. Giles against the King? And mark here, I beseech thee, gentle Reader, how unlikely and untidely the points of this tale are tied and hanged together (I will not say without all subftance of truth, but without all fashion of a cleanly lie;) wherein these accusers in this matter seem to me to lack some part of Simons art, in conveying their Narration so unartificially. First, say they, The King was come first, with his Garison, unto the Field of St. Giles, and then after the King was there incamped, consequently the fellows of the Lord Cobham, the Captain being away, came and were assembled in the same Field where the King was, against the King, and yet not knowing of the King, to the number of twenty Thousand, and yet never a stroke in that Field given. And furthermore, of all this 20000 aforesaid, never a mans name known but only three, to wit, Sir Roger Acton, Sir John Brown, and John Beverly a preacher. How this jear is clampered together let the Reader judge, and believe as he seeth cause.

An unlikely tale.

But give all this to be true, although by no demonstration it can be proved, yet by the Popes dispensation, which in this Earth is almoit Omnipotent, he is granted; that after the King had taken the Field of St. Giles before, the Companions of the Lord Cobham afterward coming and assembling in the Thickets near the said Field, to fight seditiously against the King, their Country, and against the Faith of Christ, to the number of Twenty thousand, where no stroke being given, so many were taken, that all the Prisons of London were full, and yet never a mans name known of all this multitude, but only three; all this I say being imagined to be true, then followeth to be demanded of M. Cope, whether the Lord Cobham was here present, with his company in the Field, or not? Not in person (saith Cope) but with his mind and with his counsel he was present, and addeth this reason, saying, And therefore he being brought again after his escape, was convict both of Treason and Heresie, and therefore sustaining a double double punishment, was both hanged and burnt for the same, &c. And how is all this proved? By Robert Fabian he saith. Whereunto briefly I answer, that Robert Fabian in that place maketh no such mention of the Lord Cobham assisting or consenting to them either in mind or in counsel. His words be these, That certain adherents of Sir John Oldcastle assembled in the field near to St. Giles, in great number, of whom was Sir Roger Acton, Sir John Brown, and John Beverly. The which with thirty six moe in number were after convict of Heresie and Treason, and for the same were hanged and burnt within the faid field of S. Gyles, &c. Thus much in Fabian touching the commotion and condemnation of these men; but that the Lord Cobham was there present with them in any part, either of consent or counsel, as Alanus Copus Anglus pretendeth, that is not found in Fabian, but is added of his liberal cornucopiae, whereof he is so copious and plentiful, that he may keep an open Shop of such unwritten untruths, which he may afford very good cheap, I think, being such a plentiful Artificer.

The Lord Cobham no Traitor. Al. Cop. {KING Hen. 5. Hall. 11.

But here will be objected against me the words of the Statute made the second year of King Henry the 5th. whereupon this adversary triumphing with no little glory, ὥσπερ τι δικμεταὶ ἀνελαμβ& thinketh himself to have double vantage against me; first in proving these forefaid Complices and Adherents of the Lord Cobham to have made Insurrection against the King, and so to be Traitors. Secondly, in convicting that to be untrue, where in my former Book of Acts and Monuments I do report, how that after the death of Sir Roger Acton, of Brown and Beverley, a Parliament was holden at Leicester, where a Statute was made to this effect; That all and singular such as were of Wickliffs learning, if they would not give over (as in case of felony and other treſpasſes, loſing all their goods to the King) ſhould ſuffer death in two manner of kinds, that is, they ſhould firſt be hanged for Treaſon againſt the King, and then be burned for Hereſie againſt God.

Sir Sat. Reg. Hen. 5. an. 2. cap. 7.

The former edition of Acts and Monuments page 175.

Whereupon it remaineth now in examining this objection, and answering the same, that I purge both them of Treason, and my self of untruth, so far as truth and fidelity in Gods cause shall affist me herein. Albeit in beginning first my History of Ecclesiastical matters, wherein I have nothing to do with debatement of causes judicial, but only following the simple narration of things done and executed; I never suspected that ever any would be so captious with me, or so nice noted, as to press me with such narrow points of the law, in trying and discussing every cause and matter so exactly, and straining, as ye would say, the bowels of the Statute law so rigorously against me; yet forsomuch as I am thereunto constrained now by this adversary, I will first lay open all the whole Statute made the 2d year of this forefaid Henry the Fifth, after the death of the forefaid Sir Roger Acton and his fellows, at the Parliament holden at Leicester, Anno 1415. That done, I will note upon the words thereof, so as by the circumstances of the same may appear, what is to be concluded, either for the defence of their innocency, or for the accusation of this adversary. The tenor and purport of the Statute hereunder ensueth.

Notes upon the Statute aforeſaid.

Thus having recited the words of the Statute, now let us conſider the reaſons and objections of this adverſary, who, grounding peradventure upon the Preface or Preamble of this foreſaid Statute, will prove thereby the Lord Cobham and Sir Roger Acton, with the reſt of their abettors, to have been Traitors to their King and their Country. Whereunto I anſwer, firſt in general, that although the face or Preface prefixed before the Statute, may ſhew and declare the cauſe and occaſion original why the Statute was made, yet the making of the Statute importeth no neceſſary probation of the Preface always to be true that goeth before; which being but a colour to induce the making thereof, giveth no force material thereunto, nor is any neceſſary part of the body of the ſaid Statute; but only adhereth as a Declaration of the circumſtance thereof, and ſometime is clean omitted, and differeth much from the ſubſtance of the ſame. For as Statutes in Civil Policy moſt commonly do tend to a publick end, and are general; ſo Prefaces before Statutes, which moſt commonly declare the cauſe or beginning thereof, are private; and do ſtand only but upon particular facts; which either of ill will or diſpleaſure may be ſuggeſted, or by colour may be exaggerated, or for fear may be believed, at leaſt ſuſpected, as many ſuſpicions do oft times riſe in Princes heads through falſe ſurmiſes, and malicious complaints of certain evil diſpoſed about them, whereby many cruel Laws, riſing upon a falſe ground, are promulgate to the ruine of much innocent bloud. Example whereof we have not only in this preſent Statute, Anno St. ann 2. H. 5. cap. 15. ſecundo Regis Henrici 5. but alſo in the like Statute, commonly called the Statute Ex officio vel de comburendo, made by this Kings Father and Predeceſſor, Anno ſecundo Henrici quarti, cap. 5. In the Preface of which bloudy Statute is contained another like complaint of the Prelates and Clergy, not only as heinous, but alſo as ſtatutefully falſe and untrue, againſt the poor Lollards, as by the words of the complaint may appear, beginning, Excellentiſſimo & Gratioſiſſimo Principi, &c. Wherein moſt falſly they ſlander and miſreport the true ſervants of Chriſt to be Lollards, Hereticks, Subverters of the Commonwealth, deſtroyers of the Chriſtian Faith, enemies to all good Laws, and to the Church of Chriſt. The words of which Statute, proceeding much after the like courſe as doth this preſent Statute, may eaſily bewray the untruth and falſe ſurmiſe thereof, if thou pleaſe (gentle Reader to mark and conſer the words according as they are there to be read and ſeen, as followeth; Conventicula & confœderationes faciunt, ſcholas tenent & exercent, libros confciunt atque ſcribunt, populum nequiter inſtruunt & informant, & ad ſeditionem ſua inſurrectionem excitant, quantum poſſunt, & magnas diſſenſiones in populo faciunt, & alia diverſa enormia auditui horrenda indies perpetrant, in Fidei Catholicæ, & Eccleſiæ ſubverſionem, divinique cultus diminutionem, ac etiam deſtructionem ſtatus, jurium, & libertatum dictæ Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ. And after a few words, Adomnem juris & rationis ordinem atque regimen, penitus deſtruendum, &c. He that is or ſhall be acquainted with old Hiſtories, and with the uſual practices of Satan the old enemy of Chriſt, from the firſt beginning of the Primitive Church, unto this preſent time, ſhall ſee this to be no news, but a common, and as one would ſay, a Quotidian Fever among Chriſts children, to be vexed with falſe accuſations and cruel ſlanders.

Nemeſion the Egyptian, and true Martyr of Chriſt, was he not firſt accuſed to be a Felon? And when that could not be proved, he was condemned at the ſame judgment for a Chriſtian; and therefore being caſt into bands, was ſcourged, by the commandment of the Preſident, double to the other Felons, and at length was burned with the Thieves, although he never was found Thief nor Felon.

Againſt Cyprian in like ſort it was ſlanderously objected by Galerius Maximus Proconſul, Quod diu ſacrilegia mente vexerit, & nefaria ſibi conſpirationis homines adjunxerit, That he had long continued with a mind full of Sacrilege, and that he had gathered unto him men of wicked conſpiracy.

So Juſtinus Martyr, what falſe and criminous acculſations ſuffered he by Creſcens ? Cornelius Biſhop of Rome and Martyr, was accuſed of Decius, Quod ad Cyprianum literas daret contra remp. i.e. That he wrote Letters unto Cyprian againſt the Commonwealth.

To conſider the Laws and Statutes made by Tyrants and Emperors in the firſt Perſecution of the Primitive Church, againſt the innocent ſervants of Chriſt, and to compare the ſame with the Laws and Statutes in this later Perſecution under Antichriſt; a man ſhall find, that as they agree all in like cruelty, ſo was there no great difference in falſe forging of pretenſed cauſes and crimes deviſed. For as then the Chriſtians were wrongfully accuſed of the Gentiles for Inſurrections and Rebellions againſt the Emperors and Empire, for being enemies to all mankind, for murdering of Infants, for worſhipping the Sun (becauſe they prayed toward the Eaſt) for worſhipping alſo the Head of an Aſs, &c. upon the rumors whereof divers and ſundry Laws and Statutes were enacted, ſome ingraven in braſs, ſome otherwiſe wrote againſt them; ſo in this foreſaid Statute, Anno 2. Hen. 5. cap. 7. Alſo Anno 2. Hen. 4. cap. 15. and in ſuch other Statues or Indictments made and conceived againſt the Lollards, the caſe is not ſo ſtrange, but it may credibly be ſuppoſed, that the making thereof did riſe rather upon malice and hatred againſt their Religion conceived, than upon any juſt cauſe miniſtred of their parts, whom they did wrongfully charge and accuſe. Like as in the time of Domitianus, for fear of David's flock, all the Nephews of Jude the Lords Brother in the fleſh were accuſed to the Emperor. And alſo the like fear and hatred ſtirred up other Emperors, and the Senate of Rome, to proceed with perſecuting Laws againſt the Chriſtian flock of Chriſt; Euſeb. lib. 5. cap. 21. whereupon roſe up thoſe malicious ſlanders, falſe ſurmiſes, infamous lies, and wrongful accuſations againſt the Chriſtians; ſo that what crimes ſoever malice could invent, or ruth ſuſpicion could miniſter, that was imputed againſt them.

Not unlike alſo it may ſeem, that the Pope with his Prelates, fearing and miſdoubting leſt the proceeding of the Goſpel preached by theſe perſons, ſhould overthrow the ſtate of their Majeſty, did therefore by ſiniſter accuſations inflame the hearts of Princes againſt them, and under ſome coloured covert, to ſhadow their cloaked hatred, deviſed theſe and other like crimes which were not true, but which might cleanly ſerve their purpoſe.

This hitherto have I ſaid as in a general ſum, anſwering to the Preamble of the foreſaid Statute, for the defence of Sir John Oldcaſtle and Sir Roger Acton, and other, as not defining preciſely what was, or was not (for here I may ſay with Hall, that as I was not preſent at the deed doing, ſo with him. I may alſo leave the ſame at large:) But as one by tracing the footſteps of the truth, as by all conjectures hunting out in this matter what is moſt like, would but only ſay my mind ſine ſtrepitu (as Lawyers ſay) & ſine figura judicii.

Now conſequently it followeth that we deſcend to the ſpecial points and particulars of the foreſaid Preamble; to conſider what thereof may be collected, or neceſſarily is to be judged, either for proof or diſproof of this foreſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle and his fellows.

(A) And firſt, where the proem of this Statute beginneth with Rumors, Congregations and Inſurrections, &c. As it is not like, that if theſe men had intended any forcible Entries or Rebellion againſt the King, they would have made any rumors thereof before the deed done; ſo is it more credibly to be ſuppoſed, all theſe flouriſhes of words to be but words of courſe, or of office, and to favour rather of the rankneſs of the inditers Pen, who diſpoſed either per amplificationem rhetoricam, to ſhew his Copy, or elſe per maliciam papiſticam, to aggravate the crime, and to make mountains of molehills, firſt of Rumors maketh Congregations, and from Congregations riſeth up to Inſurrections; whereas in all theſe Rumors, Congregations and Inſurrections, yet never a blow was given, never a ſtroke was ſtricken, no bloud ſpilt, no furniture nor inſtruments of war, no ſign of Battel, yea no expreſs ſignification either of any rebellious word, or malicious fact deſcribed, neither in Records, nor yet in any Chronicle. Again, if theſe Rumors were words ſpoken againſt the King, as calling him a Tyrant, an Uſurper of the Crown, the Prince of Priests, &c. why then be none of theſe words expreſſed in their Indictments, or left in Records? doth Mr. Cope think for a man to be called a Traitor, to be enough to make him a Traitor, unleſs ſome plain and evident proof be brought for him to be ſo indeed, as he is called? Rumors (ſaith he) Congregations and Inſurrections were made. Rumors are uncertain; Congregations have been, and may be among Chriſtian men in dangerous times for good purpoſes, and no Treaſon againſt their Princes meant. The term of Inſurrections may be added in re ad ebtum, by practice, or ſurmiſe of the Prelates and Pen-men, who to bring them the more in hatred of the King, might add this rather of their own gentleneſs, than of the others deſerving. Certain it is, and undoubted, that the Prelates in thoſe days, being ſo mightily inflamed againſt theſe Lollards, were not altogether behind for their parts, nor utterly idle in this matter, but practiſed againſt them what they could, firſt to bring them into hatred, and then to death.

Examples of which kind of practice among the Papiſts Clergy have not lacked neither before nor ſince. Moreover, if theſe men had made ſuch a rebellious Inſurrection againſt the King, as is pretended in the Preamble before this Statute, which were a matter of High Treaſon; how chanceth then, that the whole body of the Statute, following after the ſaid Preface or Preamble, runneth in all the parts or branches thereof, both in matter of arreſt, of indictment, information, requeſt, allowance of Officers, cogniſance of Ordinaries, of the foreſaid, &c. upon caſes of Hereſie and not of Treaſon, as by particular tractation ſhall be (Chriſt willing) declared.

Inſurrection of the Lollards againſt the King not likely.

And forſomuch as theſe men be ſo grievouſly accuſed of Alanus Copus, for congregating and riſing againſt their King, and the whole Realm, if I had ſo much leiſure to defend, as he hath pleaſure to diffame; here might be demanded of him, to keep him ſome further play (touching this mighty Inſurrection, whereas they came in number twenty thouſand againſt the King) in what order of Battel-ray they marched, what Captains, under-Captains, and petty Captains they had to guide the Wings, and to lead the Army? whether they were Horſemen or Footmen? If they were Horſemen (as is pretended) what meant they then to reſort to the Thickets near to St. Giles's Field, which was no meet place for Horſes to fight? If they were Footmen, how ſtandeth that with the Author, which reporteth them to be Horſemen? Moreover, it is to be demanded, what Enſigns or Flags, what Shot, what Powder, what Armour, Weapons, and other furniture of War, alſo what Treaſure of Mony to wage ſo many, to the number of 20000, what Trumpets, Drums, and other noiſe neceſſary for the purpoſe they had? All theſe preparations for ſuch an enterpriſe ſequiſite and neceſſary to be had. And peradventure, if truth were well ſought, it would be found at length, that inſtead of Arms and Weapons, they were coming only with their Books, and with Beverly their Preacher into thoſe Thickets. But as I was not there preſent at the fact (as is before ſaid) ſo have I neither certainty to define upon their caſe, nor yet Maſter Cope, to exclaim againſt them, unleſs peradventure, that he, taking an occaſion of the time, will thus argue againſt them; that becauſe it was the hot Month of January, the ſecond day after the Epiphany, therefore it is like, that Sir John Oldcaſtle, with twenty thouſand Lollards, camped together in the Fields in all the heat of the Weather, to deſtroy the King and all the Nobles, and to make himſelf Regent of England; and why not as well the King, as Regent of England, ſeeing all the Nobles ſhould have been deſtroyed, and he only left alone to reign by himſelf?

(B) A Slander of the Lord Cobham, that he intended to deſtroy Chriſtian Faith.

It followeth more in the Preamble of the foreſaid Statute, (B) to admul, deſtroy and ſubvert the Chriſtian Faith, and the Law of God, and Holy Church, &c. He that was the forger and inventer of this report, as it appeareth to proceed from the Prelates, ſeemeth no cunning Dædalus, nor half his Craftſmaſter in lying for the Whetſtone. Better he might have learned of Simon in Virgil, more artificially to have framed and conveyed his narration. Which although in no caſe could ſound like any truth; yet ſome colour of probability ſhould have been ſet upon it, to give it ſome countenance of a like tale. As if he had firſt declared the Lord Cobham to have been before in ſecret confederacy with the great Turk; or if he had made him ſome Termagant or Mahound out of Babylonia, or ſome Herod of Judea, or ſome Antichriſt out of Rome, or ſome Grand-pancht Epicure of this World, and had ſhewed, that he had received Letters from the great Soldan, to fight againſt the Faith of Chriſt, and Law of God; then had it appeared ſomewhat more credible, that the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle, with his Sect of Hereſie, went about to admul, deſtroy and ſubvert the Chriſtian Faith and Law of God, within the Realm of England, &c.

But now, where will either he or Mr. Cope, find men ſo mad to believe, or ſo ingenious, that can imagine this to be true, that the Lord Cobham, being a Chriſtian, and ſo faithful a Chriſtian, would or did ever cogitate in his mind to deſtroy and admul the Faith of Chriſt in the Realm of England? Whatſoever the report of this purſuant or Preface ſaith, I report me unto the indifferent Reader, how ſtandeth this with any face of truth? That he which before, through the reading of Wickliff's Works, had been ſo earneſtly converted to the law of God, who had alſo approved himſelf ſuch a faithful ſervant of Chriſt, that for the faith of Chriſt he being examined and tried before the Prelates, not only ventured his life, but ſtood conſtant unto the ſentence of death deſtined againſt him; being a condemned and a dead man by law, Et qui quantum ad ejus devotionem pertinet & timorem, paſſus ſit quicquid pati potuit, who had, as much as to devotion and fear appertained, ſuffered already what he might or could ſuffer, as Cyprian ſaid by Cornelius; That he, I ſay, which a little before, in the Month of September, ſtood ſo conſtant in defence of Chriſts faith, would now in the Month of January rife to deſtroy, adnull, and ſubvert Chriſts faith, and the Law of God, and holy Church within the Realm of England?

Cypr. Ad. Epiſt. 2.

How can it be, not likely only, but poſſible to be true, that he which never in all the time of his life denied the faith; which ever confeſſed the faith ſo conſtantly; which was for the ſame faith condemned; yea, and at laſt alſo, burned for the faith, would ever fight againſt the faith and law of God, to adnull and ſubvert it? Let us proceed yet further, and ſee when he ſhould have ſo deſtroyed and adnulled the chriſtian faith and law of God in England, what faith or law then could he, or did he intend to bring into the Realm of England? the Turkes faith? or the Jewes faith? or the Popes faith? or what faith elſe I pray you? for he that will be an enemy to the faith of Chriſt, and will ſhew himſelf a friend to no other faith beſides, I account him not out of his right faith, but out of his right wits.

(C) And therefore, even as it is true, that Sir John Oldcaſtle with his Confederates and Abettors were up in Arms to ſubvert and extinguiſh the faith of Chriſt and law of God in the Realm of England, ſo by the like truth it may be eſteemed, that the ſame perſons roſe alſo to deſtroy their ſovereign Lord the King and his brethren. Firſt, thanks be to God, that neither the King nor any of his brethren had any hurt by him. But his intent, ſaith the Preface, was to deſtroy their ſovereign Lord the King. Wherevnto I anſwer with this interrogatory, whether was his intent privily to have deſtroyed him, or by open force of Arms? If privily, what needed then ſuch a great Army of 20000 Men, to atchieve that ſecret feat? rather I would think that he needed more the help of ſuch as were near about the King; as ſome of the Kings privy Chamber, or ſome of his ſecret Council; whereof neither Chronicle nor Record doth infinuate any mention. If his intent was openly to invade the King; you muſt underſtand, Mr. Cope, that to withſtand a King in his own Realm, many things are required, long time, great preparation, many friends, great aſſiſtance, and aid of Kindred, Mony, Horſe, Men, Armour, and all other things appertaining for the ſame.

(C) The Lord Cobham falſly ſlandered for intending to deſtroy the King.

How unlike it is that the Lord Cobham did riſe againſt the King.

Earl Goodwin of Weſtſax, who had married Canutus daughter, being a Man both ambitious, and as falſe a Traitor, for all his ſix Sons, and great Affiance, yet durſt not ſet upon King Edward to invade him in his Realm, although he fought many occaſions ſo to do, yet never durſt he enterpriſe openly that which his ambition ſo greatly preſumed unto.

Examples what an hard matter it is to riſe againſt the King.

In the time of King Henry the 3d. Simon Montfort Earl of Gloceſter, Gilbert Clare Earl of Leiceſter, Humfrey Rone Earl of Ferrence, with a great number of Lords and Barons, thought themſelves to have great right on their ſides: yet durſt they not, for all their power, openly aſſail the King in his Realm, before great debatement and talk firſt had between.

The Nobles againſt King Henry 3d.

Likewiſe what murmuring and grudging was in the Realm againſt King Edward, the ſecond, among the Peers and Nobles, and alſo Prelates (only Walter Biſhop of Coventry except) firſt for Gaveſtone, then for the Spencers, at what time Tho. Earl of Lancaſter, Guido Earl of Warwick, with the moſt part of all other Earls and Barons, concordly conſenting together to the diſplacing firſt of Gaveſtone, then of the Spencers, yet neither raſhly, nor without great fear, durſt ſtir up War in the Land, or diſquiet or vex the King, but firſt by all means of moderate counſel, and humble Petition, thought rather to perſwade, than to invade the King.

The Nobles againſt King Edward 2d.

In like manner, and with like grudging minds, in the Reign of King Richard the Second, Thos Woodſtock Duke of Gloceſter, the Kings Uncle, with the Earls of Arundel, of Warwick, and Darby, with the power almoſt of the whole Commons, ſtood up in Arms againſt the King; and yet notwithſtanding, all their power joyned together being ſo great, and their cauſe ſeeming to them ſo reaſonable, yet were they not ſo hardy, ſtraightways to fly upon the King, but by way of Parliament thought to accompliſh that which their purpoſe had conceived, and ſo did, without any War ſtriking againſt the King.

The Nobles againſt King Richard 2d.

After King Richard the Second was depoſed, and was in Priſon yet living, divers Noblemen were greatly inflamed againſt King Henry the fourth, as Sir John Holland Earl of Huntington, Thomas Spencer Earl of Gloceſter, the Earls likewiſe of Kent and of Salisbury, with Sir John Cheiney, and other more, whereof divers had been Dukes before, and now depoſed by King Henry the 4th. although they had conceived in their hearts great grudge and malice againſt the ſaid King Henry, yet had they neither heart nor power openly with mans force to aſſail the King, but ſecretly were compelled to atchieve their conceived intent, which notwithſtanding they could not accompliſh. Ex hiſt. D. Alban.

The Nobles againſt King Henry 4th.

Thus you may ſee, Maſter Cope, or elſe Maſter Hanyfield, or whatſoever ye be, to gainſtand a King, and with open force to encounter with him in his own Land, and in his own Chamber of London, where he is ſo ſure and ſtrong, what a matter, and of how great chievance it is, wherein ſo many and ſo great difficulties do ly, the attempt ſo dangerous, the chances ſo uncertain, the furniture of ſo many things required, that ſcarce in any Kings days heretofore any Peers or Nobles of the Realm, were they never ſo ſtrongly aſſiſted with power, wit or counſel, yet either were able, or elſe well durſt ever to enterpriſe upon a caſe ſo dangerous, notwithſtanding they were of themſelves, never ſo far from all fear of God, and true obedience. And ſhall we then think, or can we imagine (Mr. Cope) that Sir John Oldcaſtle, a Man ſo well inſtructed in the knowledge of Gods Word, being but a poor Knight by his degree, having none of all the Peers and Nobles in all the World to join with him, being Priſoner in the Tower of London a little before in the Month of December, could now in the Month of January, ſo ſuddenly, in ſuch an hot ſeaſon of the year, ſtart up an Army of 20 thouſand fighting Men to invade the King, to kill two Dukes his brethren, to adnul Chriſtian Faith, to deſtroy Gods Law, and to ſubvert holy Church? And why doth not he add moreover, to ſet alſo all London on fire, and to turn all England into a Fiſh-pool? Belike theſe Men, which give out theſe figments of Sir John Oldcaſtle, did think him to be one of Deucalion's ſtock, who by caſting of ſtones over his ſhoulder, could by and by make Men at his pleaſure, or elſe thar he had Cadmus Teeth to ſow, to make ſo many Harveſt men to ſtart up at once.

The Infurrection of the Lord Cobham againſt the King. Judged by the Continuance.

But let us conſider yet further of theſe 20 thouſand Soldiers, ſo ſuddenly without wages, without victual, or other proviſion congregated together, what they were, from whence, out of what Quarter, Country or Countrys they came. In other Kings days, whenſoever any Rebellion was againſt the King, moved by the Commons; as when Jack Straw, and Wat Tiler of Kent, and Eſſex roſe in the time of King Richard the 2d. When William Mandevil of Abington, Jack Cade of Kent, in the time of King Henry the 6th. In the time of King Henry the eighth, when the commotion was of Rebels in Lincolnſhire, then in Yorkſhire. When in King Edward the 6th time, Humphrey Arundel in Devonſhire, Captain Kette in Northfolk made aſſaults againſt the King, the Country and parts from whence theſe Rebels did ſpring, were both noted and alſo deſamed. In this ſo traiterous commotion therefore, let us now learn what theſe men were, and from what Country or Countrys in all England they came. If they came out of any, let the Chronicles declare what Countrys they were. If they came out of none (as none is named) then let them come out of Eutopia, where, belike, this figment war firſt forged and invented. Wherefore feeing neither the Countrys from whence they came, nor yet the names of any of all theſe 20000 do appear what they were, either in Chronicle or in Record, but remain altogether unknown, I leave it (gentle Reader) to thy judgment, to think thereupon, as thy wiſdom ſhall lead thee.

A rebellion to be of 20000, and yet no Country to be known from whence they came, it is not like.

Never was any Rebellion of Conſequence in England, but the ſpecial Country from whence they came was named and known.

(D) It

{KING Hen. 5.}

(D) Another falſe report of Sir John Oldcaſtle, that he intended to kill all manner of Eſtates in the Realm.

(D) It followeth more in the foreſaid Preface; And to deſtroy all other manner of eſtates of the ſame Realm of England, as well Spiritual as temporal, &c. By the courſe of this Preamble it appeareth, that the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle was a wonderful cruel Tyrant and Murderer, who being not yet ſatisfied with the bloud of the King, nor of the two Dukes his brethren, would alſo make havock and ſweep-ſtake of all manner of Eſtates in the Realm of England. What and leave no manner of Eſtate alive? No, neither Lord Spiritual nor Temporal, but all together ſhall be deſtroyed. And what had all theſe Eſtates done, thus ſo miſerably to be deſtroyed? Although perceaſe, the mood of this man might have been incenſed and kindled againſt the King, and the Lords Spiritual, by whom he had been condemned, as is aforeſaid; yet why ſhould all other manner of other Eſtates both ſpiritual and temporal be killed? If none of all the Eſtates in England, neither Duke, Earl, Baron, Lord, Knight, or other Gentleman had been his friend, but all his enemies, how then is it like, that he having all the Eſtates, Peers, Nobles and Gentlemen of the Realm againſt him, and none to ſtand with him, either could or durſt attempt any commotion againſt the whole power of the Land, he being but only Gentleman only, with Sir Roger Acton, and Mr. Brown left alone? At leaſt, good reaſon yet would, that thoſe hundred Knights ſhould have been ſpared out of this bloody ſlaughter, whom he offered to reduce unto the King, before, for his purgation. And finally, if this was his purpoſe, that all theſe Eſtates both ſpiritual and temporal ſhould have been cut down, what needed then that he ſhould have made himſelf a Regent, when as he might as well have made himſelf a King, or what elſe he would, being left then Prince alone?

(E) An hard matter to deſtroy all policy and laws of a Land.

(E) The Preamble as it began with untruth, and continued in the ſame figure, heaping one untruth upon another; ſo now endeth with another miſreport as untrue as the reſt, ſhewing and declaring that the intent of Sir John Oldcaſtle was alſo, To deſtroy all manner of policy, and finally, the Laws of the Land, &c. We read of William the Conqueror, otherwiſe named William Baſtard, who being a puiſſant Duke in his Country, when that the Crown of England was alotted to him, and he coming over with all his Peers, Nobles and Barons of his whole Land, into this Realm, and had with great difficulty obtained Victory againſt King Harold; yet to alter and deſtroy the policy and the Laws of the Land, it paſſeth his power. Inſomuch that it had not been permitted unto him to have proceeded ſo far as he did, unleſs he had firſt ſworn to the Nobles of this Land, to retain ſtill the laws of King Edward, as he found them. And albeit he afterward forſware himſelf, breaking his Oath in altering and changing many of the foreſaid Laws, yet wild he, he could not ſo deſtroy them all (for the which much war and great commotions endured long after in the Realm) but that he was conſtrained, and alſo contented to allow and admit a great part of the ſaid Laws of King Edward. And if he, being King and Conqueror, with all his ſtrength of Normans and Engliſhmen about him, was too weak and inſufficient to deſtroy all manner of policy and Laws of this Land which he had conquered; how much leſs then is it to be ſuppoſed that Sir John Oldcaſtle being but a private ſubject, and a poor Knight, and a condemned Priſoner, deſtitute and forſaken of all Lords, Earls and Barons, who to ſave his own life had more to do than he could well compaſs, would either take in hand, or conceive in his head any ſuch exploit, after the ſubverſion of Chriſtian Faith, and Law of God, after the ſlaughter of the King and all manner of Eſtates, as well ſpiritual as temporal, in the Realm of England, after the deſolation of holy Church, to deſtroy alſo all manner of policy, and finally, the Laws of the Land? Which monſtrous and incredible figment, how true it may ſeem to Mr. Cope, or to ſome other late Chroniclers of the like credulity, I cannot tell; certainly to me, and as I think, to all indifferent Readers, it appeareth as true as is the Verſe of the Satyr, wherewith it may well be compared;

Nil intra eſt oleam, nil extra eſt in nuce duri.

But here will it be ſaid again perhaps, that the matter of ſuch Preambles and Prefaces being but purſuants of Statutes, and containing but words of courſe, to aggravate and to give a ſhew of a thing which they would have to ſeem more odious to the people, is not ſo precifely to be canned, or exquiſitely to be ſtood upon, as for the ground of a neceſſary caſe of truth.

Objection.

This is it (Mr. Cope) that I ſaid before, and now do well grant and admit the ſame, that ſuch preambles or forefaces lined with a non ſequitur, containing in them matter but of ſurmiſe, and words of courſe, and rather monſters out of courſe, and many times riſing upon falſe information, are not always in themſelves material, or neceſſary probations in all points to be followed, as appeareth both by this Statute, and alſo by the Statute of this Kings Father, Anno 2. Henr. 4. cap. 15. beginning Exceſſus iſſimo, &c. And yet notwithſtanding, out of theſe ſame preambles, and forefronts of Statutes, and other Indictments, which, commonly riſing upon matter of information, run only upon words of courſe, of office, and not upon ſimple truth, a great part of our Chroniclers do often take their matter, which they inſert into their ſtories, having no reſpect or examination of circumſtances to be compared, but only following bare rumors, or elſe ſuch words as they ſee in ſuch fabling Prefaces or Indictments expreſſed. Whereby it cometh to paſs, that the younger Chronicler following the elder, as the blind leading the blind, both together fall into the pit of error. And you alſo, Mr. Cope, following the ſteps of the ſame, do ſeem likewiſe to err together with them for good fellowſhip. And thus concerning the face of this Statute hitherto ſufficiently.

The reaſon and cauſe how Chroniclers oft times be deceived.

Alan. Cope deceived by his Chroniclers.

Now let us conſider and diſcuſs in like manner firſt the coherence, then the particular contents of the ſaid Statute. As touching the which coherence, if it be well examined, a man ſhall find almoſt a Chimera of it, in which neither the head accordeth with the body, nor yet the branches of the Statute well agree with themſelves. Wherein he that was the drawer, or firſt informer thereof, ſeemeth to have forgot his Verſe and Art poetical.

Hor. art. poet.

Atque ita mentitur, ſic veris falſa remiſcet.
Primum ne medio, medium ne diſcrepet imo.

For whereas the Preface of the Statute ſtandeth only upon matter of Treaſon, conceived by falſe ſuggeſtion and wrong information; the body of the ſaid Statute, which ſhould follow upon the ſame, runneth only upon matter of Hereſie pertaining to the Ordinaries, as by every branch thereof may appear.

(F) The body of the Statutes, an. 2. Reg. Hen. 5. ca. 7. examined.

(F) For firſt, Where he ſaith, At the inſtance and requeſt of the Ordinaries or their Commiſſaries, &c. Hereby it appeareth, this to be no cauſe of Treaſon nor Felony. For that every man of duty is bound, and by the Laws of the Realm may arreſt and apprehend a Traitor, or a Felon, if he can; where otherwiſe by this Statute, an Officer is not bound to arreſt him which offendeth in caſe of this Statute, without requeſt made by the Ordinaries or their Commiſſaries; and therefore this offence ſeemeth neither to be Treaſon nor Felony.

(G) Secondly, Where it followeth, that the ſame Ordinaries and Commiſſaries do pay for their coſts, &c. This allowance of the Officers charges in this ſort proveth this offence neither Treaſon nor Felony.

(G)

(H) Thirdly, Where the Statute willeth the King to be anſwered of the year, day and waſt, &c. By this alſo is proved the offence not to be Treaſon; for elſe in caſes of Treaſon, the whole inheritance, I trow, Mr. Cope (ſpeaking as no great skilfull Lawyer) is forfeit to the Prince.

(H)

(I) The Fourth Argument I take out of theſe words of the Statute, Wherean ſuch Lands and Tenements which are holden of the Ordinaries, are willed wholly to remain to the King, as forfeit, &c. Whereby it is manifeſt, that the Prelates (for their matter of Lollardy only) were the occaſioners and procurers of this Statute; and therefore were barred of the benefit of any forfeit riſing thereby, as good reaſon was they ſhould. And thus it is notorious, that the Preface running ſpecially and principally upon Treaſon, and the Statute running altogether upon points of Hereſie, do not well cohere nor joyn together.

(I)

(K) Fifthly, In that such persons indicted shall be delivered unto the Ordinaries of the places, &c. it cannot be denied, but that this offence concerneth no manner of Treason, forsomuch as Ordinaries cannot be Judges in cases of Treason or Felony, by the laws of our Realm, Bract. in fine 1. lib.

(L) Sixthly, By the Indictments provided not to be taken in evidence, but only for information, before the Judges Spiritual, &c. It is likewise to be noted, to what end these Indictments were taken; to wit, only to inform the Ordinaries, which cannot be in cases of Treason.

(M) Lastly, Where it followeth toward the end of the Statute, touching escape or breaking of Prison, &c. By this it my lightly be smelt, whereto all the purpose of this Statute driveth, that is, to the special escape of the Lord Cobham out of the Tower, to this end, to have his Lands and Possessions forfeit unto the King. And yet the same escape of the Lord Cobham, in this Statute considered, is taken by Mr. Justice Stanford, in libro primo, of the Pleas of the Crown, cap. 33. to be an escape of one arrested for Heresie, where he speaketh of the case of the Lord Cobham.

John Stanf. of the Pleas of the Crown. lib. 1. cap. 33.

Moreover, as touching the parts of this forefaid Statute, how will you joyn these two branches together, whereas in the former part is said, That the Lands of such persons convict shall be forfeit to the King, not before they be dead; and afterward it followeth, That their goods and possessions shall be forfeit at the day of their arrest to the King? But herein standeth no such great doubt, nor matter to be weighed; This is without all doubt, and notoriously, evidently, and most manifestly may appear, by all the arguments and whole purport of the Statute; That as well the Preamble and Preface thereof, as the whole body of the said Statute, was made, framed and procured only by and through the instigation, information, and excitation of the Prelates and the Popish Clergy, not so much for any Treason committed against the King; but only for fear and hatred of Lollardy, tending against their Law, which they more dreaded and abhorred than ever any Treason against the Prince. And then to set the King and all the States against them, whereby the more readily to work their dispatch, they thought it best, and none so compendious a policy, as prettily to joyn Treason together with their Lollardy; wherein the poor men once intangled, could no ways escape destruction. Papæ consilium callidum.

The first procurers of this Statute.

Practice of Prelates to couple treason with heresie.

This, Master Cope, have I said, and say again, not as one absolutely determining upon the matter. At the doing whereof, as I was not present my self, so with your own Hall I may and do leave it at large, but as one leading the Readers by all conjectures and arguments of probability and of due circumstance, to consider with themselves what is further to be thought in these old accustomed practices and proceedings of these Prelates. Protesting moreover (Master Cope) in this matter to you, that those Chronicles which you so much ground upon, I take them in this matter neither to be as witnesses sufficient, nor as judges competent. Who as they were not themselves present at the deed done no more than I, but only following uncertain rumors, and words of course and office, bringing with them no certain trial of that which they do affirm, may therein both be deceived themselves, and also deceive you and other which depend upon them.

And hitherto concerning this Statute enough. Out of which Statute you see (Mr. Cope) that neither your Chronicles, nor you can take any great advantage, to prove any Treason in the Lord Cobham, or in his fellows, as hath been hitherto abundantly declared in the premisses.

Alan Copus pag. 833. 1.4.

It remaineth further, that forasmuch as you in your sixth Dialogue, with your Author Edward Hall, do alledge the Records, Et publica judicii Acta, to defame these men for Traitors (although what Records they be you bring forth never a word) I therefore in their defence do answer for them, which cannot now answer for themselves. And becaule you, to accuse them, do mention a certain Record, and yet do not shew us what Record it is, and peradventure cannot, if ye would: I have taken the pains therefore, for the love of them whom you so hate, to search out such Records, whereby any occasion can be raised against them. And first I will declare the Commission granted, then the Indictment commenced against them. {KING Hen. 5.}

The which Commission and Indictment, albeit in countenance of words will seem to minister much suspition against them, to the simple Reader, before he be better acquainted with these subtil dealings and practices of Prelates; yet trulling upon the goodness of the cause, which I see here so falsly and slightly to be handled, I nothing fear nor doubt to produce the same out of the Records in Latine as they stand; to the intent that when the crafty handling of the adversaries shall be disclosed, the true simplicity of the innocent, to the true hearted Reader, may the more better appear. The words first of the Commission here follow under written; which when thou shalt hear, let them not trouble thy mind, gentle Reader, I beseech thee, before thou understand further, what packing and subtle conveyance lieth covered and hid under the same

In cujus, &c. T.R. apud Westm. (B) x. die Jan. Per ipsum Regem.* (B)

By these high and tragical words in this Commission sent down against the Lord Cobham, Sir Roger Acton and their fellows; it may peradventure seem to the ignorant and simple Reader, some heinous crime of Treason to rest in them, for conspiring against God, the Church, the King and their Country. But what cannot the fetching practice of the Romish Prelates bring about, where they have once conceived a malice? Wherefore marvel not (good Reader) at this, nor judge thou according to the words which thou hearest, but suspend thy judgment a while till the matter be more opened unto thee. Examples of like handling be not so rare, but thou mayst soon judge by other times the like also of these. George Egle, of whom mention was made before, did but preach in time of Queen Mary, and yet Commission was directed against him, as in case of railing up a commotion ared against him, as in case of railing up a commotion against the Queen. Adam Damlip in Calis did but preach, against the Queen. Adam Damlip in Calis did but preach, and the receiving of one poor Crown two years before at Rome, was enough to make him a Traitor. In time of King

Examples of divers falsly accused for Treason.

{KING Hen. 5.} King Henry the Eighth, one Cmgleton, Chaplain to Queen Anne, the Queens Majesties Mother that now is, did but preach the Gospel, moved by zeal (as I have credible witness of his own Scholar that heard him speak it, being with him) and yet by vertue of a Commission it was objected to him, for railing up commotion against the King, yea, and also for killing of Pakington, and suffered for the same as a Traitor. So here, what matter or marvel is it, if the King incensed, or rather circumvented by the wrong information of the Prelates, whom he believed, gave out his Commission, against things never wrought nor thought?

Wherefore I exhort thee, Christian Reader, as I said before, judge not by and by the truth by the words of the Commission, but judge rather the words of the Commission by the truth. Neither measure thou the line by the stone, but the stone rather by the line. At least, yet defer thy sentence till both the Commission and the Indictment being laid together, thou mayst afterward see and perceive more what is to be judged in the case.

In the mean season mark well these words of the King in this Commission, (A) Cum nos plenius informemur, &c. By the which words it is easie to be understood, that the King himself had no certain knowledge thereof, but only by information of others (of Bishops no doubt and Prelates) and thereupon gave forth his Commission aforesaid. And then how will this stand with our Chronicklers, and other Epitomes and Summaries, whom Master Cope doth alledge? for if it be certain that Robert Fabian saith, That the King himself being in the Field took certain of them, as Sir Roger Acton, Master Brown, and John Beverley; and your own Edward Hall also, and your Epitome agreeth to the same; and saith moreover, that they were brought before the Kings presence: Thomas Cooper also, whom you alledge, addeth further, and saith, that the King there by strength did take them.

the English Chronicklers examined by the words of the Commission.

I pray you (Master Cope) what needed the King to write this by information, when as he himself was both present at the fact, was the taker of them, and a witness of the deed? The which if it be true that the King heard this but by way of information, how will you then defend your Chronicos and your Epitomas? But herein I will neither greatly stick with you, nor contend with them; desiring the Reader only to bear in mind the date of this present Commission when it was given, (B) which foundeth to be the 10th day of January, and afterward to compare the same with the date of the Indictment hereunder following, which I will (the Lord willing) also hereunto annex, leaving nothing out; yea rather, minishing to the adversary all manner of helps, whatsoever they can seek or require for their most advantage in this matter, to be defired. So sure and confident I am in the innocent cause of these good men, not fearing whatsoever blind malice can cavil against them.

Notes

Notes and Conſiderations upon the Indictment and Commiſſion above prefixed.

(A) Die Mercurii proximo poſt feſtum Epiphaniæ, &c.

(A) The firſt Note concerning the date and day both of the Commiſſion, and of the verdict of Jurors concurring on one day.

First, here is to be noted and conſidered (good Reader) the day and date of giving out the Commiſſion, and then of the verdict preſented by the Jurors which was both in one day, that is, on the Wedneſday next after the Epiphany, in the firſt year of the reign of King Henry the Fifth, which was the tenth day of the month of January (as the date of the Commiſſion ſaith) Anno 1413, after the uſe of England, or after the Romiſh uſe, Anno 1414, ſo that after the uſe ever we count whether it be Anno 1413, or elſe Anno 1414, the Dominical Letter beginning at the firſt day of January to change, muſt needs be G. for the year, and ſo neceſſarily make Wedneſday next after the Epiphany to be the tenth day of the ſaid month of January. Thus then this preſent Wedneſday, which was the tenth day of the month, being well noted and borne in mind, on the which day both the Commiſſion was directed, and alſo the verdict preſented, let us now proceed further in the foreſaid Indictment. It followeth.

(B) Per Sacramentum xii. Juratorum extitit præſentatum, &c.

¶ If there had been true dealing in this, the Jurors ſhould have been named. But it is not like that there was ever any ſuch Indictment found by any Jurors, and therefore they did beſt not to name the Jurors, leſt they would have denied this Indictment to be their act. It followeth more in proceſs of the Indictment.

(C) The third argument, by making a Regent, the King being not yet gone over.

(C) Et dictum Joan. Oldcaſtle, Regentem ejuſdem regni conſtituere, &c.

¶ If there were no other argument this were ſufficient to prove the manifeſt untruth of this furmiſed Indictment, when as the King was not yet gone to France, nor determined to go, how could they conſpire then to make a Regent? For the King went in July following, viz. the ſecond year of his reign, leaving behind him the Queen his Mother-in-law for Regent, whereby it may be gathered, that this matter was untruly entred and ſtollen into the records with an antedate, or elſe at the leaſt there appeareth manifeſt untruth, that they ſhould conſpire to make a Regent, when a Regent was not thought upon, unleſs it were already run into the heads of the Clergy, who ſhortly after fearing their Temporalties, as Coxton faith, perſwaded the King to make Wars in France. This word Regent therefore proceedeth of the ſecret ſpirit of the Clergy, and maketh the whole matter very ſuſpitious to be grounded altogether upon the malice of the Clergy, and their untrue ſurmiſes. It followeth moreover.

(D) The fifth argument by contrariety.

(D) Quaſi gens ſine capite in finalem deſtructionem, &c.

¶ How doth this ſtand with that which goeth before, that they conſpired to make a Regent, except you will ſay, that to make a Regent is to be a people without an head? It followeth.

(E) The ſixth argument by the perſons unknown.

(E) Cum quamplurimis rebellibus dicti regis ignotis ad numerum viginti milium hominum, &c. ¶ A ſtrange matter, that they ſhould know of the conſpiracy of twenty thouſand, and yet know of no more names of the rebels but the Lord Cobham only, or one or two mo, and all the reſt were ignoti.

(F) The ſeventh argument by the unſkilful penning.

(F) Privatim inſurgentes, &c. ¶ This ſmelleth of the Clergies own penning, without any great advice of learned Counſel; for otherwiſe ſuch as had been herein ſkilful would never have put in privatim inſurgentes.

(G) The eighth argument by the date and time.

(G) Die Mercurii proximo poſt feſtum Epiph. D. An. R. R. prædict. &c. ¶ This Wedneſday next after the Epiphany was the tenth day of the month of January, and the ſame day when both the conſpiracy was put in execution, and the ſame day when the Commiſſion was given out to enquire, alſo when the fact was by inquiry preſented. Whereby it may ſeem a ſtrange thing that ſo great a conſpiracy known before hand, was not ſuppreſſed nor inquired of by any Commiſſion, but only by a Commiſſion bearing date of the ſame day, upon which day, by the purport of the Indictment, the conſpiracy ſhould have been put in execution by open rebellion, as it is aforeſaid.

(H) Prædicti. D. noſtrum regem, fratres ſuos, viz. Tho. Ducem Clarentiæ, Jo. de Lancaſtre, & Humfr. de Lancaſtre, &c. ¶ If the Kings learned Counſel had dealt in this Indictment, as in caſe of Treaſon they ſhould have done, if it had been a matter of truth they would never have handled it ſo fleuderly, and wrongly, as to name the Dukes of Bedford and of Gloceſter, Fols. of Lancaſter, and Humfry of Lancaſter, who were made Dukes in the thirteenth year of the reign of King Henry the Fourth their Father, as appeareth by Caxtons Chronicle.

{KING Hen. 5.}

(H) The ninth argument, by error and wrong naming the Dukes.

(I) Et ibidem verſus campum prædictum, modo guerrino arriati proditorie, modo inſurrectiones, contra ligeantias ſuas equitaverunt ad debellandum dictum D. noſtrum regem, &c.

(I) The tenth note or argument by the ſilence of the party.

¶ This is falſified by plain evidence of Hiſtories, and Cope himſelf confeſſeth no leſs. For ſo he faith and confeſſeth, pag. 833. lin. 12. That Sir John Oldcaſtle was not there in perſon, but only that his conſent and good will was there.

The 11th note or argument.

Again, ſeeing this equitation or riding toward St. Giles field was upon the Wedneſday next after the Feaſt of Epiphany, as in this Indictment and proceſs of Outlawry is above teſtified, which was the tenth day of January, and Commiſſion alſo the ſame day was charged, and the Jury alſo impannelled the ſame day, and yet no Juror named; Item, the verdict the ſame day preſented; how all theſe can concur together, and all in one day, let the Reader after he have well conſidered the matter, uſe his judgment therein, not only whether it be like, but alſo whether it be poſſible.

The twelfth note or argument.

Over and beſide all this it is to be noted, that if this matter had been truly and duly handled, as touching the Treaſon, then had it not been needful to have brought Sir Jo. Oldcaſtle into the Parliament-Houſe before the Lords to be judged; for by his Outlawry (if it had been true) he was attainted, and without any more ado ſhould have had judgment in the King's-Bench as a Traytor. But the chief Juſtice knowing the handling of the matter, durſt not belike enterpriſe ſo far. Wherefore it was deviſed that he ſhould certifie the record into the Parliament, which he did, together with the Biſhops ſentence filed to the record, which was very ſtrange.

The L. Cobham, Sir R. Abbey, &c. proved no Traytors.

And thereupon the Lords gave ſuch a judgment as was not due for a Traytor. For that they gave no judgment, that he ſhould be drawn, hanged, and let down alive, and then Bowelled and Quartered, which is the judgment of a Traytor. And albeit the Parliament might have attainted him without any more ado, and by the ſame Act of Attainder have ordained a ſpecial judgment, as they ſhould think good; yet when he was before attainted by the Outlawry, they could not lawfully vary from the common judgment of Treaſon. At leaſt how could or ſhould the judgment of Sir Roger Acton, Maſter Brown, and John Beverly, who were judged in the Guildhall before, and without the Parliament, vary from the ſaid common judgment of Traytors, if they had truly committed and been convicted of ſuch High Treaſon?

The 13th note or argument.

Add this moreover to the foreſaid notes; that if Sir John Oldcaſtle after his eſcape out of priſon, had been culpable, and ſo attainted of that High Treaſon, whereby his lands had been immediately forfeit unto the King by the proceſs of his Outlawry; what needed the King then in the ſecond year of his reign, in the Parliament after holden at Leiceſter, have made that proviſo to have his land forfeit to him by vertue of Parliament, upon his eſcape on the day of his arreſt, when as the land, and chattel of his had been forfeit before, by the proceſs of the Outlawry, as is before ſpecified?

Thus you ſee, M. Cope, how little vantage you can wreſt out of this Commiſſion and Indictment againſt the L. Cobham and his fellows, to prove them Traytors. And admit the ſaid L. Cobham was attainted of Treaſon by the Act, and that the King, the Lords, and the Commons aſſented to the Act; yet it bindeth not in ſuch ſort, as if indeed he were no Traytor, that any may not by ſearch of the truth utter and ſet forth ſincerely and juſtly the very true cauſe of his death.

Anſwer to the Allegations of Fab. Pa. Fol. and Hall, &c.

Thus then having ſufficiently cleared the L. Cobham and his partners, from all that you can object unto them out of records and ſtatutes, let us now come to your Engliſh Chronicles wherewith you ſeem to preſs me, and to oppreſs them, whom {KING Hen. 5.} whom ye name to be Rob. Fabian, Ed. Hall, Pol. Virgil, Tho. Cooper, Rich. Grafton, with other brief Epitomes and Summaries, &c. Concerning which Authors, as I have nothing to ſay, but to their commendations, in this place: ſo if that you had avouched the ſame to the commendation rather than to the reproof of other, I would better have commended your nature, and believed your cauſe. But now like a ſpider-catcher ſucking out of every one what is the worſt, to make up your leyſtall, you heap up a dunghill of dutty Dialogues, containing nothing in them but malicious railing, virulent ſlanders, manifeſt untruths, opprobrious contumelies, and ſtinking blaſphemy, able almoſt to corrupt, and infect the air. Such is the malady and cacoethes of your pen, that it beginneth to bark, before it hath learned well to write. Which of yours nevertheleſs I do not here reproach or contemn, as neither do I greatly fear the fame. God of his mercy keep the ſword out of the Papiſts hand, it is not the pen of the Papiſts I greatly paſs upon, though twenty Copes and ſo many Sanderſſes were ſet againſt the Book of Monuments, were I ſo diſpoſed (M. Cope) to dally, or as the Greeks do ſay, ἀντικνᾶν, and to repay again in this ſatyrical ſort of barking I give you over, and ſuffer you therein to paſs not only your ſelf, but alſo Cerberus himſelf, if ye will, the great bandog of Pluto. Mildneſs and humanity rather beſeems and is the grace of the Latin phraſe. If ye could hit upon the vain thereof, it would win you much more honeſty with all honeſt men. But the Lord hereafter may call you, which I beſeech him to do, and to forgive you that you have done.

Modeſty commended in Writers.

Two things to be obſerved in ſtory Writers.

In the mean time ſeeing this your prattling pen muſt needs be walking, yet this you might have learned of theſe your own Authors whom you alledge, more civilly to have tempered your fume in exclaiming againſt them whoſe cauſe is to you not perfectly known. And now briefly to anſwer to theſe your foreſaid writers, as witneſſes produced againſt theſe men: there be two things (as I take it) in theſe Chronicle-writers to be conſidered; firſt the grounds whereof they follow: ſecondly, in what place they ſtand.

The ground of Hiſtories to be conſidered.

As touching the order and ground of writing among theſe Chroniclers, ye muſt conſider, and cannot be ignorant, that as none of all theſe by you forenamed was preſent at the deed, nor witneſs of the fact, ſo have they nothing of themſelves herein certainly to affirm, but either muſt follow publick rumor and hear-ſay for their Author, or elſe one of them muſt borrow of another. Whereof neither ſeemeth to me ſufficient. For as publick rumor is never certain; ſo one Author may ſoon deceive another.

All things not true that be found in ſtories.

By reaſon whereof it cometh oft to paſs, that as theſe ſtory-writers hit many times the truth, ſo again all is not in the Goſpel that they do write: wherefore great reſpect is here to be had, either not to credit raſhly every one that writeth Stories, or elſe to ſee what grounds they have whom we do follow.

Now to demand (M. Cope) of you, what authority or foundation hath your R. Fabian, hath Polyd. Virgil, Ed. Hall, and other of your Authors, to prove theſe men to be Traytors? What authority do they avouch? what Acts, what Regiſters, what Records, or out of what Court do they ſhew, or what demonſtration do they make? And do you think it ſufficient, becauſe theſe men do only affirm it, without further probation, with your sore ton, therefore we are bound to believe it? Take me not ſo M. Cope, that I do here diminiſh any thing, or derogate from the credit of thoſe writers you allege, whoſe labours have deſerved well, and ſerve to great utility: but coming now to trial of a matter lying in controverſie between us, we are now forced to ſeek out the fountain and bottom of the truth, where it is not enough to ſay, ſo it is, but the cauſe is to be ſhewed why it is ſo affirmed. And what though Robert Fabian, Polydore Virgil, and Edward Hall ſhould altogether (as they do not) agree in the Treaſon of Sir John Oldcaſtle, and of the reſt? yet neither is this any ſufficient ſurety to prove them Traytors; conſidering that Writers of Stories for the moſt part following either blind report, or elſe one taking of another, uſe commonly all to found together after one tune, tanquam Dodonei lebetes, ſo that as one ſaith, all ſay, and if one err, all do err. Wherefore you ſee Maſter Cope, how it is not ſufficient nor ſure to ſtick only to the names and authorities of Chronographers, unleſs the ground be found ſubſtantial whereupon they ſtand themſelves. Which Words without probation, are not ſufficient in Hiſtory matters.

Chronicles how far, and to what effect they ſerve.

yet in none of theſe whom you have produced doth appear.

Secondly, In alledging and writing of Chronicles, it is to be conſidered to what place and effect they ſerve. If ye would ſhew out of them the order and courſe of times, what years were of dearth and of plenty, when Kings kept their Chriſtmaſs, what Conduits were made, what Mayors and Sheriffs were in London, what Battels were fought, what Triumphs and great Feaſts were holden, when Kings began their reign, and when they ended, &c. In ſuch vulgar and popular affairs the narration of the Chronicler ſerveth to good purpoſe, and may have his credit, wherein the matter forceth not much whether it be true or falſe, or whether any liſteth to believe them. But whereas a thing is denied, and in caſes of judgment, and in controverſies doubtful, which are to be decided and boulted out by evidence of juſt demonſtration: I take them neither for Judges of the Bench, nor for arbiters of the cauſe, nor as witneſſes of themſelves ſufficient neceſſarily to be ſticked unto: albeit I deny not but Hiſtories are taken many times, and ſo termed for witneſſes of times, and glaſſes of antiquity, &c. yet not ſuch witneſſes as whoſe teſtimony beareth always a neceſſary truth, and bindeth belief.

Hiſtories not raſhly to be believed.

The Two witneſſes which came againſt Suſanna being Senators, both of ancient years, bare a great countenance of a moſt evident teſtimony, whereby they almoſt both deceived the people, and oppreſſed the innocent, had not young Daniel by the holy ſpirit of God, taken them aſide, and ſeverally examining them one from the other, found them to be falſe lyers both; leaving to us thereby a leſſon of wholſome circumſpection, not raſhly to believe all that cometh, and alſo teaching us how to try them out. Wherefore (M. Cope) following here the like example of Daniel in trying theſe your records which ye infer againſt theſe men, we will in like manner examine them ſeverally one from another, and ſee how their teſtimony agreeth: firſt beginning with your R. Fabian. Which R. Fab. being neither in the ſame age, nor at the deed doing, can of himſelf give no credit herein, without due proof and evidence convenient.

The teſtimony of Fabian againſt the Lord Cobham examined.

How then doth R. Fabian prove this matter of Treaſon to be true? what probation doth he bring? what authority doth he alledge? And doth R. Fabian think if he were not diſpoſed to conceive of the L. Cobham, and thoſe men, a better opinion but to be Traytors, that men are bound to believe him only at his word, without any ground or cauſe declared, why they ſhould ſo do, but only becauſe he ſo ſaith, and it pleaſed him ſo to write? And if ye think (Mr. Cope) the word only of this witneſs ſufficient to make authority, ſpeaking againſt the L. Cobham, and proving nothing which followed ſo many years after him; why may not I as well and much rather take the word and teſtimony of Richard Belward a Norfolk man of the Town of Criſam, who living both in his time, and poſſibly knowing the party, and puniſhed alſo for the like truth, is not reported, but recorded alſo in the Regiſters of the Church of Norwich, to give this teſtimony among other his articles, for the foreſaid L. Cobham, viz. that Sir John Oldcaſtle was a true Catholick man, and falſly condemned, and put to death without a reaſonable cauſe, &c. Ex regiſt. Norwic.

The teſtimony of Richard Belward for the Lord Cobham.

Ex Regiſtr. Epiſc. Norw.

Againſt this man if you take exception, and ſay, that one Heretick will hold with another; why may not I with the like exception reply to you again, and ſay as well, one Papiſt will hold with another, and both conjure together, to make and ſay the worſt againſt a true Proteſtant?

Further, yet to examine this foreſaid Fabian, witneſs againſt Sir J. Oldcaſtle, as Daniel examined the witneſſes againſt Suſanna: I will not here ask under what Tree theſe Adherents of Sir J. Oldcaſtle confpired againſt the King, and ſubverſion of the Land, but in what year, and in what month this Conſpiracy was wrought? Fabian witneſſeth, that it was in the Month of January. Contrariwiſe, Ed. Hall, and other our abridgmenters following him, do affirm that they were condemned in the Guild-Hall the 12th of December, and that their execution upon the ſame was in January following, ſo that by their ſentence the fact was done either in the Month of December, or elſe before, and ſo Fabianus mentitus eſt in caput ſuum, ut cum Daniele dicam, or if it were in the Month of January, as Fabian ſaith, then is Hall and his followers deceived, teſtifying the fact to be done in the Month of December.

Witneſſes againſt the Lord Cobham agree not together.

And

Fabian convicted of a manifeſt untruth in his ſtory of the L. Cobham. pub. pars. 7. in vita Hen. pag. 590.

And yet to object moreover againſt the ſaid Fabian, forſomuch as he is ſuch a raſh witneſs againſt theſe burned perſons, whom he called Traytors: it would be demanded further of him, or in his abſence of Mr. Cope, in what year this Treaſon was conſpired? If it were in the ſame year (as he confeſſeth himſelf) in which year John Cleidon the Skinner, and Rich. Turmine Baker were burned, then was it neither in the month of January, nor in the firſt year of King Henry the Fifth, for in the Regiſter of Canterbury it appeareth plain, that John Cleidon was condemned neither in the time of Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop, nor yet in the firſt nor ſecond year of King Henry the Fifth, but was condemned in the ſecond year of the Tranſlation of Henry Chicheſly, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the 17 day of Auguſt, which was the year of our Lord 1415. So that if this conſpiracy was in the ſame year (after the witneſs of Fabian) in which year John Cleidon was burned, then doth the teſtimony of Fabian neither accord with other witneſſes, nor with himſelf, nor yet with truth. And thus much concerning the witneſs of R. Fabian.

Ex Regiſt. Archiep. Cant.

The teſtimony of Polydore examined.

Let us next proceed to Polydore Virgil, whoſe partial and untrue handling of our Hiſtory, in other places of his Books, doth offer to us ſufficient exception not to admit his credit in this: And yet becauſe we will rather examine him, than exclude him, let us hear a little what he ſaith, and how he faileth, and in how many points, numbring the ſame upon my five fingers.

Five untruths of Polydore noted in our ſtory. Firſt untruth.

Firſt, ending with the life of King Henry the Fourth, he ſaith that he reigned fourteen years and ſix months, and two days, Angliæ Hiſtoriæ, Lib. 21. which is an untruth worthy to be puniſhed with a whole years baniſhment (to ſpeak after the manner of Apuleius) when as truth is, he reigned by the teſtimony of the ſtory of St. Albanes, of Fabian, of Hall, of our old Engliſh Chronicle, and of Scala Mundi, but thirteen and ſix months, lacking, as ſome ſay, five days; Hall ſaith he raigned but twelve years.

2. Untruth.

The ſecond untruth of Polydore is this, whereas he, ſpeaking of this ſedition of Sir John Oldcaſtle and his adherents, affirmeth the ſame to be done after the burning of John Hus, and Hierome of Prague, which was (ſaith he) Anno 1415, in which year (ſaith he) Thomas Arundel died. His words be theſe, In eodem concilio damnata eſt Johan. Wicliff. Hæreſis, ac Johan. Hus. & Hieronimus Pragenſis in ea urbe combuſti ſunt. Quod ubi reliquis conſocijs, qui etiam tunc in Anglia erant, patefit, tanquam furias agitati primum conjurationes in omnes ſacerdotes, deinde in regem, &c. In which words he not only erreth, falſly affigning the cauſe and occaſion of this ſedition to the death of John Hus, and of Hierome, but alſo miſſeth as much in the order and computation of the years. For neither was Sir Roger Acton with his foreſaid fellows alive at the time of the Council; neither doth he agree therein with any of our Engliſh writers, except only with Hall, who alſo erreth therein as wide as he.

3rd Untruth

For the third and fourth untruth I note this, where he addeth and ſaith, that after this rebellion raiſed againſt the King, the ſaid Sir John Oldcaſtle, being there preſent himſelf, was taken and priſoned in the Tower, and afterward eſcaped out of the ſaid Tower by night; wherein is contained a double untruth. For neither was Sir John Oldcaſtle there preſent himſelf, if we believe Fabian and Cope, Dial. 6. pag. 833. lin. 11. neither yet did he ever eſcape out of the Tower after that conſpiracy, if ever any ſuch conſpiracy was.

Cope pag. 833. lin. 11.

5. Untruth.

His fifth, but not the laſt untruth in Polydore, is this, that he ſaith, Tho. Arundel to have died in the ſame year, noting the year to be Anno 1415, whereas by the true Regiſters he died Anno 1414.

Another untruth in Polydore noted

To this untruth another may be joyned, where he erring in the computation of the years of the ſaid Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury, reporteth him to ſit twenty two years. Who was there Archbiſhop but only eighteen years, as is to be ſeen in the Records of Canterbury. The words of Polydore be theſe, Thomas Arundelius Cantuarienſis antiſtes annum jam tunc ſedens tertium & vigeſimum e vita exceſſit, lib. 22. Aug. Hiſt. Albeit in this I do not greatly contend with Polydore, and peradventure the adverſary will find ſome eaſie ſhift for this matter.

But let us now paſs from Polydore, not (as they ſay) out of the Hall into the Kitchin, but out of the Kitchin into the Hall, examining and perpending what ſaith Edward Hall another witneſs in this matter; upon whom Mr. Cope bindeth ſo faſt, that he ſuppoſeth his knot is never able to be looſed. And moreover he ſo treadeth me down under his feet in the dirt (as a man would think him ſome dirt-daubers ſon) ſo that the ſpots thereof, he ſaith, will never be gotten out while the world ſtandeth, and a day longer. Nothwithſtanding I truſt, Maſter Cope, that your dirty pen with your cockiſh brags hath not ſo debauched and beſpotted me, nor yet convicted me to be ſuch a depraver of Hiſtories. But I hope to ſpunge it out. At leaſt way, with a little aſperges of the Popes holy water, I truſt to come to a Deallbaber well enough.

The teſtimony of Hall againſt the L. Cob. examined.

But certes Mr. Cope, your Maſterſhip muſt firſt underſtand, that if ye think ſo to depreſs and diſprove me of untruth in my Hiſtory, you muſt go more groundly to work, and bring againſt me other Authors than Edward Hall. You muſt conſider Mr. Cope, if you be a controller of ſtory-matters, it is not enough for you to bring a railing ſpirit, or a mind diſpoſed to carp and cavil where any matter may be picked: diligence is required, and great ſearching out of Books and Authors, not only of our time, but of all ages. And eſpecially where matters of Religion are touched pertaining to the Church, it is not ſufficient to ſee what Fabian or what Hall ſaith; but the Records muſt be ſought, the Regiſters muſt be turned over, Letters alſo and ancient Inſtruments ought to be peruſed, and Authors with the ſame compared; finally, the Writers amongſt themſelves one to be conferred with another. And ſo with judgment matters are to be weighed, with diligence to be laboured, and with ſimplicity pure from all addition and partiality to be uttered.

Thus did Aventinus, thus did Sleidanus, write. Theſe helps alſo the eldeſt and beſt Hiſtoricians ſeemed to have, both Titus Livius, Saluſtius, Quintus Curtius, and ſuch like, as by their Letters and Records inferred may well appear. The ſame helps likewiſe both in your Fabian and in your Edward Hall were to be required, but eſpecially in you (Mr. Cope) your ſelf, which take upon you to cockiſhly (rather than wiſely) to be a controller and maſter Moderator of other mens matters. In which matters (to ſay the truth) you have no great skill, and leſs experience, neither have you ſuch plenty of Authors meet for that purpoſe, nor yet ever travelled to ſearch out the origines and grounds of that whereof ye write. But only contented with ſuch as cometh next to hand, or peradventure, receiving ſuch Alms as ſome of your poor friends beſtow upon you, you think it ſufficient if you can alledge Fabian and Hall for your purpoſe.

Hall in the ſtory of the Lord Cobham, and Sir Roger Acton, agreeth not with other ſtories. Untruth in Hall noted.

Cope a carrier of Authors whereof he hath no skill.

Now what purpoſe and affection herein doth lead you, or rather doth drive you to the carping and barking againſt the Hiſtory of theſe good men, that be hence gone and had their puniſhment, all men may ſee it to be no ſimple ſincerity of a mind indifferent, but the zeal only of your Sect of Popery, or rather of fury, which ſetteth your railing ſpirit on fire. But now out of the fiery Kitchin to come to the Hall again, let us ſee what matter lieth in the teſtimony of Edward Hall, to prove theſe men to be Traitors. And here forſomuch (M. Cope) as you ſeem neither ſufficiently acquainted with this your own Maſter and Author Maſter Hall, nor yet well experienced in the ſearching out of Hiſtories, I will take a little pains for you, in this behalf, to certifie you, concerning the ſtory of this Author, whereof perchaſe you your ſelf are ignorant.

Hall doubtfulls in the ſtory of Sir R. Acton, &c.

Anſwer to Ed. Hall.

The truth whereof is this, that as the ſaid Edward Hall, your great Maſter and Taſter, was about the compiling of his ſtory, certain there were which reſorted to him, of whom ſome were drawers of his Pedigree and Vineat, ſome were Gravers, the names of whom were John Betts, and Tyral, which be now both dead. And other there were of the ſame ſodality, who be yet alive, and were then in the houſe of Richard Grafton both the Printer of the ſaid Book, and alſo (as is thought) a great helper of the penning of the ſame. It ſo befel, that as Hall was entring into the ſtory of Sir John Oldcaſtle, of Sir Roger Acton and their fellows, the Book of John Bale, touching the ſtory of the Lord Cobham, was the ſame time newly come over. Which Book was privily conveyed by one of his ſervants into the Study of Hall, ſo that in turning over his Books it muſt needs come to his hands. At the ſight wherewhereof, when he ſaw the ground and reaſons in that Book contained, he turned to the Authors in the foreſaid Book alledged, whereupon within two nights after, moved by what cauſe, I know not, but ſo it was, that he taking his pen, raced and cancelled all that he had written before againſt Sir John Oldcaſtle and his fellows; and was now ready to go to the print, containing near to the quantity of three Pages. And left (M. Cope) you, or any other ſhould think me to ſpeak belide my Books, be it therefore known both to you, and to all other, by theſe preſents, that the very ſelf ſame firſt Copy of Hall, raced and croſſed with his own pen, remaineth in my hands to be ſhewed and ſeen, as need ſhall require. The matter which he cancelled out, came to this effect. Wherein he following the Narration of Polydore, began with like words to declare how the Sacramentaries here in England, after the death of Jo. Huſſe, and Hierome of Prague, being pricked, as he ſaith, with a Demoniacal ſting, firſt conſpired againſt the Prieſts, and after againſt the King, having to their Captains Sir John Oldcaſtle the Lord Cobham, and Sir Roger Acton Knight, with many moe words to the like purpoſe and effect, as Polydore, and other ſuch like Chronicles do write againſt him. All which matter notwithſtanding the ſaid Hall with his pen at the ſight of John Bales Book, did utterly extinguiſh and aboliſh; adding in the place thereof the words of Maſter Bales Book, touching the accuſation and condemnation of the ſaid Lord Cobham before Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury, taken out of the Letter of the ſaid Archbiſhop, as is in his own Story to be ſeen: In vita Hen. 5. Pag. 2. lin. 30.

{KING} 1 Hen. 5.

Hall raceth out his own ſtory originall againſt the Lord Cobham.

The teſtimony of Hall againſt the L. Cob. examined.

Hall in vita Hen. 5. pag. 2. lin. 30.

And thus Ed. Hall your Author, revoking and calling back all that he had deviſed before againſt the L. Cobham (whereof I have his own hand to ſhew, and witneſs ſubſtantial upon the ſame) in his printed Book recordeth of him no more, but only hereuth the proceſs between the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and him for matters of Religion. And ſo ending with Sir John Oldcaſtle, he proceedeth further to the aſſembly of Sir Roger Acton (whom he falſly calleth Robert Acton) Jo. Browne, and Beverly, the Narration whereof he handleth in ſuch ſort, that he neither agreeth with the record of other writers, nor yet with the truth it ſelf. For where he excludeth the L. Cobham out of that aſſembly, he diſcordeth therein from Polydore and other; and where he affirmeth the fact of that conſpiracy to be wrought before, or at the twelfth day of December; that is manifeſtly falſe, if the records before alledged be true. And where he reporteth this aſſembly to be after the burning of John Huſſe, and of Jerome of Prague, therein he accordeth with Polydore, but not with the truth. Moreover ſo doubtful he is and ambiguous, in declaration of his ſtory, that no great certainty can be gathered of him.

Hall no witneſs in Sir Roger Acton caſe.

Firſt, as touching the confeſſion of them, he confeſſeth himſelf that he ſaw it not, and therefore leaveth it at large. And as concerning the cauſes of their death, he leaveth the matter in doubt, not daring (as doth M. Cope) to define or pronounce any thing thereof, but only recite the ſurmiſes and minds of divers men diverſly, ſome thinking it was of conveying the L. Cobham out of the Tower, ſome that it was for Treaſon and Hereſie; and here cometh in the mention only of a record, but what record it is he neither doth he utter it, nor doth he examine it; otherwiſe againſt affirming (as he ſaith) that it was for ſained cauſes furniſhed by the Spiritualty, more of diſpleaſure than truth. And thus your Author Hall, having recited the variety of mens opinions, determineth himſelf no certain thing thereof, but as one indifferent, neither bound to the conjectures of all men, nor to the witneſſes of all men, referreth the whole judgment of the matter free unto the Reader. And ſo concluding his Narration, forſomuch as he was neither a witneſs of the fact, nor preſent at the deed, he overpaſſeth the ſtory thereof.

And what witneſs then will you, or can you (Maſter Cope) take of Edw. Hall, which denieth himſelf to be a witneſs? Will you compell him to ſay that he ſaw not? and to witneſs that he cannot? Wherefore like as Suſanna in the ſtory of Daniel, was quit by right judgment in the caſe of adultery, becauſe her accuſers and Teſtes being examined aſunder were found to vary and halt in their tale, and not to agree in the two trees; ſo why may not in like caſe of Treaſon, Sir Roger Acton, Sir John Oldcaſtle, Brown with the reſt, claim the ſame priviledg? ſeeing among the Teſtes and witneſſes produced againſt them ſuch diſcord is found, and ſuch halting among them, that neither do they agree in place, perſon, year, day, nor month.

Remembrance noted in the witneſs againſt the L. Cobham, and Sir R. Acton.

1. For firſt, where Fabian and his fellows ſay, that they were aſſembled together in a great company in the field near to Saint Giles, the forged Indictment above alledged, ſaith, they were but riding toward the field.

1 Repugnance in the place.

2. Secondly, where the foreſaid Indictment and Polydore give the L. Cobham to be preſent perſonally in that aſſembly, Hall, and Alanus Copus Anglus, do exclude his perſonal preſence from thence; and ſo doth Fabian alſo ſeem to agree, ſpeaking only of the adherents of Sir John Oldcaſtle.

2 Repugnance in the perſon. Alanus Copus, pag. 833. lin. 121

3. Where Hall and Polydore report this aſſembly to be after the burning of John Hus, and of Jerome at the Council of Conſtance, which was Ann. 1415, that cannot be, but if there were any ſuch conſpiracy in the firſt year of Hen. V. it muſt needs be in Ann. 1413. And here by the way, why do certain of your Epitom-writers, ſpeaking of the L. Cobham, committed firſt to the Tower for Hereſie, refer the ſaid impriſonment to the year 1412, whereas by their own count reckoning the year from the Annunciation, it muſt needs be Ann. 1413. being done in harveſt time.

3 Repugnance in the year.

4. Fourthly, where Hall with his followers affirm that Sir Roger Acton, Brown and Beverly were condemned the twelfth day of December, the record is evident againſt it, which holdeth the fact to be in working the tenth day of January.

4 Repugnance in the month.

5. Fifthly, whereas the foreſaid Record of the Indictment giveth the Wedneſday next after the Epiphany, which was the tenth day of January that preſent year, both the fact to be committed the ſame day, the Commiſſion alſo to be granted and delivered to the Commiſſioners the ſame day, the ſaid Commiſſioners to ſit in Commiſſion the ſame day, the Sheriffs of Middleſex to return a Jury out of the body of Middleſex the ſame day, and the Jurors to find the Indictment of the ſame day, and yet no Juror in the Indictment named the ſame day.

5 Repugnance in the days.

Item, the Lord Cobham the ſame day to be found conſpiring to make himſelf Regent, when as the King, that day and year was not yet paſſed into France; how ſtands it then can concur and hang together, and all in one day; I ſuppoſe it will coſt you two days before you with all your learned Council will ſtudy it out. And when you in your unlawful aſſemblies have conſpired and conferred together all ye can, yet will ye make it (as I think) three days, before you honeſtly diſpatch your hands of the matter.

And where ye think that ye have impreſſed in me ſuch a foul note of lying, never to be clawed off while the world ſtandeth, yet ſhall the poſterity to come judg between you and me, whether ſhall appear more honeſt and true, my defence for that worthy Lord, or your uncourteous and viperous wrangling againſt him, moved with no other cauſe but only with the peeviſh ſpirit of Popery, which can abide nothing but that favoureth of your own Sect. For elſe how many loud lying Legends, yea what Legions of lyes are daily uſed and received in the Popiſh Church? What doltiſh dreams? what fained miracles? what blaſphemous tales? and finally fables, and lye inventions, ſpringing againſt the ſincere Religion, Doctrine and Croſs of Chriſt? And could you hold your pen from all theſe and find nothing elſe to ſet your idleneſs on work, but only to write againſt the Lord Cobham, Sir Roger Acton, Brown, Onley, Cowbridge, with a few other, whom with much ado at length you have fought out, not ſo much for any true zeal to rebuke iniquity, as craftily ſeeking matter by theſe to deface and blemiſh the Book of Acts and Monuments? Which ſeemeth belike to make you ſcratch there where it itcheth not. And if I ſhould after the like dealing take in hand your Popiſh portues, and with the like diligence excuſe every Popiſh Martyr and Saint there canonized; think you Maſter Cope, I could not make you out half a dozen as rank Traytors and Rebels to their Kings and Princes, as ever were any of theſe of your picking out? Make pope almoſt hath there been theſe laſt five hundred years, which hath not been a Traytor to his Emperour and Prince, and to his Country? Either openly rebelling againſt them, or privily conſpiring their deſtruction, or proudly proudly setting their feet upon their necks, or spurning their Crowns off from their heads, or making the Son to fight against the Father? how many have they deposed, and set up other in their seats? how many Emperors and Kings have they wrongfully cursed? What Consuls of Rome have they resisted, deposed and put to death? What Wars have they raised up against their own Country of Rome? Yea, the continual holding of the City of Rome from his lawful Emperor, what is it but a continual point of Treason?

What will you answer me (Mr. Cope) to the Pope, which conspired to let fall down a stone upon the Emperors head, kneeling at his prayers?

The Popes Saints and Confessors many were Traytors.

And though this Treachery, being as big as a Millstone, seemed but a small mote in your eye, that it could not be espied; yet what will ye say by the Monk of Swinstead, that poisoned King John, who was both absolved by his Abbot before his Treason committed, and after his Treason, had a perpetual Mass sung for him, to help him out of Purgatory? And what think ye in your Conscience is to be said of Thomas Becket, who did enough, and more than became him, to set the French King, and the King of England together by the ears? Of Anselm likewise, and of Stephen Langton, who departed both out of the Realm to complain of their Princes and Sovereigns? The like may be said also of Jo. Peckham, John Stratford Archbishop of the same See, notoriously resisted the Kings commandment, being sent for by King Edward the Third, to come to the Parliament at York; through the default of whose coming, the present opportunity of getting of Scotland was the same time lost.

Rich. Scrope Archbishop of York, a Traytor, and yet counted a holy man.

Richard Scrope Archbishop of York was openly in Arms to rebel and fight against King Henry the Fourth, for the which he was condemned and put to death: and yet notwithstanding, Commission was sent down from the Pope shortly after, to excommunicate them which put him to death, his Treason notwithstanding. Read the story sincerely of Pope Benedict the 12*th*. and of Pope Clement the 6*th*. And see how the traiterous Rebellion of these two Popes against Ludovicus their rightful Emperor can be defended: which Emperor at last was also impoisoned, and not without the practice of Pope Clement, as doth Hieronimus Marius credibly witness.

Popes commonly Traytors.

Tho. Lancaster a Traytor, and yet made a Saint by the Pope.

In the Reign of King Edward the Second, mention was made before of Thomas Earl of Lancaster. Who, with a great number of other Nobles and Barons of the Realm, rose in armour against their Prince, and therefore at length were put to death as Traitors. And yet notwithstanding this Treason committed (Master Cope) if you be so ignorant in our stories that you know it not, set your fetters on to search, and you shall find it true, that certain Noblemen went up to Rome, for the Canonizing of the said Thomas of Lancaster, to be made a Saint, and obtained the same. Informich that in a certain old Kalendar, the name of the said St. Thomas of Lancaster, is yet extant to be seen.

Edw. and Archbishop of Canterbury reconciled against his Prince, and yet made a Saint by the Pope.

In the former Book of the Acts and Monuments above about the page 353. or 354. mention was made of Edmond Abbenden Archbishop of Canterbury, whom although I do not disprove, but rather commend in my History, for his bold and sage counsel given unto King Henry the 3*d*. and also for offering the censure of Excommunication against the King in so necessary a cause; yet notwithstanding the same Edmund afterward, about his later end, went up with a rebelling mind to complain of his King unto the Pope, and in his journey died, before his return; who afterward for the same was Canonized by the Pope, and now thineth among the Saints in the Popes Kalendar.

Tho. Arundel a rank Traytor against his King, and yet a great pillar counted in the Popes Church.

Let us come more near to these days and times, and consider the doings of Thomas Arundel Archbishop of Canterbury, who being first deposed and exiled for his contemptuous deserts against the King, and afterward coming in with Henry Bolinbrook, Duke of Hereford, in open Arms, and with main force, rose against his natural and lawful King. Think you, Mr. Cope, this is not as great a point of Treason, as that which was done in Thickets Fields? and though he be not placed among the portuous Saints, yet I think nothing contrary, but in your heart you will not greatly stick to say, Sancte Thoma ora pro nobis.

All these things well considered, tell me (Mr. Cope) I pray you, is Treason such a strange and uncouth thing in your Pope-Catholick Church, that your burning zeal of obedience to Kings and Princes cannot read the story of the Lord Cobham and Sir Roger Acton, but your Pen must needs be inflamed to write against them, and yet so many Traitors in your own Kalendars neither seen, nor once spoken of? And if the Traiterous Conspiracy and Rebellion of so many your Kalendar Saints, committed against Emperors, Kings and Princes, cannot stir your zeal, nor move your Pen; nor if the Treason of Pope Gregory the Ninth, raising War against his own City of Rome, and causing thirty thousand Citizens in one Battel to be slain, deserveth not to be espied, and accused as much as this Treason of the Lord Cobham; yet what will you, or can you answer to me (Master Cope) as touching the horrible Treason of Pope Gregory the Seventh, committed not against Emperor nor King, nor any mortal man, but against the Lord himself, even against your God of your own making, being therein as you say, no substance of bread, but the very personal body, flesh, bloud, and bone of Christ himself; which body notwithstanding the foresaid Pope Gregory the 7*th*. took and cast with his own hands into the burning fire, because he would not answer him to a certain doubt or demand? Ben Card.

Pope Greg. 7. a Traytor against the Lords own body.

Southly, if Sir John Oldcastle had taken the body of King Henry the Fifth, and thrown him into the fire, the fact being so notoriously certain as this is, I would never have bestowed any word in his defence. And could this and so many other heinous Treasons pass through your fingers, Mr. Cope, and no other to stick in your Pen but the Lord Cobham?

Vide supra.

Finally and simply to conclude with you (Master Cope) and not to flatter you, what is the whole working, the proceedings, actions and practices of your Religion, or hath been almost these five hundred years, but a certain perpetual kind of Treason, to thrust down your Princes and Magistrates, to derogate from their Right and Jurisdiction, and to advance your own Majesties and Dominations, as hath been sufficiently above proved, and laid before your faces in a Parliament holden in France by the Lord Peter de Cugneriis? Wherefore if the assembly of these forenamed persons, either within or without Saint Giles's Field, be such a great Mote of Treason in your eyes, first look upon the great Blocks and Millstones of your own Traitors at home, and when you have well discussed the same, then after pour out your Wallet of your trifling Dialogues, or Trialogues, if ye list against us, and spare us not. Not that I so think this to be a sufficient excuse to purge the Treason of these Men, if your Popish Kalendars and Legends be found full of Traitors. Multitudo enim peccatorum non parit errori patrocinium: but this, I think, That the same cause which made them to suffer as Traitors, hath made you also to rail against them for Traitors, that is, meer hatred only against their Religion, rather than any true affection you have to your Princes and Governors. Who, if they had been as fervent in your Popery, and had suffered so much for the holy Father of Rome, or for the liberties of the holy Mother Church of Rome, I doubt not but they, as holy Children of Rome, had been rung into your Romish Kalendar with a Festum duplex, or at least with Festum simplex, of nine Lessons, also with a Vigil peradventure before them.

Religion commonly maketh Treason among the Papists.

Now because they were of the contrary profession, and enemies to you Magna Diana Ephesiorum, you play with them as the Ephesian Carvers did with Saint Paul, and worse. Ye thrust them out as seditious Rebels, not only out of life and body, but also cannot abide them to have any poor harborer in their own friends houses, among our Acts and Monuments to be remembred. In the which Acts and Monuments, if gentle Master Irenæus, with his fellow Critobulus in your Clerkly Dialogues, will not suffer them to be numbred for Martyrs; yet speak a good word for them (Master Cope) they may stand for Testes or Witnes-bearers of the truth. And thus much for defence of them.

Now

{KING} 1 Hen. 5.5

Now to the other part of his accusation; wherein this Alanus Copus Anglus in his ἐξανλὰ or fix fold Dialogues contendeth and chafeth against my former edition, to prove me in my History to be a lier, forger, impudent, a misreporter of truth, a depraver of stories, a seducer of the world, and what else not? Whose virulent words and contumelious terms, how well they become his Popish person, I know not. Certes for my part I never deserved this at his hands wittingly, that I do know. M. Cope is a man whom yet I never saw, and less offended, nor ever heard of him before. And if he had not in the front of his Book intituled himself to be an Englishman, by his writing I would have judged him rather some wild Irish man, lately crept out of Saint Patricks purgatory, so wildly he writeth, so furnishly he fareth.

Answer to the second part of Copus accusation concerning his untrue charging of the Book of Acts and Monuments.

But I cease here, and temper my self, considering not what M. Cope deserveth to be said unto, nor how far the pen here could run if it had his scope, but considering what the tractation rather of such a serious cause requireth. And therefore seriously to say unto you (M. Cope) in this matter, where you charge my History of Acts and Monuments so cruelly, to be full of untruths, false lies, impudent forgeries, depravations, fraudulent corruptions, and fained fables; briefly and in one word to answer you, not as the Lacones answered to the Letters of their adversary, with Si, but with o si; would God (M. Cope) that in all the whole Book of Acts and Monuments, from the beginning to the later end of the same, were never a true story, but that all were false, all were lies, and all were fables. Would God the cruelty of your Catholicks had suffered all them to live, of whose death ye say now that I do lie. Although I deny not but in that Book of Acts and Monuments, containing such diversity of matter, something might overscape; yet I have bestowed my poor diligence. My intent was to profit all men, to hurt none.

The Book of Acts and Monuments not true if it had pleased God otherwise.

If you M. Cope, or any other can better my rude doings, and find things out more finely and truly, with all my heart I shall rejoyce with you and the Common-wealth, taking profit by you. In perfection of writing, of wit, cunning, dexterity, fineness, or other indurnents required in a perfect writer, I contend neither with you nor any other. I grant that is a laboured Story, such as you seem to require, containing such infinite variety of matter, as this doth, much more time would be required: But such time, as I had, that I did bestow, if not so laboriously as others could, yet as diligently as I might.

But here partly I hear what you will say; I should have taken more leasure and done it better. I grant and confess my fault, such is my vice, I cannot fit all the day (M. Cope) fining and mincing my letters, and combing my head, and smoothing my self all the day at Glass of Cicero, yet not withstanding doing what I can, and doing my good will, me thinks I should not be reprehended, at least not so much be railed on at Master Copes hand. Who if he be so pregnant in finding fault with other mens labours (which is an easie thing to do) it were to be wished, that he had enterprised himself upon the matter, and so should have proved what faults might have been found in him. Not that I herein do utterly excuse my self, yea rather am ready to accuse my self, but yet notwithstanding think my self ungently dealt withal at Masters Copes hand. Who being mine own Country-man, an Englishman as he saith, also of the same University, yea, College and School that I was of; knowing that the first edition of these Acts and Monuments was begun in the far parts of Germany, where few friends, no conference, small information could be had; and the same edition afterward translated out of Latin into English by others, whilest I in the mean time was occupied about other Registers; and now the said Cope hearing moreover and knowing that I was about a new Edition of the same Acts and Monuments, at this present time to be set forth, for the amending of divers things therein to be reformed; if he had known any fault needful to be corrected, he might gently by letters have admonished me thereof; gentleness would so have required it, time would well have suffered it. Neither was he so far off, but he might sooner have written a Letter to me, than a Book against me. Neither was I so ingrateful and inhuman, but I would have thanked him for his monition; neither yet so obstinate, but being admonished, I would have corrected willingly where any fault had been committed.

Ungentleness noted in Cope.

But herein your nature (Master Cope) doth right well appear. First in the said Book of Acts and Monuments, where many other good things be contained, not unfruitful nor unprofitable peradventure for the instruction of your conscience, and wherein my labours perhaps might have deserved your thanks, all that you dissemble and pass over, only excepting those matters which make for cavillation. Thus the black Spider out of pleasant flowers sucketh his poison. And what Book is so pleasant and fruitful, though it were the Popes own Portues, yea, his own Decretals, yea, his own very Mass Books, to the reading whereof if I brought the like mind so disposed to cavil, as you bring to the reading of my History, but I could find out twice as many mendacia, maculæ, impudentiæ, dolos malos, fabulæ, fucos, as you have done in these Acts and Monuments? And yet you have done prettily well.

The nature of the Spider.

Besides all this, yet better to mark the goodness of your gentle nature: Be it so that I had been in some piece of my Story deceived, as I do not justifie my self in all points therein, yet you, understanding that I was about the correction of my Book again, might either have taken the best, and left the worst, or else have gently taken the pains to have advertised me of such Notes as you had, without further exclamation, or at least might have deferred your Dialogues for a time, till the coming out of my Book, to see first what would in the later Edition be altered. But belike your Gall was full, your haste could not tarry, your venim must needs burst out.

Et si non aliqua nocuisses, mortuus esses.

Seeing therefore the order of your doings to be such, and disposition of your nature so far from all humanity, dealing with me so extreamly, if I thus provoked with your extremity again, should now after this your cursish nature shape you a name accordingly, and in stead of Copes, God father you to be a perpetual sycophant, could you much blame me? and doth not your sycophantical Book well deserve it? Or think you I could not repay you again with like extremity as you bring, and dress your drowsie or rather lousie Dialogues in their right colors, if I were so disposed? But my purpose is with patience to spare you, and rather to pray for you; God make you a good man. Peradventure he may hereafter call you. And rather had I to win you, than to fling you. Leaving therefore the consideration of your ingrateful doings, I will now consider only the points wherein you charge me in your Book, answering briefly unto the same. Briefly, I say, because the greatness of this Volume, and abundance of other more fruitful matter, giveth me little leasure at this present to stand about brawling words.

Copus Sycophanta.

First he seemeth to be highly grieved with me for my Calendar prefixed before the Book of Monuments. Wherein he hath no cause either to be offended with me, or to chafe with himself. As touching which Calendar I have sufficiently and expressly declared before so much, as might quickly satisfie this scruple of M. Cope, if he either would have taken the pains, or else had leasure to read the words contained in the Latin Preface before the Book prefixed, which are thus, Quanquam a me quidem non aliter Calendarium hoc institutum est, nisi ut pro indice duntaxat suum cujusque Martyris mensem & annum designante, ad privatum lectoris servaret usum, &c. In which words preventing before the cavilling objection of the adversary, I forewarned the Reader aforehand touching the Calendar, wherefore it was ordained and prefixed, for no other purpose, but to serve the use only of the Reader, instead of a Table, shewing the year and month of every Martyr, what time he suffered, &c. What hurt I pray you is in this Calendar prefixed before the Book of Monuments, more than in the Table of M. Copes Book, set after his Dialogues? But M. Cope had no leasure to perfuse this place; it made not for his humor.

The Calendar of the Acts and Monuments defended.

Ex præmiss ad lectorem.

Objection for Martyrs in the Calendar.

But this grieveth him in the Calendar, and that very fore: for that I place in this Calendar, Sir John Oldcastle, Sir Roger Acton, Brown, Beverly, and other for Martyrs, and displace for them other Holy, ancient Martyrs and Saints, as Anatholius, Sother, Dorothea, Clarus, Lucianus, Severinus, &c. Answer. If M. Cope cannot abide the Lord Cobham, Sir Roger Acton, Brown, and Beverly, which were hanged (as he saith for Treason) to have the name of Martyrs, then let them bear the name of witnesses bearers, or Tellers of the truth, becaule they were also burned for the Testimony of their faith. Seeing there is no difference in the said names, all is one to me, by which they are called.

Answer.

Untruth noted in Alanus Cope.

And where he chargeth me for thrusting and shouldring out the old and ancient holy Saints aforenamed out of this Calendar, and placing other newcome Saints in their rooms: this is not the first untruth that M. Cope hath made in his Dialogues, nor yet the leaft. Unto whom I might therefore fitly answer again with his own familiar phrase, or rather the phrase of Cicero, which he doth so much affectate: Quod nimirum hic ipse Alan. Copus Angelus ludens me mendacii coargui, inde sibi ipsi sempiternam ac indelebilem ineptissimi mendacii ac singularis impudentiæ notam inurat. For why have not I as just cause to say this to him, as he to me? Forsomuch as in the first beginning and Preface of the said Book of Acts and Monuments, I so diligently and expretly do warn all men before, first that I make here no Calendar purposely of any Saints, but a Table of good and godly men that suffered for the truth, to shew the day and month of their suffering. My words be extant and evident, which are these: Neque vero ideo inter divos a me referuntur isti, quod inferuntur in Calendarium, &c. And declaring afterward how the said Calendar doth stand but instead of a Table, my words do follow thus: Haud aliter calendarium hoc institutum est, nisi ut pro indice duntaxat suum cuiusque Martyris mensem & annum designante, Lectori ad usum atque ad manum serviat, &c.

Cope p. 130 lin. 28.

In Præfat. ad difficilem. & Acts and Monumentis.

Again, neither did I receive these men into that Calendar, that holy Anatholius, Sother, Dorothea, with other ancient Holy Saints should be removed out, as you do fally and untruly affirm, but because the course of that story, reaching but 500. years, did but comprehend those former times of such ancient Martyrs, but only of such as suffered in these later days, therefore requisite it was that in the Table such should be placed chiefly, of whom the whole Book did then principally and only intreat, to demonstrate thereby the time and day of their Martyrdom. Neither yet were the other excluded out of this new Calendar, which were never inserted in the same before, but only becaule both together could not there have standing, necessity so there required these in no case to be omitted, and yet no injury meant to the other to be excluded out of their own Calendars; whereto properly they did pertain. As for this Calendar or this Table, because they were not pertinent unto it, they could not therein, neither was it necessary they should be included. And yet neither did I (M. Cope) without due and solemn protestation omit the same in my foresaid Catalogue to prevent and stop all cavilling mouths: As by special words in the said proem of my Book unto the Reader doth appear, following in this wise; Interim miliùs ego boni sanctique viri (modo qui vere sanctus sit) causam Lecto, nec memoriam extinguo, nec gloriam minuo. Et si cui hoc displiceat calendarium, minimeret, non in templis a me collocari, sed domesticè tantum lectioni præparari, &c. And where is now (Master Cope) this your rejecting, expelling, removing, expulsing, exempting, deturbating and thrusting out of Anatholius, Sother, Dorothea, and other holy Saints out of Catalogues, Fasts, and Calendars? Or what man is that, or where dwelleth he, Qui veros Christi Martyres e cælo ad tartara deturbat? That is, Which turnbleth down true Martyrs from Heaven into Hell? Which if ye mean by me, In one word I answer, ye fally belye me, Master Copus, I had almoft called you Master Copus, so like a Capon you speak. Neither have you not any other ever heard me so say. Neither have I ever heard of any so mad to play fo the Giants with their Mountains to to climb the Heavens, to tumble down Gods true and Holy Martyrs out of Heaven into Hell, unleſs it were your ſelf (as yet ye are, ye may be better) and ſuch other of your gilden and Popiſh fraternity, which make of Gods true Saints ſtinking dunghils, (for ſo ye term them in your Books) and not only thruſt into Heaven your Pſeudo-ſanctos, Saints of your own making, whom God by his word doth not allow; but alſo depoſſe down from Heaven, and make dunghils of Gods welbeloved ſervants, his faithful people, and bleſſed Martyrs, which have died for the word of God. And what marvel then, if in your blaſphemous Books ye caſt down from Heaven to Hell the poor Saints of Chriſt, when in effect you deject alſo the Blood and Croſs of the Son of God, Chriſt Jeſus himſelf, ſetting up in his office and place, tu per Thomæ ſanguinem, quem pro te impendit, fac nos Chriſte ſcandere, quo Thomas aſcendit. Say, Maſter Cope your conſcience indifferently; ſet all Popiſh partiality apart, whereas the Scripture teacheth us ſimply, Quod citra ſanguinem nulla ſit remiſſio. i. Without blood there is no remiſſion: whether ye think, by this blood of the New Teſtament is meant the Blood of Chriſt alone, or the Blood of other moe beſides? If the Blood of one muſt ſtand alone, why do ye then with the Giants build up your Mountains, and make a ladder of Beckets Popiſh Blood, for men to ſcale the Heavens? Or in ſo doing, how can you, but either with the Proteſtants wipe out of your Calendar Thomæ Sanguinem, or elſe demoliſh from Heaven Sanguinem Chriſti, with the Papiſts?

KING 1 Eliz. 5. The Papists would thrust down Gods true Saints out of Heaven to Hell.

Cope p. 81. lin. 7.

Becket's blood set up, to the injury of Christs blood.

And here by the way, I cannot but muſe, why you are ſo devout in ſetting up the Croſs of Chriſt in your Church, which are ſuch enemies to the true Croſs of Chriſt to ſtand in Heaven. Look upon this (M. Cope) and tell me, utra pars veriùs veros Chriſti martyres e Cælo in tartara detrudat? And therefore as you fally belie me in this, for detruding and tumbling out of Heaven, Anatholius, Sulpitianus, Clarus, Lucianus, Agatha, Dorothea, and other ſaints, gainſt whom I never yet ſpake any reproaching word, but rather in this my Volume have ſet forth their commendation: ſo it is untrue likewiſe, where you affirm, that in this my Calendar I make an ἀποθεωσιν, or Canonization of falſe Martyrs. I told you before when ye were in England, I tell you again, being now in your tranſmigration, in words as plain as I could: Hanc ego Apotheoſin mihi nunquam ſumpſi, quam ſibi tam confidenter ſumpſit Gregorius nonus. Were not theſe words of my proteſtation manifeſt enough? Were they not ſufficient to ſatisfie a reaſonable Momus? And to make the matter more plain, did I not adde moreover as followeth? Porrò neque eo ſpectat hoc calendarium, ut novum aliquam feſtorum diem legem præſcribam Eccleſiæ, &c. And not contented with this, foreſeeing before ſuch wrangling Spirits to come, as now I ſee in you; I ſhewed alſo the cauſe why I needed not ſo to do. My words were theſe: Feſtorum dierum jam plus ſatis erat in mundo, &c. And yet further becauſe no cavillar ſhould take hold here of any injury done to the holy Saints, either old or new in the Church: therefore in expreſs words I removed away all ſuſpition of any injury, preventing the objection of the adverſary in theſe words: Habeat & Eccleſia ſuos ſanctos, tum recentes tum veteranos, modo probatos, modo interim sidem ne adorentur, modo quam ſint vetuſti, tam etiam vere ſancti ſint, &c.

Papists do not so far up Christs Cross in Earth: but enemies to Christs Cross in Heaven, by doubting untruth in Copus.

These places of my Book, if ye did ſee; why do you diſſemble them? If ye had not ſo much leaſure to read them; how had you ſo much leaſure to write againſt any mans Book, not knowing what is in the Book contained? And how ſtands it then with truth, that ſo like a Mome ye cry out ſo in your Book againſt theſe new made Martyrs, qui non poſſunt niſi per aliorum injuriam creſcere, &c. And again, where you exclaim againſt me, and ſay that I thruſt out the ancient Martyrs from their ſeat and poſſeſſion, and place new in their rooms, &c.

No cauſe why the Popes new Saints ſhould be put in the Calendar.

Alſo where you continuing yet ſtill in your common place of lying (out of which you cannot digreſs) do charge me further, that I do appoint out holy days and working days by colours of red and black, in my foreſaid Calendar to be obſerved; theſe lewd notes of yours, if they had been picked out of my Calendar by you, without mine own ſpecial declaration before made to the contrary, they might ſeem to have ſome blaſh of credit. Now what will the Reader ſay, or what may he judge, conſidering and conferring this your cavilling with the matter of my premonition made before, but that you are altogether ſet to play the perpetual Syc. I had almoſt called you by your right right name Maſter Cope. But God make you (as I ſaid) a good man. Reading further in your Book, I could not but ſmile and laugh at this your ridiculous and moſt loud lying Hyperboliſm; where you comparing my making of Saints with the Popes making, can find (as ye ſay) in the Pope no ſuch impudent arrogancy in preſuming as ye find in me, &c. If the Pope had not abuſed his arrogant juriſdiction in canoniſing and deifying his Saints, more than I have done; the year ſhould not be cumbred with ſo many idle holy days, nor the Calendars with ſo many Raskal Saints, ſome of them as good, as ever were they that put Chriſt to death.

But where will you find (Maſter Cope) any man to believe this your Hyperbolical compariſon to be true, which ſeeth and knoweth the infinite and unmeaſurable exceſs of the Popes arrogancy, not only in ſhrining ſuch a rabble of blind Saints of his own creating; but alſo in preſcribing the ſame to be received univerſally in the whole world; and not to be received only, but alſo to be invocated for gifts and graces; alſo to be worſhipped for advocates and mediators? Wherein riſeth a double abomination of the Pope, the one for his Idolatrous making and worſhipping of Saints; the other for his Blaſphemous injury and derogation to Chriſt in repulſing him out of his office of mediation, and placing other Mediators of his own making. And now to conſider what Saints theſe were, or what were the cauſes of their Sanctings: what Saint almoſt among all the Popes Saints ſhall you find (Maſter Cope) made within theſe five hundred years, but commonly he was either ſome Pope, or ſome rich Biſhop and Prelate, or ſome fat Abbot, or ſome blind Frier, ſome Monk, or Nun, ſome ſuperſtitious regular, or ſome builder of Monaſteries, or ſome Giver and Benefactor to the Popiſh Clergy, or maintainer againſting for the Dignities and Liberties of the Popiſh Church? What poor Lay-man or Lay-woman, were their lives never ſo Chriſtian, their Faith and Confeſſion never ſo pure, their death never ſo agoniſing for the witneſs of Chriſt, and truth of his word, ſhall find any place of favour in all the Popes κανονίσμος, that is, in the Popes Calendar, either in red colour, or elſe in black?

Double abomination in the Popes Calendar.

The great Idol-maker of Rome and who he his saints.

But here (Maſter Cope) if ye had the wit, ſo much to defend as ye have to overthwart, you might take me with the manner, and reply again for the defence of your great Saint-maker, or rather God-maker of Rome; that he maketh mo Martyrs and Saints of theſe foreſaid poor Lay-men, and Lay-women, than ever he did of any other. For he burneth them, he hangeth them, he drowneth them, impriſoneth and famitheth them, and ſo maketh truer Martyrs of Chriſt, than any other of his new ſhrined Saints, whom he hath ſo dignified in his Calendar. For the one he doth Rubricate only with his red Letters; the other doth he Rubricate with their own Blood. And therefore to anſwer you (M. Cope) to your compariſon made between the Pope and me, for making of holy Martyrs and Saints: Briefly I ſay and report me to all the world, that therein is no compariſon. For if ye ſpeak of true Martyrs, who doth make them, but the Pope? If ye ſpeak of falſe Martyrs, who doth make them, but the Pope? And furthermore to compare together the cauſes of theſe Martyred Saints in my Calendar with them which ſhine ſhrined in the Popes Calendar (taking the ſame proportion of time as I do, within theſe laſt 500. years) why may not I have as good cauſe to celebrate theſe in my Calendar, which loſt their lives and were ſlain, principally for the cauſe of Chriſt and of his word, as the Pope hath to celebrate his double and ſimple feaſted Saints in his Calendar; who in their doings, doctrine and life, as they ſeemed rather to ſerve the Pope, than Chriſt the Lord; ſo in their death appeared no ſuch cauſe, why they ſhould be ſanctified in the Church beyond all other? Let not the Church of Chriſt (M. Cope) be deluded with Hypocritical names, nor fained apparitions, and fabulous miracles, neither be you deceived your ſelf, but let us refort ſincerely to the Word of God. What was in S. Francis (look upon his ſuperſtitious life, and preſumptuous Teſtament, wrought no doubt by Satan to diminiſh and obſcure the Teſtament of Jeſus Chriſt) why he ſhould be made a Saint, and not an Enemy rather of Chriſt.

What was likewiſe in Frier Dominick, who before Francis ten years together perſecuted the poor Waldenſes to death and deſtruction? Why ſhould he ſtand a Saint and a Pillar of the Church? I pray you what ſee you in Thomas Becket, but that he died for the ambitious liberties of the Popiſh Church? What in Aldelmus, and in Anſelmus, but only that they chaſed away married Prieſts from the Churches, and planted in idle Monks in their ſtead? The like alſo did Dunſtanus, who was rubricated with a duplex feſtum. Elizabeth who was the Wife of the Marqueſs of Thuring, when ſhe had with much perſwaſions got out her Husband to fight againſt the Turks, and was there ſlain, the afterward enclyoſtered her ſelf, and was made a Nun. And do ye think theſe cauſes to be ſufficient why they ſhould be made Saints, worſhipped in Churches, and ſet in Calendars? Long it were to make rehearſal of all this rabble, and almoſt infinite. One example may ſuffice for many. S. Gilbert of Sempringham was the Son of Jocelin a Knight, who for his deformity of his body was fet to learning, and afterward made Canon, and was Author of the Gilbertines in the time of King John.

The canonization of S. Gilbert of Sempringham.

This Gilbert after he had erected thirteen Monaſteries of his Order of Sempringham, was afterward laboured for unto the Pope to be made made a Saint. Who hearing of his Miracles, wrote his Letters to Hubert Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in the behalf of the foreſaid Gilbert, willing and commanding per Apoſtolica ſcripta, that the Feaſt of the ſaid Gilbert ſhould be ſolemnized through all the province of Canterb. Ut meritis nimirum ejus & precibus apud miſericordiſſimum judicem miſericordiam conſequamur, &c.

Ex libello ejus. le Gilberti confeſſoris.

Whereupon Hubert the Archbiſhop directeth down his writings to all the Biſhops within his Proviſe, the Contents of which his writings do follow, *Hubertus Dei gratia Canterb. Archiepiſcop. totius Angliæ primas, dilectis in Chriſto frat. Epiſcop. per provinciam Canterb. Sal. grat. & benedictionem. D. Papa, ſicut ex literis ipſius manifeſte perpenditur, de converſatione, meritis, & moribus b. The Popes letter and the Archbishops for the canonizing of S. Gilbert.

The ſumm of the which writing of the Archbiſhop tendeth to this effect: That forſomuch as the Pope hearing of the life and miracles of Gilbert, Maſter of the Order of Sempringham, by ſufficient witneſs and teſtimonies, hath in his Letters commanded him by the advice of his Cardinals, that the ſaid Gilbert, ſhould be Canonized and aſcribed in the Catalogue of Saints, and that his ſolemnity ſhould be celebrated ſolemnly throughout all the Province of Canterbury: And alſo his body to be taken up and ſhrined to the Honour and Glory of God: He therefore, at the Popes commandment writing unto them, willeth all the Suffragans within his Province of Canterbury, yearly to ſolemnize and cauſe to be ſolemnized reverently the depoſition of the ſaid S. Gilbert Confeſſor; to the intent that their devotion may be commended of the Lord, and of him. And alſo that the humble interceſſion of the ſaid Saint, may profit them to their ſalvation.

Is this good doctrine in Cope in the Popes canonization?

Furthermore, for the more full Canoniſing (canviſing I had almoſt ſaid) of this new made Saint, the Saint Pope Innocent writing to Hubert aforeſaid, adjoyneth withal a Collect of his own making, which is this, Plenam in nobis æterne ſalvator tuæ virtutis operare medelam, ut qui preclara beati Gilberti confeſſoris tui merita veneramur, ipſius adjuti ſuffragiis a cunctis animarum noſtrarum languoribus liberemur: Qui vivis & regnas, &c. That is, Work in us O eternal Saviour full redemy of thy vertue, that we which worſhip the worthy merits of bleſſed Gilbert thy Confeſſor, being ſuccoured by his Suffrages, may be delivered from all languors and diſeaſes of our ſoules; who liveſt and reigneſt, &c.

tent that the Reader, measuring by this one the Canonisation of all the rest, may judge the better upon this comparison of Master Cope, whether of us, doth vindicate more impudent authority, the Pope in his Calendar, or I in mine: or to make the comparison more fit, whether is more impudent, the Pope in his Calendar, or else Master Cope in his Dialogues more doltish.

But briefly to make an end of this matter with you; to Canonise or to Authorise any Saints, for Man it is presumptuous; to prescribe any thing here to be worshipped, beside God alone, it is Idolatrous; to set up any Mediators but Christ only, it is blasphemous. And whatsoever the Pope doth or hath done in his Calendar, my purpose in my Calendar, was neither to deface any old Saint, or to Solemnize any new. In my Book of Acts and Mounments entreating of matters passed in the Church, these later five hundred years, I did regulate out a Calendar, not for any Canon to constitute Saints, but only for a Table of them which within the same time did suffer for the Testimony of the word, whom I did, and do take to be good and godly Men. If any have other judgment of them, I bind no man to my opinion, as the Pope doth to his. The day will come which shall Judge both them and you. In the mean season it shall be best for you (Master Cope) in my judgment to keep a good Tongue in your Head, and to quiet your railing mood. A hard thing it is to judge before the Lord. Mans judgment may fail and is uncertain, the judgment of God is always sure. Best it is therefore either to be sure by the word and judgment of God before, what you do say, or else to say the best. Of such slandrous and intemperate railing can come no good, neither to them whom ye rail upon; nor to your self which raileth; nor to the Church of God that heareth you rail. For them you cannot hurt, they are gone. To your self though your matters be true, yet little honesty it will bring to be counted a railer; and if it be uncertain, your state is dangerous, and if it be false most miserable: And as to the Church what great edification can proceed of such contentious brawling and barking one against another, I do not greatly see. And if the zeal of the Bishops of Romes Church have so much swallowed you up, that you cannot but stamp and stare at Traitors when ye see them put in Calendars: first (Master Cope) be ye sure that they be Traitors (wisdom would) whom you call Traitors. And if ye can so prove them (as ye have not yet) then let your Irenæus, or Crysobulus, tell me, why doth not this flagrant zeal of yours as hot as Purgatory burn out, and flame as well against your own Traitors, having so many in your own Calendar and Church at home?

And if there be such a Catholick zeal in you, that hath set your gentle breft on such a pelting chafe, why then is not this your Catholick zeal equally indifferent? Why take ye on so fell on the one side against Sir John Oldcastle, Sir Roger Acton, M. Brown, &c. A man would think you played Hercules furens in Orchestra. On the one side again, ye are Oleo tranquillior. What difference (Master Cope) call you this? Or what zeal make you this to be? Albeit, your zeal I judge not, as I know it not. Swift judgment shall not become me, which go about to correct the same in you. But this I exhort you to beware (Master Cope) that by your own fruits and doings evident, ye do not bewray this zeal in you to be Non secundum scientiam, nor such a zeal as fighteth Pro domo Dei, sed pro domo Pontificis. As I said, I judge you not. You have your judge to whom ye stand or fall. My counsel is that you do not so zeal the Bishop of Rome, that for his sake ye lose your own soul. Ye remember the old vulgar voice, it is not good Ludere cum sanctis: worse it is Illudere: worst of all it is Debacchari in immerentes: Because that Deus ipse ultionum Dominus many times taketh their cause in hand, according as it is written. Opprobria opprobriantium tibi cecidertunt in me, i.e. The rebukes of thy rebukers fell upon me. And seldom have I seen any such blasphemous railers against the end or punishment of Gods Saints and Servants, without great repentance, to come to any good end themselves.

And admit this (as granted unto you Master Cope) that these men had been Traitors, which ye are not able to prove: Well, they had their punishment therefore, the world can go no further, and what would you have more? who if they repented, why may they not have as good part in Christs Kingdom as your self? {KING Hen. 5.} Now forsomuch as the said persons also suffering a double punishment were so constant in the way of truth, and most principally for the same were persecuted, and chiefly therefore brought to their death: that part of example, because I saw it pertain to the profit of the Church, why might I not insert it with other Church stories in my Book? Let the Church take that which belongeth to the Church. Let the world take that which to the world pertaineth, and go no further. And if ye think it much, that I would exemplifie these whom ye call Traitors in the Book of Martyrs; First, ye must understand, that I wrote no such Book bearing the Title of the Book of Martyrs; I wrote a Book called the Acts and Monuments of things passed in the Church, &c. Wherein many other matters be contained beside the Martyrs of Christ. But this peradventure moveth your choler, that in the Calendar I name them for Martyrs. And why may I not in my Calendar call them by the name of Martyrs, which were faithful witnesses of Christs truth and Testament, for the which they were also chiefly brought unto that end? Or why may I not call them Holy Saints, whom Christ hath sanctified with his blessed Blood? And what if I should, also call the thief and murderer, hanging on the right side of the Lord, by the name of a Holy Saint and Confessor, for his witnessing of the Lord, what can Master Cope say against it?

And as for colouring the names of certain Martyrs in the said Calendar in red or scarlet Letters (although that pertaineth nothing to me, which was as pleased the Painter or Printer) yet if that be it that so much breaketh patience, why rather doth he not expostulate in this behalf with the great Saint-maker of Rome, who hath redded them much more than ever did I? For he did red and die them with their own Blood, whereas I did but only colour them with red Letters. And thus for matter of my Calendar enough.

* Proceeding now out of the Calendar unto the Book wherein he chargeth me with so many lies, impudencies, vanities, depravations, and untruths, it remaineth likewise I clear my self, answering first to those lies and untruths, which to the Story of Sir Roger Acton, and Sir John Oldcastle do appertain. And after to other particulars, as in order of my Book do follow. And first, where he layeth against me whole heaps, and Cartloads, I cannot tell how many lies and falsities; I here briefly answer Master Cope again (or what English Harpesfield else soever layeth covered under this English Cope) that if a lie be (after the definition of S. Austine) whatsoever thing is pronounced with the intent to deceive another: then I protest to you Master Cope, and to all the world, there is never a lie in all my Book. What the intent and custom is of the Papists to do, I cannot tell: for mine own part I will say, although many other vices I have, yet from this one I have always of nature abhorred, wittingly to deceive any Man or Child, so near as I could, much less the Church of God, whom I with all my heart do reverence, and with fear obey. And therefore among divers causes, that have withdrawn my mind from the Papists faction, almost there is none greater than this, because I see them so little given to truth, so far from all serious feeling and care of sincere Religion, so full of false pretensed hypocrisie and dissimulation, so little regarding the Church of Christ in their inward hearts, which they so much have in their mouths, so as under the title thereof they may hold up their own estate. Otherwise so little reverence they yield to the true and honourable Church of Jesus the Son of God, that what unworthy and rascal Ministers they take into it they pass not, what fictions, what lies and Fables, what false Miracles and absurd forgeries they invent to delude it, they care not. I speak not of all.

Some there be of that Sect unfained in conscience, and more religious, and better disposed natures, only of simple ignorance deceived. But such commonly have been and be the chief guides and leaders of the Papists Church, that little true care and small zeal hath appeared in them toward the Church of Christ, not much regarding what corruption increased therein, so that their Commodity {KING Hen. 6. Ties and fictions innumerable in the Popes Church.} Commodity might not decrease. Thus out of this Fountain have gathred out so many Prodigious lies in Church Legends, in Saints lives, in Monkish fictions, in fabulous Miracles, in false and forged Reliques, as in pieces of the Holy Cross, in the Blood of Hales, in our Ladies milk, in the Nails of Christ, which they make to a great number. Likewise in their false and blind Errors, corrupt Doctrines, abfurd Inventions, repugnant to the truth of the word. Item, In their Bastard Books, forged Epistles, their Apocrypha, and Pseudopigrapha. Here come in their forged Canons, their fostring and cogging in ancient Councils and Decrees, as in ὁὺς ἀπὸ ἑμὸς πάτρας, in Canons of the Apostles (if those Canons were the Apostles) Excepta Romana sede, foisted into the decrees by Gratianus, also the cogging in a false Canon to the Council of Nice for the maintenance of the See of Rome, as appeareth in the sixth Synod of Carthage.

Untruth in the Popish Epistles Decretal. Here come in also the Epistles of Clement, and other sundry Epistles Decretal, which as they are no doubt falsly inserted by other, so are they the well-head of many superstitious Traditions, oppressing this day the Church of Christ. To speak moreover of the Liturgies of Saint James, of Chrysostome and other, of the first Mass said by Saint Peter at Rome, and that Saint Peter fate 25. years Bishop of Rome. To speak also of the works of Augustine, Ambrose, Hierome, and Gregory, what Doctor of famous writer hath there been in the Church, under whose name some counterfeited Books have not falsly been fathered, and yet stand still authorised under their patronage, to the great detriment of the Church? What should I speak of Abdias, Amphilochius, Dionysius Areopagita: The Dialogues of Gregory, which fallly to this day have been ascribed to Gregory the First, where indeed they were first written in Greek by Gregory the Third, and afterward Translated out of Greek into Latin by Pope Zacharie, vide supra. Likewise that worthy and Imperial Sermon intituled, Eusebii Pamphili Sermo ad Conventum Sanctorum, hath to this day wrongfully born the name of Eusebius. Whereas in very truth it was made by the good Emperor Constantinus himself, in his own Language fall style in Latin, and afterward Translated out of Latin into Greek by Eusebius, as he himself confesseth in his work. De vita Constant. lib. 4. But as touching this Sermon, although the name be changed, so godly and fruitful it is that it mattereth not much under whose name it be read, yet worthy to be read under the name of none so much as of the Emperor Constantine himself, who was the true Author and owner thereof.

Untruth in the Popes doctrine. Briefly, except it be the Books only of the New Testament, and of the Old; what is almost in the Popes Church, but either it is mingled or depraved, or altered, or corrupted, either by some additions interlaced, or by some diminution mangled and gelded, or by some glosis adulterate, or with manifest lies contaminate? So that in their Doctrines standeth little truth; In their Legends, Portues, and Mass Book, less truth; In their Miracles and Reliques least truth of all. Neither yet do their Sacraments remain clear and void of manifest lies and corruption. And specially here cometh in the matter Bee, which bringeth in much sweet Honey into Popes Hives, the Master lie I mean of all lies, where the Pope leaveth not one crum of Bread, nor drop of Wine in the reverend Communion; untruly and idolatrously taketh away all substance of Bread from it, turning the whole substance of Bread, into the substance of Christs own Body; which substance of Bread if the Pope take from the Sacrament, then must he also take the breaking from it; for breaking and the Body of Christ can in no wise stand literally together by the Scripture. Thus then as this is proved by the Word of God to be a manifest lie; so think not much (good Reader I intreat) as though I passed the bounds of modesty in calling it the arch lie, or master lie of all lies. Because upon this one an infinite number of other lies and errors in the Popes Church, as Handmaids do waite and depend.

Untruth in the Popes Legend and Mass Books. Untruth in the Popes miracles and reliques. Untruth in the Popes Sacraments. The Master lie.

But forsomuch as I stand here not to charge other men so much, as to defend my self, cealing therefore, or rather deferring for a time to stir this stinking puddle of these willful and intended lies and untruths, which in the Popes Religion and in Papists Books be innumerable, I will now return to those untruths and impudent lies which Master Cope hath hunted out in my History of Acts and Mounments, first beginning with those untruths which he carpeth in the Story of the foresaid Sir John Oldcastle, and Sir Roger Acton, Brown and the rest.

And first where he layeth to my charge, that I call them Martyrs, which were Traitors and seditious Rebels against the King, and their Country; to this I have answered sufficiently before.

Now here then must the Reader needs stay a little, at M. Copes request, to see my vanity and impudence yet more fully and amply repreffed in refuting a certain place in my Latin Story, concerning the Kings Statute made at Leicester, which place and words by him alledged, be these, Pag. 107. Quocirca Rex indicto Leicestriæ concilio (quod fortassis Londini ob Cobhami fautores non erat tutum) proposito edicto immanem denunciat pœnam his quicunque deinceps hoc doctrinæ genus sectarentur, usque adeo in eos severus, ut non modo hæreticos, sed perduelliones etiam haberi, ac proinde gemino eos supplicio, suspendio simul & incendio, afficiendos statuerit, &c. Et mox; Adeo ille vivet, rationeque intendebat omnes adversus Wicklevianos. Wickleviani id temporis dicebantur, quicunque Scripturas Dei sua lingua lectitarent, &c.

Upon these words out of my foresaid Latin Book alledged, Master Cope perswadeth himself to have great advantage against me, to prove me a notorious lier, in three sundry points. First, in that whereas I say, that the King did hold his Parliament at Leicester, adding this by the way of parenthelis (quod fortassis Londini ob Cobhami fautores non erat tutum, &c.) Here he concludeth thereby, simpliciter and precisely, that the Lord Cobham and Sir Roger Acton with his Fellows, were Traitors, &c. Whereby a man may soon shape a caviller, by the shadow of Master Cope. For whereas my Dialysis out of the text speaketh doubtfully and uncestainly, by this word (fortassis) meaning indeed the King to be in fear of the Gospellers, that he durst not hold his Parliament at London, but went to Leicester; he argueth precisely therefore, that the Lord Cobham, Sir Richard Acton, and his fellows went about to kill the King. Secondly, Where I affirm that the King in that Parliament made a grievous Law against all such as did hold the Doctrine of Wickliff, that they should be taken hereafter, not for Hereticks, but also for Felons, or Rebels, or Traitors, and therefore should sustain a double punishment, both to be hanged, and also to be burned, &c. Here cometh in Master Momus, with his Cope on his back, and proving me to be a lier, denieth plainly that the King made any such Statute; vide Pag. 853. line 6. where his words be these: Atqui quod hæretici pro perduellionibus, & deinceps geminatas pœnas subpendii & incendii luerant, ut ingatur Foxus, nullo modo illis tradiatur, &c.

First, Here would be asked of Master Cope, what he calleth Patriæ Hostes, & proditores? If he call these Traytors, then let us see whether they that followed the Sect of Wickliff were made Traytors and Hereticks by the Kings Law, or not. And first let us hear what faith Polydore Virgil, his own witnes in this behalf, whose words in his twenty fecond Book, pag. 441. be these, Quare publice edixit, ut si ulpiam deinceps reperientur qui eam sequerentur Sectam, patriæ hostes haberentur, quo sine omni lenitate severius ac ocius de illis supplicium sumeretur, &c. That is, wherefore it was by publick Statute decreed, That whosoever were found hereafter to follow the Sect of Wickliff, fhould be accounted for Traytors, whereby, without all lenity they fhould be punifhed more feverely and quickly, &c.

Thus have you (Master Cope) the plain testimony of Polydore with me. And becauſe ye fhall further see your self more impudent in carping, than I am in depraving of Histories, you fhall understand moreover and hear, what Thomas Walden one of your own Catholick brotherhood, and who was also himself alive, and a doer in the same Parliament, being the Provincial of the Carmelites, saith in this matter, writing to Pope Martin, which writeth in Latin here follow, written in his Prologue to the said Martin, in this wise, Nec mora longa processit, quin Statutum publicum per omne Regni concilium in publico emanavit edicto, quod omnes Wicleviſtæ, ſicut Dei pro- proditores eſſent, ſic proditores Regis, proſcriptis bonis, conſerentur & Regni, duplici pœnæ dandi, incendio propter Deum, ſuſtendio propter Regem, &c. That is, And it was not long after, but a publick Law and Statute came out, by the common aſſent of the general Parliament of the whole Realm; That all Wickleviſts, as they are Traytors to God, ſo alſo ſhould be counted Traytors to the King and to the Realm, having their Goods loſt and confiſcate to the King. And therefore ſhould ſuffer double puniſhment, as to be burnt for God, and to be hanged for the King, &c. And thus have you (M. Cope) not only my Sentence, but alſo the very words of my ſtory confirmed by this Author; becauſe ye ſhall not think me to ſpeak ſo lightly or impudently without my Book. And moreover to confirm the Sentence of Thomas Walden, it followeth alſo in another place of the foreſaid Author, Tom. 1. lib. 2. De Doctrinali fidei Eccleſiæ Cathol. cap. 6. where he writeth in theſe words, Et tamen jam cum regnare cœpiſſet illuſtris Rex Henricus 5. qui adhuc agit in ſceptris, & de eorum perfidia per Catholicos bene doctos legem Statui fecit, ut ubique per Regnum Wickleviſta probatus, ut reus puniretur de crimine læſæ Majeſtatis, &c. That is, and yet when the Noble King Henry the Fifth, who as yet doth live and reign, began firſt to reign, he began to ſet forth a Law, by his learned Catholicks which were about him, againſt the falſeneſs of theſe men, ſo that whoſoever was proved to be a Wickleviſt, through the whole Realm, ſhould be puniſhed for a Traytor, &c. What words can you have Maſter Cope, more plain than theſe? or what Authority can you require of more credit, which lived in the ſame time, and both did ſee and hear of the ſame things done? Who alſo writing to Pope Martin, was by the ſaid Pope Martin allowed, approved and ſolemnly commended, as appeareth by the Popes Epiſtle to him, wherein the Pope declareth, how he cauſed his Books, Per ſolennes viros videri, & examinari; That is, by ſolemn perſons to be ſeen and examined, &c. So that you muſt needs grant either this to be true that Walden writeth, or elſe that the Pope (tanquam Papa) in allowing his writings, may err and be deceived. Chooſe ye (Maſter Cope) of theſe two Opinions whether you will take.

Walden. tom. 1. De Doctrinali Eccleſiæ, c.46. lib.8.

Either Walden writeth true, or elſe the Pope erreth.

And if ye think this my aſſertion yet not ſufficiently refuted with theſe Authorities aforeſaid, I will alſo hereunto adjoyn the teſtimony of another Writer named Roger Wall, who writing De Geſtis Henric. 5. and ſpeaking of the ſaid Statute of this Parliament ſomething more plainly than the reſt, hath theſe words, In hoc etiam Parliamento nobilitas Regia hoſtes Chriſti ſibi reputans proditores, volens dare intelligere univerſis, quod ipſe abſque cujuſcunque fluctuationis dubio, quamdiu auras hauriret vitales, verum & perfectum Chriſtianæ fidei amulator exiſteret; ſtatuit & decrevit, ut quotquot ipſius Sectæ, quæ dicitur Lollardorum, inventirentur amuli & Fautores, eo facto rei proditorii criminis in Majeſtatem Regiam haberentur, &c. In Engliſh, Alſo in this Parliament the noble King reputing Chriſt Enemies to be Traytors to himſelf, to the intent that all men ſhould know without all doubt that ſo long as he lived, he would be a true and perfect Follower of Chriſtian Faith; did enact and decree, that whoſoever ſhould be found Followers and Maintainers of this Sect, which is called The Lollards Sect, Ipſo facto, ſhould be counted and reputed guilty of Treaſon againſt the Kings Majeſty, &c.

Roger Wallus lib. de geſtis Hen. 5 f. 12.

By theſe hitherto alledged, if M. Cope will not be ſatisfied, yet let the Reader indifferently judge; Utrum in hac re magis mugatur Foxus, an Copus calumnietur. And yet moreover to make the matter more certain, mark the clamation of the ſaid Roger Wall added to the end of thoſe words above recited, whereby we have to underſtand more clearly both what were the proceedings of the King in the ſaid Parliament, and alſo what was the blind affection of Monks and Prieſts at that time toward their King and Prince (which was then called Princeps Sacerdotum) in condemning and deſtroying the poor Lollards. The words of the Monk be theſe, O verus amicus, qui amico illatam injuriam ſibi inferri cenſimiliter arbitratur, præjudicium illi intentum reputat eſſe ſuum, & ad ejus onera conferenda, auxilationis humeros ſuppouere non veretur, &c. That is, O true friend, who taketh and reckoneth that injury no leſs done to himſelf, which is done to his friend; and that prejudice which is intended againſt him, reputeth to be as his own; and to bear together the burthens of his friend, ſticketh not to lay to his own ſhoulders, for the eaſing and helping of him, &c.

King Henry the Fifth called Princeps Sacerdotum.

Rog. Wallus, ibid.

How can it now be denied (Maſter Cope) in reading theſe Authors, and ſeeing their Teſtimonies, but that Lollardy in the Parliament was made both Treaſon and Hereſie, and had therefore a double judgment of puniſhment annexed, to be hanged for the one, and to be burned for the other, according as in my former Latin ſtory I recorded, and yet I truſted not?

2. But you will ſay again (as ye do) that there is no mention made for Hereſie to be made Treaſon, nor of any double puniſhment to be inflicted for the ſame. In the body of the Statute (I grant) there is no expreſs mention in words of Hereſie to be made Treaſon, expreſly ſignified in rigour of words; but inclufively it is ſo inferred, that it cannot be denied. For firſt, where Lands, Goods and Cattel of the ſaid Lollards were loſt and forfeit to the King, what doth this import elſe, but Treaſon or Felony?

Stat. An. 2. Hen. 5. cap. 7.

And where the Lord Cobham (for whoſe cauſe ſpecially this Statute ſeemed to be made) did ſuſtain afterward both hanging and burning by the vigor of the ſame Statute, what is here contained, but a double penalty? Again, where in the beginning of the Statute mention is made of rumors and congregations, and after upon the ſame follow-eth the ſervices of the King, whereunto the Officers be firſt ſworn ſhould be firſt preferred for Liberty of Holy Church, and puniſhment of Hereticks, made before theſe days and now repealed, ut ſupra. What meaneth this; but to make theſe Congrations of the Lollards to be forceable entries, riots, great ridings, unlawful aſſemblies, affraiers of the people, armor, riots, and inſurrections, and ſo ſendeth them to the former Statutes not repealed, that is, to the Statute, Anno 13. Hen. 4. Chap. 7. where the puniſhment is left to the diſcretion of the King. Or elſe to the Statute, Anno 15. Rich. 2 Chap. 2. where the penalty is made fine and ranſome. Or elſe to the Statute, Anno 5. Rich. 2. Chap. 6. where ſuch aſſemblies be made plain Treaſon, in fine ſtatuti:

Vid. Stat. An. 13 Hen. cap. 7. Vid. Stat. An. 15 Ric. cap. 2. Vid. Stat. plain 5 R. 2. cap. 6.

And as here is matter of Treaſon ſufficiently contained, ſo for Hereſie likewiſe the ſame Statute referreth them to the Ordinaries, and to the Laws properly to Hereſie appertaining, and to the Statute, Anno 2. Hen. 4. cap. 15. where the penalty is burning. Alſo to the Statute, Anno 5. Rich. 2. cap. 5.

Vid. Stat. An. 2 Hen. 4 cap. 15. Vid. Stat. An. 5 Ric. 2. cap. 5.

So that in this preſent Statute here mention is contained, as ye ſee, although not in expreſs words, yet inclufively (by referring to other Statutes not repealed) both Lollardy which is puniſhed with burning, and forcible Entries which are puniſhed at the Kings pleaſure. And thus much concerning the ſecond untruth, which Maſter Cope untruly noted in me.

Third Objection.

3. The third untruth which he noteth in me concerning this matter is this, wherein he reporteth me, that I ſay, there was no other cauſe of deviling this ſharp Law and puniſhment againſt theſe men, but only for having the Scripture-Books. And therefore here is to be noted in the margent Foxi dilus malus, but let Maſter Cope take heed he deceive not himſelf and other. For my part I remember no ſuch place in this my Latin ſtory where I ſo ſay. Only my words be theſe, added in the later end of the place above recited, Wieleviani vero dicebantur quicunque id temporis Scripturas Dei ſua lingua lectitarent, &c. That is, They were called Wickleviſts, whoſoever at that time read the Scripture in Engliſh, or vulgar Tongue, &c. I ſay not, that for the Scriptures being read in the Engliſh-Tongue, therefore the Law was enacted, but ſo is Maſter Cope diſpoſed to confrue it. What Law and Statutes were made againſt writing or reading of any Book in Engliſh, or any other Tongue contrary to the Catholick (that is, the Romiſh-Faith) or to the determination of the holy Church (that is, of Rome) read I beſeech thee the bloody Statute made Anno 2. Hen. 4. cap. 15. above ſpecified. Alſo read the Conſtitution Provincial of Thomas Arundel above mentioned: Where it was decreed, That the Text of holy Scripture ſhould not be had, or read in the vulgar-Tongue, from the time of Maſter John Wicklick for ever after, unleſs the ſaid tranſlation be approved firſt by the Ordinary, or by Provincial Council, under pain and puniſhment of Hereſie. Now let the Reader judge whether the reading of Scripture-Books in the Engliſh-Tongue, by the making or tranſlating of Wickliff, or from the time of Wickliff downward, be counted Hereſie, or not. As for the approving of the Ordinary, or of the Provincial Council added in the end of the ſaid Conſtitution, it maketh more for a ſhew, or pretence, than for any juſt exception, or any true intention. For what man, having thoſe Scriptures tranſlated in Engliſh, would either preſent them to their Ordinaries being ſo fet againſt the reading of ſuch Books? Or what Ordinary would or did ever yet ſince Arundels time approve any ſuch tranſlation, preſented unto them? Or elſe why did the good Martyrs of Amerſam ſuffer death, in the beginning of King Henry the Eighth, for having and reading certain Books of Scripture, which were (as is ſaid) only four Epiſtles of Saint Paul, with certain other Prayers? And the other which heard them but only read, did bear Faggots; and the ſame time, the Children were compelled to ſet Faggots unto their Fathers; at which time Longland being then Biſhop of Lincoln, and preaching to them at the ſtake, ſaid, *That whatſoever they were that did but move their lips in reading thoſe Chapters were damned for ever; as when we come to that time, by the Grace of Chriſt, ſhall hereafter more amply and notoriouſly appear. Moreover, where Maſter Cope proceeding farther in this matter, aſketh me, How was the Lord Cobham obedient to the King, when at for the fear of him the King durſt not then keep his Parliament at London? To whoin I anſwer again, aſking likewiſe of Maſter Cope, How was the King then afraid to hold his Parliament at London for the Lord Cobham, when the Lord Cobham at that time was in Wales? And here Maſter Cope thinking to have me at a narrow ſtrait, and to hold me faſt, biddeth me tell him how it could be otherwiſe, but the Lord Cobham muſt needs have Fautors? And who ſhould theſe Fautors be (ſaith he) but Sir Roger Acton, Brown, and their Fellows? The which mighty queſtion of Maſter Cope I anſwer again; How could Sir Roger Acton, Brown, and their Fellows be then Fautors of the Lord Cobham, for whom the King durſt not hold the Parliament at London, when as the ſaid Roger Acton, Brown, and the reſt were put to death, a whole year almoſt before the Parliament at Leiceſter began?

And now as I have hitherto briefly, and truly anſwered your askings (Maſter Cope) let me be ſo bold with you again, to propound to you likewiſe another queſtion, forſomuch as you have put me to the ſearching of the Statutes in this matter, wherewith before I was not much acquainted. Now out of the ſame Statutes riſeth a double ſcruple, or queſtion, worthy to be ſolved. The caſe is this, That foraſmuch as ſo many good Martyrs and Saints of God hitherto, in this Realm of England, haven been burned from the time of King Henry the Fourth, Henry the Fifth, Henry the Sixth, Henry the Eighth, to the time, and in the time of Queen Mary; my queſtion is: That you with all your learned Council about you will tell me, by what Law or Statute of the Realm were theſe men brent? I know the ancient cuſtom hath been, that Hereticks convicted by a Provincial Council were wont to be left to the ſecular power. But how will ye prove me, theſe Hereticks were either convict by ſuch Provincial Council, or that theſe ſecular men ought to be your Butchers in burning them, whom ye have committed to them? If ye alledge the ſix Articles made in the Reign of King Henry the Eighth, thoſe Articles neither did ſerve before the time of King Henry the Eighth, neither yet were they revived after his time. If ye alledge the Statute made Anno 5. Rich. 2. cap. 5. In that Statute (I anſwer) is contained no matter of burning, but only of arreſt to be done at the Certifications of the Prelates, without any further puniſhment there mentioned. To conclude, if ye alledge the Statute made Anno 2. Hen. 4. cap. 15. and revived in the Reign of Queen Mary, mentioned before. To that Statute I anſwer, that although the pretenſed Statute appeareth in form of words in the printed Book to give unto the Temporal Officers authority to bring them to the Stake, and to burn them whom the Biſhop delivereth, yet is it not to be proved, either by you or any other, that Statute to be Law, or warrant ſufficient to burn any perſon or perſons committed to the ſecular power by the Clergy. And that I prove thus; for although the ſame Statute of King Henry the Fourth in the Books printed appear to have Law and Authority ſufficient, by the full aſſent both of the King, of the Lords, and of the Commons; yet being occaſioned by Maſter Cope to ſearch further in the Statutes, I have found that in the Rolls and firſt Originals of that Parliament, there is no ſuch mention either of any Petition, or elſe of any aſſent of the Commons annexed, or contained in that Statute, according as in the printed Books uſual in the Lawyers hands too craftily and falſly is foiſted in, as by the plain words thereof may well appear.

Statute of the ſix Articles in the time of King Hen. 8.

Stat. An. 6. Ric. 2. cap. 5. Statute concerning Ar. 2. Hen. 4. c. 15. Vide ſupr. Hen. 6. de combuendis, prayed not ſufficient to burn any man.

For where the ſaid Statute, Anno 2. Hen. 4. cap. 15. being thus intituled in the Rolls, Petitio Cleri contra hæreticos, and aſſented unto in this form, hath theſe words.

Stat. Anno 2. Hen. 4. cap. 15. Intituled in the Roll thus, Petitio Cleri contra hæreticos; and aſſented unto in this form.

The printed Statute, An. 2. H. 4. c. 15. falſly corrupted.

QUas quidem petitiones prælatorum & cleri ſuperius expreſſat as do. noſter Rex, de conſenſu magnatum & aliorum procerum Regni ſui, in præſenti Parliamento exiſtentium conceſſit, & in omnibus & ſingulis juxta formam & effectum eorundem Ordinavit & Statuit de cetero firmiter obſervari, and ſo forth, according to the Petition: and more words are there not in the Statute-Roll. Wherefore, whereas the Statute-Book printed hath thus: Super quibus quidem mvvitatibus & exceſſibus ſuperius recitatis (videlicet, in the Petition of the Prelates and Clergy) Prælati & Clerus ſupradicti ac etiam Communitates dicti Regni in eodem Parliamento exiſten. dict. Domino Regi ſupplicarunt, &c. Qui quidem Dominus Rex, &c. ex aſſenſu magnatum & aliorum procerum ejuſdem Regni, &c. conceſſit, ordinavit, &c. Theſe words, &c. Etiam Communitates dicti Regni, &c. are put in further than the Roll doth warrant, and ſeemeth to be the practice of the Clergy, to make that as an Act of Parliament, and to ſeem to have the force of a Law, which was never aſſented unto by Commons.

Ex Rot. Parl.

And thus you ſee how this foreſaid Statute, printed both in Engliſh and in Latin among the Provincial Councils of Oxford (by the vertue whereof ſo many good men have been burned ſo long in England) doth utterly overthrow it ſelf, for that it ſwarveth from the Record both in form and in matter, and lacketh the aſſent of the Commons. Which doubt I thought at this preſent to propound unto you (Maſter Cope) for that you have ſo urged me to the ſearching out of the Statutes, by your declaiming againſt the Lord Cobham.

In conſtitutionibus provincialibus Oxonie conditis. Johan. Antiſſio.

Moreover unto this Statute aforeſaid, joyn alſo withall another Memorandum of like practice done Anno 5. Rich. 2. In the which year, whereas a Statute was concluded in the Parliament, Anno 5. Rich. 2. cap. 5. againſt certain Preachers ſpecified in the ſame Statute, which going about in certain habits from place to place, did draw the people to Sermons; and Commiſſions were made and directed in the ſaid Parliament to the Sheriffs, to arreſt all ſuch Preachers, and to impriſon the ſame, at the Certifications of the Prelates. Here is then to be noted, that the ſame Statute, Anno 5. Rich. 2. cap. 5. was revoked by the King in the Parliament, Anno 6. Rich. 2. upon the words of the Commons being theſe, videl. Foraſmuch as the ſame Statute was never aſſented, ne granted by the Commons, but that which therein was done, was done without their aſſent, and now ought to be undone, for that it was never their meaning to be juſtified, and to bind themſelves and their Succeſſors to the Prelates no more, than their Anceſtors had done before them. Ex Rotul. And yet this foreſaid revocation notwithſtanding, in Queen Maries time, they inquired upon that Statute.

Ex Rot. Parl.

In

In ſearching of theſe Statutes, as you have occaſioned me to find out theſe ſcruples; ſo being found out, I thought here not to diſſemble them, forſomuch as I ſee and hear many now adays ſo boldly to bear themſelves upon this Statute, and thinking ſo to excuſe themſelves, do ſay, that they have done nothing but the Law, the Law; to the intent that theſe men ſeeing now how inexcuſable they be both before God and man, having no Law to bear them out, may the ſooner repent their bloody and unlawful tyranny, exerciſed ſo long againſt Gods true Servants, yet in time before that the juſt Law of God ſhall find out their unjuſt dealings, which partly he beginneth already to do, and more no doubt will do hereafter,

The Perſecutors in burning Gods people have done againſt the Law.

In the mean time, this my Petition I put up to the Commons, and to all other which ſhall hereafter put up any Petition to the Parliament: that they, being admoniſhed by this abuſe, will ſhew themſelves hereafter more wiſe and circumſpect, both what they agree unto in Parliaments, and alſo what cometh out in their name. And as theſe good Commons in this time of King Henry the Fourth, would not conſent nor agree to this bloody Statute, nor to any other like; For ſo we read that the Commons in that bloody-time of King Henry the Fourth, when another like cruel Bill was put up by the Prelates in Anno 8. Henry the Fourth againſt the Lollards, they neither conſented to this, and alſo overthrew the other: ſo in like manner it is to be wiſhed, that the Commons in this our time, or ſuch other that ſhall have to do in Parliaments hereafter, following the ſteps of theſe former times, will take vigilant heed to ſuch cruel Bills of the Popes Prelacy, being put up, that neither their conſent do paſs raſhly, nor that their names in any condition be ſo abuſed; Conſidering with themſelves that a thing once being paſſed in the Parliament cannot afterward be called back; And a little inconvenience once admitted, may grow afterward to miſchiefs that cannot be ſtopped. And ſometime it may ſo happen, that through raſh conſent of Voices, the end of things being not well adviſed, ſuch a thing may be granted in one day, that afterward many days may cauſe the whole Realm to rue. But I truſt men are bitten enough with ſuch black Parliaments, to beware of After-claps. The Lord Jeſus only Protector of his Church, ſtop all crafty devices of ſubtil Enemies, and with his Wiſdom direct our Parliaments, as may be moſt to the advantage of his Word, and comfort of his people. Amen, Amen.

A neceſſary Admonition to the Commons of England.

And thus much having ſaid for the defence of the Lord Cobham, of Sir Roger Acton Knight, John Brown Eſquire, John Beverly Preacher, and of other their Fellows againſt Alanus Copus Anglus, here I make an end with this preſent Interim, till further leiſure ſerve me hereafter (Chriſt willing) to pay him the whole intereſt which I owe unto him. Adding this in the mean time, and by the way; that if Maſter Cope had been a Momus any thing reaſonable, he had no great cauſe ſo to wrangle with me in this matter, who as I did commend the Lord Cobham, and that worthily, for his valiant ſtanding by the truth of his Doctrine before Thomas Arundel the Archbiſhop; ſo touching the matter of this Conſpiracy, I did not affirm or define any thing thereof in my former Hiſtory ſo preciſely, that he could well take any vantage thereof againſt me, who in writing of this Conſpiracy laid againſt Sir Roger Acton, and Sir John Oldcaſtle, do but disjunctively or doubtfully ſpeak thereof, not concluding certainly this Conſpiracy either to be true, or not true, but only proving the ſame not to be true at that time, as Polydore Virgil, and Eduard Hall in their Hiſtories do affirm; which ſay, that this Conſpiracy began after the burning of John Hus and Hierome of Prague, which could not be. And thereto tendeth my Aſſertion. My words are plain, and are theſe; Wherefore it is evident that there was either no Conſpiracy at all againſt the King, or elſe that it was at ſome other time, or done by ſome other Captains, &c.

{KING 5 Hen. 5.}

Propoſition diſjunctive.

Lib. Act. & Mon. 174.

Theſe be my words with other more: In the which Propoſition diſjunctive, if either part be true, it is enough for me. His part it was to refel both; which he hath not done. But only ſtanding faſt upon the one part diſſimuleth the other. And this is Alanus Copus Anglus, who by that time he ſhall come from Rome (whither he is now gone as I hear ſay) I truſt he will return a better Logician home again in ſuam Angliam.

But to the truth of the matter; as I ſaid before, ſo I ſay again, whatſoever this worthy, noble, vertuous Knight, Sir Roger Acton was otherwiſe; this is certain, that he was always of contrary mind and opinion to the Biſhop of Rome, and to that kind of people, for the which cauſe he had great envy and hatred at their hands, and could as little bear it: neither do I greatly diſſent from them, which do ſuſpect or judge that the Lord Cobham, by his friendly help eſcaped out of the Tower, and that per adventure was the cauſe why he was apprehended and brought to trouble, and in the end came to his death. Other cauſes alſo there might be, that theſe good men perceaſe did frequent among themſelves ſome Conventicles, (which Conventicles were made Treaſon by the Statute aforeſaid) either in thoſe Thickets, or in ſome place elſe, for the hearing of Gods Word, and for publick Prayer; and therefore had they this Beverley their Preacher with them.

Sir Roger Acton contrary to the Biſhop of Rome.

Cauſe conjectured why Sir Roger Acton with the reſt, were put to death for Treaſons and Lollardy.

But to conclude, whatſoever this Sir Roger Acton was, this is the truth, which I may boldly record, as one writing the Acts and things done in the Church, that he was at length apprehended, condemned, and put to death or Martyrdom three years and more before the Lord Cobham died. Likewiſe Maſter John Brown, and John Beverley the Preacher, ſuffered with him the ſame kind of death (as ſome ſay) in the Field of Saint Giles, with other more, to the number of 36, if the ſtory be true. Which was in the month of January, Anno 1413. after the computation of our Engliſh ſtories, counting the year from the Annunciation, but after the Latin Writers, counting from Chriſts Nativity, Anno 1414. according as in this Picture is ſpecified.

Divers Perſons counted for Lollards hanged and burned in the firſt year of the Reign of King Henry the V.

Theſe men, as is ſaid, ſuffered before the Lord Cobham about three years, of whoſe death divers do write diverſly. Some ſay they were hanged and burnt in S. Giles Field; of whom is Fabian, with ſuch as follow him. Other there be which ſay, that ſome of them were hanged and burnt. Polydorus ſpeaking only of their burning, maketh no mention of hanging. Another certain Engliſh Chronicle I have in my hands borrowed of one M. Bowyer, who ſomewhat differing from the reſt, recordeth thus of Sir Roger Acton, that his Judgment before the Juſtice was thus, to be drawn through London to Tyburne, and there to be hanged, and ſo he was naked, ſave certain parts of him covered with a Cloth, &c. And when certain days were paſt (ſaith the Author) a Trumpeter of the Kings called Thomas Cliff, got Grant of the King to take him down, and to bury him, and ſo he did, &c. And thus have you the ſtory of Sir Roger Acton, and his fellow Brethren. As touching their cauſe, whether it were true, or elſe by error miſtaken of the King, or by the fetch of the Biſhops ſurmiſed, I refer it to the judgment of him which ſhall Judge both the quick and the dead, & ſeculum per ignem. To whom alſo I commit you M. Cope; God ſpeed your Journey well to Rome, whither I hear ſay you are going, and make you a good man.

After the deceaſe or martyrdom of theſe above mentioned, who were executed in the month of January, Anno 1414. in the next month following, and in the ſame year, the twentieth day of February, God took away the great Enemy of his Word, and Rebel to his King, Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury: Whoſe death following after the execution of theſe good men above recited, by the marvelous ſtroke of God ſo ſuddenly, may ſeem ſomewhat to declare their innocency, and that he was alſo ſome great procurer of their death, in that God would not ſuffer him longer to live, ſtriking him with death incontinently upon the ſame. But as I did the other before, ſo this alſo I do refer to the ſecret Judgment of the Lord, who once ſhall Judge all ſecrets openly.

The death of Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Ex Hiſt. S. Alban. Gods works and gamiſhments to be noted.

Thomas Arundel giveth ſentence againſt the Lord Cobham, and God giveth ſentence againſt Tho. Arundel. The condemned man overlooketh his condemner.

In the mean time this may ſeem ſtrange, that the ſame Thomas Arundel, who a little before late in Judgment againſt the Lord Cobham, and pronounced Sentence of death upon him, did himſelf feel the ſtroke of death, and the Sentence of God executed upon him before the other. Who would have thought but that the Lord Cobham, being ſo caſt and condemned definitively by the Archbiſhops Sentence, ſhould have died long before the Archbiſhop? But ſuch be the works of Gods Almighty Hand, who ſo turned the wheel, that this condemned Lord ſurvived his Condemner three or four years.

In the death of this Archbiſhop, firſt Polydore Virgil is deceived, who in his twenty ſecond Book, page 441. affirmed his death to be Anno 1415. in the ſecond year of King Henry the Fifth, alſo after the beginning of the Council of Conſtance, who indeed never reached the beginning thereof, nor ever ſaw the ſecond year of that King (unleſs ye count the firſt day for a year) but died before, Anno 1414. February 20. Ex Hiſt. S. Albani & multis. Furthermore, concerning the death of this Arundel, and the manner thereof, who had been ſo heavy a Troubler of Chriſts Saints in his time, becauſe the thing ſeemeth worthy of noting, to behold the punithment of God upon his Enemies, this is the report, as I have found it alledged out of Thomas Gaſcoin in Dictionario Theologico, Whoſe plain words be theſe, Anno 1414. Tho. Arundel. Cant. Archiepiſcop. ſic lingua percuſſus erat, ut nec deglutire, nec loqui per aliquot dies ante mortem ſuam potuerit, divitiis epulonis exemplo, & ſic tandem obiit. Atque multi tunc fieri putabant, quia verbum alligaſſet, ne ſuo tempore prædicaretur. That is, Thomas Arundel Archbiſhop of Canterbury was ſo ſtricken in his Tongue, that he could neither ſwallow nor ſpeak for a certain ſpace before his death, much like after the example of the rich Glutton, and ſo died upon the ſame. And this was thought of many to come upon him, for that he ſo bound the Word of the Lord, that it ſhould not be preached in his days, &c. Which if it be true, as it doth well here appear, theſe and ſuch other horrible Examples of Gods wrath may be terrible Spectacles for ſuch as occupy their Tongues and Brains ſo baſily to ſtop the courſe of Gods Word, ſtriving but againſt the ſtream, againſt the force whereof, neither are they able to reſiſt, and many times in reſiſting are overturned themſelves, and drowned therein. And thus much for the death of Thomas Arundel, who continued Archbiſhop in the See of Canterbury the ſpace of 18 years.

After this Arundel, ſucceeded next in the ſaid See of Canterbury Henry Chicheſly, made Archbiſhop Anno 1414. and ſate five and twenty year. This Henry following likewiſe the ſteps of his Predeceſſor, ſhewed himſelf no ſmall Adverſary againſt the Favourers of the Truth. In whoſe time was much trouble and great affliction in the Church. For as the preaching and teaching of the Word did multiply and ſpread abroad daily more and more; ſo on the contrary ſide, more vigilant care and ſtrait strait Inquisition followed and increased against the people of God, by reason whereof divers did suffer, and were burned; some for fear fled the Countrey: many were brought to examination, and by infirmity constrained to abjure. Of whom hereafter Christ willing particularly in order of their times we will intreat.

As true Piety and sincere preaching of Christs Word began at this time to decay; So idle Monkry and vain Superstition in place thereof began to increase. For about the same year the King began the foundation of two Monasteries, one of the one side of Thames, of Friers Observants, the other on the other side of Thames called Shene and Zion, dedicated to Charter-house-Monks, with certain Bridget-Nuns or Recluses, to the number of sixty, dwelling within the same Precincts: so that the whole number of these with Priests, Monks, Deacons, and Nuns, should equal the number of twelve Apostles, and seventy two Disciples. The Order of these was according to the description of S. Paul the Apostle, Col. 1. Eat not, taste not, touch not, &c. to eat no Fleth, to wear no Linnen, to touch no Money, &c.

Zion and Bethlem builded.

About Michaelmas, the same year the King began his Parliament at Leicester, above mentioned. In the which Parliament the Commons put up their Bill again, which they had put up before, Anno 11. Hen. 4. that Temporalties, disorderly wasted by men of the Church, might be converted and imployed to the use of the King, of his Earls and Knights, and to the relief of the poor people, as is before recited. In four of which Bill, left the King would give thereunto any convertable audience (as testifieth Robert Fabian and other Writers) certain of the Prelates and other head-men of the Church put the King in mind to claim his Right in France. Whereupon Henry Chichesly Archbishop of Canterbury made a long and solemn Oration before the King to perswade him to the same, offering to the King in the behalf of the Clergy great and noble sums. By reason whereof (saith Fabian) the Bill was again put off, and the King set his mind for the recovery of the same; to that soon after he sent his Letters and Messengers to the French King concerning that matter, and received from him again answer of derision, with a Pipe of Tennis-Balls (as some record) sent from the Dolphin, for him to play with at home. Whereby the Kings mind was incensed the more toward that Voyage. Who when furnishing himself with Strength and Armor, with Powder and Shot, and Gun-stones to play with in France, and with other Artillery for that purpose convenient, so set over into France, where he got Harefleu with divers other Towns and Castles in Normandy and Picardy, and at Agincourt had a great Victory over the French Army, they being counted but seven thousand, by pricking sharp stakes before them, &c. After that he won Caen, Towke, Rowan, with other Towns more, as Meldune, or Melune, and married with Katharine the French Kings Daughter. And yet notwithstanding the third time he made his Voyage again into France, where at length at Bloyes he fell sick and died: concerning all which Voyages, because they are sufficiently discoursed in Fabian, Hall, and other Chronographers, referring therefore the Reader unto them, I will return my story to other matters of the Church more effectual.

The entry of the Story of the Bohemians.

Vide supra.

I Declared a little before how by the occasion of Queen Anne, which was a Bohemian, and married to King Richard the Second, the Bohemians coming thereby to the knowledge of Wickliff: Books here in England, began first to taste and savour Christs Gospel, till at length by the preaching of John Hus they increased more and more in knowledge. Insomuch that Pope Alexander the Fifth hearing thereof, began at last to stir coals, and directeth his Bull to the Archbishop of Swinco, requiring him to look to the matter, and to provide that no person in Churches, Schools, or other places, should maintain that Doctrine, citing also John Hus to appear before him. To whom the said John answering again, declared that Mandate or Bull of the Pope utterly to repugne against the manifest examples and doings both of Christ and of his Apostles, and to be prejudicial to the liberty of the Gospel, in binding the Word of God not to have free recourse. And therefore from this Mandate of the Pope he appealed to the same Pope better advised. But while he was prosecuting his Appeal, Pope Alexander died, as is aforesaid. Ex Cochleo in hist. Hussit.

The Bohemians receiving the Gospel. The Pope against the Bohemians. John Hus cited of the Pope.

After whom succeeded Pope John the Three and twentieth, who also, playing his part here in this matter like a Pope, fought by all means possible how to repress and keep under the Bohemians, first beginning to work his malice upon the foresaid Hus their Preacher, who at the same time preaching at Prague in the Temple of Bethlehem, because he seemed rather willing to teach the Gospel of Christ, than the Traditions of Bishops, was therefore accused of certain to the forenamed Pope John the Three and twentieth for an Heretick. The Bishop committed the whole matter unto Cardinal de Columna; who when he had heard the Accusation, he appointed a day to John Hus, that he should appear in the Court of Rome: which thing once done, Wenceslaus King of the Romans, and of Boheme, at the request specially of his wife Sophia, and of the whole Nobility of Boheme, as also at the earnest suit and desire of the Town and University of Prague, sent his Ambassadors to Rome, to desire the Bishop to quit and clearly deliver John Hus from that Sentence and Judgment: and that if the Bishop did suspect the Kingdom of Boheme to be infected with any heretical or false Doctrine, he should send his Embassadors, the which might correct and amend the same, if there be any error or fault in them. And that all this should be done at the only cost and charges of the King of Boheme; and to promise in his name that he would aid and affist the Bishops Legates with all his Power and Authority, to punish all such as should be taken or found in any erroneous Doctrine. In the mean season also John Hus, before his day appointed, sent his lawful and meek Procurators unto the Court of Rome, and with most firm and strong Reasons did prove his Innocency: whereupon he trusted so, that he thought he should have easily obtained that he should not have been compelled, by reason of the great danger to appear the day appointed. But when as the Cardinal de Columna, (unto whose will and judgment the whole matter was committed) would not admit any defence or excuse, John Hus his Procurators appealed unto the high Bishop: yet notwithstanding this last refuge did not so much prevail with Cardinal de Columna, but that he would openly excommunicate John Hus as an obstinate Heretick, because he came not at his day appointed unto Rome.

John Hus excommunicate by Cardinal de Columna.

Notwithstanding, forsomuch as his Procurators had appealed unto the high Bishop, they had other Judges appointed unto them, as Cardinal Aquileianus and Cardinal Venetus, with certain others. The which Judges, after they had prolonged and deferred the matter by the space of one year and a half, at last they return'd to the Sentence and Judgment of Cardinal de Columna, and confirming the same, commanded John Hus his Procurators that they should leave off to defend him any more, for they would suffer it no longer. Whereupon when his Procurators would not cease their instant suit, certain of them were cast into prison, and grievously punished, the other leaving their business undone, returned into Boheme.

The Bohemians notwithstanding little cared for all this, but continuing still, as they grew more in knowledge, so the less they regarded the Pope, complaining daily against him and the Archbishop for stopping the Word of God, and the Gospel of Christ to be preached, saying, That by their Indulgences and other practices of the Court of Rome, and of the Bishops Consistory, they sought their own profit, and not the Glory of Jesus Christ: that they pluckt from the Sheep of Christ the Wool and Milk, and did not feed them, either with the Word of God, or with good examples. Teaching moreover and affirming, that the Commandments of the Pope and Prelates are not to be obeyed, but so far as they follow the Doctrine and life of Christ and of his Apostles: and that Lay-men ought to judge the works of Prelates, as Paul judged the works of Peter in correcting him, Gal. 2. Furthermore, they had amongst them certain Notes and Observations, whereby they might discern how far and wherein they might obey their Prelates: they derided also and scorned the Popes Jurisdiction, because of the Schism that was then in the Church, when there were three Popes together, one striving against another for the Papacy.

Over

KING Hen. 5.

Three doubts of John Hus propounded.

Over and besides this, at the same time John Hus did propound publickly, and by the Notaries caused to be written three doubtful questions, the tenour whereof followeth here word for word, and is this: Forasmuch, saith he, as it is good for men being in doubt to ask counsel, whereby all dubitation is removed, they may be able more firmly to adhere to the Truth; three doubts arise here to be resolved: The first doubt is, Whether we ought to believe in the Pope? The second, Whether it be possible for any man to be saved, which confesseth not with his mouth unto a mortal Priest? The third doubt is, Whether any of the Doctors do hold or say, that some of Pharaohs Host being drowned in the Red-Sea, and of the Sodomites being subverted, be saved?

Credere in Deum. Credere Deo. Credere Deum. Ps. Lauds. Ille qui fit. 17. cap. 11. Against auricular confession.

As concerning the first, he did hold negatively, alledging the saying of Bede upon this place of the Apostle (To him that believeth upon him which justifieth the wicked, his faith is imputed to righteousness, Rom. 4.) Upon this place saith Bede, Aliud est credere in Deum, aliud credere Deo, aliud credere Deum, &c. The second doubt saith he, the Master of the Sentences doth answer, lib. 4. dist. 17. cap. 11. in these words, What is then to be holden or said herein? Certes, then without the confession of the mouth, and assoiling of the outward pain, sins be forgiven through contrition and humility of the heart, &c. For the third doubt he brought in the words of S. Hier. upon the Prophet Nahum, speaking of the Egyptians destroyed in the Sea, and of the Sodomites destroyed with fire, and of the Israelites destroyed in the Desert. Know you (saith Hierome) that God therefore punished them for their sins here temporally, because they should not be punished hereafter perpetually, and therefore because they were here punished, they should not be punished hereafter, for else the Scripture should lye, which is not to be granted. These three questions he-like John Hus did bring in to declare how the Doctors do not agree in all things, neither with the Church of Rome, neither are to be followed in all points of all men.

Counsel of the Prelates of Prague against the Gospellers.

It followeth moreover after the death of the Archbishop Swinco above mentioned, that one named Conradus was placed by the Pope there to be chief General, which Conradus conferring with the Divines and Doctors of the University of Prague, required their advices and counsels, what way they might better take to affiwage the diffention and discords between the Clergy and the people. Whereupon a certain Council was devised to be holden after this fort and manner as followeth:

1. First, That all Doctors and Masters of the University of Prague should be assembled in the Court of the Archbishop, and in his presence, that every Doctor and Master should swear, not to hold or maintain any of the 45 Articles of John Wicklif before condemned.

2. Item, Concerning the seven Sacraments of the Church, the Keys and Censures of the Church, the Manners, Rites, Ceremonies, Customs, and Liberties of the Church, concerning also the worshipping of Reliques and Indulgences, the Orders and Religions of the Church, that every one shall swear that he doth hold, believe and maintain, and will maintain, as doth the Church of Rome, and no otherwise, of the which Church of Rome the Pope is the Head, and the College of Cardinals is the Body: who are the true and manifest Succesors of blessed Saint Peter Prince of the Apostles, and of the College of the other Apostles of Christ.

Forum humanum. Forum meritorium. Medium.

3. Item, That every one shall swear, that in every Catholick matter, belonging to the Church, he will stand to the determination of the Apostolical See, and that he will obey the Prelates in all manner of things, wheresoever the thing, which is pure good, is not forbidden; or that which is meer ill, is not commanded; but is mean and indifferent between both. Which mean or indifferent thing, yet notwithstanding by circumstances of time, place or person, may be either good or evil.

4. Item, That every one shall swear and confess by his Oath, that the Opinions of Wicklif and others, touching the seven Sacraments of the Church, and other things above notified, being contrary to the said Church of Rome, be false.

5. Item, That an Oath be required of them all, that none of them shall hold, defend or maintain any of the 45 Articles of John Wicklif aforesaid, or in any other matter Catholick, and especially of the seven Sacraments and other Articles above specified, but only as doth the Church of Rome, and no otherwise.

6. Item, That every Ordinary in his Diocess shall cause the said Premisses, contained in the first, second, third, and fourth Articles aforesaid, to be published in his Synods, and by his Preachers to be declared to the people in the Kingdom of Boheme.

7. Item, If any Clerk, Student, or Lay-man shall withstand any of the premisses, that the Ordinary have authority, if he be convicted thereof, to correct him according to the old Laws and Canons, and that no man shall defend such a one by any means: for none but the Ordinary hath Power to correct such a man, because the Archbishop is Chancellor both of the Kingdom and Univerity of Prague.

8. Item, That the Songs lately forbidden, being odious, flanderous, and offensive to others fame, be not sung either in Streets, Taverns, or any other place.

9. Item, That Master John Hus shall not preach so long as he shall have no absolution of the Court, neither shall hinder the preaching in Prague by his presence: that by this, his Obedience to the Apostolical See may be known.

10. Item, That this Council doth appear to be good and reasonable for the putting away of all report and dissension that is in the Kingdom of Boheme.

11. Item, If Master John Hus with his complices will perform this, which is contained in the four former Articles, then we will be ready to say as they would with us and have us, whensoever need shall require, that we do agree with them in matter of Faith: otherwise if they will not so do, we in giving this testimony, should lye greatly unto our Lord the King and the whole World. And moreover, we will be content to write for them to the Court of Rome, and do the best we can for them, our honours saved. This counsel and devise being confidered amongst the Heads of the University of Prague, the foresaid Administrator named Conradus, presented unto the King and to the Barons of the Realm, and also to the Senate of Prague. Whereof as soon as word came to John Hus and his Adherents, they likewise drew out other Articles in manner and form of a Council as followeth:

For the honour of God and the true preaching of his Gospel, for the health of the people, and to avoid the sinister and false infamy of the Kingdom of Boheme, and of the Marquisship of Moravia, and of the City and Univerity of Prague, and for the reforming of peace and unity between the Clergy and the Scholars of the Universty.

1. First, Let the right and just decreement of the Princes, and of the Kings Council, be holden and stand in force, which between the Lord Archbishop Swinco on the one party, and between the Rector and Master John Hus on the other party, was made, proclaimed, sealed, and solemnly on both parts received and allowed in the Court of our Sovereign Lord the King.

2. Item, That the Kingdom of Boheme remain in his former Rites, Liberties, and common Customs, so as other Kingdoms and Lands do enjoy: that is, in all approvations, condemnations, and other acts concerning the holy Mother universal Church.

3. Item, That Master John Hus (against whom the foresaid Lord Swinco could object no Crime before the Council) may be present in the Congregation of the Clergy, and there whosoever will object to him either Heresie or Error, let him object, binding himself to suffer the like pain, if he do not prove it.

4. Item, If no man will set himself on the contrary part against him, then let the Commandment be made by our Sovereign Lord the King through all his Cities, and likewise let it be ordained and proclaimed through all Villages and Towns, That Master John Hus is ready to render account of his Faith, and therefore if any will object unto him any Heresie or Error, let him write his name in the Chancery of the Lord Archbishop, and bring forth his Probations openly before both the Parties.

5. Item, If none such shall be found to object, or which will write his name, then let them be called for, which caused to be notified and rumored in the Popes Court, that in the Kingdom of Boheme, in the City of Prague, and in the the Marquisdom of Moravia, many there be whose hearts be infected with Heretie and Error, that they may prove who they be; and if they be not able to prove it, let them be punished.

6. Item, That commandment be directed to Doctors of Divinity and of the Canon-Law, and to the Chapter of Cathedral-Churches, and that it be required of them all and of every one particularly, that they will bring forth his name, if they know any such to be an Heretick or Erroneous, and if they deny to know any such, then let them make recognition thereof, before the publick Notary, confirming the same with their Seals.

7. Item, These things thus done and premised, then that our Soveraign Lord the King, and also that the Archbishop will give commandment under pain, that no man shall call one another Heretick or Erroneous, unless he will stand to the probation of that Heresie or Error, as it becometh him.

8. Item, After these things obtained, that our Soveraign Lord the King, with the consent of his Barons, will then levy a Subsidy, or collect of the Clergy, and direct an honest Ambassy to the Popes Court, with the which Ambassadors let them also go upon their own proper charges or expences for their purgation, which have caused this Kingdom sadly and grievously to be infamed in the Apostolick Court.

9. Item, In the mean season for the presence of Master John Hus, no Interdict ought to be made, as it was made of late contrary to the order and determination of our holy Mother-Church, &c.

The Pope maketh war.

As this matter was thus in altercation between the two parts, the one objecting, the other answering in Articles as aforesaid: In the mean time it happened by the occasion of Ladislaus King of Naples, who had besieged the Popes Towns and Territories, that Pope John raising up War against the said Ladislaus, gave full remission of sins to all them which would War of his side to defend the Church. When this Bull of the Popes Indulgence was come to Prague, and there published, the King Wenceslaus, who then favoured that Pope, gave commandment that no man should attempt any thing against the said Popes Indulgences. But Hus with his Followers, not able to abide the impiety of those Pardons, began manifestly to speak against them; of the which company were three certain Artificers; who hearing the Priest preaching of these Indulgences, did openly speak against them, and called the Pope Antichrist, which would set up the Cross to fight against his evenchristened. Wherefore they were brought before the Senate, and committed to Ward. But the people joyning themselves together in Arms, came to the Magistrates, requiring them to be let loose. The Magistrates with gentle words and fair promises satisfied the people, so that every man returning home to his own house, the tumult was aswaged. But the Captains being in prison, were notwithstanding there beheaded, whose names were John, Martine, and Stascon. The death and Martyrdom of these three being known unto the people, they took the bodies of them that were slain, and with great solemnity brought them unto the Church of Bethlem. At whose Funeral divers Priests favouring that side, did sing on this wise; Those be the Saints which for the Testament of God gave their Bodies, &c. And so their Bodies were sumptuously interred in the Church of Bethlem, John Hus preaching at the same Funeral, much commending them for their constancy, and blessing God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which had hid the way of his verity so from the prudent of this World, and had revealed it to the simple Lay-people and inferior Priests, which chose rather to please God than men.

John, Martine, Stascon, Martyrs.

Thus the City of Prague was divided. The Prelates with the greatest part of the Clergy, and most of the Barons, which had any thing to lose, did hold with the Pope, especially Steven Paletz, being the chiefest doer on that side. On the contrary part the Commons with part of the Clergy and Students of the Univerlity, went with John Hus. Wenceslaus the King, fearing lest this would grow to a tumult, being moved by the Doctors and Prelates and Council of his Barons, thought best to remove John Hus out of the City, who had been excommunicated before by the Pope. And further to cease this diffention risen in the Church, he committed the matter to the disposition of the Doctors and the Clergy. They, consulting together among themselves, did set forth a Decree, ratified and confirmed by the Sentence of the King, containing the sum of 18 Articles for the maintenance of the Pope and of the See of Rome, against the Doctrine of Wickliff and John Hus. The names of the Doctors of Divinity were these, Steven Paletz, Stanislaus de Znoyma, Petrus de Ikoyma, Joannes Heliæ, Andreas Broda, Johannes Hildesen, Matthæus Monachus, Hermanus Heremita, Georgius Bota, Simon Wenda, &c. John Hus, thus departing out of Prague, went to his Country, where he, being protected by the Lord of the soil, continued there preaching, to whom resorted a great concourse of people, neither yet was he so expelled out of Prague, but that sometimes he resorted to his Church at Bethlem, and there also preached unto the people.

{KING Hus. 5.}

Steven Paletz a great Enemy to John Hus.

Hus lished of Rome.

Moreover, against the said Decree of the Doctors, John Hus with his company replied again, and answered to their Articles, with contrary Articles again as followeth.

The Objections of John Hus and of his part against the Decree of the Doctors.

First, The foundation of the Doctors whereupon they found all their writings and counsels, is false, which foundation is this, whereas they say that part of the Clergy in the Kingdom of Boheme is pestilent and erroneous, and holdeth falsly of the Sacraments.

2. The Doctors hereby do defame the Kingdom of Boheme, and do raise up new Discords.

3. Let them shew therefore those persons of the Clergy, whom they call pestilent, and so let them verifie their report, binding themselves to suffer the like pain, if they be not able to prove it.

4. False it is that they say the Pope and his Cardinals to be the true and manifest Succesors of Peter and of the Apostles, and that no other Succesors of Peter and of the Apostles, can be found upon the Earth besides them. When as no man knoweth whether he be worthy of hatred or of favour. And all Bishops and Priests be Succesors of Peter and of the Apostles.

5. Not the Pope, but Christ only is the Head; and not the Cardinals, but all Christs faithful people be the Body of the Catholick Church, as all holy Scripture and Decrees of the holy Fathers do testifie and affirm.

6. And as touching the Pope, if he be a Reprobate, it is plain that he is no Head, no nor Member also of the holy Church of God, but of the Devil, and of his Synagogue.

7. The Clergy of the Gospellers agreeing with the saying of Saint Austin which they alledge, and according to the Sanctions of the Fathers, and determinations of the holy Mother-Church, do say and affirm laudably, that the condemnation and prohibition of the 45 Articles is unlawful, and unjust, and rashly done: and that not only because the Doctors, but also all Bishops and Archbishops, in such great Causes, namely touching Faith (as these Articles do) have no authority at all, as appeareth. De baptismo & ejus effectu cap. Majores. Et in Can. 17. dist. cap. Hinc fedi, &c.

8. The second cause of the discord which they alledge also is most false; seeing the Faith of whole Christendom, concerning the Church of Rome, is divided in three parts by reason of three Popes, which now together do Reign: and the fourth part is neutral. Neither is it true, that we ought to stand in all things to the determination of the Pope, and of the Cardinals, but so far forth as they do agree with the holy Scripture of the Old and New Testament, from whence the Sanctions of the Fathers did first spring, as is evident. De accusationibus cap. Qualiter, &c.

9. In the fourth Article they brast out into a certain dotage, and are contrary to themselves. By reason that they dolefully have reprehended the Gospellers, who in all their doings receive the holy Scripture (which is the Law of God, the way of truth and life) for their judge and measure: and afterward they themselves do alledge the Scripture, Deut. 17. where all Judges both Popes and Cardinals are taught to judge and discern between Leper and Leper, and in every Ecclesiastical Cause, only after the {KING Hus. 5.} the rule of Gods Law. And so are they contrary unto their second Article, wherein they say, That in every Catholick matter we must run to the Pope; which is contrary to the foolish condemnation of the Articles aforesaid.

24. q. 1. Hæc est fides Papa, &c.

10. Consequently, like Idiots they do most falsely alledge for their purpose the Canon, under the name and authority of Hierome, written 24. q. 1. Hæc est fides Papæ, &c. where they do apply the words of Hierome most impertinently to the Pope of Rome, which he writeth to S. Austin, calling him a most blessed Pope.

11. By the which place of Hierome it is manifest that the first Article of those Doctors is false. Forasmuch as by these words appeareth that other besides the Bishop of Rome and his Cardinals are called blessed Popes, holding the Faith and seat of Peter, and are succesors of the Apostles, as was Austin and other Holy Bishops moe.

12. Whereof it followeth moreover, That the Church of Rome is not that place, where the Lord did appoint the principal See of his whole Church. For Christ, which was the head Priest of all, did first fit in Jerusalem, and Peter did fit first in Antioch, and afterward in Rome. Also other Popes did sit some in Bonony, some at Perusium, some at Avimion.

13. Item, the foresaid Prelates are falsifiers of the Holy Scriptures and Canons, and therefore are worthy to be punished: Which affirm and say, That we must obey the Pope in all things. For why, it is known that many Popes have erred, and one Pope was also a Woman. To whom not only it was not lawful to give obedience, but also unlawful to Communicate with them. As all Rubricks, and infinite Canons do declare.

Austin called Pope.

14. Item, Their, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. Articles do stand and are grounded upon untrue and false perswasions. And therefore are to be rejected and detested like the other before: Seeing they do induce not to peace and verity, but to dissention and fallity.

15. It is manifest also to the Laity, that this dissention among the Clergy riseth for no other cause, but only for the preaching of the Gospel, which reprehendeth such Simoniacks, and such Heresies in the Church of God, as namely haunt the Court of Rome spreading out their branches abroad into all the World. Who deserve to be removed and extirpate, not only of the Clergy Gospellers, but also of the Secular Power. And so these three vices, to wit, Symony, Luxury, and Avarice (which is Idol-worship) be the causes of all this Dissention among the Clergy in the Kingdom of Bohemia, and not the other, which they falsly ascribe to the Gospellers of Prague. These three vices being removed, Peace and Unity would soon be restored in the Clergy.

Pope Joan a Woman. Symony, Luxury, Avarice, three causes of dissention in the Clergy.

16. Moreover, their last Article is too gross, and not only is without all Law, but also without all colour of Law: whereas they fondly and childishly do argue thus, That the Processes made against Mr. John Hus ought to be obeyed, because forsooth the common fort of the Clergy of Prague, hath received them. By the same reason they may argue also, That we must obey the Divel, for our first Parents Adam and Eve obeyed him. Also our fore-ancestors before us were Pagans, wherefore we must obey them, and play also the Pagans.

17. But let this frivolous Opinion go, this is certain truth, That the said Processes, made against Mr. John Hus, by Law are none. Forasmuch as they were obtained, drawn, wrought, and executed contrary to the Commission of the Pope, against the determination of the holy Mother-Church, as appeareth Cap. Sacro de Sententia excom. and a Thousand other Laws besides.

18. Finally, whosoever wittingly and obstinately do defend and execute (the said Process made) or consenteth unto them, are all to be counted as Blasphemers, Excommunicate, and Hereticks, as hath been afore written and exhibited to the Lord General Bishop Olomucense. And more shall be declared and proved, if audience may be given openly before all the Doctors. Ex Æneæ Sylvi. & Cochlæo.

¶ Unto these Objections of John Hus and his part, the Catholick Doctors again did answer in a long tedious Process; The scope whereof principally tended to defend the principality of the Pope, and to maintain his obedience above all other Potentates in the World; affirming and contending, that although Christ is the head alone of the whole multitude of them that are sleeping in Purgatory, and which are labouring in the Church Militant, and which are reigning in Heaven, yet this letteth not, but the Pope is Head of the Church here Militant, that is, of all the faithful, which here in this World live under his office. Like as Christ is King of all kings, and yet Charles may be King of France: so say they, Christ may be the Universal Head, and yet the Pope may be Head under Him of the whole Church; And thus concluded they that the Pope is the Head, and that the College of Cardinals is the Body of the Romish Church, which Church of Rome is placed in the Ecclesiastical Office here over the Earth, to know and define upon every Ecclesiastical and Catholick matter; to correct errors and to purge them, and to have care upon all such Universal matters, and care upon all Universal Churches, and upon the Universal flock of faithful Christians. Forasmuch as in the Regiment of the Church through the Universal World, there must needs remain in such Office always some such manifest and true succesors of Peter, Prince of the Apostles and of the College of the other Apostles of Christ; neither can there be found or given upon Earth any other succesors, but only the Pope which is the Head, and the College of Cardinals, which is the body of the foresaid Church of Rome. And although the whole Universal multitude of the faithful do make the Body of Christ, yet the same Body of Christ is not placed here in Office to exercise such Authority upon Earth. Because that Universal multitude was never yet, nor ever can be congregate together.

Ex Cochlæo in Hist. Hussit. Catholicks, that is, Universal.

And therefore necessary it is, That some such true and manifest Succesors and Judges be appointed, to whom recourse must be had in all such Catholick and Ecclesiastical matters determinable. For like as in Earthly Regiments every cause of discord is brought before his Judge, and hath his place assigned where to be decided: so like reason who would require, that in principal matters and controversies of Faith, some such presidents and places be limited for the purpose to have such doubts resolved. And this being granted, then the Doctors proceed, and here must needs conclude (say they) that there cannot be given in all the World any other place, but only the Church of Rome, the Head whereof is the Pope, and the Body is the College of Cardinals. For like as Christ, departing out of this World in his Corporal presence, left his Body here with us under the Sacrament in an other form, whereby he remaineth with us (according to his Promise, Matt. ult.) unto the consummation of the World: even so Christ walkt here on Earth in his Bodily presence, he was Pope himself and Chief Bishop, and so Head of the Church here Militant in Earth, corporally conjoyned with the same, as the Head is to his Body. But after that he departed out of the World, because his Body which is the Church Militant upon the Earth, should not be headless, therefore he left Peter and his Succesors to his Church, for an Head in his place, unto the consummation of the World, saying to him, Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my Church, &c. Matth. 16. And again he saith, Feed my sheep, Joan. ult. That is to say, Be thou Peter the Head over thy Brethren.

If ye go to Rome, ye shall find Catholicks, that is, Universal.

If ye go to Rome, to any Policy, when ever any private case of England, brought to the Emperors Court to be decided? If ye go to any Policy, then shew Gods Word for it.

The possibility of Christ Doctorly applied.

O deep Humility of these Doctors.

Tedious it were, to recite all the bibble babble of these Doctors in this their long responsal. Who so listeth to see the bottom of their profound writing and knowledge, may resort either to the History of Silvius, or else to Master Cochleus, in his first Book, De Hist. Hussit.

Vide Æneas Silv. & Cochleum. Hussit. lib. 1.

Thus then Master John Hus being driven out of Prague (as is afore touched) by the motion of these Doctors, and moreover being so Excommunicate, that no Mass nor other must be said there where he was present: the people began mightily to grudge and to cry out against the Prelates and other Popish Priests, which were the workers thereof, accusing them to be Symoniacks, Covetous, Whoremasters, Adulterers, Proud, sparing not to lay open their vices to their great ignomy and shame: And much craving Reformation to be had of the Clergy.

The King seeing the inclination of the people, being also not ignorant of the wickedness of the Clergy, under pretence to reform the Church, began to require greater exactions upon such Priests and Men of the Clergy, as were known and accused to be wicked livers. Whereupon they on the other part that favoured John Hus, taking that occasion present, complained of all, accused many, and feared none, whomsoever they knew to be of the Catholick Faction, or enemies to John Hus. By reason whereof the Priests of the Popish Clergy were brought, such as were faulty, into great distress and such as were not faulty, into great fear. Insomuch that they were glad to fall in, at least not to fall out with the Protestants, being afraid to displease them. By this means M. Hus began to take some more liberty unto him, and to preach in his Church at Bethlehem, and none did control him: by the same means the people also received some comfort, and the King much gain and Money by that reason.

The Priests of Boheme displayed and taxed for their ill life.

And thus the Popish Clergy, while they went about to persecute John Hus, were inwrapped themselves in great tribulation, and afflicted on every side, as well of Laymen, as of learned Men of the Clergy. Insomuch that Women also and Children were against them. And by the same reason, wherewith they thought to intangle him, they were overthrown themselves. For the Doctors which before condemned this Doctrine in John Hus for intolerable Heresie, and cried out so much against him, for teaching that Temporal Lords might take away Temporal Livings from the Clergy sinning habitualiter, that is, Lying and continuing still in the custom of iniquity; now when the King and the Lords Temporal began to measure them and bereave them of their Temporalties for their transgressions, the said Doctors did keep silence and durst speak never a word.

The Popish Doctors and Priests overthrown by their own reason.

Again, where the foresaid Doctors before could not abide in John Hus, that Tithes were to be counted for pure Alms, now coming to the Guid-Hall, they were fain to intreat for their Temporal Goods not to be taken from them; pleading the same Temporalites to be meer Alms and Devotion of good Men, given unto the Church. Ex Cochlæo.

And thus now did they themselves grant the thing, which before they did condemn. The more that the Popes Clergy was pinched, the more grudge and hatred redounded to John Hus, although he was in no cause thereof, but only their own wicked deservings, for the which cause

Stephen Paletz, Andrew de Brida, writ against John Hus.

Stephen Paletz, and Andreas de Brida, being the chief Champions of that Faction, though they would not remedy the cause, yet to ease their minds, wrote sharp and cruel Letters to Master Hus. And to help the matter forward, the People also here must help at a pinch, who likewise writeth his Letters to Wenceslaus King of Bohemia, which was Brother to Sigismund Emperor, for the suppressing of John Hus and of his Doctrine. Which was in the fifth and last year of his Popedom, Anno. 1414. The tenor of whose Letters to King Wenceslaus in this wise proceedeth.

The Letter of Pope John to King Wenceslaus.

The Letter of Pope John to King Wenceslaus.

JOHN Bishop, Servant of Gods Servants, to his well-beloved Son in Christ, Wenceslaus, King of Romans and of Bohemia, greeting and Apostolical Benediction. Among other desires and delights of our heart, who, although unworthy, represent the room of Christ here in Earth: this doth chiefly redound to our singular comfort, so often as we do hear of the brotherly entreaty of peace and concord (by which concord Kingdoms do increase, as contrary by discord they are diminished) which is between your honour and our wel-beloved Son in the Lord, Sigismund your Brother Germain and Cousin, for the noble King of the Romans, &c. And furthermore it followeth in those words; And as we have cause to joy at the promisses, so likewise again the heavy rumors which are here, do trouble and damp our minds. For we hear that in diverse places under our dominion, there be certain which do follow and lean to the errors of that Arch-Heretick Wickliff, whose Books have been long since condemned in the general Roman Council, to be Erroneous, Heretical, and subverting from the Catholick Faith. And furthermore, which is worst of all, the said persons cleaving to the opinions of the Hereticks (lest they should be corrected of their superior powers for their excess) to cover their naughtiness and stubbornness in despising the commandments of the Apostolical Seat) do openly teach disobedience and contempt of the Keys and Ecclesiastical censure, to the subversion of the Apostolical Dignity, setting at naught the Decrees of the Holy Fathers and Canons. Wherefore we do exhort your worship for the mercy of our God, as heartily as we may or can, that it would please you, as we desire and hope you will (so effectually) to shew forth your Regal power, both for the glory of God, and defence of the Catholick Faith (which you go about to defend) and for the conservation of your Kingly Name, state and honour, for the prosperous and safe government of your Kingdom and Dominions, as it becometh a Catholick Prince, whereby this blot of Heresie (which doth so lamentably and miserably spring and creep in those parts, and doth so infect the minds of mortal Men, to the destruction of their souls, and doth sequester them from the Congregation of the pure and Catholick Faith and Truth) may be rooted out, &c.

Given at Bononia in the Ides of June, in the fifth year of our Popedom, &c.

In this Epistle of Pope John above prefixed, forsomuch as mention is made of a certain Council before holden at Rome (which was four years before) against the Articles and Books of John Wickliff, it shall not be impertinent nor out of purpose to repeat a certain merry History and worthy otherwise to be noted, written by Nicholas Clemangis of a certain Spirit, which ruled the Popish Councils; his words are these.

The story of an Owl appearing at the Council of Pope John. Ex Nic. Clemangis.

The same Pope called a Council at Rome about four years before, at the earnest suite of diverse men. And a Mass of the Holy Ghost being said at the entrance into the said Council, (according to the accustomed manner) the Council being set, and the said John sitting highest in a Chair prepared for him for that purpose: Behold, an ugly and dreadful Owl, or as the common Proverb is, the evil sign of some mischance of death to follow, coming out of the back half of him, flew to and fro, with her evil favoured voice, and standing upon the middle beam of the Church, cast her staring eyes upon the Pope sitting. The whole company began to marvel, to see the Night-Crow, which is wont to abide no light, how he should in the mid-day come in the face of such a multitude, and judged (not without cause) that it was an illfavored token. For behold, said they (whispering one in anothers ear) The Spirit appeareth in the shape of an Owl. And as they stood beholding one another, and adviling the Pope, scarcely could they keep their contenance from laughter. John himself, upon whom the Owl stedfastly looked, blushing at the matter, began to sweat and to fret and fume with himself, and not finding by what other means he might salve the matter, being so confused, dissolving the Council, rose up and departed. After that there followed another Session: In the which Owl again, after the manner aforesaid, although, as I believe, not called, was present, looking stedfastly upon the Bishop; whom he beholding to be come again, was more ashamed than he was before (and justly) saying, he could no longer abide the sight of her, and commanded that she should be driven away with battes and thoutings: But she being afraid neither with their noise, neither with any thing else, would not away, until that with the strokes of the sticks, which were thrown down at her, she fell down dead before them all. This I learned of a faithful Friend, who at the same time came to Rome: the which thing I scarcely crediting for the rareness of the matter, he affirmed by his Oath, that it was most certain and true: adding moreover, that all there present were much offended, and did greatly deride that Council called for such a purpose, and by little and little the Council was dissolved, nothing done there, as he saith. Although it hath not been always seen that such spiritual Doves have been present with Popes and their Councils, and governed them; yet their evil Doctrine declareth no less. Read gentle Reader, the Book of Clemangis, and thou shalt not think thy labor evil bestowed. For he hath both learnedly, truly, freely, and godly bewrayed the filthiness of Antichrist, and his Ministers, their wickedness, impiety, and cruelty, and the miserable state and face of the Church, &c. And thus much for Pope John.

The Council of Constance.

The Council of Constance.

HERE by the way is to be noted and understood, that during all this time of Pope John, there were three Popes Reigning together, neither was yet the Schism ceased, which so long time had continued, the space (as I said) of 29 years. By reason whereof a general Council was ordained and holden at Constance in the same year, Anno. 1414. being called by Sigismund the Emperor, and Pope John the three and twentieth, for the pacifying of the foresaid Schism, which was then between three Popes, striving for the Popedom. The first whereof was John, whom the Italians set up. The second was Gregory, whom the French-men set up. The third was Benedict, whom the Spaniards placed. In this Schismatical ambitious conflict, every one defended his Pope, to the great disturbance of Christian Nations. This Council endureth four years long, wherein all their matters were decided most by four Nations, to say, the English, Germain, French, and Italian Nation. Out of which four Nations were appointed and chosen four Presidents to judge and determine the matters of the Council. The names of which Presidents were these; John the Patriarch of Antioch for France, Anthony Archbishop of Rigen for Italy, Nicholas Archbishop of Genesuensis for Germany, and Nicholas Bishop of Bath for England; by whom many great and profitable things to the glory of God, and publick profit, might have been concluded, if the rotten fleth of Churchmen could have biden the salt of the Gospel, and if they had loved the truth. But as Gregorius Nazianzenus writeth, there lightly come few general Councils, but they end more with disturbance, than tranquility: so it happened in this Council. For whereas John the 23*th.* in the first Session exhorteth them by these words taken out of the eighth of Zachary, Veritatem diligite, that is to say, Love the truth, further monishing them, and specially the Divines, every Man to do his endeavour for the unity of the Church, and to speak their mind freely; how soon this his exhortation was forgotten, it appeared shortly after by the despising of the Prophets, and persecuting of Christ in his members, as by the grace of Christ shall appear hereafter in the process of this story. First this John did resign his Papacy; the Emperor giving him thanks kissed his feet.

Three Popes together striving for the Popedom.

The Presidents allotted to this Council were nominated together with their deputies, 1500. Philip and Clarey, &c. Gregorius in Epistola quadam.

Afterward the said John repenting him that he had so done; fought means to flee, whereunto Frederick Duke of Austrich did assist him; for he changing his Garments fled by night with a small company. And when he was now come unto Schaff-House to go into Italy, the Emperor pursuing, took him, and proclaimed Frederick Traitor, and for that cause took away certain Cities from him. At the last the matter was appealed under this condition, that Frederick should require grace of the Emperor, and resign all his possessions unto him. Whereupon the Emperor received him again into favor, and restored him to his Dukedom: This Pope, being thus deposed, was committed unto the County Palatine, and by him carried to the Castle of Manheim, where he was kept prisoner by the space of three years. Afterward he was again by Pope Martin admitted to the number of Cardinals.

Duke Frederick of Austrich proclaimed a Traitor.

Pope John taken and cast into prison.

This Pope John was deposed by the decree of the Council, more than three and forty most grievous and hainous crimes being objected and proved against him; as that he had hired Marcilus Permesita a Phylitian to poison Alexander his predecessor. Further, that he was an Heretick, a Simoniak, a Liar, an Hypocrite, a Murtherer, an Inchanter, a Dice-player, an Adulterer, and a Sodomite, and finally, what crime is it that he was not infected withal?

Mark the good qualities of Pope John.

And now to return unto the Council, first we will declare the order of their Sessions, with things therein concluded, in general; then we will (Christ willing) adjoyn the special tractation of such matters, as pertain to the story of the Bohemians, and John Hus, and Hierome of Prague, who in the same ungodly Council were condemned and burned.

This Council thereof of Constance, which was summoned by the Emperor Sigismund, and Pope John the 23*d.* about the Nativity of our Lord Jesus, An. 1414. began the same year to be assembled about the later end of the year. Which first beginning, as the manner is, with a Mass of the Holy Ghost, as they were singing according to their custom their Hymn, Veni sancte spiritus, there was at the same time a certain Bill set up in the Church by some well disposed man, as it seemed, wherein were contained these words following; Alias rebus occupati nunc adesse vobis non possumus, that is to say, We are otherwise occupied at this time, we cannot intend to come to you. Here is also to be remembered the worthy saying of the Emperor Sigismund, when talk was ministred as touching the reformation of spirituality, and some said, quod oporteat incipere a Minoritis, that is, the reformation ought first to begin at the Minorites; the Emperor answering again,

A writing set up how the Holy Ghost had no leasure to come to the Council of Constance. The worthy saying of the Emperor touching the order of reformation

Non a Minoritis, sed a Majoritis; that is, Not with the Minorites, saith he, but with the Majorites: Meaning the Reformation ought first to begin with the Pope, Cardinals and Bishops, and other superior States of the Church; and so to descend after to the inferiours. Thus much by the way, and now to the purpose and order of the Sessions as we promised. The which Council continued, as is aforesaid, by the space of four years, and had in it five and forty Sessions, wherein many things were concluded, the which altogether were too long to be recited in this place; as the deposition of three several Popes, which were before spoken of, and the hearing of certain Legates. Yet I mind to make some brief recapitulation of the most principal matters there done in the Sessions orderly ensuing.

1. In the first Session chiefly was concluded, First, That this Council was lawfully Congregate.

2. 2*d. Item*, That the going away of the Pope should be no let or stay, but the Council might proceed.

Note by this example, the authority of Councils preferred before the Pope. ☞ Wherein note (gentle Reader) that the authority of the General Council is above the Pope, contrary to their own Doctrine.

3. 3*d. Item*, This Council should not be dissolved before the Church were reformed, as well in the superiors as inferiors.

4. In the 4*th.* Session amongst other things, this was first concluded; That a Synod Congregate in the Holy Ghost, making a General Council, representing the whole Catholick Church here Militant, hath power of Christ immediately, to the which power every person, of what state or dignity soever he be, yea, being the Pope himself, ought to be obedient in all such things as concern the general reformation of the Church, as well in the heads, as in the subjects. {Anno} {1415.}

Item, The said Pope should not translate the Court of Rome, and the Officers of the same Court, from the City of Constance. And that all his censures, doings and workings after the time of his departure, whatsoever he should enterprise to do to the prejudice of this Council, should be no effect.

5. In the 5*th.* Session the same Articles were repeated and concluded again.

6. In the 6*th.* Session procuration and citation was sent out against the Pope.

Commissioners appointed to hear John Hus. Item, Commissioners were appointed out of the four Nations for the hearing of John Hus, which shall be hereafter mentioned in his story following.

Item, The memory of John Wickliff was condemned, and the sentence, given in the Council holden at Rome upon the condemnation and burning of Wickliff's Books, was there confirmed.

Citation granted against the Bishop of Prague. Item, In the same Session, Citation was sent out against Hierome of Prague, the tenor whereof followeth after in the story of the said Hierome.

Item, In this Session was Decreed against Libels of infamy.

7. In the 7*th.* Session, nothing was handled, but that tenor of the Citation against Pope John was recited.

8. In the 8*th.* Session, the Sentence and Condemnation of John Wickliff, and his 45. Articles was recited, and sentence given against his memory, and bones to be burned. The tenor whereof is rehearsed in the History of John Wickliff before passed. Sentence given for the burning of Wickliff's bones.

9. In the 9*th.* Session, the matter and cause of Pope John was again intreated, and Commissioners appointed to enquire upon his cause, and Judges for the same.

10. In the 10*th.* Session, suspension was given out and read against the said Pope.

11, 12. In the 11*th.* and 12*th.* Sessions, Notaries were assigned and definitive sentence given against the said Pope: where also it was decreed that none of them, that intended before for the Papacy, should be chosen Pope.

13. In the 13*th.* Session was Decreed, Quod nullus Presbyter sub pœna Excommunicationis Communicet populo sub utraque specie panis & vini; That is, That no Priest under pain of Excommunication shall Communicate unto the people under both kinds of bread and wine. The people of Christ Excommunicated from the Communion of the Holy Cup.

14. In the 14*th.* Session came in the resignation of Pope Gregory the 12*th.* which was one of the three before mentioned, striving for the Papacy, with certain other Articles concerning the Election of the Bishop of Rome, and the ratification of their resigning, which gave other the Papacy. {KING} {*Hen.*5.}

Then ensueth the 15*th.* Session, in the which silence was commanded on all parts under pain of Excommunication and the great curse, that no person or persons high or low, of what estate or degree soever he were, Emperor, King, Cardinal or other, should disturb the said Session with any manner of noise, either by hand, foot, or voice. This being done, the sentence and condemnation against John Hus was read and published, which after in the story of John Hus followeth to be seen more at large. 15. The solemn publishing of the sentence of condemnation against John Hus.

In the 16*th.* Session, Ambassadors were assigned by the Council to go into Arragon to Benedictus the 13*th.* to treat with him for the relignation of his Papacy, as the other two had done before. 16.

Item, Power was given to Judges to cite under pain of deprivation, all such as privily departed away from the Council; in the which Session also the sentence against John Hus was confirmed and ratified.

In the 17*th.* Session, the Emperor took upon him a journey to the King of Arragon, to treat with Pope Benedictus. An Excommunication denounced against all such as should go about to impeach the Emperors journey, about that matter, &c. 17. The Emperors journey into Arragon.

Item, Prayers and Processions were determined to be made by the Council every Sunday for the same cause, with an hundred days of pardon given to them that would be present thereat; and that all Prelates should be present at every of these said Masses and Processions in their Pontificalibus. Granting besides to every Priest that said one Mass, for the same a hundred days of pardon: And to all other that once a day should say one Pater noster, and one Ave, for the safety of the Emperor, forty days of pardon. Pardons were here dog cheap.

In the 18*th.* Session certain Judges were assigned for the hearing of matters, which the Council had no leasure to hear. 18.

It was there also decreed, That such Letters and Bulls, as were written in the name of that Council, should be received with no less credit and authority than the Bulls proceeding from the See Apostolical, and that the falsifiers of the same should incur no less penalty, than the falsifiers of the other. Legates also and Ambassadors were sent into Italy.

In the 19*th.* Session, which was the same year in the month of September, Hierome of Prague, who was cited as is beforesaid, was accused of Heresie, and cast into prison by the said Council, and constrained to abjure. The which his abjuration hereafter followeth to be seen in his History. 19.

Item, It was decreed, Quod non obstantibus salvis conductibus Imperatoris, Regum, &c. posse per judicem competentem de hæresi pravitate inquiri, &c. That is, Notwithstanding the safe conduct given by the Emperor and Kings, &c. Inquiry may be made against any Man for Heresie by a sufficient Judge, and Process to be made according to the Law. Concilium sufficiens

The causes of Heresies were committed to certain Judges and Deputies.

Item, The Chart called Carolina, and divers other Charts and constitutions concerning the Liberties of the Church of Rome, being brought forth were approved and confirmed. And how chanceth it that the Chart of Constantine his donation is not here mentioned?

In the 20*th.* Session, Letters and Instruments were made and set upon Church doors, to require and admonish Duke Frederick to restore again unto George Bishop of Austrick, such lands, rents, and revenues as he detained and withheld, under pain of Interditement, Suspending and Excommunicating. 20. Provide that the Churchmen lose nothing in no case.

During the time of this Session, the Ambassadors returned out of Arragon from Pope Benedict, and were heard with great audience; whereas certain Articles and conditions between the Pope and the Council were brought forth and agreed upon to the number of twelve.

In the year of our Lord 1416. was the 21*th.* Session, beginning after their manner with a Mass of the Holy Ghost, with Procession and such other Rites, in the time of which Mass, James Bishop of Lordy made a Sermon, taking for his Theam these words; Exprobravit Deus incredulitatem eorum & duritiam: That is, The Lord rebuked their misbelief and hardness, &c. This Sermon being ended, 21. {Ann.} {1416}

{KING} {*Hen.*5.} Jerome of Prague repelled against the Sermon of the Bishop of Lordy. ended, Jerom of Prague which had Abjured as is said the year before, being present thereat, stood up upon a certain bench or form, replying against the foresaid James and his Sermon, alledging and preaching divers and sundry things, whereupon the Patriarch of Constantinople, one of the Commissioners proceeded against him, pronouncing the sentence definitive, which he had in writing against the said Jerom; which sentence being read and approved by the Council (the tenor whereof ensueth in his History) the said Jerom was delivered unto the Secular Power, and burned.

22, 23. The 22d and 23d Sessions contain no worthy matter, but only the placing of the Ambassadors of Alphonsus King of Arragon, and granting them voices in the Council.

24. In the 24th Session, Citation was given out against Benedict, keeping with Alphonsus King of Arragon.

25. The 25th Session containeth nothing but a certain Commendam given to the Church of Olemuccensis.

26. In the 26th Session there was nothing else handled, but the Uniting and Incorporating of the Ambassadors of the King of Navar into the Council, and also concerning the derogation of the priority of voices.

27, 28. After this followed the 27th and 28th Sessions, which were in the year 1417. Wherein was treated the relation and declaration concerning the cause betwixt Duke Frederick and the Bishop of Trident, and Process given out against the said Duke, accusing him of Sacrilege; and also Excommunicating him for not obeying the Admonition of the Council; concerning the usurpation and detaining of the City of Trident, and other Possessions from Bishop George, as is before specified. {Ann.} {1417.}

29, 30. In the 29th and 30th Sessions, Protestors and Notaries were given out in the cause against Pope Benedict, and Order Decreed upon his obstinacy; wherein also the withdrawing of the King of Arragon from the same Pope was recited, and approved by the Council.

31. In the 31st Session, certain Instruments and special Letters Monitory were directed from the Council to a certain Earl of Italy, named Comes Virtutum, for laying violent hands upon Albert Bishop of Asce, and for bringing him to Prison; requiring the said Earl, under pain of Interdiction and Excommunication, to set the said Bishop at liberty. Also another Decree was set forth for restoring again the liberties of the Church of Baron.

32, 33. In the 32d and 33d Sessions, the accusation of Pope Benedict was renewed, and his obstinacy accused, and witnesses brought in; at which thing doing the Emperor Sigismund was present. Pope Benedict accused.

34. In the 34th Session, the cause of the foresaid Pope was heard, and Process given out against him.

35. In the 35th Session, the Ambassadors of the King of Castile were brought in, and united to the Council, and Instruments thereof made and read. Also, that notwithstanding the Oaths made to the foresaid Pope, Men might lawfully forsake his obedience.

36. In the 36th Session, a certain Citation was made and read against the Pope, containing his deprivation, and the sentence against him, and Instruments made upon the same. And whereas this Pope had thundred out his Curses, Deprivations and Excommunications against them; the said Synod did adnihilate all his doings. The Pope curseth the Council.

37. The 37th Session did renew again the accusation of the foresaid Pope, and the sentence definitive against him was published.

38. In the 38th Session certain Decrees were made touching the adnihilating of the penalties of the Ambassadors of King Henry, Son of Alphonsus King of Arragon. Also, another Decree was made touching the revocation of the voices granted to the Ambassadors of the King of Arragon.

39. Thus Pope Benedict being Deposed and Excommunicated, as is aforesaid, in the next Sessions following they addressed themselves to the Election of a new Pope, beginning first in the 39th Session, to give out Decrees concerning General Councils, and provision for the avoiding of such like Schisms hereafter. Decreeing every tenth year to have a General Council, after the two Councils that should follow immediately after this; of the which, the one should be kept within five years then next following, and the second within seven years after that. Decrees for General Councils.

Item, In the same Session was drawn out a form touching such things as the Pope should profess and bind himself to observe at the time of his Election, of the which Form the Order and Tenor is this:

J. N. Elected for Pope, profess with heart and mouth unto Almighty God, whose Church I take upon me to govern by his help, and to blessed St. Peter the Prince of the Apostles, so long as I shall endure in this frail and brittle life, firmly to believe and hold the holy Catholick Faith after the traditions of the Apostles, of General Councils, and of other holy Fathers, and namely of the eight General Councils: Nicene the first, the second of Constantinople, Ephesine the third, Chalcedon the fourth, the fifth and sixth of them in Constantinople, the seventh of Nice, the eighth of Constantinople. And also of the General Councils of Lateran, Lions, and Vienna, willing to observe the same Faith unviolate even to the uttermost, and to preach and defend the same, even to the spending of my life and blood; and also by all means possible to prosecute and observe the Rite of the Sacraments Canonically delivered to the Catholick Church. And this my Profession and Confession, by my commandment being written out by the Notary of the Arches of the holy Church of Rome, I have subscribed with mine own hand, and sincerely with a pure mind and devout confidence I offer it unto the Almighty God upon such an Altar, &c. In the presence of such witness, &c. Item, &c. The Profession which the Pope is bound to.

It was also Decided in this Session, That no Prelates should be translated against their will.

The third of the same month and the same year, followed the 40th Session, wherein certain Decrees were constitute and read, as touching Reformations to be made through the whole Church by the Pope that next should be, with the Council, before this Synod should break up. 40.

Item, That they should so proceed to the Election of the Bishop of Rome, notwithstanding the absence of those Cardinals which were with Pope Benedict in Spain. This done, the order and manner was Decreed for the Election of the Pope.

After these things thus Decreed; in the next Session, which was 41, the Constitution of Clement the sixth was read, concerning the order and diet of the Cardinals being then in the Conclave about the chusing of the Pope; and upon the same, Oaths were Minitred unto the Cardinals and other Electors, binding them to observe and keep all such things as they should be bound to, during the time of the Election. 41.

First, That they should enter into the Conclave within ten days after the fortieth Session, which was this present day after sun-set. The order and manner of the Conclave in chusing the Pope.

Secondly, That every Cardinal should have but two servitors attending upon him at the most, either of the Laity or Clergy, as they would themselves.

Thirdly, That they should remain together in the said Conclave, without any Wall betwixt them, or any other cover, save only bare Curtains, if any were disposed to sleep.

Fourthly, That the Conclave should so be shut up, and the entry to the Privy-Chamber be kept so straightly, that none of them should come in or out, nor any have recourse unto them to talk with them privily or apertly, nor they to admit any Man to come to them, except by the consent of them all certain should be called about matters concerning the Election.

Fifthly, That no Man should send to them either Messenger or Writings.

Sixthly, That a competent Window should be delivered unto them to receive in their Victuals, but that no person might come in thereat.

Seventhly, That no day after their first ingress into the Conclave, beside Bread, Wine, and Water, they should have any more Dishes but one of one only kind, either of Flesh or Fish, Eggs, Pottage, made of Fish or Flesh, not after the daintiest sort, beside Sallets, Cheese, Fruit, and Confserves, whereof there shall be no principal Mess made but for sauce and taste.

Eightbly, That not one should be compelled to go into the Conclave; but if they did all refuse to go in, then they should be compelled thereunto.

Nimthly, That such as would go out, might; but if they would all go out before the Pope were Elect, they should be compelled to go in again, except such whom infirmity did excuse; but without the excuse of infirmity, if any went out, he should no more be admitted, except they went all out together.

Tenthly, That such as went out by reason of infirmity, to be absent, and return before the Election be determined, may be admitted again into the Conclave in the same state wherein they shall find the Election to stand.

Further and besides, the Keepers of the Conclave should also be Sworn to see all these Premises observed and kept without fraud or guile; and that they should not straitten the Cardinals and other Electors above the order here taken.

And if the King be there himself, sitting in his Throne of Estate, he should receive the same Oath of the Cardinals.

Upon this, such as should be Electors, beside the Cardinals were chosen.

These were wise Cardinals, they would not go into the Conclave, but they would be sure to have their Goods safe and unspoiled.

Furthermore, forasmuch as the Goods and substance of such as were Elect, were accustomed to be given and granted unto such as could catch them: whereupon under the pretence of the same, many did invade the Goods of the Cardinals, and others which were in the Conclave, fally fayning them to be Elected which were not to be Elected. To stop the greedy ravening of such, a Decree also was published in the same Session.

These things thus prepared and set in order, the Patriarch of Constantinople, with the Cardinals and other Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Deans, Archdeacons, Doctors, with other Electors, entring into the Conclave upon Monday, on Thursday after they had hatched out a Pope, being St. Martins even, whereupon they named him Martin. This Martin thus being Elected, was straightway brought in by the Emperor and the Council into the Church of Constance, and there inthronized for Pope, not without great Solemnity and Triumph. The twenty first day of the said Month, this foresaid Martin, according to their accustomed Pomp, was honourably brought in to be Crowned with sumptuous Procession from the high Church of Constance, unto the Monastry of St. Austin: the Emperour on Foot leading his Horse by the Bridle on the right hand, and the Marquiss of Brandenburgh Prince Elector likewise leading his Horse on the left hand, the Pope himself riding in the midst upon his Palfrey.

Pope Martin hatched.

The Emperor leadeth the Pope's Horse by the Bridle on the right hand. The Prince Elector leadeth the Popes Horse on the left hand.

And thus being brought into the Monastry aforesaid, and so reduced round about again from thence to the high Church of Constance, he was there Crowned with all Magnificence.

Notwithstanding all this, yet all the trifling and fond vanity of this Council, more great than wise, did not end thus: for in the next Session, which was the forty second,
42. came out a Decree in the name of the Pope and the Council, discharging the bond of the Emperor and the County Palatine, touching the safe custody of Pope John, who was by Bond committed unto them to be kept in safety.

In the 43d Session, certain other Decrees and Statutes
43. Apparel of the Clergy. were made by Pope Martin in the said Synod, annullating and reproving all the Acts and proceedings of the other Popes before, during the time of the Schism from the time of Gregory the eleventh. As in matters concerning Exemptions, Unions, Fruits and Profits of the Church, Benefices, Symony, Dispensations, Tithes, and other burthens of the Church. Also concerning the Apparel of the Clergy, and such other things.

In the 44th Session, the sage Fathers of this Council
44. were occupied about the determining what place the next Council should be kept in. The forty fifth Session brake up and dissolved this Synod.

Now to finish our tedious rehearsal of this Synod, The Cardinal Umbald, by the commandment of the Pope and
45. the Council, with a high and loud voice pronounced these words: Domini ite in pace; which is, Lords depart in peace; whereunto the standers by answered, Amen.

Thus the Council being dissolved, Frier John Bishop of Catthan, by the consent and commandment of the Pope and the Council, went up into the Pulpit to make a Sermon, taking for his Theme, Vos autem tristitiam habetis; iterum autem videbo vos, & gaudebit cor vestrum, You are now in sadness, I will see you again, and then your hearts shall rejoyce. The which Collation being ended, another Cardinal named Anthony, was sent up by the Pope and the Council, with his Proclamation; First, to dismiss the Synod, and to give every man leave to depart home. Also to declare the Popes Indulgence unto them, who by the Authority of God Almighty, had granted to them all and every one present at that Council, full Absolution once in their life: so that every one, within two months after the hearing of this Indulgence, should procure the same in form of writing. Also, another Indulgence was granted in like manner of Plenary remission at the hour of death, and that was understood as well of the Houshold, as of the Masters themselves. But under this condition, that from the time of notification of the same, they should fast by the space of one whole year every Friday, for the Absolution in their life time: And for the Absolution at the hour of death, to fast the same Friday another year, except they had some lawful impediment to do it, so that after the second year, they should fast unto their lives end, or else do some other good work. The which being in this manner proclaimed, the Synod brake up, and every man departed home.

Smell here Reader, this made well for the Popes part.

Ex Parali. Pomero Abbatis Usp.

The number of the Foreigners resorting to this Council, both Spiritual and Temporal, was 60500, whereof the number of Archbishops and Bishops, was 346.

The number of Prelates in the Council of Constance.

Abbots and Doctors, 564.

Secular Men { Princes, Dukes, Earls, Knights, Esquires, } 16000.

Besides common Women belonging to the same Council, 450.

Barbars, 600. Minstrels, Cooks, and Jesters 320.

Common Women in the Council of Constance.

So that the whole multitude which were viewed to be in the Town of Constance, between Easter and Whitsontide, were numbered to be 60500 strangers and foreigners at the Council.

60500 strangers at the Council of Constance.

Here is to be noted that in this Council of Constance nothing was Decreed or Enacted worthy of memory, but this only, that the Popes Authority is under the Council, and that the Council ought to judge the Pope.

The general Council about the Pope.

And as touching the Communion in both kinds, although the Council did not deny, but that it was used by Christ and his Apostles; yet notwithstanding by the same Council it was Decreed to the contrary.

Communion in both kinds denied by this Council.

Hitherto we have comprehended the Order and Discourse of this Council, with the Acts and Sessions concerning the same; which Council, although it was principally thought to be assembled, for quieting of the Schism between the three Popes, yet notwithstanding a great part thereof was for the cause of the Bohemians, and especially for John Hus, as appeared by their preparation before the Council. For before the Council began, the Emperor Sigismund aforesaid sent certain Gentlemen Bohemians which were of his own Houshold, giving them in charge to bring John Hus Bachelor of Divinity, unto the said Council, and that under his safe conduct. The meaning and intent thereof was, That John Hus should purge and clear himself of the blame which they had laid against him: and for the more better assurance, the Emperor did not only promise him safe conduct, that he might come freely unto Constance, but also that he should return again into Bohemia, without fraud or interruption; he promised also to receive him under his protection, and under safeguard of the whole Empire. For the same only cause the Emperor sent him afterwards the said safe conducts double written, both in Latin and Almain; the form whereof doth hereafter ensue.

¶ Sigismund by the Grace of God King of the Romans, of Hungary and Denmark, Croatia, &c. To all Princes as well Ecclesiastical as Secular, Dukes, Marquesses, and Earls, Barons, Captains, Borough-masters, Judges, and Governors, Officers of Towns, Burgesses and Villages, and unto all Rulers of the Commonalty, and generally to all the Subjects of our Empire, to whom these Letters shall come, grace and all goodness.

We

{KING} Hen. 5. The safe conduct given to Master John Hus.

We charge and command you all, That you have respect unto John Hus, the which is departed out of Bohemia, to come unto the General Council; the which shall be celebrate and holden very shortly at the Town of Constance. The which John Hus we have received under our protection and safeguard of the whole Empire, desiring you that you will charitably receive him when he shall come towards you, and that you intreat and handle him gently, shewing him favour and good will, and shew him pleasure in all things, as touching the forwardness, ease, and assurance of his journey, as well by Land as by Water.

Moreover, we Will, That he and all his company, with his carriage and necessaries, shall pass throughout all Places, Passages, Ports, Bridges, Lands, Governances, Lordships, Liberties, Cities, Towns, Bourgages, Castles and Villages, and all other your Dominions, without paying of any manner of imposition or Dant-money, Peage, Tribute, or any other manner of Toll whatsoever it be. We Will also, That you suffer to pass, rest, tarry, and to sojourn at liberty, without doing unto him any manner of impeachment, or vexation, or trouble; and that if need shall so require, you do provide a faithful company to conduct him withal, for the honour and reverence which you owe unto our Imperial Majesty. Yeven at Spire the 18th of October, in the yeare of our Lord God 1414.

¶ By this it may appear, That this safe conduct was granted not in the time of the Council by the Bishop, but before the Council by the Emperor: who was or ought to be the Principal Ordainer and Director of the Council under God. Now whether the Bishops did well in breaking and adnulling this promise of the Emperor, against the Emperors mind, because the discussion thereof belongeth Ad materiam juris, non facti, being a matter rather of Law than of Story, I will defer to reason this case with Mr. Cope, to such time as may be more convenient to the full tractation thereof.

Ut Cope. p. 319.

Notwithstanding briefly to touch and pass, let us consider part of the reasons of the said Cope, how frivolous and false they be, and easie to be refelled. What (saith he) if he preached by the way coming up? First, That it is false, vide infra. What (saith he) if he stood obstinate in his Heresie? What if he sought to escape away after his coming up? To this the Lords of Bohemia do answer, That this safe conduct was broken, and he Imprisoned not only before he attempted to escape, or before he was condemned for an Heretick, but also before he was heard of the Council what he was. Vide infra.

Answer to Ut Cope.

Further, where Cope saith, that the General Council was above the Emperor, and hath power in case of Heresie to break publick Leagues and Grants; To that I say, That this safe conduct stood not only upon the Emperor, but also upon the consent of the Pope himself. Vide infra.

And admit that to be true, That the Council had power to make this Decree, to break promise with Hereticks; yet this cannot be denied, but that John Hus was condemned and judged before that Decree in the nineteenth Session was made. Finally when Cope hath proved by what Scripture the Councils have power to defeat the Authority of their Emperors in such Secular Causes touching safe conducts, and outward safety, then will I answer him more fully herein. But to the purpose again of the story.

John Hus taketh the Emperors safe conduct.

John Hus seeing so many fair promises, and the assurance which the Emperor had given unto him, sent answer unto the Emperor, that he would come unto the Council. But before he departed out of the Realm of Bohemia, and specially out of the Town of Prague; he did write certain Bills long enough afore, as well in Latin as in the Bohemian Language, and Almain, and caused them to be set and fastned upon the Gates of the Cathedral Churches and Parish Churches, Cloisters and Abbies, signifying unto them all, that he would go to the General Council at Constance, wherefore if any man have any suspition of his Doctrine, that he should declare it before the Lord Comrade, or Bishop of Prague, or if he had rather, at the General Council, for there he would render and give up unto every one, and before them all, an account and reason of his Faith. The example of his Letters and Intimations set up, were these; the Copy whereof here followeth:

¶ The Letters of John Hus set up in common places of the City of Prague.

Letters of John Hus set up.

After John Hus, Bachelor of Divinity, will appear before the most reverend Father the Lord Conrade, Archbishop of Prague, and Legate of the Apostolick Seat, in their next Convocation of all their Prelates and Clergy of the Kingdom of Bohemia, being ready always to satisfy all Men which shall require him to give a reason of his Faith and Hope that he holdeth, and to bear and see all such as will lay unto his charge, either any stubbornness of Error or Heresie, that they should write in their names there, as is required both by Gods Law and Mans. And if so be that they could not lawfully prove any stubbornness of Error or Heresie against him, that then they should suffer the like punishment that he should have had; unto whom all together he will answer the next General Council at Constance, before the Archbishop and the Prelates, and according to the Decrees and Canons of the Holy Fathers, shew forth his innocency in the Name of Christ. Dated the Sunday next after the Feast of St. Bartholomew.

The intimations following, were drawn out of the Bohemian Tongue.

Another to John Hus, before his going to Constance.

I Master John Husnetz do signify unto all Men, That I am ready to come and stand before the face of my Lord the Archbishop, and to answer to all things whereof I am fally accused in the next Convocation of Bachelors; and chiefly to this point, That in many places they do report me to be an Heretick, not having respect unto Justice or Law, neither yet to my merits or deserts. Therefore since that you, which do never cease to slander and backbite me with your words, do understand and know these things, come forth openly before the face and presence of the Lord Archbishop, and with an open mouth declare and shew forth what false Doctrine or other things ye have heard me teach, contrary to the Catholick Faith; and if mine that I shall be found faulty in never so small a matter, contrary or against the Faith of Christ, or in any false Doctrine, and that I do chuse that or other things contrary to the Faith of Christ, then I will hold my peace and suffer punishment as an Heretick. And if there be no Man that will resist against me, or accuse me in this point, once again I say unto you, That I am ready to appear at Constance in the famous Congregation, to the end that I may stand in the company of the Divines, even before the face of the Pope. Therefore whosoever knoweth any false Doctrine contrary to the Faith of Christ in me, let him come thither and shew it forth boldly, if he have any thing to lay against me, and for my part I will not be slack, if I may understand or know it, to answer as well to small as great, as touching the truth which I have received of God, and desire to be defended. All you good Men therefore which love the truth, say now whether by these my words I do think or go about any thing, either contrary to the Law of God or Man. If I be not admitted then to be heard, be it known and manifest unto all men, that it hapneth not through my fault the same day.

The effect of John Hus his Intimation.

¶ This Epistle which followeth was set upon the Gates of the Kings Palace, Translated into Latin, out of the Bohemian Tongue.

A writing of John Hus at the Kings Gates.

UNto the Kings Majesty, the Queen, and to all such as are of his Council, and to all other Rulers and Magistrates, which now are in the Kings Court, I John Hus do signifie and publish, That I have understood, not by any vain rumour or tale, that there be Letters brought from the Pope to the Kings Majesty; the Contents whereof is this: That the Kings Majesty should bring to pass, that the Hereticks which were now lately sprung up in his Kingdom and Dominions, should not take any firm or strong root. Forsomuch as without any desert, as I trust by Gods Grace the fame or noise is sprung and blown abroad; it shall be

our part to foresee and take heed, that neither the Kings Majesty, neither the noble Kingdom of Bohemia, should be driven to bear or suffer any reproach or slander for me. Wherefore now of late I have sent my Letters to and fro, which I have with great labour and diligence caused to be openly set up to this intent, that I might thereby cause the Archbishop to be careful and diligent about the matters, signifying openly, that if there were any Man in all Bohemia, which did know me to be a follower of any false or corrupt Doctrine, he should profess his name in the Archbishops Court, and there shew forth and declare what he thought. And forasmuch as there would none be found or come forth, which would accuse me, the Archbishop commanded me and my procurers to depart in peace. Wherefore I require and desire the Kings Majesty, which is the defender of the truth, also the Queen and their Counsellors, and all other Rulers and Magistrates, that they would give me a faithful Testimonial of this matter; forsomuch as I have oftentime willed and attempted this, and no Man hath either accused me or troubled me. I do it moreover to be known unto all Bohemia, and to all Nations, That I will be present even at the first time before the Council of Constance, in the most famous place, in the presence of the Pope, the Pope being President; and finally, in the presence of all others which will come to that most famous place; and that whosoever hath any suspition of me, that I have either taught or defended any thing contrary unto the Faith of Christ, let him come hither also, let him declare there before or in the presence of the Pope, and all the Doctors of Divinity, what erroneous and false Doctrine I have at any time followed or holden. More, if he shall convince me of any error, or prove that I have taught any thing contrary unto the Christian Faith, I will not refuse to suffer whatsoever punishment shall be due for an Heretick. But I hope and trust even from the bottom of my heart, that God will not give the victory to unfaithful and unbelieving Men, the which do willingly kick and spurn against the truth.

The same time John Hus sent his procurers to the Lord Bishop of Nazareth, Ordained by the Apostolick See, Inquisitor of Heretic of the City and Diocese of Prague, requiring him, That if he had found any error in him, he would declare it openly. But the said Bishop before the said procurer, and the publick Notary, with many other credible Witnesses, answered, That he had often talked with John Hus, and that he never knew any thing in him, but as becometh a goodly and faithful Man; and this his Testimony of John Hus, he approved by his Letters, the Copy whereof is here under written.

The Testimony of the good Bishop of Nazareth.

The Bishop of Nazareth witnesseth with John Hus.

WE Nicholas by the Grace of God Bishop of Nazareth, and Inquisitor, specially deputed by the Apostolical Seat, for Heresies both of the City and Diocese of Prague, by these Presents do it to be known unto all Men, that we in times past have often commanded and talked with that honourable Man Master John Hus, Bachelor of Divinity, of the famous University of Prague, and have had divers and sundry conferences with him, both of the Scriptures and divers other matters, and in all his sayings, doings, and behaviour, we have proved and found him to be a Faithful and a Catholick Man, finding no manner of evil, sinister, or by any means erroneous doings in him unto this present. We do witness and protest moreover, how the said John Hus, of late, in the Cathedral Church of Prague, and in other both Collegiate and Parish-Churches, and in the Colleges of the University of Prague, and in the Gates and Porches of the most Noble Prince and Lord, the Lord Wenceslaus King of Romans and of Bohemia; also in the Gates of the reverend Father the Lord Conrade Archbishop of Prague, Legate of the Apostolick See, and Chancellor of the University of Prague, and of other Princes and Barons, then being in the City of Prague, hath set up his Letters written both in Latin, and in the Bohemian Tongue, containing sententially in effect, how the foresaid Master John Hus would appear before the reverend Father the Lord Conrade, the foresaid Archbishop of Prague, and all the Prelates and Clergy of the Kingdom of Bohemia, that shall be congregated and called together by the said Archbishop, at the day appointed in the said City of Prague, ready always to satisfy every Man that shall desire and require him to shew a reason of his Faith and Hope that he holdeth, and to see and hear all and every one which could prove any obstinacy of Error or Heresie lawfully against him, under the pain to receive the like punishment: unto whom all together he would, by Gods help, answer in the Council of Constance, which was now at hand, before the said Lord Archbishop and us, with all other Prelates, and there in Christs Name, according to the Decrees and Canons of the holy Fathers, to declare and shew forth his Innocency. After the which Letters, as is aforesaid by the said Master John Hus openly set up, there did no Man appear before us, the which would accuse the said Master John Hus of any Error, either of any Heresie. For the evident witness of all which things we have commanded these present Letters to be made, and confirmed the same with the setting to of our Seal. Dated in Prague the thirtieth of August, Anno 1414.

[KING] Hus.5.

Upon which matter also, a publick Instrument was drawn, testified with the Hand and Seal of the publick Notary, named Michael Pruthatierz. The Copy of which Instrument here under followeth:

❡ An Instrument of Recognition, or Protestation of the Lord Inquisitor of Heresies.

IN the Name of God, Amen. In the year of his Nativity, one thousand four hundred and fourteen, the thirtieth of August, in the fifth year of the Bishoprick of the most holy Father in Christ, John by the Grace of God Pope, the three and twentieth of that name, in the uppermost Parlor of the House of the most famous Man the Lord Peter of Zwogtia, called Zuirglits, Master of the Mint of the most famous Prince and Lord, the Lord Wenceslaus, King of the Romans and of Bohemia, in the greater City of Prague, about the Abbey of St. James the Apostle, in the presence of me the publick Notary here under written, and certain witnesses here within written, specially called for that purpose.

There was personally present Master John Jessenitz, Master of Art, procurer in the name of the Honourable Man, Master John Hus, Bachelor, formed in Divinity of the University of Prague. He most humbly and earnestly required of the reverend Father in Christ and Lord, Nicholas Bishop of Nazareth, Inquisitor of Heresies for the City and Diocese of Prague, specially appointed by the Apostolick See, being there also present, saying, Reverend Father, do you know any Heresie or Error in Master John Hufnutt, otherwise called Hus? The which said Lord Nicholas, not compelled or constrained, but of his own will and accord freely and openly did there Recognise, saying these or the like words, in the Bohemian Tongue.

I have often and many times been conversant with Master John Hus, and have eaten and drunk with him: also I have been often present at his Sermons, and diver of his Collations which he hath made upon divers places of the Scripture, and I never found or perceived in him any Error or Heresie, but in all his words and deeds I have found him always a true and a Catholick Man, neither have I found any thing that doth savour of any Error or Heresie.

Again, the said Master John his procurer in the behalf as above, required and asked the said Lord Nicholas, Bishop and Inquisitor, whether any Man have accused the said Master John Hus of any Heresie before him, being Inquisitor for Heresie, and hath convicted him of Heresie. He answered, That since the time he knew John Hus, and that he was made Inquisitor for Heresie in the City and Diocese of Prague (as is aforesaid) never any Man accused, either convinced the said Master John Hus of any Heresie before him unto this present time. Adding moreover, That he the said Master John Hus did openly set up his Letters Patents this present year aforesaid, in the said Month of August, upon the Porches of the Cathedral

[KING] Hus.5.

Church of Prague, and other Collegiate and Parish-Churches of the City of Prague, and upon the Gates of our said Lord, our Lord the King, and the Archbishop of Prague, containing in them this effect: how that he would appear before Conrade Archbishop of Prague, and all the Prelates and Clergy of the Kingdom of Bohemia, which should be congregated and called together at a certain day of the month aforesaid, ready always to satisfie all Men as touching the Faith and Hope which he held, and to see and hear all or singular that would lay any obstinacy of error and heresie unto him, that they should determine themselves there to suffer the like punishment, according to the extremity both of Gods Law and Mans Law, unto whom altogether he would answer in his own right before the said Archbishop of Prague, and the said Lord Nicholas, Bishop and Inquisitor aforesaid, and the Prelates even in the next General Council of Constance, and there according unto the Canons and Decrees of the holy Fathers, declare and shew forth his uprightness and innocency, upon all and singular: of which proceedings, Master John de Jessenitz procurer, and in the procurers name or behalf as afore, required and desired that he might have one or many publick Instruments made unto him by me the publick Notary here under-written. These things were done the Year, Indiction, Day, Month, Hour, Place, and Bishoprick, as is aforesaid, in the presence of these noble and famous Men, the Lord William de Zwingiditz, Baron of the Kingdom of Bohemia, Peter his Son, the Lord Illaworicion, de Renow likewise Baron Wenceslaus de Lunarx, Vaffone de Mielkonitz, Burgrave of the Castle of Lichtenburg, Czitborius de Bodanetz Esquire, and William de Dupoer, Knight of the said Diocese of Prague, with many other worthy and credible witnesses, which were specially desired and required unto the Premises. And I Michael, sometimes of the Son of Nicholas de Prachatitz of the Diocese of Prague, and by the Imperial Authority, publick Notary, was present with the witnesses fore-named, at the affairs aforesaid, at the request, demand, answer, and petition, and all and singular the doings within written, and did see and hear all these things to be done in the foresaid manner and form. But being busied with other matters, I have caused this to be faithfully drawn and written, and subscribing the same with mine own hand, have published and reduced it into this form, and have signed it with my Seal and name accustomed, being called and required to bear witness of all and singular the Premises.

Conrade the Archbishop cleareth John Hus.

After this, as all the Barons of Bohemia were assembled in the Abbey of St. James, about the affairs of the Realm, whereas the Archbishop of Prague was also present: There the said John Hus presented Supplications, by the which he most humbly desired the Barons, that they would shew him that favour towards the said Archbishop, that if the said Archbishop did suspect him of any Error or Heresie, that he would declare it openly, and that he was ready to endure and suffer correction for the same at his hands. And if that he had found or perceived no such thing in him, that he would then give him a testimonial thereof, through the which he being as it were armed, he might the more freely go unto Constance. The said Archbishop confessed openly before all the Assembly of Barons, That he knew not that the said John Hus was culpable or faulty in any crime or offence, and this was his only counsel; that the said John Hus should purge himself of the Excommunication he had incurred. This report, which the Archbishop had given of John Hus, doth appear by the Letters which the Barons of Bohemia sent unto the Emperor Sigismund by the said Hus, in the Town of Constance.

John Hus requireth to give testimony of his Faith, and could not be admitted.

Finally, all the Prelates and Clergy assembled together in the Town of Prague, in the Archbishop his Court, where appeared personally the worshipful Master John Jessenitz, Doctor of Decretals and Procurer, in the name and behalf of the honourable Man Master John Hus, requiring that either the said Master John Hus, or that he in the name and behalf of him might be suffered to come into the Archbishops Court, to the presence of the Archbishop, and the Prelates which were there congregated together, forasmuch as Master John Hus is ready to satisfie all Men which shall require him to shew any reason of his Faith or Hope which he holdeth, and to see and hear all and singular which were there gathered together, that is to say, the Lord Archbishop and Prelates, or any of them which would lay any manner of obstinacy, or error, or heresie unto him, that they should there write in their names, and according both unto Gods Law and Mans, and the Canon Law, prepare themselves to suffer like punishment, if they could not lawfully prove any obstinacy of error or heresie against him: unto whom altogether he would, by Gods help, answer before the said Archbishop and the Prelates in the next General Council holden at Constance, and stand unto the Law, and according to the Canons and Decretals of the holy Fathers, shew forth and declare his innocency in the Name of Christ. Unto the which, Master John of Jesenitz Doctor, one called Ulricus Swabe of Swabenitz, Marshal of the said Archbishop, coming forth of the said Court, did utterly deny unto the said Master Doctor and his party, all manner of ingress and entrance into the Court, and to the presence of the Archbishop aforesaid, and of the Prelates there gathered together. Pretending that the Archbishop, with the Prelates aforesaid, were occupied about the Kings Affairs, requiring the said Master Doctor, that he would tarry in some place without the said Court, that when the Archbishop, and the Prelates had finished the Kings Affairs, he might then return, and have liberty to come into the Court there. The said Master John Hus, and the Doctor of Law tarried a while, intreating to be admitted into the Archbishops Court: but seeing he could prevail nothing, he made there a solemn protestation of his request, that both he, and also Master John Hus and his part, could not be suffered to come into the Archbishops Court, to the presence of the Archbishop and the Prelates. Requiring of the foresaid Notary publick Instruments to be made of the same, which also was done.

And these were the things which were done before John Hus took his journy to the General Council of Constance, the which I minded briefly to rehearse, whereunto I will also annex somewhat as touching his journy thitherwards.

John Hus taketh his journey to Constance.

About the Ides of October, 1414. John Hus being accompanied with two Noble Gentlemen, that is to wit, Wancelaus of Duba, and John of Clum, he parted from Prague, and took his journey towards Constance. And in every place as he passed, he notified his presence by his Letters which he sent abroad, and especially in every good Town or City of Name, the Tenor whereof ensueth:

❡ The Copy of the Letters which John Hus set up in the common places of the Cities which he passed through, going to the Council.

The Letters which John Hus did set up in Cities as he passed to Constance.

MAster John Hus goeth now unto Constance, there to declare his Faith which he hath hitherto holden, and even at this present doth hold, and by Gods help will defend and keep even unto death. Therefore even as he hath manifested throughout all the Kingdom of Bohemia by his Letters and Intimations, willing before his departure to have satisfied and given an account of his Faith unto every Man, which should object or lay any thing against him in the General Convocation holden in the Archbishop of Prague's Court: So likewise he doth manifest and signifie, that if there be any Man in this Noble and Imperial City, the which will impute or lay any error or heresie unto him, that he should prepare himself to come unto the Council, forasmuch as the said Master John Hus is ready to satisfie every man at the said Council, which shall lay any thing unto his charge as touching his Faith.

How John Hus was received by the way going up to the Council.

In all Cities as he passed by, and principally when he was departed out of Bohemia, and entred into Almain, a great number of people did come unto him, and he was very gently received and entertained of his Hosts through all the Towns of Germany, and especially of the Citizens and Burgesses, and oftentimes of the Curates. Informuch that the said Hus did confess in a certain Epistle, that he found in no place so great Enemies as in Bohemia. And if it hapned that there were any brute or noise before of his coming, the ſtreets were always full of people which were deſirous to ſee John Hus and gratifie him; and amongſt all other, eſpecially at Noremberg, whereas certain Merchants, which went before, certified the Citizens of his coming. In the ſame City there were many Curates which came unto him, deſiring him that they might talk with him ſecretly apart: unto whom he anſwered, That he loved much rather to pronounce and ſhew forth his Mind and Opinion openly before all Men, than in hugger mugger, for he would keep nothing cloſe nor hidden. So after dinner, until it was night he ſpake before the Prieſts and Senators, and divers other Citizens, inſomuch that they all had him in great eſtimation and reverence, one only Doctor except, which was a Charter-houſe Monk, and the Curate of St. Sebauld, which did improve all that he had ſaid.

A Charter-houſe Monk againſt John Hus.

The twentieth day after that he departed out of the Town of Prague, which was the third day of November, he came unto Conſtance, and lodges at an honeſt Matrons Houſe; being a Widow named Faith, in St. Galler-ſtreet.

John Huſſes hoſteſs named Faith.

The morrow after, the Gentleman Maſter John de Clum, and Maſter Henry Latzembogc, went to ſpeak with the Pope, and certified him that John Hus was come, whom they had brought to Conſtance to the General Counſil, under the Emperor his ſafe conduct; deſiring him alſo that he on his part would grant the ſaid John Hus liberty to remain in Conſtance, without any trouble, vexation, or interruption. Unto whom the Pope anſwered, That albeit that John Hus had killed his Brother, yet would he go about, as much as in him lay, that no outrage or hurt ſhould be done unto him during his abode in the Town of Conſtance.

The Pope conſenteth to the ſafe-conduct of John Hus.

In this mean time, the greateſt adverſary that John Hus had, named Maſter Steven Paletz, the which was alſo a Bohemian born, was come unto Conſtance. But his companion Maſter Stanislaus Znoma was not yet paſſed the Borders of Bohemia when he was ſtricken with an Impoſtume, whereof he died. As ſoon as the ſaid Paletz was come to Conſtance, he did aſſociate unto him one Michael de Cauſis, the which had before falſly accuſed and blamed the ſame John Hus. And this may not be forgotten, that the ſaid Paletz had been familiarly converſant and acquainted with the ſaid John Hus from his youth upward; but after that there was a Bull brought unto Prague, from Pope John the 23d, againſt the King of Apulia, named Ladiſlaus, the ſaid John Hus withſtood it openly, forſomuch as he ſaw that it was wicked and naught.

Stanislaus Znoma, Huſſes enemy, going to Conſtance, died by the way.

Steven Paletz and Michael de Cauſis, chief enemies to Hus.

A Bull againſt Ladiſlaus King of Apulia.

And as touching the ſaid Paletz, albeit that he had confeſſed at a certain Banquet in the preſence of the ſaid John Hus, that the ſaid Bull was contrary to all equity and right; yet notwithſtanding forſomuch as he was obliged and bound unto the Pope, by means of certain Benefices received at his hand, he maintained and defended the ſaid Bull againſt John Hus. And this was the cauſe of the diſcord and falling out between them. As for Michael de Cauſis, the companion of Maſter Paletz, he was ſometime the Curate of New Prague; but he not being content therewith, but ſeeking after a further prey, dreamed and imagined out a new device how to attain unto it, for he made a ſemblance that he had found out a new invention or mean, whereby the Mines of Gold in Gilory, which were periſhed and loſt, might be renewed and ſet on work again. By this means he did ſo much with the King Wincelaus, that he did put a great ſum of mony into his hands, to do that withal which he had promiſed.

Michael de Cauſis.

This honeſt man, after he had laboured and travelled certain days about it, and perceiving that he brought nothing to paſs, and that by that means he was utterly in deſpair of his purpoſe, he employed himſelf privily out of the Realm of Bohemia with the reſt of the money, and withdrew himſelf, as a worthy Bird for ſuch a Neſt, into the Court of Rome. Such a Man of ſuch conditions was eaſily corrupt with mony, and that by the adverſaries of the ſaid Hus, and promiſed them to do what he could for them, the which he did ſhortly after. Theſe two jolly roiſters, Steven Paletz and Michael de Cauſis, drew out certain Articles againſt the ſaid Hus, ſaying, That they had gathered them out of his own writings, and ſpecially out of his Treatiſe which he had written of the Church. They trotted up and down, hither and thither, taking great pains to ſhew the ſaid Articles unto the ſaid Cardinals, Biſhops, and Monks, and ſuch other of that ſort, doing them alſo to underſtand, that there were other matters of greater importance, which the ſaid John Hus had committed and done againſt the holy Conſtitutions, and other Ordinances of the Pope and the Church; which if need were, they ſaid they would propound before the Council. Through the kindling of this their fire, they did ſo inceuſe the Cardinals, and all the Prieſts, that all they with one mind and conſent thought to cauſe the good Man to be taken and laid hands on.

{KING} Hist. 5.

The 26th day after the ſaid Hus was come to Conſtance, during all which time he was occupied in reading, writing, and familiar talk with his Friends; the Cardinals, through the inſtigation and motion of Paletz and Michael de Cauſis, ſent two Biſhops; to wit, the Biſhop of Auguſta, and of Trident, and with them the Burrough-maſter of the Town of Conſtance, and a certain Knight, to the place where John Hus lodged, about dinner-time, which ſhould make report unto him that they were ſent by the Pope and his Cardinals, to advertiſe him that he ſhould come to render ſome knowledge or witneſs of his Doctrine before them, as he had oftentimes deſired, and that they were ready to hear him.

Unto whom John Hus anſwered, I am not come for any ſuch intent, as to defend my cauſe particularly before the Pope and his Cardinals, proteſting that I never deſir'd any ſuch thing, but that I would willingly appear before the whole Aſſembly of the Council, and there anſwer for my defence openly, without any fear or doubt, unto all ſuch things as ſhall be demanded or required of me. Notwithſtanding, ſaid he, foraſmuch as you require me ſo to do, I will not refuſe to go with you before the Cardinals. And if it happen that they evil intreat or handle me; yet nevertheleſs I truſt in my Lord Jeſus, that he will ſo comfort and ſtrengthen me, that I ſhall deſire much rather to die for his Glory ſake, than to deny the verity and truth which I have learned by his Holy Scriptures. Wherefore it came to paſs, that the Biſhops being inſtant upon him, and not ſhewing any outward ſemblance that they bare any malice or hatred againſt him in their hearts, albeit they had privily laid Gariſons both in the Houſe where they were Aſſembled, and alſo in other Houſes; John Hus took his Horſe which he had at his lodging, and went unto the Court of the Pope and the Cardinals.

John Hus deſired to plead his cauſe before the whole Council.

When he was come thither, and had ſaluted the Cardinals, they began to ſpeak to him in this ſort: We have heard many reports of you, the which, if they be true, are in no caſe to be ſuffered: For Men ſay, That you have taught great and manifeſt Errors, and contrary and againſt the Doctrine of the True Church; and that you have ſowed your Errors abroad through all the Realm of Bohemia, by a long ſpace of time; wherefore we have cauſed you to be called hither before us, that we might underſtand and know how the matter ſtandeth.

John Hus is come before the Pope and the Cardinals.

The words of the Pope and the Cardinals to John Hus.

Unto whom John Hus anſwered in few words, Reverend Fathers, you ſhall underſtand that I am thus minded and affectioned, that I ſhould rather chuſe to die, than I ſhould be found culpable of one only error, much leſs of many and great errors. For this cauſe I am the more willingly come unto the General Council, which is here appointed to ſhew my ſelf ready even with all my heart to receive correction, if any man can prove any errors in me. The Cardinals anſwered him again, That his ſayings pleaſed them very well, and upon that they went away, leaving the ſaid John Hus, with Maſter John de Clum, under the guard and keeping of the Armed Men.

The anſwer of John Hus to the Pope and Cardinals.

In the mean ſeaſon, they did ſuborn and furniſh out a certain Divine, a Frier Franciſcan, a ſubtil and crafty Man, and a malicious hypocrite, to queſtion with the ſaid John Hus, which was compaſſed round about with Armed Men. This Man drawing near in his Monkiſh geſture, ſaid, Reverend Maſter, I a ſimple and rude Idiot, am come unto you to learn; for I have heard many ſtrange and contrary things againſt the Catholick Faith to be aſcribed unto you, the which do diverily move my mind being wholly inclined to the truth. Wherefore I do deſire you, even for the love which you bear unto the truth, and to all good and godly Men, that you would teach me moſt ſimple and miſerable Man, ſome certainty and truth. And firſt, Men ſay, That you hold opinion that after the Conſecration and Pro-

A Frier Minor putteth two queſtions to John Hus.

{KING} Hist. 5.

Pronunciation of the words in the Sacrament of the Altar, there remaineth only material Bread. John Hus anſwered, That it was falſly attributed and imputed unto him. Then ſaid he, I pray you, Is not this your Opinion? No verily, ſaid John Hus, I do not ſo think of it. When the Monk asked this queſtion the third time, Maſter J. de Clum being moved ſomewhat with him, ſaid, Why art thou ſo importunate upon him? Verily, if any Man had affirmed or denied any thing unto me but once, I would have believed him. And thou albeit he hath ſhewed thee his mind ſo often, yet ceaſeſt not to trouble him. Then ſaid the Monk, Gentle Maſter, I pray you pardon me a poor Idiot and ſimple Frier; ſurely I did it of a good mind and intent, being willing and deſirous to learn. This Frier put forth another queſtion unto him, proteſting his ſimplicity and ignorance, What manner of Unity of the Godhead and Manhood was in the Perſon of Chriſt? When John Hus had heard this queſtion, he turning himſelf unto Maſter John de Clum, in the Bohemian Language ſaid, Truly this Frier is not ſimple as he doth pretend, for he hath propounded unto me a very hard queſtion. And afterward turning himſelf to the Frier, he ſaid unto him, Brother, you ſay that you are ſimple, but as I have heard of you, I perceive very well that you are double and crafty, and not ſimple. It is not ſo verily, ſaid the Frier. Well ſaid John Hus, I will cauſe you well to underſtand that it is ſo. For as touching the ſimplicity of a Man it is required in things that concern civility and manners; that the ſpirit, the underſtanding, the heart, the words and the mouth ſhould agree together: and I do not perceive that this is in you. There is in your mouth a certain ſemblance of ſimplicity, the which would very well declare you to be an Idiot and ſimple, but your deeds ſhew plainly and evidently a great ſubtility and craft in you, with a great quickneſs and liveline ſs of wit, in that you have propound unto me ſo hard and difficult a queſtion.

A Feigned Judas.

Maſter John de Clum ſpeaketh for John Hus.

A Wolf in a Lambs ſkin.

Notwithſtanding, I will not fear to ſhew you my mind in this queſtion. And when he had made an end, the Monk gave him great thanks for his gentleneſs, and ſo departed. After that, the Popes Gariſon which were about the ſaid John Hus, told him, That this Frier was called Maſter Didace, who was eſteemed and counted the greateſt and moſt ſubtil Divine in all Lumbardy. Oh, ſaid John Hus, that I had known that afore, I would have handled him after another ſort and faſhion; but I would to God they were all ſafe, then through the help and aid of the Holy Scriptures I would fear none of them. In this manner the ſaid Hus, and Maſter John de Clum, were left under the keeping of theſe Men of Arms, until four of the Clock at Afternoon. After which time the Cardinals aſſembled again in the Popes Court, to deviſe and take counſel what they ſhould do with John Hus. Then Stephen Paletz, and Michael de Cauſis, with divers other of their adherents, made earneſt ſuit that he ſhould not be let go at liberty again, and having the favour of the Judges on their part, they brag'd up and down in a manner, as they had been mad Men, and mocked the ſaid John Hus, ſaying, Now we will hold thee well enough, thou art under our power and juriſdiction, and ſhalt not depart until ſuch time as thou haſt paid the uttermoſt farthing.

Diders a crafty Friar.

Many a man beguiled under a cloke of ſimplicity.

John Huſſes accuſers triumph over him when he was taken.

A little afore night, they ſent the Provoſt of the Roman Court unto Maſter John de Clum, to ſhew him that he might return to his Lodging; but as for John Hus, they had otherwiſe provided for him. When Maſter John de Clum heard theſe news, he was wonderfully diſpleaſed, forſomuch as through their crafts, ſubtilties, and gloſſing words, they had ſo trained this good man into their ſnares, whereupon he went unto the Pope, declaring unto him all that was done; moſt humbly beſeeching him, that he would call to remembrance the promiſe which he had made unto him and Maſter Henry Latzembog, and that he would not ſo lightly falſify and break his Faith and Promiſe. The Pope anſwered, That all theſe things were done without his conſent or commandment, and ſaid further to Maſter Clum apart, What reaſon is it that you ſhould impute this deed unto me, ſeeing that you know well enough that I my ſelf am in the hands of theſe Cardinals and Biſhops?

The Pope breaketh promiſe.

In mine Opinion, foraſmuch as Pope John feared that which indeed did after follow, that he ſhould be deprived of his Dignity, he thought to win the favour of theſe Herodian Cardinals and Biſhops, by betraying this good man unto them. So the ſaid Maſter Clum returned very penſiveful ſorry; he complained very ſore, both privily and openly, of the injury and outrage that the Pope had done, but all proffited nothing. After this, the ſaid John Hus was led by the Officers to the Chapter-houſe of the great Church of Conſtance, where he was kept Priſoner by the ſpace of Eight days; from thence he was carried unto the Jacobines, hard by the River of Rhine, and was ſhut up in the Priſon of the Abby, the which was hard by the Bogardi.

The Pope to pleaſe the Council was againſt John Hus.

After he had been incloſed there a certain time he fell ſore ſick of an Ague, by means of the ſtench of the place, and became ſo weak, that they deſpaired of his life. And for fear leſt this good man ſhould die in Priſon, as others are wont to do, the Pope ſent unto him certain of his Phyſitians to cure and help him. In the midſt of his ſickneſs his accuſers made importunate ſuit to the principals of the Council, that the ſaid John Hus might be condemned, and preſented unto the Pope theſe Articles here under-written:

The impriſonment and ſickneſs of John Hus.

¶ Articles preſented againſt John Hus.

Articles againſt John Hus.

Firſt, He doth err about the Sacraments of the Church, and ſpecially about the Sacrament of the Body of Chriſt, forſomuch as he hath openly preached, that it ought to be Miniſtered openly unto the people under both kinds, that is to ſay, the Body and Blood. This Article is evident, forſomuch as his Diſciples at this inſtant in Prague do Miniſter the ſame in both kinds. Moreover, it is affirmed by divers, that he hath taught both in the Schools and in the Church, or at the leaſt that he doth hold this Opinion, that after the words of Conſecration pronounced upon the Altar, there remaineth ſtill material Bread in the Sacrament. This Article ſhall be known by his Examination.

The Supper of the Lord.

Secondly, He doth err as touching the Miniſters of the Church, forſomuch as he faith, That they cannot Conſecrate or Miniſter the Sacraments when they are in mortal ſin. This Article ſhall likewiſe be known by his Examination. Notwithſtanding, all that which is here contained may be gathered by his writings De Eccleſia; the which if he deny, let there then be ſome Divines and others appointed, to peruſe and look over his ſaid writings of the Church. Moreover he ſaith, That other men beſide Prieſts may Miniſter the Sacrament. This Article is evident forſomuch as his Diſciples do the ſame at Prague, the which of themſelves do violently take the Sacrament out of the Treaſury, and Communicate among themſelves, when the Holy Communion is denied unto them. By this and other things alſo it is ſufficiently evident, that he hath taught that every man, being without mortal ſin, hath the power of Orders or Prieſthood, forſomuch as ſuch only as have taken Orders ought to Miniſter the Sacrament unto themſelves. And becauſe he proceedeth from ſmall matters unto great and weighttier, it doth conſequently appear and follow, that thoſe which be in the ſtate of Grace can bind and looſe.

Of the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments.

Thirdly, He doth err as touching the Church, and ſpecially for that he doth not allow and admit that the Church ſignifieth the Pope, Cardinals, Archbiſhops, and the Clergy underneath them; but faith, that this ſignification was drawn out from the School-men, and is in no caſe to be holden or allowed. This Article is manifeſt by his ſaid Treatiſe upon the Church.

Of the Church.

Moreover, he doth err concerning the Church, in that he faith, That the Church ought not to have any Temporal Poſſeſſions. And that the Temporal Lords may take them away from the Church and the Clergy without any offence. This error is evident, forſomuch as through his Doctrine and Inticements many Churches in the Kingdom of Bohemia, and in the City of Prague, are already ſpoiled and robbed of a great part of their Temporalties and goods. He ſaith alſo, that Conſtantinus and other Secular Princes erred by inriching and indowing Churches and Monaſteries. This Article is manifeſt by that which goeth next before.

Eccleſiaſtical Revenues.

Fourthly.

The Bishops power.

Fourthly, He erreth as touching the Church, in that he faith, That all Priests are of like power, and therefore affirmeth, that the reservations of the Popes casualties, the ordering of Bishops, and the Consecration of the Priests, were invented only for covetousnes. This Article doth somewhat appear by those aforegoing, but by his Examination thall be more evident.

The power of the Keys of the Church.

Fifthly, He erreth concerning the Church, in that he faith, That the Church being in sin, hath no power of the Keys, when as the Pope, Cardinals, and all other of the Priests and Clergy are in deadly sin; the which he faith is possible enough. This also doth appear in his Treatise upon the Church in his first error as touching the Ministers of the Church.

Excommunication.

Sixthly, He erreth touching the Church, forasmuch as through contempt he doth not fear Excommunication. This doth notoriously appear by his own doings, that he did contemn and despise the Apostolick and Ordinary censure, and in all the Apostolick Excommunications and Injunctions he hath born himself upon the Divine Commandments, and in contempt of the Keys, to the setting out of his Hypocrisie, he hath said Mass all the ways between this and the City of Prague, and thereby hath prophaned the Process and Authority of the Church.

Invesstitures

Seventhly, He erreth again as touching the Church, because he keepeth not the Institutions and Invetitures thereof, but holdeth Opinion that every man hath Authority to invest and appoint any man to the cure of Souls. This is evident by his own doings, forsomuch as many in the Kingdom of Bohemia, by their defenders and favourers, or rather by himself, were appointed and put into Parish-Churches, the which they have long ruled and kept, not being appointed by the Apostolick See, neither yet by the Ordinary of the City of Prague.

The Office of preaching.

Eighthly, He erreth as touching the Church, in that he holdeth Opinion, That a man, being once Ordained a Priest or Deacon, cannot be forbidden or kept back from the Office of preaching. This is likewise manifest by his own doings, forasmuch as he himself could never be letted from preaching; neither by the Apostolick See, neither yet by the Archbishop of Prague.

Lugubre nomen accepit quod barbaris fonem.

And to the intent that the said John Hus, who is clothed in Sheeps clothing, and inwardly a ravening Woolf, may be the better known by his fruits, for the better information of you most reverend Fathers; I say, that from the first time that he took in hand, or went about to sow such Errors and Heresies, the which afterward he did indeed, he understanding and perceiving himself to be withstanded and gainsayed by the Germans, which were in the University of Prague, forsomuch as he could conclude nothing, because they had three Voices, and he on his part had but one only Voice: he went about and brought to pass, and that by the Secular Power, that the Germans should have but one Voice, and he and his parts three Voices: the which thing when the Germans once perceived, rather than they would lose or forsake any part of their right which they had in Voices, or be in danger in their persons, the which would then have ensued upon it, to save themselves, they wholly with one consent agreed together to depart out of Prague; and by this means this solemn and famous University of Prague was made desolate, that had brought forth so many notable men in divers Sciences. Behold this his first fruits which divided that so famous University, forsomuch as Grapes are not gathered of Thorns, neither figs of Brambles.

The departure of the Germans from the University of Prague.

The 45 Articles of Wickliff.

Moreover, when there were questions moved amongst the Divines of the University of Prague upon the 45 Articles of John Wickliff, and that they had called a Convocation, and all the Divines of Bohemia, (for the Germans were already departed) they concluded that every one of those Articles were either Heretical, Seditious, or Erroneous. He alone held the contrary Opinion, that none of those Articles were either Heretical, Seditious, or Erroneous, as afterward he did dispute, hold, and teach, in the common Schools of Prague, whereby it is evidently enough fore-seen, that he doth affirm those Articles of Wickliff, the which are not only condemned in England, but also by the whole Church, because they were first invented and set forth by the members of Antichrist.

Moreover, he being complained of to the Archbishop of Prague, that he preached and set forth certain Articles which were Heretical, False, and Seditious, he was forbidden by the said Archbishop to preach any more, who proceeded against him, according to the Canonical Sanctions, the which process is confirmed by the Apostolick See, and published as well in the Court of Rome, as without; the which John Hus and his adherents have divers and manifold ways violated and prophanated. And whosoever did speak against him, they were deprived of their Benefices, and others placed in, which have ruled and yet do rule the said Churches, and the flocks pertaining to the same, not having any cure or charge of the Souls committed unto them, neither by the Apostolick See, neither yet by the Ordinary of the place.

The Office of preaching forbidden by the Archbishop.

Also as many, as well Priests as Lay-men in the City of Prague and Kingdom of Bohemia, which have spoken against the Doctrine of Hus, and the prophanation of the Process aforesaid, or at the least not allowed the same, have suffered most mortal hatred and persecutions, and yet to this day do suffer. But that at this present it is diffimuled until the end of the Process against John Hus. Wherefore if he be now let go again, without doubt they shall suffer great persecution both in Body and Goods and throughout all the Realm of Bohemia, House shall be against House, and this mischief will creep, yea suddenly spring up throughout all Germany, and innumerable Souls shall be infected, so that there shall be such persecution of the Clergy and Faithful, as hath not been since the time of the Emperor Constantine to this present day; for he ceaseth not to move and stir up the Laity against the Clergy and faithful Christians. And when any of the Clergy would draw him away, or call him from his Heresie, and for that cause doth forbid him to preach, that he doth not teach any Heresies: then faith he, and teacheth, that the Clergy doth that of envy and malice, because he rebuketh their vices and faults; that is to say, their Symony, and Pride, and Covetousnes.

Intersti-tion fraud in Bohemia against the Clergy.

Moreover, he stirreth up the Secular Princes against the Prelates of Churches, Monasteries, and Universities, and generally against the whole Clergy. Going about by this means, he preacheth and teacheth that Prelates and other Men of the Church ought not to have any Temporal Goods or Possessions, but only to live upon Alms. And by this means he hath done already very much hurt, and annoied divers and many Prelates, Clerks, and Churches in the Kingdom of Bohemia, and City of Prague, forsomuch as thereby they are already spoiled and robbed of their Possessions. Yea, he teacheth also that it is Lawful for the Lay people without sin to withhold and keep back the Tithes and Oblations, or to give the Church Goods to any other Minister; all the Secular Princes are greatly inclined hereunto, but specially the Laity, who follow every Man his own will.

He hath generally so lay for himself all those Heretics which do but very finally regard the Ecclesiastical censures, and hate the Authority of the Roman Church, yea do utterly detest and abhor the same; the which thing will more and more encrease, except it be effectually and manfully withstood; and if he do by any means escape from the Council, he and his favourers will say that his Doctrine is just and true, and that it is allowed by the Authority of the universal Sacred Council, and that all his adverfaries are wicked and naughty men, so that he would do more mischief, than ever any Heretick did since the time of Constantinus Magnus.

Exiples prophesied.

Wherefore moft holy Fathers, provide and take heed to your selves, and to the whole flock amongst whom the Holy Ghoft hath placed you, to rule the Church of Christ, the which he hath purchased with his own Blood; and whilft the Disease is new and fresh, help and remedy it, as well touching him which doth so infect and trouble the Church of God, as also concerning the occasions, through the which he hath presumed, and might do the same, because the Prelates do abuse the Ecclesiastical censures, and as well the Prelates as those that are under them, do not keep and observe the Order of the Church which is appointed them by God, whereby it cometh to pass, that whilft they themselves do walk the broken and unknown Paths, their flock falleth headlong into the Ditch.

Wherefore

{KING Lib. 5.}

Wherefore let our Sovereign Lord the Pope, and this moft sacred Council ordain and depute Commissioners, the which may examine the said John Hus upon all aforewritten, and other things in the presence of them which know the matter. Let there be also certain Doctors and Masters appointed to read over and perufe his Books which he hath written, whereof some are here present, that the Church may be speedily purged and cleansed from these errors.

Upon this his accusation, they ordained and appointed three Commissioners or Judges, that is to say, the Patriarch of Constantinople, and the Bishop of Castile, and the Bishop of Lybus. The which Prelates being thus deputed, heard the accusation and the witness which was brought in by certain babling Priests of Prague, confirmed by their Oaths, and afterward recited the said accusation unto the said Hus in the Prison, at such time as his Ague was fervent and extreamly upon him.

John Hus sick of an Ague in Prison.

J. Hus declared of his advocate.

Upon this, John Hus required to have an Advocate to answer for him; the which was plainly and utterly denied him. And the reasons that the Masters and Commissioners brought against it was this, that the plain Canon doth forbid that any man should be a defender of any cause of his, which is suspect of any kind of Heresie. The vanity and folly of the witnesses was such, that if in case they had not been both the accusers and judges themselves, there should have needed no distinct confutation. I would have rehearsed the testimonies in this place, but that I knew them to be such, as the prudent and wise Reader could not have read without great tediousnes. Howbeit, some of them shall be declared, when we come to the process of his judgment.

Afterward, when John Hus had recovered a little strength or health, by the commandment of the three Commissioners, there were presented unto him certain Articles, many in number, which they said, they had gathered out of his Book which he made of the Church; of which Articles some were forged and invented by Master Palece, and otherly declared hereafter, when we come to speak of the judgment pronounced and given against the said Hus.

The Books which John Hus wrote in Prison.

Thus John Hus remained in the Prison of the Covent of the Francifcans, until the Wednesday before Palm Sunday, and certain appointed to keep him; and in the mean season to imploy and spend his time withal, he wrote certain Books, that is to say, of the Ten Commandments, of the love and knowledge of God, of Matrimony, of Penance, of the three enemies of Mankind, of the Prayer of our Lord, and of the Supper of our Lord.

Pope John fled out of Constance.

The same day Pope John the 23d, changed his Apparel, and conveyed himself secretly out of Constance, fearing the judgment by the which afterward he was deprived of his Papal Dignity, by means of moft execrable and abominable forfeits and doings. This was the cause that John Hus was transported and carried unto another Prison: for the Popes servants, which had the charge and keeping of John Hus, understanding that their Master was fled and gone, delivered up the Keyes of the Prison unto the Emperor Sigismund, and to the Cardinals, and followed their Master the Pope. Then by the whole consent of the Council, the said John Hus was put into the hands of the Bishop of Constance, who sent him to a Caftle on the other side of the River of Rhine, not very far from Constance, where he was shut up in a Tower with Fetters on his Legs, that he could scarce walk in the day time, and at night he was fastned up to a Rack against the Wall hard by his Bed.

Noblemen of Bohome labour for J. Hus.

In the mean season, certain Noblemen and Gentlemen of Pole and Boheme did all their endeavour to purchase his deliverance, having respect to the good renown of all the Realm, the which was wonderfully defamed and flandered by certain naughty persons. The matter was grown unto this point, that all they which were in the Town of Constance, that seemed to bear any favour unto John Hus, were made as mocking flocks, and derided of all men, yea, even of the flaves and base people. Wherefore they took counsel and concluded together to present their request in writing unto the whole Council, or at the least unto the four Nations of Allmain, Italy, France and England; this request was presented the 14th day of May, Anno 1415 the tenor here ensueth.

Masters Fabritius, Ghoft for the Holy Ghoft had no leisure to come to that Council.

¶ The first Schedule or Bill, which the Nobles of Boheme delivered up to the Council for the deliverance of John Hus, the fourteenth day of May, Anno 1415.

MOST Reverend Fathers and Lords, the Nobles and Lords of Boheme and Pole here present, by this their present writing do shew and declare unto your Fatherly Reverences, how that the moft noble King and Lord, the Lord Sigismund, King of the Romans, always Augustus, King of Hungary, Croatia, Dalmatia, &c. hearing of the great diffention that was in the Kingdom of Boheme, as Heir, King and Lord Succeffor, willing to foresee and provide for his own honour, sent these Noblemen, Master Wenceslate de Duba, and John de Clum here present, that they would bring and affure Master John Hus under the King his name and safe conduct. So that he would come to the sacred general Council of Constance, under the safe conduct of the said King, and the protection of the sacred Empire, openly given and granted unto the said Master John Hus, that he might purge himself and the Kingdom of Boheme, from the flander that was raised upon them, and there to make an open declaration of his Faith to every man that would lay any thing to his charge. The which the said Nobles, with the forenamed Master John Hus, have performed and done, according to the Kings Commandment.

The safe conduct of the Emperor challenged.

When as the said Master John Hus was freely of his own accord come unto Constance, under the said safe conduct, he was grievously imprisoned before he was heard, and at this present is tormented both with Fetters, and also with hunger and thirst. Albeit that in times past at the Council holden at Paysan, 1410. In the year of our Lord, the Hereticks which were condemned, were suffered to remain there at liberty, and to depart home freely; notwithstanding this, Master John Hus, neither being convicted nor condemned, no not so much as once heard, is taken and imprisoned, where as neither King nor any Prince Elector, neither any Embassador of any Univerfity was yet come or present. And albeit the Lord the King, together with the Nobles and Lords here present, moft instantly required and desired, that as touching his safe conduct they would foresee and have respect unto his honour, and that the said Master John Hus might be openly heard, forsomuch as he would render and shew a reason of his Faith; and if he were found and convicted obstinately to affirm or maintain any thing against the truth of holy Scripture, that then he ought to correct and amend the same, according to the instruction and determination of the Council; yet could he never obtain this. But the said Master John Hus, notwithstanding all this, is moft grievously oppressed with Fetters and Irons, and so weakned with thin and slender diet, that it is to be feared, left that, his power and strength being hereby confumed and wasted, he should be put in danger of his wit or reason.

The extremities John Hus suffers in prison.

And although the Lords of Boheme here present are greatly flandered, because they seeing the said Master John Hus so to be tormented and troubled, contrary to the Kings safe conduct, have not by their Letters put the King in mind of his said safe conduct, that the said Lord and King should not any more suffer any such matters, forsomuch as they tend to the contempt and disregard of the Kingdom of Boheme, which from the first original and beginning, since it received the Catholick Faith, never departed or went away from the obedience of the holy Church of Rome; yet notwithstanding, they have suffered and born all their things patiently hitherto, left by any means, occasion of trouble or vexation of this sacred Council might arise or spring thereof.

Wherefore moft Reverend Fathers and Lords, the Nobles and Lords before named, do wholly and moft earnestly desire and require your Reverences here present, that both for the honour of the safe conduct of our said Lord the King, and also for the preservation and increase of the worthy fame and renown, both of the foresaid Kingdome of Boheme, and your own also, you will make a short end about the affairs of Master John Hus; forsomuch as by the means of his strait handling he is in great danger by any longer delay; even as they do most specially trust upon the most upright consciences and judgments of your Fatherly Reverences. But forasmuch as, most Reverend Fathers and Lords, it is now come to the knowledge and understanding of the Nobles and Lords of Boheme here present, how that certain backbiters and slanderers of the most famous Kingdom of Boheme aforesaid, have declared and told unto your Reverences, how that the Sacrament of the most precious bloud of our Lord is carried up and down through Boheme in Vessels not consecrate or hallowed, and that Coblers do now hear Confessions, and minister the most blessed body of our Lord unto others. The Nobles therefore of Boheme here present, require and desire you, that you will give no credit unto false promoters and tale tellers, for that, as most wicked and naughty slanderers and backbiters of that Kingdom aforesaid, they do report and tell untruths; requiring also your Reverences, that such slanderous persons of the Kingdom aforesaid may be named and known. And the Lord the King, together with your Reverences, shall well perceive and see that the Lords of Boheme will go about in such manner to refel and put away the false and frivolous slanders of these naughty persons, that they shall be ashamed to appear hereafter before the Lord the King and your Reverences.

The confutation of certain slanders.

The Bishop of Luthonis.

As soon as this their supplication was read, the Bishop of Luthonis rising up, said, Most Reverend Fathers, I well perceive and understand, that the last part of this writing doth touch me, my familiars and friends, as though the Kingdoms of Boheme were slandered by us. Wherefore I desire to have time and space of deliberation, that I may purge my self from this crime that is laid against me. The Principal of the Council appointed him the 17th day of May, at the which day the Lords of Boheme should be present again, to hear both the answer of the Council, and also the excuse of the Bishop of Luthonis; the which thing indeed was afterward performed: for the seventeenth day of May, which was the fourth day before Whitsontide, they met there again; where first of all a certain Bishop, in the name of the whole Council, answered by word to the Nobles of Boheme; the contents of whose answer may easily be known by the second supplication, which the Bohemians put up to the Council. But first I shall here in these few words following, shew how the Bishop of Luthonis defended himself against that which is before written.

¶ The Answer of the Bishop of Luthonis, to the last part of the supplication, which the Nobles of Boheme presented unto the Council.

The answer and accusation of the Bishop of Luthonis against John Hus.

MOst Reverend Fathers and Noble Lords, as Peter de Mladoneywitz, Bachelor of Art, in the name of certain of the Nobles of the Kingdom of Boheme, in his writings, amongst other things did propound how that certain slanderers and backbiters of the said Kingdom, have brought to the ears of your Reverences, that the most precious bloud of Christ is carried up and down in Boheme in Bottles, and that Coblers do hear Confessions, and minister the Body of Christ unto others; whereupon most Reverend Fathers and Lords, albeit that I together with the other Prelates, Doctors, Masters, and other innumerable Catholicks of the said Kingdom, the which do desire as much as in them lieth, to defend the faith of Christ, have laboured for the extirpation and rooting out of that most wicked and detestable Sect of Wickliff's, which now (alas for sorrow) beginneth to spring and rise in the said Kingdom, as it is well known: Notwithstanding, here in this my Oration, not for any shame or reproof, but for the honour of the Kingdom aforesaid, I have propounded and declared a certain new Sect, which is now lately sprung up in the said Kingdom, the followers whereof do minister and communicate the Sacraments in many Cities, Towns and Places of the said Kingdom, under both kinds both of Bread and Wine, and do constantly teach the common people, both Men and Women, that it is to be communicated, obstinately affirming the same, and that the Clergy which do repugn or say nay unto it, are to be counted Church robbers, as by the writings of their assertions, being directed and presented hither shall openly appear. {KING Hus. 5.}

Moreover, by the report and fame which goeth here abroad, and by the Writings which were sent over unto me, I have propounded that it came to my knowledge, that the Bloud of Christ is carried about in Vessels not consecrated, approving the foresaid erroneous assertion of the Wickleviſts, that affirm it necessary for salvation, that the people should communicate under both kinds of Bread and Wine; and that it is necessary, as the Body of Christ is carried in the Pix or Box, so the Bloud of Christ should be carried in Bottles, or other necessary Vessels from place to place, and especially about the ministration of the sick. Also I declared not of my self, but I heard it to be declared by others, both great and credible persons, that there was a certain Woman a follower of that Sect, the which taking by violence the Body of Christ out of a Priests hands, did communicate unto her self, and affirmed that all men ought to do so, if the Priests should deny them the Communion. And the same Woman amongst many other errors, of the which she was convicted, did affirm that a good Lay-woman might better consecrate and give Absolution, than an evil Priest; affirming that an evil Priest can neither consecrate nor absolve. But I know that neither I, neither any of my assistants in this matter, have brought this at any time unto your ears, that Coblers in the said Kingdom do hear Confession, or minister the Sacrament of the Body of Christ, as is alledged by the said Peter, in the behalf of the said supplicants. Notwithstanding that, we did fear, if means were not found to recounter or stop the offences before named, that this would immediately follow upon it. Wherefore most Reverend Fathers, left that the Kingdom might be defamed any more by such pestiferous Sects, and that the Christian Faith might happen to be indangered; with all Reverence and Charity I do desire you, even by the bowels of mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, that this most sacred Council would provide some speedy remedy for this Kingdom, as touching the premisses.

Moreover, whether be they backbiters and slanderers, or wicked and false enviers of the Kingdom of Boheme, the which do let the errors aforesaid, and many others more, which are sown by the Wickleviſts in the said Kingdom, and also elsewhere, which also both do labour and have laboured for the extirpation and rooting out of those errors out of the Kingdom aforesaid, and as Catholick Men, for the zeal of their Faith have manifestly put forth themselves against the maintainers of the said errors, or such as do maintain and defend the teachers of those errors; this answer I have here presented before your Reverences, always wholly submitting my self and affistance unto your judgment, and to the definition of this most sacred Council of Constance.

¶ The Answer of the Nobles of Boheme.

The day before Whitsomtide, the Nobles of Boheme did confute this their answer made two days before in the Council to their former writing, as here followeth: Most Reverend Fathers and Lords, forsomuch as upon Thursday it was answered in the behalf of your Reverences, to the requests of the Nobles and Lords of Boheme, that the said Lords were misinformed of divers points contained in the declaration of their said Bill: therefore the foresaid Lords have now determined and decreed to declare their former propounded requests more at large unto your Reverences, not minding hereby to argue or reprove your Fatherly wisdoms and circumspections, but that your Reverences (their desires being partly on this behalf sufrilled) might the more effectuously and distinctly discern and judge as touching this matter. The Bishop of Luthonis answer confuted.

And first of all, whereas the Lords alledged and said, how that Master John Hus was come hither unto Constance, freely of his own good will, under the safe conduct of the Lord the King, and the procession of the sacred Empire; it is answered on the behalf of your Reverences, how that the said Lords are misinformed as touching the safe conduct, and that you have understood by such as are worthy credit, The Bishop do quarrel about the safe conduct of J. Hus.

{KING Hus. 5.} credit, that the friends and favourers of the said Master John Hus, did first procure and get his safe conduct, fifteen days after his imprisonment.

The safe conduct of J. Hus obtained and decreed, before the imprisonment of J. Hus.

The Lords of Boheme, and especially the Lord John de Clum here present, whom this matter doth chiefly touch, doth answer, that not only the fifteenth day after, but even the very same day that John Hus was apprehended and taken, when as our reverend Father the Pope, in the presence of all his Cardinals, demanded of Master John de Clums, whether Master John Hus had any safe conduct from the King his Son: he answered, Most holy father and Cardinals, know ye that he hath a safe conduct; and when he was asked the question again the second time, he answered in like manner.

Yet notwithstanding none of them required to have the safe conduct shewed unto them: and again, the third day following, the Lord John de Clum complained unto our Lord the Pope; how notwithstanding the safe conduct of our Sovereign Lord the King, he detained and kept Mr. John Hus as Prisoner, shewing the safe conduct unto many. And for the further truth herein, he referreth himself unto the testimonies and witnesses of divers Earls, Bishops, Knights, Gentlemen, and famous Citizens of the City of Constance, the which all together at this present did see the said safe conduct, and heard it read; whereupon the said John de Clum is ready to bind himself under what penalty shall be required evidently to prove and confirm that which he hath promised, whosoever say to the contrary.

Moreover, the Lords of Boheme refer themselves unto the knowledge of certain Princes Electors, and other Princes, Bishops, and many other Noblemen, which were present before the Kings Majesty, where and when as the said safe-conduct was granted and given out by the special commandment of our said Lord the King.

The Bishop of the Council falsly informed touching the safe conduct of John Hus.

Hereby your Fatherly Reverences may understand and perceive that the said Lords of Boheme are not evil informed as touching the said safe conduct; but rather they which by such reports have falsly and untruly informed your Reverences. And first of all, they have offended against the Lord our King and his Chancellors. Secondarily, against the Lords and Nobles of Boheme, as though we had privily and by stealth, purchased the said safe conduct. Wherefore the Lords aforesaid, most humbly require and desire your Reverences, that you will not so lightly believe such as be not worthy of credit, but rather hearing the contrary part, to labour and discuss that the truth may the more evidently appear.

John Hus imprisoned before he was either condemned or heard.

Secondly, Whereas the Lords aforesaid, alledging how Master John Hus coming unto Constance of his own free will, being neither condemned nor heard, was imprisoned, your Reverences have made answers thereunto, that he the said Mr. John Hus in the time of Alexander the 5th, was inamed and flandered upon certain Heresies, and thereupon cited personally to appear in the Court of Rome, and there was heard by his procurers.

And forsomuch as he refused obstinately to appear, he was excommunicated, in the which Excommunication he continued (as you affirm) by the space of five years, for the which he was judged, and counted not only a simple and plain Heretick, but an Hereſiarch, that is to say, an inventer and sower of new and strange Heresies, and that he, coming toward Constance, did preach by the way openly. To this the Lords aforesaid do answer, that as touching his slander and citation, they can affirm nothing, but by report. But as touching that he did not personally appear, that say they have heard both himself and divers other credible persons say, yea even the most famous Prince Wenceslaus King of Boheme, and almost all the whole Nobility is witness, that he would willingly have appeared at Rome, or elsewhere, if he might safely have come thither, and that deadly enmity had not letted; and moreover, his procurers which he sent unto the Court of Rome, alledging reasonable causes for his non-appearance, some of them were cast into Prison, and others were evil intreated.

Alexander the fifth. The answer touching the citation of John Hus to the Court of Rome.

J. Hus his procurers evil intreated at Rome.

As for the Excommunication which he hath so long sustained, they have heard him often say, that he hath not resisted against the same by contumacy, or stubbornness, but under evident appellation, and thereupon referreth himself unto the acts of his causes which were pleaded in the Court of Rome, wherein all this is more largely contained, the which your Reverences may evidently perceive and see in this our present publick transumpt, which we have offered unto you upon certain points aforesaid.

As concerning his preaching, wherewithal his enemies do report and charge, that Master John Hus did preach openly in the City of Constance; the Lords aforesaid, and especially the Lord John de Clum here present, do answer, that he hath continually lodged with the said Master John Constance, Hus here in Constance; and that whosoever they be, that have been so bold, or dare be so bold to say and affirm that Master John Hus had preached (as is premised) or that which is less, since the time of his coming unto this City, even unto the very day and time of his captivity and imprisonment, that he went but one step out of the house of his lodging, that the said Lord John de Clum will and is content to bind himself, with any such as shall affirm the same, under what penalty soever it be, of mony or otherwise, that that which he hath falsly reported unto your Reverences, he shall never be able justly and truly to affirm and prove. J. Hus falsly reported to preach openly at Constance.

J. Hus falsly charged to preach coming to the Council.

Thirdly, Whereas your Reverences do say, that you do not understand or know, what the Lords do mean, by the Hereticks condemned at the Council holden at Pisa, whether the mocking or deriding of the Pope, whose Embassadors came thither for unity or concord, the which were suffered, and gently treated, as their Lords were most inclined unto unity and peace; or else that they did understand or mean the particular Hereticks, which were there condemned; adjoyning thereunto, that the Hereticks also coming unto the Council under the pretence of that unity, should be gently handled and entreated, &c. Reverend Fathers and Lords, whether they be counted the first, or that they be thought the second or last, the Lords aforesaid require none other thing, but that the said Master John Hus may use such liberty as they used, forsomuch as he came willingly unto this most sacred Council, not for any other purpose, but only publickly to recognise his faith. And in what point soever he shall seem to vary from the Word of God, and the union of the holy Mother the Church, in that point he will willingly be united and reconciled again thereunto, and not only himself, but also his favourers and adherents he would move and provoke thereunto, of whom the greater number are in the Kingdom of Boheme. Also he is come hither, that he might purge and clear the noble Kingdom of Boheme from the sinister and evil slander which was raised upon it. J. Hus had many well-willers in Bohemia.

Last of all most reverend Fathers and Lords, forsomuch as your reverences have most favourably answered unto the principal requeſt made by the Lords aforesaid, that the Proceſs of Master John Hus, through Gods help, should be determined and ended with all expedition and gentleneſs; the Lords aforesaid do render most hearty thanks unto your Reverences, and whensoever their desire by Gods help shall come to the end or effect long wished or looked for, they will not only here, but also before the whole Kingdom of Boheme, and in all other places whereſoever they come, render most immortal thanks unto your Reverences for ever.

¶ This Declaration of the Nobles of Boheme above prefixed, may serve not only to the confutation of the Bishop Luthonis this Bohemian, but also against the cavillations of Alanus Copus Anglus, Dial. 6. page 929. touching the safe conduct of John Hus, whereof sufficiently before hath been said.

When as the Noblemen of Boheme by long time could receive no answer of those supplications which they had already put up, they determined the last day of May following, by another supplication being put up unto the principals of the Council, to intreat that John Hus might be delivered out of Prison, and defend his own cause openly: they also put up the testimonial of the Bishop of Nazareth, as touching John Hus. The Copy whereof is expreſſed in the beginning of this History, word by word. Vide supra.

Another Supplication of the Nobles of Boheme.

Another supplication of the Bohemians.

MOst Reverend Fathers and Lords in Christ, of late there was a supplication put up unto your Reverences on the behalf of the Lords and Nobles of Boheme, and the Nation of Pole, wherein they most humbly desired for J. Hus:

your Reverences to consider how the informations which were put up unto your Reverences, by the enemies of Master John Hus, were insufficient; and with reverence be it spoken, in many points untrue, as in the safe conduct granted by the Kings Majesty, and also in other Articles, as more plainly appeareth in the Schedule, which was then offered unto you; upon the which said Schedule and other things at that present, being put up, they could not as yet receive any answer. Wherefore the Lords aforesaid, most humbly require your Fatherly Reverences, that it would please you to consider the said supplication, and to give some answer to the Lords aforesaid thereupon, and specially having respect unto the great injuries and griefs which are done unto the said Master John Hus, the which may be understood and known by the Schedule aforesaid, that you will mercifully consider and foresee, that all those griefs and evils, so far different from all brotherly love and charity, are done unto him by his enemies even for very malice and hatred.

The Lords could have no answer of their supplication.

To the intent therefore that the rancour and malice may be confounded and overthrown, and the plain and evident truth appear, it may please your Fatherly Reverences to understand that it is notified and known unto the Barons, Nobles and Citizens, Clergy and Laity of the Kingdom of Boheme, that Master John Hus in all his acts and doings, as well Scholastical as Ecclesiastical, and especially in all his publick and open Sermons, hath made and hath accustomed to make these manner of protestations, and which without any thing to the contrary, he hath always endeavoured to have them strong and firm, as by this his protestation here following, which he made about the determination of a certain question, it may most evidently and plainly appear unto every man which would behold and look upon the same; the form and tenor whereof here followeth, and is such.

¶ The Protestation of John Hus.

The Protestation of J. Hus.

FOrsomuch as above all things I do desire the honour of God, the profit of the holy Church, and that I my self may be a faithful member of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is the Head and Husband of the holy Church which he hath redeemed; therefore, as heretofore sometimes I have done, even so now again, I make this Protestation, That I never obstinately said, or hereafter will say any thing that shall be contrary unto the truth and verity; and moreover, that I have always holden, do hold, and firmly desire to hold the very true and infallible truth and verity; so that before that I would defend and maintain any error contrary thereunto, I would rather chose by the hope and help of the Lord to suffer extream punishment, even unto death: yea, and throught the help of God, I am ready to offer this my miserable life unto death for the Law of Christ, the which I do believe every part and parcel thereof, to be given and promulgate for the salvation of Mankind, by the counsel and determination of the most holy Trinity and the Saints of God, &c.

Vid. in prim. edit. p. 207.

By the which his Protestation, and also other Protestations by the said Master John Hus, being well observed and noted, it may be easily gathered and known, that his whole intent and purpose was and is, that he neither would nor will have spoken or written any thing in his Books, Treatises, Doctrines or publick Sermons; or else to have affirmed any Articles, the which willingly and wittingly he did understand or know to be erroneous, offensive, seditious, heretical, or offending the godly ear; albeit that these and such like things are falsly imputed unto him by his enemies. But it hath always been his chief intent and purpose, and so is, that every Point, Conclusion or Article contained in his Books or Articles, to have put and affirmed them to this end, according to the truth of the Gospel, the holy Doctors and Writers upon the holy Scriptures, and to that end and purpose, as is before expressed in his Protestation; and if in any point he should be found to vary or go astray, or that he were not well understood of others, by like information to be informed, understood, corrected and amended, and that he will by no means sustain or defend any manner of Article against the holy Church of Rome, or the Catholick Faith.

Wherefore, most Reverend Fathers, the premisses notwithstanding, his enemies, through the extream hatred which they bear unto him, have picked and taken out by peicemeal, certain Articles out of the Books of Master John Hus, rejecting and not looking upon the allegations and reasons, neither having any relation unto the distinction of their equivocations, have compounded and made thereof certain false and feigned Articles against him to this end, that all charity and love being set apart, they might the better overthrow him, and bring him unto death, contrary unto the safe conduct upon good and just occasion openly assigned, and given unto the said Master John Hus, by the most noble Prince the Lord Sigismund, King of the Romans and of Hungary, for his just defence against all the frivolous accusations and assaults of the enemies, not only of the said Master John Hus, but also of the famous Kingdom of Boheme, and for the quiet appeasing of all such tumults and rumors rising and springing in the said Kingdom of Boheme, or elsewhere; the avoiding of which most perilous uprores, the said King of Romans, both greatly desire and wish, as the right heir and successor of the said Kingdom.

Articles folded out of Hus's Books by his enemies.

Whereupon the Barons and Nobles aforesaid, most humbly desire and require, the premisses being considered, and respect had unto the great infamy and slander which may happen by the premisses unto the said Kingdom and Inhabitants thereof, that you will put to your hands and take some order and mean, that Master John Hus may be directly heard by some famous men, Divines already deputed, or otherwise to be appointed, upon all and singular such Articles as shall be laid unto him, to declare his own mind and intent, and also the mind of the Doctors alledged for this purpose, with the manifold distinctions and equivocations; in the which the drawers out of the most part of his Articles have also made equivocations, that so according unto the disposition of the witnesses, of the which a great number of them are and have a long time been his mortal enemies, that at the frivolous instigation of his enemies, when he was miserably detained Prisoner, that he should not be condemned unheard. Forsomuch as by the said declarations, your Fatherly Reverences might be the more better informed of the truth, he himself is ready always to submit himself under the determination of this most sacred Council. For your Reverences, by the crafty and feigned persuasions of his enemies, are thus informed, that Master John Hus hath been incurably obstinate by a long time, in most perilous Articles, the which your Reverences may now plainly perceive to be untrue: and for the more evidence herein to be given, there is presented unto your Reverences an instrument of publick recognition of the most Reverend Father in Christ the Lord Nicholas Bishop of Nazareth, an Inquisitor of Heresies, especially appointed by the Apostolick See in the Diocess of Prague, the which by your Reverences is more diligently to be hearkned unto.

The Council is informed against John Hus.

Wherefore it may please your Fatherly Reverences to command the said Master John Hus, neither convicted nor condemned, to be taken and brought out of his bonds and chains, in the which he is now most grievously detained and kept, and to put him into the hands of some Reverend Lord Bishops, or Commissioners, appointed or to be appointed by this present Council; that the said Master John Hus may somewhat be relieved, and recover again his health, and to be the more diligently and commodiously examined by the Commissioners. And for the more assurance, the Barons and Nobles aforesaid of the Kingdom of Boheme, will provide most sure and good sureties, the which will not break their fidelity and faith for any thing in the World. Which also shall promise in this behalf, that he shall not flee or depart out of their hands, until such time as the matter be fully determined by the said Commissioners. In the execution of the which premisses, we have determined to provide and foresee unto the fame and honour of the said Kingdom of Boheme, and also to the safe conduct of the most worthy Prince, the King of Romans, left that the enemies and detractors of the honour and fame of the Kingdom aforesaid, might not a lite slander and reprove the said Lords, pretending and shewing forth hereafter, that they had made unreasonable or unlawful requests; for the withstanding of which mischief, we require your Fatherly Reverences, that you will decree, and most graciously consent, that this our petition and supplication may be drawn out again by your Notary, and reduced into a publick form and order.

The Nobles required that J. Hus being not convicted nor condemned, should be delivered out of Prison.

A petition for Mr. John Hus's deliverance out of Prison.

After

[KING] Hist. 5. The answer of the Council to the supplication.

After this supplication was read before the Deputies of the four Nations, the Patriarch of Antioch answered in the name of them all unto every Article of the said supplication; but it was done in few words.

J. Hus In no case must be hailed.

First, as touching the protestation of John Hus, whether it be true or false, it shall be made evident in the process of his cause. Moreover, whereas they say that the adversaries of John Hus have perversly drawn certain things out of his Books, that also the matter it self shall declare in the end. Whereas if it shall be found and decreed that John Hus is unjustly and untruly accused, that then it shall come to pass that his adversaries shall incur perpetual ignominy and slander. But as touching sureties, albeit there might be a thousand put in or bound, yet can it not by any means be, that the Deputies of the Council with a safe conscience may receive, or take them in this mans cause, unto whom there is no faith or credit to be given. Howbeit thus much they will do, upon the fifth day of June next. John Hus shall be brought again unto Constance, and there have free liberty to speak his mind before the Council, and he promised that they would lovingly and gently hear him; but the matter in the end fell out far contrary to this promise.

No credit to be kept with an Heretick.

The same day the said Barons and Lords presented a supplication of this tenor unto the Emperor:

Supplication to the Emperor Sigismund.

Unto the most high and mighty Prince, the Lord Sigismund King of the Romans, always Augustus, King of Hungary, Croatia and Dalmatia, our most gracious Lord, faithful and true service in all things, and at all times. Most noble Prince, and gracious Lord, we signifie unto your worthiness, that we all together with one mind, consent and accord, have delivered up unto the reverend Fathers and Lords, the Deputies of the four Nations, and to the whole sacred Council of Constance, this our supplication hereunder written, as reasonable, just, and worthy of consideration, the tenor whereof here followeth word by word, and is this.

¶ The Copy of the supplication, which was presented unto the Deputies of the Council, is before written, whereunto this which followeth was annexed.

The Barons supplication to the King for John Hus.

WHerefore we most humbly require and desire your Princely Majesty, that both for the love of justice, and also of the fame and renown of that most famous Kingdom of Boheme, whereof we acknowledge you undoubtedly, the true Lord, Heir and Successor; and also foreseeing unto the liberty of your safe conduct, that you will with your favourable countenance, beholding these most reasonable and just supplications, which we have put up to the Lords aforesaid, put to your helping hand toward the said most reverend Fathers and Lords, that they will effectually bear us, in this our most just petition, which we have offered up to them, as is aforesaid; lest that the enemies of the renown and honour of the famous King dom of Boheme, and such be our slanderers also, hereafter may detract and slander us, that we should make unreasonable and unlawful requests unto the said reverend Fathers and Lords: and therefore we required and desired of them, that it would please them to decree by setting to their publick Hand and Seal, to authorise our said publication. Likewise, we do most heartily require your Highness, that you would vouchsafe in like manner, to give us your testimony of the premisses.

But what answer the Emperor made hereunto, we could never understand or know; but by the process of the matter a man may easily judge, that this good Emperor was brought and led even unto this point, through the obstinate mischief of the Cardinals and Bishops, to break and falsifie his promise and faith which he had made and promised; and this was their reason whereby he was driven thereunto, that no defence could or might be given either by safe conduct, or by any other mean unto him, which was suspected or judged to be an Heretick. But by the Epistles and Letters of John Hus, a man may easily judge what the Kings mind was. Now we will proceed in the History.

The fifth day of June, the Cardinals, Bishops, and the reft of the Priests all that were almoft in Conftance, aſſembled at a great number, at the Covent of the Franciſcans in Conſtance, and there it was commanded, that before J. Hus ſhould be brought forth, in his abſence they ſhould rehearſe the Witneſſes and Articles which they had ſlanderouſly gathered out of his Books: the which Articles, with John Huſs's anſwer, we will hereafter repeat. By chance there was then preſent a certain Notary, named Mladoniewitz, the which bare great love and amity unto the ſaid Hus, who as ſoon as he perceived that the Biſhops and Cardinals were already determined and appointed to condemn the ſaid Articles in the abſence of John Hus, he went with all ſpeed unto Maſter Wenceslate de Duba, and John of Clum, and told them all the matter, who incontinent made report thereof to the Emperor. Who underſtanding their intent, ſent Lewis the County Palatine of Heydelburgh, and the Lord Frederick, Burgrave of Nuremberg, to ſignifie unto them which ruled the Council, that nothing ſhould be reſolved or done in the caſe of John Hus, before that it were firſt heard with equity, and that they ſhould ſend him all ſuch Articles as were laid againſt the ſaid Hus, which were either falſe or heretical, and he would do ſo much, that the ſaid Articles ſhould be examined by good and learned men. Then according to the Emperors will, the judgment of the principals of the Council was ſuſpended, until ſuch time as John Hus were preſent.

The crafty counſel of the Papiſts thwarted by the Emperor.

In the mean ſeaſon, theſe Gentlemen, Maſter of Dube and of Clum, did give unto the two Princes, which the Emperor had ſent, certain ſmall Treatiſes which the ſaid John Hus had made, out of the which they had drawn certain Articles to preſent unto them which rule the Council, under this condition, that they would render them again, when they ſhould demand them. The intent and meaning of theſe Barons was, that by this means the adverſaries of John Hus might the more eaſily be reproved, the which of a naughty and corrupt conſcience had picked out corrupt ſentences out of the ſaid Books of John Hus. The Books were delivered unto the Cardinals and Biſhops; and that done John Hus was brought forth, and the Princes which were ſent by the Emperor, departed back again. After they ſhewed the Books unto John Hus, and he confeſſed openly before the whole Aſſembly that he had made them, and that he was ready, if there were any fault in them, to amend the ſame.

J. Hus forced to keep ſilence by outrage of the Biſhops and Prieſts.

Now hearken a little to the holy proceedings of theſe reverend Fathers, for here happened a ſtrange and ſhameful matter. With much ado they had ſcarcely read one Article, and brought forth a few Witneſſes upon the ſame againſt him, but as he was about to open his mouth to anſwer, all this mad Herd or Flock began ſo to cry out upon him, that he had not leiſure to ſpeak one only word. The noiſe and trouble was ſo great and ſo vehement, that a man might well have called it a brute or noiſe of wild Beaſts, and not of Men; much leſs was it to be judged a congregation of Men gathered together, to judge and determine ſo grave and weighty matters. And if it happened that the noiſe and cry did never ſo little ceaſe, that he might anſwer any thing at all, out of the holy Scriptures or Eccleſiaſtical Doctors, by and by he ſhould hear theſe goodly replies upon him, that maketh nothing to the purpoſe.

The like practice in theſe latter days was uſed at Oxford againſt the godly Fathers.

Beſides all this, ſome did outrage in words againſt him, and otherſome ſpitefully mocked him; ſo that he feeling himſelf overwhelmed with theſe rude and barbarous noiſes and crys, and that it profited nothing to ſpeak, he determined finally with himſelf to hold his peace and keep ſilence. From that time forward, all the whole rout of his adverſaries thought that they had won the Battel of him, and cried out all together, Now he is dumb, now he is dumb: This is a certain ſign and token, that he doth conſent and agree unto theſe his errors. Finally, the matter came to this point, that certain of the moſt moderate and honeſt among them, ſeeing this diſorder, determined to proceed no further, but that all ſhould be deferred and put off until another time. Through their advice, the Prelates and others departed from the Council for that preſent, and appointed to meet there again the morrow after to proceed in judgment.

An outrageous Councel.

The miſcheivous counſel of the Papiſh band.

The next day, which was the ſeventh of June, on which day the Sun was almoſt wholly eclipſed, ſomewhat after about ſeven of the Clock, this fame Flock aſſembled again in the Cloyſter of the Friers Minors, and by their appointment John Hus was brought before them, accompanied companied with a great number of armed men. Thither went alſo the Emperour, whom the Gentlemen, Maſter of Duba, and Clum, and the Notary named Peter, which were great friends of the ſaid Hus, did follow to ſee what the end would be. When they were come thither, they heard that in the accuſation of Michael de Cauſis, they read theſe words following: John Hus hath taught the people divers and many errors both in the Chappel of Bethleem, and alſo in many other places of the City of Prague, of the which errors ſome of them he hath drawn out of Wickliffs Books, and the reſt he hath forged and invented of his own head, and doth maintain the ſame very obſtinately and ſtiffly.

They went forth with swords and staves as it had been to take a thief.

Peter and John follow Chriſt into the Biſhops houſe.

Matter made againſt John Hus.

False witneſs againſt John Hus.

The anſwer of J. Hus.

Firſt, that after the conſecration and pronounciation of the words in the Supper of the Lord, there remaineth material Bread; and this is proved by the witneſs of John Protiwaſe, Pariſh-Prieſt of Saint Clements in Prague, John Pecklow Preacher at St. Giles in Prague, Beniſe Preacher in the Caſtle of Prague, Andrew Brode, Canon of Prague, and divers other Prieſts. Unto this John Hus taking a ſolemn Oath, anſwered that he never ſpake any ſuch word; but thus much he did grant, that at what time the Archbiſhop of Prague forbad him to uſe any more that term or word Bread, he could not allow the Biſhops commandment; foraſmuch as Chriſt in the ſixth Chapter of John doth oftentimes name himſelf the bread of Angels, which came down from Heaven, to give life unto the whole world. But as touching material bread, he never ſpake any thing at all. Then the Cardinal of Cambray taking a certain bill in his hand, which he ſaid he received the day before, ſaid unto John Hus, Will you put any Univerſalities a parte rei, i.e. as touching the thing? When John Hus anſwered, that he would, becauſe St. Anſelm and divers others had ſo done, the Cardinal did proceed to gather his argument in this manner.

Naming of bread forbidden by the Archbiſhops.

The Cardinal ſophiſticateth with J. Hus.

If followeth then, ſaid he, that after the conſecration is made, there remaineth the ſubſtance of material bread; and that I do this prove: That the conſecration being done, whiles the bread is changed and tranſubſtantiated into the body of Chriſt, as you ſay, either there doth remain the common ſubſtance of material bread, or contrariwiſe. If the ſubſtance do remain, then is our purpoſe at an end. If contrariwiſe, then it doth follow, that by the deciſion of the ſingularity, the univerſal ceaſeth any more to be: John Hus anſwered, Truly it ceaſeth to be in this ſingular material Bread, by means of this Tranſubſtantiation, when as it is changed and Tranſubſtantiated into the Body of Chriſt; but notwithſtanding in other ſingularities it is made ſubject.

The diſcretion of the Engliſhmen.

Then a certain Engliſhman by that argument would prove out of the firſt Poſition, that there remained material Bread. Then ſaid John Hus, that is a childiſh argument, which every Boy in Schools knoweth, and thereupon gave a ſolution. Then another Engliſhman would prove, that there remained material Bread in the Sacrament, becauſe the Bread after the conſecration was not annihilate. Unto whom John Hus anſwered, Although ſaid he, that the Bread be not annihilate or conſumed, yet ſingularly it ceaſeth there to be by means of the alteration of his ſubſtance into the Body of Chriſt. Here another Engliſhman ſtepping forth, ſaid, John Hus ſeemeth unto me to uſe the ſame kind of crafty ſpeech which Wickliff uſed, for he granted all theſe things which this man hath done, and yet in very deed was fully perſwaded that material Bread remained in the Sacrament after the conſecration. The which when John Hus had denied, ſaying, that he ſpake nothing but only ſincerely and uprightly, according to his conſcience; the Engliſhman proceeded to demand of him again, whether the body of Chriſt be totally and really in the Sacrament of the Altar. Whereunto John Hus anſwered, Verily, I do think that the body of Chriſt is really and totally in the Sacrament of the Altar, even that body which was born of the Virgin Mary, ſuffered, died, and roſe again, and ſitteth on the Right Hand of God the Father Almighty. When they had diſputed a good while to and fro, as touching univerſalities, the Engliſhman which before would prove that material bread remained in the Sacrament, becauſe that the bread was not annihilate, interrupting and breaking their talk, ſaid, to what purpoſe is this Diſputation upon univerſalities, the which maketh nothing to the purpoſe, as touching faith? For as far as I can perceive or hear, this man holdeth a good opinion as touching the Sacrament of the Altar.

An Engliſhman.

J. Hus agreeth with that blind time in the Sacrament.

Then another Engliſhman, named Stokes, ſaid I have ſeen at Prague (ſaith he) a certain Treatiſe, the which was alſcribed unto this man John Hus, wherein it was plainly ſet forth, that after the Conſecration there remained material bread in the Sacrament. Verily, ſaid John Hus, ſaving your reverence, that is not true.

Stokes an Engliſhman.

Then they returned again unto the witneſſes of them which were ſpoken of a little before, who every man for himſelf affirmed with an Oath that which he had ſaid. Amongſt whom John Protywav, Pariſh Prieſt of S. Clements in Prague, when he ſhould come to confirm his teſtimony added more, that John Hus ſhould ſay, that St. Gregory was but a rimer, when he did alledge his authority againſt him. Unto whom John Hus anſwered, that in this point they did him great injury, forſomuch as he always eſteemed and reputed S. Gregory for a moſt holy Doctor of the Church.

Falſe witneſſes.

John Hus falſly accuſed for calling S. Gregory a rimer.

Whether tenths be pure alms.

The Cardinal of Florence.

These contentions and Diſputations being ſomewhat appeaſed, the Cardinal of Florence turned himſelf toward John Hus, and ſaid, Maſter, you know well enough that it is written that in the mouth of two or three witneſſes all witneſs is firm and ſtable; and here you ſee now almoſt twenty witneſſes againſt you, men of authority and worthy of credit, amongſt the which ſome have heard you teach theſe things themſelves, the other by report and common brute or voice do teſtifie of your Doctrine, and all together generally bring firm reaſons and proofs of their witneſs, unto the which we are forced and conſtrained to give credit; and for my part, I ſee not how you can maintain and defend your cauſe againſt ſo many notable and well learned men. Unto whom John Hus anſwered in this manner, I take God and my Conſcience to witneſs, that I never taught any thing, neither was it ever in my mind or fancy to teach in ſuch ſort or manner, as theſe men here have not feared to witneſs againſt me that which they never heard. And albeit, they were as many more in number as they are, for all that, I do much more eſteem, yea and without compariſon, regard the witneſs of my Lord God, before the witneſs and judgment of all mine adverſaries upon whom I do in no point ſtay my ſelf. Then ſaid the Cardinal again unto him, it is not lawful for us to judge according to your conſcience; for we cannot chooſe, but that we muſt needs ſtay our ſelves upon the firm and evident witneſs of theſe men here. For it is not for any diſpleaſure or hatred, that theſe men do witneſs this againſt you (as you do alledge:) for they alledge and bring forth ſuch reaſons of their witneſs, that there is no man that can perceive any hatred in them, or that we can in any caſe be in doubt thereof. And as touching Maſter Stephen Paletz, whereas you ſay, you do ſuſpect him that he hath craftily and deceitfully drawn out certain Points or Articles, out of your Books to bring them afterward; it ſeemeth that in this point you do him great wrong, for in mine advice he hath uſed and ſhewed a great fidelity and amity toward you, in that he hath alleviated and moderated many of your Articles much more than they are in your own Books. I underſtand alſo that you have like opinion of divers other notable men, and ſpecially you have ſaid, that you do ſuſpect M. Chancellor of Paris, than whom there is no more excellent and Chriſtian man in all the whole world.

Twenty witneſſes prevailed againſt J. Hus, but the teſtimony of all Rome could not ſerve on his part.

Falſe witneſs.

Another accuſation for defending of Wickliff's Articles.

Then was there read a certain Article of accuſation, in the which it was alledged, That John Hus had taught, and obſtinately defended certain erroneous Articles of Wickliff's in Bohemе. Whereunto Hus anſwered, that he never taught any errors of John Wickliff's, or of any other mans. Wherefore if it be ſo that Wickliff hath ſowed any errors in England, let the Engliſhmen look to that themſelves. But to confirm their Article, there was alledged, that John Hus did withſtand the condemnation of Wickliff's Articles, the which were firſt condemned at Rome; and afterward alſo, when the Archbiſhop of Swinco, with other learned men, held a Convocation at Prague for the ſame matter, when as they would have there been condemned for this cauſe, that none of them were agreeing to the Catholick Faith or Doctrine, but were either heretical, erroneous or offenſive: he anſwered, that he durſt not agree thereunto, for offending his conſcience, and and eſpecially for theſe Articles, that Silveſter the Pope and Conſtantine did err in beſtowing thoſe great gifts and rewards upon the Church. Alſo, that the Pope or Prieſt, being in mortal ſin, cannot conſecrate nor baptiſe. This Article, ſaid he, I have thus determined, as if I ſhould ſay, that he doth unworthily conſecrate or baptiſe, when as he is in deadly ſin, and that he is an unworthy Miniſter of the Sacraments of God. Here his accuſers with their witneſſes, were earneſt and inſtant that the Article of Wickliff was written by the very ſame words of the Treatiſe which John Hus made againſt Stephen Paletz. Verily ſaid John Hus, I fear not to ſubmit my ſelf, even under the danger of death, if you ſhall not find it ſo as I have ſaid. When the Book was brought forth, they found it written as John Hus had ſaid. He added alſo moreover, that he durſt not agree unto them which had condemned Wickliff's Articles, for this Article, The tenths were pure alms.

A Treatiſe againſt Stephen Paletz.

Whether tenths be pure alms.

Here the Cardinal of Florence objected unto him this Argument, as touching the Alms: It is required that it ſhould be given freely without bond or duty. But Tenths are not given freely without bond or duty; therefore they are no alms. John Hus denying the Major of this Syllogiſme brought this reaſon againſt him. Forſomuch as rich men are bounden under the pain of eternal damnation, unto the fulfilling of the ſix works or mercy, which Chriſt repeateth in the 25*th* Chapter of Matthew, and theſe works are pure alms: Ergo, alms is alſo given by bond and duty. Then an Archbiſhop of England, ſtepping up, ſaid, if we all be bound unto thoſe ſix works of mercy, it doth follow that poor men, which have nothing at all to give, ſhould be damned. I anſwer, ſaid Hus, unto your antecedent, that I ſpake diſtinctly of rich men, and of thoſe which had wherewithal to do thoſe works: They, I ſay, were bound to give alms under pain of damnation.

Alms ſtand of duty.

He anſwered moreover, unto the Minor of the firſt Argument, That Tenths were at firſt given freely, and afterward made a bond and duty; and when as he would have declared it more at large, he could not be ſuffered. He declared alſo divers other cauſes why he could not with ſafe Conſcience conſent unto the condemnation of Wickliff's Articles. But howſoever the matter went, he did affirm and ſay, that he did never obſtinately confirm any Articles of Wickliff's, but only that he did not allow and conſent that Wickliff's Articles ſhould be condemned before that ſufficient reaſons were alledged out of the holy Scripture for their condemnation; and of the ſame mind, ſaith John Hus, are a great many other Doctors and Maſters of the Univerſity of Prague. For when as Swinco the Archbiſhop commanded all Wickliff's Books to be gathered together in the whole City of Prague, and to be brought unto him, I my ſelf brought alſo certain Books of Wickliff's, which I gave unto the Archbiſhop, deſiring him, that if he found any error or Hereſie in them, he would note and mark them, and I my ſelf would publiſh them openly. But the Archbiſhop, albeit that he ſhewed me no error nor Hereſie in them, burned my Books, together with thoſe that were brought unto him, notwithſtanding that he had no ſuch commandment from Pope Alexander the fifth of that name. But notwithſtanding by a certain policy, he obtained a Bull from the ſaid Pope by means of Farollaus Biſhop of Savepre, of the Order of Franciſcans, that all Wickliff's Books, for the manifold errors contained in them (whereof there was none named) ſhould be taken out of all mens hands.

The Cardinal of Cambray.

Wickliff's Books burned in Prague by the Archbiſhop Swinco.

He meaneth Conſtan.

A narration touching Wickliff's Books.

The Archbiſhop, uſing the authority of this Bull, thought he ſhould bring to paſs, that the King of Boheme and the Nobles ſhould conſent to the condemnation of Wickliff's Books; but therein he was deceived. Yet nevertheleſs, he calling together certain Divines, gave them in Commiſſion to lit upon Wickliff's Books, and to proceed againſt them by a definitive ſentence in the Canon Law. Theſe Men, by a general ſentence, judged all thoſe Books worthy to be burned. The which when the Doctors, Maſters and Scholars of the Univerſity heard report of, they all together, with one conſent and accord (none excepted but only they, which before were choſen by the Archbiſhop to ſit in judgment) determined to make ſupplication unto the King, to ſtay the matter. The King granting their requeſt, ſent by and by certain unto the Archbiſhop to examine the matter. There he denied that he would decree any thing, as touching Wickliff's Books, contrary unto the Kings will and pleaſure. Whereupon, albeit that he had determined to burn them the next day after, yet for fear of the King, the matter was paſſed over.

The Univerſity of Prague maketh ſupplication to the King for ſtaying of Wickliff's Books.

In the mean time Pope Alexander the 5*th* being dead, the Archbiſhop, fearing leſt the Bull which he had received of the Pope, would be no longer of any force or effect, privily calling unto him his adherents, and ſhutting the Gates of his Court round about him, being guarded with a number of armed ſoldiers, conſumed and burned all Wickliff's Books. Beſides this great injury, the Archbiſhop by means of his Bull aforeſaid, committed another no leſs tolerable. For he gave out commandment, that no man after that time, under pain of Excommunication, ſhould teach any more in Chappels. Whereupon I did appeal unto the Pope; who being dead, and the cauſe of my matter remaining undetermined, I appealed likewiſe unto his ſucceſſor John 23*d*. Before whom when as, by the ſpace of two years, I could not be admitted by my advocate to defend my cauſe, I appealed unto the high Judge Chriſt. When John Hus had ſpoken theſe words, it was demanded of him, whether he had received Abſolution of the Pope or no? He anſwered, No. Then again, whether it were lawful for him to appeal unto Chriſt or no? Whereunto John Hus anſwered, Verily I do affirm here before you all, that there is no more juſt or effectual appeal, than that appeal which is made unto Chriſt, foraſmuch as the Law doth determine, that to appeal, is no other thing than in a cauſe of grief or wrong done by an inferiour Judge, to implore and require aid and remedy at a higher Judges hand. Who is then an higher Judge than Chriſt? Who, I ſay, can know or judge the matter more juſtly, or with more equity? when as in him there is found no deceit, neither can he be deceived; or, who can better help the miſerable and oppreſſed than he? While John Hus with a devout and ſober countenance, was ſpeaking and pronouncing thoſe words, he was derided and mocked of all the whole Council.

Wickliff's Books burned in Prague againſt the Kings will.

A decree that no man ſhould teach any more in Chappels.

J. Hus appealed to the Pope, and from the Pope to Chriſt.

A queſtion of the counſel, whether it be lawful to appeal to Chriſt or no.

The Poliſh Church derideth Chriſt.

Then was there rehearſed another Article of his accuſation in this manner; That John Hus to confirm the Hereſie which he had taught the common and ſimple people out of Wickliff's Books, ſaid openly theſe words, That at what time a great number of Monks and Friers, and other learned men were gathered together in England, in a certain Church, to diſpute againſt John Wickliff, and could by no meaus vanquiſh him, or give him the foyl, ſuddenly the Church-door was broken open with lightning, ſo that with much ado Wickliff's enemies hardly eſcaped without hurt. He added moreover, that he wiſhed his ſoul to be in the ſame place where John Wickliff's ſoul was. Whereunto John Hus anſwered, that a dozen years before that any Books of Divinity of John Wickliff's were in Boheme, he did ſee certain Works of Philoſophy of his, the which, he ſaid, did marvelouſly delight and pleaſe him. And when he underſtood the good and godly life of the ſaid Wickliff, he ſpake theſe words, I truſt, ſaid he, that Wickliff is ſaved; and albeit that I doubt whether he be damned or no, yet with a good hope I wiſh, that my ſoul were in the ſame place where John Wickliff's is. Then again did all the company jeſt and laugh at him.

Hus accuſed for trulling that Wickliff's ſoul is ſaved.

Sedition laid to his charge.

It is alſo in his accuſation, that John Hus did counſel the people, according to the example of Moſes, to reſiſt with the ſword againſt all ſuch as did gainſay his Doctrine. And the next day after he had preached the ſame, there were found openly in divers places certain Inſtinations, that every man, being armed with his ſword about him, ſhould ſtourly proceed, and that Brother ſhould not ſpare Brother, neither one neighbour another. John Hus anſwered, that all theſe things were falſly laid unto his charge by his adverſaries; for he at all times when he preached, did diligently admoniſh and warn the people, that they ſhould all arm themſelves to defend the truth of the Goſpel, according to the ſaying of the Apoſtle, with the helmet and ſword of Salvation; and that he never ſpake of any material ſword, but of that which is the Word of God. And as touching Inſtinations, or Moſes ſword, he never had any thing to do with that.

Hus accuſed for moving certain tumults againſt the Clergy, and diviſion in the Univerſity of Prague.

It is moreover affirmed in his accuſation and witneſs, that many offences are ſprung up by the Doctrine of Hus. For firſt of all, he ſowed diſcord between the Eccleſiaſtical and the Politick ſtate: whereupon followed the perſecution secution, spoiling and robbery of the Clergy and Bishops. And moreover, that he though his dissention diffolved the University of Prague. Hereunto John Hus briefly answered, that these things had not happened by his means or default. For the first diffention that was between the Ecclesiastical and Politick ftate, sprang and grew upon this cause, that Pope Gregory the Twelfth of that name, promised at his Election, that at all times at the will and pleasure of the Cardinals he would depart from, and give over his seat again; for under that condition he was elect and chosen. This man, contrary and against Wincestaus King of Bohemе, who was then also King of the Romans, made Lewes Duke of Bavaria Emperor.

A Story of Popes.

A few years after it happened when as Pope Gregory would not refuse and give over his seat and office at the requeft of the Cardinals, that the whole College of Cardinals sent Letters to the King of Bohemе, requiring him, that together with them he would renounce and forsake his obedience unto Pope Gregory, and so it should come to pass, that by the authority of a new Bishop he should recover again his Imperial Dignity. For this cause the King consented to the will of the Cardinals as touching a Neutrality; that is to say, that he would neither take part with Pope Gregory, neither yet with Benedict the Twelfth, Bishop of Avinion, which was then named Pope, as it doth appear by Chronicles. In this cause then, forsomuch as the Archbishop Swinco with the Clergy were against the King, and abstaining from the Divine service, many of them departed out of the City, and the Archbishop himself breaking down the Tomb of the Lord Wincelaе, contrary and against the Kings will, did also take Wickliffs Books and burned them: Thereupon the King without any gain-saying, suffered that certain goods of theirs, which of their own wills were fled away, should be spoiled, because they should not consent or accord with the Bishop. Whereupon it is easie to be understood and known that John Hus was falsly accused for that matter. Howbeit a certain man, one Naso, riling up, said, The Clergy (said he) did not abstain from the Divine service, because they would not swear to consent unto the King, but because that they were spoiled and robbed of their goods and substance. And the Cardinal of Cambray, who was one of the Judges said, Here I must say somewhat which is come into my mind.

The cause why Swinco and other of the Clergy did fly out of Prague.

This Doctor Naso was Counsellor to King Wincyslaw.

When as I came from Rome, the same year that these things were done, by chance I met on the way certain Prelates of Bohemе. Whom when I demanded what news they had brought out of Bohemе, they answered, that there was happened a wonderful cruel and heinous fact: for all the Clergy were spoiled of all their substance, and very ill intreated and handled. Then John Hus alledging the same cause which he did before, went forward unto the second part of the article which was objected against him, denying also that it hapned through his fault, that the Germans departed from the University of Prague. But when as the King of Bohemе, according to the foundation of Charles the Fourth his Father, granted three voices unto the Bohemes, and the fourth unto the Germans; whereat the Germans grudging that they should be exempted from their voices, of their own accord departed and went their ways; binding themselves with a great Oath, and under a great penalty, both of their fame, and also money, that none of them should return again unto Prague. Notwithstanding, I am not athamed to confess, that I did approve and allow the doings of the King, unto whom of duty I owe obedience for the commodity and profit of my Country. And because you shall not think that I have spoken any untruth. Here is present Albert Warren Trapiue, which was Deacon of the Faculties, who had sworn to depart with the reft of the Germans; he, if that he will say the truth, shall easily clear me of this suspition.

A declaration how the Germans departed from the University of Prague.

The penalty of money was a 100 filver ftock.

But when as Albert would have spoken, he could not be heard. But the foresaid Naso, of whom before is made mention, after he had asked leave to speak, said, This matter do I understand well enough, for I was in the Kings Court when these things were done in Bohemе, when as I saw the Masters of the three Nations, of the Germans, Bavarians, Saxons, and Silesians, amongst whom the Polonians were also numbred, most humbly come unto the King, requiring that he would not suffer the right of their voices to be taken from them. Then the King promised them that he would foresee and provide for their requests. But John Hus and Jerome of Prague, with divers others, perswaded the King that he should not so do. Whereat the King at the first being not a little moved, gave him a fore check, that he and Jerome of Prague did so much intermeddle themselves, and moved such open controverfies, insomuch that he threatned them, that except they would foresee and take heed, he would bring it to pass that the matter should be determined and decreed by fire. Wherefore most reverend Fathers, you shall understand that the King of Bohemе did never favour with his heart these men, whose unthamefulness is such, that they feared not even of late to intreat me evil, being so much in the Kings favour and credit. After him ftepped forth Palerz, saying, Verily most reverend Fathers, not only the learned men of other Nations, but also of Bohemе it self, are through the counsel of John Hus and his adherents banished out of Bohemе; of the which number some remain yet in exile in Moravia. Hereunto John Hus answered: How can this be true, said he, sithence I was not at Prague at that time, when as these men you speak of departed and went away from thence? These things were thus debated the day aforesaid as touching John Hus.

{KING} Itin. 5.

Palerz speaketh against John Hus.

This done, the said John Hus was committed to the custody of the Bishop of Reigen, under whom Jerome of Prague was also prisoner. But before that he was led away the Cardinal of Cambray calling him back again in the presence of the Emperor, said, John Hus, I have heard you say, that if you had not been willing of your own mind to come unto Constance, neither the Emperor himself, neither the King of Bohemе could have compelled you to do it. Unto whom John Hus answered, Under your license most reverend Father, I never used any such kind of talk or words. But this I did say, That there was in Bohemе a great number of Gentlemen and Noblemen, which did favour and love me, the which also might eatily have kept me in some sure and secret place, that I should not have been constrained to come into this Town of Constance, neither at the will of the Emperor, neither of the King of Bohemе. With that the Cardinal of Cambray, even for very anger began to change his colour, and despitefully said, Do you not see the unthamefulness of the man here? And as they were murmuring and whispering on all parts, the Lord John de Clum, ratifying and confirming that which John Hus had spoken, said, That John Hus had spoken very well; for on my part, said he, which in comparison of a great many others am but of small force in the Realm of Bohemе, yet always if I would have taken it in hand, I could have defended him eafily by the space of one year, even against all the force and power of both these great and mighty Kings. How much better might they have done it which are of more force or puissance than I am? And have stronger Castles and places than I have? After that the Lord de Clum had spoken, the Cardinal of Cambray said, Let us leave this talk. And I tell you, John Hus, and counsel you, that you submit your self unto the sentence and mind of the Council, as you did promise in the Prison; and if you will do so, it shall be greatly both for your profit and honour.

Hus committed to custody. Jerome of Prague.

The Cardinal of Cambray.

John de Clum.

And the Emperor himself began to tell him the same tale, saying, Albeit that there be some which say, that the fifteenth day after you were committed to prison, you obtained of us our Letters of safe-conduct: Notwithstanding, I can well prove by the witness of many Princes and Noblemen, that the said safe conduct was obtained and gotten of us by my Lord de Dube and de Clum, before you were parted out of Prague, under whose guard we have sent for you, to the end that none should do you any outrage or hurt, but that you should have full liberty to speak freely before all the Council, and to answer as touching your Faith and Doctrine: and as you see, my Lords the Cardinals and Bishops have so dealt with you, that we do very well perceive their good will towards you, for the which we have great cause to thank them. And forsomuch as divers have told us, that we may not or ought not of right to defend any man which is an Heretick, or suspect of Heresie; therefore now we give you even the same counsel which the Cardinal of Cambray hath given you already, that you be not obstinate to maintain any opinion, but that you do submit your self under such obedience ence as you owe unto the authority of the holy Council, in all things that shall be laid against you, and confirmed by credible witnesses. The which thing if you do according to our counsel, we will give order that for the love of us, of our Brother, and the whole Realm of Bohemе, the Council shall suffer you to depart in peace, with an easie and tolerable penance and satisfaction. The which thing if you contrariwise refuse to do, the Presidents of the Council shall have sufficient wherewithal to proceed against you. And for our part be ye well affured, that we will sooner prepare and make the fire with our own hands, to burn you withal, than we will endure or suffer any longer that you shall maintain or use this stiffness of opinions, which you have hitherto maintained and used. Wherefore our advice and counsel is, that you submit your self wholly unto the judgment of the Council. Unto whom John Hus answered in this sort, O most noble Emperor, I render unto your Highness most immortal thanks for your Letters of safe conduct. Upon this Lord John de Clum did break him of his purpose, and admonished him that he did in no point excuse himself of the blame of obstinacy.

The answer of John Hus unto the Emperor.

Then said John Hus, O most gentle Lord, I do take God to my witness, that I was never minded to maintain any opinion ever obstinately, and that for this same intent and purpose I did come hither of mine own good will, that if any man could lay before me any better or more holy Doctrine than mine, that then I would change mine opinion without any further doubt. After he had spoken and said these things, he was sent away with Serjeants.

The morrow after, which was the eighth day of June, the very same company which was assembled the day before, assembled now again at the Covent of the Franciscans. And in this assembly were also John Hus his Friends, Lord de Dube, and Lord de Clum, and Peter the Notary. Thither was John Hus also brought: and in his presence there were read about Thirty nine Articles, the which they said, were drawn out of his Books. Hus acknowledged all those that were faithfully and truly collected and gathered, to be his; of the which sort there were but very few. The refidue were counterfeited and forged by his adversaries, and specially by Stephen Palerz, the principal Author of this mischief: for they could find no such thing in the Books, out of the which they said they had drawn and gathered them; or at the least, if they were, they were corrupted by flanders, as a man may eatily perceive by the number of Articles.

39 Articles laid to John Hus.

These be the same Articles in a manner which were shewed before in the prison to John Hus, and are rehearsed here in another order. Howbeit there were more Articles added unto them, and otherfome corrected and enlarged. But now we will shew them one with another, and declare what the said Hus did answer both openly before them all, as also in the prison, for he left his answers in the prison briefly written with his own hand in these words.

The answer of John Hus concerning his Book of the Church.

I John Hus, unworthy Minister of Jesus Christ, Master of Art, and Bachelor of Divinity, do confess that I have written a certain small Treatise, Intituled, Of the Church; the copy whereof was shewed me by the Notaries of the three Predecessors of the Council, that is to say, the Patriarch of Constantinople, the Bishop of Castile, and the Bishop of Libusse; the which Deputies or Presidents, in reproof of the said Treatise, delivered unto me certain Articles, saying, that they were drawn out of the said Treatise, and were written in the same.

The first Article: There is but one holy universal or Catholick Church, which is the universal company of all the Predestinate. I do confess that this Proposition is mine, and is confirmed by the saying of S. Augustin upon S. John.

St. Paul was never any member of the Devil.

The second Article: St. Paul was never any member of the Devil, albeit that he committed and did certain acts like unto the acts of the malignant Church. And likewise St. Peter which fell into an horrible sin of perjury and denial of his Master, it was by the permission of God, that he might the more firmly and fedfastly rise again and be confirmed. I answer according to St. Augustine, that it is expedient that the Elect and Predestinate should sin and offend.

Hereby it appeareth that there are two manner of separations from the holy Church. The first is, not to perdition, as all the Elect are divided from the Church. The second is to perdition, by the which certain Heretics are through their deadly sin divided from the Church. Yet notwithstanding by the grace of God, they may return again unto the flock, and be of the fold of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom he speaketh himself, saying, I have other sheep which are not of this fold, Joh. 20.

Two manner of separations from the Church.

The third Article: No part or member of the Church doth depart or fall away at any time from the body, forsomuch as the charity of Predestination, which is the bond and chain of the same, doth never fall away. This Proposition is thus placed in my Book: As the reprobate of the Church proceed out of the same, and yet are not as parts or members of the same; forsomuch as no part or member of the same doth finally fall away, because that the charity of Predestination, which is the bond and chain of the same, doth never fall away. This is proved by the thirteenth Chapter of the first to the Corinthians, and to the Romans, the eighth Chapter: All things turn to good to them which love God. Also I am certain that neither death nor life can separate us from the charity and love of God, as it is more at large in the Book.

The members of the Church cannot fall finally away.

The fourth Article: The predestinate, although he be not in the ftate of Grace according to present justice, yet is he always a member of the universal Church. This is an error, if it be underflood of all such as be predestinate: for thus it is in the Book, about the beginning of the fifth Chapter, where it is declared, that there be divers manners and sorts of being in the Church; for there are some in the Church, according to the misshapen faith, and other some according to predestination, as Christians predestinate now in sin, but shall return again unto grace.

The predestinate is always a member of the universal Church, although not in present justice.

The fifth Article: There is no degree of honour or dignity, neither any humane election, or any sensible sign, that can make any man a member of the universal Church. I answer, this article is after this manner in my Book. And such fubtilties are underflood and known by considering what it is to be in the Church, and what it is to be a part or member of the Church, and that predestination doth make a man a member of the universal Church, the which is a preparation of grace for the present and glory to come: and not any degree of dignity, neither election of man, neither any sensible sign. For the Traytor Judas Iscariot notwithstanding Christs election, and the temporal graces which were given him for his office of Apostleship, and that he was reputed and counted of men a true Apostle of Jesus Christ, yet was he no true Disciple, but a wolf covered in a sheeps skin, as St. Augustine saith.

To be in the Church, and a member of the Church.

Predestination.

The sixth Article: A reprobate man is never a member of the holy Church. I answer, it is in my Book with sufficient long probation out of the 26th Psalm, and out of the fifth Chapter to the Ephesians, and also by St. Bernards saying. The Church of Jesus Christ is more plainly and evidently his body, than the body which he delivered for us to death. I have also written in the fifth Chapter of my Book, that the holy Church is the Barn of the Lord, in the which are both good and evil, predestinate and reprobate, the good being as the good corn or grain, and the evil as the chaff: and thereunto is added the Expolition of Saint Augustine.

Both good and bad in the Church.

The seventh Article: Judas was never a true Disciple of Jesus Christ. I answer, and I do confess the same. This appeareth by the fifth article, which is passed before, and by St. Augustine in his Book of penance, where he doth expound the meaning of St. John, in the first Epistle and second Chapter, where he said, They came out from amongst us, but they were none of us. He knew from the beginning all them which should believe, and him also which should betray him, and said, And therefore I say unto you, that none cometh unto me except it be given him of my father. From that time many of the Disciples parted from him; and were not those also called Disciples, according to the words of the Gospel? And yet notwithstanding they were true Disciples, because they did not remain and continue in the Word of the Son of God, according as it is said, If you remain in my word, you be my disciples. Forsomuch then as they did not continue with Christ as his true Disciples, so likewise are they not the true Sons of God: although they seem so, unto him they are not so, unto whom it is known what they shall be, that is to say, of good, evil. Thus much writeth

St.

St. Augustine: It is also evident that Judas could not be the true Disciple of Christ, by means of his covetousness: for Christ himself said in the presence of Judas, as I suppose, Except a man forsake all that he hath, he cannot be my Disciple. Forsomuch then as Judas did not forsake all things, according to the Lords will, and follow him, he was a Thief, as it is said John the twelfth, and a Divel, John the sixth, whereby it is evident by the Word of the Lord, that Judas was not his true but fained Disciple. Whereupon St. Augustine writing upon John, declaring how the sheep hear the voice of Christ, saith, What manner of hearers, think we, his sheep were? Truly Judas heard him and was a wolf, yet followed he the shepherd: but clothed in a sheeps skin, he lay in wait for the shepherd.

8. The eighth Article of the Congregation of the Predestinate, whether they be in the state of Grace or no, according unto prefent justice, is the holy universal Church, and therefore it is an article of faith, and it is the same Church which hath neither wrinkle, neither spot in it, but is holy and undefiled, the which the Son of God doth call his own. The answer, The words of the Book out of the which this article was drawn are these: Thirdly, The Church is understood and taken for the congregation and assembly of the faithful, whether they be in the state of grace, according to present justice or not. And in this sort it is an article of our faith, of the which St. Paul maketh mention in the fifth Chapter to the Ephesians: Christ so loved his Church, that he delivered and offered himself for the same, &c. I pray you then, is there any faithful man the which doth doubt that the Church doth not fignifie all the Elect and Predestinate, the which we ought to believe to be the universal Church, the glorious Spouse of Jesus Christ, holy and without spot? Wherefore this article is an article of faith, the which we ought firmly to believe according to our Creed, I believe the Holy Catholick Church: and of this Church doth St. Augustine, St. Gregory, St. Jerome, and divers others make mention.

The Church is taken sometime for the congregation of the elect and faithful, and so is the article taken in the Creed.

9. The ninth Article. Peter never was, neither is the Head of the holy universal Church. The answer: This article was drawn out of these words of my Book. All men do agree in this point, that Peter had received of the Rock of the Church (which is Christ) humility, poverty, stedfastnes of faith, and consequently blessednes. Not as though the meaning of our Lord Jesus Christ was, when he said, Upon this Rock I will build my Church, that he would build every militant Ghurch upon the person of Peter, for Christ should build his Church upon the Rock which is Christ himself, from whence Peter received his stedfastnes of faith, forsomuch as Jesus Christ is the only Head and foundation of every Church, and not Peter.

Peter never was head of the whole universal Church.

The Church builded upon Peter, how.

10. The tenth Article: If he that is called the Vicar of Jesus Christ, do follow Christ in his life, then he is his true Vicar. But if so be, he do walk in contrary paths and ways, then is he the messenger of Antichrist, and the enemy and adversary of St. Peter, and of our Lord Jesus Christ, and also the Vicar of Judas Iscarioth. I answer, The words of my Book are these: If he which is called the Vicar of St. Peter, walk in the ways of Christian vertues aforesaid, we do believe verily that he is the true Vicar, and true Bishop of the Church which he ruleth; but if he walk in contrary paths and ways, then is he the messenger of Antichrist, contrary both to St. Peter, and our Lord Jesus Christ. And therefore Saint Bernard in his fourth Book did write in this sort unto Pope Eugenie: Thou delightest and walkest in great pride and arrogancy; being gorgeously and sumptuously arrayed, what fruit or profit do thy flock or sheep receive by thee? If I durst say it, these be rather the pastures and feedings of Divels than of sheep, St. Peter and St. Paul did not so; wherefore thou feemest by these thy doings to succeed Constantine, and not St. Peter. These be the very words of St. Bernard. It followeth after in my Book, that if the manner and fashion of his life and living be contrary to that which St. Peter used, or that he be given to avarice and covetousness, then is he the Vicar of Judas Iscariot, which loved and chose the reward of iniquity, and did set out to sale the Lord Jesus Christ. As soon as they had read the same, those which ruled and governed the Council, beheld one another, making mocks and mowes, they nodded their heads at him.

The Church militant is taken for the congregation of the elect.

The Vicar of Christ, how he is to be taken.

Bern. ad Eugen. lib. 4.

The eleventh Article: All such as do use simony, and Priests living dissolutely and wantonly, do hold an untrue opinion of the seven Sacraments, as unbelieving bastards, and not as children, not knowing what is the office and duty of the Keys or Censures, Rites and Ceremonies, neither of the Divine service of the Church, or of veneration or worshipping of Relicks, neither of the Orders constituted and ordained in the Church, neither yet of Indulgences or Pardons. I answer, that it is placed in this manner in my Book. This abuse of authority or power is committed by such as do sell and make merchandize of holy Orders, and get and gather together riches by simony, making Fairs and Markets of the holy Sacraments, and living in all kind of voluptuousness and dissolute manners, or in any other filthy or villainous kind of living: They do pollute and defile the holy Ecclesiastical state. And albeit that they profess in words that they do know God, yet do they deny it again by their deeds, and consequently believe not in God: But as unbelieving bastards they hold a contrary and untrue opinion of the seven Sacraments of the Church. And this appeareth moft evidently, forsomuch as all such do utterly contemn and despise the name of God, according to the saying of Malachi, the first Chapter, Unto you, O Priests, be it spoken, which do despise and contemn my name.

[KING] Hen. 5.

11. Prelates making merchandize of holy Orders

The twelfth Article: The Papal dignity hath his original from the Emperors of Rome. I answer, and mark well what my words are: The preheminence and institution of the Pope is sprung, and come of the Emperors power and authority. And this is proved by the ninety fixth Distinction: for Constantine granted this priviledge unto the Bishop of Rome, and other after him confirmed the same: That like as Augustus for the outward and temporal goods bestowed upon the Church, is counted always the moft high King above all others; so the Bishop of Rome should be called the principal Father above all other Bishops. This notwithstanding the Papal dignity hath his original immediately from Christ, as touching his spiritual administration and office to rule the Church. Then the Cardinal of Cambray said, In the time of Constantine, there was a General Council holden at Nice, in the which, albeit the highest room and place in the Church was given to the Bishop of Rome, for honours cause, it is ascribed unto the Emperor. Wherefore then do ye not as well affirm and say, that the Papal dignity took his original rather from that Council, than by the Emperors authority and power?

12. The Pope taketh his original from the Emperors. 96. Dist.

The thirteenth Article: No man would reasonably affirm (without relation) either of himself or of any other, that he is the head of any particular Church. I answer, I confess it to be written in my Book, and it followeth straight after, Albeit that through his good living he ought to hope and trust that he is a member of the holy universal Church, the Spouse of Jesus Christ, according to the saying of the Preacher, No man knoweth whether he be worthy and have deserved grace and favour, or hatred. And Luk. 17. When ye have done all that ye can, say that you are unprofitable servants.

13. The Pope is not the head of any particular Church.

The fourteenth Article: It ought not to believed that the Pope, whatsoever he be, may be the head of any particular Church, unless he be predestinate or ordained of God. I answer, that I do acknowledg this Proposition to be mine, and this is easie to prove forsomuch as it is necessary that the Christian Faith should be depraved, forsomuch as the Church was deceived by N. as it appeareth by St. Augustine.

14.

The fifteenth Article: The Popes power as Vicar, is but vain and nothing worth, if he do not confirm and addres his life according to Jesus Christ, and follow the manners of St. Peter. I answer, that it is thus in my Book, That it is meet and expedient that he which is ordained Vicar, should addres and frame himself, in manners and conditions, to the authority of him which did put him in place. And John Hus said moreover before the whole Council: I understand that the power and authority in such a Pope as doth not represent the manners of Christ, is fruitless and void, as touching the merit and reward, which he should obtain and get thereby, and doth not get the same: but not as concerning his office. Then certain others standing by, asked of him, saying, Where is that gloss in your Book? John Hus answered, You shall find it in my my Treatise against Mr. Paletz, whereat all the assistants (looking one upon another) began for to smile and laugh.

The sixteenth Article: The Pope is moft holy, not because he doth supply and hold the room and place of Saint Peter, but because he hath great revenues. I answer, that my words are mutilate, for thus it is written, He is not moft holy, because he is called the Vicar of St. Peter, or because he hath great and large possessions; but if he be the follower of Jesus Christ in humility, gentleness, patience, labour and travel, and in perfect love and charity.

17. The Cardinals do count it heresie, that they should be compelled to be followers of the Apostles

The seventeenth Article: The Cardinals are not the mainest and true successors of the other Apostles of Jesus Christ, if they live not according to the fashion of the Apostles, keeping the commandments and ordinances of the Lord Jesus, I answer, that it is thus written in my Book, and it proveth it self sufficiently: For if they enter in by another way than by the door which is the Lord Jesus, they be murtherers and thieves.

Then said the Cardinal of Cambray, Behold both this and all other Articles before rehearsed, he hath written much more detestable things in his Book than are presented in his Articles. Truly John Hus thou hast kept no order in thy Sermons and writings. Had it not been your part to have applied your Sermons according to your audience? For to what purpose was it, or what did it pront you before the people to preach against the Cardinals, when as none of them were present? It had been meeter for you to have told them their faults before them all, than before the Laity. Then answered John Hus, Reverend Father, forsomuch as I did fee many Priests and other learned men, present at my Sermons, for their sakes I spake thole words. Then said the Cardinal, thou hast done very ill, for by such kind of talk thou hast disturbed and troubled the whole state of the Church.

18. John Hus condemneth the cruelty of the Prelates in seeking the death of heretick.

The eighteenth Article: An Heretick ought not to be committed to the secular powers to be put to death, for it is sufficient only that he abide and suffer the Ecclesiastical censure. These are my words, That they might be ashamed of their cruel sentence and judgment, specially forsomuch as Jesus Christ, Bishop both of the Old and New Testament, would not judg such as were disobedient by civil judgment, neither condemn them to bodily death. As touching the first point, it may evidently be seen in the twelfth Chapter of St. Luke. And for the second it appeareth also by the woman which was taken in adultery, of whom it is spoken in the eighth Chapter of St. John. And it is said in the eighteenth Chapter of Saint Matthew. If thy brother have offended thee, &c. Mark therefore what I do say, That an heretick whatsoever he be, ought first to be instructed and taught with Christian love and gentleness by the holy Scriptures, and by the reasons drawn and taken out of the same, as St. Augustine and others have done, disputing against the Hereticks. But if there were any which after all these gentle and loving admonitions and instructions, would not cease from, or leave off their stiffnes of opinions, but obstinately resist against the truth, such, I say, ought to suffer corporal or bodily punishment.

As soon as John Hus had spoken those things, the Judges read in his Book a certain clause, wherein he seemed grievously to inveigh against them which delivered an Heretick unto the secular power, not being confuted or convicted of hereste, and compared them unto the High Priests, Scribes and Pharisees, which said unto Pilate, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death, and delivered Christ unto him: and yet notwithstanding, according unto Christs own witnes, they were greater murtherers than Pilate. For he, said Christ, which hath delivered me unto thee, hath committed the greatest offence. Then the Cardinals and Bishops made a great noise, and demanded of John Hus, saying, Who are they that thou doll compare or affirmule unto the Pharisees? Then he said, all those which delivered up any innocent unto the civil sword, as the Scribes and Pharisees delivered Jesus Christ unto Pilate. No, no, said they again; for all that, you spake here of Doctors. And the Cardinal of Cambray, according to his accustomed manner, said, Truly they which have made and gathered these Articles, have used great lenity and gentleness, for his writings are much more detestable & horrible.

The betraying and condemning of innocents. And how could this Bishop of Cambrayun-derstand the Books of Jo. Hus written in Bohemish, or French, which he understood not?

19. The nineteenth Article: The Nobles of the world ought to constrain and compel the Ministers of the Church to observe and keep the Law of Jesus Christ. I answer, that it

The Church militant standeth in three parts. 1. Ministers. 2. Nobles. 3 Commons standeth thus word for word in my Book. Those which be on our part do preach and affirm that the Church militant, according to the parts which the Lord hath ordained, is divided, and constiteth in these parts: That is to say, three parts. Ministers of the Church, which should keep purely and sincerely the ordinances and commandments of the Son of God, and the Nobles of the world that should compel and drive them to keep the commandments of Jesus Christ, and of the common people, serving to both these parts and ends, according to the institution and ordinance of Jesus Christ.

20. The twentieth Article: The Ecclesiastical obedience is a kind of obedience, which the Priests and Monks have invented without any expresse authority of the Holy Scriptures. I answer and confess, that those words are thus written in my Book. I say that there be three kinds of obedience, Spiritual, Secular, and Ecclesiastical. The Spiritual obedience is that which is only due according to the Law and Ordinance of God, under the which the Apostles of Jesus Christ did live, and all Christians ought to live. The Secular obedience is that which is due according to the Civil Laws and Ordinances. The Ecclesiastical obedience is such as the Priests have invented, without any expresse authority of Scripture. The first kind of obedience doth utterly exclude from it all evil, as well on his part which giveth the commandment, as on his also which doth obey the same. And of this obedience it is spoken in Deut. 24. Thou shalt do all that which the Priests of the kindred of Levi shall teach and instruct thee, according as I have commanded them.

Three kinds of obedience. 1. Spiritual. 2. Secular. 3. Ecclesiastical.

21. The twenty first Article: He that is Excommunicated by the Pope, if he refuse and forsake the judgment of the Pope, and the General Council, and appealeth unto Jesus Christ, after he hath made his appellation, all the Excommunications and Curses of the Pope cannot annoy or hurt him. I answer, that I do not acknowledg this Proposition; but indeed I did make my complaint in my Book, that they had both done me, and such as favoured me great wrong, and that they refuse to hear me in the Popes Court. For after the death of one Pope, I did appeal to his Successor, and all that did profit me nothing. And to appeal from the Pope to the Council it were too long; and that were even as much as if a man in trouble should seek an uncertain remedy. And therefore last of all I have appealed to the Head of the Church my Lord Jesus Christ, for he is much more excellent and better than any Pope, to discuss and determine matters and causes, forsomuch as he cannot err, neither yet deny justice to him that doth ask or require it in a just cause, neither can he condemn the innocent. Then spake the Cardinal of Cambray unto him, and said, Will thou presume above St. Paul, who appealed unto the Emperor, and not unto Jesus Christ? John Hus answered, Forsomuch then as I am the first that do it, am I therefore to be reputed and counted an Heretick? And yet notwithstanding St. Paul did not appeal unto the Emperor of his own motion or will, but by the will of Christ, which spake unto him by revelation, and said, Be firm and constant for thou must go unto Rome. And as he was about to rehearse his Appeal again, they mocked him.

mit all their causes into the hands of God, who can do all things, and knoweth and seeth all things, saying in this manner: O Lord, behold my affliction, for my enemy hath prepared himself against me, and thou art my protector and defender. O Lord, thou hast given me understanding, and I have acknowledged thee, thou hast opened unto me all their enterprises; and for mine own part, I have been as a meek lamb which is led unto sacrifice, and have not resisted against them. They have wrought their enterprises upon me, saying, Let us put wood in his bread, and let us banish him out of the land of the living, that his name be no more spoken of nor had in memory. But thou O Lord of hosts, which judgest justly, and seest the devices and imaginations of their hearts, hasten thee to take vengeance upon them, for I have manifested my cause unto thee, forsomuch as the number of those which trouble me is great, and have counselled together, saying, The Lord hath forsaken him, pursue him and catch him. O Lord my God, behold their doings, for thou art my patience; deliver me from mine enemies, for thou art my God; do not separate thy self far from me, for smuch as tribulation is at hand, and there is no man which will succour me. My God, my God, look down upon me, wherefore hast thou forsaken me? So many dogs have compassed me in, and the company of the wicked have besieged me round about, for they have spoken against me with deceitful tongues, and have compassed me in with words full of despite, and have inforced me without cause. Instead of love towards me they have slandered me, and have recompenced me with evil for good, and in place of charity they have conceived hatred against me.

After the example of Christ he maketh his prayer to God.

A godly prayer of John Hus.

Wherefore behold, I staying my self upon this most holy and fruitful example of my Saviour and Redeemer, do appeal before God for this my grief and hard oppression, from this most wicked sentence and judgment, and the Excommunication determined by the Bishops, Scribes, Pharisees, and Judges, which sit in Moses seat, and reign my cause wholly unto him; so as the holy Patriarch of Constantinople, John Chrysostom, appealed twice from the Council of the Bishops and Clergy; and Andrew Bishop of Prague, and Robert Bishop of Lincoln, appealed unto the sovereign and most just Judge, the which is not defiled with cruelty, neither can he be corrupted with gifts and rewards, neither yet be deceived by false witness. Also I desire greatly that all the faithful servants of Jesus Christ, and especially the Princes, Barons, Knights, Esquires, and all other which inhabit our Country of Boheme, should understand and know those things, and have compassion upon me, which am so grievously oppressed by the Excommunication which is out against me, the which was obtained and gotten by the instigation and procurement of Michael de Causis my great enemy, and by the consent and furtherance of the Canons of the Cathedral Church of Prague, and given and granted out by Peter of Saint Angels, Dean of the Church of Rome, and Cardinal, and also ordained Judge by Pope John XXIII, who hath continued almost these two years, and would give no audience unto my Advocates and Procurators, which they ought not to deny, (no not to a Jew or Pagan, or to any heretick whatsoever he were) neither yet would he receive any reasonable excuse, for that I did not appear personally, neither would he accept the testimonials of the whole University of Prague with the seal hanging at it, or the witness of the sworn Notaries, and such as were called unto witness. By this all men may evidently perceive that I have not incurred any fault or crime of contumacy or disobedience, forsomuch as that I did not appear in the Court of Rome, was not for any contempt, but for reasonable causes.

John Hus complaineth of Michael de Causis his great enemy.

And moreover, forsomuch as they had laid ambushments for me on every side by ways where I should pass, and also because the perils and dangers of others have made me the more circumspect and advised: And forsomuch as my procurators were willing and contented to bind themselves even to abide the punishment of the fire to answer to all such as would oppose or lay any thing against me in the Court of Rome; as also because they did imprison my lawful procurator in the said Court, without any cause, demerit, or fault, as I suppose. Forsomuch then as the order and disposition of all ancient Laws as well Divine of the Old and New Testament, as also of the Canon Laws, is this, that the Judges should resort unto the place where the crime or fault is committed or done, and there to enquire of all such crimes as shall be objected and laid against him which is accused or slandered, and that of such men as by conversation have some knowledge or understanding of the party so accused (the which may not be the evil willers or enemies of him which is so accused or slandered; but must be men of an honest conversation, no common quarrel-pickers or accusers, but fervent lovers of the Law of God:) and finally, that there should be a fit and meet place appointed, whither as the accused party might without danger or peril, resort or come, and that the judg and witnesses should not be enemies unto him that is accused. And also forsomuch as it is manifest, that all these conditions were wanting and lacking, as touching my appearance for the safeguard of my life, I am excused before God from the frivolous pretended obstinacy and excommunication. Whereupon I John Hus do present and offer this my appeal unto my Lord Jesus Christ, my just Judg, who rewardeth and defendeth, and justly judgeth every mans just and true cause.

The Proctorator of John Hus laid in prison at Rome

The twenty second Article. A vicious and naughty man liveth vicciously and naughtily; but a vertuous and godly man liveth vertuously and godly. I answer, My words are these, That the division of all humane works is in two parties, that is, that they be either vertuous or vicious; forsomuch as it doth appear, that if any man be vertuous and godly, and that he do any thing, he doth it then vertuously and godly. And contrariwise if a man be vicious and naught, that which he doth is vicious and naught. For as vice, which is called crime or offence, and thereby understand deadly sin, doth universally infect or deprave all the acts and doings of the subject, that is, of the man which doth them: so likewise vertue and godliness doth quicken all the acts and doings of the vertuous and godly man; insomuch that he being in the state of grace is faid to pray and do good works even sleeping, as it were by a certain means working; as St. Augustine, St. Gregory, and divers others affirm. And it appeareth in the sixth Chapter of Luke, If thine eye, that is to say, the mind or intention be simple, not depraved with the perverseness of any sin or offence, all the whole body, that is to say, all the acts and doings shall be clear and shining, that is, acceptable and grateful unto God. But if thine eye be evil, the whole body is darkened. And in the second to the Corinthians, tenth Chapter, All things that you do, do them to the glory of God. And likewise in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 10. and last Chapter, it is said, Let all your doings be done with charity. Wherefore all kind of life and living according unto charity, is vertuous and godly; and if it be without charity, it is vicious and evil. This faying may well be proved out of the 23 Chapter of Deuteronomy, where God speaketh to the people, that he that keepeth his Commaments is blessed in the house and in the field, out-going and in-coming, sleeping and waking, but he that doth not keep his commandments is accursed in the house, and in the fields, in going out and in coming in, sleeping and waking, &c. The same also is evident by St. Augustine upon the Psalm where he writeth, that a good man in all his doings doth praise the Lord. And Gregory saith, That the sleep of Saints and holy men doth not lack their merit. How much more then his doings which proceed of good zeal, be not without reward, and consequently be vertuous and good? And contrariwise it is understood of him which is in deadly sin, of whom it is spoken in the Law, that whatsoever the unclean man doth touch, is made unclean.

22. A knot found in a rush.

The tree that is good bringeth forth good fruits.

Deut. 23.

To this end doth that also appertain which is before repeated out of the first of Malachi. And Gregory in the first Book and first Question saith, We do defile the Bread, which is the Body of Christ, when as we come unworthily to the Table, and when we being defiled, do drink his Blood. And St. Augustine upon the 146th Psalm saith, If thou doft exceed the due measure of nature, and doft not abstain from gluttony, but gorge thy self up with drunkenness, whatsoever laud and praise thy tongue doth speak of the grace and favour of God, thy life doth blaspheme the fame. When he had made an end of this article, the Cardinal of Cambray faid, The Scripture saith that we be all sinners. And again, if we say we have no sin, we deceive our selves, and so we should always live in deadly sin. John Hus answered, The Scripture speaketh in that place of venial sins, the which do not utterly expell or put away the habit of vertue from a man, but do associate themselves together.

{KING Hin. 5.} together. And a certain Englishman whose name was W. said, But those sins do not associate themselves with any act morally good. John Hus alledged again S. Augustines place upon 146 Psal. the which when he rehearsed, they all with one mouth said, What makes this to the purpole?

The Pope proved to do again his own Canon-laws.

23. Forbidding to Preach, whether it ought to be obeyed.

The twenty third Article. The Minister of Christ living according to his Law, and having the knowledge and understanding of the Scriptures, and an earnest desire to edifie the people, ought to preach; notwithstanding the pretended Excommunication of the Pope. And moreover, if the Pope, or any other Ruler, do forbid any Priest or Minister so disposed to Preach, that he ought not to obey him. I Answer, that these are my words; That albeit the Excommunication were either threatned or come out against him, in such sort that a Christian ought not to do the Commandments of Christ, it appeareth by the words of Saint Peter, and the other Apostles, That we ought rather to obey God then man. Whereupon it followeth, that the Minister of Christ living according unto his Law, &c. ought to preach notwithstanding any pretended Excommunication. For it is evident, That it is commanded unto the Ministers of the Church to Preach the Word of God, Acts 5. God hath commanded us to preach and testifie unto the people, as by divers other places of the Scripture, and the holy Fathers rehearsed in my Treatise, it doth appear more at large. The second part of this Article followeth in my Treatise in this manner.

Acts. 5.

Preaching and Almsgiving be not works indifferent, but duties and commandments.

By this it appareth, that for a Minister to Preach, and a rich Man to give Alms, are not indifferent Works, but Duties and Commandments. Whereby it is further evident, that if the Pope, or any other Ruler of the Church, do command any Minister disposed to Preach, not to Preach, or a rich Man disposed to give Alms, not to give, that they ought not to obey him. And he added moreover, to the intent that you may understand me the better, I call that a pretended Excommunication, the which is unjustly disordered and given forth, contrary to the order of the Law and Gods Commandments. For the which, the meet Minister appointed thereunto, ought not to cease from Preaching, neither yet to fear damnation.

To forbid a Minister to Preach, and to forbid a rich man to give Alms, is both one.

How the Popes Curses are Blessings.

Then they objected unto him, that he had faid, that such kind of Excommunications were rather Blessings. Verily, said John Hus, even so I do now say again, that every Excommunication, by the which a man is unjustly Excommunicate, is unto him a Blessing before God; according to that saying of the Prophet, I will curse where as you bless: and contrariwise, they shall curse, but thou, O Lord, shall bless. Then the Cardinal of Florence, which had always a Notary ready at his hand to write such things as he commanded him, said, The Law is, that every Excommunication, be it never so unjust, ought to be feared. It is true, said John Hus; for I do remember eight Causes, for the which Excommunication ought to be feared. Then said the Cardinal: Are there no more but eight? It may be, said John Hus, that there be more.

The Cardinal of Florence with his Notary. Eight causes why Excommunication ought to be feared.

24. Combray obiecteth.

The twenty fourth Article. Every man which is admitted unto the Ministery of the Church, receiveth also by special commandment the Office of a Preacher, and ought to execute and fulfil that Commandment, notwithstanding any Excommunication pretended to the contrary. The Answer: My words are these. Forsomuch as it doth appear by that which is aforesaid, That whosoever cometh, or is admitted unto the Ministery, receiveth also by especial Commandment the Office of Preaching, he ought to fulfil that Commandment, any Excommunication to the contrary pretended notwithstanding.

A Minister exconimunicated, is more bound to Preach, than to do any other work of mercy, the Popes prohibition notwithstanding.

Cardinal of Cambray obiecteth.

John Hus answereth.

No Christian ought to doubt, but that a man sufficiently instructed in Learning, is more bound to counsel and instruct the ignorant, to teach those which are in doubt, to chastise those which are unruly, and to remit and forgive those that do him Injury, than to do any other works of mercy. Forsomuch then as he that is rich and hath sufficient, is bound under the pain of damnation, to minister and give corporal and bodily Alms, as appeareth in the five and twentieth Chapter of Matthew, How much more is he bound to do Spiritual Alms?

The twenty fifth Article. The Ecclesiastical Censures are Antichristian, such as the Clergy have invented for their own preferment, and for the bondage and servitude of the common people. Whereby if the Laity be not obedient unto the Clergy at their will and pleasure, it doth multiply their covetousness, defendeth their malice, and prepareth a way for Antichrist. Whereby it is an evident sign and token, that such Censures proceed from Antichrist; the which Censures in their Processes they do call Fulminations or Lightnings, whereby the Clergy doth chiefly proceed against such as do manifest and open the wickedness of Antichrist, which thrust themselves into the Office of the Clergy. These things are contained in the last Chapter of his Treatise of the Church. I Answer, and I deny that it was in that form. But the matter thereof is largely handled in the 23d Chapter. And in the Examination of the Audience, they have gathered certain Clauses most contrary thereunto. The which when they had read, the Cardinal of Cambray renewed his old Song, saying; Truly these are much more grievous and offensive, than the Articles which are gathered.

25. Censures of the Popes Church multiply contention. The Popes fruits.

The twenty sixth Article. There ought no interdictment to be appointed unto the People, forsomuch as Christ the high Bishop, neither for John Baptist, neither for any injury that was done unto him, did make any interdictment. My words are these: When as I complained, that for one Ministers sake, an Interdictment was given out, and thereby all good men cease'd from the laud and praise of God. And Christ the high Bishop, notwithstanding that the Prophet was taken and kept in Prison, than whom there was no greater amongst the Children of Men, did not give out any Curse or Interdictment, no not when as Herod beheaded him; neither when as he himself was spoiled, beaten, and blaspheined of the Souldiers, Scribes and Pharisees, did he then curse them, but prayed for them, and taught his Disciples to do the same, as it appeareth in the fifth Chapter of S. Matthew. And Christs first Vicar following the same Doctrine and Learning, saith in his first Epistle of Saint Peter, and the second Chapter, Hereunto are ye called: for Christ hath suffered for us, leaving us an example, that we should follow his footsteps, who when he was cursed and evil spoken of, did not curse again. And Saint Paul following the same order and way in the twelfth Chapter of the Romans, saith, Bless them that persecute you. There were besides these, many other places of Scripture recited in that Book; but they being omitted, these were only rehearsed, which did help or prevail to stir up or move the Judges minds.

26. Christ interdicted none, but prayed for all. 1 Pet. 2. Rom. 12.

And these are the Articles which are alledged out of John Hus his Book, entituled, Of the Church.

Other Articles moreover out of his other Books were collected, and forced against him: First, out of his Treatise written against Steven Paletz, to the number of seven Articles. Also six other Articles strained out of his Treatise against Stanislaus Znoyma. Whereunto his Answers likewise be adjoyned, not unfruitful to be read.

Here followeth seven Articles, which are said to be drawn out of his Treatise which he wrote against Stephen Paletz.

1. Articles drawn out of the Treatise written against Stephen Paletz.

The first Article. If the Pope, Bishop, or Prelate, be in deadly sin, he is then no Pope, Bishop, nor Prelate. The Answer: I grant therento, and I send you unto Saint Augustine, Jerome, Chrysostome, Gregory, Cyprian, and Bernard; the which do say moreover, That whosoever is in deadly sin, is no true Christian, how much less then is he Pope, or Bishop? Of whom it is spoken by the Prophet Amos, in his eighth Chapter, They have reigned and ruled, and not through me; they became Princes, and I knew them not, &c. But afterward I do grant, that a wicked Pope, Bishop, or Priest, is an unworthy Minister of the Sacrament, by whom God doth Baptize, Consecrate, or otherwise work to the profit of his Church; and this is largely handled in the Text of the Book by the Authority of the holy Doctors, for even he which is in deadly sin, is not worthily a King before God, as appeareth in the firſt Book of Kings, the fifteenth Chapter; Whereas God ſaith unto Saul by the Prophet Samuel, ſaying, Forſomuch as thou haſt refuſed and caſt off my word, I will alſo refuſe and caſt thee off, that thou ſhalt be no more King. Whilſt theſe things were thus intreating, the Emperor looking out of a certain Window of the Cloyſter, accompanied with the County Palatine, and the Burgrave of Norenberg, conferring and talking much of John Hus, at length he ſaid, That there was never a worſe or more pernicious Heretick than he. In the mean while, when John Hus had ſpoken theſe Words as touching the unworthy King, by and by the Emperor was called, and he was commanded to repeat thoſe words again; which after that he had done, his duty therein being conſidered, the Emperor anſwered: No man, ſaith he, doth live without fault. Then the Cardinal of Cambray being in a great fury, ſaid, Is it not enough for thee that thou doſt contemn and deſpiſe the Eccleſiaſtical State, and goeſt about by thy Writings and Doctrine to perturb and trouble the ſame, but that now alſo thou wilt attempt to throw Kings out of their State and Dignity? Then Paletz began to alledge the Laws, whereby he would prove that Saul was King, even when thoſe words were ſpoken by Samuel, and therefore that David did forbid that Saul ſhould not be ſlain, not for the holineſs of his life, the which there was none in him, but for the holineſs of his Anointing. And when as John Hus repeated out of S. Cyprian, that he did take upon him the name of Chriſtianity in vain, which did not follow Chriſt in his living: Paletz anſwered, Behold and ſee what a folly is in this Man, which alledgeth thoſe things which make nothing for the purpoſe; for albeit any man be not a true Chriſtian, is he not therefore true Pope, Biſhop, or King? When as theſe are names of Office, and to be a Chriſtian, is a name of merit and deſert; and ſo may any man be a true Pope, Biſhop, or King, although he be no true Chriſtian. Then ſaid John Hus, If Pope John the three and twentieth were a true Pope, wherefore have ye deprived him of his Office? The Emperor anſwered, The Lords of the Council have now lately agreed thereupon, that he was true Pope; but for his notorious and manifeſt evil doings, wherewithal he did offend and trouble the Church of God, and did ſpoil and bring to ruine the power thereof, he is rejected and caſt out of his Office.

The Emperors judgment of John Hus.

The Cardinal of Cambray.

2. The ſecond Article. The grace of Predeſtination is the Bond whereby the body of the Church, and every part and member thereof is firmly knit and joyned unto the Head. The anſwer: I acknowledge this Article to be mine, and it is proved in the Text out of the eighth Chapter of the Romans, Who ſhall ſeparate us from the charity and love of Chriſt, &c? and in the tenth Chapter of John, My ſheep hear my voice; and I know them, and they follow me, and I give them eternal life, neither ſhall they periſh eternally, neither is there any man which ſhall take them out of my hands. This is the knot of the Body of the Church, and of our Spiritual Head Chriſt, underſtanding the Church to be the congregation of the Predeſtinate.

3. The third Article. If the Pope be a wicked man, and ſpecially a Reprobate, then even as Judas the Apoſtle, he is a Devil, a Thief, and the Son of perdition, and not the Head of the holy Militant Church, forſomuch as he is no part or member thereof. The Anſwer: My words are thus, If the Pope be an evil or wicked man, and ſpecially if he be a Reprobate; then even as Judas, ſo is he a Devil, a Thief, and the Son of perdition. How then is he the head of the holy Militant Church? Whereas he is not truly any Member, or part thereof; for if he were a Member of the holy Church, then ſhould he be alſo a Member of Chriſt, and if he were a Member of Chriſt, then ſhould he cleave and ſtick unto Chriſt by the grace of predeſtination and preſent juſtice, and ſhould be one Spirit with God, as the Apoſtle ſaith in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, the ſixth Chapter, Know ye not that your bodies are the members of Chriſt?

4. The fourth Article. An evil Pope or Prelate, or Reprobate is no true Paſtor, but a Thief and a Robber. The Anſwer. The Text of my Book is thus: If he be evil or wicked, then is he a Hireling, of whom Chriſt ſpeaketh, He is no Shepherd, neither are the Sheep his own. Therefore when he ſeeth the Wolf coming, he runneth away and forſaketh the ſheep: and ſo finally doth every wicked and reprobate man. Therefore every ſuch Reprobate, or wicked Pope or Prelate, is no true Paſtor; but a very Thief and a Robber, as is more at large proved in my Book. Then ſaid John Hus, I do ſo limit all things, that ſuch as touching their defert, are not truly and worthily Popes and Shepherds before God, but as touching their office and reputation of men, they are Popes, Paſtors, and Prieſts.

Then a certain Man riſing up behind John Hus, clothed all in Silk, ſaid, My Lords, take heed leſt that John Hus deceive both you and himſelf with theſe his Gloſſes, and look whether theſe thirtgs be in his Book or not; for of late, I had diſputation with him upon theſe Articles, in the which I ſaid, that a wicked Pope, &c. was no Pope, as touching merit and defert, but as touching his Office he was truly Pope. Whereupon he uſed theſe Gloſſes which he had heard of me, and did not take them out of his Book. Then John Hus turning himſelf unto him, ſaid, Did you not hear that it was ſo read out of my Book? and this did eaſily appear in John the twenty third, whether he were true Pope, or a very Thief and Robber. Then the Biſhops and Cardinals looking one upon another, ſaid, That he was a true Pope, and laughed John Hus to ſcorn.

5. The fifth Article. The Pope is not, neither ought to be called according unto his Office, Moſt Holy; for then the King ought alſo to be called Moſt Holy, according to his Office. Alſo the Tormentors, Lictors, and Devils ought alſo to be called Holy. The Anſwer. My words are otherwiſe placed, in this manner; So ought a feigner ſay, that if any man be a moſt holy Father, then he doth moſt holily obſerve and keep his Fatherlineſs: and if he be a naughty and wicked Father, then doth he moſt wickedly keep the ſame. Likewiſe, if the Biſhop be moſt holy, then is he alſo moſt good; and when as he faith, that he is Pope, it is the name of his Office.

Whereupon it followeth, That the man which is Pope, being an evil and reprobate man, is a moſt holy man; and conſequently by that his Office he is moſt good. And forſmuch as no man can be good by his Office, except he do exerciſe and uſe the ſame his Office very well; it followeth, that if the Pope be an evil and reprobate man, he cannot exerciſe or uſe his Office his well. Forſomuch as he cannot uſe the Office well, except he be morally good, Matthew 12. How can you ſpeak good things, when you your ſelves are evil? And immediately after it followeth, If the Pope by reaſon of his Office be called, Moſt Holy, wherefore ſhould not the King of Romans be called Moſt Holy, by reaſon of his Office and Dignity? When as the King, according to S. Auguſtines mind, repreſenteth the Deity and Godhead of Chriſt, and the Prieſt repreſenteth only his Humanity. Wherefore alſo ſhould not Judges, yea, even Tormenters be called Holy, forſomuch as they have their Office by miniſtring unto the Church of Chriſt? Theſe things are more at large diſcourſed in my Book; but I cannot find or know, ſaith John Hus, any Foundation whereby I ſhould call the Pope moſt Holy, when as this is only ſpoken of Chriſt: Thou only art moſt holy: Thou only art the Lord, &c. Should I then truly call the Pope moſt Holy?

6. The ſixth Article. If the Pope live contrary unto Chriſt, albeit he be lawfully and canonically elect and choſen, according to humane election, yet doth he aſcend and come another way than by Chriſt. The Anſwer. The Text is thus: If the Pope live contrary unto Chriſt in pride and avarice, how then doth he not aſcend and come in another way into the Sheepfold, than by the lowly and meek door our Lord Jeſus Chriſt? But admit, as you ſay, that he did aſcend by lawful Election, the which I call an election principally made of God, and not according unto the common and vulgar conſtitution and ordinances of men, yet for all that, it is affirmed and proved, that he ſhould aſcend and come in another way; for Judas Iſcariot was truly and lawfully choſen of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt unto his Biſhoprick, as Chriſt ſaith in the ſixth of John, And yet he came in another way into the ſheepfold, and was a thief, and a devil, and the ſon of perdition. Did he not come in another way? when as our Saviour ſpake thus of him, He that eateth bread with me, ſhall lift up his heel againſt me.

The

The ſame alſo is proved by S. Bernard unto Pope Eugenius. Then ſaid Paletz, Behold the fury and madneſs of this Man; for what more furious or mad thing can there be, than to ſay, Judas is choſen by Chriſt, and notwithſtanding he did aſcend another way, and not by Chriſt? John Hus anſwered, verily both parts are true, that he was elect and choſen by Chriſt, and alſo that he did aſcend, and came in another way, for he was a Thief, a Devil, and the ſon of Perdition. Then ſaid Paletz, Cannot a man be truly and lawfully choſen Pope, or Biſhop, and afterward live contrary unto Chriſt? And that notwithſtanding, he doth not aſcend any other ways. But I, ſaid John Hus, do ſay, that whoſoever doth enter into any Biſhoprick, or like Office by Simony, not to the intent to labor and travel in the Church of God, but rather to live delicately, voluptuouſly and unrighteouſly, and to the intent to advance himſelf with all kind of Pride, every ſuch man aſcendeth and cometh up by another way, and according unto the Goſpel, he is a thief and a robber.

The ſeventh Article. The condemnation of the forty five Articles of John Wickliff made by the Doctors, is unreaſonable and wicked, and the cauſe by them alledged is feigned and untrue; that is to ſay, That none of thoſe Articles are Catholick, but that every of them be either Heretical, Erroneous or Offenſive. The Anſwer: I have written it thus in my Treatiſe; The forty and five Articles are condemned for this cauſe, that none of thoſe forty and five is a Catholick Article, but each of them is either Heretical, Erroneous or Offenſive.

The Cardinal of Cambray.

O Mr. Doctor, where is your proof? you feign a cauſe which you do not prove, &c. as it appeareth more at large in my Treatiſe. Then ſaid the Cardinal of Cambray, John Hus, thou didſt ſay that thou wouldſt not defend any Error of John Wickliffe. And now it appeareth in your Books, that you have openly defended his Articles. John Hus anſwered, Reverend Father, even as I ſaid before, ſo do I now ſay again, that I will not defend any Errors of John Wickliffe, neither of any other mans: but forſomuch as it ſeemed unto me to be againſt Conſcience, ſimply to conſent unto the condemnation of them, no Scripture being alledged or brought contrary and againſt them, thereupon I would not conſent or agree unto the condemnation of them: And foraſmuch as the reaſon which is copulative cannot be verified in every point, according to every part thereof.

Articles drawn out of his Treatiſe written againſt Stanſlaus de Znoyma.

Now there remain ſix Articles of thirty nine. Theſe are ſaid to be drawn out of another Treatiſe which he wrote againſt Stanſlaus de Znoyma.

1. The firſt Article. No man is lawfully elect or choſen, in that the Electors, or the greater part of them, have conſented with a lively voice, according to the cuſtom of men to elect and chuſe any perſon, or that he is thereby the manifeſt and true ſucceſſor of Chriſt, or Vicar of Peter in the Eccleſiaſtical Office, but in that that any man doth moſt abundantly work meritoriouſly to the profit of the Church, he hath thereby more abundant power given him of God thereunto. The Anſwer: Theſe things which follow are alſo written in my Book. It ſtandeth in the power and hands of wicked Electors, to chuſe a Woman into the Eccleſiaſtical office, as it appeareth by the election of Agnes, which was called John, who held and occupied the Popes place and dignity, by the ſpace of two years and more.

It may alſo be, that they do chuſe a Thief, a Murderer or a Devil, and conſequently they may alſo elect and chuſe Antichriſt.

It may alſo be that for love, covetouſneſs, or hatred, they do chuſe ſome perſon whom God doth not allow. And it appeareth that that perſon is not lawfully elect and choſen; Inſomuch as the Electors, or the greater part of them, have conſented and agreed together according to the cuſtom of men, upon any perſon, or that he is thereby the manifeſt Succeſſor or Vicar of Peter the Apoſtle, or any other in the Eccleſiaſtical Office.

Therefore, they which moſt accordingly unto the Scripture do elect and chuſe, revelation being ſet apart, do only pronounce and determine by ſome probable reaſon upon him they do elect and chuſe; whereupon, whether the Electors do ſo chuſe good or evil, we ought to give credit unto the works of him that is choſen; for in that point that any man doth moſt abundantly work meritorioufly to the profit of the Church, he hath thereby more abundant power given him of God thereunto. And hereupon ſaith Chriſt, in John 10. Give credit unto works.

2. The ſecond Article. The Pope being a Reprobate, is not the Head of the holy Church of God. The Anſwer, I wrote it thus in my Treatiſe, that I would willingly receive a probable and effectual reaſon of the Doctor, how this queſtion is contrary to the Faith, to ſay, That if the Pope be a Reprobate, how is he the Head of the Holy Church? Behold, the Truth cannot decay or fail in Diſputation, for did Chriſt diſpute againſt the Faith, when he demanded of the Scribes and Phariſees, Matthew 12. Te ſtock and off-ſpring of vipers, how can ye ſpeak good things, when you your ſelves are wicked and evil? And behold, I demand of the Scribes, if the Pope be a Reprobate, and the ſtock of vipers, how is he the head of the holy Church of God, that the Scribes and Phariſees, (which were in the Council-houſe of Pragues, may make anſwer hereunto? For it is more poſſible that a reprobate man ſhould ſpeak good things, forſomuch as he may be in ſtate of Grace according unto preſent Juſtice, than to be the Head of the holy Church of God.

3. Alſo in the fifth of John, our Saviour complaineth of the Jews, ſaying, How can you believe which do ſeek for glory amongſt your ſelves, and do not ſeek for the glory that cometh only of God? And I likewiſe do complain, how that if the Pope be a Reprobate; can he be the Head of the Church of God, which receiveth his glory of the World, and ſeeketh not for the glory of God? For it is more poſſible, that the Pope being a Reprobate ſhould believe, than that he ſhould be the Head of the Church of God; forſomuch as he taketh his glory of the World.

4. The third Article. There is no ſpark of apparance, that there ought to be one Head in the Spiritualty, to rule the Church, the which ſhould be always converſant with the Militant Church. The Anſwer, I do grant it. For what a conſequence is this. The King of Boheme is head of the Kingdom of Boheme: Ergo, The Pope is Head of the whole Militant Church? Chriſt is the Head of the Spiritualty, ruling and governing the Militant Church by much more and greater neceſſity than Ceſar ought to rule the Temporalty. Forſomuch as Chriſt, which ſitteth on the right Hand of God the Father, doth neceſſarily rule the Militant Church as Head. And there is no ſpark of appearance that there ſhould be one Head in the Spiritualty ruling the Church, that ſhould always be converſant with the Militant Church, except ſome Infidel would heretically affirm, that the Militant Church ſhould have here a permanent and continual City or dwelling place, and not enquire and ſeek after that which is to come. It is alſo farther evident in my Book, how unconſequent the proportion of the ſimilitude is, for a reprobate Pope to be Head of the Militant Church, and a reprobate King to be Head of the Kingdom of Boheme.

5. The fourth Article. Chriſt would better rule his Church by his true Apoſtles, diſperſed throughout the whole World, without ſuch monſtrous Heads. I Anſwer, That it is in my Book as here followeth, that albeit that the Doctor doth ſay, that the body of the Militant Church is oftentimes without a Head; yet notwithſtanding, we do verily believe that Chriſt Jeſus is the Head over every Church, ruling the ſame without lack or default, pouring upon the ſame a continual motion and ſenſe, even unto the later day: Neither can the Doctor give a reaſon why the Church, in the time of Agnes, by the ſpace of two years and five months, lived according to many Members of Chriſt in grace and favor, but that by the ſame reaſon the Church might be without a Head, by the ſpace of many years. Forſomuch as Chriſt ſhould better rule his Church by his true Diſciples diſperſed throughout the whole World, without ſuch monſtrous Heads. Then ſaid they all together, Behold, now he prophecieth. And John Hus again farther proſecuting his former talk, ſaid, But I ſay that the Church in the time of the Apoſtles, was far better ruled and governed than now it is. And what doth let and hinder, that Chriſt ſhould not now alſo rule the ſame better by his true Diſciples, without ſuch monſtrous Heads as have been now a late? For behold, even at this preſent we have no ſuch head, and yet Christ ceaseth not to rule his Church. When he had spoken these words, he was derided and mocked.

5. The fifth Article. Peter was no Universal Pastor or Shepherd of the Sheep of Christ, much less is the Bishop of Rome. The Answer, Those words are not in my Book, but these which do follow. Secondly, It appeareth by the words of Christ, that he did not limit unto Peter for his Jurisdiction the whole World, no not one only Province. So likewise, neither unto any other of the Apostles. Notwithstanding, certain of them walked through many Regions; and othersome fewer, preaching and teaching the Kingdom of God, as Paul, which labored and travelled more than all the rest, did corporally visit and convert most Provinces, whereby it is lawful for any Apostle or his Vicar to convert and confirm as much people, or as many Provinces in the Faith of Christ, as they are able, neither is there any restraint of their Liberty or Jurisdiction, but only by disability or insufficiency.

6. The sixth Article. The Apostles, and other faithful Priests of the Lord, have thoroughly ruled the Church in all things necessary unto salvation, before the Office of the Pope was brought into the Church, and so would they very possibly do still, if there were no Pope even unto the later day. Then they all cried out again and said, Behold the Prophet. But John Hus said, Verily it is true that the Apostles did rule the Church stoutly, before the Office of the Pope was brought into the Church. And certainly a great deal better than it is now ruled. And likewise may other faithful Men which do follow their steps do the same; for as now we have no Pope, and so peradventure it may continue and endure a year or more. Besides this, were brought against him other nineteen Articles, objected unto him being in Prison, which with his Answers to the same here likewise follow. Of the which Articles the first is this.

The first Article. Paul, according unto present Justice, was a Blasphemer and none of the Church, and therewithal was in Grace, according unto Predestination of life everlasting. The Answer: This propositon is not in the Book, but this which followeth: Whereby it doth seem probable, that as Paul was both a Blasphemer, according to present Justice, and therewithal also was a faithful Child of our holy Mother the Church, and in Grace according to Predestination of Life everlasting: So Iscariot was both in Grace, according unto present Justice, and was never of our holy Mother the Church, according to the Predestination of Life everlasting, forsomuch as he lacked that Predestination. And so Iscariot, albeit he was an Apostle, and a Bishop of Christ, which is the name of his Office, yet was he never any part of the Universal Church.

The first Article. Paul how he was both a blasphemer, and also a member of Christ.

The second Article. Predestination. The second Article. Predestinate Man being sinful, than any Reprobate in what grace possible soever he be. The Answer: My words are in the fourth Chapter of my Book intituled of the Church; and it is evident, that God doth more love any predestinate being sinful, than any reprobate in what grace soever he be for the time: forasmuch as he will, that the predestinate shall have perpetual blessedness, and the reprobate to have eternal fire. Wherefore God partly infinitely loving them both as his Creatures, yet he doth more love the predestinate, because he giveth him greater grace, or a greater gift, that is to say, life everlasting, which is greater and more excellent than only grace, according unto present Justice. And the third Article of those Articles before, foundeth much near unto this, That the predestinate cannot fall from grace, for they have a certain radical grace rooted in them, although they be deprived of the abundant grace for a time. These things are true in the compound sense.

The third Article. Who so commiteth deadly sin, feverseth from the Faith. The third Article. All the sinful, according unto present Justice, are not faithful, but do swarve from the true Catholick Faith, forsomuch as it is impossible that any man can commit any deadly sin but in that point, that he doth swarve from the Faith. The Answer: I acknowledge that sentence to be mine, and it appeareth, that if they did think upon the punishment which is to be laid upon sinners, and did fully believe, and had the faith of the Divine Knowledge and Understanding, &c. then undoubtedly they would not so offend and sin. This proposition is verified by the saying of the Prophet Isaiah, Thy rulers are unfaithful, mis-believers, fellows and companions of thieves, they all love bribes and follow after rewards. Behold, the Prophet calleth the Rulers of the Church Infidels for their offences; for all such as do not keep their Faith inviolate unto their principal Lord, are unfaithful servants, and they also are unfaithful children which keep not their obedience, fear, and love unto God their Father. {KING} Isa. 1.

Item, This proposition is verified by the saying of the Apostle, the first Chapter to Titus. They do confess that they know God, but by their works they do deny him. And forasmuch as they which are sinful, do swarve away from the meritorious work of Blessedness, therefore they do swarve from the true Faith grounded upon Charity, forsomuch as Faith without Works is dead. To this end doth also appertain that which the Lord speaketh, Matth. 23. of the faithful and unfaithful servant. Titus 1.

The fourth Article. These words of John in his two and twentieth Chapter, Receive the holy Ghost, and Whatsoever you shall bind upon earth, &c. and Matthew of the sixteenth and eighteenth Chapter, for lack of understanding shall terrifie many Christians, and they shall be wonderfully afraid, and others shall be deceived by them, presuming upon the fulness of their Power and Authority. The Answer: This Sentence I do approve and allow, and therefore I say in the same place, that it is first of all to be supposed, that the Saying of our Saviour is necessary, as touching the vertue of the Word, forasmuch as it is not possible for a Priest to bind and loose, except that binding and loosing be in Heaven. But for the lack of the true understanding of those words, many simple Christians shall be made afraid, thinking with themselves, that whether they be just or unjust, the Priests may at their pleasures, whensoever they will, bind them. And the ignorant Priests do also presume and take upon them to have power to bind and loose whensoever they will. For many foolish and ignorant Priests do say, that they have power and authority to absolve every man confessing himself, of what sin or offence soever it be, not knowing that in many sins it is forbidden them, and that it may happen that an Hypocrite do confess himself, or such a one as is not contrite for his sin, whereof proof hath oftentimes been found and it is evident, forsomuch as the letter doth kill, but the Spirit doth quicken. The fourth Article. The words of Christ for binding and loosing, unless they be well understood, minister too much fear or presumption.

The fifth Article. The binding and loosing of God, is simply and plainly the chief and principal. The Answer: This is evident, forsomuch as it were blasphemous presumption to affirm, That a man may remit and forgive an evil Fact or Offence done against such a Lord, the Lord himself not approving or allowing the same. For by the Universal Power of the Lord, it is necessary that he do first absolve and forgive, before that his Vicar do the same; neither is there one Article of our Faith, which ought to be more common or known unto us, than that it should be impossible for any man of the militant Church to absolve or bind, except in such case as it be conformable to the head of the Church, Jesus Christ. Wherefore every faithful Christian ought to take heed of that saying, If the Pope, or any other, pretend by any manner of sign to bind or loose, that he is thereby bound or loosed; for he that doth grant or confess that, must also consequently grant and confess that the Pope is without sin, and so that he is a God, for otherwise he must needs err and do contrary unto the Keys of Christ. This saying proveth the fact of the Pope, who always in his Absolution presupposeth Contrition and Confession. Yea moreover, if any letter of Absolution be given unto any Offender, which doth not declare the circumstances of the Offence which ought to be declared, it is said that thereby the letter of Absolution is of no force and effect. It is also hereby evident, that many Priests do not absolve those which are confessed, because that either through blamefulness they do cloak or hide greater Offences, or else that they have not due Contrition or Repentance; for unto true Absolution there is first required Contrition. Secondly, A purpose and intent to sin no more. Thirdly, True Confession. And fourthly, stedfast hope of forgiveness. The first appeareth by Ezechiel, If the wicked The fifth Article. Binding and loosing chiefly and principally belong to Christ. The Popes power doing unpossible is not to be feared.

{KING} Ezek. 33. wicked do repent him, &c. The second, in the fifth and eighth of John, Do thou not sin any more. The third part by this place of Luke, Shew your selves unto the Priests. And the fourth is confirmed by the saying of Christ, My son, believe, and thy sins are forgiven thee. I also added many other probations in my Treatise out of the Holy Fathers, Augustine, Jerome, and the matter of the Sentences.

The fifth Article. The Priests do gather and heap up out of the Scriptures those things which serve for the belly, but such as appertain to the true imitation and following of Christ, that they reject, and refuse as impertinent unto salvation. The Answer: This St. Gregory doth sufficiently prove in his seventeenth Homily, alledging the saying of Christ, The harvest is great, the workmen are few; speaking also that which we cannot say without grief or sorrow, that albeit there be a great number which willingly hear good things, yet there lack such as should declare the same unto them; for behold, the World is full of Priests, but notwithstanding there is a scarcity of Workmen in the Harvest of the Lord. We take upon us willingly Priesthood, but we do not fulfil and do the works and office of Priesthood. And immediatly after he saith, We are fallen unto outward affairs and businesses, for we take upon us one Office for honor sake, and we do exhibit and give another to ease our selves of labor. We leave Preaching, and as far as I can perceive we are called Bishops to our pain, which do retain the name of Honor, but not the Verity. The fifth Article. St. Gregorio.

Priests more given to their own lucre and belly, than unto the office of Christ.

And immediately after he saith, We take no care for our Flock, we daily call upon for our stipend and wages, we covet and desire Earthly things with a greedy mind, we gape after Worldly glory, we leave the Cause of God undone, and make haste about our Worldly affairs and businesses: we take upon us the place of Sanctity and Holiness, and we are wholly wrapped in worldly cares and troubles, &c. This writeth Saint Gregory, with many other things more in the same place. Also in his Pastoral, in his Morals, and in his Register. Also Saint Bernard, as in many other places, so likewise in his 33. Sermon upon the Canticles, he saith, All friends, and all enemies, all kinsfolks and adversaries, all of one houshold, and no peace-makers; they are the Ministers of Christ, and serve Antichrist; they go honorably honored with the Goods of the Lord, and yet they do honor, &c. The Seventh Article.

The seventh Article. The power of the Pope, which doth follow Christ, is not to be feared. The Answer: It is not in my Treatise, but contrariwise, that the subjects are bound willingly and gladly to obey the vertuous and good Rulers, and also those which are wicked and evil. But notwithstanding, if the Pope do abuse his power, it is not then to be feared as by bondage. And so the Lords the Cardinals, as I suppose, did not fear the power of Gregory the twelfth before his deposition, when as they resisted him, saying, That he did abuse his Power contrary unto his own Oath.

The eighth Article. The eighth Article. An evil and a wicked Pope is not the successor of Peter, but of Judas. The Answer; I wrote this in my Treatise, If the Pope be humble and meek, neglecting and despising the honors and lucre of the World; if he be a Shepheard, taking his name by the feeding of the Flock of God; of the which feeding the Lord speaketh, saying, Feed my Sheep; if he feed the Sheep with the Word, and with virtuous Example, and that he become even like his Flock with his whole heart and mind; if he do diligently and carefully labor and travel for the Church, then is he without doubt the true Vicar of Christ. But if we walk contrary unto these Vertues, for so much as there is no society between Christ and Belial, and Christ himself saith, He that is not with me, is against me: how is he then the true Vicar of Christ or Peter, and not rather the Vicar of Antichrist? Christ called Peter himself, Satanas, when he did contrary him but only in one word, and that with a good affection, even him whom he had chosen his Vicar, and specially appointed over his Church. Why should not any other then, being more contrary unto Christ, be truly called Satanas, and consequently Antichrist, or at least the chief and principal Minister or Vicar of Antichrist? There be infinite testimonies of this matter in Saint Augustine, S. Jerome, Cyprian, Chrysostome, Bernard, Gregory, Remigius, and Ambrose, &c. The Pope doing contrary to Christ, is not the Vicar of Christ, but Antichrist.

The ninth Article. The Pope is the same Beast of whom it is spoken in the Apocalips, Power is given unto him to make war upon the Saints. The Answer: I deny this Article to be in my Book. The ninth Article. John Hus need not prove this Article, that Pope will prove it himself.

The tenth Article. It is lawful to preach notwithstanding the Popes Inhibition. The Answer: The Article is evident, for so much as the Apostles did preach contrary to the commandment of the Bishops of Jerusalem. And Saint Hilary did the like, contrary to the commandment of the Pope which was an Arrian. It is also manifest by the example of Cardinals, which, contrary unto the commandment of Pope Gregory the twelfth, sent throughout all Realms such as should preach against him. It is also lawful to preach under Appeal, contrary unto the Popes Commandment. And finally, he may preach which hath the commandment of God, whereunto he ought chiefly to obey. The tenth Article. To preach against the Popes commandment.

The eleventh Article. If the Popes commandment be not concordant and agreeable with the Doctrine of the Gospel or the Apostles, it is not to be obeyed. The Answer: I have thus written in my Book. The faithful disciple of Christ ought to weigh and consider, whether the Popes commandment be expreffly and plainly the commandment of Christ or any of his Apostles, or whether it have any foundation or ground in their Doctrine or no; and that being once known or understood, he ought reverently and humbly to obey the same. But if he do certainly know that the Popes commandment is contrary and against the holy Scripture, and hurtful unto the Church; then he ought boldly to resist against it, that he be not partaker of the crime and offence by consenting thereunto. This I have handled at large in my Treatise, and have confirmed it by the authorities of Saint Augustine, Hierome, Gregory, Chrysostome, Bernard, and Bede, and with the holy Scripture and Canons, the which for brevities cause I do here pass over. I will only rehearse the saying of Saint Isidore, who writeth thus, He which doth rule, and doth say or command any thing contrary and besides the will of God, or that which is evidently commanded in the Scriptures, he is honored as a false witness of God, and a Church-robber. Wherefore upon we are bounden to obey no Prelate, but in such cafe as he do command or take counsel of the counsels and commandments of Christ. The eleventh Article. How the Prelates are to be obeyed. Isidor. Concilia præcepta.

Likewise Saint Augustine upon this saying, upon the chair of Moses, &c. saith, Secondly. They teach in the chair of Moses the law of God: Ergo, God teacheth by them: but if they will teach you any of their own Inventions, do not give ear unto them, neither do as they command you. Also in the saying of Christ, He that heareth you, heareth me, all lawful and honest things be comprehended, in the which we ought to be obedient, according to Christs saying, It is not you which do speak, but the Spirit of my Father which speaketh in you. Let therefore my adversaries and flanderers learn, that there be not only twelve Councils in the Gospel, in the which subjects ought to obey Christ and his appointed Ministers, but that there are so many counsels and determinations of God, as there be lawful & honest things joyned with precepts and commandments of God, binding us thereunto under the pain of deadly sins for every such thing doth the Lord command us to fulfil in time and place, with other circumstances, at the will and pleasure of their Minister.

The twelfth Article. It is lawful for the Clergy and Laity, by their Power and Jurisdiction to judge and determine of all things pertaining unto Salvation, and also of the works of the Prelates. The Answer: I have thus written in my Book, That it is lawful for the Clergy and Laity to judge and determine of the works of their Heads and Rulers. It appeareth by this, that the judgment of the secret Counsels of God, in the Court of Conscience is one thing, and the judgment of the Authority and Power in the Church is another. Wherefore Subjects first ought principally to judge and examine themselves, 1 Corinthians the eleventh Chapter. Secondly, They ought to examine all things which pertain unto their salvation, for a Spiritual Man judgeth and examineth all things. And this is alledged as touching the first Judgment, and not the second, as the enemy doth impute it unto me. Whereupon in the same place I do say, that the Lay-man ought to judge and examine the works of The twelfth Article. The Clergy and Laity may judge of the works of their Prelates. Judgment double.

To true Absolution four things are requisite.

his Prelate, like as Paul doth judge the doings of Peter in blaming him. Secondly, to avoid them according to this saying, Beware of false Prophets, &c. Thirdly, to rule over the Ministry: For the subject ought by reason to judge and examine the works of the Prelates. And if they be good, to praise God therefore and rejoyce: But if they be evil, they ought with patience to suffer them, and to be sorry for them, but not to do the like, lest they be damned with them, according to this saying, If the blind lead the blind, both fall into the ditch.

Secret in the Court of Conscience. Open in the Court of Audacity.

The thirteenth Article. To Godward all wicked Ministers be suspended.

The thirteenth Article. God doth suspend of himself every wicked Prelate from his Ministery, while he is actually in Sin, for by that means that he is in deadly sin, he doth offend and sin whatsoever he do, and consequently is forbidden so to do; therefore also is he suspended from his Ministry. The answer, This is proved as touching suspension from Dignity, by Hoseæ the fourth Chapter, and Isaiah, and Malachy the first. And Paul in the first to the Corinthians, the eleventh Chapter, suspendeth all such as be sinful, or in any grievous Crime or Offence, from the eating of the Body of the Lord, and the drinking of his Blood, and consequently suspendeth all sinful Prelates from the ministration of the reverend Sacrament. And God doth suspend the wicked and sinful from the declaration of his righteousness, Psalm 49. Forasmuch then as to suspend in effect, is to prohibit the Ministry, or any other good thing for the offence sake; or as the new Laws do determine or call it, to interdict, forbid: It is manifest by the Scriptures afore rehearsed, that God doth prohibit the sinful, being in sin, to exercise or use their Ministry or Office, which by Gods commandment ought to be exercised without offence. Whereupon he saith by Isaiah the Prophet, Ye that carry the vessels of the Lord, be ye cleansed and made clean. And to the Corinthians it is said, Let all things be done with love and charity, &c. The same thing also is commanded by divers and sundry Canons, the which I have alledged in my Treatise.

The fourteenth Article. The lay-people supplanted by the Clergy.

The fourteenth Article. The answer which he made to the five and twentieth Article in Prison, sufficeth for this, that is to say, That the Clergy for their own preferment and exaltation, do supplant and undermine the lay-people, do increase and multiply their covetousness, cloke and defend their malice and wickedness, and prepare a way for Antichrist.

The fifteenth Article. The dishonesty of such as withered false accusations against Jo. Hus.

The fift part he proveth by experience, by the example of Peter de Luna, which named himself Benedict, by the example of Angelus Coriarius, which named himself Gregory the Twelfth; and also by the Example of John the Three and twentieth; likewise by the thirteenth and twenty fourth of Ezekiel, and out of Gregory, which saith, What shall become of the Flock, when the Shepheards themselves are become Wolves, &c. Also out of Hoseæ, Michah, and other of the Prophets, and many places of S. Bernard.

The second part is proved by the eighth Chapter of Jeremiah, Gregory in his seventeenth Homily, and S. Bernard upon the Canticles.

The third part of this Article is also proved by experience; for who defendeth the wickedness of any Schism but only the Clergy, alledging Scriptures, and bringing reasons therefore? Who excuseth Symony, but only the Clergy? likewise Covetousness, in heaping together many Benefices, Luxuriousness and Fornication? For how many of the Clergy are there now a days which do say, it is no deadly sin, alledging (albeit disorderly) the saying of Genesis, Increase and multiply?

Hereby also is the fourth part of the Article easily verified. For the way of Antichrist is wickedness and sin, of the which the Apostle speaketh to the Thessalonians: Gregory in his Register, Pastoral and Morals; also S. Bernard upon the Canticles plainly saith, Wicked and evil Priests prepare the way for Antichrist.

The fifteenth Article. John Hus doth openly teach and affirm, that these Conclusions aforesaid are true. The answer is manifest by that which I have afore written. For some of these Propositions I did write and publish, otherwhiles some mine enemy did feign, now adding, then diminishing and taking away, now falsly ascribing and imputing the whole Proposition unto me, the which thing the Commissioners themselves did confess before me. Whom I desired, for the false invention and feigning of those Articles, that they would punish those whom they themselves knew and confessed to be mine Enemies.

The sixteenth Article. Hereby also it appeareth, that it is not true which they have affirmed in the Article following; that is to say, That all the aforesaid Conclusions be false, erroneous, seditious, and such as do weaken and make feeble the power and strength of the Church, invented contrary to the holy Scriptures and the Church. But if there be any such, I am ready most humbly to revoke and recant the same.

The seventeenth Article. There was also an objection made against me as touching the Treatises which I wrote against Paletz and Stanislaus de Znoyma. The which I desired for Gods sake they might be openly read in the audience of the whole Council, and said, that I, notwithstanding my former protestation, would willingly submit my self to the judgment of the whole Council.

The eighteenth Article. There was also another Article objected against me in this form. Item, John Hus said and preached, that he should go to Constance, and if so be that for any manner of cause he should be forced to recant that he had before taught, yet notwithstanding he never purposed to do it with his mind; forasmuch as whatsoever he had before taught, was pure and true, and the found Doctrine of Christ. The Answer; This Article is full of lies, to the Inventer whereof I suppose the Lord saith thus, All the day long thou hast imagined mischief and wickedness, and with thy tongue, as with a sharp razor, thou hast wrought deceit: thou hast delighted and loved rather to talk of wickedness and mischief, than of equity and justice. Verily I do grant, that I left behind me a certain Epistle to be read unto the people, the which did contain, that all such as did weigh and consider my careful Labors and Travels, should pray for me, and stedfastly preserve and continue in the Doctrine of our Lord Jesus Christ, knowing for a certainty, that I never taught them any such Errors as mine enemies do impute or ascribe unto me; and if it should happen that I were overcome by false Witnesses, they should not be vexed or troubled in their minds, but stedfastly continue in the Truth.

The seventh Article. The eighteenth Article.

The nineteenth Article. Last it was objected against me, That after I was come into Constance, I did write unto the Kingdom of Bohemia, that the Pope and the Emperor received me honorably, and sent unto me two Bishops to make agreement between me and them; and that this seemeth to be written by me to this end and purpose, that they should confirm and establish me and my hearers in the Errors which I had Preached and Taught in Bohemia. This Article is falsly alledged, even from the beginning. For how manifestly false should I have written, that the Pope and the Emperor did honor me, when as otherwise I had written before, that as yet we knew not where the Emperor was? And before the Emperor himself came unto Constance, I was by the space of three Weeks in Prison. And to write that I was honored by my Imprisonment, the People of the Kingdom of Bohemia would repute the honor as no great renown and glory unto me. Howbeit, mine enemies may in derision say unto me, That according to their wills and pleasures I am exalted and honored. Wherefore this Article is wholly throughout false and untrue.

The eighteenth Article.

The nineteenth Article.

Unto these Articles above prehixed, were other Articles also to be annexed, which the Parisians had drawn out against Mr. John Hus, to the number of nineteen. The chief Author whereof, was John Gerson, Chancellor of the University of Paris, a great setter on of the Pope against good men. Of these Articles John Hus doth often complain in his Epistles, that he had no time nor space to make answer unto them. Which Articles being falsly collected and wrongfully depraved, although J. Hus had no time to answer unto them, yet I thought it not unfit here to set them down for the Reader to see and judge.

Nineteen Articles drawn out by the Parisians & exhibit false Item. John Gerson Chancellor of Paris.

¶ Articles formerly contained or picked out of the Treatise of John Hus of Prague, which he instituted of the Church, following in this part or behalf the errors, as they term them, of John Wickliffe.

1. THe first Article. No reprobate is true Pope, Lord, or Prelate. The Error is in the faith, and behavior, and manners

{KING} {Hen. 5.} manners, being both of late and many times before condemned, as well against the poor men of Lions, as also against the Waldenses and Pikards. The affirmation of which Error is temerarious, seditious, offensive and pernitious, and tending to the subversion of all humane Policy and Governance, forasmuch as no man knoweth whether he be worthy of love or hatred, for that all men do offend in many points, and thereby should all rule and dominion be made uncertain and unstable, if it should be founded upon Predestination and Charity: neither should the commandment of Peter have been good, which willeth all servants to be obedient unto their Masters and Lords, although they be wicked.

2. The second Article. That no man being in deadly sin, whereby he is no member of Christ, but of the Devil, is true Pope, Prelate, Lord. The Error of this is like unto the first.

3. The third Article. No reprobate or otherwise being in deadly sin, sitteth in the Apostolick Seat of Peter, neither hath any Apostolical power over the Christian people. This Error is also like unto the first.

4. The fourth Article. No reprobates are of the Church, neither likewise any which do not follow the life of Christ. This Error is against the common understanding of the Doctors, concerning the Church.

5. The fifth Article. They only are of the Church, and sit in Peters Seat, and have Apostolick power which follow Christ and his Apostles in their life and living. The Error hereof is in faith and manners, as in the first Article, but containing more arrogancy and rathness.

6. The sixth Article. That every man which liveth uprightly, according to the rule of Christ, may and ought openly to preach and teach, although he be not sent, yea, although he forbidden or excommunicated by any Prelate or Bishop, even as he might and ought to give Alms; for his good life in living together with his Learning, doth sufficiently send him.

This is a rash and temerarious Error, offensive, and tending to the confusion of the whole Ecclesiastical Hierarchy.

7. The seventh Article. That the Pope of Rome being contrary unto Christ, is not the universal Bishop, neither hath the Church of Rome any Supremacy over other Churches, except peradventure it be given unto him of Cæsar, and not of Christ. An Error lately and plainly reproved.

8. The eighth Article. That the Pope ought not to be called most Holy, neither that his Feet are holy and blessed, or that they ought to be kissed. This Error is temerarious, unreverently and offensively published.

9. The ninth Article. That according unto the Doctrine of Christ, Heretics, be they never so obstinate or stubborn, ought not to be put to death, neither to be accursed or excommunicated. This is the Error of the Donatists, temerariously, and not without great offence affirmed against the Laws of the Ecclesiastical Discipline, as St. Augustine doth prove.

10. The tenth Article. That subjects and the common people, may and ought publickly and openly to detect and reprove the vices of their Superiors and Rulers, as having power given them of Christ, and example of S. Paul so to do. This Error is pernicious, full of offence, inducing all Rebellion, Disobedience and Sedition, and the curse and malediction of Cham.

11. The eleventh Article. That Christ only is head of the Church, and not the Pope. It is an Error according unto the common understanding of the Doctors, if all the reason of the Supremacy, and of being head, be secluded and taken away from the Pope.

12. The twelfth Article. That the only Church, which comprehendeth the predestinate and good Livers, is the Universal Church, whereunto Subjects do owe obedience. And this is consequent unto the former Article. The Error is contained as in the former Articles.

13. The thirteenth Article. That Tithes and Oblations given to the Church, are publick and common Alms. This Error is offensive, and contrary to the determination of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 9.

14. The fourteenth Article. That the Clergy living wickedly, ought to be reproved and corrected by the Laypeople, by the taking away of their Tithes and other Temporal Profits. A most pernicious Error and offensive, inducing the Secular people to perpetrate Sacriledge, subverting the Ecclesiastical Liberty.

The fifteenth Article. That the Blessings of such as are reprobate or evil livers of the Clergy, are maledictions and cursings before God, according to the saying, I will curse your blessings. This Error was lately reproved of S. Augustine, against S. Cyprian and his followers. neither is the Matter of the Sentences allowed of the Masters in that point that he seemeth to favor this Article. 15.

The sixteenth Article. That in these days, and in long time before, there hath been no true Pope, no true Church or Faith, which is called the Romish Church, whereunto a Man ought to obey, but that it both was, and is the Synagogue of Antichrist and Satan. The Error in this Article is in this Point, That it is derived, and taketh his foundation upon the former Articles. 16.

The seventeenth Article. That all gift of money given unto the Ministers of the Church, for the ministration of any Spiritual matter, doth make such Ministers in that case uters of Simony. This Error is seditious and temerarious, forasmuch as something may be given unto the Clergy, under the Title of sustentation or maintaining the Minister, without the selling or buying of any Spiritual thing. 17.

The eighteenth Article. That whosoever is Excommunicate of the Pope, if he appeal to Christ, he is preserved that he need not fear the Excommunication, but may utterly contemn and despise the same. This Error is temerarious and full of arrogancy. 18.

The nineteenth Article. That every deed done without Charity, is sin. This Error was reproved and revoked before this time at Paris. Specially if it be understood of deadly Sin; for it is not necessary that he which lacketh Grace, should continually sin and offend anew, albeit he be continually in sin. 19.

This following, the Masters of Paris, by their whole voice and consent, did add and adjoyn unto these nineteen Articles, for their reason and determination.

WE affirm. That these Articles aforesaid are notoriously Heretical, and that they are Judicially condemned for such, and diligently to be rooted out with their most seditious Doctrines. left they do infect other. For albeit they seem to have a Zeal against the Vices of the Prelates and the Clergy, the which (the more is the pity and grief) do but too much abound, yet is it not according unto Learning; for a sober and discreet Zeal, suffereth and lamenteth those sins and offences, which he seeth in the House of God, that he cannot amend or take away; for Vices cannot be rooted out and taken away by other Vices and Errors, forasmuch as Devils are not cast out through Beelzebub, but by the power of God, which is the Holy Ghost, who willeth, that in Correction the measure and mean of prudence be always kept, according to the saying, Mark who, what, where and why, by what means and when, Prelates and Bishops are bound, under grievous and expresse penalties of the Law, diligently and vigilantly to bear themselves against the foresaid Errors, and such other like, and the maintainers of them; for let it always be understood and noted, that the Error which is not resisted is allowed, neither is there any doubt of privy affinity or society of him, which slacketh to withstand a manifest mischief.

These things are intermedled by the way under correction, as by way of Doctrine.

John Gerson Chancellor of Paris, unworthily.

THese things thus declared, a man may easily understand, that John Hus was not accused for holding any opinion contrary to the Articles of our Faith, but because he did stoutly preach and teach against the Kingdom of Antichrist for the glory of Christ, and the restoring of the Church.

The words of the Cardinal of Cambray unto John Hus after his accusation.

Now to return unto the Story: when as the first thirty nine Articles, which I have before rehearsed, were all read over together with their Testimonies, the Cardinal of Cambray calling unto John Hus, said, Thou hast heard heard what grievous and horrible crimes are laid againſt thee, and what number of them they are; and now it is thy part to deviſe with thy ſelf what thou wilt do. Two ways are propouned and ſet before thee of the Council, whereof the one of them thou muſt of force and neceſſity enter into.

A double Inconvenience for John Hus to fall into.

Firſt, That thou do humbly and meekly ſubmit thy ſelf unto the judgment and ſentence of the Council, that whatſoever ſhall be there determined, by their common voice and judgment, thou wilt patiently bear, and ſuffer the ſame. The which thing if thou wilt do, we of our part, both for the honor of the moſt gentle Emperor here preſent, and alſo for the honor of his Brother the King of Bohemes, and for thy own ſafeguard and preſervation, will intreat and handle thee with as great humanity, love and gentleneſs, as we may. But if as yet thou art determined to defend any of thoſe Articles which we have propounded unto thee, and doſt delire or require to be further heard thereupon, we will not deny thee power and license thereunto: But this thou ſhalt well underſtand, that here are ſuch manner of men, ſo clear in underſtanding and knowledge, and having ſo firm and ſtrong reaſons and arguments againſt thy Articles, that I fear it will be to thy great hurt, detriment and peril, if thou ſhouldeſt any longer will or delire to defend the ſame.

This I do ſpeak and ſay unto thee, to counſel and admonith thee, and not as in manner of a Judge.

This Oration of the Cardinals many others proſecuting, every man for himſelf did exhort and perſwade John Hus to the like; unto whom, with a lowly countenance he anſwered, Moſt reverend Fathers, I have often ſaid, that I came hither of mine own free will, not to the intent obſtinately to defend any thing, but if that in any thing I ſhould ſeem to have conceived a perverſe or evil opinion, that I would meekly and patiently be content to be reformed and taught. Whereupon I delire that I may have yet further liberty to declare my mind. Whereof, except I ſhall alledge moſt firm and ſtrong reaſons, I will willingly ſubmit my ſelf (as you require) unto your information.

John Hus anſwereth.

Then there ſtart up one which with a loud voice ſaid, Behold, how craftily this man ſpeaketh: He tearmeth it information, and not correction or determination. Verily ſaid John Hus, even as you will tearm it, information, correction or determination: for I take God to my witneſs, that I ſpeak nothing but with my heart and mind.

The Cardinal of Cambray ſpeaketh John Hus certain conditions whereby he may be delivered.

Then ſaid the Cardinal of Cambray; foraſmuch then as thou doſt ſubmit thy ſelf unto the information and grace of this Council, this is decreed by almoſt threeſcore Doctors, whereof ſome of them are now departed hence, in whoſe room and place the Parifians are ſucceeded; and alſo it is approved by the whole Council, not one man ſpeaking the contrary thereunto.

Firſt of all, That thou ſhalt humbly and meekly confeſs thy ſelf to have erred in theſe Articles which are alledged and brought againſt thee.

Moreover, That thou ſhalt promiſe by an Oath, that from henceforth thou ſhalt not teach, hold or maintain any of theſe Articles. And laſt of all, that thou ſhalt openly recant all theſe Articles.

The anſwer of John Hus.

Upon the which Sentence, when as many others had ſpoken their minds, at the length John Hus ſaid, I once again do ſay, that I am ready to ſubmit my ſelf to the Information of the Council; but this I moſt humbly require and deſire you all, even for his ſake, which is the God of us all, That I be not compelled or forced to do the thing which my Conſcience doth repugn or ſtrive againſt, or the which I cannot do without danger of eternal Damnation, that is, that I ſhould make revocation by Oath to all the Articles which are alledged againſt me. For I remember, that I have read in the Book of Univerſalities, That to abjure, is to renounce an Error which a man hath before holden. And foraſmuch as many of theſe Articles are ſaid to be mine, which were never in my mind or thought to hold or teach, how ſhould I then renounce them by an Oath? But as touching thoſe Articles which are mine indeed, if there be any man which can teach me contrariwiſe unto them, I will willingly perform that which you deſire.

The Emperor exhorteth John Hus to recant.

Then ſaid the Emperor, Why mayeſt not thou without danger alſo renounce all thoſe Articles which thou ſayeſt are falſly alledged againſt thee by the Witneſſes? For I verily would nothing at all doubt to abjure all Errors, neither doth it follow that therefore by and by I have profeſſed any Error. To whom John Hus anſwered: Moſt noble Emperor, this word to abjure, doth ſignifie much otherwiſe than your Majeſty doth here uſe it. Then ſaid the Cardinal of Florence, John Hus, you ſhall have a form of Abjuration, which ſhall be gentle, and tolerable enough, written and delivered unto you, and then you will eaſily and ſoon determine with your ſelf, whether you will do it or no: Then the Emperor, repeating again the words of the Cardinal of Cambray, ſaid, Thou haſt heard that there are two ways laid before thee: Firſt, That thou ſhouldeſt openly renounce thoſe thy Errors, which are now condemned, and ſubſcribe unto the judgment of the Council, whereby thou ſhouldeſt try and find their grace and favor. But if thou proceed to defend thy Opinions, the Council ſhall have ſufficient, whereby according to their Laws and Ordinances, they may decree and determine upon thee. To whom John Hus anſwered, I refuſe nothing (moſt noble Emperor) whatſoever the Council ſhall decree or determine upon me. Only this one thing I except, that I do not offend God and my conſcience, or ſay that I have profeſſed thoſe Errors which was never in my mind or thought to profeſs. But I deſire you all, if it may be poſſible, that you will grant me further liberty to declare my mind and opinion, that I may anſwer as much as ſhall ſuffice, as touching thoſe things which are objected againſt me, and ſpecially concerning Eccleſiaſtical Offices, and the ſtate of the Miniſtery.

The Emperor exhorteth John Hus to recant.

But when as other men began to ſpeak, the Emperor himſelf began to ſing the ſame Song which he had ſung before. Thou art of lawful age, ſaid the Emperor, thou mighteſt eaſily have underſtood what I ſaid unto thee yeſterday, and this day; for we are forced to give credit unto theſe Witneſſes which are worthy of credit, foraſmuch as the Scripture ſaith, Thus in the mouth of two or three witneſſes all truth is tryed: how much more then, by ſo many witneſſes of ſuch worthy men?

The force of falſe witneſs.

The Emperor to John Hus.

Wherefore if thou be wiſe, receive penance at the hands of the Council with a contrite heart, and renounce thy manifeſt Errors, and promiſe by an Oath, that from henceforth thou wilt never more teach or preach them. The which if thou refuſeſt to do, there are Laws and Ordinances whereby thou ſhalt be judged of the Council.

An old Biſhop of Pole.

Here a certain very old Biſhop of Pole put to his verdict. He ſaid, the Laws are evident as touching Hereticks, with what puniſhment they ought to be puniſhed. But John Hus conſtantly anſwered as before, inſomuch that they ſaid he was obſtinate and ſtubborn. Then a certain well fed Prieſt, and gaily apparelled, cryed out unto the Preſidents of the Council, ſaying, he ought by no means to be admitted to recantation, for he hath written unto his Friends, That although he do ſwear with his tongue, yet he will keep his mind unſworn without Oath; wherefore he is not to be truſted. Unto this ſlander John Hus anſwered, as is ſaid in the laſt Article, affirming that he was not guilty of any Error.

Objection of a Prieſt better fed than taught.

Then ſaid Paletz, to what end is this Proteſtation, foraſmuch as thou ſayeſt that thou wilt defend no Error, neither yet Wickliffs, and yet doſt defend him? When he had ſpoken theſe words, he brought forth for witneſs nine Articles of John Wickliff's, and read them openly, and afterward he ſaid, When as I and Mr. Stanſlaus, in the preſence of Erneſtus of Auſtrich, Duke of Prague, preached againſt them, he obſtinately defended the ſame, not only by his Sermons, but alſo by his Books which he ſet forth. The which, except you do here exhibit, we will cauſe them to be exhibited. So ſaid the Emperor alſo. Unto whom John Hus anſwered, I am very well contented that not only thoſe, but alſo all other my Books, be brought forth and ſhewed.

Paletz againſt John Hus.

A new heap of ſlanders.

In the mean time there was exhibited unto the Council a certain Article, wherein John Hus was accuſed, that he had ſlanderouſly interpreted a certain Sentence of the Popes: the which he denyed that he did, ſaying, That he never ſaw it but in Priſon, when as the Article was ſhewed him by the Commiſſioners. And when he was demanded who was the Author thereof; he anſwered, that he knew not, but that he heard ſay that Mr. Jeſſenius was the Author thereof.

What

{KING} {Hiſt. 5.} John Hus ſweateth faint and weary.

What (ſaid they) then do you think or judge of the interpretation thereof? Then anſwered John Hus, what ſhould I ſay thereunto, when as I ſaid I never ſaw it, but as I have heard of it of you. Thus they were all ſo grievous and troubleſome unto him that he waxed faint and weary, for he had paſſed all the night before without ſleep, through the pain of his Teeth.

Another quarrel againſt John Hus, touching three men beheaded at Prague. Vide ſupra.

Then was there another Article read, in the which was contained, That three men were beheaded at Prague, becauſe that through Wickliffs Doctrine and Teaching they were contumelious and ſlanderous againſt the Popes Lectors: and that they were by the ſame Hus, with the whole pomp of the Scholars, and with a publick Convocation or Congregation carried out to be buried, and by a publick Sermon placed among the number of Saints. And the ſame Dr. Naſo, of whom you have heard certain teſtimonies already recited, affirmed the ſame to be true, and that he himſelf was preſent, when as the King of Bohemia commanded thoſe Blaſphemers ſo to be puniſhed.

The Emperor recanſeth the Cardinal of Cambray words.

John Hus lied.

Then ſaid John Hus, both thoſe parts are falſe, that the King did command any ſuch puniſhment to be done, and that the Coarſes were by me conveyed with any ſuch pomp unto their Sepulture or Burial: wherefore you do injury both unto me and the King. Then Paletz confirmed the aſſertion of Dr. Naſo his Fellow, with this argument (for they both labored to one end and purpoſe) That it was provided by the Kings commandment, that no man ſhould once ſpeak againſt the Popes Bulls: And theſe three ſpake againſt the Popes Bulls: Ergo, by vertue of the Kings commandment they were beheaded. And what John Hus his opinion and mind was as touching theſe men, it is evident enough by his Book entituled, Of the Church, wherein he writeth thus: I believe they have read Daniel the Prophet, where, as is ſaid, And they ſhall periſh with ſword and fire, and with captivity, and many ſhall fraudulently and craftily aſſociate themſelves unto them. And afterward he ſaith, how this is fulfilled in theſe two Law-men, who not conſenting, but ſpeaking againſt the feigned lies of Antichriſt, have offered their lives therefore, and many other were ready to do the ſame, and many were fraudulently aſſociate unto them, which being feared by the threatnings of Antichriſt, are fled, and have turned their backs, &c.

Ex parte affirmatives non conſtitit argum. to a ſpare.

When theſe things were read, one looking upon another, as though they had been all in a marvellous ſtrange ſtudy, they held their peace for a certain ſpace. For this Paletz, and the foreſaid Doctor Naſo had alſo added, that John Hus in an open Sermon had inflamed and ſtirred up the people againſt the Magiſtrates, inſomuch that a great number of the Citizens did openly ſet themſelves againſt the Magiſtrates; and by that means was it, that he ſaid, Thoſe three were ready to ſuffer death for the Truth. And this ſedition was hardly appeaſed by any benefit or help that the King could do. Then the Engliſh-men exhibited the Copy of a certain Epiſtle, which they ſaid was falſly conveyed unto Prague, under the title of the Univerſity of Oxford, and that John Hus did read the ſame out of the Pulpit unto the people, that he might commend and praiſe John Wickliff unto the Citizens of Prague. When they had read the ſame before the Council, the Engliſh-men demanded of John Hus, whether he had read the ſame openly or no. Which when he had confeſſed, becauſe it was brought thither by two Scholars under the Seal of the Univerſity; they alſo inquired of him, what Scholars they were. He anſwered, this my Friend (meaning Stephen Paletz) knoweth the one of them as well as I, the other I know not what he was.

Another quarrel picked by Engliſhmen againſt John Hus.

The teſtimonial of Oxford for Wickliff brought to Prague.

A piece of the bone of Wickliff ſo ſolemnly brought for a Relick to Prague.

Then they firſt enquired of him, as touching the laſt man, where he was. John Hus anſwered, I heard ſay (ſaid he) that in his return into England he died by the way. As touching the firſt, Paletz ſaid, That he was a Bohemian and no Engliſh-man, and that he brought out of England a certain ſmall piece of the Stone of Wickliffs Sepulchre, which they that are the followers of his Doctrine at this preſent, do reverence and worſhip as a thing moſt holy. Hereby it appeareth for what intent all theſe things were done, and that John Hus was the Author of them all.

Then the Engliſh-men exhibited another Epiſtle, contrary to the firſt, under the Seal of the Univerſity, the effect and argument whereof was this: The Senate of the

The Emperors Oratſ on to the Preſidents of the Council.

University, not without great ſorrow and grief, hath experimented and found, That the Errors of Wickliff are ſcattered and ſpread out of that Univerſity throughout all England. And to the intent that through their help and labor means may be found to remedy this miſchief, they have appointed for that purpoſe twelve Doctors, Men of ſingular Learning, and other Maſters, which ſhould ſit in judgment upon the Books of Wickliff.

The Oath of Paletz.

Theſe Men have noted out above the number of two hundred Articles, the which the whole Univerſity have judged worthy to be burnt; but for the reverence of the ſaid Sacred Councell, the ſaid Univerſity hath ſent them unto Conſtance, referring and remitting the whole Authority of the Judgement unto this Councell.

Here was great ſilence kept for a while. Then Paletz riſing up, as though he had finiſhed now his Accuſation, ſaid, I take God to my witneſs before the Emperors Majeſty here preſent, and the moſt reverend Fathers, Cardinals and Biſhops, that in this accuſation of John Hus, I have not uſed any hatred or evil will; but that I might ſatisfie the Oath which I took when I was made Doctor, that I would be a moſt cruel and ſharp Enemy of all manner of Errors, for the profit and commodity of the holy Catholick Church. Michael de Canſis did alſo the like. And I, ſaid John Hus, do commit all theſe things unto the Heavenly Judge, which ſhall juſtly judge the cauſe or quarrels of both Parties. Then ſaid the Cardinal of Cambray, I cannot a little commend and praiſe the humanity and gentleneſs of Mr. Paletz, which he hath uſed in drawing out the Articles againſt Mr John Hus. For as we have heard, there are many things contained in his Book much worſe and more deteſtable.

The Oath of Michael de Canſis. John Hus witneſſeth the Lord.

When he had ſpoken theſe words, the Biſhop of Rygen, unto whom John Hus was committed, commanded, that the ſaid John Hus ſhould be carried again ſafely unto Priſon. Then John de Clum following him, did not a little incourage and comfort him. No tongue can expreſs what courage and ſtomach he received by the ſhort talk which he had with him; when as in ſo great a broil and grievous hatred, he ſaw himſelf in a manner forſaken of all men. After that John Hus was carried away, the Emperor began to exhort the Preſidents of the Council in this manner, ſaying, John de Clum doth comfort John Hus.

YOu have heard the manifold and grievous crimes which are laid againſt John Hus, which are not only proved by manifeſt and ſtrong witneſſes, but alſo confeſſed by him; of the which, every one of them by my judgment and advice, have deſerved and are worthy of death. Therefore except he do recant them all, I judge and think meet that he be puniſhed with Fire. And albeit he do that which he is willed and commanded to do; notwithſtanding I do counſel you, that he be forbid the office of Preaching and Teaching, and alſo that he return no more into the Kingdom of Boheme: For if he be admitted again to Teach and Preach, and ſpecially in the Kingdom of Boheme, he will not obſerve and keep that which he is commanded, but, hoping upon the favour and good will of ſuch as be his adherents and fautors there, he will return again unto his former purpoſe and intent, and then, beſides theſe Errors, he will alſo ſow new Errors amongſt the People: ſo the laſt Error ſhall be worſe than the firſt.

That which God plants, that never root ups.

Moreover, I judge and think it good, that his Articles which are condemned, ſhould be ſent unto my Brother the King of Boheme, and afterward into Pole and other Provinces; whereas mens minds are replenished with his Doctrine, with this commandment, That whoſoever do proceed to hold or keep the ſame, they ſhould by the common aid both of the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Power, be puniſhed. So at the length ſhall remedy be found for this miſchief, if the boughs, together with the root, be utterly rooted and pulled up: and if the Biſhops and other Prelates, which here in this place have labored and travelled for the extirpating of this Hereſie, be commended by the whole voices of the Council unto the King and Princes, under whoſe Dominion they are. Laſt of all, if there be any found here at Conſtance, which are Familiars unto John Hus, they alſo ought to be puniſhed with ſuch ſeverity and puniſhment as is due unto them, and ſpecially his Scholar Jerome of Prague. Then ſaid the firſt, when the Maſter is once puniſhed, we hope we ſhall find the Scholar much more tractable and gentle.

Hieronie of Prague mentioned and commended by the Emperor.

After

After they had spoken these words, they departed out of the Cloyster, where they were assembled and gathered together. The day before his Condemnation, which was the sixth of July, the Emperor Sigismund sent unto him four Bishops, accompanied with Mr. Wencelaie de Dudas, and John de Clum, that they should learn and understand of him what he did intend to do. When as he was brought out of Prison unto them, John de Clum began first to speak unto him, saying,

Four Bishops sent to John Hus.

The pitiful and loving Oration of John de Clum unto John Hus.

MAfter J. Hus, I am a man unlearned, neither am I able to counsel or advertise you, being a man of learning and understanding: notwithstanding I do require you, if you know your self guilty of any of those Errors, which are objected and laid against you before the Council, that you will not be ashamed to alter and change your mind to the will and pleasure of the Council; if contrariwise, I will be no Author unto you, that you should do any thing contrary, or against your Conscience, but rather to suffer and endure any kind of punishment, than to deny that which you have known to be the Truth. Unto whom John Hus turning himself, with lamentable Tears said; Verily, as before I have oftentimes done, I do take the most High God for my witness, that I am ready with my heart and mind, if the Council can instruct or teach me any better by the Holy Scripture, and I will be ready with all my whole heart to alter and change my purpose. Then one of the Bishops which sat by, said unto him, that he would never be so arrogant or proud, that he would prefer his own Mind or Opinion before the judgment of the whole Council. To whom John Hus answered, neither do I otherwise mind or intend. For if so which is the meanest or least in all this Council can convict me of Error, I will with an humble heart and mind perform, and do whatsoever the Council shall require of me. Mark, said the Bishops, how obstinately he doth persevere in his Errors. And when they had thus talked, they commanded the Keepers to carry him again to Prison, and so they returned again unto the Emperor with their Commission.

The marvellous constancy of John Hus.

That is no right modesty that more regardeth to obey man, than manifest verity. John Hus answereth.

The next day after, which was Saturday, and the sixth day of July, there was a General Session holden of the Princes and Lords, both of the Ecclesiastical and Temporal Estates, in the head Church of the City of Constance, the Emperor Sigismond being President in his Imperial Robes and Habit; in the midst whereof there was made a certain high Place, being square about like a Table, and hard by it there was a Desk of wood, upon the which the Garments and Vestments pertaining unto Priesthood were laid for this cause, that before John Hus should be delivered over unto the Civil Power, he should be openly deprived and spoiled of his Priestly Ornaments. When John Hus was brought thither, he fell down upon his knees before the same high Place, and prayed a long time. In the mean while the Bishop of Londy went up into the Pulpit, and made this Sermon following.

The Sermon of the Bishop of Londy, before the Sentence was given upon John Hus.

The Sermon before the Sentence.

'IN the Name of the Father, the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Trusting by humble Invocation upon the 'Divine help and aid, most noble Prince, and most Chri'stian Emperor, and you most excellent Fathers, and re-
'verend Lords, Bishops and Prelates, also most excellent
'Doctors and Masters, famous and noble Dukes, and high
'Counts, honorable Nobles and Barons, and all other
'men worthy of remembrance; that the intent and pur-
'pose of my mind may the more plainly and evidently
'appear unto this most Sacred Congregation: I am first 'of all determined to intreat or speak of that which is
'read in the Epistle on the next Sunday, in the sixth
The Theme 'Chapter to the Romans; That is to say, Let the body of 'sin be destroyed, &c.

His Theme confirmed by Aristotle.

'It appeareth by the Authority of Aristotle, in his 'Book entituled, De cœlo & mundo, how wicked, dange'rous and foolish a matter it seemeth to be, not to with'stand perverse and wicked beginnings. For he saith,
'That a small Error in the beginning, is very great in the 'end. It is very damnable and dangerous to have er-
'red, but more hard to be corrected or amended. Where-
'upon that worthy Doctor S. Jerome, in his Book upon
'the Exposition of the Catholick Faith, teacheth how ne'cessary a thing it is that Hereticks and Heresies should be 'suppressed, even at the first beginning of them, saying
'thus; The rotten and dead flesh is to be cut off from the 'body, lest that the whole body do perish and putrifie. For
'a scabbed Sheep is to be put out of the Fold, lest that the 'whole Flock be infected. And a little Fire is to be quench-
'ed, lest the whole House be consumed and burned. Ar-
'rius was first a spark in Alexandria, who because he was 'not at the first quenched, he presumed, and went about
'with his wicked and perverse imaginations, and phanta-
'stical inventions, to spot and defile the Catholick Faith,
'which is founded and established by Christ, defended with
'the victorious triumphs of so many Martyrs, & illuminate
'and set forth with the excellent doctrines and writings of 'so many men. Such therefore must be resisted; such He-
'reticks of necessity must be suppressed and condemned.

'Wherefore I have truly propounded, as touching
'the punishment of every such obstinate Heretick, that the 'body of sin is to be destroyed. Whereupon it is to be con'sidered according to the holy Traditions of the Fathers,
'that some sins are adverse and contrary unto another.
'Othersome are annexed or conjoyned together; other-
'some are, as it were, branches and members of others;
'and some are, as it were, the roots and heads of others.
'Amongst all which, those are to be counted the most detes-
'table, out of which the most and worst have their ori'ginal and beginning. Wherefore, albeit that all sins
'and offences are to be abhorred of us; yet those are
'specially to be eschewed, which are the head and root
'of the rest. For by how much the perverseness of them
'is of more force and power to hurt, with so much the 'more speed and circumspection ought they to be rooted
'out and extinguished, with apt preservatives and re-
'medies. Forsomuch then as amongst all sins, none doth
'more appear to be inveterate than the mischief of this
'most execrable Schism, therefore have I right well
'propounded, That the body of sin should be destroy-
'ed. For by the long continuance of this Schism, great
'and most cruel destruction is sprung up amongst the 'Faithful, and hath long continued; abominable Divi-
'sions of Heresies are grown; Threatnings are increased
'and multiplyed; the confusion of the whole Clergy is 'grown thereupon, and the Opprobries and Slanders of 'the Christian people, are abundantly sprung up and in'creased: And truly it is no marvel, forsomuch as that
'most detestable and execrable Schism, is, as it were, a
'body and heap of dissolution of the true Faith of God:
'for what can be good or holy in that place, whereas
'such a pestiferous Schism hath raigned so long a time?
'For as Saint Bernard saith, Like as in the unity and 'concord of the Faithful, there is the Habitation and
'Dwelling of the Lord; so likewise in the Schism and
'dissipation of the Christians, there is made the habita-
'tion and dwelling of the Devil. Is not Schism and di-
'vision the original of all subversion, the den of Here-
'sies, and the nourisher of all Offences? For the knot
'of Unity and Peace being once troubled and broken,
'there is free passage made for all strife and debate. Co-
'vetousness is uttered in others for lucres sake; Lust and
'Will is set at liberty, and all means opened unto slaugh-
'ter. All Right and Equity is banished, the Ecclesiasti-
'cal power is injured, and the calamity of this Schism
'bringeth in all kind of Bondage, sword and violence
'doth Rule, the Laity have the dominion, Concord and
'Unity are banished, and all prescript Rules of Religion
'utterly contemned and set at naught.

They encourage the Laity to rule in any case.

All the Popish Religion lieth in Lands, Lordships, and Livelihoods.

'Consider, most gentle Lords, during this most pesti-
'ferous Schism, how many Heresies have appeared and
'shewed themselves, how many Hereticks have escaped
'unpunished, how many Churches have been spoiled and
'pulled down, how many Cities have been oppressed,
'and Regions brought to ruine, what confusion hath
'there happened in the Clergy? What and how great de'struction hath been amongst the Christian people?
'I pray you mark how the Church of GOD, the
'the Spouse of Christ, and the Mother of all Faithful,
'is contemned and despised. For who doth reverence the 'Keys of the Church, who feareth the Censures or Laws,
'or who is it that doth defend the Liberties thereof?

But

{KING. Mat. 5.}

Note here the Popes liberality, how the blood of Christians run together, that their patrimony.

'But rather who is it that doth not offend the same, or 'who doth not invade it, or else what is he that dare not
'violently lay hands upon the Patrimony or Heritage of 'Jesus Christ? The Goods of the Clergy, and of the 'poor, and the relief of Pilgrims and Strangers, gotten 'together by the blood of our Saviour, and of many
'Martyrs, are spoiled and taken away: behold, the abo-
'mination of desolation brought upon the Church of 'GOD, the destruction of the Faith, and the confusion
'of the Christian people, to the ruine of the Lords Flock
'or Fold, and all the whole company of our most holy
'Saviour and Redeemer. This lofs is more great or
'grievous than any which could happen unto the Mar-
'tyrs of Christ, and this Persecution much more cruel,
'than the Persecution of any Tyrant; for they did but 'only punish the Bodies, but in the Schism and Division
'the Souls are tormented. There the blood of Men was 'only shed, but in this case the true Faith is subverted
'and overthrown. That Persecution was salvation unto
'many; but this Schism is destruction unto all men.
'When the Tyrants raged, then the Faith did increase;
'but by this Division it is utterly decayed. During their
'cruelty and madness, the Primitive Church increased;
'but through this Schism it is confounded and over-
'thrown. Tyrants did ignorantly offend, but in this
'Schism many do wittingly and willingly even of obsti-
'nacy offend. There came in Hereticks, users of Simony,
'and Hypocrites, to the great detriment and deceit of the 'Church; under those Tyrants, the merits of the Just were 'increased.

'But during this Schism, mischief and wickedness
'are augmented: for in this most cursed and execrable
'Division, Truth is made an enemy to all Christians,
'Faith is not regarded, Love and Charity hated, Hope is
'lost, Justice overthrown, no kind of courage or vali-
'antness, but only unto mischief: Modesty and Tempe-
'rance cloked, Wisdom turned into deceit, Humility feign-
'ed, Equity and Truth falsified, Patience utterly fled,
'Conscience small, all Wickedness intended, Devotion
'counted folly, Gentleness abject and cast away, Religion
'despised, Obedience not regarded, and all manner of 'Life reproachful and abominable. With how great and 'grievous sorrows is the Church of God replenished and
'filled, whilst that Tyrants do oppress it, Hereticks in-
'vade it, users of Simony do spoil and rob it, and Schis-
This Schism continued 40 years. 'maticks go about utterly to subvert it? O most misera-
'ble and wretched Christian people, whom now by the 'space of forty years, with such indurate and continual
'Schism, they have tormented, and almost brought to
'ruine! O the little Bark and Ship of Christ, which 'hath so long time wandred and strayed now in the midst
'of the Whirl-pools, and by and by ticketh fast in the 'Rocks, tossed to and fro with most grievous and tem-
'pestuous Storms! O miserable and wretched Boat of 'Peter, if the most Holy Father would suffer thee to 'sink or drown, into what dangers and perils have
'the Wicked Pirats brought thee? Amongst what Rocks
'have they placed thee? O most Godly and loving 'Christians, what faithful devout Man is there, which 'beholding and seeing the great ruine and decay of the 'Church, would not be provoked unto Tears? What 'good Conscience is there that can refrain Weeping?
He diverteth up the Emperor Sigismund. 'because that Contention and Strife is poured upon
'the Ecclesiastical Rulers, which have made us to err
'in the way, because they have not found, or rather
'would not find the way of Unity and Concord: Where-
'upon so many Heresies, and so great Confusion is sprung
'up, and grown in the Flock of Peter, and the Fold of the 'Lord.

'Many Princes, Kings and Prelates, have greatly la-
'bored and travelled for the rooting out hereof; but yet
'could they never bring to pass, or finish that most whol-
'some and necessary Work. Wherefore most Christian
'King, this most glorious and triumphant Victory hath
'tarried only for thee, the Crown and Glory thereof
'shall be thine for ever, and this most happy Victory shall
'be continually celebrate to thy great Honor and Praise,
'that thou hast restored again the Church which was so
'spoiled, thou hast removed and put away all inveterate
'and overgrown Schisms and Divisions, thou hast trod-
'den down users of Simony, and rooted out all Here-
'ticks. Dost thou not behold and see how great, per'petual and famous Renown and Glory it will be unto 'thee? For what can be more Just, what more Holy,
'what Better, what more to be Desired; or final'ly, what can be more acceptable, than to root out this
'wicked and abominable Schism, to restore the Church
'again unto her Ancient Liberty, to extinguith and put 'away all Simony, and to condemn and destroy all Er-
'rors and Heresies from amongst the Flock of the Faith'ful? Nothing truly can be better, nothing more holy,
'nothing more profitable for the whole World; and fi'nally, nothing more acceptable unto God. For the 'performance of which most Holy and Godly Work,
'thou wast elect and chosen of God, thou wast first de-
'puted and chosen in Heaven, before thou wast elect and 'chosen upon Earth. Thou wast first appointed by the 'Celestial and Heavenly Prince, before the Electors of 'the Empire did elect or choose thee, and specially, that
'by the Imperial Force and Power, thou shouldest con-
'demn and destroy those Errors and Heresies, which we 'have presently in hand to be condemned and subvert-
'ed. To the performance of this most holy Work, God
'hath given unto thee the knowledge and understanding
'of his Divine Truth and Verity, power of Princely Ma-
'jesty, and the just judgment of Equity and Righteouf-
'ness, as the Highest himself doth say: I have gi'ven thee Understanding and Wisdom, to speak and ut-
'ter my words, and have set thee to rule over Nations
'and Kingdoms, that thou shouldest help the People,
'pluck down and destroy Iniquity, and by exercising of 'Justice thou shouldst, I say, destroy all Errors and He-
'resies, and specially this obstinate Heretick here present,
'through whose Wickedness and Mischief, many places
'of the World are infected with most pestilent and here-
'tical Poyson, and by this means and occasion almost ut-
'terly subverted and destroyed. This most holy and god-
'ly labor, O most noble Prince, was reserved only for thee,
'upon thee it doth only lie, unto whom the whole rule and
'ministration of Justice is given. Wherefore thou hast ela-
'blished thy praise and renown, even by the mouths of 'Infants and sucking Babes, for thy praises shall be cele'brate for evermore, that thou hast destroyed and over'thrown such and so great enemies of the Faith. The
'which that thou mayest prosperously and happily perform
'and bring to pass, our Lord Jesus vouchsafe to grant thee
'his grace and help, who is blessed for ever and ever. Amen.

Leviticus vehementer detestabitur eos alienos.

Note the vile flattery of these Papists, whom they would have any thing of the Emperor for their purpose.

* When this Sermon was thus ended, the Proctor of the Council rising up, named Henricus de Piro, required, that the Proceſs of the Cauſe againſt John Hus might be continued, and that they might proceed unto the definitive Sentence. Then a certain Bishop, which was appointed one of the Judges, declared the Proceſs of the Cauſe, which was pleaded long ſince in the Court of Rome, and elſewhere, between John Hus and the Prelates of Prague.

The Proctor of the Council calleth for the Sentence.

At the laſt he repeated thoſe Articles which we have before remembred; amongſt the which he rehearſed alſo one Article, That John Hus ſhould Teach the two Natures of the Godhead and Manhood to be one Chriſt. John Hus went about briefly with a word or two to anſwer every of them; but as often as he was about to ſpeak, the Cardinal of Cambray commanded him to hold his peace, ſaying, Hereafter you ſhall anſwer all together, if you will. Then ſaid John Hus, How can I at once anſwer all theſe things which are alledged againſt me, when as I cannot remember them all? Then ſaid the Cardinal of Florence, We have heard thee ſufficiently. But when as John Hus for all that would not hold his peace, they ſent the Officers which ſhould force him thereunto. Then began he to intreat, pray, and beſeech them, that they would hear him, that ſuch as were preſent might not credit or believe thoſe things to be true which were reported of him. But when all this would nothing prevail, he kneeling down upon his knees, committed the whole matter unto God, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, for at their hands he believed eaſily to obtain that which he deſired.

The Cardinal of Cambray commanded John Hus to keep ſilence.

John Hus could not be heard by the Council.

John Hus committeth his cauſe to the Lord Chriſt.

When the Articles abovelaid were ended, laſt of all there was added a notable Blaſphemy, which they alſo impured imputed to John Hus, that is, That he said there should be a fourth Person in Divinity, and that a certain Doctor did bear him speak of the same. When John Hus delivered that the Doctor might be named, the Bishop that alleadged the Article, said, That it was not needful to name him. Then said John Hus, O miserable and wretched man that I am, which am forced and compelled to bear such a blasphemy and slander.

Mark the unhandsomeness of them to feign what they lift. John Hus again slandered.

23. The Council doth call it Heretical to appeal to Christ.

Afterward the Article was repeated, how he appealed unto Christ, and that by name was called Heretical. Whereunto John Hus answered, O Lord Jesus Christ, whose word is openly condemned here in this Council, unto thee again I do appeal; which when thou wast evil intreated of thine enemies, diddest appeal unto God thy Father, committing thy cause unto a most just Judge, that by thy Example, we also being oppressed with manifest Wrongs and Injuries, should flee unto thee. Last of all the Article was rehearsed, as touching the contempt of the Excommunication by John Hus. Whereunto he answered as before, that he was excused by his Advocates in the Court of Rome, wherefore he did not appear when he was cited; and also that it may be proved by the Acts, that the Excommunication was not ratified; and finally, to the intent he might clear himself of obstinacy, he was for that cause come unto Constance, under the Emperors safe Conduct. When he had spoken these words, one of them which was appointed Judge, read the definitive Sentence against him, which followeth thus word for word.

Contempt of the Popes excommunication laid to John Hus.

The Sentence or Judgment of the Council of Constance against John Hus.

The sentence against John Hus.

THe most Holy and Sacred General Council of Constance, being congregate and gathered together, representing the Catholick Church, for a perpetual Memory of the thing, as the Verity and Truth did witness, An evil Tree bringeth forth evil Fruit; hereupon it cometh, that the man of most damnable memory, John Wickliff, through his pestiferous Doctrine, not through Jesus Christ by the Gospel; as the Holy Fathers in times past have begotten faithful Children, but contrary unto the wholsome Faith of Jesus Christ, as a most venomous root, hath begotten many pestilent and wicked Children, whom he hath left behind him, Succesfors and Followers of his perverse and wicked Doctrine, against whom this Sacred Synod of Constance is forced to rise up, as against bastards and unlawful children, and with diligent care, with the sharp knife of the Ecclesiastical Authority, to cut up their Errors out of the Lords field, as most hurtful Brambles and Bryers, lest they should grow to the hurt and detriment of others.

Forsomuch then as in the holy General Council, lately celebrated and holden at Rome, it was Decreed, That the Doctrine of John Wickliff, of most damnable memory, should be condemned, and that his Books which contained the same Doctrine, should be burned as Heretical, and this Decree was approved and confirmed by the Sacred Authority of the whole Council; nevertheless, one John Hus here personally present in this Sacred Council, not the Disciple of Christ, but of John Wickliff, an Arch-heretick, after, and contrary or against the Condemnation and Decree hath Taught, Preached and affirmed the Articles of Wickliff, which were condemned by the Church of God, and in times past by certain most Reverend Fathers in Christ, Lords, Archbishops, and Bishops, of divers Kingdoms and Realms, Masters of Divinity of divers Universities; especially resisting in his open Sermons, and also with his Adherents and Complices in the Schools, the condemnation of the said Articles of Wickliffs, oftentimes published in the said University of Prague, and hath declared him the said Wickliff, for the favor and commendation of his Doctrine, before the whole multitude of the Clergy and People, to be a Catholick Man, and a true Evangelical Doctor. He hath also published and affirmed certain and many of his Articles, worthily condemned to be Catholick, the which are notoriously contained in the Books of the said John Hus.

Wherefore, after diligent deliberation and full information first had upon the premises by the Reverend Fathers and Lords in Christ of the holy Church of Rome, Cardinals, Patriarchs, Archbishops, Bishops, and other Prelates, Doctors of Divinity, and of both Laws, in great number assembled and gathered together, this most Sacred and holy Council of Constance, declareth and determineth the Articles abovesaid (the which after due conference had, are found in his Books written with his own hand, the which also the said John Hus in open audience, before this holy Council, hath confessed to be in his Books) not to be Catholick, neither worthy to be taught, but that many of them are Erroneous, some of them wicked, othersome offensive to godly ears, many of them temerarious and seditious, and the greater part of them notoriously Heretical, and even now of late by the holy Fathers and general Councils reproved and condemned. And forsomuch as the said Articles are expressly contained in the Books of the said John Hus, therefore this said * Sacred Council doth condemn and reprove all those Books which he wrote, in what form or phrase soever they be, or whether they be translated by others, and doth determine and decree, That they all shall be solemnly and openly burned in the presence of the Clergy and People of the City of Constance, and elsewhere; adding moreover for the premises, That all his Doctrine is worthy to be despised and eschewed of all faithful Christians. And to the intent this moft pernicious and wicked Doctrine may be utterly excluded and shut out of the Church, this sacred Synod doth straitly command, that diligent Inquisition be made by the Ordinaries of the places by the Ecclesiastical censure, for such Treatises and Works, and that such as are found be consumed and burned with fire. And if there be any found, which shall contemn or despise this Sentence or Decree, this sacred Synod Ordaineth and decreeth, That the Ordinaries of the places, and the Inquisitors of Heresies, shall proceed against every such person as suspect of Heresie.

They condemn the Books written in the Bohemian-Tongue which they never read.

* The said previous sentence.

Wherefore, after due inquisition made against the said John Hus, and full information had by the Commissaries and Doctors of both Laws, and also by the sayings of the witnesses which were worthy of credit, and many other things openly read before the said John Hus, and before the Fathers and Prelates of this sacred Council (by the which Allegations of the witnesses, it appeareth, that the said John Hus hath taught many evil and offensive, seditious and perilloss Heresies, and hath preached the same by a long time) this moft sacred and holy Synod, lawfully congregate and gathered together in the Holy Ghoft, the name of Christ being invocate and called upon, by this their Sentence which here is set forth in writing, determineth, pronounceth, declareth, and decreeth, that J. Hus was and is a true and manifest Heretick, and that he hath preached openly Errors and Heresies lately condemned by the Church of God, and many seditious, temerarious and offensive things to no small offence of the Divine Majesty, and of the Universal Church, and detriment of the Catholick Faith and Church, neglecting and despiting the Keys of the Church, and Ecclesiastical Censures. In the which his Error, he hath continued with a mind altogether indurate and hardened by the space of many years, much offending the faithful Christians by his obstinacy and stubbornefs, when as he made his Appeal unto the Lord Jesus Christ, as the moft High Judge, omitting and leaving all Ecclesiastical means. In the which his Appeal he alledgeth many false, injurious, and offensive matters, in contempt of the Apostolick See, and the Ecclesiastical Censures and Keys.

Many shall come in my name, and shall deceive many. Mark 13.

The Appeal to Christ is derogatory to the Popes Holiness.

Whereupon, both for the premises and many other things, the said Synod pronounceth John Hus to be an Heretick, and judgeth him by these Presents to be condemned and judged as an Heretick; and reproveth the said Appeal as injurious, offensive, and done in derision unto the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, and judgeth the said Hus not only to have seduced the Christian people by his Writings and Preachings, and specially in the Kingdom of Boheme, neither to have been a true Preacher of the Gospel of Christ unto the said people, according to the exposition of the holy Doctors; but also to have been a Seducer of them, and also an obstinate and stiffnecked person, yea and such an one as doth not desire to return return again to the lap of our Holy Mother the Church, neither to abjure the Errors and Heresies which he hath openly preached and defended. Wherefore this moft sacred Council Decreeth and declareth, that the said John Hus shall be famously depofed and degraded from his priestly Orders and Dignity, &c.

Verily condemned for Heretick.

KING Hen. 5.

John Hus clareth himself of obstinacy.

¶. Whileft these things were thus read, John Hus, albeit he were forbidden to speak, notwithstanding did often interrupt them, and specially when he was reproved of obstinacy, he said with a loud voice: I was never obstinate, but as always heretofore, even so now again I desire to be taught by the Holy Scriptures, and I do profess my self to be so desirous of the truth, that if I might by one only word subvert the Errors of all Hereticks, I would not refuse to enter into what peril or danger soever it were. When his Books were condemned, he said, Wherefore have you condemned those Books, when as you have not proved by any one Article, that they are contrary to the Scriptures, or Articles of Faith? And moreover what injury is this that you do to me, that you have condemned these Books written in the Bohemian-Tongue, which you never saw, neither yet read? And oftentimes looking up unto Heaven he prayed.

His prayers for his enemies.

When the sentence and judgment was ended, kneeling down upon his knees, he said, Lord Jesus Christ, forgive mine Enemies, by whom thou knowest that I am falsly accused, and that they have used false witness and slanders against me; forgive them I say, for thy great mercies sake. This his Prayer and Oration the greater part, and specially the chief of the Priests, did deride and mock.

John Hus commanded to put on the Priests garments.

At the laft, the feven Bishops which were chosen out to degrade him of his Priesthood commanded him to put on the Garments pertaining unto Priesthood, which thing when he had done, until he came to the putting on of the Albe, he called to his remembrance the white Vesture which Herod put on Jesus Christ to mock him withal. So likewise in all other things he did comfort himself by the example of Christ. When he had now put on all his Priestly Vestures, the Bishops exhorted him that he should yet alter and change his mind and purpose, and provide for his honour and safegard, Then he (according as the manner of the ceremony is) going up to the top of the Scaffold, being full of tears, spake unto the people in this fort.

John Hus his oration unto the people.

These Lords and Bishops do exhort and counsel me, that I should here confess before you all that I have erred; the which thing to do, if it were such as might be done with the infamy and reproach of Man only, they might peradventure easily perswade me thereunto; but now truly I am in the sight of the Lord my God, without whose great ignominy and grudg of mine own conscience, I can by no means do that which they require of me. For I do well know, that I never taught any of those things which they have fally alledged against me, but I have always preached, taught, written and thought contrary thereunto. With what countenance then should I behold the Heaven? With what face should I look upon them whom I have taught, whereof there is a great number, if through me it should come to pass that those things, which they have hitherto known to be most certain and sure, should now be made uncertain? Should I by this my example astonish or trouble so many souls, so many consciences, indued with the most firm and certain knowledge of the Scriptures and Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ and his most pure Doctrine, armed against all the assauls of Satan? I will never do it, neither commit any such kind of offence, that I should seem more to esteem this vile Carcase appointed unto death, than their health and salvation. At this most godly word he was forced again to bear, by the consent of the Bishops, that he did obstinately and maliciously persevere in his pernicious and wicked errors.

Then he was commanded to come down to the execution of his judgment, and in his coming down, one of the seven Bishops afore rehearsed, first took away the Chalice from him which he held in his hand, saying, O cursed Judas, why hast thou forsaken the council and ways of peace, and hast counselled with the Jews? We take away from thee this Chalice of thy salvation. But John Hus received this Curse in this manner: But I trust unto God the Father omnipotent, and my Lord Jesus Christ, for whose sake I do suffer these things, that he will not take away the Chalice of his redemption, but have a stedfast and firm hope that this day I shall drink thereof in his Kingdom. Then followed the other Bishops in order, which every one of them took away the vestments from him which they had put on, each one of them giving him their Curse. Whereunto John Hus answered, That he did willingly embrace and bear those blasphemies for the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. At the laft they came to the razing of his shavert Crown. But before the Bishops would go in hand with it, there was a great contention between them, with what Instrument it should be done, with a Rasor or with a pair of Shears.

The degrading of John Hus.

In the mean season, John Hus turning himself toward the Emperor, said, I marvel that forsomuch as they be all of like cruel mind and stomach, yet they cannot agree upon their kind of cruelty. Notwithstanding, at the laft they agreed to cut off the skin of the Crown of his Head with a pair of Shears. And when they had done that, they added these words, Now hath the Church taken away all her ornaments and priviledges from him. Now there resteth nothing else, but that he be delivered over unto the secular power. But before they did that, there yet remained another knack of reproach. For they caused to be made a certain Crown of Paper, almoft a Cubit deep, in the which were Painted three Divels of wonderful ugly shape, and this title fet over their heads, Heresiarcha. The which when he saw, he faid, My Lord Jesus Christ for my sake did wear a Crown of Thorns; why should not I then for his sake again wear this light Crown, be it never so ignominious? Truly I will do it, and that willingly. When it was fet upon his Head, The Bishop faid, Now we commit thy Soul unto the Divel. But I, faid John Hus (lifting his eyes up towards the Heavens) do commit my Spirit into thy hands, O Lord Jesus Christ, unto thee I commend my Spirit which thou hast redeemed. These contumelious opprobries thus ended, the Bishops turning themselves towards the Emperor, faid, This moft sacred Synod of Constance leaveth now John Hus, which hath no more any Office, or to do in the Church of God, unto the civil judgment and power. Then the Emperor commanded Ludovicus Duke of Bavaria, which ftood before him in his Robes, holding the golden Apple with the Crofs in his Hand, that he ftould receive John Hus of the Bishops, and deliver him unto them which ftould do the execution. By whom as he was led to the place of execution, before the Church doors he saw his Books burning, whereat he fmiled and laughed. And all men that paffed by he exhorted, not to think that he ftould die for any Error or Herefie, but only for the hatred and ill will of his adverfaries, which had charged him with moft falfe and unjuft Crimes. All the whole City in manner being in Armor, followed him.

The words of John Hus unto the Emperor.

The Crown of John Hus pared away with Shears.

The marvellous constancy and courage of the blessed Martyrs.

The paper with the Inscription fet upon Hufes head.

The place appointed for the execution was before the Gate Gotlebian, between the Gardens and Grates of the Suburbs. When as John Hus was come thither, kneeling down upon his knees, and lifting his eyes up unto Heaven, he prayed, and faid certain Pfalms, and fpecially the 31. and 50 Pfalms. And they which ftood hard by, heard him oftentimes in his Prayer, with a merry and cheerful countenance, repeat this verfe, Into thy hands, O Lord I commend my spirit, &c. Which thing when the Lay-people beheld which ftood next unto him, they faid, What hath he done afore, we know not, but now we see and hear that he doth speak and pray very devoutly and godly. Otherfome wifhed that he had a Confeffor. There was a certain Prieft by, fitting on Horfeback, in a green Gown, drawn about with red filk, which faid, He ought not to be heard, because he is an Heretick. Yet notwithftanding, whileft he was in prifon, he was both confeffed, and alfo abfolved by a certain Doctor, a Monk, as Hus himfelf doth witneſs in a certain Epiftle which he wrote unto his friends out of prifon. Thus Chrift Reigneth unknown unto the world, even in the midft of his Enemies. In the mean time whileft he prayed, as he bowed his neck backward to look upward unto Heaven, the Crown of Paper fell off from his head upon the ground. Then one of the Souldiers taking it up again, faid, let us put it again upon his head, that he may be burned with his Maifters the Divels, whom he hath ſerved.

The progreſs of John Hus's death liked of the people.

Fo. Biln. Fasc. Rer.

The paper with Divels fell from his head.

At the prayer of John Hus the paper with the Divels fell down.

When as by the commandment of the Tormentors he was risen up from the place of his prayer, with a loud voice he said, Lord Jesus Christ assist and help me, that with a constant and patient mind, by thy most gracious help, I may bear and suffer this cruel and ignominious death, whereunto I am condemned for the Preaching of thy most Holy Gospel and Word. Then, as before, he declared the cause of his death unto the people. In the mean season the Hang-man stripped him of his Garments, and turning his hands behind his back, tied him fast unto the Stake with Ropes that were made wet. And whereas by chance he was turned towards the East, certain cried out that he should not look towards the East, for he was an Heretick: So he was turned towards the West. Then was his Neck tied with a Chain unto the Stake, the which Chain when he beheld, smiling he said, That he would willingly receive the same Chain for Jesus Christs sake, who, he knew, was bound with a far worse Chain. Under his feet they set two Fagots, admixing straw withal, and so likewise from the Feet up to the Chin he was inclosed in round about with wood. But before the wood was set on fire, Ludovicus Duke of Bavaria, with another Gentleman with him, which was the Son of Clement, came and exhorted John Hus, that he would yet be mindful of his Safeguard, and renounce his errors. To whom he said, What error should I renounce, when as I know my self guilty of none? For as for those things which are falsly alledged against me, I know that I never did so much as once think them, much less Preach them. For this was the principal end and purpose of my Doctrine, that I might teach all Men penance and remission of sins, according to the verity of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and the exposition of the Holy Doctors: wherefore with a cheerful mind and courage I am here ready to suffer death. When he had spoken these words, they left him, and shaking hands together, they departed.

The description of the burning of John Hus, contrary to the safe conduct granted unto him.

The Martyrdom of blessed John Hus.

Then was the Fire kindled, and John Hus began to sing with a loud voice, Jesus Christ the Son of the living God have mercy upon me. And when he began to say the same the third time, the Wind drove the flame so upon his Face, that it choked him. Yet notwithstanding he moved a while after, by the space that a Man might almost say three times the Lords Prayer. When all the wood was burned and consumed, the upper part of the Body was left hanging in the Chain, the which they threw down (take and all, and making a new fire, burned it, the Head being first cut in small gobbets, that it might the sooner be consumed unto Ashes. The Heart, which was found amongst the bowels, being well beaten with Staves and Clubs, was at last pricked upon a sharp Stick, and Rosted at a Fire apart until it was consumed. Then with great diligence gathering the Ashes together, they cast them into the River of Rbene, that the least remnant of the Ashes of that Man should not be left upon the Earth, whose memory notwithstanding cannot be abolished out of the minds of the godly, neither by Fire, neither by Water, neither by any kind of Torment.

Cruelous in the sight of God is the death of his Saints.

The Heart of John Hus beaten with Staves, and consumed with fire.

The ashes of John Hus cast into the River of Rbene.

¶ I know very well that these things are very slenderly written of me as touching the labours of this most Holy Martyr John Hus, with whom the labours of Hercules are not to be compared. For that ancient Hercules slew a few Monsters; but this our Hercules with a most stout and valiant courage, hath subdued even the world it self, the Mother of all Monsters and cruel Beasts. This Story were worthy some other kind of more curious handling; but forsomuch as I cannot otherwise perform it my self, I have endeavoured according to the very truth, as the thing was indeed, to commend the same unto all godly minds: neither have I heard it reported by others, but I my self was present at the doing of all these things, and as I was able, I have put them in writing, that by this my labour and endeavour, howsoever it were, I might preserve the memory of this holy Man and excellent Doctor of the Evangelical truth.

The Author and witness of this Story.

What was the name of this Author which wrote this Story it is not here expressed. Cochleus in his second Book contra Hussitas, supposeth his name to be Johannes Pizibram, a Bohemian. Who afterward succeeding in the place of John Hus at Prague, at last is thought to relent to the Papists.

M. John Fizibram is thought to be his name. Ex Cochleo lib. 2. de Hist. Hussit.

This godly Servant and Martyr of Christ was condemned by the cruel Council, and burned at Constance, Anno 1415. about the month of July.

How grievously this death of John Hus was taken among the Nobles of Boheme and of Moravia, hereafter (Christ willing) shall appear by their Letters which they sent unto the Council, and by the Letters of Sigismund the King of Romans, written unto them. Wherein he laboureth, all that can, to purge and excuse himself of Husses death. Albeit he was not altogether gether free from that cruel fact, and innocent from that blood: yet notwithstanding he pretendeth in words so to wipe away that blot from him, that the greatest part of that crime seemeth to rest upon the bloody Prelates of that Council; as the words of the King do purport in form as followeth.

{KING} Ulric. 5.

Ex Cochleo de Hist. Hussit. lib. 4.

The Emperor excuseth himself of the death of J. Hus.

INterea (inquit) nobis adhuc in partibus Rheni existentibus, pervenit ad Constantiam, &c. i. In the mean time as we were about the coasts of Rhene, John Hus went to Constance, and there was arrested, as is not to you unknown. Who, if he had first reforted unto us, and had gone with us up to the Council, perhaps it had been otherwise with him. And God knoweth what grief and sorrow it was to our heart, to see it so to fall out, as with no words can be well expressed. Whereof all the Bohemians, which were there present, can bear us witness, seeing and beholding how careful and solicitous we were in labouring for him: Insomuch that we many times with anger and fury departed out of the Council; and not only out of the Council, but also went out of the City of Constance taking his part, unto such time as the Rulers of the Council sending unto us, said; That if we would not permit them to prosecute that which right required in the Council, what should they then do in the place? Whereupon thus we thought with our selves, that here was nothing else for us more to do, nor yet to speak in this case, forasmuch as the whole Council otherwise had been dissolved. Where is to be noted moreover, that in Constance the same time there was not one Clerke, or two, but there were Ambassadors from all Kings and Princes in Christendom, especially, since the time that (Petrus de Luna giving over) all those Kings and Princes which took his part, came to us: so that whatsoever good was to be done, it was now to be fulfil in this present Council, &c. Ex Regist. Imp Sigismund. ad Nobiles, &c.

¶ By this it may appear that the Emperor, as partly ashamed and sorry of that which was, would gladly have cleared himself thereof, and have washed his hands with Pilate; yet he could not so clear himself, but that a great portion of that murder remained in him to be noted, and well worthy of reprehention, as may appear by his last words spoken in the Council to John Hus, whereof John Hus in his Epistles complaineth, writing to certain of his friends in Boheme in his 33*d* Epistle, as by his words here following may appear.

Ex Epist. Johan. 33.

The Emperor encouragetb John Hus.

I*Desire you yet again for the love of God, that the Lords* of Boheme joyning together will desire the King for a final audience to be given to me. Forsomuch as he alone said to me in the Council, that they should give me audience shortly, and that I should answer for my self briefly in writing: it will be to his great confusion, if he shall not perform that which he hath spoken. But I fear that word of his will be as firm and sure, as the other was concerning my safe conduct granted by him. Certain there were in Bohemia, which willed me to beware of his safe conduct. And other said, he will surely give you to your Enemies. And the Milkest Dwaky told me before M. Jessenitz, saying, Master, know it for certain you shall be condemned. And this I suppose he spake, knowing before the intention of the King. I hope well that he had been well affected toward the Law of God and the truth, and had therein good intelligence: now I conceive that he is not greatly skilful, nor so prudently circumspect in himself. He condemned me before mine enemies did. Who if it had pleased him, might have kept the moderation of Pilate the Gentile, which said: I find no cause in this man: or at least if he had said but thus, Behold, I have given him his safe conduct safely to return: And if he will not abide the decision of the Council, I will send him home to the King of Bohemia with your sentence and attestations, that he with his Clergy may judge him. But now I hear by the relation of Henry Lefly, and of other, that he will ordain for me sufficient audience: And if I will not submit my self to the judgment of the Council, he will send me safe, the contrary way, &c.

Pilate more moderate to Christ, than this Emperor to John Hus.

This John Hus being in prison, wrote divers Treatises, as of the Commandments, of the Lords Prayer, of mortal Sin, of Matrimony, of the knowledge and love of God, of three Enemies of mankind, the world, and flesh, and the Divel, of Penance, of the Sacrament of the Body and blood of the Lord, of the sufficiency of the Law of God to rule the Church, &c. He wrote also divers Epistles and Letters to the Lords, and to his Friends of Boheme; And in his writings did foreshew many things before to come, touching the reformation of the Church; and seemeth in the prison to have had divers prophetical revelations shewed to him of God. Certain of which his letters and predictions, I thought here underneath to insert, in such sort, as neither in reciting all I will overcharge the Volume too much; nor yet in reciting of none will I be so brief, but that the Reader may have some taste, and take some profit of the Christian writings and doings of this blessed man; First beginning with the letter of the Lord Clum, concerning the safe conduct of John Hus.

A Letter of the Lord John de Clum, concerning the safe conduct of John Hus.

'TO all and singular that shall see and hear these presents, I John de Clum do it to understand, how Master John Hus Bachelor of Divinity, under the safe conduct and protection of the renowned Prince and Lord Sigismond of Romans, semper Augustus, and King of Hungary, &c. My gracious Lord, and under the protection, defence, and safeguard of the holy Empire of Rome, having the Letters Patent of the said my Lord King of Romans, &c. Came unto Constance to render a full count of his faith in public audience to all that would require the same. This the said Master John Hus, in this Imperial City of Constance, under the safe conduct of the said my Lord King of Romans, hath been and yet is detained. And although the Pope with the Cardinals have been seriously required by solemn Ambassadors of the said my Lord King of Romans, &c. In the Kings Name and behalf, that the said Master John Hus should be set at liberty, and be restored unto me, yet notwithstanding, they have and yet do refuse hitherto to set him at liberty, to the great contempt and derogation of the safe conduct of the King, and of the safegard and protection of the Empire, or Imperial Majesty. Wherefore I John aforesaid, in the name of the King, do here publish and make it known, that the apprehending, and detaining of the said Master John Hus was done wholly against the will of the forenamed King of Romans my Lord, seeing it is done in the contempt of the safe conduct of his subjects, and of the protection of the Empire, because that the said my Lord was then absent far from Constance, and if he had been there present, would never have permitted the same. And when he shall come, it is to be doubted of no man, but that he, for this great injury and contempt of this safe conduct done to him and to the Empire, will grievously be molested for the same.

Given at Constance, in the day of the Nativity of the Lord, 1414.

A Letter of John Hus to the people of Prague.

First, The goodness of this gentle Lord John de Clum, being so fervent and zealous in the cause of John Hus, or rather in the cause of Christ.

Secondly, The safe conduct granted unto the said John Hus, under the faith and protection of the Emperor, and of the Empire.

Thirdly, Here is to be seen the contempt and rebellion of these proud Prelates, in disobeying the authority of their high Magistrate, who contrary to his safe conduct given, and the mind of the Emperor, did arrest and imprison this good man, before the coming of the said Emperor, and before that John Hus was heard. Let us now, as we have promised, adjoyn some of the Epistles of this godly Man.

An Epistle of John Hus, unto the people of Prague, in his own vulgar Speech.

'GRace and Peace from our Lord Jesus Christ, that you being delivered from sin may walk in his grace, 'and may grow in all modesty and vertue, and after this 'may enjoy eternal life.

'Dearly beloved, I beseech you which walk after the Law 'of God, that you call not away the care of the salvation 'of your souls, when as you hearing the Word of God

' are premonished wisely to understand that you be not de-
' ceived by false Apostles; which do not reprehend the sins
' of men, but rather do extenuate and diminish them;
' which flatter the Priests, and do not shew to the people
' their offences; which magnifie themselves, boast their
' own works, and marvelously extol their own worthiness,
' but follow not Christ in his humility, in poverty, in the ' Cross and other manifold afflictions. Of whom our mer-
' ciful Saviour did premonish us before, saying; False
' Christs and false Prophets shall rise, and shall deceive
' many. And when he had forewarned his welbeloved Dis-
' ciples, he said unto them, Beware and take heed of false
' Prophets, which come to you in sheeps clothing, but inwardly
' they are ravening wolves: ye shall know them by their
' fruits. And truth it is, that the faithful of Christ have ' much need diligently to beware and take heed unto them' selves. For as our Saviour himself doth say, The elect also,
' if it were possible, shall be brought into error. Where-
' fore my welbeloved, be circumspect and watchful, that ye
' be not circumvented with the crafty trains of the Devil.
' And the more circumspect ye ought to be, for that An-
' tichrist laboureth the more to trouble you. The last judg' ment is near at hand: death shall swallow up many, but ' to the elect children of God the Kingdom of God draw-
' eth near, because for them he gave his own Body. Fear
' not death, love together one another, persevere in under' standing the good will of God without ceasing. Let the ' terrible and horrible day of Judgment be always before
' your eyes, that you sin not; and also the joy of eternal ' life, whereunto you must endeavour. Furthermore, let
' the passion of our Saviour be never out of your minds;
' that you may bear with him, and for him gladly, what' soever shall be laid upon you. For if you shall consider
' well in your minds his cross and afflictions, nothing shall
' be grievous unto you, and patiently you shall give place to ' tribulations, cursings, rebukes, stripes, and prisonment, and
' shall not doubt to give to your lives moreover for his holy ' truth, if need require. Know ye, welbeloved, that An-
' tichrist being stirred up against you, deviseth divers perse-
' cutions. And many he hath not hurt, no not the least
' hair of their heads, as by mine own example I can testi-
' fie, although he hath been vehemently incensed against ' me. Wherefore I desire you all, with your prayers to make
' intercession for me to the Lord, to give me intelligence,
' sufferance, patience and constancy, that I never swarve
' from his divine verity. He hath brought me now to Con-
' stance. In all my journey, openly and manifestly, I have ' not feared to utter my name as becometh the servant of ' God. In no place I kept my self secret, nor used any dis-
' simulation. But never did I find in any place more petti-
' lent and manifest Enemies than at Constance. Which ' Enemies neither should I have had there, had it not been
' for certain of our own Bohemians, Hypocrites and De-
' ceivers, who for benefits received, and stirred up with co-
' vetousness, with boasting and bragging have perswaded
' the people that I went about to seduce them out of the ' right way: But I am in good hope, that through the ' mercy of our God, and by your prayers, I shall persist
' strongly in the immutable verity of God unto the last ' breath. Finally, I would not have you ignorant, that
' whereas every one here is put in his Office, I only as an ' outcast am neglected, &c. I commend you to the merci-
' ful Lord Jesus Christ, our true God, and the Son of the ' immaculate Virgin Mary which hath redeemed us by his
' most bitter death, without all merits, from eternal pains,
' from the Thraldom of the Devil, and from sin.

Another Letter of John Hus to his Benefactors.

Another Letter of John Hus.

' MY gracious Benefactors and Defenders of the truth,
' I exhort you by the bowels of Jesus Christ, that
' now ye setting aside the vanities of this present world,
' will give your service to the Eternal King, Christ the Lord.
' Trust not in Princes, nor in the Sons of men, in whom
' there is no health. For the Sons of Men are dissemblers and ' deceitful. To day they are, to morrow they perish, but ' God remaineth for ever. Who hath his servants, not for ' any need he hath of them, but for their own profit: un-
' to whom he performeth that which he promiseth, and
' fulfilleth that which he purposeth to give. He casteth off
' no faithful servant from him; for he saith; Where I am, {KING} {Heb. 5.}
' there also shall my servant be. And the Lord maketh
' every servant of his to be the Lord of all his possession,
' giving himself unto him, and with himself, all things;
' that without all tediousness, fear, and without all defect
' he may possess all things, rejoycing with all Saints in joy
' infinite. O happy is that servant, whom, when the Lord
' shall come, he shall find watching. Happy is the servant
' which shall receive that King of Glory with joy. Where-
' fore welbeloved Lords and Benefactors, serve you that
' King in fear; which shall bring you, as I trust, now to
' Bohemia at this present by his grace in health, and here-
' after, to eternal life of glory. Fare you well, for I think ' that this is the last Letter that I shall write to you; who
' to morrow, as I suppose, shall be purged in hope of Jesus
' Christ, through bitter death for my sins. The things
' that happened to me this night I am not able to write.
' Sigismund hath done all things with me deceitfully, God
' forgive him, and only for your sakes. You also heard the ' sentence which he awarded against me. I pray you have
' no suspition of faithful Virus.

Another Letter to the Lord John de Clum.

Another Letter of John Hus.

' MOst gracious Benefactor in Christ Jesus, dearly be' loved, yet I rejoyce not a little, that by the grace
' of God I may write unto your honour. By your Letter,
' which I received Yesterday; I understand, First how the ' iniquity of the great strumpet, that is, of the Malignant
' Congregation (whereof mention is made in the Apocalyps)
' is detected, and shall be more detected. With the which
' strumpet the Kings of the Earth do commit Fornication,
' fornicating spiritually from Christ, and as is there said,
' filding back from the truth, and consenting to the lies of ' Antichrist, through his seduction and through fear, or ' through hope of confederacy, for getting of worldly ho' nour. Secondly, I perceived by your Letter how the ' Enemies of the truth begin now to be troubled. Thirdly,
' I perceived the setled constancy of your charity, where-
' with you profess the truth bodily. Fourthly, with joy I ' perceived that you mind now to give over the vanity and
' painful service of this present world, and to serve the ' Lord Jesus Christ quietly at home. Whom to serve is to
' Reign, as Gregory saith, Whom he that served faithfully,
' hath Jesus Christ himself in the Kingdom of Heaven to
' minister unto him, as he himself saith, Blessed is that
' servant, whom when the Lord shall come, he shall find
' waking, and so doing. Verily I say unto you, that he
' rising shall gird himself, and shall minister to him. This do
' not the Kings of the world to their servants; whom
' only they do love so long as they are profitable and neces' sary for their commodities, &c.

Another Epistle of John Hus, wherein he declareth why God suffereth not his to perish, bringing divers examples, wherewith he doth comfort and confirm both himself and other.

' THe Lord God be with you. Many causes there were,
' welbeloved in God my dear Friends, which moved
' me to think that those Letters were the last, which before
' I sent unto you, looking that same time for instant death.
' But now understanding the same to be deferred, I take it
' for great comfort unto me, that I have some leasure more
' to talk with you by Letters. And therefore I write again
' to you, to declare and testifie at least my gratitude and ' mindful duty toward you. And as touching death, God
' doth know why he doth defer it both to me, and to my
' welbeloved Brother Master Jerom, who I trust will die
' holily and without blame; and do know also that he doth,
' and suffereth now more valiantly, than I my self a wretch-
' ed sinner. God hath given us a long time, that we might ' call to memory our sins the better, and repent for the ' same more fervently. He hath granted us time, that our ' long and great temptation should put away our grievous
' sins, and bring the more consolation. He hath given us
' time, wherein we should remember the horrible rebukes
' of our merciful King and Lord Jesus, and should ponder
' his cruel death, and so more patiently might learn to bear
' our afflictions. And moreover that we might keep in re-
' membrance, how that the joyes of the life to come are not

{KING} {Heb. 5.}

' not given after the joyes of this world immediately, but
' through many tribulations the Saints have entred into the ' Kingdom of Heaven. For some of them have been cut
' and chopt all to pieces, some their eyes bored through,
' some fod, some roasted, some slain alive, some buried
' quick, stoned, crucified, grinded betwixt millstones, drawn
' and hailed hither and thither unto execution, drowned in ' waters, strangled and hanged, torn in pieces, vexed with
' rebukes before their death, pined in prisons, and afflicted
' in bands. And who is able to recite all the torments and ' sufferings of the holy Saints, which they suffered under
' the Old and New Testament for the verity of God;
' namely, those which have at any time rebuked the malice
' of the Priests, or have Preached against their wickedness?
' And it will be a marvel if any man now also shall escape
' unpunished, whosoever dare boldly relish the wickedness
' and perverity, especially of those Priests, which can abide
' no correction. And I am glad that they are compelled
' now to read my Books, in the which their malice is some-
' what described; and I know they have read the same
' more exactly and willingly, than the Holy Gospel, seek' ing therein to find out errors. Given at Constance upon
' Thursday, the 28th day of June, Anno 1415.

The Sacraments of the Martyrs under the Old and New Testament.

Another Letter of John Hus wherein he rehearseth what injuries he received of the Council, and of the Deputies.

He meaneth belike that he should move the King in such matters contained in this Epistle.

' IF my Letter be not yet sent to Bohemia, keep it and ' send it not, for hurt may come thereof, &c.
' Item, If the King do ask, who ought to be my Judge,
' since that the Council neither did call me, nor did cite me,
' neither was I ever accused before the Council, and yet the ' Council hath imprisoned me, and hath appointed their
' Proctor against me.
' Item, I desire you, right noble and gracious Lord John,
' if audience shall be given me, that the King will be there
' present himself, and that I may have a place appointed
' near unto him, that he may hear me well, and under' stand what I say; and that you also with the Lord Henry,
' and with Lord Wenceslaus and other mo, if you may, will ' be present, and hear what the Lord Jesus Christ, my
' procurator and advocate, and most gracious Judge, will
' put in my mouth to speak, that whether I live or die,
' you may be true and upright witnesses with me, left
' lying lips shall say hereafter that I swarved away from the ' truth which I have Preached.
' Item, Know you that before witnesses and notaries in ' prison, I desire the Commissioners that they would depute
' unto me a Proctor and an Advocate, who promised so to ' do, and afterward would not perform it. Wherefore I have ' committed my self to the Lord Jesus Christ, that he will
' be my Procurator and Advocate and Judge of my Cause.

Vid. supra. Pag. 480.

' Item, Know you, that they have as I suppose no other ' quarrel against me, but only this, that I flood against the ' Popes Bull, which Pope John sent down to Bohemia, to
' sanctifie war with the sign of the Cross and full remission
' of sins to all them which would take the holy Cross, to ' fight for the Patrimony of the Romish Church against
' Ladislaus King of Naples, and they have mine own writing
' which was read against me, and I do acknowledge it to be ' mine. Secondly, They have also against me, that I have
' continued so long in excommunication, and yet did take
' upon me to minister in the Church and say Mass.
' Thirdly, They have against me, because I did appeal from ' the Pope to Christ. For they read my appeal before me,
' the which with a willing mind, smiling, I confessed before ' them all to be mine. Fourthly, Because I left a certain Let' ter behind me, which was read in the Church of Bethleem,
' the which Letter my adversaries have very evil favourably
' translated, and finitely expounded, in the which I did
' write that I went out with a safe conduct. Whereunto
' you your selves can say and bear me record, that I in my
' going out had no safe conduct of the Pope, neither yet
' did I know whether you should go out with me when I
' wrote that Letter.
' Item, If audience may be given to me, and that after the ' same audience the King would suffer me not to be retur-
' ned again into prison, but that I may have your Counsels
' and others my Friends; and if it may please God that I
' may say something to my sovereign Lord the King, for the
' behalf of Christianity, and for his own profit, &c.

Another Letter of John Hus, wherein he confirmeth the Bohemians, and describeth the wickedness of that Council.

Another Letter of John Hus.

' IOhn Hus, in hope the servant of God, to all the faithful
' in Bohemia, which love the Lord, greeting through the ' grace of God. It cometh in my mind, wherein I must needs
' admonish you, that be the faithful and beloved of God;
' how that the Council of Constance being full of pride, ava-
' rice, and all abomination, hath condemned my Books writ-
' ten in the Bohemo-Tongue for Heretical, which Books they ' never saw, nor ever heard them read. And if they had ' heard them, yet they could not understand the same, being
' some Italians, some Frenchmen, some Britains, some
' Spaniards, Germains, with other people of other Nations
' moe; unless peradventure John Bishop of Litomish under' stood them, which was present in that Council, and cer-
' tain other Bohemians, and Priests which are against me,
' and labour all they may how to deprave both the verity of ' God, and the honesty of our Country of Bohemo. Which ' I judge in the hope of God, to be a godly Land, right well
' given to the true knowledge of the faith, for that it doth
' so greatly define the Word of God, and honest manners.
' And if you were here at Constance, ye should see the gric-
' vous abomination of this Council, which they call so holy,
' and such as cannot erre. Of the which Council I have ' heard it by the Swechors reported, that the City of Con-
' stance is not able in thirty years to be purged of those ' abominations in that Council committed. And all be of' fended almost with that Council, being fore grieved to ' behold such execrable things perpetrate in the same.
' When I flood first to answer before mine adversaries,
' seeing all things there done with no order, and hearing
' them also outragiously crying out, I said plainly unto them,
' that I looked for more honest behaviour, and better or' der and discipline in that Council. Then the chief Cardi-
' nal answered, sayest thou so? But in the Tower thou spakest
' more modestly. To whom said I, In the Tower no man
' cried out against me, whereas now all do rage against me,
' My faithful and beloved in Christ, be not afraid with ' their fearance in condemning my Books. They shall be
' scattered hither and thither abroad, like light Butterflies,
' and their statutes shall endure as Spider-webs. They went
' about to shake my constancy from the verity of Christ:
' but they could not overcome the vertue of God in me, by
' the chief Cardinal answer again; Because thou wouldest
' be informed, there is no remedy but that thou must first
' revoke thy Doctrine according to the determination of Fif' ty Bachelors of Divinity appointed. O high instruction!
' After like manner S. Katherine also should have denied
' and revoked the verity of God and faith in Christ, because
' the fifty Matters likewise did withstand her: which not-
' withstanding, that good Virgin would never do, standing
' in her faith unto death: But she did win those her
' Masters unto Christ, when as I cannot win these my ' Masters by any means. These things I thought good to ' write unto you, that you might know how they have ' overcome me, with no grounded Scripture, nor with any ' reason: but only did affay with terrors and deceits to per-
' swade me to revoke and to abjure. But our merciful God,
' whose Law I have magnified, was and is with me, and
' I trust, so will continue, and will keep me in his grace
' unto death. Written at Constance after the Feast of John
' Baptist, in prison and in bands, daily looking for death;
' although for the secret Judgments of God, I dare not say
' whether this be my last Epistle: for now also Almighty
' God is able to deliver me.

The abomination of the Council of Constance described.

John Hus feareth prophecy of the Council, as it came to pass.

The Council all afraid to be tried by the Scriptures.

This Cardinal was Cardinal Cambrensis.

S. Katharine disputed with fifty Doctors, converted them: but John Hus could not convert his fifty Doctors.

* Another Letter of John Hus, wherein he comforteth his Friends, and willeth them not to be troubled for the condemning of his Books: and also declareth the wickedness of the Clergy.

Good books of good men have been burned of old time.

'MAster John Hus, in hope the Servant of God, to 'all the Faithful which love him and his Statutes, 'wisheth the Truth and Grace of God.

'Beloved, I thought it needful to warn that you should 'not fear or be discouraged, because the Adversaries have 'decreed that my Books shall be burnt. Remember how 'the Israelites burned the preachings of the Prophet Jeremy, and yet they could not avoid the things that were 'prophesied of in them. For after they were burnt, the 'Lord commanded to write the same Prophetie again, and 'that larger, which was also done. For Jeremy sitting in 'prison spake, and Baruch which was ready at his hand, 'wrote. This is written either in the thirty fifth or forty 'fifth Chapter of the Vision of Jeremy. It is also written 'in the Books of the Machabees, That the wicked did burn the Law of GOD, and killed them that had the 'same. Again, under the New Testament, they burned 'the Saints, with the Books of the Law of GOD. The 'Cardinals condemned and committed to fire certain of 'Saint Gregories Books, and had burnt them all if they 'had not been preserved of GOD by the means of 'Peter, Gregories Minister. Having these things before your 'eyes, take heed left through fear you omit to read my 'Books, and deliver them to the Adversaries to be burnt. 'Remember the sayings of our merciful Saviour, by which 'he forewarneth us, Matth. 24. There shall be (saith 'he) before the day of Judgment, great Tribulation, 'such as was not from the beginning, until this day, 'neither shall be afterwards: So that even the Elect of 'God should be deceived, if it were possible. But for 'their sakes those days shall be shortned. When you re- 'member these things (beloved) be not afraid, for I trust 'in GOD that that School of Antichrist shall be 'afraid of you, and suffer you to be in quiet, neither 'shall the Council of Constance extend to Bohemia. For 'I think, that many of them which are of the Council, 'shall die before they shall get from you my Books. And 'they shall depart from the Council and be scattered 'abroad, throughout the parts of the World, like Storks, 'and then they shall know when Winter cometh, what 'they did in Summer. Confider that they have judged 'their Head the Pope worthy of death, for many horrible 'Facts that he hath done. Go to now; Answer to this 'you Preachers, which Preach that the Pope is the god 'of the Earth, that he may, as the Lawyers say, make 'sale of the holy things; that he is the Head of the whole 'holy Church, in verity well governing the same; that he 'is the heart of the Church in quickning the same spiri- 'tually: that he is the Well-spring from which floweth 'all vertue and goodness: that he is the Sun of the holy 'Church: that he is the safe Refuge to which every 'Christian man ought to fly for Succour. Behold now 'that Head is cut off with the Sword, now the gut of 'the Earth is bound, now his Sins are declared openly, 'now that Well-spring is dried up, that Sun darked, that 'Heart is plucked out and thrown away, left that any 'man should seek succour thereat. The Council hath 'condemned that Head, and that for this offence, because 'he took money for Indulgences, Bishopricks, and other 'such like. But they condemned him by Order of Judg- 'ment which were themselves the Buyers and Sellers of 'the same Merchandise. There was present John Bishop 'of Lytomissia, who went twice about to buy the Bishop- 'rick of Prague, but others prevented him. O wicked 'men, why did they not first cast out the beam of their 'own eyes? These men have accursed and condemned the 'Seller, but they themselves which were the Buyers and 'Consenters to the Bargain, are without danger. What 'shall I say, that they do use this manner of buying, and 'selling at home in their own Countries? For at Con- 'stance there is one Bishop that bought, and another 'which sold, and the Pope for allowing of both their 'Facts took Bribes on both sides. It came so to pass in 'Bohemia also as you know. I would that in that Coun- 'cil God had said, He that amongst you is without sin 'let him give the Sentence against Pope John; Then 'surely they had gone all out of the Council-house, one 'after another. Why did they bow the knee to him al- 'ways, before this his fall, kiss his Feet, and call him 'The most holy Father, seeing they saw apparently 'before, that he was an Heretick, that he was a Killer 'that he was a wicked Sinner, all which things now they 'have found in him? Why did the Chardinals choose him 'to be Pope, knowing before that he had killed the holy 'Father? Why suffered they him to meddle with holy 'things, in bearing the Office of the Popedom? for to 'this end they are his Counsellors, that they should ad- 'monish him of that which is right. Are not they them- 'selves as guilty of these faults as he? seeing that they 'accounted these things Vices in him, and were partakers 'of some of them themselves? Why durst no man lay 'ought to his charge, before he had fled from Constance, 'but as soon as the secular power, by the sufferance of 'God, laid hold upon him, then, and never afore, they 'conspired all together that he should not live any longer? 'Surely, even at this day is the malice, the abomination 'and filthiness of Antichrist revealed in the Pope and others 'of this Council.

{KING Eliz. 5.}

Pope John made a Pope, being known to be a murderer.

'Now the faithful Servants of GOD may understand 'what our Saviour Christ meant by this saying, When you 'shall see the abomination of desolation, which is spoken 'of by Daniel, &c. who so can understand it, &c. Surely 'these be great Abominations, pride, covetousness, simony, 'sitting in a solitary place; that is to say, in a Dignity void 'of goodness, of humility, and other vertues; as we do 'now clearly see in those that are constituted in any Office 'and Dignity. O how acceptable a thing should it be (if 'time would suffer me) to disclose their wicked acts, which 'are now apparent, that the faithful Servants of God might 'know them? I trust in God that he will send after me 'those that shall be more valiant; and there are alive at 'this day, that shall make more manifest the malice of Anti- 'christ, and shall give their lives to the death for the truth 'of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall give both to you and 'me the joys of life everlasting. This Epistle was written 'upon S. John Baptist's-day in prison and in cold Irons, I 'having this meditation with my self, that John was be- 'headed in his prison and bonds, for the word of God.

Antichrist now first beginneth to be revealed in the Pope.

A Prophesie of John Hus.

Another Letter of John Hus.

'John Hus in hope the Servant of GOD, to all the 'faithful at Boheme, which love the Lord, wisheth to 'stand and die in the Grace of God, and at last to attain 'unto eternal life.

'Ye that bear Rule over other and be rich, and ye also 'that be poor, welbeloved and faithful in God, I beseech 'you, and admonish you all, that ye will be obedient unto 'God, make much of his Word, and gladly hearing the 'same, will humbly perform that which ye hear. I beseech 'you stick fast to the verity of Gods Word, which I have 'written and preached unto you out of his Law, and the 'Sermons of his Saints. Also I desire you if any man either 'in publick Sermon, or in private talk heard of me any 'thing, or have read any thing written by me which is 'against the verity of God, that he do not follow the same. 'Albeit I do not find my conscience guilty that I ever have 'spoken or written any such thing amongst you.

'I desire you moreover if any man at any time have 'noted any levity either in my talk or in my conditions, 'that he do not follow the same; but pray to GOD for 'me, to pardon me that sin of lightness. I pray you that 'ye will love your Priests and Ministers, which be of honest 'behaviour, to prefer and honour them before others; 'namely, such Priests as travel in the Word of God. I pray 'you take heed to your selves, and beware of malicious and 'deceitful men, and especially of these wicked Priests of 'whom our Saviour doth speak, That they are under 'sheeps clothing, and inwardly are ravening Wolves. I 'pray such as be Rulers and Superiors, to behave them- 'selves gently towards their poor Inferiors, and to Rule 'them justly. I beseech the Citizens that they will walk 'every man in his degree and vocation with an upright 'conscience. The Artificers also I beseech, that they will 'exercise their Occupations diligently, and use them with 'the fear of GOD. I beseech the Servants, that they 'will serve their Masters faithfully. And likewise the School- 'Masters I beseech, that they living honestly will bring up 'their Scholars vertuously, and teach them faithfully, first 'to learn to fear God; then for the glory of God and the 'publick utility of the Commonwealth, and their own 'health, and not for avarice or for worldly honour, to em- 'ploy their minds to honest Arts. I beseech the Students of 'the University and all Schools, in all honest things to 'obey their Masters, and to follow them, and that with all 'diligence they will study to be profitable both to the set- 'ting forth of the Glory of God, and to the Souls health, 'as well of themselves, as of other men. Together I be- 'seech and pray you all, that you will yield most hearty 'thanks to the right honourable Lords, the Lord Wence- 'laus de Duba, Lord John de Clum, Lord Henry Lum- 'lovne, Lord Vilem Zagecio, Lord Nicholas, and other 'Lords of Boheme, of Moravia and Polonie; that their 'diligence towards me may be grateful to all good men; 'because that they, like valiant Champions of Gods truth, 'have oftentimes set themselves against the whole Council 'for my deliverance, contending and standing against the 'same to the uttermost of their power; but especially 'Lord Wenceslaus de Duba, and Lord John de Clum. 'Whatsoever they shall report unto you, give credit unto 'them; for they were in the Council when I there an- 'swered many. They know who they were of Bohemia, 'and how many false and flanderous things they brought 'in against me, and that Council cried out against me, and 'how I also answered to all things whereof I was demand- 'ed. I beseech you also that ye will pray for the King of 'Romans, and for your King, and for his Wife your Queen, 'that God of his mercy would abide with them and with 'you, both now and henceforth in everlasting life. Amen.

A note for all noble men to mark and to follow.

'This Epistle I have written to you out of prison and 'in bonds, looking the next day after the writing hereof 'for the sentence of the Council upon my death; having 'a full trust that he will not leave me, neither suffer me 'to deny his truth, and to revoke the errors, which false 'Witnesses maliciously have devised against me. How mer- 'cifully the Lord God hath dealt with me, and was with 'me in marvelous temptations, ye shall know when as 'hereafter by the help of Christ we shall all meet together 'in the joy of the World to come. As concerning Master 'Hieronme my dearly beloved Brother and Fellow, I hear no 'other but that he is remaining in strait bonds, looking for 'death as I do; and that for the Faith which he valiantly 'maintained amongst the Bohemians, our cruel enemies of 'Boheme have given us into the power and hands of other 'enemies, and into bands. I beseech you pray to God for 'them.

'Moreover, I beseech you, namely you of Prague, that 'ye will love the Temple of Bethlehem, and provide so 'long as God shall permit, that the Word of God may be 'preached in the same. For, because of that place, the 'Devil is angry, and against the same place he hath stirred 'up Priests and Canons, perceiving that in that place his 'Kingdom should be disturbed and diminished. I trust in 'God that he will keep that holy Church so long as it shall 'please him, and in the same shall give greater increase of 'his Word by other, than he hath done by me a weak 'Vessel. I beseech you also, that ye will love one another, 'and withholding no man from the hearing of Gods 'Word, ye will provide and take care that good men be not 'oppressed by any force and violence. Written at Con- 'stance, the year of our Lord, 1415.

Another right godly Letter of John Hus to a certain Priest, admonishing him of his Office, and exhorting him to be faithful; worthy to be read of all Ministers.

A worthy Letter for all Ministers and Prelates.

THe peace of our Lord Jesus Christ, &c. My dear Brother be diligent in preaching the Gospel, and do the work of a good Evangelist; neglect not your vocation; labour like a blessed Souldier of Christ. First, live godly and holily. Secondly, teach faithfully and truly. Thirdly, be an example to other in well-doing, that you be not reprehended in your sayings; correct Vice and set forth Ver-

tue. To evil Livers threaten eternal punishment; but to those that be faithful and godly, set forth the comforts of eternal joy. Preach continually, but be short and frustful, prudently understanding, and discreetly dispensing the holy Scriptures. Never affirm or maintain those things that be uncertain and doubtful, lest that your Adversaries take hold upon you, which rejoyce in deproving their Brethren, whereby they may bring the Ministers of God into contempt. Exhort men to the confession of their Faith, and to the communion of both kinds, both of the Body and Blood of Christ, whereby such as do repent earnestly of their sins, may the more often come to the holy Communion. And I warn you that you enter into no Taverns with Guests, and be not a common Company-keeper. For the more a Preacher keepeth him from the company of men, the more he is regarded. Albeit, deny not yet your help and diligence, wheresoever you may profit other. Against fleshly lust preach continually all that ever you can; For that is the raging Beast, which devoureth men, for whom the Flesh of Christ did suffer. Wherefore my heartily beloved, I beseech you to fly Fornication; for whereas a man would most profit and do good, there this Vice doth most to lurk. In any case fly the company of young women, and believe not their devotion; For S. Austin saith, The more devout he is, the more proclive to wantonness, and under the pretence of Religion the snare and venome of Fornication lurketh. And this know my welbeloved, that the Conversation with them subverteth many, whom the Conversation of this World could never blemish nor beguile. Admit no Women into your house, for what cause soever it be, and have not much talk with them otherwise, for avoiding of offence. Finally, howsoever you do, fear God and keep his Precepts; so shall you walk wisely, and shall not perish; so shall you subdue the Flesh, overcome the World, and overcome the Devil; so shall you put on God, find life, and confirm other, and shall crown your self with the Crown of Glory, the which the just Judge shall give you. Amen.

S. Augustine lamenteth not here of the common fort of light people.

This Letter of John Hus containeth a confession of the infirmity of mans flesh, how weak it is, and repugnant against the spirit. Wherein he also exhorteth to persevere constantly in the truth.

This Paleræ was the chiefest enemy of John Hus, and procurer of his death.

'HEalth be to you from Jesus Christ, &c. My dear friend, 'I know that Paleræ came to me to perswade me 'that I should not fear the flame of abjuration, but to con- 'fider the good which thereof will come. To whom I said, 'That the flame of condemnation and burning is greater 'than to abjure; and why should I fear then that flame? 'But I pray you tell me plainly your mind: Presuppose 'that such Articles were laid to you, which you knew your 'self not to be true; what would you do in that case? 'would you abjure? Who answered, The case is sore, and began to weep. Many other things he spake which I did 'reprehend. Michael de Causis was sometimes before in 'the prison with the Deputies. And when I was with the 'Deputies, thus I heard him speak unto the Keepers, We 'by the Grace of God will burn this Heretick shortly, for 'whose cause I have spent many Florens. But yet under- 'stand that I write not this to the intent to revenge any 'of him, for that I have committed to God, and pray to God 'for him with all my heart.

Michael de Causis another bitter enemy of John Hus, prayeth for his enemies.

'Yet I exhort you again, to be circumspect about our 'Letters. For Michael hath taken such order, that none 'shall be suffered to come into the prison; no nor yet the 'Keepers wives are permitted to come to me. O holy 'God, how largely doth Antichrist extend his power and 'cruelty? But I trust that his Power shall be shortned, and 'his Iniquity shall be detected more and more amongst the 'faithful people.

A Prophesie of S. Hus.

'Almighty God shall confirm the hearts of his Faithful, 'whom he hath chosen before the constitution of the 'world, that they may receive the eternal Crown of Glory. 'And let Antichrist rage so much as he will, yet he shall 'not prevail against Christ, which shall destroy him with 'the spirit of his mouth, as the Apostle saith; and then 'shall the Creature be delivered out of servitude of corrup- 'tion, into the liberty of the glory of the Sons of God, as 'saith the Apostle in the words following. We also within

'our

'our selves do groan, waiting for the Adoption of the Sons
'of God, the redemption of our Body.
'I am greatly comforted in those words of our Saviour,
'Happy be you when men shall hate you, and shall separate
'you, and shall rebuke you, and shall cast out your name as
'execrable, for the Son of man: Rejoyce and be glad, for
'behold, great is your reward in Heaven, Luke 6. O wor-
'thy, yea O most worthy Consolation, which not to un'derstand, but to practise in time of Tribulation, is a hard
'Lesson.

'This rule Saint James, with the other Apostles, did
'well understand, which saith, Count it exceeding joy my
'Brethren, when ye shall fall into divers temptations,
The exam- 'knowing that the probation of your Faith worketh Pati-ple of Christ 'ence; let Patience have her perfect work. For certainly
'it is a great matter for a man to rejoyce in trouble, and to 'take it for joy to be in divers temptations. A light mat'ter it is to speak it and to expound it; but a great matter
'to fulfil it. For why? our most patient and most valiant
'Champion himself, knowing that he should arise again
'the third day, overcoming his Enemies by his death, and 'redeeming from damnation his Elect after his last Sup-
'per, was troubled in Spirit, and said, My Soul is heavy
'unto death. Of whom also the Gospel saith, That he be- 'gan to fear to be sad and heavy. Who being then in 'an Agony, was confirmed of the Angel, and his sweat
'was like the drops of blood falling upon the ground. And 'yet he notwithstanding, being so troubled, said to his 'Disciples, Let not your hearts be troubled, neither fear the 'cruelty of them that persecute you, for you shall have me
'with you always, that you may overcome the tyranny of
'your Persecutors. Whereupon those his Souldiers, look'ing upon the Prince and King of Glory, sustained great
'Conflicts. They passed thorow fire and water, and were 'saved, and received the Crown of the Lord God, of the
'which Saint James in his Canonical Epistle, saith, Blef-
'sed is the man [suffereth temptation, for when he shall be 'proved, he shall receive the Crown of life, which God
'hath promised to them that love. Of this Crown I trust
'stedfastly the Lord will make me a partaker also with you,
'which be the fervent Sealers of the Truth, and with all
'them which stedfastly and constantly do love the Lord
'Jesus Christ, which suffered for us, leaving to us exam'ple that we should follow his steps. It behoved him to 'suffer, as he saith, and us also it behoved to suffer, that
'the Members may suffer together with the Head. For he
'saith, If any man will come after me, let him deny him-
'self, and take up his Cross, and follow me.

The Prayer of John Hus to Christ. 'O most merciful Christ, draw us weak Creatures af'ter thee, for except thou should draw us, we are not able 'to follow thee. Give us a strong spirit, that it may be 'ready, and although the Flesh be feeble, yet let thy
'Grace go before us, go with us, and follow us; for 'without thee we can do nothing, and much less enter 'into the cruel death for thy sake. Give us that prompt
'and ready spirit, a bold heart, an upright faith, a firm
'hope and perfect charity, that we may give our lives
'patiently and joyfully for thy Names sake, Amen. Writ-
'ten in prison in bonds in the Vigil of S. John the Baptist,
'who being in prison and in bonds for the rebuking of
'wickedness, was beheaded.

¶ Among divers other Letters of John Hus, which he wrote to the great Consolation of others; I thought also here to intermix another certain godly Letter written out of England, by a faithful Scholar of Wickliff, as appeareth unto John Hus and the Bohemians, which for the zealous affection therein contained, seemeth not unworthy to be read.

A Letter to John Hus, and to the Bohemians from London.

A zealous Letter to John Hus from London. 'GReeting, and whatsoever can be devised more
'sweet, in the bowels of Christ Jesus. My dearly
'beloved in the Lord, whom I love in the truth, and not
'I only, but also all they that have the Knowledge of the 'Truth; which abideth in you, and shall be with you
'through the Grace of God for evermore. I rejoyced
'above measure, when our beloved Brethren came and 'gave testimony unto us of your truth, and how you walked
'in the truth; I have heard Brethren how sharply Anti-
'christ persecuteth you, in vexing the faithful Servants of 'Christ with divers and strange kinds of afflictions. And 'surely no marvel, it amongst you (since it is so almost all the 'world over) the Law of Christ be too too grievously im'pugned, and that red Dragon having so many heads (of 'whom it is spoken in the Apocalyps) have now vomited
'out of his mouth that great Flood, by which he goeth
'about to swallow up the Woman; but the most gracious
'God will deliver for ever his only and most faithful
'Spouse. Let us therefore comfort our selves in the Lord
'our God, and in his unmeasurable goodness, hoping
'strongly in him, which will not suffer those that love him
'to be unmercifully defrauded of any their purpose, if we
'according to our duty shall love him with all our heart;
'for adversity should by no means prevail over us, if there
'were no iniquity reigning in us. Let therefore no tribu-
'lation or sorrow for Christs cause discourage us, knowing
'this for a surety, that whomsoever the Lord vouchsafeth
'to receive to be his Children, those he scourgeth; for so
'the merciful Father will have them tried in this miserable
'life by perfections, that afterwards he may spare them. For 'the gold that this high Artificer hath chosen, he purgeth and
'trieth in this fire, that he may afterwards lay it up in his
'pure treasury. For we see that the time we shall abide here
'is short and transitory; the life which we hope for after this
'is blessed and everlasting. Therefore whilst we have time,
'let us take pain that we may enter into that rest. What 'other thing do we see in this brittle life, than sorrow, hea-
'viness and sadness, and that which is most grievous of all
'to the Faithful, too much abuting and contempt of the 'Law of the Lord? Let us therefore endeavour our selves,
'as much as we may, to lay hold of the things that are
'eternal and abiding, despising in our minds all transitory
'and frail things. Let us consider the holy fellowship of our 'Fathers that have gone before us. Let us consider the Examples of the old Martyrs. 'Saints of the Old and New Testament. Did they not pass
'through this Sea of Tribulation and Persecution? were the
'not some of them cut in pieces, otherwise stoned, and
'other of them killed with the Sword? some others of 'them went about in Pelts and Goats skins, as the Apostle
'to the Hebrews witnesseth. Surely they all walked strait-
'ways, following the steps of Christ, which said, He that
'ministreth unto me, let him follow me wheresoever I go,
'&c. Therefore let us also, which have so noble Examples
'given us of the Saints that went before us, laying away, as 'much as in us lieth, the heavy burden and the yoke of sin
'which compasseth us about, run forward through patience,
'to the battel that is set before us, fixing our eyes upon the 'Author of Faith, and Jesus the Finisher of the same; who,
'seeing the joy that was set before him, suffered the pains of 'the Cross, despising death. Let us call upon him, which 'suffered such reproach against himself of Sinners, that we
'be not wearied, fainting in our hearts, but that we may 'heartily pray for help of the Lord, and may fight against 'his Adversary Antichrist; that we may love his Law, and
'not be deceitful Labourers, but that we may deal faithfully
'in all things, according to that which God hath vouch-
'safed to give us, and that we may labour diligently in the 'Lords Cause, under hope of an everlasting Reward. Be-
'hold therefore Brother Hus, most dearly beloved in Christ,
'although in face unknown to me, yet not in faith and love
'(for distance of places cannot separate those whom the 'love of Christ doth effectually knit together) be comforted
'in the grace which is given unto thee, labour like a good
'Souldier of Christ Jesus, preach, be instant in word and in 'example, and call as many as thou canst to the way of 'truth; for the truth of the Gospel is not to be kept in 'silence, because of the frivolous Censures and Thunderbolts
'of Antichrist. And therefore to the uttermost of thy power,
'strengthen thou and confirm the Members of Christ, which
'are weakned by the Devil; and if the Lord will vouchsafe
'it, Antichrist shall shortly come to an end. And there 'is one thing wherein I do greatly rejoyce, that in your
'Realm and in other places God hath stirred up the hearts
'of some men that they can gladly suffer, for the Word of 'God, Imprisonment, Banishment and Death.

'Further, beloved, I know not what to write unto you,
'but I confess that I could wish to pour out my whole
'heart, if thereby I might comfort you in the Law of the 'Lord. Also I salute from the bottom of my heart all the 'faithful

KING Hen. 5. 'faithful Lovers of the Law of the Lord, and specially Ja-
'cobellus your Coadjutor in the Gospel, requiring that he 'will pray unto the Lord for me in the universal Church
'of Jesus Christ. And the God of peace which hath raised
'from the dead the Shepherd of the sheep, the mighty Lord
'Jesus Christ, make you apt in all goodness, to do his will,
'working in you that which may be pleasant in his sight.
'All your Friends salute you which have heard of your 'constancy, I would desire also to see your Letters written
'back to us, for know ye that they shall greatly comfort
'us.

Another Letter of John Hus to his Friends of Boheme.

'THe Lord God be with you. I love the counsel of the 'Lord above gold and precious stone. Wherefore I
'trust in the mercy of Jesus Christ, that he will give me
'his Spirit to stand in his truth. Pray to the Lord, For the 'spirit is ready, and the flesh is weak. The Lord Almighty
'be the eternal reward unto my Lords, which constantly,
'firmly and faithfully do stand for righteousness; to whom
'the Lord God shall give in the Kingdom of Boheme, to 'know the truth. For the following of which truth, ne'cessary it is that they return again into Boheme, setting
'apart all vain-glory, and following not a mortal and mi-
'serable King, but the King of Glory which giveth eternal 'life.

'O how comfortable was the giving of the hand of Lord
'John de Clum unto me, which was not ashamed to reach
'forth his hand to me a Wretch, and such an abject He-
'retick, lying in fetters of Iron, and cried out upon all men!
'Now peradventure I shall not speak much hereafter with 'you: Therefore salute in time as you shall see them all
'the faithful of Boheme.

'Paletz came to me into prison. His salutation in my
'vehement infirmity was this before the Commissaries,
'that there hath not risen a more perilous Heretick since
'Christ was born, than was Wickliff and I. Also he said,
'That all such as came to hear my talk were infected with
'this Heresie, to think that the substance of bread remained
'in the Sacrament of the Altar. To whom I answered and 'said, O Master what a grievous Salvation have you
'given me, and how greatly do you sin? Behold I shall
'die, or peradventure to morrow shall be burnt; And what
'reward shall be recompenced to you in Boheme for your
'labour.

'This thing peradventure I should not have written, lest
'I might seem to hate him. I have always had this in my 'heart, Trust not in Princes, &c. And again, Cursed be the 'man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh to be his arm.
'For God take be you circumspect how you stand and 'how you return. Carry no Letters with you. Direct your 'Books not all by one, but diversly by divers Friends.

'Know this for certain, that I have had great conflicts
The visions of John Hus by dreams. 'by dreams, in such sort as I had much ado to refrain from 'crying out. For I dreamed of the Popes escape before he 'went. And after the Lord John had told me thereof,
'immediately in the night it was told me, That the Pope
'should return to you again. And afterward also I dream-
'ed of the apprehending of Master Jerome, although not
'in full manner as it was done. All the prisonments, whi-
'ther and how I am carried, were opened to me before,
'although not fully after the same form and circumstance.
'Many Serpents oftentimes appeared unto me, having 'heads also in their tail; but none of them could bite me,
'and many other things more.

A Prophesie of Master Hieroms of Prague. 'These things I write, not esteeming my self as a Pro'phet, or that I acted my self, but only to signifie unto you
'what temptations I had in body and also in mind, and
'what great fear I had, left I should transgress the Com-
'mandment of the Lord Jesus Christ. Now I remember
'with my self the words of Master Jerome, which said,
'That if I should come to the Council, he thought I should 'never return home again. In like manner there was a
This Taylors name was Andrew a Polonian. 'good and godly man, a Taylor, which taking his leave of 'me at Prague, spake to me in these words, God be with
'you (said he) for I think verily, my dear and good Master
'John, that you shall not return again to us with your life.
'The King, not of Hungary, but of Heaven, reward you
'with all goodness, for the faithful Doctrine which I at
'your hands received, &c.

¶ And shortly after the writing hereof, he sendeth also unto them another Prophetical Vision of his to be expounded touching the reformation of the Church, written in his forty fourth Epistle, the Contents whereof be these.

Another Letter of John Hus, sent to the Lord John de Clum.

I Pray you expound to me the dream of this night, I saw how that in my Church of Bethlehem they came to race and put out all the Images of Christ, and did put them out. The next day after I arose and saw many Painters, which painted and made more fairer Images, and many more than I had done before, which Images I was very glad and joyful to behold. And the Painters, with much people about them, said, Let the Bishops and Priests come now, and put us out these Pictures. Which being done, much people seemed to me in Bethlehem to rejoyce, and I with them. And I awaking therewith felt my self to laugh, &c.

Prophesie. ¶ This Vision Lord John de Clum, and John Hus himself in his Book of Epistles in the forty fifth Epistle seemeth to expound, and applieth the Images of Christ unto the preaching of Christ and of his life. The which preaching and Doctrine of Christ, though the Pope and his Cardinals should extinguish in him, yet did he foresee and declare, that the time should come, wherein the same Doctrine should be revived again by others, so plenteously, that the Pope with all his Power should not be able to prevail against it. Thus much as concerning this Vision of J. Hus. Whereunto doth well accord the Prophesie of Jerome of Prague, printed in the Coin called Moneta Hussi; of the which Coin I have my self one of the Plates having this Superscription following printed about it; Centum revolutis annis Deo respondebitis & mihi, that is, after an hundred years come and gone, you shall give account to God and to me. Whereof (God willing) more shall be said hereafter.

Furthermore, in the 48th Epistle the said J. Hus seeming to speak with the like Spirit of Prophetie, hath these words following, Sed ibero, quod quæ dixi sub tecto, prædicabuntur super tecta: That is, but I trust that those things which I have spoken within the house, hereafter shall be preached upon the top of the house. Prophesie.

And because we are here in hand with the Prophesies of John Hus, it shall serve well in place, here moreover to record his words in a certain Treatise by him written, De Sacerdotum & Monachorum carnalium abominatione; wherein the said John Hus, speaking prophetically of the Reformation of the Church, hath these words following, Ex istis ulterius adverte incidentaliter, quod Dei Ecclesia nequit ad pristinam suam dignitatem reduci, &c.

That is in English.

Prophesie. Moreover, hereupon note and mark by the way, that the Church of God cannot be reduced to his former Dignity, or be reformed, before all things first be made new. The truth whereof is plain by the Temple of Solomon. Like as the Clergy and Priests, so also the people are guilty: Or else unless all such as now be addict to errors, from the least to the most, be first converted and reclaimed, as well the people as Clergy and Priests. Albeit as my mind now giveth me, I believe rather the first, that is, that then shall rise a new people, formed after the new man, which is created after God. Of the which people new Clerks and Priests shall come, and be taken; which all shall hate covetousness, and the glory of this life, hastening to an heavenly conversation. Notwithstanding all these things shall come to pass, and be brought by little and little in order of times, dispensed of God for the same purpose. And this God doth and will do for his own goodness and mercy, and for the riches of his great longanimity and patience, giving time and space of repentance to them that have long lien in their vices, to amend, and fly from the face of the Lords fury, while that in like manner the carnal people, and carnal Priests successively and in time shall fall away and be consumed as with the moth, &c.

Another

Another Letter of John Hus.

After Martin my dear Brother in Christ, I exhort you in the Lord that you fear God, keep his Commandments, and flee the company of women, and beware of bearing their confession, lest by the hypocrisie of women Satan deceive you; trust not their devotion. You know how I have detested the avarice and the inordinate life of the Clergy; wherefore through the Grace of God I suffer now Persecution, which shortly shall be consummate in me, neither do I fear to have my heart poured out for the Name of Christ Jesus; I desire you heartily be not greedy in seeking after Benefices. And yet if you shall be called to any Cure in the Country, let the Honour of God, the Salvation of Souls, and the travel thereof move you thereunto, and not the having of the Living or the Commodities thereof. And if you shall be placed in any such Benefice, beware you have no young Woman for your Cook or Servant, lest you edifie and increase more your House than your Soul. See that you be a builder of your spiritual House, being gentle to the Poor and humble of mind, and waste not your Goods in great fare. I fear also if you do not amend your life, ceasing from your costly and superfluous Apparel, lest you shall be grievously chastised, as I also wretched man shall be punished, which have used the like, being seduced by custom of evil men and worldly glory, whereby I have been wounded against God with the Spirit of Pride. And because you have notably known both my preaching and outward Conversation even from my Youth, I have no need to write many things unto you, but to desire you for the mercy of Jesus Christ, that you do not follow me in any such levity and lightness, which you have seen in me. You knew how before my Priesthood (which grieveth me now) I have delighted to play oftentimes at Chess, and have neglected my time, and have unhappily provoked both my Father and other to anger many times by that play. Wherefore besides other my innumerable faults, for this also I desire you to invocate the mercy of the Lord, that he will pardon me, and so direct my life, that having overcome the wickedness of this present Life, the Flesh, the World, and the Devil, I may find place in the heavenly Countrey, at the least in the day of Judgment. Fare ye well in Christ Jesus, with all of them which keep his Law. My grey Coat, if you will, keep to your self for my remembrance, but I think you are ashamed to wear that grey colour; therefore you may give it to whom you shall think good. My white Coat you shall give the Minister N. my Scholar. To George or else to Zuzikon sixty Groats, or else my grey Coat, for he hath faithfully served me.

Note that then Priests were not married, and therefore he willeth them to avoid the company of Women.

He repenteth his gay Garments.

He repenteth his playing at the Chess.

John Hus from his gay Garments cometh to his white Coat.

¶ The Superscription.

I pray you that you do not open this Letter, before you be sure and certain of my death.

The Consolation of Master Jerome to Master Hus.

Master, in those things which you have both written hitherto, and also preached after the Law of God against the pride, avarice, and other inordinate Vices of the Priests, go forward, be constant and strong. And if I shall know that you are oppressed in the cause, and if need shall so require, of mine own accord I will follow after to help you, as much as I can.

John Hus condemned for no erroneous Doctrine wherein he was culpable.

BY the Life, Acts and Letters of John Hus hitherto rehearsed, it is evident and plain, that he was condemned not for any error of Doctrine, which they could well prove in him, who neither denied their Popish Transubstantiation, neither spake against the authority of the Church of Rome, if it were well governed, nor yet the seven Sacraments, and also said Master himself, and almost in all their Popish opinions was a Papist with them; but only of evil will was accused of his malicious Adversaries, because he spake against the Pomp, Pride and Avarice, and other wicked Enormities of the Pope, Cardinals and Prelates of the Church, and because he could not abide the high Dignities and Livings of the Church, and thought the doings of the Pope to be Antichrist-like. For this cause he procured so many enemies and false Witnesses against him. Who straining and picking matter out of his Books and Writings, having no one just Article of Doctrine to lay unto him, yet they made him an Heretick, whether he would or no, and brought him to his condemnation. This can hatred and malice do, where the charity of Christ hath no place. Which being so, as thy charity (good Reader) may easily understand, in perusing the whole course of his story; I beseech thee then, what cause had John Cochleus to write his twelve Books against J. Hus and Husites? In which Books how bitterly and intemperately he misuseth his Pen, by these few words in his second Book thou mayst take a little taste: which words I thought here briefly to place in English, to the end that all Englishmen may judge thereby, with what spirit and truth these Catholicks be carried. His words be these, Lib. 2. Hist. Dico igitur Joan. Hus neque sanctum neque beatum habendum esse, sed impium potius, &c. That is, I say therefore John Hus is neither to be counted holy nor blessed, but rather wicked and eternally wretched; insomuch that in the day of Judgment, it shall be more easie, not only with the infidel Pagans, Turks, Tartarians and Jews, but also with the most sinful Sodomites, and the abominable Persians, which most filthily do lie with their Daughters, Sisters, or Mother, yea and also with most impious Cain, Killer of his own Brother, with Thiestes, Killer of his own Mother, and the Lestrygones and other Anthropophagi, which devour mans flesh; yea more easie with those infamous Murderers of Infants, Pharaoh and Herod, than with him, &c. These be the words of Cochleus. Whose railing Books although they deserve neither to be read, nor answered, yet if it please God, it were to be wished, that the Lord would stir up some towardly young man, that hath so much leisure, to defend the simplicity of this J. Hus, which cannot now answer for himself. In the mean time, something to satisfie or slay the Readers mind against this immoderate Hyperbole of Cochleus, in like few words I will bring out John Hus to speak and to clear himself against this slander: whose words in his Book De Sacerdotum & Monachorum abominatione desolationis, pag. 84. &c. I beseech the Reader to note, Nam & ista scribens Fateor, quod nihil aliud me in illis peruget, nisi dilectio Dom. nostri Jesu Crucifixi, &c. That is, For in writing these things, I confess nothing else to have moved me hereunto, but only the love of our Lord Jesus crucified, whose prints and stripes (according to the measure of my weakness and vileness) I covet to bear in my self, beseeching him so to give me Grace, that I never seek to glory in my self, or in any thing else, but only in his Cross, and in the inestimable ignominy of his Passion which he suffered for me. And therefore I write and speak these things, which I do not doubt will like all such as unfainedly do love the Lord Christ crucified; and contrary will mislike not a little all such as be of Antichrist. Also again, I confess before the most merciful Lord Jesus Christ crucified, that these things which I do now write, and those that I have written before, neither I could have written, nor knew how, nor durst so have written, unless he by his inward unction had so commanded me. Neither yet do I write these things as of authority, to get me fame and name. For as S. Augustine and Hieronie do say, that is only to be given to the Scriptures and Writings of the Apostles, Evangelists and Prophets, and to the Canonical Scriptures, which do abound in the fulness of the Spirit of Jesus. And whatsoever is there said, is full of verity and wholsome utility, &c. And here place also would require something to say to Aeneas Sylvius, to Antoninus, and to Laziardus, which fally impute Articles to him, which he never maintained. But because time suffereth not, I will proceed to the story of Master Jerome of Prague.

* The tragical and lamentable History of the famous learned man and godly Martyr of Christ, Master Jerome of Prague, burned at Constance for like cause and quarrel as Master John Hus was, 1416.

THese things hitherto being discourst, touching the life, acts and constant martyrdom of Master John Hus, with part also of his Letters adjoyned to the same, whose death was on the sixth of July, Anno 1416. now remaineth consequently to describe the like tragedy and cruel handling of his Christian Companion and Fellow in bands bands Master Jerome of Prague. Who grievously sorrowing the slanderous reproach and defamation of his Country of Boheme, and also hearing tell of the manifest injuries done unto that man of worthy memory, Master John Hus; freely and of his own accord came unto Constance the fourth day of April, 1415. Who there perceiving that John Hus was denied to be heard, and that watch and wait was laid for him on every side, he departed to Iberling a City of the Empire, until the next day; the which City was a mile off from Constance, and from thence he wrote his Letters by me unto Sigismund King of Hungary and his Barons, and also unto the Council, most earnestly requiring that the King and the Council would give him a safe Conduct freely to come and go, and that he would then come in open Audience to answer unto every man, if there were any of the Council that would lay any Crime unto him, as by the tenor of his intimation shall more at large appear.

The story of Jerome of Prague.

{KING Hus. 5.} Jerome cometh to Constance.

The safe conduct was required, but in vain, of the Emperor.

When as the said King of Hungary was required thereunto, as is aforesaid, being in the house of the Lord Cardinal of Cambray, he denied to give Master Jerome any safe conduct, excusing himself for the evil speed he had with the safe conduct of John Hus before, and alledging also certain other causes. The Deputies also of the four Nations of the Council being moved thereunto by the Lords of the Kingdom of Boheme, answered, We (say they) will give him a safe conduct to come, but not to depart. Whose answers, when they were reported unto Master Jerome, he the next day after wrote certain Intimations according to the tenor under-written, which he sent unto Constance to be set upon the Gates of the City, and upon the Gates of the Churches and Monasteries, and of the houses of the Cardinals, and other Nobles and Prelates. The tenor whereof here followeth word for word in this manner.

The intimation of Jerome, set up in divers places of the Town of Constance.

Unto the most noble Prince and Lord, the Lord Sigismund, by the Grace of God King of the Romans, always Augustus, and of Hungary, &c. I Jerome of Prague, Master of Art of the general Universities of Paris, Cullen, Heidelberg, and Prague, by these my present Letters do notifie unto the King, together with the whole reverend Council, and as much as in me lieth, do all men to understand, and know, that because of the crafty Slanderers, Backbiters and Accusers, I am ready freely and of mine will, to come unto Constance, there to declare openly before the Council, the purity and sincerity of my true Faith, and mine Innocency, and not secretly in Corners before any private or particular person. Wherefore if there be any of my Slanderers, of what Nation or Estate soever they be, which will object against me any Crime of Error or Heresie; let them come forth openly before me in the presence of the whole Council, and in their own names object against me, and I will be ready, as I have written, to answer openly and publickly before the whole Council, of mine Innocency, and to declare the purity and sincerity of my true Faith. And if so be that I shall be found culpable in Error or Heresie, then I will not refuse openly to suffer such punishment as shall be meet and worthy for an erroneous person, or an Heretick.

Wherefore I most humbly beseech my Lord the King, and the whole sacred Council, That I may have to the end and purpose aforesaid, safe and sure access. And if it happen that I offering such Equity and Right as I do, before any fault be proved against me, be arrested, imprisoned, or have any violence done unto me; that then it may be manifest unto the whole World, that this general Council doth not proceed according to Equity and Justice, if they would by any means put me back from this profound and strait Justice, being come hither freely of mine own mind and accord. The which thing I suppose to be far from so sacred and holy Council of wise men.

Jerome apprehended in the way by Duke John. Michael de Causis, and Palecz, counsels to Jerome.

Safe conduct denied to Jerome.

WHen as yet he through such Intimations copied out in the Bohemian, Latin, and German-Tongue, being set up as is aforesaid, could not get any safe Conduct, then the Nobles, Lords, and Knights specially of the Bohemian Nation, present in Constance, gave unto Master Jerome their Letters Patents, confirmed with their Seals for a Testimony and Witness of the premisses. With the which Letters the said Master Jerome returned again unto Jerome returneth toward Bohemia, with the testimonials of the Lords of Bohemia.

Boheme; but by the Treason and Conspiracy of his Enemies he was taken in Hirsaw by the Officers of Duke John, and in Zultzbach was brought back again to the presence of the Duke. In the mean time such as were the Setters forward of the Council against Master John Hus, and Master Jerome; that is to say, Michael de Causis, and Master Palesz., and other their Accomplices required that the said Master Jerome should be cited by reason of his Intimations, and certain days after the citation here under-written was set upon the Gates and Porches of the City and Churches, which followeth here in this manner:

Jerome of Prague cited by the Council when he was taken.

¶ This most sacred and holy Synod and General Council of Constance, faithfully congregated and gathered together in the Holy Ghost, representing the universal Militant-Church, unto Jerome of Prague, which writeth himself to be a Master of Art of so many Universities, and pretendeth those things which are only pertaining unto Sobriety and Modesty, and that he knoweth no more than he ought, &c. Know thou that there is a certain Writing come unto our understanding and knowledge, the which was set up as it were by thine own person upon the Gates of the Churches and City of Constance, upon the Sunday, when there was sung in the Church of God, Quasi modo geniti. Wherein thou dost affirm, That thou wilt openly answer unto thy Accusers and Slanderers which shall object any Crime, Error or Heresie against thee, whereof thou art marvelously infamed and accused before us, and specially touching the Doctrine of Wickliff, and other Doctrines contrary unto the Catholick Faith, so that thou mightest have granted unto thee a safe conduct to come. But forsomuch as it is our part principally and chiefly to foresee and look unto these crafty Foxes which go about to destroy the Vineyard of the Lord of Hosts, therefore we do cite and call forth by the tenour of these presents, thy person manifoldly defamed and suspected for the temerarious affirming and teaching of manifold Errors; so that within the term of fifteen days to be accounted from the date of these presents, whereof five days are appointed for the first term, five for the second, and other five for the third, We do ordain and appoint by Canonical admonition and warning, that thou do appear in the publick Sessions of the sacred Council, if there be any holden in the same day, or else the first day immediately following, when as any Session shall be, according to the tenor of thy said writing, to answer to those things, which any person or persons shall object or lay against thee in any cause of thy Faith, and to receive and have as Justice shall require. Whereupon, so much as in us lieth, and as Catholick Faith shall require; We offer and assign to thee, by the tenor hereof, our safe conduct from all violence (Justice always being saved;) certifying thee, that whether thou dost appear or not, the said term or time appointed notwithstanding, Process shall go forward against thee by the said Sacred Council, or by their Commissary or Commissaries, for the time aforesaid not observed and kept; thy contumacy or stubbornness in any thing notwithstanding. Given in the sixth Session of the General Council, the seventeenth day of April, under the Seal of the Presidents of the four Nations.

This Duke John in Silesia is commonly called the Son of Clemmet. Jerome is brought bound unto Constance by Duke John.

¶ Grumpert Faber, Notary of the Germans.

AFter that Sigismund King of Hungary, with the rest of the Council, understood by the foresaid Duke John, that Master Jerome was taken, they were earnestly in hand, requiring that Master Jerome should be brought before them unto the Council. The which Duke John, after he had received Letters of the King, and the Council, brought Master Jerome bound unto Constance, whom his Brother Duke Ludovicus led thorow the City to the Cloyster of the Friers Minors in Constance, whereas the chief Priests and Elders of the people, Scribes and Pharisees, were gathered together; attending and waiting for his coming. He the said Master Jerome carried a great handbolt of Iron with a long chain in his hand, and as he passed, the chain made a great rattling and noise, and for the more confusion and despite towards him, they led him by the same chain after Duke Ludovicus aforesaid, holding and stretching out the same a great way from him, with with the which chain they also kept him bound in the Cloyster. When he was brought into the Cloyster, they read before him the Letter of Duke John, which was sent with the said Master Jerome unto the Council, containing in effect, how that the said Duke John had sent Master Jerome unto the Council, who by chance was fallen into his hands, because he heard an evil report of him, that he was suspected of the Heresies of Wickliff; that the Council might take order for him, whose part it was to correct and punish such as did err and stray from the truth, besides many other flattering Tales which were written in the said Letter for the praise of the Council. After this they read the Citation which was given out by the Council against Master Jerome, whereof we have spoken before. Then certain of the Bishops said unto him, Jerome, why didst thou fly and run away, and didst not appear when thou was cited? He answered, Because I could not have any safe conduct, neither from you, neither from the King, as it appeareth by these Letters Patents of the Barons, which you have, neither by mine open Intimations could I obtain any safe conduct.

The Council neither would give him liberty safely to come nor freely to go

Wherefore I, perceiving many of my grievous and heavy Friends to be here present in the Council, would not my self be the occasion of my perils and dangers; but if I had known or had any understanding of this Citation, without all doubt, albeit I had been in Boheme, I would have returned again. Then all the whole Rabble rising up, alledged divers and sundry Accusations and Testimonies against him with a great noise and tumult. When the rest held their peace, then spoke Master Gerson the Chancellor of Paris, Jerome, when thou was at Paris thou thoughtest thy self by means of thy Eloquence to be an Angel, and didst trouble the whole University, alledging openly in the Schools many erroneous Conclusions with their corolaria, and especially in the question de universalibus & de Ideis, with many other very offensive questions. Unto whom Master Jerome said, I answer to you Master Gerson; Those matters which I did put forth there in the Schools at Paris, in the which also I answered to the Arguments of the Masters, I did put them forth philosophically, and as a Philosopher, and Master of the University; and if I have put forth any questions which I ought not to have put forth, teach me that they be erroneous, and I will most humbly be informed, and amend the same.

M. Jerome was argued by Mr. Gerson, with commendation of his Eloquence. Gerson reproveth matters.

The Master of the University of Cullen. This man would accuse, but he lacked matter.

Whiles he was yet speaking, another (as I suppose, the Master of the University of Cullen upon the River of Rheine) rising up, said, When thou was also at Cullen, in thy position which thou didst there determine, thou didst propound many erroneous matters. Then said Master Jerome unto him, Shew me first one Error which I propounded. Wherewithall he being in a manner astonished, said, I do not remember them now at the first, but hereafter they shall be objected against you.

The Master of the University of Heidelberg.

And by and by the third man rising up, said, When that you were also at Heidelberg, you propounded many erroneous matters as touching the Trinity, and there painted out a certain Shield or Scutchine, comparing the Trinity of Persons in divinity unto Water, Snow and Ice, and such like. Unto whom Master Jerome answered, Those things that I wrote or painted there, the same will I also speak, write, and paint here; and teach me that they be erroneous, and I will most humbly revoke and recant the same.

Crucifige, crucifige eum.

Then certain cried out, Let him be burned, let him be burned. Unto whom he answered, If my death do delight or please you, In the Name of God let it be so.

Then said the Archbishop of Salisburg; Not so Master Jerome, forsomuch as it is written, I will not the death of a Sinner, but rather that he convert and live. When these and many other Tumults and Cries were passed, whereby they did then most disorderly and outragiously witness against him, they delivered the said Master Jerome, being bound, unto the Officers of the said City of Constance, to be carried to prison for that night; and so every one of them returned to their Lodgings.

Jerome is comforted by the Nuncy.

In the mean time, one of the Friends of Master John Hus, looking out at a window of the Cloister, said unto him, Master Jerome. Then said he, You are welcome my dear Brother. Then said Peter unto him, Be constant and fear not to suffer death for the Truth sake, of the which, when you were in times past at liberty, you did preach so much goodness. Unto whom Jerome answered, Truly Brother I do not fear death, and forsomuch as we know that we have spoken much thereof in times past; let us now see what may be known or done in effect. By and by his Keepers coming to the window, threatning him with strokes, did put away the said Peter from the window of the Cloister. {KING Hen. 5.}

Then came there one Vitus unto Master Jerome, and said, Master, how do you do? Unto whom he answered, Truly Brother, I do very well. Then his Keepers coming about him laid hold of the said Vitus, saying, This is also one of the number, and kept him. When it drew towards evening, the Archbishop of Rigen sent certain of his Servants which led away Master Jerome, being strongly bound with chains, both by the Hands and by the Neck, and kept him so for certain hours. When night drew on, they carried him unto a certain Tower of the City in Saint Pauls Church-yard, where they tying him fast unto a great Block, and his Feet in the Stocks, his Hands also being made fast upon them, they left him; whereas the block was so high, that he could by no means sit thereupon, but that his Head must hang downward. They carried also the said Vitus unto the Archbishop of Rigen, who demanded of him, Why he durst be so bold to talk with such a man being a Reprobate of all men, and an Heretick: and when as he could find no cause of Imprisonment in him, and that he said he was Master John de Clums Friend (taking an Oath and Promise of him, that he should not go about to endamage the Council by reason of that Imprisonment and Captivity) so dismissed him and sent him away.

Re in de litte ra. Lucæ. 22. Vitus the Companion of John de Clum.

Jerome finally bound hand and foot.

Vitus had to the Archbishop of Rigen.

Vitus bound by Oath.

Master Jerome, unknown unto us whither he was carried, lay in the said Tower two days and two nights, relieved only with Bread and Water. Then one of his Keepers, coming unto Master Peter, declared unto him how that Master Jerome lay hard by in bonds and chains, and how he was fed. Then Master Peter desired that he might have leave given him to give him meat, because he would procure the same unto him. The Keeper of the prison, granting his request, carried meat unto him. Within eleven days after, so hanging by the heels, he used so small repast, that he fell sore sick even unto the death. When as he living then in that captivity and prison, delired to have a Confessor, they of the Council denied that he should have any, until such time as by great importunity he obtained to have one; his Friends being then there present in the same Prison and Tower, wherein he then lay by the space of one year, lacking but seven days.

Jerome standing in the stocks was fed with bread and water. Peter bringeth meat to Jerom.

Jerome is great sick, faith asketh a Confessor.

Master Jerome was kept in prison the space of one year.

After they had put John Hus to death, then about the Feast of the Nativity of Mary the Virgin, they brought forth Master Jerome, whom they had kept so long in chains, unto the Church of S. Paul's and threatning him with death, being instant upon him, they forced him to abjure and recant, and consent unto the death of Master John Hus, that he was justly and truly condemned and put to death by them. He, what for fear of death, and hoping thereby to escape out of their hands, according to their will and pleasure, and according to the tenor which was exhibited unto him, did make Abjuration, and that in the Cathedral-Church and open Session, the draught whereof penned to him by the Papists, here ensueth.

¶ The Abjuration of Master Hierome of Prague.

The forced Abjuration of Hierome.

I Hierome of Prague, Master of Art, acknowledging the Catholick Church, and the Apostolick Faith, do accurse and renounce all Heresies, and specially that wherof I have hitherto been infamed, and that which in times past John Hus and John Wickliff have holden and taught in their Works, Treatises and Sermons, made unto the people and Clergy; for the which cause the said Wickliff and Hus, together with the said Doctrines and Errors, are condemned by this Synod of Constance as Hereticks, and all the said Doctrine sententially condemned, and especially in certain Articles expressed in the Sentences and Judgments given against them by this sacred Council.

Also I do accord and agree unto the holy Church of Rome, the Apostolick Seat in this sacred Council, and with my mouth and heart do profess in all things, and touching {KING Hen. 5.} touching all things, and specially as touching the Keys, Sacraments, Orders, and Offices, and Ecclesiastical Censures, of Pardons, Reliques of Saints, Ecclesiastical liberty, also Ceremonies, and all other things pertaining unto Christian Religion, as the Church of Rome, the Apostolick See, and this Sacred Council do profess: and specially that many of the said Articles are notoriously heretical, and lately reproved by the holy Fathers, some of them blasphemous, other some erroneous; some offensive unto godly ears, and many of them temerarious and seditious. And such also were counted the Articles lately condemned by the Sacred Council, and it was inhibited and forbidden to all and singular Catholick men hereafter to preach, teach, or presume to hold or maintain any of the said Articles, under pain of being accursed.

And I the said Hierome, forsomuch as I have laboured by Scholastical arts to persuade the opinion, de Universalibus realibus, and that one substance of the common kind should signifie many things subject under the same, and every one of them, as Saint Ambrose, Hierome, Augustine, do affirm, and likewise others; for the teaching hereof by a plain example I described as it were a certain Triangle, form or figure, the which I called the shield of faith.

Therefore utterly to exclude and take away the erroneous and wicked understanding thereof, the which peradventure some men may gather thereby, I do say, affirm, and declare that I never made the said figure, neither named it the shield of faith to that intent or purpose, that I would extoll or prefer the opinion of Universalities above or before the contrary opinion, in such sort, as though that were the shield of faith, and that without the affirmation thereof the Catholick Faith could not be defended or maintained, when as I my self would not obstinately stick thereunto. But this I said, because I had put example in the description of the Triangle or form, that one Divine essence consisted in three subjects or persons in themselves distinct, that is to say, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. The Article of the which Trinity is the chief shield of faith, and foundation of the Catholick truth.

Furthermore, that it may be evident unto all men what the causes were for the which I was reputed and thought to stick to, and favour sometime John Hus; I signifie unto all men by these presents, that when as I heard him oftentimes both in his Sermons, and also in the Schools, I believed that he was a very good man, neither that he did in any point gainsay the Traditions of our Holy Mother the Church, or holy Doctors; insomuch as when I was lately in this City, and the Articles which I affirmed were shewed unto me, which were also condemned by the Sacred Council, at the first sight of them I did not believe that they were his, at the least not in that form. But when as I had further understood by certain famous Doctors and Masters of Divinity that they were his Articles, I required for my further information and satisfaction, to have the Books of his own hand-writing shewed unto me, wherein it was said those Articles were contained. The which Books when they were shewed unto me written with his own hand, which I did know as well as mine own, I found all, and every one of those Articles therein written in like form as they are condemned. Wherefore I do worthily judg and think him and his Doctrine, with his adherents to be condemned and reproved by the sacred Council, as heretical and without reason. All which the premisses with a pure mind and conscience, I do here pronounce and speak, being now fully and sufficiently informed of the foresaid sentences and judgments given by the sacred Council against the Doctrines of the said John Wickliff, and John Hus, and against their own persons; unto the which judgment as a devout Catholick in all things, I do most humbly consent and agree.

Hierome is made here to say not his own mind, but what pleaseth them.

Also I the foresaid Hierome, which before the reverend Fathers the Lords Cardinals, and reverend Lords, Prelates and Doctors, and other worshipful persons of this sacred Council in this same place, did heretofore freely and willingly declare and expound mine intent and purpose amongst other things speaking of the Church, did divide the same into three parts: And as I did perceive afterward, it was understood by some that I would affirm, that in the Triumphant Church there was faith. Whereas I do firmly believe that there is the blessed sight and beholding of God, excluding all dark understanding and knowledg. And now also I say, affirm and declare that it was never my intent and purpose to prove that there should be faith, speaking of faith, as faith is commonly defined, but knowledg far exceeding faith. And generally whatsoever I said, either there, or at any time before, I do refer, and most humbly submit my self unto the determination of this sacred Council of Constance.

Moreover, I do swear both by the Holy Trinity, and also by the most Holy Gospel, that I will for evermore remain and persevere without all doubt, in the truth of the Catholick Church. And all such as by their Doctrine and teaching shall impugn this faith, I judg them worthy together with their Doctrines of eternal curse. And if I my self at any time (which God forbid I should) do presume to preach or teach contrary thereunto, I will submit my self unto the severity of the Canons, and be bound unto eternal pain and punishment. Whereupon I do deliver up this my confession and tenor of my Profession willingly before this sacred General Council, and have subscribed and written all these things with mine own hand.

After all this they caused him to be carried again unto the same prison, but not so straitly chained and bound as he was before; notwithstanding kept every day with Soldiers and armed men. And when as afterward his enemies which were appointed against him, as Michael de Causis, Paletz, and others, with other their companions in these affairs, understood and knew by the words and talk of Master Hierome, and by other certain tokens, that he made the same Abjuration and Recantation, not of a sincere and pure mind, but only to the intent thereby to scape their hands, they together with certain Friers of Prague, of the Order of Carmelites, then coming in, put up new accusations against the said Master Hierome, and drew the same into Articles, being very instant and earnest that he should answer thereunto. And forsomuch as his Judges, and certain Cardinals, as the Cardinal of Cambray, the Cardinal de Ursinis, the Cardinal of Aquilegia, and of Florence, considering the malice of the enemies of Master Hierome, did see the great injury that was done unto him, they laboured before the whole Council for his delivery.

Jerome after his Abjuration returned into prison.

Jerome accused answer by Causis, Paletz, and the Carmelites.

The Cardinal of Cambray, with certain other Cardinals labour for the delivery of Jerome.

It happened upon a certain day, as they were labouring in the Council for the delivery of the said Master Hierome, that the Germans and Bohemians his enemies with all force and power resisted against it, crying out that he should in no case be dismissed. Then start up one called Doctor Naso, which said unto the Cardinals, We marvel much of you most reverend Fathers, that your Reverences will make intercession for such a wicked Heretick, for whose sake we in Boheme with the whole Clergy have suffered much trouble and mischief, and peradventure your Fatherhoods shall suffer; and I greatly fear, lest that you have received some rewards either of the King of Boheme, or of these Hereticks. When as the Cardinals were thus rebuked, they discharged themselves of Master Hieromes cause and matter.

Si dimittis hunc non es amicus Cæsaris.

Then his enemies aforesaid obtained to have other Judges appointed, as the Patriarch of Constantinople, and a German Doctor, forsomuch as they did know that the Patriarch was a grievous enemy unto Master Hierome, because he being before appointed Judg by the Council, had condemned John Hus unto death.

The Patriarch of Constantinople gave sentence of death both against Mr. Hiero. and Mr. Hieronim of Prague.

But Mr. Hierome would not answer them in prison, requiring to have open audience, because he would there finally declare unto them his mind, neither would he by any means consent unto those private Judges. Whereupon the Presidents of the Council thinking that the said Master Jerome would renew his Recantation before the said Audience, and confirm the same, did grant him open audience.

In the year of our Lord 1416, the 25th day of May, which was the Saturday before the Ascension of our Lord, the said Master Jerome was brought unto open Audience before the whole Council, to the great Cathedral Church of Constance, where by the Commissioners of the Council, in the behalf of his foresaid enemies, there were laid against him of new a hundred and seven Articles, to the intent that he should not scape the fraie of death, which they provided and laid for him; insomuch as the Judges had before declared that by the saying of the witnesses it was already concluded in the same audience. The day aforesaid, from morning until noon, he answered unto more than forty Articles, most subtilly objected against him; denying that he held or maintained any such Articles as were either hurtful or false, and affirming that those witnesses had deposed them against him falsly and slanderously, as his most cruel and mortal enemies. In the same Session they had not yet proceeded unto death, because that the noon-time drew so fast on, that he could not answer unto the Articles. Wherefore for lack of time sufficient to answer unto the residue of the Articles, there was another time appointed. Which was the third day after the foresaid Saturday before the Ascension of our Lord, at which time again early in the morning he was brought unto the said Cathedral Church to answer unto all the residue of the Articles.

False witness against Hieronm.

The dexterity of Hierome in confuting his adversaries.

In all which Articles, as well those which he had answered unto the Saturday before, as in the residue, he cleared himself very learnedly, refelling his adversaries (who had no cause, but only of malice and displeasure were set against him, and did him great wrong) in such sort, that they were themselves affronted at his Oration, and refutation of their reasonings brought against him, and with shame enough were put to silence: As when one of them had demanded of him what he thought by the Sacrament of the Altar, he answered, Before consecration (said he) it is Bread and Wine; after the consecration it is the true Body and Blood of Christ; adding withal moe words according to their Catholick Faith. Then another rising up, Hierome, said he, there goeth a great rumour of thee, that thou shouldest hold Bread to remain upon the Altar. To whom he pleasantly answered, saying, That he believed Bread to be at the Bakers. At which words being spoken one of the Dominick Friers fumishly took on, and said, What, doth thou deny, that which no man doubteth of? Whose pervish fauciness Hierome with these words did well repress, Hold thy peace (said he) thou Monk, thou hypocrite: And thus the Monk being nipped in the head, sat down dumb. After whom started up another, who with a loud voice cried out, I swear (said he) by my conscience, that to be true, that thou dost deny. To whom said Hierome again, speaking in Latin, Hens, inquit, sic jurare per conscientiam tutissima fallendi via est. That is, thus to swear by your conscience is the next way to deceive. Another there was, a spiteful and a bitter enemy of his whom he called by no other name than dog, or asse. After he had thus refuted them one after another, that they could find no crime against him, neither in this matter, nor in any other, they were all driven to keep silence.

False witnesses.

This done, then were the witnesses called for, who coming in presence gave testimony unto the Articles before produced. By reason whereof the innocent cause of Hierome was oppressed, and began in the Council to be concluded. Then Hierome rising up began to speak: Forsomuch (saith he) as you have heard mine adversaries so diligently hitherto, convenient it is that you should also now hear me to speak for my self. Whereupon with much difficulty at last audience was given in the Council for him to say his mind. Which being granted, he from morning to noon continuing, intreated of divers and sundry matters, with great learning and eloquence. Who first beginning with his prayer to God, belought him to give him spirit, ability, and utterance, which might most tend to the profit and salvation of his own soul. And so entring into his Oration.

Audience hardly given to Hierome to speak for himself.

The Oration of Hierome had before the Council.

I Know, saith he, Reverend Lords, that there have been many excellent men, which have suffered much otherwise than they have deserved, being oppressed with false witnesses, and condemned with wrong judgments. And so beginning with Socrates, he declared how he was unjustly condemned of his Countrymen, neither would he escape when he might; taking from us the fear of two things, which seem most bitter to men, to wit, of imprisonment and death. Then he inferred the captivity of Plato, the banishment of Anaxagoras, and the torments of Zeno. Moreover, he brought in the wrongful condemnation of many Gentiles, as the banishment of Rutilius, reciting also the unworthy death of Boetius and of others, whom Boetius himself doth write of.

Plato. Anaxagoras Zeno. Rutilius. Boetius.

From thence he came to the examples of the Hebrews, and first began with Moses the deliverer of the people, and the Law-giver, how he was oftentimes slandered of his people as being a seducer and contemner of the people. Joseph also, saith he, for envy was sold of his Brethren, and Josue, for false suspition of whoredom was cast into bands. Besides these, he reciteth Eliseus, Daniel, and almost all the Prophets, who as contemners of God, and seditious persons, were oppressed with wrongful condemnation. From thence he proceeded to the judgment of Susanna, and of divers other besides, who being good and holy men, yet were they unjustly cast away with wrongful sentence. At the length he came to John Baptist, and so in long process he descended unto our Saviour, declaring how it was evident to all men, by what false witnesses both he and John Baptist were condemned. Moreover, how Stephen was slain by the College of the Priests, and how all the Apostles were condemned to death, not as good men, but as seditious stirrers up of the people, and contemners of the gods, and evil doers. It is unjust, saith he, unjustly to be condemned one Priest of another, and yet he proved that the same hath so happened most unjustly in that Council of Priests. These things did he discourse at large, with marvellous eloquence, and with singular admiration of all that heard him.

And forasmuch as all the whole sum of the cause did rest only in the witnesses, by many reasons he proved that no credit was to be given unto them, especially seeing they spake all things of no truth, but only of hatred, malice, and envy. And so prosecuting the matter, so lively and expresly he opened unto them the causes of their hatred, that he had almost persuaded them. So lively and likely their hatred was detected, that almost no truft was given to their testimonies, save only for the cause and quarrel wherein they stood touching the Popes Doctrine. All mens minds here were moved and bending to mercy towards him; for he told them how that he of his own accord came up to the Council, and to purge himself he did open unto them all his life and doings, being full of vertue and godliness. This was (saith he) the old manner of ancient and learned men, and most holy Elders, that in matters of Faith, they did differ many times in arguments, not to destroy the Faith, but to find out the verity. So did Augustine and Jerome dissent, not only being divers; but also contrary one from the other, and yet without all suspition of heresie.

The false Witness of Hierom refuted.

All this while the Popes holy Council did wait still, when he would begin to excuse himself, and to retract those things which were objected against him, and to crave pardon of the Council. But he perfisting still in his constant Oration, did acknowledg no error, nor gave any signification of retractation.

At last entring into the praise and commendation of Master John Hus, he affirmed that he was a good, just, and holy man, and much unworthy that death which he did suffer. Whom he did know from his youth upward, to be neither fornicator, drunkard, neither any evil or vicious person, but a chaft and sober man, and a just and true Preacher of the holy Gospel; and whatsoever things Master John Hus and Wickliff had holden or written, especially against the abuse and pomp of the Clergy, he would affirm even unto the death, that they were holy and blessed men, and that in all points of the Catholick Faith he doth believe as the holy Catholick Church doth hold or believe. And finally he did conclude, that all such Articles as John Wickliff and John Hus had written and put forth against the enormities, pomp and disorder of the Prelates, he would firmly and stedfastly, without recantation hold and defend even unto the death. And last of all he added, that all the sins that ever he had committed, did not so much gnaw and trouble his conscience, as did that only sin, which he had committed in that most pestiferous fact, when as in his recantation he had unjustly spoken against that good and holy man and his Doctrine, and specially in consenting unto his wicked condemnation, concluding that he did utterly revoke and deny that wicked recantation which he made in that most cursed place, and that he did it through weakness of heart and fear of death: And moreover, that whatsoever thing he hath spoken against that blessed man, he hath altogether lyed upon him, and that he doth repent him with his whole heart that ever he did it.

Hierome commendeth the life and believeth the death of John Hus.

Hierome recanteth his speaking against John Hus.

And

Kings 1 Hen. 5.

And at the hearing hereof the hearts of the hearers were not a little sorry. For they wished and desired greatly that such a singular man should be saved, if otherwise their blind superstition would have suffered it. But he continued still in his prefixed sentence, seeming to desire rather death than life. And perfisting in the praise of John Hus, he added moreover, that he never maintained any Doctrine against the state of the Church, but only spake against the abuses of the Clergy, against the pride, pomp, and excess of the Prelates. Forsomuch as the Patrimonies of the Churches were first given for the poor, then for hospitality, and thirdly to the reparations of the Churches; it was a grief to that good man (said he) to see the same mispent and cast away upon Harlots, great feastings, and keeping of horses and dogs, upon gorgeous apparel, and such other things unbeseeming Christian Religion. And herein he shewed himself marvellous eloquent; yea never more.

He never maintained any Doctrine against the Church of Rome, but only spake against their naughty life.

And when his Oration was interrupted many times by divers of them, carping at his sentences as he was in speaking, yet was there none of all those that interrupted him which scaped unblanckt, but he brought them all to confusion, and put them to silence. When no noise began, he ceased to speak, and after began again, proceeding in his Oration, and desiring them to give him leave a while to speak, whom they hereafter should hear no more, neither yet was his mind ever dashed at all these noises and tumults.

Hierome did put them to silence.

And this was marvellous in him to behold, notwithstanding he continued in strait prison three hundred forty days, having neither Book, nor almost light to read by, yet how admirable his memory served him: Declaring how all those pains of his strait handling did not so much grieve him, as he did wonder rather to see their unkind humanity towards him.

Jerome in prison 340 days. The excellent memory in Mr. Hierome.

When he had spoken these and many things as touching the praise of John Wickliff, and John Hus, they which sat in the Council whispered together, saying, By these his words it appeareth that he is at a point with himself. Then was he again carried into prison, and grievously fettered by the hands, arms and feet, with great chains and fetters of Iron.

Mr. Hierome brought again before the Councel.

The Saturday next before the Ascension-day, early in the morning, he was brought with a great number of armed men unto the Cathedral Church before the open Congregation, to have his judgment given him. There they exhorted him that those things which he had before spoken in the open audience, as is aforesaid touching the praise and commendation of Master John Wickliff, and Master John Hus, confirming and establishing their Doctrine, he would yet recant the same: But he marvellous stoutly without all fear spake against them, and amongst other things said unto them, I take God to my witness, and I protest here before you all, that I do believe and hold the Articles of the Faith, as the holy Catholick Church doth hold and believe the same; but for this cause shall I now be condemned, for that I will not consent with you unto the condemnation of those most holy and blessed men aforesaid, whom you have most wickedly condemned for certain Articles, detesting and abhorring your wicked and abominable life. Then he confessed there before them all his belief, and uttered many things very profoundly and eloquently, insomuch that all men there present could not sufficiently commend and praise his great eloquence and excellent learning, and by no means could they induce or persuade him to recant.

Mr. Hierome boldeth all the Articles of the Catholick Church.

The Eloquence of Mr. Hierome.

Then a certain Bishop, named the Bishop of Londy, made a certain Sermon exhortative against Master Hierome, persuading to his condemnation.

After the Bishop had ended the said Sermon, Master Hierome said again unto them, You shall condemn me wickedly and unjustly. But I after my death will leave a remorse in your conscience, and a nail in your hearts: Et cito vos omnes, ut respondeatis mihi coram altissimo & justissimo Judice post centum annos. That is, And here I cite you to answer unto me before the most high and just Judge, within a hundred years.

The Prophesie of Mr. Hierome.

No pen can sufficiently write, or note those things which he most eloquently, profoundly, and Philosophically had spoken in the said Audience, neither can any tongue sufficiently declare the same; wherefore I have but only touched here the superficial matter of his talk, partly and not wholly noting the same. Finally, when as by no means he might be perswaded to recant the premisses, immediately even in his presence, the sentence and judgment of his condemnation was given against him, and read before him.

The sentence read 3 ages an't Mr. Hierome.

IN the Name of God, Amen. Christ our God, and our Saviour being the true Vine, whose Father is the Husbandman, taught his Disciples, and all other faithful men, saying, If any man dwell not in me, let him be cast out as a bough or branch, and let him wither and dry, &c. The Doctrine and precepts of which most excellent Doctor and Master this most Sacred Synod of Constance executing and following in the cause of inquisition against Hereticks, being moved by this said Sacred Synod, through report, publick fame, and open infamation, proceeding against Hierome of Prague, Master of Art, Lay-man. By the acts and processes of whose cause it appeareth that the said Master Hierome hath holden, maintained, and taught divers Articles heretical and erroneous, lately reproved and condemned by the holy Fathers, some being very blasphemous, othersome offending godly ears, and many temerarious and seditious, which have been affirmed, maintained, preached and taught by the men of most damnable memory, John Wickliff, and John Hus, the which are also written in divers of their Works and Books. Which Articles of Doctrine and Books of the said John Hus, and John Wickliff, together with their memory, and the person of the said John Hus, were by the said sacred Synod condemned of Heresie. The which sentence of condemnation this Hierome afterward during the time of Inquisition, acknowledged in the said sacred Synod, and approved the true Catholick and Apostolick Faith, thereunto consenting, accurling all Heresie, (specially that whereof he was infamed, and confessed himself to be infamed, and that which in times past John Hus and John Wickliff maintained and taught in their Works, Sermons, and Books, for the which the said Wickliff and Hus, together with their Doctrine and Errors, were by the said sacred Synod as heretical condemned. The condemnation of all which the premisses he did openly profess and allow, and did swear that he would persevere and continue in the verity of that faith. And if that he should presume at any time to hold opinion, or preach contrary thereunto, that he would submit himself to the trial and truth of the Canons, and be bound to perpetual punishment. And this his profession written with his own hand, he delivered up unto the holy Council. Many days after his said profession and abjuration, as a dog returning unto his vomit, to the intent he might openly vomit up the most pestilent poyson which had long lurked and lyen hid in his breast, he required and desired that he might be openly heard before the Council. The which being granted unto him, he affirmed, said and professed before the whole Synod, being publickly gathered together, that he had wickedly consented and agreed to the sentence and judgment of the condemnation of the said Wickliff and Hus, and that he had most shamefully lyed in approving and allowing the said sentence, neither was he ashamed to confess that he had lyed; yea, he did also revoke and recant his confession, approbation, and protestation, which he had made upon their condemnation, affirming that he never at any time had read any errors or heresie in the Books and Treatises of the said Wickliff and Hus. Albeit he had before confessed it, and it is evidently proved, that he did diligently study, read, and preach their Books, wherein it is manifest that there are contained many errors and heresies. Also the said Master Hierome did profess as touching the Sacrament of the Altar, and the Transubstantiation of the Bread into the Body of Christ, that he doth hold and believe as the Church doth hold and believe, saying also that he doth give more credit unto Saint Augustine, and the other Doctors of the Church, than unto Wickliff and Hus. It appeareth moreover by the premisses, that the said Hierome is an adherent and maintainer of the said Wickliff and Hus, and their Errors, and both is and hath been a favourer of them. Wherefore the said sacred Synod determineth the said Master Hierome as a rotten and withered branch, not growing upon the Vine, to be cut off and caſt out. The ſaid Synod alſo pronounceth, declareth and condemneth him as an Heretick and drowned in all kind of Hereſies, excommunicate and accurſed, leaving him unto the arbitrement and judgment of the ſecular Judg, to receive juſt and due puniſhment, according to the quality of ſo great an offence; the ſacred Synod notwithſtanding intreating that the ſaid Judg would moderate his ſentence of judgment without peril of death.

M. Hieroms given to the ſecular power.

The which ſentence ſo given before his face, and ended, a great and long Miter of paper was brought unto him, painted about with red Devils, the which when he beheld and ſaw, throwing away his Hood upon the ground amongſt the Prelates, he took the Miter and put it upon his head, ſaying, Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, when as he ſhould ſuffer death for me moſt wretched ſinner, did wear a Crown of Thorn upon his head; and I for his ſake inſtead of that Crown, will willingly wear this Miter and Cap. Afterward he was laid hold of by the ſecular power.

M. Hierom conſulted to the ſecular power.

After that he was led out of the ſaid Church to the place of execution; when he was going out of the Church, with a cheerful countenance and a loud voice lifting his eyes up unto Heaven, he began to ſing, Credo in unum Deum, as it is accuſtomed to be ſung in the Church. Afterward as he paſſed along, he did ſing ſome Canticles of the Church; the which being ended, in the entring out of the Gate of the City, as men go unto Gothlehem, he did ſing this Hymn, Felix namque. And that Reſpond being ended, after he came to the place of Execution where Maſter John Hus before had ſuffered death innocently, kneeling down before an Image which was like unto the Picture of Maſter John Hus, which was there prepared to burn Maſter Jerome, he made a certain devout prayer.

M. Hieron ſings etc.

While he was thus praying, the tormentors took him up, and lifting him up from the ground ſpoiled him of all his garments, and left him naked, and afterwards girded him about the loyns with a linnen cloth, and bound him faſt with cords and chains of Iron, to the ſaid Image which was made faſt unto the earth; and ſo ſtanding upon the ground, when as they began to lay the wood about him, he ſung Salve feſta dies. And when the Hymn was ended, he ſung again with a loud voice, Credo in unum Deum, unto the end. That being ended, he ſaid unto the people in the German Tongue in effect as followeth. Dearly beloved children, even as I have now ſung, ſo do I believe, and none otherwiſe. And this Creed is my whole Faith, notwithſtanding now I die for this cauſe, becauſe I would not conſent and agree to the Council, and with them affirm and hold that Maſter John Hus was by them holily and juſtly condemned; for I did know well enough that he was a true Preacher of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt.

After that he was compaſſed in with the wood up to the crown of the head, they caſt all his garments upon the wood alſo, and with a fire-brand they ſet it on fire. The which being once fired, he began to ſing with a loud voice, In manus tuas Domine commendo ſpiritum meum. When that was ended, and that he began vehemently to burn, he ſaid in the vulgar Bohemian Tongue, O Lord God, Father Almighty, have mercy upon me, and be merciful unto mine offences, for thou knoweſt how ſincerely I have loved thy truth. Then his voice by the vehemency of the fire was choaked and ſtopped, that it was no longer heard, but he moved continually his mouth and lips, as though he had ſtill prayed or ſpoken within himſelf.

The laſt words of M. Hierome.

When as in a manner his whole Body with his Beard was burned round about, and that there appeared through the great burning upon his Body certain great Bladders as big as an Egg, yet he continually very ſtrongly and ſtoutly moved, and ſhaked his head and mouth, by the ſpace almoſt of one quarter of an hour. So burning in the fire, he lived with great pain and martyrdom, whileſt one might eaſily have gone from St. Clements over the Bridg unto our Lady-Church; he was of ſuch a ſtout and ſtrong nature. After that he was thus dead in the fire, by and by they brought his Bedding, his Straw-bed, his Boots, his Hood, and all other things that he had in the priſon, and burned them all to aſhes in the ſame fire. The which aſhes, after that the fire was out, they did diligently gather together, and carry them in a Cart, and caſt them into the river of Rhoine, which ran hard by the City.

That man which was the true reporter hereof, and which teſtified unto us the acts and doings about the condemnation of Maſter Jerome, and ſent the ſame unto us to Prague in writing, doth thus conclude. All theſe things (ſaid he) I did behold, ſee, and hear to be done in this form and manner. And if any man do tell you the contrary, do not credit him; for all thoſe things which happened unto him when he came toward Conſtance, and alſo at his firſt coming unto Conſtance of his own free will, and afterward when he was brought bound unto Conſtance, as is aforeſaid, I my ſelf did ſee and perfectly behold, and for a perpetual memory thereof to be had for ever, I have directed the ſame unto you, not lying or falſifying any point thereof, as he which is the ſearcher of all mens hearts can bear

KING 1 Hier. 5.

The truth of this ſtory bear me witneſs, willing rather to ſuſtain the note of ignorance and rudeneſs of ſtile, to bear witneſs unto the truth, than I would by any means be compelled by tickling, or flattering the ears of the hearers with fained and cloaked ſpeech, to ſwarve or go aſide from the truth.

Thus end the Tragical Hiſtories of Maſter John Hus, and Maſter Jerome of Prague, faithfully gathered and collected by a certain Bohemian, being a preſent witneſs and beholder of the ſame, written and compiled firſt in Latin, and ſo ſent by the ſaid Bohemian into his Country of Boheme, and again tranſlated out of the Latin with like fidelity into our Engliſh Tongue.

In the mean time while Maſter Hierome was in this trouble, and before the Council, the Nobles and Lords of Boheme and of Moravia (but not a little agrieved thereat) directed their Letters unto this barbarous Council of Popiſh murderers, in tenor and form of words as followeth.

The Letter of the Fifty four Nobles of Moravia, written unto the Council of Conſtance in the defence of Maſter John Hus and Hierome of Prague.

To the right reverend Fathers and Lords in Chriſt, the Lords Cardinals, Patriarchs, Primates, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Ambaſſadors, Doctors and Maſters, and to the whole Council of Conſtance, We the Nobles, Lords, Knights and Eſquires, of the famous Marqueſdom of Moravia, with the deſire of all goodneſs, and the obſervation of the Commandments of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Mat. 7.

Rom. 13.

FOr*ſomuch as every man both by the Law of Nature, and alſo by Gods Law, is commanded to do that unto another man, which he would have done unto himſelf, and is forbidden to do that thing unto another, which he would not have done unto himſelf, as our Saviour ſaith,* All things whatſoever you will that men ſhould do unto you, the ſame do you unto them, for this is the Law and the Prophets; yea, the Law is fulfilled in this one point, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf: We therefore (God being our Author) having reſpect as much as in us lyeth unto the ſaid Law of God, and the love of our neighbour, before did ſend our Letters unto Conſtance for our dearly beloved friend of good memory, Maſter John Hus, Bachelor of Divinity, and Preacher of the Goſpel. Whom of late in the Council of Conſtance (we know not with what ſpirit being led) you have condemned as an obſtinate Heretick; neither having confeſſed any thing, neither being lawfully convicted as were expedient; having no errors or hereſies declared or laid againſt him, but only at the inſtiter, falſe and importune accuſations, ſuggeſtions and inſtigations of his mortal enemies, and the Traytors of our Kingdom and Marqueſdom of Moravia. And being thus unmercifully condemned, you have ſlain him with moſt ſhameful and cruel death, to the perpetual ſhame and infamy of our moſt Chriſtian Kingdom of Boheme, and the famy of our moſt Chriſtian Kingdom of Moravia (as we have written unto Conſtance, unto the moſt noble Prince and Lord, the Lord Sigiſmund King of Romans, and of Hungary, the heir and ſucceſſor of our Kingdom) the which was alſo read and publiſhed in your Congregations, which we will here alſo have enrolled; and have burned him, as it is reported, in reproach and contempt of us.

Wherefore we have thought good even now to direct our Letters Patents to your Reverences now preſent in the behalf of Maſter John Hus, openly profeſſing and proteſting both with heart and mouth, that he the ſaid Maſter John Hus was a juſt, good, and Catholick man, and a long ſeaſon worthily commended and allowed in our Kingdoms for his life and converſation. He alſo preached and taught us and our ſubjects the Law of the Goſpel, and of the holy Prophets, and the Books of the Old and New Teſtament, according to the Expoſition of the holy Doctors approved by the Church, and left many Monuments in writing, moſt conſtantly deteſting and abhorring all errors and hereſies, continually admoniſhing both us and all faithful Chriſtians to do the like, diligently exhorting all men as much as in him lay, by his words, writings, and travel, unto quietneſs and concord; ſo that uſing all the diligence that we might, we never heard or could underſtand, that Maſter John Hus had preached, taught, or by any means affirmed any error or hereſie in his Sermons, or that by any manner of means he had offended us, or our ſubjects, either by word or deed, but that he always led a quiet and a godly life in Chriſt, exhorting all men diligently, both by his word and by his works, as much as he might, to obſerve and keep the Law of the Goſpel, and the inſtitutions of the holy Fathers, after the preaching of our Holy Mother the Church, and to the edifying of mens ſouls. Neither did theſe premiſſes which you had ſo perpetrated to the reproach both of us and our Kingdom and Marqueſdom, ſuffice and content you, but that alſo without all mercy and pity you have apprehended, impriſoned and condemned, and even now peraduenture, like as you did Maſter John Hus, you have moſt cruelly murdered the worſhipful man Maſter Jerome of Prague, a man abounding in eloquence, Maſter of the Seven Liberal Arts, and a famous Philoſopher, not being ſeen, heard, examined, neither convict, but only at the inſtiter and falſe accuſations of his and our accuſers and betrayers.

All that will live godly in Chriſt. 2 Tim. 3.

Defence of Mr. Jerome of Prague.

Furthermore, it is come to our knowledg and underſtanding (which we do not without great grief rehearſe) as we may alſo evidently gather by your writings, how that certain detractors, odious both to God and men, privy enviers and betrayers, have wickedly and grievouſly, alleit falſly and trayterouſly, accuſed us, our Kingdom and Marqueſdom aforeſaid, before you in your Council, that in the ſaid Kingdom of Boheme and Marqueſdom of Moravia, divers errors are ſprung up, which have grievouſly and manifoldly infected both our hearts, and alſo the hearts of many faithful men; inſomuch that without a ſpeedy ſtop or ſtay of correction, the ſaid Kingdom and Marqueſdom, together with the faithful Chriſtians therein, ſhould incur an irrecuperable loſs and ruin of their ſouls.

Theſe cruel and pernicious injuries which are laid unto us, and to our ſaid Kingdom and Marqueſdom albeit moſt falſly and ſlanderouſly, how may we ſuffer? For ſomuch as through the grace of God (when in a manner all other Kingdoms of the World have oftentimes wavered, making Schiſmes and Antipopes) our moſt gracious Kingdom of Boheme, and moſt noble Marqueſdom of Moravia, ſince the time they did receive the Catholick Faith of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as a moſt perfect * Quadrant have always without reproof ſtuck upon the Church of Rome, and have ſincerely done their true obedience. Alſo with how great coſts and charges, and great travel, with what worſhip and due reverence they have reverenced the Holy Mother the Church and her Paſtors, by their Princes and faithful Subjects, it is more manifeſt than the day-light unto the whole world; and your ſelves, if you will confeſs the truth, can witneſs the ſame alſo.

He meaneth the long ſchiſm for ken of before, where three Popes were ſtriving one againſt another.

* A Quadrant being foure-ſquare, proverbially ſignifieth a man that is conſtant and immutable.

Wherefore, that we, according to the mind of the Apoſtle, may procure himſelf and good things, not only before God, but before men alſo, and leſt by neglecting the famous renown of the Kingdom and Marqueſdom, we be found cruel toward our neighbours; having a ſtedfaſt hope, a pure and ſincere conſcience and intent, and a certain true faith in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord; by the tenour of theſe we ſignifie and declare unto your Fatherhoods, and to all faithful Chriſtians, openly profeſſing both with heart and mouth, that whatſoever man, of what eſtate, preheminence, dignity, condition, degree, or religion ſoever he be, which hath, ſaid, or affirmed, either doth ſay or affirm, that in the ſaid Kingdom of Boheme, and Marqueſdom of Moravia, hereſies have ſprung up which have infected us and other faithful Chriſtians, as is aforeſaid (the only perſon of our moſt noble Prince and Lord, Sigiſmund King of Romans, and of Hungary, &c. our Lord and heir ſucceſſour, being ſet apart, whom we truſt and believe, not to be guilty in the premiſſes) all and every ſuch man (as is aforeſaid) doth lye falſely upon his head, as a wicked and naughty Traytor and betrayer of the ſaid Kingdom and Marqueſdom, and moſt trayterous unto us, and moſt pernicious heretick, the ſon of all malice and wickedneſs, yea, and of the Devil himſelf; Joh. 8. who is a lyar, and the father of all lyes.

Notwithſtanding, we for this preſent committing the foreſaid injuries unto God, unto whom vengeance pertaineth, who will alſo abundantly reward the workers of iniquity, will proſecute them more amply before him, whom God ſhall shall appoint in the Apostolick See, to govern his holy Church, as the only and undoubted Pastor. Unto whom, God willing, we exhibiting our due reverence and obedience as faithful children, in those things which are lawful, honest, and agreeable to reason and the Law of God will make our request and petition, that speedy remedy may be provided for us, our said Kingdom and Marquesdom upon the premisses, according to the Law of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the Institutions of the holy Fathers. The premisses notwithstanding, we setting apart all fear and mens Ordinances provided to the contrary, will maintain and defend the Law of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the devout, humble and constant Preachers thereof, given to the shedding of our Bloud.

These Noblemen offered their obedience to the Pope, no further than was lawful, honest and agreeable to reason and the law of God. Mark this, and learn, you Noblemen.

Round about the said Letters there were fifty four Seals hanging, and their Names subscribed, whose Seals they were. The Names of which Noblemen I thought it good here to annex withal, partly for the more credit of that which hath been said, partly also for examples sake, to the intent that our Noblemen and Gentlemen in this our Realm of England, now living in this clear light of the Gospel, may by their example understand, that if they joyn themselves with the Gospel of Jesus, zealously, and as they should do, yet are they neither the first, nor the most that so have done before them: if not, yet the truth may here remain in the story to their shame, or else to their instruction, seeing so many noble and worthy Gentlemen, within the small Kingdom of Bohemia, to be so forward in those so dark days, and among so many enemies two hundred years ago, to take part with Christ; and yet our Gentlemen here in such long continuance of time, being so diligently taught, are neither in number nor in zeal to them to be compared, but will still take part, contrary both to Christ, and to the example of these Nobles, whose Names they may see and read here following:

After these things thus declared and discoursed, concerning the History of John Hus and Jerome of Prague, the order of place and Country next would require, consequently to infer and comprehend the great troubles and perturbations which happened after, and upon the death of these Men in the Country of Boheme: but the order of time calleth me back, first to other matters here of our own Country, which passed in the mean time with us in England. Which things being taken by the way, and finished, we will (Christ willing) afterward return to the tractation hereof, to prosecute the troubles and conflicts of the Bohemians, with other things beside, pertaining to the later end of the Council of Constance, and chooling of Pope Martin, as the order of years and time shall require.

{KING} Hen. 5.

Ye heard before, how after the death of Thomas Arundel Archbishop of Canterbury, succeeded Henry Chichesley, in the year of our Lord one thousand four hundred and fourteen, and fate twenty five years. In whose time was much trouble and great affliction of good men here in England; of whom many were compelled to abjure, some were burned, divers were driven to Exile. Whereof partly now to intreat, as we find them in Registers and Histories recorded, we will first begin with John Claydon Coriar, of London, and Richard Turming, whom Robert Fabian doth falsly affirm to be burned in the year wherein Sir Roger Acton and Master Brown suffered, who indeed suffered not before the second year of Henry Chichesley being Archbishop of Canterbury, which was in the year of our Lord, one thousand four hundred and thirteen. The History of which John Claydon in the Registers is thus declared.

Vide supra. Henry Chichesley Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Story of John Claydon Coriar, and of Richard Turming Baker.

The History of J. Claydon Coriar of London, and Richard Turming Baker. Ex Regist. Cant.

THE seventeenth of August one thousand four hundred and fifteen, did personally appear John Claydon Coriar of London (arrested by the Mayor of the said City for the suspicion of Heresie) before Henry Archbishop of Canterbury, in Saint Paul's Church; which John (it being objected to him by the Archbishop, that in the City of London, and other places of the Province of Canterbury, he was suspected by divers godly and learned Men for Heresie, and to be contrary to the Catholick Faith, and Determination of the Church) did openly confess, and denied not, but that he had been for the space of twenty years suspected both about the City of London, and also in the Province of Canterbury, and especially of the common sort, for Lollardy and Heresie, and to be contrary to the Catholick Faith and Determination of the Church of Rome, and defamed of the same all the time aforesaid.

J. Claydon examined.

Informach, that in the time of Master Robert Braybrook Bishop of London deceased, he was for the space of two years committed to the Prison of Conway for the foresaid defamation and suspicion, and for the same cause also he was in Prison in the Fleet for three years. Out of which Prison he (in the Reign of King Henry the fourth) was brought before the Lord John Scarle then Chancellor to the King, and there did abjure all heresie and error. And the said John Claydon being asked of the said Archbishop whether he did abjure the Heresie of which he was suspect before any other? did confess, that in a Convocation at London in Paul's Church before Thomas Arundel late Archbishop deceased, he did abjure all such Doctrine, which they called Heresie and Error, contrary to the Catholick Faith and Determination of the Church, and that he had not only left such Articles and Opinions, wherein he was defamed, but also did abstain from all company that were suspected of such Opinions, so that he should neither give aid, help, counsel, nor favour unto them.

Robert Braybrook Bishop of London deposed, he was first imprisoned by Robert Bishop of London.

J. Claydon before abjured.

And moreover, the said John was asked by the said Archbishop, whether ever he had in his house since his Abjuration, in his keeping, any books written in English, Books. Whereunto he confessed, that he would not deny, but that he had in his house, and in his keeping many English books, for he was arrested by the Mayor of the City of London for such books as he had, which books (as he thought) were in the Mayors keeping. Upon the which the Mayor did did openly confess, that he had such Books in his keeping, which in his judgment were the worst, and the most perverse that ever he did read or see, and one Book that was well bound in red Leather, of parchment, written in a good English hand; and among the other Books found with the said John Claydon, the Mayor gave up the said Book before the Archbishop. Whereupon the said John Claydon, being asked of the Archbishop if he knew that Book, did openly confess that he knew it very well, because he caused it to be written of his own costs and charges, for which he spent much money thereupon since his Abjuration. Then was he asked who wrote it. He did answer, one called John Grime.

{KING} Hen. 5. The judgement of the Mayor of London.

Claydon bestowed much money upon English books.

And further, being required what the said John Grime was, he answered, he could not tell. Again, being demanded whether he did ever read the same Book, he did confess, that he could not read, but he had heard the fourth part thereof read of one John Fullar. And being asked, whether he thought the contents of that Book to be Catholick, profitable, good and true? He answered, that many things which he had heard in the same Book, were both profitable, good and healthful to his soul; and as he said, he had great affection to the said Book, for a Sermon preached at Hersfaldowne, that was written in the said Book. And being further asked, whether, since the time of his said Abjuration, he did commune with one Richard Baker of the City aforesaid; he did answer, yea: for the said Richard Baker did come often unto his house to have communication with him. And being asked whether he knew the said Richard to be suspected, and defamed of Heresie, he did answer again, that he knew well that the said Richard was suspected and defamed of many Men and Women in the City of London, as one whom they thought to be an Heretick.

J. Claydon could not read.

Richard Turming Baker.

This Turming before was then in Prison.

Which confession being made, he did cause the said Books to be delivered to Master Robert Gilbert, Doctor of Divinity, to William Lindewood Doctor of both Laws, and other Clerks to be examined, and in the mean time, David Beard, Alexander Plulip, and Balthasar Mero, were taken for witnesses against him, and were committed to be examined to Master John Escourt General Examiner of Canterbury. This done, the Archbishop continued his Session till Munday next in the same place. Which Munday being come, which was the 20th of the said Month, the said Master Escourt openly and publickly exhibited the witnesses, being openly read before the Archbishop, and other Bishops; which being read, then after that were read divers tractations, found in the house of the said John Claydon: out of the which being examined, divers points were gathered and noted for Heresies and Errors, and especially out of the Book aforesaid, which Book the said John Claydon confessed by his own costs to be written and bound, which Book was intituled, The Lanthorn of Light. In the which, and in the other examined, were these Articles under written contained:

Will. Lindewood Doctor of both Laws.

An English Book, intituled, The Lanthorn of Light.

1. First, Upon the Text of the Gospel, how the enemy did sow the Tares, there is said thus; That wicked Antichrist the Pope hath sowed among the Laws of Christ his Popish and corrupt Decrees, which are of no authority, strength, nor value.

2. That the Archbishops and Bishops, speaking indifferently, are the Seats of the Beast Antichrist, when he sitteth in them, and reigneth above other people in the dark caves of Errors and Heresies.

3. That the Bishops Licence, for a Man to preach the Word of God, is the true Character of the Beast, i. Antichrist, and therefore simple and faithful Priests may preach when they will against the prohibition of that Antichrist, and without Licence.

The head and tail of Antichrist.

4. That the Court of Rome is the chief Head of Antichrist, and the Bishops be the body; and the new Sects, that is, the Monks, Canons and Friers, brought in not by Christ, but damnably by the Pope, be the venomous and pestiferous Tail of Antichrist.

This is true, speaking of the invisible Church.

5. That no Reprobate is a Member of the Church, but only such as be elected and predestinate to Salvation; seeing the Church is no other thing but the Congregation of faithful souls, which do and will keep their Faith constantly, as well in deed as in word.

6. That Christ did never plant private Religions in the Church, but whilst he lived in this world, he did root them out. By which it appeareth that private Religions be unprofitable branches in the Church, and to be rooted out.

7. That the material Churches should not be decked with Gold, Silver and Precious Stones sumptuously, but the followers of the humility of Jesus Christ ought to worship their Lord God humbly in mean and simple houses, and not in great buildings, as the Churches be now adays.

Two causes of perfection noted.

8. That there be two chief causes of the Perfection of the Christians: one is, the Priests unlawful keeping of temporal and superfluous goods; the other is, the unstable begging of the Friers, with their high buildings.

Four conditions to give Alms.

9. That Alms is not given vertuously nor lawfully, except it be given with these four conditions: first, unless it be given to the honour of God: secondly, unless it be given of goods justly gotten: thirdly, unless it be given to such a person as the giver thereof knoweth to be in charity: and fourthly, unless it be given to such as have need, and do not dissemble.

10. That the often singing in the Church is not founded in the Scripture, and therefore it is not lawful for Priests to occupy themselves with singing in the Church, but with the study of the Law of Christ, and preaching his Word.

That Bread remaineth in the Sacrament.

11. That Judas did receive the Body of Christ in Bread, and his Bloud in Wine. In the which it doth plainly appear, that after Consecration of Bread and Wine made, the same Bread and Wine that was before, doth truly remain on the Altar.

12. That all Ecclesiastical Suffrages do profit all vertuous and godly persons indifferently.

13. That the Popes and the Bishops Indulgences be unprofitable, neither can they profit them to whom they be given by any means.

14. That the Laity is not bound to obey the Prelates, whatsoever they command, unless the Prelates do watch to give God a just account of the souls of them.

15. That Images are not to be fought to by Pilgrimages, neither is it lawful for Christians to bow their Knees to them, neither to kiss them, nor to give them any manner of Reverence.

The books of J. Claydon to be burned.

For the which Articles, the Archbishop with other Bishops, and divers learned communing together, first condemned the Books as heretical, and burned them in fire: and then because they thought the said John Claydon to be forsworn and false into Heresie, the Archbishop did proceed to his definitive sentence against the said John, personally appearing before him in judgment (his Confessions being read and deposed against him) after this manner:

The Sentence and condemnation of J. Claydon.

IN the Name of God, Amen. We Henry by the grace of God Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apostolick See, in a certain cause of heretical gravity, and of relapse into the same, whereupon John Claydon Layman of the Province of Canterbury, was detected, accused and denounced, and in the said our Province of Canterbury publickly defamed (as by publick fame and common report notoriously to us hath been known) first, sitting in Judgment-seat, and observing all things lawfully required in this behalf, do proceed to the pronouncing of the sentence definitive in form as followeth. The name of Christ being invocated and only set before our eyes, forasmuch as by the acts and things enacted, produced, exhibited and confessed before us, also by divers signs and evidences we have found the said John Claydon to have been, and to be publickly and notoriously relapsed again into his former Heresie, heretofore by him abjured; according to the merits and deserts of the said cause, being of us diligently searched, weighed and pondered before, to the intent that the said John Claydon shall not infect other with his scab, by the consent and assent of our reverend brethren Richard Bishop of London, John Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, and Stephen Bishop of Saint Davids, and of other Doctors, as well of Divinity as of both Laws, and also of other discreet and learned men assisting us in this behalf, we do judge, pronounce and declare the said

John

John Claydon to be relapsed again into his Heresie, which he before did abjure, finally and definitively appointing him to be left unto the secular judgment, and so do leave him by these presents.

J. Claydon committed to the Secular power. Thus John Claydon, receiving his Judgment and Condemnation of the Archbishop, was committed to the Secular power, and by them unjustly and unlawfully was committed to the fire, for that the temporal Magistrate had no such law sufficient for them to burn any such man for Religion condemned of the Prelates, as is above sufficiently proved and declared. But to be short, Quojure, quaqua injuria, John Claydon notwithstanding, by the temporal Magistrates not long after, was had to Smithfield, where meekly he was made a Burnt Offering unto the Lord, Anno 1415.

The Law de comburendo insufficient.

The death and Martyrdom of J. Claydon.

Robert Fabian, and other Chronologers which follow him, add also, that Richard Turming Baker, of whom mention is made before in the Examination of John Claydon, was likewise the same time burned with him in Smithfield. Albeit in the Register I find no sentence of Condemnation given against the said Turming, neither yet in the Story of Saint Albans, is there any such mention of his burning made, but only of the burning of John Claydon aforesaid; wherefore the judgment hereof I leave free to the Reader. Notwithstanding, concerning the said Turming this is certain, that he was accused to the Bishops, and no doubt was in their hands and bands. What afterward was done with him, I refer it unto the Authors.

{KING Hen.5.} J. Claydon, Rich. Turming Baker.

The Burning of John Claidon and Richard Turming.

{Ann. 1416} The next year after the burning of these two aforesaid, and also of John Hus, being burnt at Constance, which was Anno 1416. the Prelates of England seeing the daily encrease of the Gospel, and fearing the ruine of their Papal Kingdom, were busily occupied with all their counsel and diligence to maintain the same. Wherefore to make their state and Kingdom sure, by Statutes, Laws, Constitutions, and terrour of punishment, as Thomas Arundel, and other Prelates had done before, so the forenamed Henry Chichelley Archbishop of Canterbury, in his Convocation holden at London, maketh another constitution (as though there had not enough been made before) against the poor Lollards; the Copy and tenor whereof he sendeth abroad to the Bishop of London, and to other his Suffragans, by them to be put in straight execution, containing in words as followeth:

Bo. Regist. Chichesley 217.

'HEnry by the grace of God Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England and Legate of the chief Seat; To our Reverend Brother in the Lord, Richard, by the grace of God, Bishop of London, health and brotherly love, with continual increase. Lately in our last Convocation in S. Paul's Church in London, being kept by you and other our Brethren and Clergy of our Province, we do remember to have made this Order underwritten, by your consents: When as among many other our cares, this ought to be chief, that by some means we may take those Hereticks, which like Foxes, lurk and hide themselves in the Lords Vineyard; and that the dust of negligence may be utterly shaken from our feet, and from the feet of our fellow brethren; in this the said Convocation of the Prelates and Clergy, we have ordained, that our fellow Brethren, our Suffragans and Archdeacons of our Province of Canterbury, by themselves, their Officials or Commissaries in their Jurisdictions, and every of their charges in their Country, twice every year at the least, do diligently encreafe of the Gospel, and fearing the ruine of their Painquire of and search for all and singular the things aforesaid, that is, what inquisition they have made, and what they have found, and how in the process they have behaved themselves, and what persons so convict they have caused to be put in safe keeping, with what diligence or negligence of the Commissaries aforesaid, with all and all manner of other circumstances premised, and thereunto in any wise appertaining, and especially of the Abjurations, if in the mean time they shall chance to abjure any Heresies, that then in the next Convocation of the Prelates and Clergy under the form aforesaid, they cause the same distinctly and aperly to be certified to us and our successors; And that they deliver effectually to the Official of our Court, the same process to remain with them, or else in the Register of our Court of Canterbury, so that every one, to whom such things appertain, for the further execution of the same process, may have recourse unto the same Official with all effect.

Twice every year to inquire for Lollards.

'We therefore command, that as touching the constitution brought unto your City and Diocesan, you cause the same in convenient place and time to be published, and that in all points you both observe the same your selves, and cause it also of others to be diligently observed: commanding furthermore all and singular our fellow Brethren and Suffragans, that they in like wise cause the same to be published throughout all their Cities and Dioceses, and both diligently observe the same themselves, and also cause all others to do the same; and what thing soever you shall do in the premisses, that you certifie us herewith this and the Feast of St. Peter ad vincula next coming, that you duly certifie us of these things, by your Letters Patents, containing the same effect, sealed with your Seals. Dated at our House in London, the first day of July, Anno 1416.

{KING Hen.5.} 'And if perhaps, they leave not such persons convict unto the Secular Court, yet notwithstanding, let them commit them unto the perpetual or temporal Prisons, as the quality of the cause shall require, until the next Convocation of the Prelates and Clergy of our Province of Canterbury, there personally to remain; and that in the same Prisons they cause them to be kept according as the law requireth: And that of all and singular the things aforesaid, that is, what inquisition they have made, and what they have found, and how in the process they have behaved themselves, and what persons so convict they have caused to be put in safe keeping, with what diligence or negligence of the Commissaries aforesaid, with all and all manner of other circumstances premised, and thereunto in any wise appertaining, and especially of the Abjurations, if in the mean time they shall chance to abjure any Heresies, that then in the next Convocation of the Prelates and Clergy under the form aforesaid, they cause the same distinctly and aperly to be certified to us and our successors; And that they deliver effectually to the Official of our Court, the same process to remain with them, or else in the Register of our Court of Canterbury, so that every one, to whom such things appertain, for the further execution of the same process, may have recourse unto the same Official with all effect.

'We therefore command, that as touching the constitution brought unto your City and Diocesan, you cause the same in convenient place and time to be published, and that in all points you both observe the same your selves, and cause it also of others to be diligently observed: commanding furthermore all and singular our fellow Brethren and Suffragans, that they in like wise cause the same to be published throughout all their Cities and Dioceses, and both diligently observe the same themselves, and also cause all others to do the same; and what thing soever you shall do in the premisses, that you certifie us herewith this and the Feast of St. Peter ad vincula next coming, that you duly certifie us of these things, by your Letters Patents, containing the same effect, sealed with your Seals. Dated at our House in London, the first day of July, Anno 1416.

¶ During the time of this Convocation in the year aboresaid, two Priests were presented and brought before the Bishops, noted and defamed for Hereticks, one named John Barton, unto whom it was objected by Philip Bishop of Lincoln, that he had been excommunicated about six or seven years before, upon Articles concerning Religion, and yet neither would appear, being cited, nor would seek to be reconciled again to the Church. Which things being so proved against him, he was committed to the custody of the foresaid Philip Bishop of Lincoln, and so to be holden in Prison, till he should hear further what should be done.

The trouble of John Barton and Robert Chapel in cause of religion.

This Philip seemeth to be Philip Repingdon often mentioned in the story of Wickliff.

The other was Robert Chapel, otherwise named Holbeach, Chaplain sometimes to the Lord Cobham; unto whom likewise it was objected, that he being under the sentence of Excommunication about three or four years, yet notwithstanding, to the contempt of the Keyes, did continue saying Mass, and preaching, and sought not to be reconciled; Chapel denying that he did know any such Excommunication given out against him. Then was the Copy of his Excommunication first made by the Bishop of Rosf, afterward denounced by the Bishop of London at Pauls-Croft, brought and read before him; and so that done, that Session brake up for that time, which was about the later end of May, Anno 1416.

To differ from the common sort is life and manner, against the Popes law.

R. Chapel abjureth.

The 12th day of the Month of July next following, the said Chapel appeared again before the Archbishop and the Prelates. To whom when it was objected as before, how he had preached without the Bishops Licence in divers places, as at Cobham, at Cowling, and at Shorn; at length, he confessing and submitting himself, desired pardon. Which although it was not at the first granted unto him, yet at the last the Bishop of Rosf. putting in his hands the Decree of the Canon Law; 1. 9. 7. Cap. Quaries, &c. and causing him to read the same, made him to abjure all his former Articles and Opinions as Heretical and Schismatical, never to hold the same again, according to the contents of the foresaid Canon. Whereupon the said Robert, being absolved by the authority of the Archbishop (save only that he should not intermeddle with saying Mass before he had been dispensed from the Pope himself for irregularity) was injoyned by the Archbishop himself for his Penance, standing at Paul's to publish these Articles following unto the people, instead of his confession given him to be read.

Against English Books.

Imprimis, I confess that Bishops, Priests and other Ecclesiastical persons, having no other possession to the contrary, may lawfully have, receive, and retain Lands and Possessions temporal, to dispense and dispose the same and the Rents thereof, to the behoof of themselves, or of their Church where they dwell, according as seemeth good to them.

Articles obtruded to R. Chapel to confess.

2. Item, I confess, That it were very unlawful, yea rather, unjust, that temporal men upon any occasion, whatsoever it be, should take away temporal Lands and Possessions from the Church, either universal or particular, to which they are given, the consideration of the abuse of mortal Prelates, Priests, or other Ministers in the Church conversant (which are mixt together good with bad) abusing the same, to the contrary notwithstanding.

3. Item, I confess, That Peregrinations to the Relicks of Saints, and to holy places, are not prohibited; nor to be contemned of any Catholick, but are available to remission of sins, and approved of holy Fathers, and worthy to be commended.

Mark well this Catholick Doctrine of the Popes Church concerning remission of sins.

4. Item, I confess, That to worship the Images of Christ or of any other Saints, being set up in the Church, or in any other place, is not forbidden; neither is any cause inductive of Idolatry, being so used as the holy Fathers do will them to be worshipped; but rather such Images do profit much to the health of Christians, because they do put us in remembrance of the merits of those Saints whom they represent, and the sight of them doth move and stir up the people to prayers and devotion.

Mark how this Doctrine joyneth with Gods Commandment; and with his Word.

5. Item, I confess, That Auricular Confession used in the Church is necessary for a sinner to the salvation of his soul, and necessary to be done of such a Priest, as is ordained by the Church to hear the confession of the sinner, and to enjoyn him Penance for the same; without which confession (if it may be had) there is no remission of sins to him that is in sin mortal.

Eyr, by this Doctrine the salt mark liveth not by his saith, but by his Confession Auricular.

6. Item, I confess and firmly do hold, that although the Priest be in mortal sin, yet may he make the Body of Christ, and minister other Sacraments and Sacramentals; which nevertheless are profitable to all the faithful, whosoever receive them in faith and devotion of the Church.

How can those Priests be servants of Christ, which be makers of Christ.

7. Item, I confess, That Bishops in their own Dioceses may forbid, decree, or ordain upon reasonable causes, that Priests should not preach, without their special Licence, the Word of God, and that those that do against the same, should suffer the Ecclesiastical censures.

Private religious profitable, if ye could tell wherefore.

8. Item, I confess, That private Religions, as well of Monks, Canons and other, as also of the Begging Friers, being allowed by the Church of Rome, are profitable to the Universal Church, and in no means contrary to Gods Law, but rather founded and authorised thereon.

9. Item, I promise and swear upon these holy Evangelists, which I hold here in my hands, that I will henceforth never hold, affirm, nor by any means teach any thing contrary unto the premisses either openly or privately.

Strait inquisition in England.

After the setting out of the Constitution aforesaid, in the days of the abovenamed Henry Chichelley Archbishop of Canterbury, great Inquisition hereupon followed in England, and many good men, whose hearts began to be won to the Gospel, were brought to much vexation, and called outwardly to abjure.

Christ had the hearts of men, they had their bodies.

Thus, while Christ had the inward hearts of men; yet the Catholick Antichrist would needs possess their outward bodies, and make them sing after his song. In the number of whom, being compelled to abjure, besides the other aforesaid, was also John Taylor of the Parish of St. Michaels at Quern: William Famer, Master of Art and Physician, who had long remained in Prison, and at length, after Abjuration, was licensed with his Keeper to practise his Physick.

A brief sum of such as abjured, under Henry Chichesley. J. Taylor. Will. Famer.

Also John Dwarf, so named for his low stature, which was sent by the Duke of Bedford to the foresaid Chichelley,

J. Dwarf.

and

and other Bishops, to be examined before them or the Convocation; there he at length revolting from his Doctrine, recanted and did penance.

J. Jourdelay. In like manner John Jourdelay of Lincolnshire, well commended in the Registers for his learning, accused by the Priests of Lincoln for a certain Book, which he contrary to the former Decree of the Bishops, did conceal, and did not exhibite unto them, was therefore enforced to abjure. After whom was brought likewise before the Bishops, one Katharine Dertford, a Spinster, who being accused and examined upon these 3 Articles concerning the Sacrament of the Popes Altar, Adoration of Images, and of Pilgrimage, answered, that she was not able, being unlearned, to answer to such high matters, neither had she any further skill, but only her Creed and Ten Commandments; and so was she committed to the Vicar-General of the Bishop of Winc. (for that he was of the same Diocess) to be kept, and further to be examined of the same. Ex Regist. H. Chichesley.

J. Jourdelay abjureth.

At the same sitting was also brought before the said Archbishop and his fellow Bishops, by the Lieutenant of the Tower, the Parson of Heggeley in Lincolnshire, named Mr. Rob. who being long kept in the Tower, at length, by the Kings Writ, was brought and examined the same time upon the like Articles, to wit, touching the Sacrament of their Altar, Peregrination, Adoration of Images, and whether it was lawful for spiritual men to enjoy temporal Lordships, &c. To the which Articles he answered (saith the Register) doubly and mockingly, save only in the Sacrament he seemed something more conformable, albeit not yet fully to their contentation. Wherefore, being committed to the custody and examination of Richard Bishop of Lincoln, in the end he was also induced to submit himself.

Robert Parson of Heggeley examined.

W. Henry of Tenderden examined.

The same likewise did W. Henry of Tenderden, being suspected and arrested for company keeping with them whom the Bishops called Lollards, and for having suspected Books.

A book of the new Law. T. Galle. Rob. Monke. Nic. Cornmonger. M. Hoper. The Granter troubled for their Doctrine.

Besides these, divers other there were also which in the same Convocation were convented, and revoked their Opinions, as T. Galle a Priest of London, for having a Book in English, intituled, A Book of the new Law. Item, Richard Monk, Vicar of Chesham in Lincolnshire, who submitted himself likewise. In this race and number followed moreover, Bartholomew Cornmonger, Nic. Hoper servant to the Lord Cobham, Thomas Granter with other more, mentioned in the foresaid Register.

Among the rest which were at this time troubled for their Faith, was one Radulph Mungin Priest, who for the same Doctrine was arrested and sent by the Lord Chancellor of England, to the foresaid Archbishop, and by him committed to David Price, Vicar-General to the Bishop of London: Where after he had indured four Months in Prison, he was by the said David presented to the Convocation, against whom divers Articles were objected.

A Subsidy gathered by the Pope to fight against the faithful of Bohemia.

But for the better explaining of the matter, first here is to be noted, that touching the time of this Convocation Provincial, Pope Martin had sent down to the Clergy of England, for a Subsidy to be gathered of the Church, to maintain the Popes War against the Lollards (so the Papists did term them) of Bohemia. Also another Subsidy was demanded to persecute one Peter Clerk Master of Art of Oxford, who flying out of England, was at the Council of Basil; disputing on the Bohemians side. And thirdly, another Subsidy was also required to persecute William Russel, Warden of the Gray Friers in London, who the same time was fled from England to Rome, to maintain his opinion before the Pope, and there escaped out of Prison, &c. of whom more largely hereafter (Christ willing) we shall entreat. In the mean time mark here the pretty shifts of the Pope to hook in the English money, by all manner of pretences possible.

Romish sleights to get the English money.

Thus Ralph Mungin, the foresaid Examinate, appearing before the Bishops in the Convocation, it was articulated against him, first that he should affirm and hold, that it was not lawful for any Christian to fight and make War against the Hereticks of Bohemia.

Articles objected against Ralph Mungin.

Item, It was to him objected, that he did hold and say, that it was not lawful for any man to have propriety of Goods, but the same to be common; which he expressly denied that ever he so said or affirmed. Whereby we have to observe, how the crafty malice of these adversaries useth fally to collect and surmise of men, what they never spake, whereby to oppress them wrongfully whom by plain truth they cannot expugn.

{KING Hen. 5.}

Moreover, they objected against him, that he should keep company with Master Clerk aforesaid, and also that he dispersed in the City of London certain Books of John Wickliff and of Peter Clerk, namely the Book Trialogus, and the Gospels of John Wickliff, &c. He was charged moreover, to have spoken against the Popes Indulgences, affirming that the Pope had no more power to give Indulgences than he had.

Trialogus. The Gospels translated by Wicklif.

Upon these and other such Articles objected, the said Mungin, being asked if he would revoke, answered, that it seemed to him not just or meet so to do, which did not know himself guilty of any Heresie. Thus he being repleted for the time, was committed to Prison till the next sitting; who then being called divers and sundry times afterward before the Bishops, after long Inquisition and strait Examination made, also Depositions brought in against him so much as they could search out, he notwithstanding pertinently denied, as before, to recant. Wherefore the foresaid Henry the Archbishop, proceeding to his sentence definitive, condemned him to perpetual Prison.

Ralph Mungin condemned to perpetual Prison.

After whose condemnation, the Sunday next following the Recantation of Thomas Granter, and of Richard Monk Priests above mentioned, were openly read at Paules Cross; the Bishop of Rochester the same time preaching at the said Cross. The tenor of whose Recantation, with his Articles in the same expressed, hereunder followeth:

The Granter, Rich. Monk.

The Recantation of Tho. Granter. Note the Doctrine and Articles in this days, when the Gospel took place.

IN the Name of God. Before you my Lord of Canterbury, and all you my Lords here being present, and before you all here gathered at this time, I Thomas Granter, Priest unworthy, dwelling in the City of London, feeling and understanding that afore this time, I affirmed open Errors and Heresies, saying, believing and affirming within this City, that he that Christian men called Pope is not very Pope, ner Gods Vicary in earth, but I said he was Antichrist. Also I said, believed and affirmed, that after the Sacramental words said by a Priest in the Mass, there remaineth material Bread and Wine, and is not turned into Christs Body and his Blood. Also I said and affirmed, that it was not to do in no wise, to go on Pilgrimage, but it was better, I said, to abide at home, and beat the stools with their heels; for it was, I said, but tree and stone that they laughten. Also I said and affirmed, that I held no Scripture Catholick nor holy, but only that is contained in the Bible. For the Legends and lives of Saints, I held hem nought, and the Miracles written of hem I held untrue. Because of which Errors and Heresies I was tofore Mr. Dave Price Vicar-general of my Lord of London, and since tofore you my Lord of Canterbury and your brethren in your Council Provincial, and by you fully informed, which so said, mine affirming, believing and teaching been open Errors and Heresies, and contrarious to the determination of the Church of Rome. Wherefore I willing to follow and sewe the Doctrine of Holy Church, and depart fro all manner Errors and Heresies, and turn with good will and heart to the one Head of the Church, considering that holy Church sitteth her cloistn not her bosom to him that will turn again, ne God will not the death of a sinner, but rather be ben turned and live: with a pure heart I confess, detest, and despise my said Errors and Heresies, and the said Opinions I confess, as Heresies and Errours to the Faith of the Church of Rome, and to all universally holy Church repugnant. And therefore these said Opinions in special, and all other Errors and Heresies, Doctrines and Opinions, ayen the Faith of the Church, and the Determinations of the Church of Rome, I abjure and forswear heretofore you all, and swear by these holy Gospels by me bodily touched, that from henceforth I shall never hold, teach, ne preach Error, ne Errors, Heresie, ne Heresies, nor false Doctrine against the Faith of holy Church, and determination of the Church of Rome, ne none such thing I shall obstinately defend, ne any man holding or teaching such manner things by me or any other person, openly or privily I shall defend, I shall never after the time be receitor, fautor, counsellor, or defendor of Hereticks, or of any person suspect of Heresie, ner I shall trow to him, ner wittingly fellaship with him, ner yeve him counsel, favour, sylts, ne

One Head, that is, the unity of the Church.

{KING Hen. 5.} ne comfort. And if I know any Heretick, or of Heresie, or of such false Opinions any person suspect, or any man or woman making or holding privy Conventicles, or Assemblies, or any divers or singular Opinions from the common Doctrine of the Church of Rome, or if I may know any of their fautors, comforters, counsellors or defensors, or any that have suspect books or quiers of such Errors and Heresies; I shall let you my Lord of Canterbury, or your Officers in your absence, or the Diocesans and Ordinaries of such men, have soon and ready knowing. So help me God and holy deme, and these holy Evangelists by me bodily touched.

After this Recantation at the Cross thus published, and his submission made, the said Granter then was by the advice of the Prelates put to seven years prisonment, under the custody and charge of the Bishop of London.

The afflicten and trouble in Kent, under Chicheley.

After this followed in like manner the Recantation of Richard Monk. Also of Edmund Frith who was before Butler to Sir John Oldcastle.

Besides these above remembred, many and divers there be in the said Register recorded, who likewise for their Faith and Religion were greatly vexed and troubled, especially in the Dioces of Kent, in the Towns of Romney, Tenterden, Woodchurch, Crambrock, Stopleherst, Benenden, Halden, Rolvenyden, and others, whereas whole Housholds, both Man and Wife, were driven to forsake their Houses and Towns for danger of Persecution; as sufficiently appeareth in the proces of the Archbishop Chichesley against the said persons, and in the Certificate of Burbath his Official, wherein are named the persons following:

1. W. White Priest.	9. W. Chroseling.	Persons persecuted in Kent.
2. Th. Grenefeld Priest.	10. John Tame.
3. Bartho. Cornmonger.	11. John Fowlin.
4. John Wadnon.	12. William Somer.
5. Joan his Wife.	13. Marian his Wife.
6. Tho. Everden.	14. John Abraham.
7. William Everden.	15. Robert Munden.
8. Stephen Robin.	16. Laurence Coke.

These being cited up together by the Bishop, would not appear. Whereupon great Inquisition being made for them by his Officers, they were confirmed to fly their Houses and Towns, and shift for themselves as covertly as they might. When Burbath and other Officers had sent to the Archbishop, that they could not be found, then he directed down order that Citations should be set up for them on every Church-door, through all Towns where they did inhabite, appointing them a day and term when to appear. But notwithstanding, when as they yet could not be taken, neither would appear, the Archbishop, sitting in his Tribunal Seat, proceedeth to the sentence of Excommunication against them. What afterward happened to them in the Register doth not appear; but like it is, at length they were forced to submit themselves.

The description of the cruell Martyrdome of Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham.

¶ Concerning Sir John Oldcastle the Lord Cobham, and of his first Apprehension with his whole Story and Life, sufficiently hath been expreffed before, how he being committed to the Tower, and condemned fally of Heresie, escaped afterward out of the Tower, and was in Wales about the space of four years. In the which mean time, a great sum of mony was proclaimed by the King, to him that could take the said Sir John Oldcastle, either quick or dead. About the end of which four years being expired, the Lord Powis, whether for love or greediness of the mony, or whether for hatred of the true and sincere Doctrine of Christ, seeking all manner of ways how to play the part of Judas, at length obtained his bloudy purpose, and brought the Lord Cobham bound up to London; which was about the year of our Lord 1417. and about the Month of December. At which time there was a Parliament assembled in London, for the relief of Mony the same time to be sent to the King, whom the Bishops had sent out (as ye heard before) to fight in France. The Records of which Parliament do thus say: That on Tuesday the fourteenth day of December, and the nine and twentieth day of the said Parliament, Sir John Oldcastle of Cowling, in the County of Kent, Knight, being outlawed (as is afore minded) in the Kings-Beach, and Excommunicated before by the Archbishop of Canterbury for Heresie, was brought before the Lords, and having heard his said Convictions, answered not thereto in his Excuse. Upon which Record and Process it was adjudged, that he should be taken as a Traitor to the King and the Realm; that he should be carried to the Tower of London, and from thence down through London, unto the new Gallows in Saint Giles without Temple-Bar, and there to be hanged, and burned hanging.

The second apprehension, and of the L. Cobham.

The Lord Powis playeth Judas.

Men tied to the Church at Rome.

As touching the pretended Treason of this Lord Cobham, for which he was falsly accused unto him in his Indictment, rising upon false and wrong suggestion and false surmise, and aggravated by unlawful rigour rigour of words, rather than upon any ground of due probation, sufficiently hath been discoursed before in my defence of the said Lord Cobham, against Alanus Copus. Where again, it is to be noted, as I said before, and by this it appeareth, that the Lord Cobham was never executed by force of the Indictment or Outlawry, because if he had, he should then have been brought to the Bar in the Kings-Bench, and there the Judges should have demanded of him, what he could have said, why he should not have died; and then not shewing sufficient cause for the discharge or delay of execution, the Judges should have awarded and given the Judgment of Treason; which being not so, it is clear he was not executed upon the Indictment. Besides, to prove that he was not executed upon the Indictment and the Outlawry, the manner of the execution proveth it, because it was neither an execution of a Traitor, nor was the whole punishment thereof pronounced by the Judge, as by due order of Law was requisite.

Vide supra.

Finally, as I said before, here I repeat again, that albeit the said Lord Cobham was attainted of Treason by the Act, and that the King, the Lords, and the Commons assented to the Act: yet all that bindeth not in such fort (as if indeed he were no Traitor) that any man may not by search of the truth, utter and set forth sincerely and justly the very true and certain cause whereupon his execution did follow. Which seemeth by all circumstance and firm arguments, to rise principally of his Religion, which first brought him in hatred of the Bishops; the Bishops brought him in hatred of the King; the hatred of the King brought him to his Death and Martyrdom. And thus much for the Death and Execution of this worthy Servant of Christ the Lord Cobham.

Judas forsaketh for his reward.

Moreover, in the Records above mentioned, it followeth, how in the said Parliament, after the Martyrdom of this valiant Knight, motion then was made, that the Lord Powis might be thanked and rewarded, according to the Proclamation made for his great travel taken in the apprehension of Sir John Oldcastle Knight, Heretick. Thus stand the words of the Record. Where two things are to be noted: First, how Sir John here in the Record is called not Traitor, but Heretick only. Secondly, mark how this Brother of Judas here craveth his reward for betraying the innocent bloud. Wherein it is not to be doubted, but that his light fee, and quid vultis mihi dare in this world, will have an heavy reward hereafter in the world to come, unless he repented, &c.

An. 5. Hen. 5. Act 17.

Furthermore, in the said Parliament, Act 17. it was Enacted, That the Church and all Estates should enjoy all their Liberties, which were not repealed, or repealable by the common Law; meaning belike, the excluding of the Jurisdiction of the Popes foreign power, which hath always, by the common Law been excluded out of this Realm.

An. 5. Hen. 5. Act 17.

In the same Parliament also, a grievous complaint was made (by the Bishops no doubt) against Insurrections. In the end they suspected that they were the Lollards, Hereticks and Traitors, with a request that Commissions might at all times be granted to inquire of them. Whereupon answer was made, that the Statutes therefore made should be executed, &c. Thus the Clergy, Tanquam leones rugientes, ceased not to roar after Christian bloud; and whosoever was else in fault, still the Clergy cried, Crucifie Christ, and deliver us Barabbas: for then all horrible facts and mischiefs, if any were done, were imputed to the poor Lollards.

All the blame laid to the Lollards.

And now from our English matters, to return again to the story of the Bohemians; from whence we have a little digressed: When as the News of the barbarous cruelty excercised at Constance against John Hus and Jerome of Prague, were noised in Boheme, the Nobles and Gentlemen of Moravia and Boheme, such as favoured the cause of John Hus, gathering themselves together in the zeal of Christ; first sent their Letter unto the Council; expostulating with them for the injury done to those godly Men, as is before expressed. For the which Letter they were all cited up to the Council. Unto this Letter Sigismund the Emperor maketh answer again in the name of the whole Council; first, excusing himself of John Hus his death, which, he said, was against his safe conduct, and against his will: Informeth that he rose in anger from the Council, and departed out of Constance, as is before remembred. Secondly, he requireth them to be quiet, and to conform themselves peaceably unto the order of the Catholick Church of Rome, &c.

{KING Hen. 5.}

Also the Council hearing or fearing some stir to rise among the Bohemians, did make Laws and Articles whereby to bridle them, to the number of 14.

Articles decreed in the Council of Constance against the Bohemians.

First, That the King of Bohemia shall be sworn to give obedience, and to defend the liberties of the Church of Rome.

That all Masters, Doctors and Priests shall be sworn to abjure the Doctrine of Wickliff and Hus, in that Council condemned.

That all they which being cited would not appear, should also be sworn to abjure; and they which would not appear, contemning the censure of the Keys, should have process against them, and be punished.

That all such secular men as had spoiled the Clergy, should be sworn to restitution.

That Priests being expelled from their Benefices, should be restored again.

That all prophaners of Churches should be punished after the Canonical Sanctions.

That such as had been promoters in the Council against John Hus, should be permitted safely to return into Boheme again, and to enjoy their Benefices.

That the relicks and treasure taken out of the Church of Prague, should be restored fully again.

That the University of Prague should be restored again and reformed, and that they which had been the disturbers thereof should be really punished.

That the principal Hereticks and Doctors of that Sect should be sent up to the See Apostolick, namely, Johannes Jessenetz, Jacobellus de Misna, Simon de Tysna, Simon de Rochiznzano, Christianus de Brachatitz, Joannes Cardinalus, Zdenko de Loben, The Provost of Allhallows Zaslaus de Suieritz, and Michael de Czasko.

The forsaken of God, flie in Judgement.

That all secular men, which communicated under both kinds, should abjure that Heresie, and swear to stop the same hereafter.

That they which were ordained Priests by the Suffragan of the Archbishop of Prague, taken by the Lord Zenco, should not be dispensed with, but sent up to the See Apostolick.

This Suffragan was a good man, and held with Hus.

That the Treatises of John Wickliff, translated into the Bohemian Tongue by John Hus and Jacobellus, should be brought to the Ordinary.

Wickliff's Doctrine translated by J. Hus and Jacobellus into the Bohemian Speech.

That the Treatises of John Hus condemned in the Council, should also be brought to the Ordinary.

That all the Tractations of Jecobellus De utraque specie de Antichristo (wherein he calleth the Pope Antichrist) Et de remanentia panis post consecrationem, should likewise be brought and burned.

That all Songs and Ballads made to the prejudice of the Council, and of the Catholick persons of both States, should be forbid to be sung in Cities, Towns and Villages, under great and extream punishment.

That none should preach the Word without the Licence of the Ordinary, or of the Parson of that place.

That Ordinaries and Prelates, having Jurisdiction, should not be stopped in their Jurisdiction, by the secular power, under pain of Excommunication.

That all and singular persons shall be commanded to obedience, under pain of Excommunication; and that whosoever knoweth any person to favour any Wickleviste, or their Doctrine, or that keepeth company with Wickleviste persons, he shall present the same to his Diocesans or his Officials.

That the confederacy of the Seculars made between themselves, or any of the Spiritualty, to the prejudice of the foresaid Council, and of the Apostolick See and Church of Rome, in the favour of John Hus, Jerome of Prague, and other in the said Council condemned, shall be dissolved.

That the Rites and Ceremonies of Christian Religion, touching Gods service, Images, and worthipping of Relicks, shall be observed, and transgressors of the same be punished.

Concilium malignantium.

That

{KING Hen. 5.}

That all and singular, either spiritual or secular that shall preach, teach, hold, or maintain the opinions and articles of John Wickliff, John Hus, and Hierome, in this Council condemned, and convicted of the same, shall be holden for Hereticks, and falling in relapse shall be burned.

That all secular Persons being monished and charged by the Ordinaries, shall be bound to give their aid and furtherance unto them touching the premisses.

The Bohemians, notwithstanding these cruel Articles, contemning the vain devices of these Prelates and Fathers of the Council, ceased not to proceed in their league and purpose begun, joyning themselves more strongly together.

In this mean time it happened, that during this Council of Constance, after the despoiling of Pope John, and spoyling of his goods, which came to 75 thousand pounds of Gold and Silver, as is reported in the Story of Saint Albanus, Pope Martine upon the day of Saint Martine, was elected. Concerning whose election great preparation was made before of the Council, for that beside the Cardinals, five other Bishops of every Nation should enter into the Conclave, who there together should be kept with thin Diet, till they had founded a Pope. At last, when they were together, they agreed upon this Man, and not tarrying for opening the door, like mad men, for haste they braft open an hole in the wall, crying out, Habemus Papam Martinum, We have a Martine Pope. The Emperor hearing thereof, with the like haste came apace, and falling down kissed the new Popes feet. Then went they all to the Church together, and sung Te Deum.

Pope Martine.

The next day following, this Martine was made Priest (which before was but a Cardinal Deacon) and the next after was consecrate Bishop, and sang his first Mass, whereat was present 140. mitred Bishops. After this the next morrow, the new holy Pope ordained a general procession, where a certain Clerk was appointed to stand with Flax, and fire; who setting the Flax on fire, thus said, Ecce Pater sanctæ, sic transit gloria mundi. i. Behold holy Father, thus vadeth the Transitory glory of this World. Which done, the same day the holy Father was brought up into an high Scaffold (saith the Story) I will not say to an high Mountain, where was offered to him all the glory of the World, &c. there to be crowned for a triple King. This done, the same day after Dinner, the new crowned Pope was with great Triumph brought through the midst of the City of Constance, where all the Bishops and Abbots followed with their Miters. The Popes Horse was all Trapt with red Skarlet down to the ground. The Cardinals Horses were all in white Silk; the Emperor on the right side, and Prince Electon on the left, (playing both the Popes Footmen) went on foot, leading the Popes Horse by the Bridle.

The Coronation of Pope Martine. Mirabile relatu sed per ista non affirmo, ideoque ipsis.

The Pope on Horseback, the Emperor on foot.

As this Pageant thus with the great Giant proceeded, and came to the Market place, there the Jews (according to the manner) offered to him their Law and Ceremonies. Which the Pope receiving, cast behind him saying, Recedant vetera, nova sunt omnia. i. Let old things pass, all things be made new, &c. Ex hist. S. Alb. ex paralip. Ursperg.

Why then doth the Pope keep still the old Jews ceremonies, if all things be made new?

{Anno 1417.}

This was Anno, 1417.

Thus the Pope, being now confirmed in his Kingdom, first beginneth to write his Letters to the Bohemians, wherein partly he moveth them to Catholick Obedience, partly he dissembleth with them, saigning that if it were not for the Emperors request, he would enter process against them. Thirdly and finally he threateneth to attempt the uttermost against them, and with all force to invade them, as well with the Apostolick, as also with the secular Arm, if they did still persist, as they began.

Albeit, these new threats of the new Bishop did nothing move the constant hearts of the Bohemians, whom the inward zeal of Christs Word had before inflamed.

And although it had been to be wished, such bloodshed and wars not to have followed; yet to say the truth, how could these Rabines greatly blame them herein, whom their bloudy Tyranny had before provoked so unjustly, if now with their gloting Letters they could not so easily appease them again?

Wherefore these forefaid Bohemians, partly for the love of John Hus and Jerome their Country-men, partly for the hatred of their maglignant papistry, assembling together, first agreed to celebrate a solemn Memorial of the death of John Hus and Jerome, decreeing the same to be holden and celebrated yearly. And afterward, by means of their Friends they obtained certain Churches of the King, wherein they might freely Preach and Minister the Sacraments unto the Congregation. This done, they suppressed divers Monasteries, Pharisaical Temples, and Idolatrous Fanes, beginning first with the great Monastery of the Black-Friers, eight Miles from Prague, driving away the wicked and vicious Priests and Monks out of them, or compelling them unto a better Order. And thus their number more and more increasing under the safe conduct of a certain Noble Man named Nicholas, they went again unto the King, requiring to have more and ampler Churches granted unto them. The King seemed at the first willingly and gently to give ear unto the said Nicholas intreating for the people, and commanded them to come again the next day.

A yearly memorial of J. Hus and Jerome kept among the Bohemians.

When the people were departed, the King turning himself to the Noble Man Nicholas, which tarried still behind, said; Thou hast begun a Work to put me out of my Kingdom, but I will make a Rope of it, wherewithal I will hang thee. Whereupon he immediately departed out of the Kings presence, and the King himself went into the Castle of Visegrade: within a while after, into a new Castle, which he himself had builded five stones casts from thence, sending Embassadors to his Brother to require aid.

K. Wenceslaus threateneth Nicholas.

These Protestants being Assembled in the Town of Prague, holding their Conventions, the King sent forth his Chamberlain with three hundred Horsemen to run upon them; but he having respect unto his life, fled. When news thereof was brought unto the King, all that were about him being amazed, utterly detested the fact: but the Kings Cupbearer standing by, said, I knew before that these things would thus come to pass. Whom the King in a rage taking hold of, threw him down before his feet, and with his Dagger would have slain him; but being letted by such as were about him, with much ado he pardoned him his life. Immediately the King being taken with a Palsie fell sick, and within eighteen days after, when he had marked the names of such whom he had appointed to be put to death, incessantly calling for aid of his Brother, and other his Friends, he departed this life before the Princes which he had sent unto, were come with aid, when he had Reigned five and fifty years, and was about the age of seven and fifty years.

The death of King Wenceslaus.

The marvellous work of Gods Judgement to be noted, in defending his people.

The Story of Zisca.

Immediately after the death of Wenceslaus, there was a certain Nobleman named Zisca, born at Trosnovia, which from his youth upward was brought up in the Kings Court, and had lost one of his eyes in a Battel, whereas he had valiantly born himself. This man being sore grieved for the death of John Hus, and Hierome of Prague, minding to revenge the injuries which the Council had done, greatly to the dishonor of the Kingdom of Boheme, upon their complices and adherents; he gathered together a number of Men of War, and subverted the Monasteries and Idolatrous Temples, pulling down and breaking in pieces the Images and Idols, driving away the Priests and Monks, which he said were kept in their Cloysters, like Swine in their sties to be fatted. After this his Army being increased, having gathered together about Forty thousand Men, he attempted to take the Castle of Visegrade, which was but slenderly warded. From thence the said Zisca, under the conduct of Coranda, went speedily unto Pelzima, where he knew he had many friends of his faction, and took the Town into his power, fortifying the same very strongly, and those which tarried behind, took the Castle of Visegrade.

Out of Ewil as Illirius.

Zisca getteth Pelzima.

Then the Queen Sophia, being very careful, sent Letters and Messengers unto the Emperor Sigismund, and other Nobles adjoyned unto her, requiring aid and help: But the Emperor made preparation against the Turk, which had then lately won certain Castles of him. Whereupon the Queen seeing all aid so far off, together with Zenko Warterberge, gathered an Host with the Kings treasure, and fortified the Castle of Prague, and the lesser City which joyneth unto the Caſtle, making Gates and Towers of wood upon the Bridge, over the River Multain, to ſtop that the Proteſtants ſhould have no paſſage that way. Then it happened that at the Iſle of S. Benedict one Peter Sternberge fought an equal or indifferent battel with them.

In the mean time, the number of the Proteſtants being increaſed in Prague, they fought for the Bridge. In which battel many were ſlain on both parts, but at the length the Huſſites wan the Bridge and the nether part of Ieſſer Prague, the Queens part flying into the upper part thereof: where they turning again fiercely renewed the battel, and fought continually day and night by the ſpace of five days. Many were ſlain on both parts, and goodly buildings were raced, and the Council Houſe, which was in a low place, was utterly defaced and burned.

The Emperours Ambaſſadors agree with the Citizens of Prague.

During the time of this troubleſome eſtate, the Embaſſadors of the Emperor Sigiſmund were come: which taking upon them the rule and governance of the Realm, made a Truce or League with the City of Prague under this condition, that the Caſtle of Viſſegrade being rendred, it ſhould be lawful for them to ſend Embaſſadors to the Emperor Sigiſmund to intreat as touching their Eſtate, and that Ziſca ſhould render Pelzina and Pieſta with the other Forts which he had taken. Theſe conditions thus agreed upon and received, all the foreign Proteſtants departed out of the City, and the Senate of the City, began to govern again according to their acuſtomed manner, and all things were quieted. Howbeit, the Papiſts which were gone out of the Town, durſt not return again, but ſtill looked for the Emperor, by whoſe preſence they thought they ſhould have been ſafe. But this their hope was fruſtrate by means of certain Letters which were ſent from the Emperor, wherein it was written, that he would ſhortly come and Rule the Kingdom, even after the ſame order and manner as his Father Charles had done before him. Whereupon the Proteſtants underſtood that their Sect and Religion ſhould be utterly baniſhed, which was not begun during the Reign of the ſaid Charles.

About Chriſtmas the Emperor Sigiſmund came to Brunna, a City of Moravia, and there he pardoned the Citizens of Prague, under condition that they would let down the chains and bars of the City, and receive his Rulers and Magiſtrates. Whereunto the whole City obeyed, and the Magiſtrates thereof, lifting up their hands unto Heaven, rejoyced at the coming of the new King. But the Emperor turned another way, and went unto Uratiſlavia, the head City of Sleſia, where a little before the Communalty of the City had ſlain, in an inſurrection, the Magiſtrates, which his Brother Wenceſlaus had ſet in authority; the principals whereof he beheaded. The news whereof when they were reported at Prague, the Citizens being feazed by the example of the Uratiſlavians, diſtruſting their pardon, rebelled out of hand, and having obtained Conchs, on their part, which had the government of the Caſtle of Prague, they ſent Letters into all the Realm, that no man ſhould ſuffer the Emperor to enter, which was an enemy unto Bohemе, and fought nothing elſe but to deſtroy the Kingdom: which alſo bound the ancient City of the Prutenians under order by pledges, and put the Marqueſs of Brandenburge, from the Bohemian Crown: and had not only ſuffered John Hus and Hieronie of Prague to be burned at the Council of Conſtance, but alſo procured the ſame, and with all his endeavour did impugn the Doctrine and faith which they taught and followed. Whileſt theſe things were thus done Ziſca having given over Pelzina by compoſition, was twice aſſaulted by his Enemies, but through policy he was always Victor. The places where they fought were rough and unknown, his Enemies were on Horſeback, and his Soldiers on Foot, neither could there be any battel fought but on foot. Whereupon when his Enemies were alighted from their Horſes, Ziſca commanded the Women which cuſtomably followed the Hoſt, to caſt their kerchiefs upon the ground, wherein the Horſemen being intangled by their Spurs, were ſlain before they could unlooſe their feet.

After this, he went unto Auſca, a Town ſituate upon the River Lucinitius, out of which Town, Procopius and Ulricius, two Brethren Papiſts, had caſt out many Proteſtants. This Town Ziſca took by force of Arms the firſt night of Lent, raced it, and ſet it on fire. He alſo took the Caſtle of Litiſes, which was a Mile off, whither Ulricius was fled, and put Ulricius and all his Family to the Sword ſaving one only.

{KING Hen. 5.}

The City of Chaboa builded.

Then foraſmuch as he had no walled or fenced Town to inhabite, he choſe out a certain place upon the ſame River, which was fenced by nature, about eight Miles from the City of Auſca. This place he compaſſed in with walls, and commanded every man to build them Houſes, where they had pitched their Tents, and named this City Thabor, and the Inhabitants his Companions Thaborites, becauſe their City by all like, was builded upon the top of ſome Hill or Mount. This City, albeit it was fenced with high Rocks and Cleaves, yet was it compaſſed with a wall and vaumure, and the River Lucinitius fenceth a great part of the Town; the reſt is compaſſed in with a great Brook, the which running ſtraight into the River Lucinitius, is ſtopped by a great Rock, and drivn back towards the right hand all the length of the City, and at the further end it joyneth with the great River. The way unto it by land is ſcarce thirty foot broad, for it is almoſt an Iſland. In this place there was a deep ditch caſt, and a triple wall made, of ſuch thickneſs, that it could not be broken with any engine. The wall was full of Towers and Forts ſet in their convenient and meet places. Ziſca was the firſt that builded the Caſtle, and thoſe that came after him fortified it, every man according to his own device. At that time the Thaborites had no Horſemen amongſt them, until ſuch time as Nicholas, Maſter of the Mint (whom the Emperor had ſent into Bohemia with a thouſand Horſemen to ſet things in order, and to withſtand the Thaborites, lodging all night in a Village named Vogize) was ſurpriſed by Ziſca coming upon him ſuddenly in the night, taking away all his Horſe and Armour, and ſetting fire upon the Village. Then Ziſca taught his Souldiers to mount on Horſeback, to leap, to run, to turn, and to caſt a ring, ſo that after this he never led Army without his wings of Horſemen.

In this mean time Sigiſmundus the Emperor gathering together the Nobles of Sleſia, entred into Boheme, and went into Grecium, and from thence with a great Army unto Cuthna, alluring Concho with many great and large promiſes to render up the Caſtle of Prague unto him, and there placed him to annoy the Town. This Concho, infamed with double Treaſon, returned home. The Citizens of Prague ſent for Ziſca, who ſpeeding himſelf thither with the Thaborites, received the City under his governance. In the Bohemians Hoſt there were but only two Barons, Hilco, Cruſina of Lituburge, and Hilco of Waldeſtene, with a few other Nobles. All the reſidue were of the Common-people. They went about firſt to ſubdue the Caſtle, which was by nature very ſtrongly fenced, and could not be won by any other means than with Famine: Whereupon all the paſſages were ſtopped, that no Victuals ſhould be carried in. But the Emperor opened the paſſages by dint of Sword, and when he had given unto them which were beſieged all things neceſſary, having ſent for aid out of the Empire, he determined ſhortly after to beſiege the City. There were in the Emperors Camp the Dukes of Saxon, the Marqueſs of Brandenburge, and his Son in Law of Albort of Auſtrich. The City was aſſaulted by the ſpace of ſix weeks. The Emperor Sigiſmund was Crowned in the Metropolitan Houſe in the Caſtle, Conradus the Archbiſhop ſolemniſing the ceremonies of the Coronation. The City was ſtraitly beſieged. In the mean time the Captains Roſenſes and Chragery, which had taken the Tents of the Thaborites, being overcome in battel by Nicholas Hus, whom Ziſca had ſent with part of his power, for that purpoſe, were driven out of their Tents, and Grecium the Queens City was alſo taken.

Sigiſmund the Emperor raiſeth his ſiege.

Sigiſmund beſieged the City of Prague.

There is alſo above the Town of Prague a high Hill, which is called Videchon. On this Hill had Ziſca ſtrongly planted a garriſon, that his enemies ſhould not poſſeſs it, with whom the Marqueſs of Miſnian skirmiſhing, loſt a great part of his Souldiers. For when as the Miſnians had gotten the top of the hill, being driven back into a corner, which was broken and ſteep, and fiercely ſet upon, when as they could no longer withſtand the violent force of their Enemies, ſome of them were ſlain, and by the multitude and number of his Horſemen being broke, diſcouraged and deſtroyed a great number. Ziſca having obtained this Victory, would not ſuffer any Image or Idol to be in the Churches, neither thought it to be bom withal, that Prieſts ſhould miniſter with Copes or Veſtiments: for the which cauſe he was much the more envied amongſt the States of Boheme. And the Conſuls of Prague, being agrieved at the inſolency of John Premonſtratenſis, called him and nine other of his adherents, whom they ſuppoſed to be the principals of this faction into the Council Houſe, as though they would confer with them as touching the Common-wealth: and when they were come in, they ſlew them, and afterward departed home every man to his own houſe, thinking the City had been quiet, as though nothing had been done. But their ſervants being not circumſpect enough, walking down the Court or Yard, waſhed out alſo the Blood of thoſe that were ſlain, throw the Sinks or Chanels; the which being once feen, the people underſtood what was done. By and by there was a tumult; the Council-houſe was ſtraightway overthrown, and eleven of the principal Citizens, which were thought to be the Authors thereof, were ſlain, and divers houſes ſpoyled.

Joannes Premonſtratenſis. The Martyrdom of certain godly Bohemians ſtilly circumvented and killed with the ſword.

Priſoy murthers at length come unto.

The Emperor fighting againſt Ziſca ſhaked the overthrow.

The Abbots of Pelzina ſubverted.

About the ſame time the Caſtle of Purgel, wherein the Emperor had left a ſmall Garriſon (whither alſo many Papiſts with their Wives and Children were fled) was through negligence burned, and thoſe which eſcaped out of the fire went unto Pelzina. After this divers of the Bohemian Captains, and the Senate of Prague, ſent Ambaſſadors to Vitold Duke of Lituania, and made him their King. This did Ziſca and his adherents gainſay. This Vitold ſent Sigiſmond Coributus with two thouſand Horſemen into Boheme, who was honourably received of the inhabitants of Prague. At his coming they determined to lay ſiege unto a Caſtle ſituate upon a Hill, which was called Charles Stone.

Ziſca put-teth the Emperor to flight.

Here Sigiſmundus had left for a Garriſon four Centurions of Souldiers. The Tents were pitched in three places. The ſiege continued ſix Months, and the aſſault never ceaſed day and night. Five great Slings threw continually great ſtones over the walls, and about two thouſand Veſſels, Tubs, or Baskets, filled with dead carcaſes and other excrements, were caſt in amongſt thoſe which were beſieged: which thing did ſo infect them with ſtench, that their Teeth did either fall out, or were all looſe. Notwithſtanding they bare it out with ſtout courage, and continued their fight until the winter, having privily received medicine out of Prague, to faſten their Teeth again.

Stench very hurtful for the Teeths.

In the mean time Frederick the Elder, Prince of Brandenburge, entring into Boheme with a great Power, cauſed them of Prague to raiſe the Siege. And Vitoldus at the requeſt of Uladiſlaus King of Pole, which had talked with the Emperor in the Borders of Hungary, called Coributus his Uncle, with his whole Army, out of Boheme. Whereupon the Emperor ſuppoſed that the Proteſtants being deſtitute of foreign Aid, would the ſooner do his Commandment: but he was far deceived therein; for they leading their Armies out of Boheme, ſubdued the Borderers thereupon adjoyning. It is alſo reported that Ziſca went into Auſtrich, and when as the Husbandmen of the Country had carried away a great number of their Cattel by water into an Iſle of the River called Danubius, and by chance had left certain Calves and Swine in their Villages behind them: Ziſca drave them unto the River ſide, and kept them there ſo long, beating them, and cauſing them to roar out and cry, untill that the Cattel feeding in the Iſland, hearing the lowing and grunting of Ziſca, the Cattel on the other ſide the water, for the deſire of their like did ſwim over the River; by the means whereof he got and drave away a great booty.

Ziſca loſeth his other eye in battel.

Another Water-like policy of Ziſca.

Ziſca forſaketh divers Towns.

About the ſame time the Emperor Sigiſmundus gave unto his Son in law Albert Duke of Auſtrich, the Country of Moravia, becauſe it ſhould not want a Ruler. At the ſame time alſo Ericine King of Denmark, and Peter Infant, Brother to the King of Portugal and Father of James, Cardinal of Saint Euſtachius, came unto the Emperor, being both very expert men in the affairs of War, which did augment the Emperors Hoſt with their Aid and Power. Whereupon they ſtraightway pitched their Camp before Lutemperge, a Town of Moravia, and and continued the siege by the space of three Months. There was at that time a certain Knight at Prague furnamed Aqua, which was very Rich and of great Authority. This man, forsomuch as he had no Child of his own, adopted unto him his Sisters Son, named Procopius; whom when he was of mean nature and age, he carried with him into France, Spain, and Italy, and unto Jerusalem, and at his return caused him to be made Prieſt. This man when the Gospel began to flouriſh in Bohemе, took arms with Zisca, and forsamuch as he was ſtrong and valiant, and alſo painful, he was greatly eſteemed.

Procopius Magnus.

This Procopius for his valiant Acts was afterward called Procopius Magnus, and had committed unto him the whole charge of the Province of Moravia, and the defence of the Lutemperges, who receiving a great power by force (mauger all the whole power which lay in the ſiege) carried Victuals into the Town which was beſieged, and ſo did fruſtrate the Emperors ſiege: The Emperor before this, had delivered unto the Marqueſſes of Miſnia the Bridge and Town of Alsia, upon the River of Albis, that they ſhould fortifie them with their Garriſons. Whereupon Zisca beſieged Ausca; and Frederick the Marqueſs of Miſnia, with his Brother the Lantzgravoe of Turing, gathering together a great Army out of Saxonia, Turing, Miſnia, and both the Lusaces, determined to reſcue and aid thoſe which were beſieged.

The vallant courage of Procopius.

There was a great battel fought before the City, and the victory Victory depended long uncertain; but at laſt it fell on the Portellants part. There were ſlain in the battel the Burgraves of Miſnia or Chyrpogenſes, the Barons of Glychen and many other Nobles, beſides nine thouſand common Souldiers, and the Town of Ausca was taken and utterly raced.

The victory of Portellants.

At the laſt, diſſention riſing between Zisca and them of Prague, they of Prague prepared an Army againſt him, wherewith he perceiving himſelf overmatched, fled unto the River of Albis, and was almoſt taken, but that he had paſſage thorow the Town of Poggiebrat; but they of Prague, purſuing the tail of the battel, flew many of his Thaborites. At the length they came unto certain Hills, where Zisca going into the valley, knowing the ſtraits of the place, that his Enemies could not ſpread their Army, he commanded his Standard to ſtand ſtill, and exhorting and encouraging his Souldiers he gave them battel.

The battel between the city of Prague and Zisca.

This battel was very fierce and cruel; but Zisca having the upper hand, flew three Thouſand of them of Prague, and put the reſt to flight, and ſtraightways took the City of Cautna by force (which they of Prague had repaired) and ſet it on fire: then with all ſpeed he went with his Army to beſiege Prague, and incamped within a bow ſhot of the Town. There were many both in the City, and alſo in his Hoſt, which grudged ſore at that ſiege; ſome accuſing Zisca, otherſome them of Prague. There were great tumults in the Camp, the Souldiers ſaying that it was not reaſonable, that the City ſhould be turnyrefied, which was both the head of the Kingdom, and did not diſſent from them in opinion, ſaying, that the Bohemians power would ſoon decay, if their enemies ſhould know that they were divided within themſelves; alſo that they had ſufficient wars againſt the Emperor, and that it was but a fooliſh device to move wars amongſt themſelves. This talk came unto the ear of Zisca, who calling together his Army, ſtanding upon a place to be heard ſpake in theſe words.

The noble victory of Zisca.

Zisca beſeecth Prague. A notable Oration of Zisca to his Souldiers.

BRethren, be ye not aggrieved againſt me, neither accuſe him which hath fought your health and ſafegard. The victories which ye have obtained under my conduct are yet freſh in memory, neither have I brought you at any time unto any place, from whence you have not come victors. You are become famous and rich, and I for your ſake have loſt my ſight, and dwell in darkneſs. Nothing have I gotten by all theſe fortunate battels, but only a vain name. For you have I fought, and for you have I vanquiſhed; neither do I repent me of my Travels, neither is my blindneſs grievous unto me, but only that I cannot provide for you according to my accuſtomed manner: neither do I perſecute them of Prague for mine own cauſe, for it is your bloud that they thirſt and ſeek for, and not for mine. It were but ſmall pleaſure for them to deſtroy me, being now an old man and blind, it is your valiantneſs and ſtout ſtomachs which they fear. Either muſt you or they periſh, who whileſt they ſeem to lie in waite for me, do ſeek after your lives. You muſt rather fear civil Wars than foraigen, and civil diſſention ought firſt to be avoided. We will ſubdue Prague, and baniſh the ſeditious Citizens before the Emperor ſhall have any news of this ſedition. And then having but a few of his faction left, we may with the leſs fear look for it, better than if theſe doubtful Citizens of Prague were ſtill in our Camp. But becauſe ye ſhall accuſe me no more, I give you free liberty to do what you will. If it pleaſe you to ſuffer them of Prague to live in quietneſs, I will not be againſt it, ſothat there be no Treaſon wrought. If you determine to have War, I am alſo ready. Look which part you will incline unto, Zisca will be your aid and helper.

When he had ſpoken theſe words, the Souldiers minds were changed, and wholly determined to make Wars, ſo that they ran by and by to take up their Armor and Weapons, to run unto the Walls, to provoke their Enemies to fight for the Gates of the City. Zisca in the mean time prepared all things ready for the aſſault. There is a little from Pelzima a certain Village named Rochezana. In this place there was a Child born of poor and baſe Parentage, whoſe name was John; he came unto Prague, and got his living there by begging, and learned Grammar and Logick. When he came to Mans ſtate, he became the Schoolmaſter of a Noble Mans Child; and forſomuch as he was of an excellent Wit and ready Tongue, he was received into the College of the Poor: and laſt of all, being made Prieſt, he began to Preach the Word of God to the Citizens of Prague, and was named Joannes de Rochezana, by the name of the Town where he was born. This Man grew to be of great name and authority in the Town of Prague. Whereupon when as Zisca beſieged Prague, he came by the conſent of the Citizens went out into the Camp, and reconciled Zisca again unto the City.

The hearts of the ſouldiers altered by the Oration of Zisca.

Peace between Zisca and Prague, by the means of John de Rochezana.

When as the Emperor perceived that all things came to paſs according unto Zisca his will and mind, and that upon him alone the whole State of Bohemе did depend, he fought privy means to reconcile and get Zisca into his favour, promiſing him the Governance of the whole Kingdom, the guilding of all his Hoſts and Armies, and great yearly revenewes if he would proclaim him King, and cauſe the Cities to be ſworn unto him. Upon which conditions, when as Zisca for the performance of the covenants went unto the Emperor, being in his journey at the Caſtle of Priſcovia, he was ſtricken with ſickneſs and died.

The Emperor glad to be reconcilled with Zisca.

The death of Zisca at the words of Zisca at his death.

It is reported, that when he was demanded, being ſick, in what place he would be buried; he commanded the ſkin to be pulled off from his Carcaſe, and the fleſh to be caſt unto the Fowls and Beaſts, and that a Drum ſhould be made of his ſkin, which they ſhould uſe in their battels; affirming, that as ſoon as their enemies ſhould hear the ſound of that Drum, they would not abide but take their flight. The Thaborites deſpiſing all other Images, yet ſet up the Picture of Zisca over the Gates of the City.

The Epitaph of John Zisca, the valiant Captain of the Bohemians.

The Epitaph of Zisca.

JOhn Zisca, not inferiour to an Emperor, or Captain in warlick policy, a ſevere puniſher of the pride and avarice of the Clergy, and a defender of my Country, do lie here. That which Appius Claudius by giving good Counſel, and M. Furius Camillus by valiantneſs did for the Romans; the ſame I being blind have done for my Bohemians. I never ſlacked opportunity of battel, neither did fortune at any time fail me. I being blind did foreſee all opportunity of well ordering or doing my buſineſs. Eleven times in joyning battel I went Victor out of the field. I ſeemed to have worthily defended the cauſe of the miſerable and hungry againſt the delicate, fat, and gluttonous Prieſts, and for that cauſe to have received help at the hands of God. If their envy had not let it, without doubt I had deſerved to be numbred amongſt the moſt famous men. Notwithſtanding my bones lie here in this hallowed place, even in deſpite of the Pope.

Zisca eleven times victor in the field.

JOANNES

KING Hen. 5.

ΙΩΑΝΝΕΣ ΣΙΣΚΑΣ ὁ Βοημικὸς, ἀπὸ αἰχμαλωσίας ſuplum By-Σῆς, ἐθνῶ ὃν Θεὸν ἔχολα.

¶ John Zisca a Bohemian, enemy to all wicked and covetous Prieſts, but with a godly zeal.

And thus have you the acts and doings of this worthy Zisca, and other Bohemians, which for the more credit we have drawn out of Æneas Sylvius, only his railing terms excepted which we have here ſuppreſſed.

All this while the Emperor with the whole power of the Germans, were not ſo buſie on the one ſide, but Martin the Pope was as much occupied on the other ide: who about the ſame time directed down a terrible Bull, full of all Poiſon, to all Biſhops and Archbiſhops, againſt all ſuch as took any part or ſide with Wickliff, John Hus, Jerom, or with their doctrine and opinions. The copy of which Bull, which I found in an old written Monument, I with the Reader thorowly to peruſe, wherein he ſhall ſee the Pope to pour out at once all his Poiſon.

The Bull of Pope Martin directed forth againſt the Followers of John Wickliff of England, of John Hus of Boheme, and Jerom of Prague.

Pope Martins bloody bull to all Biſhops and Archbiſhops.

MArtin, Biſhop, the ſervant of Gods Servants, to our Reverend Brethren the Archbiſhops of Salzburgen, Guesnen, and Pragen, and to the Biſhops of Olomucen, Lutshomuſlen, Bambergen, Miſnen, Patavien, Vratiſlavien, Ratiſponen, Cracovian, Poſnanen, and Nitrien, and alſo to our beloved Children the Inquiſitors appointed of the Prelates above recited, or where elſe ſoever, unto whom theſe preſent Letters ſhall come, greeting, and Apoſtolical Benedi&tion. Amongſt all other paſtoral cares wherewith we are oppreſſed, this chiefly and ſpecially doth inforce us, that Hereticks with their falſe Doctrine and Errors, being utterly expulſed from amongſt the company of Chriſtian men, and rooted out (ſo far forth as God will make us able to do) the Right and Catholick Faith may remain ſound and undefiled; and that all Chriſtian people, immoveable and inviolate, may ſtand and abide in the ſincerity of the ſame Faith, the whole veil of obſcurity being removed. But lately in divers places of the World, but eſpecially in Bohemia, and the Dukedom of Moravia, and in the Straits adjoyning thereunto, certain Arch-hereticks have riſen and ſprung up, not againſt one only, but againſt divers and ſundry Documents of the Catholick Faith, being Laid-lopers, Schiſmaticks, and ſeditious Perſons, fraught with deviliſh Pride, and wicked Madneſs, deceived by the ſubtilty of Satan, and from one evil Vanity brought to a worſe. Who although they roſe up and ſprang in divers parts of the World, yet agreed they all in one, having their tails as it were knit together, to wit, John Wickliff of England, John Hus of Bohemia, and Jerom of Prague of damnable memory, who drew with them no ſmall number to miſerable ruine and infidelity. For when as thoſe and ſuch like peſtiferous Perſons did in the beginning of their poiſoned Doctrine obſtinately ſow and ſpread abroad perverſe and falſe opinions, the Prelates who had the regiment and execution of the judicial Power, like dumb Dogs not able to Bark, neither yet revenging ſpeedily with the Apoſtle all ſuch diſobedience, nor regarding corporally to caſt out of the Lords houſe (as they were injoyned by the Canons) thoſe fubtil and peſtilent Arch-hereticks, and their wolviſh fury and cruelty, with all expedition, but ſuffering their falſe and pernitious Doctrine negligently, by their over-long delays, to grow and wax ſtrong; a great multitude of people inſtead of true Doctrine received thoſe things, which they did long, fallly, pernitiouſly and damnably ſow among them, and giving credit unto them, fell from the right Faith, and are intangled (the more pity) in the foul Errors of Paganiſm.

All theſe Errors and Hereſies be, for that they ſpeak againſt the pride of Prelates and their exceſſive dignities.

All the Pages with the Pope, that like not this ſuperſtitious and idolatrous tradi&tions.

Inſomuch, that theſe Arch-hereticks, and ſuch as ſpring of them, have infected the Catholick flock of Chriſt in divers climates of the World, and parts bordering upon the ſame, and have cauſed them to putriſie in the filthy Dunghil of their lies. Wherefore the general Synod of Conſtance was compelled with Saint Auguſtine to exclaim againſt ſo great and ruinous a Plague of faithful Men, and of the ſound and true Faith it ſelf, ſaying; What ſhall the ſoveraign Medicine of the Church do, with motherly love ſeeking the health of her Sheep, chaſing as it were, amongſt a company of Men frantick, and having the diſeaſe of the Lethargy? What ſhall ſhe deſiſt and leave off her good purpoſe? No, not ſo. But rather let her, if there be no remedy, be ſharp to both theſe ſorts, which are the grievous Enemies of her womb. For the Phyſician is ſharp unto the man diſtraught and raging in his frenzie, and yet he is a Father to his own rude and unmannerly Son, in binding the one, in beating the other, by ſhewing therein his great love unto them both. But if they be negligent, and ſuffer them to periſh (ſaith Saint Auguſtine) this Manſlaughter is rather to be ſuppoſed falſe cruelty.

A great difference between a loving Step-father, and the frantick. Where of Babylon.

And therefore the foreſaid Synod, to the glory of Almighty God, and preſervation of his Catholick Faith, and augmenting of Chriſtian Religion, and for the ſalvation of Mens ſouls, hath corporally rejected and caſt forth of the houſhold of God, the foreſaid John Wickliff, John Hus, and Jerom; who amongſt other things did believe, preach, teach, and maintain of the Sacrament of the Altar, and other Sacraments of the Church, and Articles of the Faith, contrary to that the Holy Church of Rome believeth, holdeth, preacheth and teacheth, and have preſumed obſtinately to preach, teach, hold and believe many other moe, to the damnation of themſelves and of others; and the ſaid Synod hath ſeparated the ſame, as obſtinate and malapert Hereticks from the Communion of the faithful people, and hath declared them to be ſpiritually thrown forth. And many other things both wholeſome and profitable hath the ſame Council, as touching the premiſſes, Stablihed and Decreed, whereby they, which by the means of thoſe Arch-hereticks, and by their falſe Doctrine, have ſpiritually departed from the Lords Houſe, may by the Canonical Rules be reduced to the ſtraight path of truth and verity.

And moreover (as we to our great grief do hear) not only in the Kingdom of Bohemia, and Dukedom of Morravia, and other places above recited, but alſo in certain parts and provinces near adjoyning and bordering upon the ſame, there be many other of the ſectaries and followers of the foreſaid Arch-hereticks and Heretical opinions; caſting behind their backs as well the fear of God, as the ſhame of the world, neither receiving Fruit of converſion and repentance by the miſerable deſtruction of the foreſaid John Hus and Jerom, but as men drowned in the Dungeon of their ſins, ceaſe not to blaſpheme the Lord God, taking his name in vain (whoſe minds the Fathers of his hath damnably blinded) and do read and Study the foreſaid Books or Works, containing Hereſies and Errors, being lately by the foreſaid Synod condemned to be burned; alſo to the peril of themſelves and many other ſimple men, and againſt the Statutes, Decrees, and Ordinances in the Synod aforeſaid, and the Canonical Sanctions, do preſume to preach and teach the ſame, to the great peril of ſouls, and derogation of the Catholick Faith, and ſlander of many other beſides: We therefore conſidering, that Error, where it is not reſiſted, ſeemeth to be allowed and liked; and having a deſire to reſiſt ſuch evil and pernitious Errors, and utterly root them out from amongſt the company of faithful Chriſtians, eſpecially from the aforerecited places of Bohemia, Moravia, and other Straits and Ilands joyning and bordering upon the ſame, leſt they ſhould ſtretch out and enlarge their limits; we will and command your diſcretions by our Letters Apoſtolical, the holy Council of Conſtance approving and allowing the ſame, that you that are Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other of the Clergy, and every one of you by himſelf, or by any other or others, being grave and fit perſons to have ſpiritual juriſdiction, do ſee that all and ſingular perſons, of what Dignity, Office, Preeminence, State, or Condition ſoever they be, and by what name ſoever they are known, which ſhall preſume otherwiſe to teach, preach, or obſerve, touching the moſt high and excellent, the moſt wholeſome and ſuperadmirable Sacrament of the Bloud of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, or elſe of the Sacrament of Baptiſm, Confeſſion of ſins, Penance for ſins, and extreame Unction, or elſe of any other Sacraments of the Church, and the Articles of the Faith, than that which the right Holy and Univerſal Church of Rome doth hold, teach, preach, and obſerve; or elſe that ſhall preſume obſtinately by any ways or means, privily or apertly, to hold, believe, and teach teach the Articles, Books, or Doctrine of the foresaid Arch-hereticks, John Wickliff, John Hus, and Jerom of Prague, being by the foresaid Synod of Constance with their Authors (as is said) damned and condemned, or dare presume publickly or privily to allow or commend in any wise the death and end of the said Arch-hereticks, or of any other their receivers, aiders, and favourers, in the favour or supportation of the foresaid Errors, as also their believers and adherents; that then as before, you see and cause them, and every of them to be most severely punished, and that you judge and give sentence upon them as Hereticks, and that as arrant Hereticks you leave them to the secular Court or power. Let the receivers also and favourers and defenders of such most pestiferous Persons, notwithstanding they neither believe, favour, nor have devotion towards their Errors, but haply shall receive or entertain such pestiferous Persons because of carnal affection, or Friendly love, besides the punishment due unto them by both Laws, over and above the same punishment by competent Judges, be for ever afflicted, and for so heinous Acts of theirs, with so severe pain and punishment excruciated, that the same may be to other in like case offending an example of terror; that at the least, those whom the fear of God by no means may revoke from such evil doing, yet the severity of this our discipline may force and constrain.

As touching the third sort, which shall be any manner of ways infected with this damnable Sect, and shall after competent admonition repent and amend themselves of such Errors and Sects aforesaid, and will return again into the lap and unity of our holy Mother the Church, and fully acknowledge and confess the Catholick Faith: towards them let the severity of justice, as the quality of the fact shall require, be somewhat tempered with a taste of mercy.

Et odii bellum & regni terra & excommunicationem fugientes cum illo qui fidelem in aquam & excretia ejus. Apoc. 13. Bi data ejt bis pugna in omnem tribum, & populum, & linguam & gentem, i. e. And power is given him over all Tribes, and People, and Tongues, and Nations, &c. Apoc. 13.

And furthermore we will and command, that by this our authority Apostolical ye exhort and admonish all the professors of the Catholick Faith, as Emperors, Kings, Dukes, Princes, Marquesses, Earls, Barons, Knights, and other Magistrates, Rectors, Consuls, Proconsuls, Shires, Countries, and Universities of the Kingdoms, Provinces, Cities, Towns, Castles, Villages, their Lands and other places, and all other executing Temporal Jurisdiction, according to the form and exigence of the Law, that they expel out of their Kingdoms, Provinces, Cities, Towns, Castles, Villages and Lands, and other places, all and all manner of such Hereticks, according to the effect and tenour of the Council of Lateran, beginning, Sicut ait Ecclesia, &c. that those whom publickly and manifestly by the evidence of their deeds shall be known to be such as like sick and scabbed Sheep infect the Lords Flock, they expel and banish till such time as from us, or you, or else other Ecclesiastical Judges or Inquisitors, holding the faith and communion of the holy Church of Rome, they shall receive other Order and countermand; and that they suffer no luch within their Shires and Circuits, to preach or to keep either house or family, either yet to use any handy-craft or occupation, or other trades of Merchandise, or else to solace themselves any ways, or frequent the company of Christian men.

And furthermore, if such publick and known Hereticks shall chance to die, (although not so denounced by the Church) yet in this so great a Crime let him and them want Christian burial, and let no Offerings or Oblations be made for them, nor received. His goods and substance also from the time of his death, according to the canonical Sanctions being confiscate, let no such enjoy them to whom they appertain, till that by the Ecclesiastical Judges, having power and authority in this behalf, Sentence upon that his or their crime of Herefie be declared, and promulgate; and let such Owners as be found suspect or noted with any such suspition of Herelie, before a competent and Ecclesiastical Judge, according to the consideration and exigence of that suspition, and according to the quality of the person, by the arbitrement of such a Judge, shew and declare his proper and own innocency with devotion, as beseemeth in that behalf. And if in his purgation, being canonically interdicted, he do fail, or be not able canonically to make his purgation, or that he refuse to take his Oath by damnable obstinacy to make such purgation; then let him be condemned as an Heretick. But such as through negligence or through slothfulness shall omit to shew their faid Innocency, and to make such purgation, let him be Excommunicate, and so long put out from the company of Christian men, till that they shall make condign satisfaction; so that if by the space of one whole year they shall remain in such Excommunication, then let them as Hereticks be condemned.

{KING Hen. 5.}

And further, if any shall be found culpable in any point of the foresaid pestiferous Doctrine of the Arch-hereticks aforesaid, or in any Article thereof, whether it be by the report of the Seditious, or else well-difposed; let them yet be punished according to the Canons. If only through infamy and suspition of the foresaid Articles, or any of them, any man shall be found suspect, and in his purgation canonical for this thing being interdicted, shall fail; let him be accounted as a man convict, and as a convict person by the Canons let him be punished.

Note the tenderness of this loving Mother the Church of Rome.

And furthermore, we invocating and putting in execution the Canon of our Predecessor of happy Memory, Pope Boniface the Eighth, which beginneth thus, Ut inquisitionis negotium, &c. In exhorting-wise require, and also command all Temporal Potentates, Lords and Judges afore recited, by whatsoever Dignities, Offices and Names they are known, that as they desire to be had, esteemed, and counted for the Faithful members and children of the Church, and do rejoyce in the name of Christ, so in likewise for defence of the same Faith, they will obey, intend, give their aid and favourable help to you that are Archbishops, Bishops, and Ecclesiastical men, to Inquisitors of all heretical pravity, and other Judges and Ecclesiastical Persons by you hereunto, as aforesaid, appointed (holding the faith and communion of our holy Mother the Church) for the searching out, taking, and safe custody of all the aforesaid Hereticks, their Believers, their Favourers, their Receivers, and their Defenders, whensoever they shall be thereunto of them required.

Et facies eamus publice, & magnifice, & sonore, & jaspere, & fir-mo, scripto constatibus in manu fua dictante. I. e. And he shall make both little and great, rich and poor, free and bond to take the character in their right hands, &c. Apoc. 13.

And that they bring and cause to be brought (all delay set apart) the foresaid pestiferous persons to seeking to destroy others with them, into safe keeping and prisons, as by you the Archbishops, Bishops, Clergy and Inquisitors aforesaid, are to be appointed or else unto such other place or places, as either you or they shall command within any of their Dominions, Governments and Rectories, where they by Catholick men; that is, by you the Archbishops, Bishops, the Clergy and Inquisitors, or any other that shall be by you appointed, or are already appointed by any of you, may be holden and kept in safe keeping, putting them in fetters, shackles, bolts, and manacles of Iron under most straight custody for escaping away, till such time as all that business, which belongeth unto them, be by the judgment of the Church finished and determined, and that of such Herelie, by a competent Ecclesiastical Judge (which firmly holdeth the faith and communion of the foresaid holy Church of Rome) they be condemned.

Satan relinquith his chains.

The residue let the foresaid Temporal Lords, Rectors, Judges, or other their Officers and Purfevants take amongst them with condign deaths, without any delay to punish. But fearing left to the prejudice and slander of the foresaid Catholick Faith and Religion, through the pretext of ignorance, any man herein should be circumvented, or that any subtil and crafty men should under the veil of frivolous excuse cloke and dissemble in this matter; and that as touching the convincing or apprehending of the foresaid Hereticks, their Receivers and Defenders, Favourers, Believers, and Adherents; and also of such as are suspect of Herelie, and with such like perverse Doctrine in any wise spotted, we might give more perfect instruction; Therefore as well to the Kingdom of Bohemia, and parts near adjoyning to the same, as all other where this superstitious Doctrine began to spread, we have thought it good to send the Articles hereunder written concerning the Sect of those Arch-Hereticks, for the better direction of the foresaid Catholick Faith.

Touching which Articles, by vertue of holy Obedience, we charge and command you and all other Archbishops and Bishops, all manner of Commissaries and Inquisitors, that every of them within the Diocess and Limits of their Jurisdiction; and also in the foresaid Kingdom and Dukedom, and places near adjoyning, although the same places be beyond the same their Jurisdiction, in the favour of the {KING Hen. 5.} Catholick Faith, do give most diligent and vigilant care about the extirpation and correction of those Errors, Archherelies, and most pestiferous Sect aforesaid; and also that they compel all defamed persons and suspect of so pestiferous a Contagion, whether it be under the penalty of the Crime confessed, or of Excommunication, suspention or interdict, or any other formidable pain canonical or legal, when and wherefoever it shall seem good unto them, and as the quality of the fact requireth, by an Oath corporally taken, either upon the holy Evangelists, or upon the Reliques of Saints, or upon the Image of the Crucifix, according to the observances of certain places, and according to the Interrogatories, to make convenient answer to every Article therein written. For we intend against all and singular Archbishops, Bishops, Ecclesiastical Persons, or Inquisitors, which shall shew themselves negligent and remiss in the extirpation of the leaven of this heretical pravity, and purging their Territories, Dioces, and places to them appointed, of such evil and wicked men, to proceed and cause to be proceeded unto the deprivation and depolition of their Pontifical Dignities, and shall substitute such other in their places, which can and may be able to confound the said heretical pravity, and proceed to further pains against such by the Laws limited, and to other yet more grievous (if need require) we our selves will proceed and cause to be proceeded, according as the party his Fact, and filthiness of his Crime committed, shall deserve. The tenor of those Articles whereof we have made mention in this our own writing are in words as follow.

Catholick

The old manner of the Popish Oath.

The Articles of John Hus to be enquired upon.

1. THere is one only universal Church, which is the University of the Predestinate, as shall after be declared.

2. The universal Church is only one; as there is one University of those that are Predestinate.

3. Paul was never a member of the Devil, although he did certain acts like unto the acts of the Church Malignant.

Speaking of the invisible Church, the Article is true.

4. The Reprobate are not parts of the Church, for that no part of the same finally falleth from her, because that the charity of Predestination, which bindeth the same Church together, never faileth.

5. The two Natures (that is) the Divinity and the Humanity, be one Christ.

This Article fetcheth its true sense out of the words of Jerome of Prague.

6. The Reprobate, although he be sometime in grace according to present justice, yet is he never a part of the holy Church; and the Predestinate is ever a member of the Church, although sometime he fall from grace adventitia, but not from grace of Predestination; ever taking the Church for the convocation of the predestinate, whether they be in grace or not, according to present justice. And after this for the Church is an Article of our belief.

7. Peter is not, nor ever was the head of the holy Catholick Church.

8. Priests living viciously do defile the authority of Priesthood, and so, as unfaithful Children, do unfaithfully believe of the seven Sacraments, of the Keys of the Church, of Offices, of Censures, of Ceremonies, of the worshipping of Reliques, Indulgences, Orders, and other holy things of the Church.

The Papal Dignity touched.

9. The Papal Dignity came and grew from the Emperor; and his Government and Institution sprang from the Emperors Government.

10. No man can reasonably affirm either of himself or other, that he is the Head of any particular Church, or that the Bishop of Rome is the Head of the Church of Rome.

11. A man ought not to believe, that he which is Bishop of Rome is the head of every particular Church, unless God have predestinate him.

12. None is the Vicar of Christ, or else of Peter, unless he follow him in manners and conditions, seeing that there is no other following more pertinent, nor otherwise apt to receive of God this Power procuratory. For unto the Office of a Vicegerent of Christ is required the conformity of Manners, and the authority of the Institutor.

13. The Pope is not the manifest and true Successor of Peter the Prince of the Apostles, if he live in manners contrary to Peter; and if he hunt after avarice, then is he the Vicar of Judas Iscariot. And likewise the Cardinals be not the true and manifest Successors of the College of the other Apostles of Christ, unless they live according to the manner of the Apostles, keeping the Commandments and Councils of our Lord Jesus Christ.

14. The Doctors alledging that a man, which will not be amended by the Ecclesiastical Censures, is to be delivered to the Secular Powers, do follow in this point the Bishops, Scribes and Pharisees, that delivered Christ to the Secular Power (saying, It is not lawful for us to kill any man) because he would not obey them in all things; and that such be greater Homicides than Pilate.

15. The Ecclesiastical Obedience is such an Obedience as the Priests of the Church have found out, besides the express authority of the Scripture. The immediate division of humane works, is, that they be either vertuous or vitious; And if a man be vitious, and doth any thing, then doth he it vitiously, and if he be vertuous, and doth any thing, then doth he it vertuously. For like as Vice, which is called a great offence or mortal sin, doth stain all the doings of a vitious man; so Vertue doth quicken all the doings of a vertuous man.

16. A Priest of God living after his Law, and having the knowledge of the Scripture, and a desire to edifie the people, ought to preach, notwithstanding any Excommunication pretended of the Pope. And further, if the Pope, or any other Magistrate doth forbid a Priest so disposed to preach, he ought not to be obedient unto him. For every one that taketh upon him the Order of Priesthood, receiveth in charge the Office of a Preacher; and of that burden ought he well to discharge himself, any Excommunication against him pretended in any wise notwithstanding.

17. By the Censures Ecclesiastical, as of Excommunication, suspending and interdict, the Clergy to their own advancement cause the Lay-people to aid them; they multiply their avarice, they defend their malice, and prepare the way to Antichrist. And it is an evident sign that such Censures proceed from Antichrist, which in their Process they call Fulminationes; that is, their Thunderbolts wherewith the Clergy principally proceedeth against those that declare the wickedness of Antichrist, who so greatly for his own commodity hath abused them.

18. If the Pope be evil, especially if he be a Reprobate, then is he with Judas a very Devil, a Thief, and the Son of Perdition, and is not the head of the holy Church Militant, nor any member of the same.

19. The grace of Predestination is the band wherewith the body of the Church and every member of the same is indissolubly joyned to their head Christ.

20. The Pope or Prelate, that is evil and a Reprobate, is a Pastor in name, and not in deed, yea he is a Thief and a Robber in very deed.

John Hus supponderh this Article with this difficult. Non rationes mentis, sed rationes officii

21. The Pope ought not to be called the most holy one for his Office-sake, for then ought a King to be called by his Office the most holy One; and the Hangman, with other such Officers also, were to be called holy; yea, the Devil himself ought to be called holy, for as much as he is Gods Officer.

John Hus declareth his mind touching this Article sufficiently before.

22. If the Pope live contrary unto Christ, although he climb up by the right and lawful Election, according to the common custom of men; yet notwithstanding should he otherwise climb than by Christ; yea, though we admit that he should enter by the Election principally made by God. For Judas Iscariot was lawfully elect of God Christ Jesus to his Bishoprick, and yet came not he the same way he ought to do unto the Sheepfold.

23. The condemnation of forty five Articles of John Wickliff by the Doctors made is unreasonable, wicked and naught, and the cause by them alledged is fained; that is, that none of them are Catholick, but every one of them heretical, erroneous, or slanderous.

Election maketh not the Successor of Peter, but institution.

24. Not for that the Electors or the most part of them have consented together with lively voice, according to the custom of men upon the person of any, therefore that person is lawfully elect, or therefore is the true and manifest Successor and Vicar of Peter the Apostle, or of

of any other the Apostles in the Ecclesiastical Office. Wherefore, whether the Electors have either well or evil made their Election, it behoveth us to believe the same by the works of him that is elected. For in that that every one worketh more meritoriously to the profit of the Church, he hath so much the more greater authority from God.

One head of the universal Church, beside Christ, hath no foundation in all Scripture.

25. There is not so much as one spark of appearance, that there ought to be one head, ruling and governing the Church in Spiritual Causes, which should always be conversant in the Church Militant; for Christ without any such monstrous heads, by his true Disciples sparsed through the whole world, could better a great deal Rule his Church.

26. The Apostles and faithful Priests of God have right worthily, in all things necessary to salvation; governed the Church before the Popes Office took place, and so might they do again, by like possibily until Christ came to Judgment, if the Office should fail.

Let every one that is suspected in the foresaid Articles, or else otherwise found with the assertion of them, be examined in manner and form as followeth.

The Form and manner of the Popes Inquisition.

IMprimis, Whether he knew John Wickliff of England, John Hus of Bohemia, and Jerome of Prague, or any of them, and how he came by the knowledge of them; whether that during the lives of them, or any of them, they had either been conversant with them, or found any friendship at their hands?

2. Item, Whether he knowing them, or any of them to be excommunicate, did willingly participate with them; esteeming and affirming the same their participation to be no sin?

Heresie to pray for John Wickliff or John Hus, &c.

3. Item, Whether that after their deaths, he ever prayed for them, or any of them, openly or privily, doing any work of mercy for them, affirming them to be either Saints, or else to be saved?

4. Item, Whether he thought them, or any of them to be Saints, or whether that ever he spake such words, and whether ever he did exhibite any worship unto them as unto Saints?

5. Item, Whether he believe, hold and affirm, that every general Council, as also the Council of Constance, doth represent the universal Church?

Heresie not to believe the Council of Constance

6. Item, Whether he doth believe, that that which the holy Council of Constance, representing the universal Church, hath and doth allow in the favour of the Faith, and salvation of Souls, is to be approved and allowed of all the faithful Christians; and that whatsoever the same Council hath condemned, and doth condemn to be contrary both to Faith and to all good men, is to be believed, holden, and affirmed for condemned, or not?

7. Item, Whether he believeth that the condemnations of John Hus, John Wickliff, and Jerome of Prague, made as well upon their persons, as their Books and Doctrine, by the holy general Council of Constance, be rightly and justly made, and of every good Catholick man are so to be holden and affirmed, or not?

8. Item, Whether he believe, hold, and affirm, that John Wickliff of England, John Hus of Bohemia, and Jerome of Prague, were Hereticks or not, and for Hereticks to be nominated and preached, yea or not; and whether their Books and Doctrines were and be perverse or not; for the which, together with their pertinacy, they were condemned by the holy sacred Council of Constance for Hereticks?

9. Item, Whether he have in his custody any Treatises, small Works, Epistles, or other writings in what Language or Tongue soever, set forth and translated by any of these Hereticks, John Wickliff, John Hus, and Jerome, or any other of their false Disciples and Followers, that he may deliver them to the Ordinaries of that place, or his Commissary, or to the Inquisitors upon his Oath. And if he say that he hath no such writing about him, but that they are in some other place, that then you swear him to bring the same before his Ordinary, or other aforenamed, within a certain time to him prefixed?

10 Item, Whether he knoweth any that hath the Treatises, Works, Epistles, or any other writings of the aforesaid John Wickliff, John Hus, and Jerome, in whatsoever Tongue they are made or translated, and that he detect and manifest the same, for the purgation of their Faith and execution of Justice. {KING. Eliz. 5.}

11. Item, Especially let the learned be examined, whether he believeth that the Sentence of the holy Council of Constance upon the forty five Articles of John Wickliff, and the thirty Articles of John Hus be not Catholick; which faith that some of them are notorious and heretical, some erroneous, othersome blasphemous, some slanderous, some rash and seditious, some offensive to godly ears?

12. Item, Whether he believeth and affirmeth that in no case it is lawful for a man to swear?

13. Item, Whether he believeth, that at the Commandment of a Judge or any other it is lawful to take an Oath to tell the truth in any convenient cause, although it be but purging of infamy, or not?

14. Item, Whether he believeth that Perjury wittingly committed, upon what cause soever, whether it be for the safeguard of his own life, or of any other mans life, (yea although it be in the cause and defence of the Faith) be a sin or not?

15. Item, Whether a man contemning purposely the Rites of the Church, and the Ceremonies of Exorcism, of Catechism, and the consecration of the water of Baptism be in deadly sin or not?

16. Item, Whether he believe, that after the consecration of the Priest, in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the figure of Bread and Wine be no material Bread and Wine; but in all points the same very Christ which was crucified upon the Cross, and sitteth upon the right hand of the Father?

17. Item, Whether he believe, that after the consecration made by the Priest, under the only form of Bread, and besides the form of Wine, be the very Fleth of Christ and his Blood, his Soul and his Deity, and so whole Christ as he is; and in like wise, under the form of Wine, without the form of Bread, be the very Fleth of Christ and his very Blood, his Soul and Deity, and so whole Christ, and the same body absolutely under every one of those kinds singularly?

Heresie to celebrate in both kinds.

18. Item, Whether he doth believe, that the custom of houseling of the Lay-people under the form of Bread only, observed of the universal Church, and allowed by the only Council of Constance, be to be used, and not without the Authority of the Church at mens pleasures to be altered, and that they that obstinately affirm the contrary to this are to be punished as Hereticks, or not?

19. Item, Whether he believe that those which contemn the receiving of the Sacraments of confirmation, or extream Unction; or else the solemnization of Matrimony, commit deadly sin or not?

20. Item, Whether he believe that a Christian man, over and besides the contrition of heart, being licensed of a convenient Priest, is bound to confess himself only to a Priest, and not to any Lay-man, be he never so devout or good, upon the necessity of Salvation?

21. Item, Whether he believe, that in the cases before put, a Priest may absolve a Sinner confessing himself, and being contrite, from all sins, and enjoyn him penance for the same?

22. Item, Whether he believe, that an evil Priest, with due manner and form, with the intention of doing, doth verily consecrate, doth verily absolve, doth verily baptize, and doth verily dispose all other Sacraments even as the Church doth?

23. Item, Whether he believe that S. Peter was the Vicar of Christ, having power to bind and to loose upon the Earth?

24. Item, Whether he believe that the Pope being canonically elect, which for the time shall be, by that name expressly be the Succeffor of Peter or not, having supream Authority in the Church of God?

25. Item, Whether he believe that the Authority or Jurisdiction of the Pope, an Archbishop or a Bishop, in binding or loosing, be more than the authority of a simple Priest or not, although he have charge of Souls?

Heresie to deny the Popes Indulgences.

26. Item, Whether he believe, that the Pope may upon a just and good cause give Indulgences and remition of Sins to all Christian men, being verily contrite and confessed, especially to those that go on Pilgrimage to holy places and good deeds? {KING. Eliz. 5.}

27. Item, Whether he believe, that by such grant the Pilgrims that vilit those Churches, and give them any thing, may obtain remission of sins or not?

28. Item, Whether he believe that all Bishops may grant unto their Subjects, according as the holy Canons do limit, such Indulgences, or not?

Heresie not to worship Images.

29. Item, Whether he believe and affirm, that it is lawful for faithful Christians to worship Images and the Reliques of Saints, or not?

30. Item, Whether he believe that those Religions, which the Church hath allowed, were lawfully and reasonably brought in of the holy Fathers, or not?

31. Item, Whether he believe that the Pope, or any other Prelate for the time being, or their Vicars, may excommunicate their subject Ecclesiastical or Secular for disobedience or contumacy; so that such an one is to be holden and taken for excommunicate, or not?

32. Item, Whether he believe, that for the disobedience and contumacy of persons excommunicate, increasing, the Prelates or their Vicars in spiritual things have power to aggravate and to reaggravate, to put upon men the interdict, and to call for the Secular Arm; and that the same Secular Arm or Power ought to be obedient to the Censures, by their Inferiors called for?

33. Item, Whether he believe that the Pope and other Prelates, or else their Vicars, have power in spiritual things to excommunicate Priests, and Lay-men that are stubborn and disobedient, from their Office, Benefice, or entrance into the Church, and from the Administration of the Sacraments of the Church, also to suspend them?

Fleth Popes will be fore to lose nothing.

34. Item, Whether he believe that it is lawful for Ecclesiastical Persons, without committing sin, to have any Possessions and Temporal goods; and whether he believe that it is not lawful for Lay-men to take away the same from them by their authority; but rather that such takers away and incroachers upon Ecclesiftical goods are to be punished as Committers of Sacrilledge, yea, although such Ecclesiastical Persons live naughtily that have such goods?

Wealthy wickednesse maintained.

35. Item, Whether any such taking away or encroaching upon any Prieft rashly or violently made, although the Priest be an evil Liver, be Sacrilledge, or not?

36. Item, Whether he believe that it is lawful for Laymen of whether Sex soever, that is, men and women, to preach the Word of God, or not?

The Pope neither preacheth himself, nor yet will suffer other good Priests to preach.

37. Item, Whether he believe that it is lawful to all Priests freely to preach the Word of God whereofever, whenfoever, and to whomfoever it fhall please them, although they be not fent at all?

38. Item, Whether he believe that all mortal fins, and especially such as be manifeft and publick, are to be corrected and to be extirpate, or not?

Furthermore, we will, command, and decree, That if any by fecret information, by you or any other to be received, fhall be found either infamed or fuspected of any kind of the peftiferous Sect, Herefie, and Doctrine of the moft peftilent men, John Wickliff, John Hus, and Jerome of Prague, the Arch-hereticks aforefaid, or of favouring, receiving, or defending the forefaid damned men whilft they lived on the Earth, their falfe Followers and Difciples, or any that believeth their Errors, or any that after their death pray for them or any of them, or that nominateth them to be amongft the number of Catholick men, or that defendeth them to be placed amongft the number of the Saints, either by their preaching, worfhipping, or other ways, wherein they deferve to be fuspected; that then they by you or fome of you may be cited perfonally to appear before you or fome of you, without either Procter or Doctor to anfwer for them, an Oath being openly taken by them as is aforefaid, to fpeak the plain and meer verity of the Articles above written, and every of them, or other opportune, as cafe and circumftance fhall require, according to your difcretion, as you or any of you fhall fee expedient to proceed againft them, or any of them, according to thefe prefents, or otherwife Canonically, as you fhall think good.

Also that you do publish solemnly, and cause to be published these present Letters, omitting the Articles and Interrogatories herein contained, in the Cities and other places of your Dioceſs, where conveniently you may; under our Authority, and there to denounce and cauſe to be denounced all and fingular fuch Hereticks, with their Abettors and Favourers of their Herefies and Errors; of what fex or kind foever, that do hold and defend the faid Errors, or do participate any manner of way with Hereticks, privily or apertly; of what ftate, dignity, or condition foever he or they be, Patriarch, Archbifhop, King, Queen, Duke, or of what other dignity either Ecclefiaftical or Secular he be; alfo with their Advocates and Procurators whofoever, which are Believers, Followers, Favourers, Defenders, or Receivers of fuch Hereticks, or fufpected to be Believers, Followers, Fautors, Defenders, or Receivers of them, to be excommunicate every Sunday and Feftival day, in the prefence of the people. Popa ſpiritualia & cadat.

Furthermore, that you diligently cauſe to be enquired, by the faid our authority, upon all and fingular fuch perſons both men and women, that maintain, approve, defend, and teach fuch Errors, or that be Favourers, Receivers and Defenders of them, whether exempt or not exempt, of what dignity, ſtate, preheminence, degree, order, or condition ſoever. And ſuch as you ſhall find in the ſaid your Inquifition, either by their own confeſſion, or by any other meas to be defamed, or otherwiſe infected with the ſpot of fuch Herefie or Error, you through the ſentence of Excommunication, Suſpenſion, Interdict, and privation of their Dignities, Parſonages, Offices, or other Benefices of the Church, and Fees which they hold of any Church, Monaſtery, and other Eccleſiaſtical Places, alſo of Honours and ſecular Dignities and degrees of Sciences, or other faculties, as alſo by other pains and cenſures of the Church, or by ways and means whatſoever elſe ſhall ſeem to you expedient, by taking and impriſoning their Bodies, and other corporal Puniſhments wherewith Hereticks are puniſhed, or are wont, and are commanded by Canonical Sanctions to be uſed; and if they be Clerks, by degradation, do correct and puniſh, and cauſe them to be corrected and puniſhed with all diligence.

See here the Dragon caſting out of his floods to ſwallow up the Saints.

Furthermore, that you do riſe up ſtourly and couragiouſly againſt ſuch Hereticks, and the goods as well of them, as of the Lay-men, according to the Canonical Sanction made againſt Hereticks and their Followers; under the which we will and command them and their partakers to be ſubject. And alſo ſuch perſons as ſhall be infamed of the Hereſies or Errors aforeſaid, or any of the premiſſes, ſhall be bound to purge themſelves at your arbitrement: but the other, which either by Witneſſes, or by their own confeſſions, or other allegations or probations, ſhall be convicted of the foreſaid Hereſies or Articles, or of any the premiſſes, they ſhall be compelled to revoke and abjure publickly and ſolemnly the ſaid Articles and Errors, and to ſuffer condign penance and puniſhment, yea even to perpetual impriſonment (if need be) for the ſame.

And to the intent that they ſhall not nouriſh any kind of Hereſies hereafter, either in word, deed, or geſture, or ſhall induce other either in word or deed, privily or apertly, directly or indirectly to believe the ſame, they ſhall be forced to put in ſufficient Surety, Who, if it ſo chance that they will not publickly and ſolemnly renounce and abjure their Articles and Errors, and take at your hands condign Penance, though it be to perpetual or temporal puniſhment according to your diſcretion, neither will be contented to put in ſufficient ſurety that they will not hereafter hold or nouriſh theſe Errors and Hereſies, neither will induce other by word or deed privily or apertly, directly or indirectly, or by any other manner of colour to believe the ſame, that then you ſhall proceed againſt them, according to the quality of their errors and demerits; yea, and if you ſee it ſo expedient, as againſt Hereticks, and as infected with Hereſie, by our authority, according to the Canonical Sanctions ſummarily, and ſimply and plainly, Sine ſtrepitu & figura judicii, and of Office, all Appelation or Appellations whatſoever ceaſing, and that you puniſh the ſame, according to the Sanctions and Traditions Canonical, yea if need be, in leaving and committing them to the ſecular power; and againſt ſuch as be Superiors or learned Doctors, laying the Cenſures of Eccleſiaſtical Excommunication, all Appellation ſet aſide, alſo invocating, if need ſhall require, aid of the ſecular arm; The Conſtitution as well of our

Predeceſſor

Pope Martin the Fifth contrary to Pope Boniface the Eighth.

Predeceſſor Pope Boniface the Eighth of bleſſed memory, wherein is decreed that no man without his City or Dioceſs (except in certain caſes) or in places being one days journey diſtant from thence where he inhabiteth, ſhall be called into judgment, and that no man do preſume to depute Judges from the See Apoſtolick, without the City and Dioceſs where they are deputed to proceed againſt any; and do preſume to commit their authority to any other perſon or perſons, or to ſetch and remove any man beyond one days journey from out his Dioceſs where he dwelleth, or at moſt two days journey, if it be in a general Council; as alſo all other Conſtitutions of any Biſhop of Rome, touching as well Judges delegate, as perſons not be called to judgment beyond a certain number; or elſe any other Edict, indulge, priviledge, or exemption general or ſpecial, granted from the Apoſtolick See, for any perſon or perſons not to be interdicted, ſuſpended, or excommunicated, or cited up to judgment without the compaſs of certain limits, or elſe whatſoever thing otherwiſe may hinder, ſtop, or impeach your juriſdiction, power, and free proceeding herein by any means to the contrary notwithſtanding. Dat. Conſtant. the firſt year of our Popedom.

Pope Martin undoeth the Acts and Edicts of all other Popes

¶ This bloody and abominable Commiſſion of Pope Martin, which I have copied out of a certain old Monument, remaining in the hands of Maſter Hackluyt, Student in the Temple, ſeemeth to be directed and given out to the publick deſtruction of all faithful Chriſtian men, about the later end and breaking up of the Council of Conſtance. Anno 1418. By the which the prudent Reader hath this to note and conſider, what labour, what policy, what counſel, and what Laws have been ſet, what ways have been taken, what feverity hath been ſhewed, how mens power, wit, and authority of the whole world have conſpired together from time to time, continually by all manner of means to ſubvert and ſupplant the Word and Way of the Lord; and yet notwithſtanding man hath not prevailed, but all his force and deviſed policies hath been overthrown, diſpatched, and with the counſel of Achitophel and Ammon, have been brought to naught, and contrary to the fury of the World the Goſpel of Chriſt hath ſtill increaſed. Neither yet for all this will the Pope ceaſe to ſpurn and rebel ſtill againſt the Kingdom of Chriſt and his Goſpel, againſt which neither he, nor yet the Gates of Hell ſhall ever prevail. The Lord of Hoſts be merciful to his poor perſecuted Flock. Amen.

Note how Antichriſt repeth and riſeth againſt Chriſt

Mans power and counſel too weak againſt Chriſt

Againſt this peſtilent Bull and Inquiſition of Pope Martin the great Antichriſt, I thought good here to adjoyn and annex another contrary writing of the Bohemians, bearing the name and ſubſcription of Procopius, Comradus, and other Captains of the Bohemians; which ſeemeth not long after the death of Ziſca to be written againſt the peſtiferous See of Rome, the tenour whereof here followeth.

A fruitful and Chriſtian Exhortation of the Bohemians to Kings and Princes, to ſtir them up to the zeal of the Goſpel.

An exhortation of the Bohemians.

THe Almighty God the Father, by his welbeloved Son Jeſus Chriſt, may in his holy Spirit open the underſtanding both of you and of all Chriſtians, and lighten your hearts with the light of his Doctrine of Righteouſneſs, and may make you to continue therein ſurely eſtabliſhed to the end. This we deſire of you for your ſalvation, all ye honourable, wiſe, and honeſt Noblemen, and all the Communalty, yea Rich and Poor, hear and conſider with diligent heed the words of this preſent Letter, which is ſent unto you from the Country of the Bohemians. It is manifeſt and well known to you and many other Cities, Kings, Princes, and Lords, that now a certain number of years there hath been great diſcord betwixt us and you; and there have been ſome which have moved you by Letters, and provoked you to make War againſt us, and to deſtroy us. And as well on your part as ours many men, as well noble as unnoble, have foolihly loſt their lives. Yet never hitherto have ye in any part underſtood our Faith by our own confeſſion, neither whether we be able to prove the ſame out of the Scriptures, yea or no: and yet in the mean time Kings, Princes, Lords and Cities have ſuſtained great damage. And hereof we greatly marvel that you do ſo much truſt and believe the Pope and his Prieſts, which give you drink full of poiſon, and ſuch comfort as no man can underſtand, in that they ſay that they will give you forgiveneſs of all your ſins, and great grace and pardon, to this end that you ſhould War upon us and deſtroy us; whereas their graces and pardons are none other than great Lyes, and a great ſeducing of the Body and Soul of all them that believe them, and put their truſt in them. This we would prove unto them, and overcome them by the holy Scripture; and we would ſuffer, that whoſoever is deſirous to hear, the ſame ſhould hear it. For the Pope and all his Prieſts herein deal with you as the Devil would have done with our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Of whom Luke writeth in his fourth Chapter, That he brought him upon an high hill, and ſhewed unto him in the twinkling of an eye, all the Kingdoms that are in the compaſs of the earth, and ſaid unto him, I will give thee, &c. So the Devil deceiveth the Pope, and all the Prieſts with the riches of the World, and worldly power; And they think they can give grace and pardon when they will; and they themſelves ſhall never find favour before Almighty God, except they repent and make amends, becauſe of their great deceiving of Chriſtendom. And how can they give that to others, which they themſelves have not? So did the Devil, who was rich in promiſing, and poor in giving. And like as the Devil is not aſhamed to call a lye, ſo all they are not aſhamed to ſpeak that which ſhall never be found true, nor be proved by the holy Scriptures, becauſe for no cauſe they ſtir up Kings, Princes, Lords, and Citizens to make War againſt us, not to the end that the Chriſtian Faith ſhould thereby be defended, but becauſe they fear that their ſecret Vices and Hereſies ſhall be diſcloſed and made manifeſt. For if they had a true cauſe, and a godly love to the Chriſtian Faith, they would then take the Books of the holy Scripture, and would come unto us, and overcome us with the Weapons of Gods Word, and that is our chief deſire. For ſo did the Apoſtles of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who came to the Pagans and Jews, and brought them from their Infidelity to the true Faith of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and this they did in the Spirit of meekneſs, as the Apoſtle Paul writeth in the ſixth Chapter of the Galatians, Brethren, if any man be grieved, &c. So ought they alſo to do, if they perceived that they were juſt and we unjuſt. And if we would not abide Inſtruction, then they might take to them Kings, Princes, Lords, and Imperial Cities, and reſiſt us according to the Commandments of the holy Scripture. But this is the ſubtil defence of all the Biſhops and Prieſts, that they ſay that Maſter Hus and Hierome, which were burnt at Conſtance, were overcome of the holy Father the Pope, and of the whole Council. For ye muſt underſtand that they were not overcome by the Holy Ghoſt, but unjuſtly, with wrongful violence, which God may yet hereafter grievouſly punith in all them that gave their counſel and aid thereto. And they ſay it ought not to be ſuffered, that we ſhould be heard in confeſſing our Faith. How may that be proved by the holy Scripture, ſince Chriſt heard the Devil, as it is written in the fourth Chapter of Matthew? And they are not better than Chriſt, nor we worſe than the Devil. If they be juſt and have the truth with them (as they ſay they have) and we be unrighteous, why do they fear, ſince the truth ought not be afraid of falſehood, as Eſdras writeth in his ſecond Book, the third Chapter? Zorobabel declared that truth is of all things the moſt mighty, and overcometh all things. For Chriſt is the truth, Joh. 14. I am the way, the truth, &c. And the Devil is the Father of lyes, Joh. 8. He is a Lyar from the beginning, and never abode in the truth, and there is no truth in him. Therefore, if the Pope and his Prieſts have the truth, let them overcome us with the Word of God. But if they have lyes, then they cannot long abide in their preſumption. Wherefore, we exhort and beſeech all the Imperial Cities, all Kings, Princes, Noblemen, Rich and Poor, for Gods ſake, and for his righteouſneſs, that one of them write hereof to another, and that there may be ſome means made, how we may commune with you ſafely and friendly, at ſome ſuch place as ſhall be fit both for you and us, and bring with you your Biſhops and Teachers, and let them and our Teachers fight together with the Word of God, and let us hear them, and let not the one overcome the other by violence or falſe ſubtilty, but only by the Word

The Pope and Prelates by their Letters ſtirred them to fight.

{KING Hen. 5.}

Falſe words to make Fools fain.

The Pope fetcheth the World with vain promiſes of things which he cannot give.

Wherefore the Popes Clergy will abide no Conference with the Laity.

The Devil and the Pope rich in promiſing, and poor in giving.

The Popes pretenced excuſe declared. Rom. 1.

And if ye will not determine to do any other thing than to fight againſt us, then will we take the Lord to our help and his truth, and we will defend it to the death, and we will not be afraid for the Excommunication or Curſe of the Pope, or his Cardinals, or of the Biſhops, becauſe we know that the Pope is not God, as he maketh himſelf, that he can curſe and excommunicate when he will, or bleſs when he will; who hath now theſe many years curſed and excommunicated us, and yet notwithſtanding God and his gracious bleſſing hath been our help. But peradventure ye will ſay, that though we ſee that Biſhops and Prieſts be evil and wicked, yet we cannot kick them; for who ſhould baptize our Children, who ſhould hear Confeſſions, and miniſter the holy Sacraments? and then alſo we ſhould be within the Excommunication of the Pope, and of his Biſhops. Welbeloved, ye need to take no care for theſe matters. The excommunicating of the Pope hurteth you nothing. Fear ye the excommunicating of God, and the Lord will provide for thoſe things well enough. If ye would baniſh evil Biſhops and Prieſts, ye ſhould have good Prieſts which ſhould baptize your Children, hear Confeſſions, and miniſter the holy Myſteries, becauſe when the Devil is baniſhed, then place is made for the Holy Ghoſt: So when ill Biſhops and Prieſts ſhall be baniſhed, then place ſhall be made for good Prieſts and Biſhops. Alſo, your Biſhops and Prieſts ſay, That we are Miſcreants and Hereticks, and that we believe not on Purgatory, upon the Virgin Mary, nor upon the Saints; wherein they ſay ill, for we will prove by the holy Scripture, that we know better by Gods Grace how we ought to believe upon Purgatory, and upon Mary the Mother of our Lord, and upon his welbeloved Saints, than they can tell us. Alſo they ſay, That we will not be obedient unto the Pope. Truly when he ſhall become holy and juſt, then we know well that we ought to be obedient to him in all things, and not before. They ſay alſo, That we deſtroy Gods holy Service, in that we deſtroy Monaſteries, baniſhing thence the wicked Monks and Nuns. Truly we did it, thinking once that they were holy, that they did the reverend Service of God, but after that we well perceived and conſidered their life and works, then we perceived that they were falſe lowly Hypocrites, and wicked Builders on high, and Sellers of Pardons and Maſſes for the dead, and ſuch as devoured in themſelves the ſins of the people. And whereas they ſaid that they riſe at midnight when other men ſleep, and pray for the ſins of the people: foraſmuch as their ſelling of their Prayers and Maſſes for the dead for Gifts, is no better than Hypocriſie and Hereſie; therefore if we do ſpeak againſt them and deſtroy their Monaſteries, we do not therein deſtroy the Service of God, but rather the Service of the Devil, and the Schools of Hereticks. And if ye knew them as we know them, ye would as diligently deſtroy them as we do. For Chriſt our Lord did not ordain any ſuch Order, and therefore it muſt needs come to paſs that ſhortly it ſhall be deſtroyed, as our Lord ſaith in the Goſpel of Saint Matthew, Chap. 15. Every plant which my Father hath not planted, ſhall be rooted up. We deſire you alſo that ye would diligently conſider the Articles here written, wherein your Biſhops and Prieſts are guilty. Mat. 15.

The firſt Article is, That when your Biſhops will ordain Prieſts, they do it not except he that is to be made Prieſt have ſufficient living, either Inheritance left him of his Parents, or of Benefices: whereas notwithſtanding, Chriſt would that Prieſts ſhould be poor, foraſmuch as it is enough for the Scholar to be as his Maſter is, and the Servant to be as his Lord is; and the Biſhops will that they ſhould be rich upon Earth, which is unjuſt before the Lord.

The abuſe of Popiſh Religion in making Prieſts, Cardinals, &c.

The ſecond Article is, That Biſhops take money of ſuch as are to be ordained; but Saint Peter did therefore ſharply rebuke Simon Magus, when he would have given him money, as it is written in the eighth of the Acts. Acts 8.

The Third Article is, That they that come to be Prieſts enter into their Prieſthood, not for Gods Service-ſake, becauſe they mean to preach and increaſe it among the Chriſtian people, ſo as the people may be edified and made better, but rather for an idle life, and that they may eat well and drink well, and that they may be honoured and reverenced upon Earth. For every one waiteth upon his Prieſt as a Thief and a Robber, as John writeth in his tenth Chapter.

The abuſe of Popiſh Religion in taking Orders.

The fourth Article is, Of Excommunication, which the Pope and all his Prieſts take to themſelves, and therewith fetter and bind all Chriſtian people as they will, and they think that whoſoever they Excommunicate or Curſe, he is accurſed and excommunicate before God. And we will prove by the holy Scripture, that they themſelves are excommunicate and accurſed before God, becauſe they keep not the Commandment of the love of God, whereof the Apoſtle writeth in the firſt to the Corinthians, the fifteenth Chapter. If any man loveth not our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, he is excommunicate in the day of the coming of the Lord. For they cannot excommunicate you, who are ready bound and excommunicate before God and his Saints; and therefore why fear ye their Excommunication? 1 Cor. 16

Popiſh Excommunication abuſed.

The fifth Article is, That they take Gifts to pray for the dead, and to ſay Maſs for their Souls. This is a wickedneſs and Hereſie before the Lord, and all they that contribute to them to this end, do wickedly, for that hereby Prieſts become Merchants of Prayers and of Maſſes; and herewith is all the Church of Rome poiſoned and deſiled. For if they would pray for the dead, and ſay Maſs for their Souls, yet no man ought to hire them thereto, foraſmuch as they ought to take no Gifts, neither little nor great. And every one that taketh Rewards to this end, to redeem Souls out of Purgatory, do therewithall caſt their own Souls down into Hell. And they that give any thing to that end, do altogether loſe that which they give: And with ſuch deviliſh ſubtilty the Pope with all his Prieſts have deceived, ſpoiled, and diſherited Kings, Princes, Lords and Knights, and good Houſholders and many other, of their lawful Inheritances, becauſe their Anceſtors and Progenitors gave it to Colleges, Monaſteries, and Churches, that they might make Memorials of them, and to ſing or ſay Prayers or Maſſes for their Souls, that they might be redeemed out of Purgatory. And with ſuch goods, Biſhops, Canons, and Monaſteries have made themſelves ſo rich, that now they fall at variance with Cities and Princes: and whereas they ſhould procure peace betwixt Cities and Rulers, there they are the firſt that begin War; and as long as they have ſuch goods, they will never ceaſe to be at ſtrife with the Lords

The Popes Church poſſeſſed with buying and ſelling their praying and ſinging, and all their doing for money.

Fear of Purgatory hath robbed almoſt all the whole World.

So long as Prieſts be rich, they will never be true Teachers.

Lords and Cities, neither will they begin to teach you the true foundation of the truth. For they do as a Dog, which as long as he holdeth a bone in his mouth and gnaweth it, so long he holdeth his peace, and cannot bark; Even so, as long as they have this bone of pleasant riches, it will never be well in the World. Wherefore all Kings, Princes, and Imperial Cities should do a great Work of godliness and mercy, if by them they were compelled to do this, as the Dog is when the bone is taken from him.

The subtilty of the Devil in making the Church rich

And therefore ye noble Men, Kings, Princes, Lords, Imperial Cities, and all the Communalty, both rich and poor, if ye have been asleep, yet now awaken and open your eyes, and behold the subtilty of the Devil, how he hath blinded the Church of Rome, and take again that which is yours, and not theirs. And if you will make a good memorial for your Souls, then do as the Wiseman saith, Ecc. 19. Eccles. 19. Lay up Alms, &c.

The sixth Article is, that they are full of pride and of high mind, which is manifestly known by their long, costly, and superfluous Garments, wherein they walk very unlike to Christ our Lord, who had a Garment without a seam, and to the welbeloved John Baptist, who had a Garment of Camels hair; and they will be honoured and worshipped, and they preach and say, That Priesthood ought to be honoured, and so it ought indeed to be; but there are none that do so much slander and abase it, as they themselves, with their evil Works, gay Apparel, and with their evil words, wherein they pass all other men. Saint Paul 1 Tim. 3. faith in the first to Timothy, the third Chapter, Let the Elders that govern well be honoured with double honour, chiefly they that labour in the Word and Doctrine of the Lord. Consider, that he saith, They that govern well.

Popish Priests with their long and sumptuous Go-more like to the Pharisees than Christ.

Honour in well governing.

The seventh Article is, That they are covetous from the highest to the lowest, and for covetousness they preach many foolish deeds and manifest lies, and sell the holy Sacraments, which is a great Heresie; for God commanded that they should give freely. Saint Paul writeth in the first to Timothy, Covetousness is the root of all mischief, whereunto many have been given, and therefore they are separated from the Faith, and have denied the Truth.

The Popes Church poisoned with covetousness. 1 Tim. 1.

The eighth Article is, That they commonly are called Notorious Whoremongers. This is manifestly seen in their Concubines and Children, which walk openly in all mens sight, and make many mens Wives Whores, or corrupt their Daughters being Virgins, and make them Priests Harlots and Ribalds.

The Popes Church poisoned with whoredom.

The ninth Article is, That they are full of deviliish envy, and especially in all Monasteries they have great envy and hatred amongst themselves, because when any thing is given or disposed to one Monastery or College, then there are others that hate it, and envy at it, and would more gladly have it themselves; Like as among Dogs, when any thing is given to the one and not to the other, which the other seeing envieth his fellow, and the other likewise will rather devour all himself, than give any part to his fellow. Wherefore it were well that they were brought from that great sin of Envy, giving nothing unto them; And it were better that their Possessions were taken from them, and that they should do that which the Lord spake to his Disciples, saying, Go ye and preach the Gospel to all men.

The Popes Church and Monasteries commonly poisoned with deviliish envy.

The tenth Article is, That they are idle, and chiefly the Bishops, Canons, and other Prelates, which will not labour diligently in the holy Scripture, wherewith they might cure the miseries of Christendom, whereto they have bound themselves, and they eat the bread thereof in idleness, because when other men watch and labour to maintain themselves and their little Ones, then are they with their Lemmons, or else they walk in some City carrying Hawks on their fists, or else they sit at the good Wine with their Concubines, and there they sing and play the Lucians, and eat of the best; and therefore all that willingly bring and give to them, shall be made Partners of that Curse which is given them of God, because they eat their bread unjustly, whereof Saint Paul writeth in the second to the Thessalonians, the third Chapter, He that laboureth not, let him not eat.

The Popes Church poisoned with Idleness and belly-cheer.

The eleventh Article, That they are notorious Lyars, because, to the end that they may please men, they tell many tales and lyes which in the Holy Scripture have no foundation nor proof. Of such writeth John in the Apocal. 21.

{KING Hen. 5.}

The Popes Church infamous with notorious lies.

The twelfth Article is, That they do not rightly give or minister to the people the Body of our Lord Jesus Christ, and they give it not as God hath instituted it and commanded. This is a great and deviliish sin, and too great malapertness. Herein we would overcome them with the testimonies of the Evangelists; I say, we would overcome the Pope, and all his Priests with the Authorities of Mark, Luke, and Paul, Rom. 13. and we would suffer, that Kings, Princes, Lords, and all that are willing to hear, should hear it.

The Popes Church erreth in administring one part of the Sacrament.

The thirteenth Article is, That they sit in Spiritual Judgment, and then many times they judge according to favour, and not according to the righteousnes of God, that they take Bribes, giving Sentence for him, which in Gods sight hath the wrongful Cause. Woe be to such Sentences, as it is written in Esay 5. Woe be to you that, &c.

The Popes Church charged with partiality.

The fourteenth Article is, That they sit hearing Confessions, and when there come to them Usurers, Raveners, and Thieves, they take Bribes of them of their ill-gotten Goods, to spare them; and they willingly suffer them in Cities and Towns. And likewise of Adulterers and other notorious Whoremongers and Whores, and they neither let or stay them in their great sins, to the end that the Scripture may be fulfilled in them, which saith, Gifts and the love of money do draw to Hell, and do blind the eyes of Judges.

The fifteenth Article is, That they receive Tythes of men, and will of Right have them, and preach and say that men are bound to give them Tythes; and therein they say fally. For they cannot prove by the New Testament, that our Lord Jesus Christ commanded it, and his Disciples warned no man to do so, neither did themselves receive them. But although in the Old Testament it was commanded to give Tythes, yet it cannot thereby be proved, that Christian-men are bound thereto; For this Precept of the Old Testament had an end in the first year of our Lord Jesus Christ, like as the Precept of Circumcision. Wherefore, beloved, consider and see how your Bishops seduce you and shut your eyes with things that have no proof. Christ saith in the eleventh of Luke, Give Alms of those things that remain; but he said not, Give the Tenth of the Goods which ye possess, but give Alms. But when they hear the Word, they may say as the Lawyer said to Christ, Master, when thou sayest so, thou givest offence, Luke 11.

He meaneth of claiming Tythes by mere necessity of the old Law, and not by the positive Law of Christ.

The sixteenth Article is, That they in many places lend money or goods to have Treasure or Usury, and they have in Cities and Towns yearly Payments and perpetual Revenues, as great Princes and Lords. Wherein they do against the Gospel, which saith, Do not ye possess Gold nor Silver. And whereas they lend for gain and usury, against that speaketh the Lord, Deuteronomy the four and twentieth, Lend not to usury to thy Brother, &c. Yea, honest, discreet, and welbeloved Lords, all the aforesaid Articles we will prove against the Pope, all his Priests, with many Testimonies of the holy Scripture, which for brevities sake we have not here mentioned. But note ye chiefly these four Articles, for which we strive, and desire to defend them to the death.

The Popes Church charged with usury.

The first Article is, That all publick and customable mortal sins ought to be forbidden and prohibited to all Priests and Lay-men, according to the commandment of the holy Scripture.

The second Article is, That Riches ought to be taken from the Pope and all his Priests, from the highest to the lowest, and they ought to be made poor, as the Disciples of our Lord Jesus Christ were; who had nothing of their own, neither Possessions in this World, neither worldly Power.

He meaneth the immoderate riches and temporal possessions.

The third Article is, That the Word of God ought to be free for every man appointed and ordained thereto, to preach and read in all places whither they shall come, without resistance of any man, or without any inhibition of either Spiritual or Earthly Power, openly or manifestly.

Men appointed to preach, may preach through the Pope forbid them.

The

{KING Hen. 5.} When the Pope holdeth his council, let man look on their Wives and Daughters where the Council is kept.

The fourth Article is, that the body of our Lord Jesus Christ ought to be delivered to every Christian as our Lord hath ordained it, and as the holy Evangelists have written. We have also understood that there shall be a Council in Basil; Wherefore let no man be exalted, but let them diligently keep their Wives, their Daughters, and their Virgins from Bishops, Priests, and Monks. And do not think that there is made any holy Assembly of Bishops and Priests for the common commodity and profit of Christendom, but only to this end, that they may hide their secret vices and heresies with the cloak of hypocrisie, and let, and hinder the righteousnes of God, which is much contrary to them; and for this cause consider ye diligently, that they will not make an Holy Assembly, but the congregation of Satan. And take ye heed that it be not done as some did at Constance, who took many of Bishops and Prelates, and suffered them to sleep with their Wives. Ye welbeloved and honest Lords, if ye find any thing in these foresaid Articles or words written somewhat sharply, we did it not to offend or contemn you, but to the end that ye should diligently consider and devise, how Christendom is so ill kept and led by the Priests of this present Age. Our Lord Jesus Christ keep you both in body and Soul, Amen. In the year of our Lord, 1430.

Procopius, Smabors, Conradus, Samssmolich, Captains of Bohemia.

Now to prosecute the wars of the Bohemians again. After Zisca was dead, whereof we did entreat before, there was great fear, sorrow, and lamentation in the Army, the Souldiers accusing fortune which gave over such an invincible Captain to be overcome with death. Immediately there was a division in the Host, the one part choosing Procopius Magnus to be their Captain, the other part saying, that there was none could be found worthy to succeed Zisca; whereupon they choosing out certain to serve the wars, named themselves Orphans.

The Army of Zisca divided.

Thus the Thaborites being divided into two Armies, the one part retained their old and accustomed name, and the other, by means of the death of their Captain, named themselves Orphans. And albeit that often times there was diffention between them, yet whensoever any forrain power came towards them, they joyned their powers together in one Camp, and defended themselves. They seldom went into any fenced towns, except it were to buy necessaries, but lived with their Wives and Children in their Camps and Tents. They had amongst them many Carres, the which they used as a Bulwork; For whensoever they went unto battel, they made two wings of them, which closed in the Footmen. The wings of the Horsemen were one the outside, and when as they saw their time to joyn battel, the Waggon-men which led the wings going forth unto the Emperors Standard, and compassing in such part of their enemies as they would, did close themselves in together, whereby the enemies being inclosed, so that they could not be refused, they were partly by the Footmen, and partly by the men that were in the Carres, with their Darts slain. The Horsemen fought without the Fortification; and if it happened that they were oppressed or put to flight, by and by the Carres opening themselves received them as it were into a fenced City; and by this means they got many Victories, so as much as their enemies were ignorant of their policies.

The order and Policy that the Army of Zisca used in War after his decease.

These two Armies went forth, the one into Slesia, and the other into Moravia, and returned again with great prey, before their enemies knew of their coming. After this they besieged the Town of Swetly in Austrich, where the Thaborites and the Orphans two nights continually assaulted the Walls without ceasing; but Albert Duke of Austrich coming with his Host to aid the Citizens, they fought by the space of almoft four hours, the valiantest warriers being slain on both parts. At the length the battel was broken off, and the Thaborites loft their Carres, and Albert was put out of his Camp and Tents. Within a while after, Procopius Magnus came again and inclosed the City of Rhetisem in Austria with a notable Siege. They of Prague were in his Army, and Boslaus Cygneus of whom we spake before, was slain there with a Dart, and the City of Rhetium was taken by force, sacked and burnt. The Burgrave of Malderburge, Lord of the Town was also taken and carried unto Prague, where also he dyed in prison.

Sigismund the Emperor which burned Hus and Jerom before, now is fain to intreat for his Kingdoms.

These things thus done, the Emperor sent for the Nobles of Bohemia, which went unto him unto a Town of Hongary, called Posonium in the borders of Austria, upontthe banks of the River of Danubius; but they would not enter into the Town, but remained without the Townin their Tents; whither as the Emperour going out unto them, communed much with them, as touching his right and title, and the recovering of his Fathers Kingdom, promising if there were any cause, which did alienate the Bohemians minds from him, that he would take away all the occasion thereof: They made answer, that he had made war upon them without a cause, and that he had suffered their Countrimen, contrary to his promife, to be burnt at Constance not being heard, and the Kingdom to be contumeliously interdicted, and the Nobles of Bohemia to be condemned by the Church of Rome as Hereticks; and that he should think the force and power of the Bohemians not to be so small, but that they would provide for their own honour. Whereunto the Emperor answered very gently, and offered them a General Council, wherein they might declare their innocency, if they would submit themselves to the judgment of the universal Church: but the Bohemians which were become valiant Victors in Arms, would not be overcome with words; and so nothing being finally concluded, the Emperor returned home.

The death of John Hus and Hierom revenged.

Then Pope Martin perceiving the Gospel to encrease daily more and more, sent the Cardinal of Winchester an Englishman, born of a Noble House, into Germany to move them unto war againit the Bohemians. Whereunto the Emperor also did assist him.

The Cardinal of Winchester sent into Germany to raise war against the Bohemians.

There were three Armies provided. In the first Army were the Dukes of Saxony, and the lower Cities.

Three Armies prepared against the Bohemians.

The second Army, which was gathered of the Franconians, was under the conduct of the Marquis of Brandenburg.

The third Army was led by Otho the Archbishop of Trevers, whom the Rhenenses, the Bavarians, and the Imperial Cities of Swevia followed. These armies entring into Bohemia in three several parts, after they were passed the Wood, they joyned together and pitched, before Misna. This Town a certain learned and eloquent Protestant, named Prichicho, the night before had wonn from the Papists; wherefore the Army was determined first to recover that City, before they went any further. But when as news came unto the Host, how the Protestants had gathered an Army, and came with all speed towards them; they fled before they saw their enemies, and went unto Tacovia, leaving behind them their warlike Engins with a great prey. The Cardinal was not yet come into the Camp, but meeting them in their flight at Tacovia, he marvelled at the coward y flight of so many Noble and valiant men, desiring them that they would turn again unto their enemies, which, he said, were farr weaker than they. Which thing when he had long travelled about in vain, he was fain to be a companion with them in their flight. They were scarcely entred the Wood, when as the Bohemians coming upon them, fet upon the rereward. Then was their flight much more disordered and fearful than before, neither did they leave flying before the Bohemians left following. Then all impediment or let being taken away, they vanquished Tacovia; and having obtained great ftore of warlike Engins, they destroyed Misna. And when they would have returned home by Franconia, they had great sums of money sent unto them, that they ffould not waste or destroy the Countries of Bamberge and Noremberge; whereby the Holt of the Bohemians was greatly enriched.

The Popes Army flieth like Cowardes.

Sigismundus the Emperor, having news of these things, went ftraight unto Noremberge, and gathered there new aid and help. Also Pope Martin sent Julian the Cardinal of Saint Angel into Germany with his Ambassage, to make War against the Bohemians, and that he should be in the Council of Basil, which doth now ftortly draw on, be President in the Popes name. He entring into Germany went ftraight to Noremberge to the Emperor, where many of the Nobles of Germany were assembled.

{Anno 1421. The Pope raiseth war the second time against the Bohemians.}

A new war raised by the Pope against the Bohemians.

There was a new expedition decreed against the Bohemians, against the eighth of the Kalends of July, and Frederick Marquess of Brandenburge appointed General of that War, which should follow the Cardinal. He entred into Bohemia by the way that leadeth unto Thopa, and Albertus Prince of Austrich was appointed to bring his Army thorow Moravia.

In this expedition was Albert and Christopher of Bavaria, and Frederick Dukes of Saxony, John and Albert Princes of Brandenburge, with their Father which was General of those Wars. Also the Bishops of Hyperbolus, Bamberge and Eyften. Also the Company of the Swevians, which they called the Company of S. George, and the Magistrates of the Imperial Cities, the Bishop of Mentz, Trevers, and Colen sent their aids, and with them the Chieftains of their Provinces. It is said that the number of their Horsemen were above forty thousand, but their Footmen were not full so many, for the Germans for the most part do use to fight their battels on horseback.

The number of the Popes Army against the Bohemians.

Also Rhenatus Prince of Lorrain promised to come to these Wars; but being letted by his Civil Wars, forsomuch as he went about to vanquish the Earl of Vandome, he could not keep his promise, and the County Palatine of Rheine, which did aid and succour the Earl of Vandome, could not go against the Bohemians. The Cardinal staying for them deferred his journy until the Calends of August. In the mean time Albert leading his Army out of Austria, understanding that the Cardinal was not present at the day appointed, and seeing himself unable to encounter with the Bohemian power, he returned back again.

Cardinal Julian with a mean host entreth Bohemia. The cruel slaughter done by the Cardinal.

After this the Cardinal entred into Bohemia with a huge Army, and destroyed many of the Protestants towns, killing Men, Women and Children, sparing neither Old nor Young; notwithstanding this his Tyranny was exercised in the uttermost borders of Bohemia, for his Captains feared to enter farr into the Land. The Bohemians, affoon as they had heard tell hat their enemy was come, made ready and gathered their Host with all speed, and laid siege to a Tower called Stiltiverge, and brought it under subjection.

God striketh a fear into the Popes Army.

In the mean season there fell such a marvellous sudden fear amongst the Papists throughout the whole Camp, that they began most shamefully to run away before any enemy came in sight. The Cardinal Julianus marvelled at this most sudden fear, and what should move so great an Army to flee, went about unto the Captains, exhorting them to put on Armour, to order their battels, and courageously to abide their enemies, saying, they did not fight for the glory of their Kingdom, or for the possession of Lands, but for their lives, and honour, and Religion of Christ, and for the salvation of souls. How ignominious a thing is it (saith he) for the Germans to flee in battel, whose courage and valiantness all the world doth extoll? It were much better to dye, than to give place to any enemies before they were seen; for they can by no means live in safety within the walls, which give place unto their enemy in the field: for it is the weapon that defendeth a man and not the walls, and except they would even prefently defend their liberty with the sword, they should shortly be in greater bondage, more miserable than any death. But this exhortation was all in vain, for fear had put away all boldness: for the Ensigns were snatched up, and as though there had been no Captain in the Host, every man run headlong away. No man regarded any commandment, neither once took his leave of his Captain, but casting away their Armor with speedy flight they ran away, as though their enemy had been at their backs. The Cardinal also, although it were against his will, was forced to do the like.

Rather for the Religion of Antichrist. This Cardinal better loved to preach rather in the Camp than in the Church.

The Cardinals Army run away for fear.

Thus the Protestants, by the fear of their enemies made the more bold and couragious, pursued them through the Woods, and had a great prey and spoil of them. Notwithstanding, Albertus when he heard tell that the Cardinal was entred into Bohemia, with all speed came again out of Austrich with his Army, and besieged the strong Town of Prezorabia: but when he understood how the Cardinal was fled, he left off his purpose, and returned through Moravia, which was not yet subject unto him and destroyed above fifty Towns with Fire and Sword, took many of their Cities by force, and spoiled them, committing great murther and slaughter, and so afflicted them that they took upon them his yoke, and promised to be subject and obedient to him under this condition, that as touching Religion he would be bound to do that which the Council of Basil should determine.

Great slaughter in Moravia by Albertus.

Then was there an Ambassage sent out of Bohemia unto Basil, where Sigismund held the Council, who during the time of the Wars had kept himself at Noremberge. wherein was contained, how that he was a Bohemian born, and how he was not more affectioned to any nation than to his own, and that he went to Rome for none other cause but to be Crowned, the which his honour should also be a renown to the Bohemians, whom to advance it hath been always his special care.

A Letter of the Emperor to the Bohemians.

Also, how that through his endeavour the Counsel was begun at Basil, exhorting all such as were desirous to be heard as touching Religion, that they should come thither, and that they would not maintain any quarrel contrary to the holy Mother the Church; that the Council would lovingly and gently hear their reasons; that they should only endeavour themselves to agree with the Synod as touching Religion, and reserve and keep a quiet and peaceable Kingdom for him, against his return: Neither should the Bohemians think to refuse his Regiment, whose Brother, Father, and Uncle had reigned over them, and that he would reign over them after no other mean or sort, than other Christian Kings use to do.

The Council of Basil also wrote their letter to the Bohemians, that they should send their Ambassadors which would render account of their doings and sayings before the universal Church, and defend those things which they had openly taught before learned men. This opinion took place, and an ambassage of three hundred Horse was sent unto Basil. The chief whereof were William Cosca a valiant Knight, and Procopius, surnamed Magnus, a man of worthy fame for his manifold Victories, John Rhochezana preacher of Prague, Nicholas Galecut, Minister of the Thaborites, and one Peter an Englishman, of excellent prompt and pregnant wit. The people came in great number out of the Town, and many out of the Synod and Council, attending before the gates to see the coming of this valiant and famous people: otherforme gathered together in great number into the streets where they should pass through. The Matrons, Maids and Children filled the Windows and Houses to behold and see, and to marvel at their strange kind of apparel, and stout couragious countenances, saying, that it was not untrue which was reported of them: notwithstanding all men beheld Procopius, saying, this is he which hath overthrown the Papists in so many battels, which hath subverted so many Towns, and slain so many Men, whom both his enemies, and also his own soulders do fear and reverence; also, that he was a bold, valiant and invincible Captain, which could not be overcome with any terror, labour or travail.

The Oration of Cardinal Julianus.

These with other Bohemian Ambassadors were gently received. The next day after, Cardinal Julianus, sending for them unto the Council house, made a gentle, long and eloquent Oration unto them, exhorting them to unity and peace, saying, that the Church was the Spouse of our Saviour Christ, and the Mother of all faithful, that it hath the Keys of binding and loosing, and also that it is white and fair without spot or wrinkle, and cannot err in those points that are necessary to salvation, and that he which doth conterm the same Church is to be counted as a prophane Ethnick, and Publican, neither can this Church be represented better by any means than in this Council. He exhorteth them also to receive the decrees of the Council, and to give no less credit to the Council than unto the Gospel, by whose authority thority the Scriptures themselves are received and allowed. Also that the Bohemians, which call themselves the Children of the Church, ought to hear the voice of their Mother, which is never unmindful of her Children; how that now of late they have lived apart from their Mother; albeit (said he) that is no new or strange thing, for there have been many in times past which have forsaken their Mother, and yet seeking after Salvation have returned to her again; That in the time of Noah's flood, as many as were without the Ark perished; that the Lords Passover was to be eaten in one House; that there is no Salvation to be fought for out of the Church, and that this is the Garden and famous Fountain of Water, whereof whosoever shall drink, shall not thirst everlastingly; That the Bohemians have done as they ought, in that they have fought the Fountains of this Water at the Council, and have determined now at length to give ear unto their Mother. Now all hatred ought to cease, all Armor and Weapon is to be laid apart, and all occasion of War utterly to be rejected. For the Fathers would lovingly and gently hear whatsoever there they would say in their own cause or quarrel, requiring only that they would willingly receive and embrace the good counsels and determinations of the sacred Synode; whereunto not only the Bohemians, but also all other faithful Christians, ought to consent and agree, if they will be partakers of Eternal life.

A Letter of the Emperor to the Bohemians.

The Bohemians answer to the Cardinals oration.

This Oration of the Cardinal was heard and very well allowed of the Fathers. Whereunto the Bohemians answered in few words. That they neither had contemned the Church nor the Council; that the sentence given at Constance, against those which were unheard, doth diminish nothing of the Christian Religion; that the Authority of the Fathers hath always remained amongst them inviolate; and that whatsoever thing the Bohemians have taught, was confirmed by the Scriptures and Gospel; and that they are now come to manifest their innocency before the whole Church, and to require open Audience, where the Laity may also be present. Their request was granted them; and being further demanded in what points they did disagree from the Church of Rome, they propounded four Articles.

The Articles wherein the Bohemians did digress from the Church of Rome.

First, They affirmed, That all such as would be saved, ought of necessity to receive the Communion of the last Supper under both kinds of Bread and Wine.

The second Article. They affirmed all civil rule and dominion to be forbidden unto the Clergy by the Law of God.

The third Article. That the preaching of the Word of God is free for all Men, and in all places.

The fourth Article. As touching open crimes and offences which are in no wise to be suffered for the avoiding of greater evil.

These were the only propositions which they propounded before the Council in the name of the whole Realm. Then another Ambassador affirmed, That he had heard of the Bohemians divers and sundry things offensive to Christian ears, amongst the which this was one point, That they should preach that the invention of the order of begging Friers was Diabolical.

Then Procopius rising up, said, Neither is it untrue; for if neither Moses, neither before him the Patriarchs, neither after him the Prophets, neither in the New Law Christ and his Apostles did Institute the Order of begging Friers: Who doth doubt but that it was an invention of the Devil, and a work of darkness?

This answer of Procopius was derided of them all. And Cardinal Julianus went about to prove, That not only the Decrees of the Patriarchs and Prophets, and those things which Christ and his Apostles had Instituted, were of God, but also that all such Decrees as the Church should Ordain, being guided through the Holy Ghost, be the works of God. Albeit, as he said, the Order of begging Friers might seem to be taken out of some part of the Gospel. The Bohemians chose out four Divines which should declare their Articles to be taken out of the Scriptures. Likewise on the contrary part there were four appointed by the Council. This Disputation continued fifty days, where many things were alledged on either part, whereof, as place shall serve, more hereafter (by the grace of Christ) shall be said, when we come to the time of that Council.

Certain appointed by the Bohemians and the Council to Dispute.

In the mean season, while the Bohemians were thus in long conflicts with Sigismund the Emperor and the Pope, fighting for their Religion, unto whom, notwithstanding all the fulness of the Popes power was bent against them, God of his goodness had given such noble victories, as is above-expressed, and ever did prosper them so long as they could agree among themselves; as these things (I say) were doing in Bohemia, King Henry the fifth fighting likewise in France, albeit for no like matter of Religion, fell sick at Bloys and died, after he had Reigned nine years, five months, three weeks and odd days from his Coronation. This King in life, and in all his doings, was so devout and serviceable to the Pope and his Chaplains, that he was called of many, The Prince of Priests: who left behind him a Son being yet an infant, nine months and fifteen days of age, whom he had by Queen Katherine, Daughter to the French King, married to him about two or three years before. The name of which Prince, succeeding after his Father, was Henry the sixth, left under the Government and Protection of his Uncle, named Humphry Duke of Glocester.

{KING Hen. 6.}

THE Sixth Part or Section;

PERTAINING To the laſt Three Hundred Years.

A Preface to the Reader.

According to the Five ſundry diverſities and alterations of the Church, ſo have I divided hitherto the order of this preſent Church-Story into Five principal parts, every part containing 300 years. So that now coming to the laſt 300 years; that is, to the laſt times of the Church, counting from the time of Wickliff: Foraſmuch as in the compaſs of the ſaid laſt 300 years are contained great troubles and perturbations of the Church, with the marvellous reformation of the ſame through the wondrous Operation of the Almighty; all which things cannot be comprehended in one Book: I have therefore diſpoſed the ſaid later 300 years into divers Books, beginning now with the Sixth Book at the Reign of King Henry the Sixth. In which Book, beſide the grievous and ſundry Perſecutions raiſed up by Antichriſt, to be noted, herein is alſo to be obſerved, That whereas it hath of long time been received and thought of the common People, that this Religion now generally uſed hath ſprung up and riſen but of late, even by the ſpace (as many do think) of 20 or 30 years, it may now manifeſtly appear, not only by the Acts and Monuments heretofore paſſed, but alſo by the Hiſtories hereafter following, how this profeſſion of Chriſt's Religion hath been ſpread abroad in England of Old and Ancient time, not only for the ſpace of theſe 200 late years, from the time of Wickliff, but hath continually from time to time ſparkled abroad, although the flames thereof have never ſo perfectly burſt out, as they have done within theſe Hundred years and more; As by theſe Hiſtories here collected and gathered out of Regiſters, eſpecially of the Dioceſs of Norwich, ſhall manifeſtly appear: wherein may be ſeen what Men, and how many both Men and Women within the ſaid Dioceſs of Norwich have been, which have defended the ſame cauſe of Doctrine which now is received by us in the Church. Which Perſons although then they were not ſo ſtrongly armed in their cauſe and quarrel as of late years they have been, yet were they Warriers in Chriſts Church, and fought to their power in the ſame cauſe. And although they gave back through tyranny, yet judge thou the beſt, good Reader, and refer the cauſe thereof to God, who revealeth all things according to his determinate will and appointed time.

King Henry the Sixth.

THIS young Prince being under the Age of one Year, after the Death of his Father, ſucceeded in his Reign and Kingdom of England, An. 1422, and in the Eighth Year {Ann. 1422} was Crowned at Weſtminſter: and the ſecond Year after was Crowned alſo at Paris, Henry Biſhop of Wincheſter. Cardinal, being preſent at them both, and Reigned 38 Years, and then was depoſed by Edward the 4th, as hereafter (if Chriſt willing) ſhall be declared in his time. In the firſt Year of his Reign was burned the conſtant Witneſs-bearer and Teſtis of Chriſts Doctrine, William Tailor a Prieſt, under Henry Chicheſley Archbiſhop of Canterbury. Of this William Tailor I read, That in the days of Thomas Arundel he was firſt apprehended, and abjured. Afterward in the days of Henry Chicheſley, about the Year of our Lord 1421, which was a Year before his burning, the ſaid William Tailor appeared again in the Convocation before the Archbiſhop, being brought by the Biſhop of Worceſter, being complained of to have taught at Briſtow theſe Articles followiug:

Firſt, That whoſoever hangeth any Scripture about his neck, taketh away the honour due only to God, and giveth it to the Devil.

Secondly, That no human perſon is to be worſhipped, but only God is to be adored.

Thirdly, That the Saints are not to be worſhipped nor invocated.

Upon theſe Articles the ſaid William Tailor being examined, denied that he did preach or hold them in way of defending them, but only did commune and talk upon the ſame, eſpecially upon the ſecond and third Articles, only in way of reaſoning, and for argument ſake. And to juſtify his Opinion to be true in that which he did hold, he brought out of his boſom a Paper or Libel written, wherein were contained certain Articles, with the Teſtimonies of the Doctors alledged, and exhibited the ſame unto the Archbiſhop. Who then being bid to ſtand aſide, the Archbiſhop conſulting together with the Biſhops and other Prelates what was to be done in the matter, delivered the writings unto Maſter John Caſtle, and John Rikinghale, the two Vice-Chancellors of Oxford, and Cambride, and to John Langdon Monk of Canterbury. Who adviſing with themſelves, and with other Divines, about the Articles and Allegations, on the Monday following preſented the ſaid Articles of William Tailor to the Archbiſhops and Prelates, as Erroneous and Heretical. Whereupon William Tailor, being called before them, in concluſion was contented to revoke the ſame, and for his Penance was by them condemned to perpetual Priſon.

William Tailor the firſt time apprehended. William Tailor again appeareth before the Archbiſhop. Three Articles firſt objected to William Tailor.

Notwithſtanding, through favour, they were contented that he ſhould be releaſed from his carceral indurance, in caſe he would put in ſufficient ſurety in the Kings Chancery, and ſwear that he ſhall never hold nor favour any ſuch Opinions hereafter. And thus the ſaid William Tailor, appointed to appear the next Wedneſday at Lambeth before the Archbiſhop, to take his Abſolution from his long Excommunication during the time from Thomas Arundel, appeared again before him: where he laying aſide his Arunſouſa, that is, his Cloak, his Cap, and ſtrippèd unto his Doublet, kneeled at the feet of the Archbiſhop. Who then ſtanding up, and having a Rod in his hand, began the Pſalm Miſerere, &c. His Chaplains anſwering the ſecond Verſe. After that was ſaid the Collect, Deus cui proprium, &c. with certain other prayers. And ſo taking an Oath of him, the Archbiſhop committed him to the cuſtody of the Biſhop of Worceſter, to whom power and authority was permitted to releaſe him, upon the conditons aforeſaid. And thus was William Tailor for that time Abſolved, being enjoyned notwithſtanding to appear at the next Convocation, whenſoever it ſhould be, before the ſaid Archbiſhop or his Succeſſor that ſhould follow him.

The form of Concordat and Abſolution in the Church to ſuch againſt them that were Excommunicate.

In the mean time, while William Tailor was thus in the cuſtody of the Biſhop of Worceſter, there paſſed certain writings between him and one Thomas Smith Prieſt at Briſtow, in the which writings William Tailor replied againſt the ſaid Thomas, concering the queſtion of worſhipping of Saints. Upon the occaſion of which reply, being brought to the hands of the Biſhop of Worceſter, William Tailor began a new to be troubled, and was brought again before the publick Convocation of the Clergy by the ſaid Biſhop of Worceſter, to anſwer unto his writings. This was Anno 1422, the 11th day of February.

Unto

{KING Hen. 6.} Unto the which Convocation the ſaid William being preſented, his writings were read to him; which he would not, nor could not deny to be of his own hand writing.

The Opinion of William Tailor concerning worſhipping of Saints.

The tenor and effect of whoſe writing only reduced to prove, That every petition and prayer for any Supernatural gift ought to be directed to God alone, and to no Creature. Albeit in this his writing he did not utterly deny that it was lawful in any reſpect to pray to Saints (and bringeth for the ſame Thomas Aquin) but only in reſpect of that worſhip, which is called Cultus latriæ; And further ſo proſecuteth his mind herein, that he ſeemeth little or nothing to differ from the ſuperſtition of the Papiſts, as moſt plainly appeareth by his own words, ſaying, Numquam ſamen negavi, aut negare intendo, merita aut ſanctorum ſuffragia tam beatorum quam viantium, tam vivis, quam mortuis ad hoc diſpoſitis, quantum poſſunt, ſuffragari, vel proficere; quia hoc eſt elicibile ex Scripturâ, quæ non falſa, & ex conſona ratione, &c. And moreover he inferreth the example of Moſes, who prayed unto God, alledging the merits of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, which were dead, &c. And furthermore, paſſing from the teſtimony of Jerom, and alledging the example of Stephen, ſaith, Quod nunc magis exaudiur pro venerationibus ſuis, quam tunc exauditus eſt pro lapidatoribus. And at length he cometh to this concluſion, proving by St. Auſtin, in this manner, Ne igitur cum impiis & idololatris in veteri teſtamento, in circuitu ambulamus, nunquam deveniendo ad centrum, ſatnam eſt quod faciamus ſecundum conſilium Apoſtoli ſic dicentis, Accedamus cum fiducia ad thronum gratiæ ejus, ut miſericordiam conſequamur, & gratiam inveniamus in auxilio opportuno, &c. That is, And therefore, leſt we run about in circles with the wicked, and with the idolaters of the Old Teſtament, and never come to the center, it is wholſome and good counſel, that we follow the mind of the Apoſtle, ſaying, Let us reſort with boldneſs unto the Throne of his Grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace in time of opportune help, &c.

Aug. Super Pſal. 121.

From Articles by the four Orders of Friers laid againſt William Tailor.

Thus much out of the foreſaid writing of William Tailor, I have excerped, to the intent that the indifferent Reader, uſing his judgment herein, may ſee how little matter was in this, wherefore he ſhould be condemned by the Papiſts. And yet notwithſtanding the ſame writing, being delivered by the Archbiſhop to the four orders of Friers of London to be examined, was found erroneous and heretical in theſe points:

1. That every prayer which is a petition of ſome Supernatural gift or free gift, is to be directed only to God.

2. Item, That prayer is to be directed to God alone.

3. Item, To pray to any Creature is to commit Idolatry.

4. Alſo, another Opinion there was much like to the other, to make up the fourth; ſo that although all theſe Opinions agreed in one, yet to make up a number, every Order of the four ſorts of Friers, thought to find out ſome matter to offer up to the Archbiſhop againſt him, leſt one Order ſhould ſeem more cunning or pregnant, in finding out more than could another; or elſe perchance leſt any of them ſhould ſeem to favour the party, in bringing nothing againſt him, as the reſt had done.

When the Saturday was come, which was 20th day of February, upon the which day the four Orders were appointed to declare their cenſure upon the Articles in the Chapter-houſe of Paul's, firſt appeareth Frier Tille, for the black Friers, then Frier Winchelſey, then Frier Low, after Frier Aſhwel, each Frier for his Order ſeverally bringing his Hereſie, as is above-ſpecified.

Thus the verdict of theſe four Orders being given up to the Archbiſhop, and ſeverally each Order coming in with his Hereſie, which was the twentieth day of February; hereupon cometh down a Writ from the King, directed to the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs of London, De hæretico comburendo, dated the firſt day of March, the firſt year of his Reign. The Copy whereof remaineth in the Records of the Tower, beginning thus: Rex Majori & Vice-comitibus. Whereupon the ſaid William Tailor, condemned as a relapſe, firſt was degraded, and after to be burned, and ſo was committed to the Secular Power Power; who then being had to Smithfield, the firſt day of March, with Chriſtian conſtancy, after long Impriſonment, there did conſummate his Martyrdom, 1422.

The manner of his degrading was all one with the degrading of John Hus before, for the Papiſts uſe but one form for all men. From an Exorciſt, by taking away the Book of Exorciſms or Gradual. From the Sextonſhip, by taking away the Church-Door-Key and Surplice. And likewiſe from Benet, in taking away the Surpliſe, and firſt Tonſure, &c. All which they orderly accompliſhed upon this godly Martyr, before his burning.

Imprimis, That the Pope and Cardinals have no power to make or conſtitute any Laws.

Item, That there is no day to be kept Holy, but only the Sunday which God hath hallowed.

Item, That Men ought to faſt no other time, but of the Quatuor temporum.

Item, That Images are not to be worſhipped, neither that the people ought to ſet up any Lights before them in the Churches, neither to go on Pilgrimage, neither to Offer for the Dead, or with Women that are Purified.

Item, That Curates ſhould not take the Tithes of their Pariſhioners, but that ſuch Tithes ſhould be divided amongſt the poor Pariſhioners.

Item, That all ſuch as Swear by their life or power, ſhall be damned, except they repent.

{Anno. 1424} Upon Wedneſday being the ſecond day of Auguſt in the year of our Lord 1424, the ſaid John Florence perſonally appeared before William Bernam, Chancellor to William Biſhop of Norwich, where he proceeding againſt him, objected the firſt Article touching the power of the Pope and Cardinals; to which Article the ſaid John Florence anſwered in this manner: If the Pope lived uprightly as Peter lived, he hath power to make Laws; otherwiſe I believe he hath no power. But being afterward threatned by the Judge, he acknowledged that he had erred, and ſubmitted himſelf to the correction of the Church, and was Abjured, taking an Oath that from that time forward he ſhould not hold, teach, preach, or willingly defend any Error or Hereſie contrary to the determination of the Church of Rome, neither maintain, help, or aid any that ſhall teach or hold any ſuch Errors or Hereſies, either privily or apertly; and for his offence in this behalf done he was enjoyned this Penance following:

The manner of this diſciplining was with a white Rod chriſe laid upon the head of the Penitentiary.

Three Sundays in a Solemn Proceſſion in the Cathedral Church of Norwich, he ſhould be diſciplined before all the people. The like alſo ſhould be done about his Pariſh-Church of Shelton, three other ſeveral Sundays, he being bare-headed, bare-footed, and bare-necked, after the manner of a publick Penitentiary, his body being covered with a Canvas-ſhirt, and Canvas-breeches, carrying in his hand a Taper of a pound weight; and that done he was diſmiſſed.

Richard Belward of Eriſam in the Diocefs of Norwich.

Richard Belward of Eriſam in the Diocefs of Norwich, was accuſed for holding and teaching theſe Errors and Opinions here under written, contrary to the determination of the Church of Rome.

He meaneth the wicked Biſhops of that time, who uſed curſes God did bleſs. This proveth Sir S. Oldcaſtle to be no Traytor.

Imprimis, That Eccleſiaſtical Miniſters and Ordinaries have no power to Excommunicate, neither can Excommunicate. And albeit that a Biſhop do Excommunicate any Man, God doth abſolve him.

Item, That he held the erronious Opinions and Concluſions that Sir John Oldcaſtle held when he was in Priſon, and affirmed that Sir John Oldcaſtle was a true Catholick Man, and falſly condemned and put to death without any reaſonable cauſe.

Item, That ſuch as go on Pilgrimage, offering to Images made of Wood and Stone, are Excommunicate, becauſe they ought to offer to the quick, and not to the dead; and that the Eccleſiaſtical Miniſters; that is to ſay, the Curates do ſell God upon Eaſter-day, when as they receive Offerings of ſuch as ſhould Communicate, before they do Miniſter the Sacrament unto them.

Item, That he counſelled divers Women, that they ſhould not Offer in the Church for the dead, neither with Women that were purified.

The words of the Regiſter.

Item, That he blamed divers of his Neighbours that refuſed his Doctrine, ſaying unto them, Truly ye are fools that deny to learn the Doctrine of my Sect; for your Neighbours which are of my Sect are able to confound and vanquiſh all other that are of your Sect. {KING Hen. 5.}

Item, That the Saints which are in Heaven ought in no caſe to be prayed unto, but only God.

Item, That the ſaid Richard keepeth Schools of Lollardy in the Engliſh Tongue, in the Town of Dichingham, and a certain Parchment-maker bringeth him all the Books containing that Doctrine from London.

The fifth day of July 1424, the ſaid Richard Belward, was brought before John Biſhop of Norwich, ſitting in place of Judgment, where the foreſaid Articles were objected againſt the ſaid Richard, which he there denied; whereupon the Biſhop appointed him another day to purge himſelf, the Monday next after the Feaſt of St. Margaret: upon which day, being the 24th of July, in the year aforeſaid, he appeared again before the Biſhop, and brought with him nine of his Neighbours to purge him upon thoſe Articles, and there did ſolemnly purge himſelf. And afterward, forſomuch as the ſaid Biſhop ſuſpected the ſaid Richard Belward greatly of Lollardy, he commanded him there preſently to Swear upon the Evangeliſts. That from that day forward he ſhould not wittingly preach, teach, or defend any Error or Hereſie, contrary to the Church of Rome, neither aid, aſſiſt, favour or maintain, privily or apertly, any manner of perſon or perſons, that ſhould hold or maintain the ſaid Errors or Hereſies. In the preſence of Maſter William Bernam, John Wadden, Robert Serle, and J. Berne Eſquire, and other of his Neighbours which came unto his purgation.

John Godeſol of Dichingham

In like manner John Godeſol of Dichingham Parchment-maker, was detected and accuſed upon the ſame Articles, and thereupon brought before the Biſhop, where he denying them, purged himſelf by his Neighbours, as Richard Belward before had done, being Sworn alſo in like manner as he was, and ſo was diſmiſſed and ſet at liberty, until the year of our Lord 1428, when he was again apprehended, accuſed and abjured, as ſhall be more at large declared in the Hiſtory when we come to that year. Sir Hugh Pie alſo, Chaplain of Ludney in the Diocefs of Norwich, was likewiſe accuſed and brought before the Biſhop of Norwich the fifth day of July, Anno 1424, for holding of theſe Opinions following:

Sir Hugh Pie Prieſt.

That the people ought not to go on Pilgrimage.

Item, That the people ought not to give Alms, but only unto ſuch as beg at their doors.

Image of the Croſs not to be worſhipped.

Item, That the Image of the Croſs and other Images are not to be worſhipped. And that the ſaid Hugh had caſt the Croſs of Bromehold into the fire to be burned, which he took from one John Wigate of Ludney. Which Articles, as is aforeſaid, being objected againſt him, he utterly denied; whereupon he had a day appointed to purge himſelf by the witneſs of three Lay-men, and three Prieſts. That ſo done, he was Sworn as the other before, and ſo diſmiſſed.

After this, in the year of our Lord 1428, King Henry the 6th ſent down moſt cruel Letters of Commiſſion unto John Exeter and Jacolet Germain, Keeper of the Caſtle of Colcheſter, for the apprehending of Sir William White Prieſt, and others ſuſpected of Hereſies, the tenor whereof hereafter enſueth.

The Copy of the Kings Letters directed to John Exeter and Jacolet Germain, Keeper of the Caſtle of Colcheſter, for the apprehending of Sir William White Prieſt, and other (as they called them) Lollards.

A Letter of the King.

HEnry by the grace of God King of England and of France, Lord of Ireland, to his well-beloved John Exeter, and Jacolet Germain, Keeper of the Caſtle of Colcheſter, health:

Te ſhall underſtand that we fully truſting unto your fidelity and circumſpections, have appointed you ſpontly and ſeverally to take and Arreſt William White Prieſt, and Thomas, late Chaplain of Stelling, in the County of Norfolk, and William Northampton Prieſt, and all other whatſoever they be that are ſuſpect of Hereſie or Lollardy, wherſoever they may be found within the Liberties or without, and ſtraightway being ſo taken, to ſend them unto our next Goal

{KING Hen. 5.} Goal or Priſon, until ſuch time as we ſhall have taken other order for their delivery: And therefore we ſtraightly command you, that ye diligently attend about the Premiſes, and fulfil the ſame in form aforeſaid. Alſo we charge and command all and ſingular Juſtices of Peace, Mayors, Sheriffs, Bailiffs, Conſtables, and all other our faithful Officers, by the tenor of theſe Preſents, That they do aſſiſt, aid and counſel you and every of you, in the execution of the Premiſes, as it ſhall be comely for them. In witneſs whereof we have cauſed theſe our Letters Patents to be made. Witneſs my ſelf at Weſtminſter, the ſixth of July, the ſixth of our Reign.

By vertue of which Commiſſion we find in old Monuments, that within ſhort ſpace after John Exeter, which was appointed one of the Commiſſioners, attached ſix perſons in the Town of Bungay in the Diocefs of Norwich, and committed them to William Day, and William Roe, Conſtables of the Town of Bungay, to be ſent within ten days following, under ſafe cuſtody, unto the Caſtle of Norwich. Whoſe names through the Antiquity of the Monument were ſo defaced, that we could not attain to the perfect knowledge of them all; only three names partly remained in the Book to be read, which were theſe:

These fore-named Perſons and Soldiers of Chriſt, being much beaten with the cares and troubles of thoſe days, although they were conſtrained to relent and abjure; that is, to proteſt otherwiſe with their Tongues than their hearts did think, partly through correction, and partly through infirmity (being as yet but new trained Soldiers in Gods field) yet for their good will they bare unto the truth, although with their Tongues they durſt not expreſs it, we have thought good that their names ſhould not be ſuppreſſed, as well for other ſundry cauſes, as ſpecially for this; either to ſtop the mouths of malignant adverſaries, or to anſwer to their ignorance, who following rather blind affection, than the true knowledge of Times and Antiquities, for lack of knowledge blame that they know not, accuſing the True Doctrine of the Word of God for novelty, and carping the teachers thereof for new broched Brethren. Who, if they did as well foreſee times paſſed, as they be unwilling to follow times now preſent, they ſhould underſtand as well by theſe Stories as other before, how this Doctrine of the Grace of God, lacking no antiquity, hath from time to time continually fought to burſt out, and in ſome places hath prevailed, although in moſt places,

places, through tyranny and the malice of Men, Chriſts proceedings have been ſuppreſſed and kept under from riſing, ſo much as Mens power and ſtrength joyned with craft and ſubtilty could labour to keep down the ſame; as here by theſe good Men of Norfolk and Suffolk may well appear. For if the knowledge and the good towardneſs of thoſe good Men had had the like liberty of time, with the help of like authority, as we have now, and had not been reſtrained through the iniquity of time and tyrannny of Prelates, it had well appeared how old this Doctrine would have been, which now they conterm and reject for the newneſs thereof: neither needed Bonner to have asked of Thomas Hawkes, and ſuch other, where their Church was forty years ago, in as much as for forty years ago, and more, within the countrey of Norfolk and Suffolk, was then found ſuch plenty of the ſame Profeſſion and like Doctrine which we now profeſs. And thus much for the number and names of theſe perſons.

Sooner might ſee the Church here in this age more than forty years before he was born

Now as touching their Articles which they did maintain and defend: Firſt, this is to be conſidered, as I find it in the Regiſtess, ſuch ſociety and agreement of Doctrine to be amongſt them, that almoſt in their Aſſertions and Articles there was no difference. The Doctrine of the one was the Doctrine of all the other: what their Articles were, partly it is ſhewed in the Leaf before; and partly here followeth to be declared more at large.

Although it is to be thought concerning theſe Articles, that many of them either were falſly objected againſt them, or not truly reported of the Notaries, according as the common manner is of theſe Adverſaries, where the matter is good, there to make Hereſie, and of a little occaſion to ſtir up great matter of ſlander, as they did before by the Articles of John Wickliff and John Hus, and others moe: So in like manner it ſeemeth they did in the Articles of theſe Men, either miſtaking that which they ſaid, or miſunderſtanding that which they meant, eſpecially in theſe two Articles concerning Baptiſm and paying of Tithes. For whereas they ſpeaking againſt the ceremonial and ſuperſtuous Traditions then uſed in Baptiſm, as Salt, Oil, Spittle, Taper, Light, Chriſmes, exorciſing of the Water, with ſuch other, accounted them as no material thing in the Holy Inſtitution of Baptiſm, the Notaries ſlanderously depraving this their aſſertion, to make it more odious to the ears of the people, ſo gave out the Article, as though they ſhould hold, that the Sacrament of Baptiſm uſed in the Church by Water is but a light matter and of ſmall effect.

These Men are falſly ſlandered about Baptiſm.

Again, In ſpeaking againſt the Chriſtening the Midwives uſe in private Houſes, againſt the Opinion of ſuch as think ſuch Children to be damned which depart before they come to their Baptiſm, they are falſly reported, as though they ſhould ſay, That Chriſtian people be ſufficiently Baptized in the Blood of Chriſt, and need no Water, and that Infants be ſufficiently Baptiſed, if their Parents be Baptiſed before them. Which thing is ſo contrary to the manifeſt Word, That it is not to be thought any to be ſo ignorant of the Goſpel, that ever would or did affirm the ſame.

Moreover, they thought or ſaid peradventure, That in certain caſes Tithes might be withholden from wicked Prieſts ſometime, and be conferred to better uſes, to the behoof of the poor: Therefore they are falſly ſlandered, as ſaying and affirming, That no Tithes were to be given to the Miniſters and Curates of the Churches.

The Papiſts are but quarrel pickers.

And likewiſe for Matrimony, wherein they are reported to hold and affirm, as though it conſiſted only in the mutual conſent betwixt the Man and the Woman, needing no other Solemnizing in the publick Church, and all becauſe (as it is like) they denied it to be a Sacrament. Other Articles were objected againſt them, as theſe which hereafter follow:

Articles.

That Auricular Confeſſion is not to be made unto a Prieſt, but unto God only; becauſe no Prieſt hath any power to abſolve a ſinner from his ſin.

Item, That no Prieſt hath power to make the Body of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Altar, but that, after the Sacramental words, there remaineth pure matrial Bread as before.

Item, That every true Chriſtian-man is a Prieſt to God.

Item, That no Man is bound under pain of damnation unto Lent, or any other days prohibited by the Church of Rome. {KING Lit. 4.}

Item, That the Pope is Antichriſt, and his Prelates the Diſciples of Antichriſt, and the Pope hath no power to bind and looſe upon Earth.

Item, That it is lawful for every Chriſtian to do any bodily work (ſin only except) upon Holy-days.

Item, That it is lawful for Prieſts to have Wives. In caſe of neceſſity they meant.

Item, That Excommunications and Eccleſiaſtical cenſures given out by the Prelates, are not to be regarded.

Item, It is not lawful to Swear in private caſes.

Item, That Men ought not to go on Pilgrimage.

Item, That there is no honour to be given to the Images of the Crucifix, of our Lady or any other Saint.

Item, That the holy water, hallowed in the Church by the Prieſt, is not holier or of more vertue than other running or Well-water, becauſe the Lord bleſſed all Waters in their firſt creation.

Item, That the death of Thomas Becket was neither Holy nor Meritorious. The death of Thomas Becket.

Item, That the relicts, as dead Mens Bones, ought not to be worſhipped or digged out of their Graves, or ſet up in Shrines.

Item, That prayers made in all places are acceptable unto God.

Item, That Men ought not to pray to any Saint, but only to God.

Item, That the Bells and Ringing in the Church was Ordained for no other purpoſe, but to fill the Prieſts purſes,

Item, That it is no ſin to withſtand the Eccleſiaſtical Precepts.

Item, That the Catholick Church is only the Congregation of Elect. To this Article is meant, that the wicked be in the Church, but out of the Church.

Theſe were the Articles which were generally objected againſt them all, wherein they did ſo agree in one uniform Faith, that whatſoever one did hold, all the other did maintain, and hold the ſame. By the which their conſent and Doctrine is apparent, That they all received it of ſome one Inſtructer, who was William White; which being a Scholar and follower of John Wickliff, reſorted afterward into this Country of Norfolk, there inſtructed theſe Men in the Light of the Goſpel. And now, as we have declared the names and Articles of theſe good Men, ſo it remaineth ſomewhat to ſpeak of their troubles, how they were handled; beginning firſt with William White.

William White, Preiſt.

THIS William White, being a follower of John Wickliff, and a Prieſt, not after the common ſort of Prieſts, but rather to be reputed amongſt the number of them, of whom the wiſe Man ſpeaketh, * He was as the morning ſtar in the midſt of a cloud, &c. This Man was well learned, upright and a well-ſpoken Prieſt. He gave over his Prieſthood and Benefice, and took unto him a godly young Woman to his Wife, named Joan; notwithſtanding he did not therefore ceaſe to leave from his former Office and Duty, but continually laboured to the glory and praiſe of the Spouſe of Chriſt, by reading, writing, preaching. The principal points of his Doctrine were theſe, which he was forced to recant at Canterbury. Will. White, Martyr. {Ann. 1428} {Ex Fabine Ecc. 18.}

That Men ſhould ſeek for the forgiveneſs of their ſins only at the hands of God.

That the wicked living of the Pope, and his Holineſs, is nothing elſe but a Deviliſh eſtate and heavy yoke of Antichriſt, and therefore he is an Enemy unto Chriſts Truth.

That Men ought not to worſhip Images, or other Idolatrous Paintings.

That Men ought not to worſhip the holy Men which are dead. The Romiſh Church aptly reſembled to the curſed Fig-tree.

That the Romiſh Church is the Fig-tree which the Lord Chriſt hath accurſed, becauſe it hath brought forth no fruit of the true belief.

That ſuch as wear Couls, or be Anointed or Shorn, are the lance-Knights and Soldiers of Lucifer's, and that they all, becauſe their Lamps are not burning, ſhall be ſhut out, when as the Lord ſhall come.

Upon

{KING Hen. 6.} Upon which Articles he being attached at Canterbury under the Archbiſhop Henry Chicheſly, in the Year of our Lord 1424, there for a certain ſpace, ſtoutly and manly witneſſed the truth which he had preached: but like as there he loſt his courage and ſtrength, ſo afterward he became again much more ſtoutter and ſtronger in Jeſus Chriſt, and confeſſed his own error and offence. For after this, he going into Norfolk with his ſaid Wife Joan, and there occupying himſelf buſily in teaching and converting the people unto the True Doctrine of Chriſt, at the laſt, by the means of the Kings Letters ſent down for that intent and purpoſe, he was apprehended and taken, and brought before William Biſhop of Norwich, by whom he was convicted, and condemned of thirty Articles, and there was burned in Norwich, in the month of September, An. 1424.

The Biſhops men ſtuffeth him on the mouth, ſo ſtopping the people.

This William White and his Wife had his moſt abode with one Thomas Moon of Ludney. This Man was of ſo devout and holy life, that all the people had him in great reverence, and deſired him to pray for them: inſomuch that one Margaret Wright confeſſed, That if any Saints were to be prayed to, ſhe would rather pray to him than any other. When he was come unto the Stake, thinking to open his mouth to ſpeak unto the people, to exhort and confirm them in the verity, one of the Biſhops ſervants ſtruck him on the mouth, thereby to force him to keep ſilence. And thus this good Man, receiving the Crown of Martyrdom, ended this mortal life to the great dolour and grief of all the good Men of Norfolk. Whoſe ſaid Wife Joan, following her Husbands ſootſteps according to her power, teaching and ſowing abroad the ſame Doctrine, confirmed many Men in Gods Truth; wherefore ſhe ſuffered much trouble and puniſhment the ſame Year at the hands of the ſaid Biſhop.

The Burning of William White

The deſcription of the penance of Thomas pye and John Meridham

Father Abraham, John Waddon, Prieſts, Martyrs and burned.

About the ſame time alſo was burned father Abraham of Colcheſter, and John Waddon Prieſt, for the like Articles.

Concerning them which abjured, how and by whom they were examined, what Depoſitions came in againſt them, and what was the order and manner of the Penance enjoyned them, here it might be ſet out at large: but for avoiding of prolixity, it ſhall be ſufficient briefly to touch certain of the principals, whereby the better underſtanding may be given to the Reader, after what manner and order all the other were intreated.

Firſt, Amongſt them which were Arreſted and cauſed to Abjure in this Year aforeſaid ſpecified, 1428, was Thomas Pie, and John Meridham of Alborough, who, being convict upon divers of the Articles before-mentioned, were injoyned Penance to be done in their own Pariſh-Church, as by the Biſhop's Letter directed to the Dean of Rhodenhall, and the Pariſh-Prieſt of Alborough, doth more at large appear, the Tenor whereof here enſueth:

The Copy of the Biſhop of Norwich his Letter.

A Letter of the Biſhop of Norwich.

William by the ſufferance of God Biſhop of Norwich, to our well-beloved Sons in Chriſt, the Dean of Rhodenhall of our Diocеſs, and to the Pariſh-Prieſt of the Pariſh-Church of Alborough of the ſame our Diocеſs, Health, Grace and Benediction. Foraſmuch as we, according to our Office, lawfully proceeding to the correction and amendment of the Souls of Thomas Pie and John Meridham of Aldborough of the Diocеſs aforeſaid, becauſe they have holden, believed and affirmed divers and many Errors and Hereſies, contrary to the determination of the holy Church of Rome, and the Univerſal Church and Catholick Faith, have enjoyned the ſaid Thomas and John, appearing before us perſonally, and confeſſing before us ſpecially that they have holden, believed and affirmed divers and many Errors and Hereſies, this Penance be hereunder writſen, for their offences to be done and fulfilled in manner, form and time hereunder-written, according as Juſtice doth require; that is to ſay, five ſuffigations or diſciplinings about the Pariſh-Church of Aldborough aforeſaid, before a ſolemn Proceſſion for ſeveral Sundays, and three diſciplinings about the Market-place of Hereſtone of our ſaid Diocеſs three principal Market-days, bare necked in his head, legs and feet, their bodies being covered only with their ſhirts and breeches, either of them carrying a Taper in his hand of a pound weight, as well round about the Church, as about the Market-place, in every of the foreſaid appointed days; which Tapers, the laſt Sunday after the Penance finiſhed, we will that the ſaid John and Thomas do humbly and devoutly offer unto the high Altar of the Pariſh-Church of Aldborough at the time of the Offertory of the high Maſs the ſame day, and that either of them, going about the Market-place aforeſaid, ſhall make four ſeveral pauſes and ſtays, and at every of thoſe ſame pauſes humbly and devoutly receive at your hands three diſciplinings. Therefore we ſtraitly charge and command you and either of you, joyntly and ſeverally by virtue of your The manner of the Popiſh Penances.

your obedience, that every Sunday and Market-day, after the receit of our present commandment, you do effectually admonish and bring forth the said Thomas Pie and John Mendham to begin and accomplish their said Penance, and so successively to finish the same in manner and form aforeappointed. But if they will not obey your monitions, or rather our commandments in this behalf, and begin and finish their said Penance effectually, you or one of you shall cite them peremptorily, that they or either of them appear before us, or our Commissary, in the Chappel of our Palace at Norwich, the twelfth day after the Citation so made, if it be a Court day, or else the next Court day following, to declare if they or any of them have any cause why they should not be Excommunicate for their manifest offence in this behalf committed, according to the form and order of Law, and further to receive such punishment, as Justice shall provide in that behalf. And what you have done in the Premises, whether the said Thomas and John have obeyed your Admonitions, and performed the same Penance or no, we will that you or one of you, which have received our said commandment for the execution thereof, do distinctly certify us between this and the last day of November next coming. Dated at our Palace of Norwich under our Commissaries Seal, the 8th day of October, Anno 1428.

This (gentle Reader) was for the most part, the order of their whole Penance: howbeit some were oftentimes more cruelly handled; and after their Penance they were banished out of the Diocess, and other some more straitly used by longer Imprisonment, whereof we will briefly rehearse one or two for example.

John Beverly alias Battild.

John Beverly. JOhn Beverly alias Battild, a labourer, was attached by the Vicar of Southereke, the Parish-Priest of Waterden, and a Lawyer, and so delivered unto Master William Barnham the Bishops Commissary, who sent him to the Castle of Norwich there to be kept in Irons: where afterward he being brought before the Commissary, and having nothing proved against him, he took an Oath, that every year afterward he should confess his sins once a year to his Curate, and receive the Sacrament at Easter, as other Christians did; and for his offence was enjoyned that the Friday and Saturday next after he should fast on Bread and Water, and upon the Saturday to be * whipped from the Palace of Norwich, going round about by Tomelands, and by St. Michaels Church, by Cottlerow, and about the Market, having in his hand a Wax-Candle of two pence, to offer to the Image of the Trinity after he had done his Penance. And forsomuch as he confessed that he had eaten flesh upon Easter-day, and was not shriven in all Lent, nor received upon Easter-day, the Judge enjoyned him that he should fast Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday in Whitson-week, having but one meal a day of fish and other white Meats, and after this Penance so done he should depart out of the Diocess, and never come there any more.

* Alias fubligated.

John Skilley of Flixon, Miller.

John Skilley. The Penance of J. Skilley. JOhn Skilley of Flixon, Miller, being apprehended and brought before the Bishop of Norwich the 14th day of March, 1428, for holding and maintaining the Articles above-written, was thereupon convict and forced to abjure; and after this abjuration solemnly made (which here to avoid tediousness we omit) he had a most sharp sentence of Penance pronounced against him, the effect whereof being briefly collected, was this: That forsomuch as the said Skilley was convict by his own confession, for holding and maintaining the Articles before-written, and for receiving certain good and godly Men into his House, as Sir William White Priest, and John Wadden, whom they called famous, notorious, and damnable Heretics, and had now abjured the same, being first absolved from the sentence of Excommunication which he had incurred by means of his Opinions, he was injoyned for Penance seven years Imprisonment in the Monastery of Langly, in the Diocess of Norwich. And for so much as in times past he used upon the Fridays to eat flesh, he was enjoyned to fast on Bread and Water every Friday by the space of that seven years to come; and that by the space of two years next immediately after the seven years expired, every Wednesday in the beginning of Lent, and every Ashmonday-Thursday, he should appear before the Bishop or his Successor, or Commissary for the time being, in the Cathedral Church of Norwich, together with the other Penitentiaries, to do open Penance for his offences. {KING} {Hen. 6.}

Besides these there were divers other of the same company, which the same year were forced to like Abjuration and Penance. And so to proceed to the next year following, which was 1429, there ensueth a great number in the same Register, which were examined, and did Penance in like sort, to the number of 16 or 17. In the number of whom was John Baker, otherwise called Usher Tonstal, who for having a Book with the Pater-Noster, the Ave and Creed in English, and for certain other Articles of fasting, Confession, and Invocation, contrary to the determination of the Romish Church, after much vexation for the same, was caused to abjure and sustain such Penance, as the other before him had done.

The Story of Margery Backster.

Margery Backster. ANother was Margery Backster, Wife of William Backster Wright in Martham, the same year accused; against whom one Joan, Wife of Clissland was brought in by the Bishop, and compelled to depose, and was made to bring in, in form following:

A Woman brought in for witness in the Popes Court. The Bee will sting. First, That the said Margery Backster did inform this Deponent, That she should in no case Swear, saying to her in English, Dame beware of the Bee, for every Bee will sting, and therefore take heed you Swear not, neither by Bee, neither by our Lady, neither by any other Saint; and if ye do contrary, the Bee will sting your Tongue and venom your Soul.

Against the Popes fasting days. Item, This Deponent being demanded by the said Margery, what she did every day at Church; she answered, That she kneeled down and said five Pater-Nosters, in worship of the Crucifix, and as many Ave Maries in worship of our Lady. Whom Margery rebuked, saying, You do evil to kneel or pray to such Images in the Churches, for God dwelleth not in such Churches, neither shall come down out of Heaven, and will give you no more reward for such prayer, than a Candle lighted, and set under the cover of the Font, will give light by night to those which are in the Church; saying moreover in English, Lewd Wrights of Stocks hew and form such Crosses and Images, and after that, lewd Painters gleer them with Colours. And if you desire so much to see the true Cross of Christ, I will shew it you at home in your own House. Which this Deponent being desirous to see, the said Margery, stretching out her Arms abroad, said to this Deponent, This is the true Cross of Christ, and this Cross thou oughtest and mayst every day behold and worship in thine own House, and therefore it is but vain to run to the Church to worship dead Crosses and Images. Against Images.

The Sacrament is not God. Item, This Deponent being demanded by the said Margery how she believed touching the Sacrament of the Altar, said, That she believed the Sacrament of the Altar, after the Consecration, to be the very Body of Christ in form of Bread. To whom Margery said, Your belief is naught. For if every such Sacrament were God, and the very Body of Christ, there should be an infinite number of gods, because that a Thousand Priests and more do every day make a Thousand such gods, and afterward eat them, and void them out again by their hinder parts, filthily stinking under the Hedges, where you may find a great many such gods if you will seek for them. And therefore know for certainty, That by the grace of God it shall never be my god, because it is falsly and deceitfully ordained by the Priests in the Church, to induce the simple people to Idolatry; for it is only material Bread.

The Bishop a Traitor. Moreover, The said Margery said to this Deponent, That Thomas of Canterbury, whom the people called St. Thomas, was a false Traitor, and damned in Hell, because he injuriously endowed the Churches with possessions, and raised up many Heresies in the Church, which seduce the simple people; and therefore if God be blessed, the said Thomas is accursed; and those false Priests that say {KING} {Hen. 6.} say that he suffered his death patiently before the Altar, do lie; For as a cowardly Traitor he was slain in the Church door, as he was flying away.

Moreover, this Deponent saith, that the said Margery told her that the cursed Pope, Cardinals, Archbishops and Bishops, and especially the Bishop of Norwich and others that support and maintain Heresies and Idolatry, reigning and ruling over the people, shall shortly have the very same or worse mischief fall upon them, than that cursed man Thomas of Canterbury had. For they falsely and cursedly deceive the people with their false Mammeries and Laws, to extort money from the simple folk to sustain their pride, riot and idleness. And know assuredly that the vengeance of God will speedily come upon them, which have most cruelly slain the children of God, Father Abraham, and W. White, a true preacher of the Law of God, and John Wadden, with many other godly men; which vengeance had come upon the said Caiaphas, the Bishop of Norwich and his Ministers, which are members of the Devil, before this time, if the Pope had not sent over those false pardons unto those parties, which the said Caiaphas had falsly obtained, to induce the people to make procession for the state of them and of the Church. Which pardons brought the simple people to cursed Idolatry. Father Abraham, William White, John Wadden. Against Image worship.

Item, The said Margery said to this Deponent, that every faithful Man and Woman is not bound to fast in Lent, or other days appointed for fasting by the Church, and that every man may lawfully eat flesh and all other meats upon the said days and times: and that it were better to eat the fragments left upon Thursday at night on the fasting days, than to go to the Market to bring themselves in debt to buy fish; and that Pope Silvester made the Lent.

William White willing to speak at the stake, was struck on the mouth. Item, The said Margery said to this Deponent, that William White was falsly condemned for an Heretick, and that he was a good and holy man, and that he willed her to follow him to the place of execution, where she saw that when he would have opened his mouth to speak unto the people to instruct them, a Devil, one of Bishop Caiaphas servants struck him on the lips, and stopped his mouth, that he could in no case declare the will of God.

John Pury. John Bunge. Sir John Ubert. Item, This Deponent saith, that the said Margery taught her that she should not go on Pilgrimage, neither to our Lady of Walsingham, nor to any other Saint or place.

Also this Deponent saith, that the said Margery defired her that she and Joan her Maid would come secretly in the night to her Chamber, and there she should hear her Husband read the Law of Christ unto them; which Law was written in a book that her Husband was wont to read to her by night, and that her Husband is well learned in the Christian verity.

Also that the same Margery had talked with a Woman named Joan West, and that the said Woman is in a good way of Salvation.

Also that the said Margery said to this Deponent, Joan, It appeareth by your countenance, that you intend to disclose this that I have said unto you; and this Deponent swear that she would never disclose it, without the said Margery gave her occasion. Then said Margery unto this Deponent; If thou do accuse me unto the Bishop, I will do unto thee as I did once unto a certain Frier a Carmelite of Yarmouth, which was the best learned Frier in all the Country. Then this Deponent desired to know what she had done to the Frier. Unto whom Margery answered, that she had talked with the said Frier, rebuking him because he did begg, saying; that it was no Alms to give him any good thing, except he would leave his habit, and go to the Plough, and so he should please God more, than following the life of some of those Friers. Then the Frier required of the said Margery, whether she could teach him or tell him any thing else. Then the said Margery (as she affirmed to this Deponent) declared to this Frier the Gospel in English, and then the Frier departed from her. After this the said Frier accused the said Margery of Heresie; and the understanding that the Frier had accused her, accused the Frier again, that he would have known her carnally; and because she would not consent unto him, the Frier had accused her of Heresie. And moreover she said, that her Husband would have killed the Frier therefore; and so the Frier for fear held his peace, and went his way for shame.

Against ill-peculiar confession. This Margery also said, that she had oftentimes been friendly confessed to the Dean of the Fields, because he should think her to be a woman of good life; and therefore he gave the said Margery oftentimes money. Then this Deponent asked her whether she had confessed her sins to a Priest or not. And she answered, that she had never offended any Priest, and therefore she would never confess her self to any Priest, neither obey him, because they have no power to absolve any man from their sins, for that they offend daily more grievously than other men; and therefore that men ought to confess themselves only unto God, and to no Priest.

Against Image worship. Item, That the said Margery said to this Deponent, that the people did worship Devils which fell from Heaven with Lucifer, which Devils in their Fall to the Earth, entred into the Images which stand in the Churches, and have long lurked and dwelled in them; so that the people, worshipping those Images commit Idolatry.

Richard Fletcher. Item, She said more to this Deponent, that holy Bread and holy Water were but trifles of no effect or force, and that the Bells are to be cast out of the Church, and that they are excommunicated which first ordained them.

Moreover, that the should not be burned, although she were convict of Lollardy, for that she had a Charter of salvation in her body.

Also the said Deponent saith, that Agnes Berthem her servant, being sent to the house of the said Margery the Saturday after Ashwednesday, the said Margery not being within, found a brass Pot standing over the fire, with a piece of Bacon and Oatmeal seething in it, as the said Agnes reported to this Deponent.

There were also, besides this Deponent, divers other sworn and examined upon the said Margery, as John Grimley and Agnes Berthem, servants to William Clisland, which all together confirmed the former Depositions.

Thus much we have thought good to note as concerning Margery Backster, which we have gathered out of the old Monuments and Registers. But what became of her after this her accusation, because we find no mention made in the said Registers, we are not able to declare.

The same year also were the like Depositions made by one William Wright against divers good men, as here followeth.

John Pury of Ludney. First, This Deponent saith, that William Taylor told John Pury of Ludney, in the house of John Bungay of Begdson, in the presence of John Bungay, Robert Grigges, Wright of Martham, and John Usher, that all the good men of Martham which were favourers and helpers to that good man William White, are evil troubled now a-days, and that the said William White was a good and holy Doctor; and that the best Doctor after him was William Everden, which wrought with the said William Taylor of Ludney, by the space of one month, and that the first Sunday of the same month, the said William Everden did fit all day upon the table at work, saying to the said William Taylor, that he would not go to Church to shew himself a Scribe or a Pharisee; and the second Sunday he put on gentlemans apparel, and went to Norwich to harken how the Bishop and his Ministers used the poor Christians there in prison. W. Everden. Mr. Taylor of Ludney. of Ludney.

Also the said William Wright deposed, that William Taylor of Ludney was one of the Sect, and went to London with Sir Hugh Pie, and had conversation oftentimes with Sir William White, having often conference with the Lollards Doctrine.

The Wife and Daughter of Tho. Moon. Item, That Anise, Wife of Thomas Moon, is of the same Sect, and favoured them, and receiveth them often, and also the Daughter of Thomas Moon is partly of the same Sect, and can read English.

Richard Fletcher of Beckles is a most perfect Doctor in that Sect, and can very well and perfectly expound the Holy Scriptures, and hath a Book of the new Law in English, which was Sir Hugh Pies first.

Nicholas Belward. Item, That Nicholas Belward, son of John Belward, dwelling in the Parish of Southelam, is one of the same Sect, and hath a new Testament which he bought at London for four Marks and forty pence, and taught the said William Wright and Margery his Wife, and wrought with them continually by the space of one year, and studied diligently upon the said New Testament. A New Testament cost four marks and forty pence.

Item,

Tho. Gremner. Item, That Thomas Gremner, Turner of Dychingham, is perfect in that Sect and Law.

John Clark. John Clark the Younger of Bergh had the Bedding and Apparel of William Everden in his cuſtody, after the return of William White from Bergh, and is of the ſame Sect.

W. Bate. Item, William Bate, Tailor of Sething and his Wife, and his Son, which can read Engliſh very well, are of the ſame Sect.

W. Skirving. Item, William Skirving of Sething received Joan the Wife of William White into his houſe, being brought thither by William Everden, after their departure from Martham.

W. Osburn. John Reve. Baudwin Cooper. Item, Will. Osburn of Sething, John Reve Glover, and Baudwin Cooper of Beckles, are of the ſame Sect.

John Peri. Item, John Peri, late ſervant of Thomas Moon, is of the ſame Sect, and can read well, and did read in the preſence of William White, and was the firſt that brought Sir Hugh Pie into the company of the Lollards, which aſſembled oftentimes together at the houſe of the ſaid Thomas Moon, and there conferred upon their doctrine.

Sir Hugh Pie Prieſt. Item, Sir Hugh Pie bequeathed to Alice, ſervant to William White, a new Teſtament, which they then called the Book of the new Law, and was in the cuſtody of Oſwald Godfrey of Colcheſter.

Joh. Parker. John Perker, Mercer of a Village by Ipſwich, is a famous Doctor of that Sect. Alſo he ſaid, that Father Abraham of Colcheſter is a good man.

A prophecy. Item, The ſaid William Wright depoſeth, that it is read in the Prophecies amongſt the Lollards, that the Sect of the Lollards ſhall be in a manner deſtroyed; notwithſtanding at the length the Lollards ſhall prevail and have the victory againſt all their enemies.

Alſo he ſaid, that Tucke knoweth all of that Sect in Suffolk, Norfolk and Eſſex.

Beſides theſe, there were many other the ſame year troubled, whoſe names being before expreſſed in the table of Norfolk-men, here for brevities ſake we omit further to intreat of, paſſing over to the next year following, which was 1430. Ex Regiſt. Norw.

Ex Regiſt. Norw.

John Burrel. JOhn Burrel, ſervant to Thomas Moon of Ludney, in the Diocеſs of Norwich, was apprehended and arreſted for Hereſie the 9th day of September, in this year of our Lord 1430, and examined by Mr. William Bernham the Biſhops Commiſſary, upon the Articles before mentioned, and divers others hereafter following objected againſt him.

Imprimis, That the Catholick Church is the ſoul of every good Chriſtian man.

Lent faſt, faſh-days. Item, That no man is bound to faſt the Lent or other faſting days appointed by the Church, for they were not appointed by God, but ordained by the Prieſts; and that every man may eat fleſh or fiſh upon the ſame days indifferently, according to his own will, and every Friday is a free day to eat both fleſh and fiſh indifferently.

Pilgrimage to the poor. Item, That Pilgrimage ought not to be made but only unto the poor.

Maſſes for the dead unprofitable. Item, That it is not lawful to ſwear, but in caſe of life and death.

Item, That Maſſes and Prayers for the dead are but vain; for the ſouls of the dead are either in Heaven or Hell: and there is none other place of Purgatory but this World.

Upon the which Articles he being convicted, was forced to abjure, and ſuffered like penance as the other before had done. KING Hen. 6.

Tho. Moon of Ludney. THomas Moon of Ludney was apprehended and attached for ſuſpition of Hereſie, againſt whom were objected by the Biſhop the Articles before written, but ſpecially this Article, that he had familiarity and communication with divers Hereticks, and had received, comforted, ſupported, and maintained divers of them, as Sir William White, Sir Hugh Pie, Tho. Pet, and Will. Callis Prieſts, with many more; upon the which Articles he being convict before the Biſhop was forced to abjure, and received the like penance, in like manner as before.

Will. White, Hugh Pie, Tho. Pet, Will. Callis, Prieſts proſecuted.

Robert Grigges of Martham. In like manner, Robert Grigges of Martham was brought before the Biſhop the 17. day of February, in the ſame year aforeſaid, for holding and affirming the foreſaid Articles, but ſpecially theſe hereafter following.

Articles. That the Sacrament of confirmation, miniſtred by the Biſhop did avail nothing to Salvation.

That it was no ſin to withſtand the Ordinances of the Church of Rome.

That holy Bread and holy Water were but triſles, and that the bread and water were the worſe for the conjurations and characters which the Prieſts made over them.

Upon which Articles he being convict, was forced to abjure, and received Penance in manner and form as the other had done before him.

John Finch of Colcheſter, Prieſt. The like alſo (albeit ſomewhat more ſharp) happened unto John Finch of Colcheſter, the 20 day of September, who albeit he was of the Diocеſs of London, being ſuſpect of Hereſie, was attached in Ipſwich in the Diocеſs of Norwich, and brought before the Biſhop there, before whom he being convict of the like Articles, as all the other before him, was enjoyned Penance, three diſciplinings in ſolemn proceſſion about the Cathedral Church of Norwich, three ſeveral Sundays, and three diſciplinings about the Market-place of Norwich three principal Market-days, his head and neck and feet being bare, and his body covered only with a ſhort ſhirt or veſture, having in his hand a Taper of wax of a pound weight, which, the next Sunday after his penance, he ſhould offer to the Trinity; and that for the ſpace of three years after, every Aſhwedneſday and Maunday-Thurſday, he ſhould appear in the Cathedral Church at Norwich, before the Biſhop or his Vicegerent, to do open penance amongſt the other Penitentiaries for his offences.

Popiſh penance.

There were, beſides theſe men which we have here rehearſed, divers and many other, who, both for the concordance of the matter, and alſo for that their Articles and puniſhments were all one, we have thought good at this time to paſs over, eſpecially forſomuch as their names be before recited in the Catalogue.

Richard Hoveden Martyr. ABout the ſame time, even the ſame year 1430, ſhortly after the ſolemn Coronation of King Henry the ſixth, a certain man named Richard Howeden, a Woollen-winder, and Citizen of London, received alſo the Crown of Martyrdom. Which man when he could by no perſwaſions be withdrawn or plucked back from the opinions of Wickliff, he was by the Rulers of the Church condemned for Hereſie and as Fabian writeth, burned hard by the Tower of London.

Nicolas Canon of Eye.

Nicolas Canon of Eye. Ann. 1431. NOw to proceed in our ſtory of Norfolk and Suffolk, in following the order of years, we find that in the year of our Lord 1431, one Nicolas Canon of Eye was brought before the Biſhop of Norwich for ſuſpition of Hereſie, with certain witneſſes ſworn to depoſe againſt him touching his manners and converſation, which witneſſes appointing one William Chriſtopher to ſpeak in the name of them all, he depoſed in manner and form following.

Depoſitions. Firſt, that on Eaſter-day when all the Pariſhioners went about the Church of Eye ſolemnly in Proceſſion, as the manner was, the ſaid Nicolas Canon, as it were mocking and deriding the other Pariſhioners, went about the Church the contrary way, and met the Proceſſion.

This Article he confeſſed, and affirmed that he thought he did well in ſo doing.

Item, The ſaid Nicolas asked of Maſter John Colman of Eye this queſtion, Maſter Colman, what think you of the Sacrament of the Altar? To whom the ſaid Colman anſwered, Nicolas, I think that the Sacrament of the Altar is very God and very man, the very fleſh and very blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt under the form of Bread and Wine. Unto whom Nicolas in deriſion ſaid, Truly, if the Sacrament of the Altar be very God and very man, and the very Body and Blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; then may very God and very man be put in a ſmall room; as when it is in the Prieſts mouth, that receiveth it at Maſs. And why may not we ſimple men as well eat fleſh upon Fridays, and all other prohibited days, as the Prieſt to eat the fleſh, and drink the blood of our Lord every day indifferently? The which Article the ſaid Nicolas denied that he ſpake unto Maſter Colman, but unto a Monk of Hockeſney, and ſtiffthermore he thought he had ſpoken well in that behalf.

If the Sacrament be very fleſh, then the Prieſts eat fleſh on Friday.

Item, That upon Corpus Chriſti day at the Elevation of High Maſs, when all the Pariſhioners and other ſtrangers kneeled down, holding up their hands, and doing reverence unto the Sacrament, the ſaid Nicolas went behind a Pillar of the Church, and turning his face from the High Altar, mocked them that did reverence unto the Sacrament.

This Article he alſo acknowledging affirmed that he believed himſelf to do well in ſo doing.

Item, When his Mother would have the ſaid Nicolas to lift up his right hand, and to croſs himſelf from the craſts and aſſaults of the Devil, forſomuch as he deferred the doing thereof, his Mother took up his right hand and croſſed him, ſaying, In nomine patris, filii, & ſpiritus ſancti. Amen. Which ſo ended, the ſaid Nicolas immediately deriding his Mothers bleſſing, took up his right hand of his own accord, and bleſſed him otherwiſe, as his adverſaries report of him. This Article the ſaid Nicolas acknowledged to be true.

Nicolas Canon turned his back to the Sacrament. Item, That upon Allhallows-day, in the time of Elevation of High Maſs, when as many of the Pariſhioners of Eye lighted many Torches, and carried them up to the High Altar, kneeling down there in reverence and honour of the Sacrament, the ſaid Nicolas carrying a Torch went up hard to the High Altar, and ſtanding behind the Prieſts back faying Maſs, at the time of the Elevation he ſtood upright upon his feet, turning his back to the Prieſt, and his face toward the people, and would do no reverence unto the Sacrament. This Article he acknowledged, affirming that he thought he had done well in that behalf. All which Articles the Biſhops Commiſſary cauſed to be copied out word for word, and to be ſent unto Maſter William Worſted, Prior of the Cathedral Church of Norwich, and to other Doctors of Divinity of the Order of Begging-Friers, that they might deliberate upon them, and thew their minds between that and Thurſday next following. Upon which Thurſday, being the laſt of November the year aboveſaid, the ſaid Nicolas was again examined before Maſter Barnam and divers other, upon two other Articles which he had confeſſed unto J. Excetor Notary, and Thomas Geruſton Bachelor of Divinity, and others. Whereof the firſt Article was this, That the ſaid Nicolas Canon being of perfect mind and remembrance, confeſſed that he doubted whether in the Sacrament of the Altar were the very Body of Chriſt or no. This Article he confeſſed before the Commiſſary to be true.

Another examination of Nicolas Canon.

Articles objected.

Item, That he being of perfect mind and remembrance, believed that a man ought not to confeſs his ſins to a Prieſt. This Article he alſo confeſſed that he doubted upon.

Now remaineth to declare what theſe Doctors aforeſaid concluded upon the Articles; whoſe anſwer unto the ſame was this.

The Judgment of the Prior and Doctors upon his Articles. Firſt of all, as touching the firſt Article, they ſaid that the Article in the ſame terms as it was propounded, is not ſimply an Hereſie, but an error.

Item, As touching the ſecond Article, the Doctors agree as in the firſt.

Item, As touching the third Article, they affirm that it is an Herefie.

Unto the fourth Article, they anfwered as unto the firft and fecond.

Item, The Doctors affirm the fifth Article to be an Herefie.

An herefie to doubt whether the Sacrament be the perfect Body of Chrift,or no.

Item, As touching the fixth Article, the Doctors conclude, that if the faid Nicolas, being of perfect mind and remembrance, did doubt whether the Sacrament of the Altar were the very perfect Body of Chrift or no, then the Article is fimply an Herefie.

Nic. Canon declared an Heretick.

Whereupon the faid Commiffary declared and pronounced the faid Nicolas upon the determination of the faid Doctors,to be an Heretick,and thereupon forced the faid Nicolas to abjure all the faid Articles. That done he enjoyned the faid Nicolas penance for his offences,three Difciplinings about the Cloifter of the Cathedral Church of Norwich, before a folemn Proceffion, bare headed and bare foot, carrying a Taper of half a pound in his hand, going after the manner aforefaid, like a meer Penitentiary : the which his penance the Judg commanded fhould be refpited until the coming of the Bifhop into his Diocefs, and that in the mean time he fhould be kept in prifon,to the end that he fhould not infect the flock with his venom and poyfon of Errors and Herefies.

Penance enjoyned to Nic. Canon.

Thus have we briefly difcourfed unto you the great trouble and afflictions which happened in Norfolk and Suffolk by the fpace of thofe four years before mentioned, having drawn out briefly for every year, certain notable examples fufficient for the declaration of all the reft, forfomuch as their opinions being nothing different their penance and punifhment did alfo nothing differ, otherwife than by thofe particular examples may be plainly feen,

Thomas Bagley Prieft.

Thomas Bagley Prieft, Martyr.

AND now to proceed as we have begun with our former Stories, generally we find in Fabians Chronicles, that in the fame year of our Lord 1431. Thomas Bagley a Prieft, Vicar of Monenden befide Maldon, being a valiant Difciple, and adherent of Wickliff, was condemned by the Bifhops of Herefie at London, about the middeft of Lent, and was degraded and burned in Smithfield.

Paul Craw a Bohemian.

Paul Craw, Martyr.

THE fame year alfo was Paul Craw a Bohemian taken at Saint Andrews by the Bifhop Henry, and delivered over to the Secular power to be burned for holding contrary opinions unto the Church of Rome touching the Sacrament of the Lords-Supper, the worfhipping of Saints, Auricular confeffion, with other of Wickliffs opinions.

Ex Hiftor. Bafil.

The Story of Thomas Rhedon,a French man, and a Carmelite Frier, burnt in Italy for the profeffion of Chrift.

Thomas Rhedonenfis Martyr. Ex Antonino 3. parte. Hift.fol.169.

WE have declared before how this cruel ftorm of perfecution which firft began with us in England after it had long raged here againft many good and godly men, brake out and paffed into Boheme, and after within a.fhort time, the fire of this perfecution increafing by little and little, invaded Scotland, and from thence now with greater force and violence this furious devouring flame hath entred Italy, and fuffereth not any part of the world to be free from the murther and flaughter of moft good and godly men. It happened about this time that one Thomat Rhedon, a Frier of that Sect, which taketh his name of the Mount Carmelus, by chance came with the Venetian Ambaffadors into Italy. This man although he was of that fort and Sect, which inftead of Chriftians are called Carmelites, yet was he of a far other Religion, and underftood the Word of God,judging that God ought not to be worfhipped neither in that Mount, nor at Jerufalem only, but in fpirit and truth. This man being a true Carmelite, and favouring with his whole heart that new fweet Mufte of Jefus Chrift, with earneft ftudy and deline feeking after a Chriftian integrity of life, prepared himfelf firft to go into Italy, truffing that he fhould find there, or elfe in no place, fome by whofe good life and living he might be edified and inftructed. For where ought more abundance of vertue and good living to be, than in that place which is counted to be the fort and fountain of all Religion ? And how could it otherwife be,but that whereas fo great holinefs is profeffed, whereupon all mens eyes are bent as upon a Stage, whereas Saint Peters feat is, and is thought to be the Ruler and Governour of all the Church, all things fhould flourifh and abound worthy of fo great expectation in that place ? This holy man having thefe things before his eyes, and confidering the fame with himfelf, forfook his own Country and City, and went unto Rome, conceiving a firm and fure hope that by the example of fo many notable and worthy men, he fhould greatly profit in godlinefs and learning : but the fuccefs of the matter did utterly fruftrate his hope,for all things were clean contrary. Whatfoever he faw was nothing elfe but meer diffimulation and hypocrifie. Inftead of gold he found nothing but coals ; and to fay the truth he found nothing elfe there but gold and filver. Inftead of heavenly gifts there reigned amongft them the pomp and pride of the world : In place of godlinefs, riot : Inftead of learning and ftudy, ftothfulnefs and fuperftition. Tyranny and haughtinefs of mind had poffeffed the place of Apoftolick fimplicity : that now there remained no more any place or liberty for a man to learn that which he knew not, or to teach that which he perfectly underftood. Finally, all things were turned arfieverfie, all things happened unto him contrary to his expectation whereofever he went. But nothing fo much offended this good mans mind, as the intolerable ambition and pompous pride in them, whom example of humility fhould efpecially commend and praife to the whole world. And albeit that he faw here nothing which did accord and agree with the rule of the Apoftles, yet thefe things did fo much poffe all meafure and patience, that he could by no means refrain his tongue in fo great abufe and corruption of the Church,feeing fuch ambitious pride in their buildings, apparel, in their Palaces, in their dainty fare, in their great trains of fervants, in their horfe and armour, and finally in all things pertaining unto them. Which things how much they did vary from the prefcript rule of the Gofpel, fo much the more was this good man forced to fpeak ; albeit he did well underftand how little he fhould prevail by fpeaking : for if admonition would profit any thing at all, the Books of Wickliff and divers other were not wanting. The famous teftimonies of John Hus, and of Hierome of Prague, and their blood fhed for the fame, was yet prefent before their eyes : at whofe moft effectual exhortations, they were fo little corrected and amended, that they feemed twice more cruel than they were before. Yet all this could not fear this good man, but that in fo neceffary and wholefome an office he would fpend his life if need fhould be. So by this means he which came to be a fcholar unto others, was now forced to be their teacher. And he which determined to follow other mens lives and manners, had now contrariwife fet before them his life to be marked and followed. For he lived fo amongft them, that his life might be a rule unto them all, and fo taught, as he might alfo be their Schoolmaifter. For even as Paul had foreftewed unto fuch as defired to live godly in Chrift, that they fhould fuffer perfecution, fuch like reward happened unto this man. He gave unto them the fruit of Godlinefs, which they fhould follow : they again fet upon his head the diadem of Martyrdom. He fhewed them the way to falvation ; and they for the benefit of life rewarded him death : and whereas no rewards had been worthy for his great labours and travels, they with moft extream ignominy perfecuted him even unto the fire. For when as by continual Preaching he had gotten great envy and hatred,the Rulers began to conſult together by what means they might circumvent this mans life. Here they had recourfe to their accuftomed remedies: for it was a peculiar and continual cuftom amongft the Prelates of the Church, that if any man did difpleafe them,or that his talk be not according to their mind, or by any means hurtful,or a hindrance to their lucre and gain,by and by they frame out Articles of fome Herefie, which they charge charge him withal. And like as every living thing hath his peculiar and proper weapon to defend himſelf from harm, as nature hath armed the Boar with his Tuſks, the Hedghog with his Prickles,the Lion is feared for his Claws, the Dog for his biting, the Bull fighteth with his Horns, neither doth the Aſſe lack his Hoofs to ſtrike withal : even ſo this is the only armour of the Biſhops, to ſtrangle a man with Herefie, if he once go about to mutter againſt their will and ambition ; which thing may be eaſily perceived and ſeen in this moſt holy man, beſide a great number of other. Who when as now he began to wax grievous unto them, and could no longer be ſuffered ; what did they? ſtraightways flie unto their old policies, and as they had done with Hus, and Jerome of Prague, even ſo went they about to practiſe againſt this man. They overwhelm him with ſuſpition, they ſeek to intangle him with queſtions, they examin him in judgment,they compile Articles againſt him, and lay Herefie unto his charge, they condemn him as an Heretick, and being ſo condemned, they deſtroy and kill him. This was their godlineſs : this was the peaceable Order of thoſe Carmelites. Whoſe Religion was to wear no ſword nor ſhield, notwithſtanding they did bear in their hearts malice, rancor, vengeance, poyſon, craft, and deceit, ſharper than any ſword. With how great care and policy is it provided by Law, that none of theſe Clergy-men ſhould fight with ſword in the ſtreets ? when as in judgment and accuſations (whereas it is not lawful for a man to oppreſs his Brother) there is no murtherer which hath more ready vengeance, or that doth more vilely eſteem his Brothers ſoul than they. They ſhed no blood themſelves, they ſtrike not, nor kill, but they deliver them over unto others to be ſlain. What difference is there I pray you, but that they are the authors, and the other are but the Miniſters of the cruel fact ? they kill no man as murtherers do. How then ? Although not after the ſame ſort, yet they do it by another mean.

KING 3 Hen.6. 5

Popery armed with policy and defended with tyranny.

His Articles

The Articles which they falſly gathered againſt this man, are affirmed by ſome to be theſe :

That the Church lacketh reformation, and that it ſhall be puniſhed and reformed.

That Infidels, Jews, Turks, and Moors ſhall be converted unto Chriſt in the later days.

That abominations are uſed at Rome.

That the unjuſt Excommunication of the Pope is not to be feared : and thoſe which do not obſerve the ſame do not ſin or offend.

Ex Antonin. 3 part. Hiſt. fol. 169. W. Cardinal. Ie Hieronymo geniſe his perſecutor. Thomas Rhedonenſis brought before Pope Eugenius.

But yet there lacked a Miniſter for theſe Articles, albeit he could not long be wanting at Rome, where all things are to be ſold, even mens ſouls. For this office and miniſtery there was no man thought more meet than William of Rowne, Cardinal of Saint Martins in the Mount, Vicechancellor of the Court of Rome. Eugenius at that time was Pope, who had a little before ſucceeded Pope Martin above mentioned. Before the which Eugenius this godly Rhedonenſis the Frenchman was brought, and from thence ſent unto priſon. And again after his impriſonment, and divers and ſundry grievous torments, he was brought before the Judges. The Wolf fat in judgment, the Lamb was accuſed. Why ? becauſe he had troubled the ſpring : But here need not many words. This good Thomas not being able to reſiſt the malice of theſe mighty Potentates,had offended enough, and was eaſily convict and condemned to be burned, but in ſuch fort, as firſt of all he ſhould be deprived of all ſuch degrees as he had taken of Prieſthood. For it is counted an unlawful thing, that a Prieſt ſhould be puniſhed with prophane puniſhment, when as notwithſtanding it is lawful enough for Prieſts to put any Lay-man to death, be he never ſo guiltleſs.

The corruption of Rome will admit no reformation

How religiouſly and earneſtly do they foreſee that the Majeſty of the Prieſtly dignity ſhould not in any caſe be hurt ? But how little care have they that their conſciences be not hurt with falſe judgments, and oppreſſing the guiltleſs ? Wherefore before that he ſhould come unto puniſhment, this good man muſt be degraded. The order and manner of this Popiſh degrading is partly before touched in the ſtory of William Taylor.

Fifty rewarded with perſecution.

Thomas degraded.

Thomas Rhedonenſis, a Frenchman, burned at Rome.

After that it had pleaſed the Biſhops to degrade this man from the degrees wherewith before they had conſecrated him, and thought not that ſufficient, by and by after they deprived him of his life alſo, and burned him four years after that he came to Rome. In the year of our Lord, 1436.

And thus through the cruelty of theſe moſt tyrannous Prelates, this bleſſed Martyr died. Albeit it is not to be thought that he died, but made a loſs of this body for a greater gain of ſalvation before the juſt judgment of God. Neither is it to be doubted but that he liveth eternally under the Altar with them whoſe blood the Lord will revenge, peradventure too ſoon for ſome of them, whom the earth hath here ſo long holden unpuniſhed.

As this Thomas aboveſaid ſuffered at Rome, ſo were diverſ others in other places about Germany executed neer about the ſame time, after the burning of John Hus, and Henry Grundfelder Prieſt, of Ratiſbone, Ann. 1429, alſo Henry Radzgeber Prieſt, in the ſame City, Ann. 1423. John Draendorfe of Noble birth, and a Prieſt, was burned at Wormes, Anno 1424. Peter Thoraw at Spire, Anno 1426.Matthew Hager alſo ſuffered at Berlin in Germany, not long after. Ex Bales Centur. ſept.

After the death of Pope Martin, who reigned fourteen years, ſucceeded Eugenius the Fourth of that name, about the year of our Lord 1431. Of whom Antonius thus writeth, that he was much given to wars, as his conflicts and fighting with the Romans may declare : alſo the Batels between the Venetians and the Florentines.

Eugenius the Fourth.

This Pope began firſt to celebrate the Council of Baſil, which Council Martin his Predeceſſor had before intended according to the inſtitution of the Council of Conſtance. Notwithſtanding the ſaid Eugenius perceiving afterward this Council of Baſil not to favour him and his doings, and fearing ſome detriment to come to him by the ſame, afterward laboured by all ſubtil practiſe to diſſolve and interrupt the ſaid Council, and from Baſil to tranſlate it firſt to Ferraria, then to Florentia, more near to his own See of Rome. Concerning the which Council of Baſil, forſomuch as we have begun here to make mention, it ſhall be no great digreſſion out of the way to diſcourſe ſomething thereof (the Lord ſo permitting) more at large, ſo much as for the moſt principal matters thereof ſhall ſeem ſufficient or neceſſary to be known.

The Council of Baſil. Ex Æneæ Sylvio.

Ex Cochleo in Hiſt. Huſſ.

Et ex paralipom. Abbatis Urſperg.

Here followeth the order and manner of the Council of Baſil, touching the principal matters concluded therein, briefly collected and abridged here in this preſent Book ; the reſt whereof we have referred unto our former Edition, wherein the full diſcourſe of the whole Diſputation is to be ſeen more at large for ſuch as have luſt and leiſure to ſee more thereof.

IN the Thirty ninth Seſſion of the Council of Conſtance, (as is before mentioned) it was decreed and provided concerning the order and times of ſuch General Councils as ſhould hereafter follow : The firſt that ſhould next enſue, to be kept the fifth year after the ſaid Council of Conſtance : The ſecond to be holden the 7th year after that, and ſo orderly all other to follow ſucceſſively from ten year to ten year. Wherefore according to this Decree, followed a General Council five years after the Council of Conſtance, celebrate and holden at Sene, under Pope Martin, Anno 1424, but it ſoon broke up. After the which Council the term of ſeven years being expired, another Council was holden at Baſil, in the year of our Lord 1431. The which Council is noted to have been the moſt troubleſome, and to have endured longer than any other Council beforetime celebrate and holden in the Church. This Council continued almoſt the ſpace of ſeventeen years : wherein it was concluded, as before in the Council of Conſtance, that the General Councils were above the Pope, and both of theſe two Councils did attribute the chief authority in decreeing and determining unto the General Council ; which is the cauſe that the contrary part doth derogate ſo much from the authority of this prefent Council.

When as Pope Martin the Fifth had appointed Julian, Cardinal and Deacon of Saint Angel, his Legate, to celebrate and hold a General Council at Baſil, for the reformation of the Church, and rooting out of Herefies,within thort ſpace after Pope Martin died, in whoſe ſeat Eugenius the Fourth ſucceeded, who confirmed unto the ſaid Cardinal Julian the ſame authority which his Predeceſſor before had given him. Unto this Council of Baſil being begun, came the Emperor Sigiſmund, who during his life time, with his preſence and authority, did protect and defend the ſaid Synod. After the Emperors death, Pope Eugenius altering his former mind and purpoſe, would tranſport the Council unto Bononie, and thereby hindred the ſucceſs of the Council of Baſil. And firſt he held a contrary Council at Ferraria, and afterward at Florence. For after the death of the Emperor Sigiſmund, there were no Princes nor Noblemen that had any care or regard of the Council. Eugenius the Pope pretended cauſes, as touching the Greeks which ſhould come unto the Council, and the uniting of the Church unto the Weſt Church, the which Greeks would in no wiſe paſs the Alpes; alſo as touching his own incommodity, that he could not come unto Baſil, being ſo long a journey, and that all his men might have eaſie acceſs unto Bononia, and that amongſt the Germans (which in their own Country are ſo intractable) nothing can be attempted for their reformation: whereupon he cited Cardinal Julian, and the Fathers of the Council unto Bononia, under great penalty. They again cited the Pope that either he ſhould come himſelf unto the Council, or ſend Ambaſſadors under the like penalty. For this cauſe the Ambaſſadors of Albert King of the Romans, and of the other Princes of Germany, aſſembled together firſt at Norenberge; and when as they could determine nothing there, they aſſembled again at Franckford to appeaſe the diſſention between the Council and the Pope: for it was thought that the Electors of the Empire might beſt aſſemble and meet in that place, in the mean time the Emperors Ambaſſadors, and the Ambaſſadors of the Electors went into Baſil, and having conference with the Ambaſſadors of the other Princes which were there, they did earneſtly exhort the Fathers of the Council, that they would embrace and receive the unity which they would offer. The requeſt of the Princes was, that the Fathers would tranſport the Council, and go unto another place; the which only thing Pope Eugenius ſeemed always to ſeek and deſire, that thereby he might either divide the Fathers of the Council, or take away their liberty.

The death of Pope Martin. Pope Eugenius the Fourth.

Pope Eugenius ſeeketh to diſſolve the Council of Baſil.

Diſſention between the Council of Baſil, and Pope Eugenius.

The Prelates of the Council refuſe the Popes requeſt.

Notwithſtanding this ſacred Synod thought good neither to deny the Princes requeſt, nor to grant that which Pope Eugenius required. During this doubt, the Emperors Ambaſſadors, the Biſhops of Patavia and Auguſta, (being much required and ſtirred thereunto) appointed a noble and valiant Baron called Comrade Weinſperge, by the Kings commandment to be Protector and defender of the Council, and the Fathers. Whereby as the enemies perceived the Emperors mind to be alienate from the Pope, ſo the Fathers of the Council underſtood his good will towards them, forſomuch as he would not have ſent them a Protector, if he had not judged it a lawful Council; neither again would he have judged it a Council in Baſil, if he had given credit to Pope Eugenius. But by means of a great Peſtilence which began to grow, the aſſembly that ſhould have been holden at Frankford was tranſported unto Mentz. The Ambaſſadors of the Princes alſo thought good to go thither, if they might find any means of unity, whereby they might unite and knit the Pope again unto the Council.

The Princes aſſembled at Mentz, to make unity between the Councel and the Pope.

The aſſembly was very famous, for there were preſent the Archbiſhops of Mentz, Colen, and Trevers, Electors of the Sacred Empire, and all the Ambaſſadors of the other Electors. Notwithſtanding, the Archbiſhop of Colen was the chief favourer of the Council in this aſſembly, who with all his labour and diligence went about to bring the matter unto a good end. Rabanus the Archbiſhop of Trevers ſhewed himſelf ſomewhat more rough. The ſacred Synod alſo thought good to ſend thither their Ambaſſadors, and appointed out the Patriarch of Aquileia, the Biſhop of Vicense, and the Biſhop of Argen: Divines, John Segovian, and Thomas de Corcellis, with divers others. There was no man there preſent which would name himſelf the Ambaſſador of Eugenius: Albeit there were many of his favourers and friends come thither, both from the Council, and alſo out of Florence, the which albeit they had ſworn to the contrary, yet favoured they more Eugenius than the Council. But the chief Hercules of all the Eugenians was Nicolas Cuſanus, a man ſingularly well learned, and of great experience. After divers conſultations had, the Electors of the Empire, and the Ambaſſadors of the other Princes of Germany, thought good to give out commandment throughout their whole Nation and Country, that the Decrees of the Council of Baſil ſhould be received and obſerved.

{KING Lib. 6.}

Whileſt theſe things were thus debated at Mentz, there ſprang a certain very doubtful Queſtion amongſt the Divines which remained at Baſil, whether Eugenius might be called an Heretick, which had ſo rebelliouſly contemned the commandments of the Church. Hereupon they gathered themſelves together, diſputing long amongſt themſelves, ſome affirming, and otherſome holding the Negative part. Upon this their diſputation there aroſe three ſeveral opinions, ſome affirming that he was an Heretick; otherſome, not only an Heretick, but alſo a relapſe: The third ſort would neither grant him to be an Heretick nor a relapſe. Amongſt theſe Divines, the chief and principal both in learning and authority, was the Biſhop of Ebrun, Ambaſſador of the King of Caſtile, and a certain Scotiſh Abbot: which as two moſt valiant Champions, ſubdued all their enemies, ſo that all the reſt did either conſent unto their arguments, or gave place unto them, and ſo their determination took place, and Eugenius was pronounced both an Heretick and relapſe. Eight Concluſions were there determined and allowed amongſt the Divines, which they called verities, the copy whereof they did divulgate throughout all Chriſtendom.

Three opinions touching the Pope.

The Ambaſſadors of the Council were returned from Mentz, and that certain report was made of the allowing of their Decrees, the Fathers of the Council thought good to diſcuſs the Concluſions of the Divines more at large. Whereupon by the commandment of the Deputies all the Maſters, and Doctors, and Clergy were called together, with all the reſidue of the Prelates, into the Chapter-houſe of the great Church, there openly to diſpute and diſcuſs Eugenius hereſie. The which thing ſo grieved the Biſhop of Millain, fearing leſt this diſputation would work the deprivation of Eugenius, the which, as he ſaid, he had always letted for fear of a Schiſm. Wherefore he ceaſed not by all manner of ways to labour, to ſtop and trouble the matter, exhorting them that were abſent by his Letters, and encouraging thoſe that were preſent by his words, to the defence of Eugenius. But at the laſt there was a great aſſembly in the Chapter-houſe, ſome coming thither to diſpute, and otherſome to hear. This diſputation continued ſix days, both forenoon and afternoon, amongſt whom Cardinal Ledovicus, Archbiſhop Arelatenſis was appointed as Judg and Arbiter of the whole diſputation; who beſides many other notable vertues, was both valiant and conſtant. Nicholas Amici which was alſo a Protector of the Faith, a famous man amongſt the Divines of Paris, demanded of every man what their opinion was. John Deniſeſh, publick Notary, wrote every mans ſentence and judgment. The Concluſions of the Divines, which were the ground and foundation of their diſputation, were theſe here following.

The Ambaſſadors return from Mentz.

The Pope hereſie diſcuſſed.

The Biſhop of Millain letteth cauſes part for fear of a Schiſm.

1. It is a verity of the Catholick Faith, that the Sacred General Council hath power over the Pope, or any other Prelate.

Concluſions of the Diſputation.

2. The Pope cannot by his own authority, either diſſolve, tranſport, or prorogue the General Council being lawfully congregate, without the whole conſent of the Council: and this is of like verity.

3. He which doth obſtinately reſiſt theſe verities, is to be counted an Heretick.

4. Pope Eugenius the Fourth hath reſiſted theſe verities, when as at the firſt, by the fulneſs of his Apoſtolick power, he attempted to diſſolve or to tranſport the Council of Baſil.

5. Eugenius being admoniſhed by the Sacred Council, did recant the errors repugnant to theſe verities.

6. The diſſolution or tranſlation of the Council, attempted the ſecond time by Eugenius, is againſt the aforeſaid verities, and containeth an inexcuſable error touching the Faith.

7. Eugenius, in going about to diſſolve and tranſport the Council again, is fallen into his before revoked errors.

8. Eugenius

{KING Lib. 6.}

8. Eugenius being warned by the Synod that he ſhould revoke the diſſolution or tranſlation the ſecond time attempted, after that his contumacy was declared, perſevering in his rebellion, and erecting a Council at Ferraria, ſhewed himſelf thereby obſtinate.

These were the Concluſions which were read in the Chapter-houſe before the Fathers of the Council. Upon the which when they were deſired to ſpeak their minds, they all in a manner confirmed and allowed them. Notwithſtanding, Panormitane Archbiſhop diſputed much againſt them. Likewiſe did the Biſhop of Burgen, the King of Arragons Almoner. Yet did they not gain-ſay the three firſt Concluſions, but only thoſe wherein Pope Eugenius was touched. This Panormitane, as he was ſubtil, ſo did he ſubtilly diſpute againſt the laſt Concluſions, endeavouring himſelf to declare that Eugenius was not relapſed, and had great contention with the Biſhop of Argen. John Segovius, and Francis de Fuxe, Divines. He divided the Articles of the Faith into three ſorts: ſtraitly, as in the Articles of the Faith: largely, as in the Declarations made by the Church: moſt largely of all, as in thoſe things which riſe of the premiſſes: affirming that Eugenius did by no means violate his faith in his firſt diſſolution that he made, becauſe it is not contained in the Creed, neither yet in the determinations of the Church, that the Pope cannot diſſolve the Councils: and that it ſeemeth not unto him to riſe of the determinations before made, but rather of the Decrees of the Council of Conſtance. And further, that this as a caſe omitted is reſerved for the Pope to be diſcuſſed, forſomuch as in the Chapter beginning Frequens, it appeareth that the place where the Council ſhould be kept ought to be choſen by the Pope, the Council allowing the ſame, and nothing is thereof at all ſpoken. And if peradventure Eugenius had offended in the firſt diſſolution, notwithſtanding he ought to be holden excuſed, becauſe he did it by the Council of the Cardinals, repreſenting the Church of Rome: whoſe authority he ſaid to be ſuch, that the judgment thereof ſhould be preferred before all the world. Neither had there been any ſacred Council found to have proceeded againſt Eugenius as an Heretick; and that is an evident ſign that the Council hath not thought him to have ſwarved from the faith, neither to have any occaſion that he ſhould be called Heretick for his errors revoked; and that he himſelf hath read the whole Text, that the Pope did not revoke the diſſolution as contrary unto the faith, but as breeding offence: Alſo that the laſt diſſolution hath no ſuch cauſe in it, forſomuch as likewiſe he had done it by the Council of the Cardinals, and for the uniting of the Greeks, that he might not be compelled in a criminal cauſe to anſwer by his Procurator, when as he being letted by ſickneſs, could not come perſonally, ſcil. foraſmuch as in the firſt diſſolution Eugenius hath fallen into no error of faith, he cannot be perſwaded that he can be called a relapſe, forſomuch as he neither in the firſt, neither yet in the ſecond diſſolution did violate his faith.

Panormitane ſeeketh anſwer for the Pope.

Articles of faith divided into three ſorts.

Panormitane preferreth the judgment of the Cardinals of Rome before all the world.

The Pope pretendeth the uniting of the Greeks, when he meaneth another thing.

This Oration of Panormitane was more praiſed than allowed of men. Notwithſtanding this effect it wrought, that afterward this word relapſe was taken out of the Concluſions, and inſtead thereof this word prolapſe put in. Neither durſt Panormitane himſelf altogether excuſe Eugenius of Hereſie, but defended more the firſt diſſolution, than the ſecond, yet departed he not without anſwer; for John Segovius an expert Divine, riſing up, anſwered him reverently, as was comely for ſuch a Prelate. He ſaid, He granted that which Panormitane had ſpoken touching the diviſion of the Articles of the Faith into three points, becauſe it made for this purpoſe. For if thoſe things are to be holden for Articles of Faith, ſaid he, which may be gathered of the determinations of the Church, it were manifeſt that the Concluſions whereupon we now contend, redound and come of the determinations of the Church, that is to ſay, of the Council of Conſtance; for if therein the Pope be made ſubject unto the General Council, who is it that will ſay that the Pope hath power over the Council which is above him; or that Eugenius ought to remain Pope, becauſe he could not diſſolve the Council which is above him, without the conſent thereof? The which article undoubtedly he hath violate and broken. And if any man will ſay that in the firſt diſſolution this article was not violate, becauſe there was no declaration made thereof, let him which ſo thinketh thus, underſtand, That the Biſhop of Rome ought not only to know the plain and manifeſt, but alſo the ſecret and hidden things of the Faith; for he being the Vicar of Chriſt, and the Head of all other, ought to inſtruct and teach all men. But if ſo be he will not, then he ſhall be convicted for being dead, becauſe he continued long in the diſſolution after the declaration of the Council, neither did conſent unto the determination of the Church; and therefore if peradventure he did not err in the Faith in diſſolving of the Council, yet did he err in perſevering in the ſame, as it manifeſtly appeareth by the ſaying of Clement oftentimes alledged by Panormitane, wherein it is ſaid, That he which liveth rebelliouſly, and neglecteth to do good, is rather a member of the Devil than of Chriſt, and rather an Infidel than a true believer; ſo that Eugenius by diſobeying the Church may worthily be called an Infidel. Neither is it true that the Pope hath not offended in the Faith; forſomuch as well in that anſwer which beginneth Cogitanti, as alſo in the anſwer which beginneth Sperant, made unto the Popes Ambaſſadors, theſe words are manifeſt; this Article concerning Faith, and we had rather die than through cowardlineſs to give place. By the which ſaying it is evident the Synod to have ſufficiently admoniſhed the Pope that he did againſt the Faith, and therefore it ſeemed that afterward, when as Eugenius revoked the diſſolution, he alſo revoked the error of faith contained in the ſame. There are alſo divers offences ſprung and riſen through the error of faith: for ſome ſay that the Pope is under the Council, other-ſome deny it, and this diverſity of Doctrine bringeth offence. Alſo it is expreſly againſt the authority of the Council, that the Pope did revoke the aſſertions made in their name.

The Pope prolapſe, but not relapſe.

John Segovius anſwereth Panormitane.

The Pope neglecting to do good is a member not of Chriſt, but of the Devil.

And albeit in ſuch revocations the ſtile and order of judgments is not obſerved, notwithſtanding it doth ſuffice in ſuch caſe when as the Council doth proceed againſt the Pope, in which caſe only the truth is to be obſerved, neither is the Council ſubject unto any poſitive Law, that it ought to obſerve any terms or judicial orders. Alſo he ſaid that he utterly contemned that ſingular Gloſs which did prefer the Pope before all the world, ſo that it might well be called ſingular, which decreed ſo foolith and fond things, and unworthy to be followed of any man; and that he did much marvel at Panormitane, and other Doctors of thoſe days, which whileſt they went about to extoll the authority of the Gloſſes, do abaſe the ſame by adding a ſingularity thereto; for that Gloſs is ſingular which is alone. But who would not more eſteem a Gloſs conſtantly written and agreeable in all places, than that which in any one place reacheth any thing which may ſeem to be an error; and that as touching the verity and truth? Saint Hierome a grave and ancient Doctor, is contrary to this Gloſs, who doubteth nothing at all, but that the world, as touching authority, is above the City it ſelf, that is to ſay, Rome.

Councils bound to old poſitive Law.

Segovius could ſcarcely finiſh this his Oration without interruption; for Panormitane oftentimes interrupting him, went about to confute now this, and now that reaſon. Whereupon the Biſhop of Argen riſing up, a man not only eloquent, but alſo of a ſtout courage, troubled Panormitane in his reaſons and arguments, and put him from his purpoſe; yet they proceeded ſo far, that they paſſed the manner of diſputation, and did not abſtain from opprobrious taunts.

Panormitane appointeth the Pope Lord of the Church.

When the Biſhop of Argen chanced to ſay that the Biſhop of Rome ought to be the Miniſter of the Church, Panormitane could not ſuffer that: inſomuch that he ſo forgot himſelf that day, and his knowledg (which otherwiſe was great) did ſo fail him, that he was not aſhamed to ſay and affirm, that the Pope was Lord over the Church. Whom Segovius anſwered, Mark (ſaith he) O Panormitane, what thou ſayeſt; for this is the moſt honourable title of the Biſhop of Rome, wherein he calleth himſelf the Servant of the Servants of God. Which is gathered upon this point, when as Chriſt ſaid unto his Diſciples, when they demanded of him which of them was the greateſt, you know he anſwered them, The Princes of the people have rule and dominion over them, but amongſt you it is not ſo, &c. Wherein he doth utterly prohibit Lordſhip and Dominion; and Peter which was the firſt Vicar of Chriſt ſaid, Feed the flock of Chriſt which is committed unto you, providing for them not by compulsion, but willingly; and immediately after he said, not as Lords over the Clergy. For if Christ the Son of God came not to be ministred unto, but to minister and to serve, how then can his Vicar have any Dominion, or be called Lord, as you Panormitane will affirm? forsomuch as his Disciple is not above his Master, nor the Servant above his Lord. And the Lord himself saith, Be ye not called Masters, forsomuch as your only Master is Christ, and he which is the greatest among you shall be your servant. Panormitane being somewhat disquieted with this answer, the Council brake up and departed.

The Pope and the Clergy deſire Dominion contrary to the Scriptures.

The French Kings Embassador.

The next day there was a General Congregation, and they returned all again unto the Chapter-house after Dinner, where the Archbishop of Lions, the Kings Orator, being required to speak his mind, after he had by divers and sundry reasons, proved Eugenius to be an Heretick, he bitterly complained, detesting the negligence and ignavy of those that had preferred such a Man unto the Papacy, and so moved all their hearts which were present, that they all together with him did bewail the calamities of the Universal Church.

The Bishop of Burgen.

Then the Bishop of Burgen, the Embassador of Spain, divided the Conclusions into two parts, some he called general, and otherforme personal, disputing very excellently as touching the three first Conclusions, affirming, that he did in no point doubt of them, but only, that the addition, which made mention of the faith, seemed to be doubtful unto him. But upon this point he stayed much, to prove that the Council was above the Pope. The which, after he had sufficiently proved both by Gods law, and mans law, he taught it also by physical reason, alledging Aristotle for witness. He said, That in every well ordered Kingdom it ought especially to be desired, that the whole Realm should be of more authority than the King; which if it happened contrary, it were not to be called a Kingdom, but a Tyranny: so likewise doth he think of the Church, that it ought to be of more authority than the Prince thereof, that is to say, the Pope. The which his Oration he uttered so eloquently, learnedly and truly, that all men depended upon him, and desired rather to have him continue his Oration, than to have an end thereof.

The Councel above the Pope.

The force of truth which appeared also in Rome himself the Writer hereof, although afterward when he was Pope, he denied the same.

But when as he entred into the other Conclusions, he seemed to have forgotten himself, and to be no more the same man that he was; for neither was there that same eloquence in his words, neither gravity in Oration, or cheare, fulness of countenance; so that if he could have seen himself, he would peradventure greatly have marvelled at himself. Every man might well see and perceive then the power and force of the truth, which minished Copy of matter unto him, so long as he spake in the defence thereof. But when as he began once to speak against her, he took away even his natural eloquence from him. Notwithstanding Panormitane, and the Bishop of Burgen, shewed this example of modesty, that albeit they would not confess or grant the last Conclusions to be verities of Faith: yet they would not that any man should follow or lean unto their opinion, which were but mean Divines: but rather unto the Opinions of the Divines. But the King of Arragon's Almoner, being a subtil and crafty man, did not directly dispute upon the Conclusions, but picking out here and there certain Arguments, sought to let and hinder the Council. Against whom an Abbot of Scotland, a man of an excellent wit, disputed very much; and Thomas de Corcelles, a famous Divine, alledged much against him out of the Decrees of the sacred Council, and with a certain modest shamefastness, always beholding the ground, did very largely dispute in the defence of the Conclusions.

Note what it is for a man to labour against his knowledge.

But now to avoid tediousness, I will only proceed to declare Arguments whereby the Conclusions were ratified and confirmed, not minding to intreat of the five last Conclusions, which concern the person of Eugenius, but only upon the three first, whereunto I will adjoyn certain probable Arguments, gathered out of the disputation of the Fathers. In the first Conclusion is the greatest force, and first to be discussed; touching the which, two things are to be required and examined. The one, Whether the General Council have authority over the Pope. The other, Whether the Catholick Faith commandeth it to be believed. As touching that the Pope is subject to the General Council, it is excellently well proved by the reason before alledged by the Bishop of Burgen. For the Pope is in the Church, as a King in his Kingdom; and for a King to be of more authority than his Kingdom, it were too absurd: Ergo, neither ought the Pope to be above the Church. For like as oftentimes Kings which do wickedly govern the Commonwealth, and exercise cruelty, are deprived of their Kingdoms; even so, it is not to be doubted, but that the Bishops of Rome may be disposed by the Church, that is to say, by the General Councils.

The Conclusions of the Disputation.

The first Conclusion.

A King is not of more authority than is his Kingdom.

Neither do I herein allow them which attribute so ample and large authority unto Kings, that they will not have them bound under any Laws; for such as so do say, be but flatterers, which do talk otherwise than they think. For albeit that they do say, that the moderation of the Law is alway in the Princes power; that do I thus understand, that when as reason shall perswade, he ought to digress from the rigour of the Law; for he is called a King, which careth and provideth for the Commonwealth, taketh pleasure in the commodity and profit of his Subjects, and in all his doings hath respect to the commodity of those over whom he ruleth; which if he do not, he is not to be counted a King but a Tyrant, whose property it is, only to seek his own profit; for in this point a King differeth from a Tyrant, that the one seeketh the commodity and profit of those whom he ruleth, and the other only his own. The which to make more manifest, the cause is also to be alledged wherefore Kings were ordained.

The interpretation of this place, Oravi pro te Petre, is meant of the Church.

Those kind of flatterers came more to our days.

What a King is.

At the beginning (as Cicero in his Offices saith) it is certain, that there was a certain time when as the People lived without Kings. But afterward, when Lands and Possessions began to be divided according to the custom of every Nation, then were Kings ordained for no other cause, but only to exercise justice. For when as at the beginning, the common people were oppressed by rich and mighty men, they ran by and by to some good and vertuous man, which should defend the poor from injury, and ordain Laws whereby the rich and poor might dwell together. But when as yet under the rule of Kings, the poor were oftentimes oppressed, Laws were ordained and instituted, the which should judge neither for hatred nor favour, and give like ear unto the poor as unto the rich; whereby we do understand and know, not only the People, but also the King to be subject to the Laws. For if we do see a King to contemn and despise the Laws, violently rob and spoil his Subjects, defloure Virgins, dishonest Matrons, and do all things licentiously and temerariously; do not the Nobles of the Kingdom assemble together, deposing him from his Kingdom, set up another in his place, which shall swear to rule and govern uprightly, and be obedient unto the Laws? Verily as reason doth perswade, even so doth the use thereof also teach us. It seemeth also agreeable unto reason, that the same should be done in the Church, that is to say, in the Council, which is done in any Kingdom. And so is this sufficiently apparent, which we have before said, that the Pope is subject unto the Council.

The Pope ought to be subject unto the Council.

But now to pass unto the Arguments of Divinity, the foundation of the matter which we do intreat upon, are the words of our Saviour Jesus Christ in divers places, but especially where as he speaketh unto Peter, Tu es Petrus, & super hanc Petram ædificabo Ecclesiam meam, & portæ inferni non prævalebunt adversus eam; that is, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church, and the gates of Hell shall not prevail against it. Upon which words it seemeth good to begin this Disputation, forsomuch as some were wont to alledge these words, to extol the authority of the Bishop of Rome. But (as it shall by and by appear) the words of Christ had another sense and meaning than divers of them do think; for he saith, And the gates of Hell shall not prevail against it. Verily this is a great promise, and these words of the Lord are of great importance. For what greater word could there have been spoken, than that the gates of Hell should not prevail against the Church? These gates of Hell, as St. Jerome saith, do signifie sins. Wherefore, if sins cannot prevail against the Church, neither can any malign spirits prevail against the same, which have no power at all over Mankind, but only through sin. And for that cause, whereas it is said in Job, that there is no power upon the earth that may be compared unto the power of the malign spirit, thereby it followeth, that the power of the Church is above all other power.

This place Tu es Petrus expounded.

Sins are the gates of Hell.

We

{KING} Hist. 6. 3. Against the opinion, that the Pope cannot err.

We may also upon the same saying, reason after another sort; forsomuch as the gates of Hell, that is to say, sins, cannot prevail against the Church, the Church thereby is declared to be without sin; the which cannot be spoken of the Pope which is a mortal man, forsomuch as it is written, Seven times in the day the just man doth offend. If the Church be without spot because it cannot be defiled with sin, who is it that will prefer a sinful man before an undefiled Church? Neither let us give ear unto those which will not refer these words of Christ unto the Church, whereas he saith, Oravi pro te Petre, ut non deficiat Fides tua, that is to say, Peter I have prayed for thee, that thy Faith should not fail thee. For as S. Augustine saith in the Exposition of the Psalms, Certain things are spoken as though they seemed properly to pertain unto the Apostle Peter, notwithstanding, they have no evident sense, but when they are referred unto the Church the person whereof he is understood figuratively to represent. Whereupon in another place in the questions of the Newe and Old Testament, upon the words, Rogavi pro te Petre, I have prayed for thee Peter; what is doubted? Did he pray for Peter, and did he not pray for James and John, beside the rest? It is manifest, that under the name of Peter all others are contained. For in another place of S. John, he saith, I pray for them whom thou hast given me, and I will that wheresoever I am, they shall be also with me. Whereupon we do oftentimes by the name of Peter understand the Church, which we do nothing at all doubt to be done in this place; otherwise the truth could not consist, forsomuch as within a while after, the Faith of Peter failed for a time, by the denial of Christ, but the Faith of the Church, whose person Peter did represent, did always persevere inviolate.

The Church one flesh with Christ.

The Church is without spot or sin, is to be understood not by nature, but only by imputation.

The Church without spot now to be understood.

The error of those which says that only the Virgin Mary did persevere constant at the time of Christs Passion.

Bishops of Rome are Hereticks. He meaneth Silvester the second.

As touching the Bishops of Rome, if time would suffer us, we could rehearse many examples, how that they either have been Hereticks, or replenished with other vices. Neither are we ignorant, how that Marcellinus at the Emperors commandment, did sacrifice unto Idols, and that another (which is more horrible) did attain unto the Papacy by devilish fraud and deceit. Notwithstanding, the testimony of Paul unto the Hebrews shall suffice us at this time, who saith, that every Bishop is compassed in with infirmity, that is to say, with wickedness and sin. Also the testimonies of Christ himself do approve that the Church remaineth always without sin; for in Matthew he saith, I am with you even unto the end of the World. The which words were not only spoken to the Apostles (for they continued not unto the end of the world) but also unto their successors; neither would Christ then signifie that he was God, dispersed throughout all the world, as he is also perceived to be amongst sinners, but would declare a certain gift of grace through his affistance, whereby he would preserve the holy Church, consisting amongst his Apostles and their successors, always immaculate and undefiled.

The Church is without fail, and the Pope is a sinner.

The institution of Kings.

And again in another place, I (saith he) will pray, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may remain with you for ever, even the Spirit of Truth whom the world cannot receive, because the world seeth him not, neither knoweth him, but you shall know him, because he shall remain with you. The which words being spoke unto the Disciples of Jesus, are also understood to be spoken unto their successors, and so consequently unto the Church. And if the spirit of truth be continually in the Church, no man can deny but that the Church ought to continue undefiled. By the same authority also that Christ is called the Spouse of the Church, who seeth not but that the Church is undefiled? For the Husband and the Wife (as the Apostle saith) are two in one flesh, and (as he doth also add) no man hateth his own flesh; thereby it cometh to pass, that Christ cannot hate the Church, forsomuch as she is his Spouse, and one flesh with him, and no man can hate himself; Ergo, the Church doth not sin; for if it did sin, it should be hated, for sinners the Lord doth hate. The which authorities being gathered together, we ought with the Apostle, to confess that the Church of God hath neither spot nor wrinkle. Also he writing unto Timothy, affirmeth the Church to be the pillar and foundation of the truth; whereupon in this Song to the Spouse it is said, My friend thou art altogether fair and beautiful, neither is there any spot in thee. These words peradventure, may abash some; that I do go about to prove the Church to be without sin. For when as the Church doth contain all Men which are called Christians, which also do agree and come together in one belief of Faith, and participation of the Sacraments, I do fear left some men will think, that I do affirm all men to be without sin; which is so far from my meaning, that I do verily think the contrary to be most true. For I suppose, that there is no man in the Church, being clothed in this mortal flesh, without sin. Neither do these things vary or differ among themselves; for the Church hath this gift, that albeit every part and member thereof may sin, yet the whole body cannot sin. For there be always good men in the Church, the which, albeit that they be subject unto humane fragility, notwithstanding they have so perfect a gift of sincere and pure vertue, that subduing all carnal desires and affections, they keep themselves a pleasant and acceptable Sacrifice unto God. Neither do I consent or agree unto the opinion of divers which affirm that the Virgin Mary only persevered in Faith at the Lords Passion. Whereupon divers have not been ashamed to say, that the faith might be so debilitate and weakned, that it should return to one only old Woman, whose opinion, or rather madness, St. Paul seemeth openly to reject, writing thus unto the Romans, Do ye not know (saith he) what the Scripture writeth of Helias, how incessantly he called upon God against the Children of Israel, (saying) O Lord, they have slain thy Prophets, and digged down thine Altars, and I alone am left, and they seek after my soul: But what answer received he of God? I have left unto my self yet seven thousand men, which have not bowed their knees unto Baal. What other thing doth this answer of God declare, than that it is a foolish opinion of them which think the Church of God to be brought unto so small a number? We ought to believe the words of Christ, which are altogether repugnant unto those men, who affirm, that the Virgin only did persevere in faith. For Jesus said unto his Father, O holy Father, save them in thy Name whom thou hast given me, that they may be one as we are one. When I was with them, I kept them in thy Name: I have kept them that thou gavest unto me, and none of them perished, but only the son of perdition. And I do not desire that thou shouldest take them out of the World, but that thou shouldest preserve them from evil.

This is not to be translated, and also severeth the one from another more than is meet.

Behold, Christ prayeth that his Disciples should not fall, but should be preserved from evil, and he so praying, without doubt is heard; for he saith in another place, I know that thou hearest me. But how is he heard, if all those for whom he prayeth, forsware at the time of his Passion? As for example, by what means did Christ hanging upon the Cross, commend his dearly beloved Mother unto John, if so be he were either then forsworn, or should by and by after have forsworn from the Faith? Moreover, did not the Centurion by and by cry out and say, truly this is the Son of God? The Jews also which at that time were far distant from Jerusalem, might both be called faithful, and also saved by their faith; seeing that (as the Apostle saith) men are bound unto the Gospel, after it is once known and revealed unto them. But let us leave these men, and speak of that which is more likely, and let us judge that there hath been, and is a great number of good men in the Church, and by them, as by the more worthy part, let us name the Church holy and immaculate, the which doth comprehend as well the evil as the good. For the Church is compared unto a Net which is cast into the Sea, and gathered together all kind of Fithes.

The Church sometime receiveth both the evil and good. Mat. 20.

And again, it is compared unto a King, which made a Marriage for his Son, and sent forth his Servants to call those which were bidden unto the Wedding, and they gathered together good and evil, as many as they could find. Wherefore, their opinion is erroneous, which affirm, that only good men be comprehended in the Church; the which, if it were true, it would confound all things, neither could we understand or know where the Church were. But forsomuch as the Scripture saith, no man knoweth whether he be worthy of love or hatred, their opinion is more to be allowed and truer, which include all the faithful in the Church; of whom, although a great part be given to voluptuousness and avarice, yet some notwithstanding, are clean from deadly sin. The which part, as it is the most worthy, it giveth the name unto the Church, to be called most holy; holy; which is so often done, that we are commanded to sing in our Creed, unam sanctam Catholicam & Apostolicam Ecclesiam, that is to say, one holy Catholick and Apostolick Church; the which Article the Synod of Constantinople added unto the rest; wherefore if the Church be holy, it is also without sin. But to return to our former purpose, this word Sanctum, which signifieth holy (as Macrobius alledging Trebatius, affirmeth) is sometimes taken for religious, and sometimes for clean and uncorrupt. And after the same manner, we call the Church holy, as the Apostle Peter calleth it immaculate, as we read in the famous Epistle of Clement.

To this end also tendeth that which is spoken by Saint Paul, That Christ is the Head of the Church; for if the Church should wholly sin, the should not agree with her Head Christ, who is in no point defiled. This also Christ himself would signifie unto us in Matthew, when he commendeth the House which was builded upon the strong Rock, against the which, neither the Winds, neither the Storms could prevail. Is the house of God (saith the Apostle) which is the Church, builded upon the Rock, which Rock (as the Apostle declareth) is Christ. Who then is so unthankfull, that he will affirm the Church, which is founded upon Christ, to be subject to sin? And will not rather cry out with the Prophet, and say, Domine, dilexi decorum domus tuæ; that is to say, O Lord, I have loved the beauty of thy house? Hereupon wrote John Chrysostome this Golden Sentence, The Church never ceaseth to be assaulted, never ceaseth to be laid in wait for; but in the name of Christ it hath always the upper hand, and overcame. And albeit that others do ly in wait for it, or that the floods do beat against it, yet the foundation which is laid upon the Rock is not shaken. Saint Hilary also saith, That it is the property of the Church to vanquish when it is hurt, to understand when it is reproved, to be in safety when it is forsaken, and to obtain victory when as it seemeth almost overcome. Thus by many reasons and testimonies, it is proved that the Church doth not err; which is not spoken or affirmed of the Bishops of Rome, so that this reason doth make the Pope subject unto the Church; for it is convenient, that the less perfect be subject unto the more perfect. There be also many other testimonies and reasons, whereof we will now forbear what more intreat.

Christ is the Rock whereupon the Church is builded.

If authority be sought for, saith Saint Jerome (for I willingly occupy my self in his sentences, as in a most fertile field) the World is greater than a City. What then I pray you Jerome? Is the Pope mighty because he is Head of the Church of Rome? His authority is great, notwithstanding the Universal Church is greater, which doth not only comprehend one City, but also the whole World. Hereupon it followeth, that if the Church be the Mother of all faithful, then the hath the Bishop of Rome for her son; otherwise, as Saint Augustine saith, he can never have God for his Father, which will not acknowledge the Church for his Mother. The which thing Anacletus understanding, called the Universal Church his Mother, as the Writers of the Canons do know. And Calixtus saith, As a Son he came to do the will of his Father, so we do the will of our Mother, which is the Church. Whereby it appeareth, that how much the Son is inferiour to the Mother, so much the Church is superiour or above the Bishop of Rome.

We proveth by authority the Pope to be under the Council.

If the Church be the Mother, the Pope must be her Son.

Also we have said before, that the Church was the Spouse of Christ, and the Pope we know to be a Vicar; but no man doth so ordain a Vicar, that he maketh his Spouse subject unto him, but that the Spouse is always thought to be of more authority than the Vicar; forsomuch as she is one body with her Husband, but the Vicar is not so. Neither will I here pass over the words of St. Paul unto the Romans, Let every soul (saith he) be subject unto the higher powers. Neither doth he herein except the Pope. For albeit that he be above all other men, yet it seemeth necessary that he should be subject to the Church. Neither let him think himself hereby exempt, because it was said unto Peter by Christ, Whatsoever thou bindest, &c. In this place, as we will hereafter declare, he represented the Person of the Church, for we find it spoken afterward unto them that is, Whatsoever ye shall bind upon earth, shall be also bound in Heaven. And furthermore, if all power be given of Christ, as the Apostle writeth unto the Corinthians, it is given for the edifying of the Church, and not for the destruction thereof; why then may not the Church correct the Pope, if he abuse the Keys, and bring all things unto ruine?

The Church being the Spouse, the Pope cannot be the Head thereof, but he must also be the Head of Christ, forsomuch as Christ and his Spouse be both one.

The exposition of this place, Quodcunque ligaveritis super terram, ligatum erit in cœlis.

Add hereunto also another Argument. A Man in this life is lesser than the Angels, for we read in Matthew of John Baptist, that he which is least in the Kingdom of Heaven is greater than he. Notwithstanding Christ saith in another place, that amongst the children of women, there was not a greater than John Baptist. But to proceed, Men are forced, by the example of Zacharias, to give credit unto Angels, left through their misbelief, they be stricken blind as he was. What more? the Bishop of Rome is a Man: Ergo, he is less than the Angels, and is bound to give credit to the Angels. But the Angels learn of the Church, and do reverently accord unto her Doctrine, as the Apostle writeth unto the Ephesians: Ergo, the Pope is bound to do the same, who is less than the Angels, and less than the Church, whose authority is such, that worthily it is compared by Saint Augustine unto the Sun; that like as the Sun by his light doth surmount all other lights, so the Church is above all other authority and power. Whereupon Saint Augustine writeth thus, I would not believe the Gospel, saith he, if the authority of the Church did not move me thereunto: the which is not in any place found to be spoken of the Bishop of Rome, who representing the Church, and being Minister thereof, is not to be thought greater or equal to his Lord and Master. Notwithstanding, the words of our Saviour Christ, do specially prove the Bishop of Rome to be subject to the Church, as we will hereafter declare. For he sending Peter to preach unto the Church, said, Go, and say unto the Church. To the confirmation of whose authority, these words do also pertain, He that heareth you, heareth me. The which words are not only spoken unto the Apostles, but also unto their successors, and unto the whole Church.

How foolishly the Church of Rome doth weresh the Scriptures, neglecting the expositions of the Fathers.

The Church and not the Pope compared to the Sun.

Whereupon it followeth, that if the Pope do not hearken and give ear unto the Church, he doth not give ear unto Christ, and consequently he is to be counted as an Ethnick and Publican. For as Saint Augustine affirmeth, when as the Church doth excommunicate, he which is so excommunicate, is bound in Heaven, and when the Church looseth he is loosed. Likewise, if he be an Heretick which taketh away the Supremacy of the Church of Rome, as the Decrees of the Council of Constance do determine, how much more is he to be counted an Heretick which taketh away the authority from the Universal Church, wherein the Church of Rome and all other are contained? Wherefore it is now evident, that it is the opinion of all men before our days (if it may be called an opinion, which is confirmed by grave Authors) that the Pope is subject unto the Universal Church. But this is called into question, whether he ought also to be judged of the General Council. For there are some, which (whether it be for desire of vain glory, or that through their flattery they look for some great reward) have begun to teach new and strange Doctrines, and to exempt the Bishop of Rome from the Jurisdiction of the General Council. Ambition hath blinded them, whereof not only this present Schism, but also all other Schisms, even unto this day have had their original. For as in times past the greedy desire and ambition of the Papacy, brought in that pestiferous Beast, which through Arrius then first crept into the Church; even so they do especially nourish and maintain this present Heresie which are not ashamed to beg. Of the which number, some cry out and say, the works of the Subjects ought to be judged by the Pope, but the Pope to be referred only unto the Judgment of God. Others said, that no man ought to judge the high and principal Seat, and that it cannot be judged either by the Emperor, either by the Clergy, either by any King or People. Other affirm, that the Lord hath reserved to himself the depositions of the chief Bishop. Others are not ashamed to affirm, that the Bishop of Rome, although he carry souls in never so great number unto Hell, yet he is not subject unto any correction or rebuke.

He is to be feared Christ hath had many such Popes.

Whither the Pope is to be judged by the General Council, &c.

These are the Canons and the School Divines, and begging Friers.

Diversity of judgments touching the Bishop of Rome.

And

KING 1. Hen. 6. The Church may depose the Pope, if he abuse the Keys.

And because these their words are easily resolved, they run straightways unto the Gospel, and interpret the words of Christ; not according to the sense and meaning of the Holy Ghost, but according to their own will and disposition. They do greatly esteem and regard this which was spoken unto Peter, Tu vocaberis Cephas: that is, Thou shalt be called Cephas; by the which word they make him the Head of the Church. Also, I will give thee the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt bind upon the earth, &c. I have prayed for thee Peter, that thy faith should not fail. And again, Feed my Sheep; Cast thy Net into the deep; Be not afraid, for from henceforth thou shalt be a fisher of men: Also that Christ commanded Peter, as the Prince of the Apostles, to pay Toll for them both; and that Peter drew the Net into the Land full of great Fishes; and that only Peter drew out his sword for the defence of Christ. All which places these men do greatly extol, altogether neglecting the Expositions of the Fathers; the which if (as reason were) they would consider, they should manifestly perceive, by the authorities aforesaid, that the Pope is not above them, when they are gathered together in Council, but when they are separate and divided.

But these things being passed over, forsomuch as answer shall appear by that which hereafter shall follow, we will now declare what was resolved of by the learned men upon this question. But first we would have it known, that all men, which are of any name or estimation, do agree, that the Pope is subject to the Council, and for the proof thereof they repeat (in a manner) all those things which were before spoken of the Church; for they suppose all that which is spoken of the Church, to serve for the General Council. And first of all they alledge this saying of the Gospel, Die Ecclesiæ, Tell it unto the Church. In the which place it is convenient to understand, that Christ spake unto Peter, instructing him what he should do as touching the correction of his brother. He saith, If thy brother offend or sin against thee, rebuke him between thee and him alone. If he give ear unto thee, thou hast won thy brother; but if he do not give ear unto thee, take with thee one or two, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses all truth may stand: if then he will not give ear unto thee, Die Ecclesiæ, Tell it unto the Church.

Those things were spoken of the Church, serve also for the General Council.

The Pope do not hearken to the Church, is an Ethnick and Publican.

What shall we understand by the Church in that place? Shall we say that it is the multitude of the faithful dispersed throughout the whole World? My yoke is pleasant, saith the Lord, and my burden is light. But how is it light, if Christ command us to do that which is impossible to be done? For how could Peter speak unto the Church which was dispersed, or to seek out every Christian scattered in every Town or City? But the meaning of these words is far otherwise, and they must be otherwise interpreted; for which cause, it is necessary that we remember the double person which Peter represented, as the person of the high Bishop, and a private man. The sense and meaning of his words are evident and plain enough of themselves, that they need no supplement or alteration. We must first mark and see what this word Ecclesia signifieth, the which we do find to be but only twice spoken of by Christ; once in this place, and again when as he said unto Peter, Tu es Petrus, & super hanc Petram ædificabo Ecclesiam meam; that is, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church. Wherefore the Church signifieth the convocation or congregation of the multitude. Die Ecclesiæ, tell it unto the Church, that is to say, Tell it unto the congregation of the faithful; the which, forsomuch as they are not accustomed to come together but in a General Council, this interpretation shall seem very good. Die Ecclesiæ, tell it unto the Church, that is to say, Die generali Concilio, tell it unto the General Council.

Peter represenseth a double person.

Christ nameth the Church but twice in the Gospel.

What the Church is.

The interpretation of this place Die Ecclesiæ.

In this case I would gladly hear if there be any man which doth think these words to be more properly expressed in any Prelate, than in the Council, when as they must put one man for the multitude; which if it be admitted in the Scriptures, we shall from henceforth find no firm or stable thing therein? But if any man do marvel at this Interpretation, let him search the old Writers, and he shall find that this is no new or strange interpretation, but the interpretation of the holy Fathers and old Doctors, which have first given light unto the Church, as Pope Gregory witnesseth (a man worthy of remembrance, both for the holiness of his life, and his singular learning) whose words are these, written in his Register unto the Bishop of Constantinople; And we (said he) against whom so great an offence is committed through temerarious boldness, do observe and keep that which the truth doth command us, saying, Si peccaverit in te frater, that is, If thy brother do offend against thee, &c. And afterward he addeth more, If my rebukes and corrections be despised, it remaineth that I do seek help of the Church. The which words do manifestly declare the Church here to be taken for the General Council. Neither did Gregory say, that he would seek help of the Church that is dispersed abroad in every place, but of that which is gathered together, that is to say, the General Council; for that which is dispersed abroad cannot be had, except it be gathered together. Also Pope Nicholas reproving Lotharius the King for adultery, said, If thou dost not amend the same, take heed that we tell it not unto the holy Church.

The Church taken for the General Council.

In the which saying, Pope Nicholas did not say, that he would go throughout the World to certifie every one, man by man; but that he would call the Church together, that is to say, the General Council, and there would publish and, declare the offence of Lotharius, that he which had contemned the Popes commandments, should fear the reverence of the General Council. I could recite an infinite number of witnesses for that purpose, the which all tend unto one end; but this one testimony of the Council of Constance, shall suffice for them all; wherein it is said, that not only the Pope in the correction of his Brother, is remitted unto the Council, when as he cannot correct him of himself; but also when as any thing is done as touching the correction of the Pope himself, the matter ought to be referred to the Council. Whereby it appeareth our interpretation to be most true, which doth expound the Church to be in the General Council. Hereupon in the Acts of the Apostles, the Congregations which were then holden were called the Church. Also in the Council of Nice, and in other Councils, when as many should be excommunicated, always in manner, this sentence was adjoyned, Hanc excommunicat Catholica & Apostolica Ecclesia, i. The Catholick and Apostolick Church doth excommunicate this man. And hereupon that Title is given unto the Councils, whereby we do say, that the General Council doth represent the Universal Church. Wherefore the Laws and Decrees of the Council are called the Laws of the Church, for that the Church doth not set forth any Laws in any other place, but in the General Council; except we will call the Popes Constitutions the Laws of the Church, which cannot be properly said but of the Council; whereas, albeit all these which are of the Church do not assemble and come together, yet the most part of them are accustomed to be there present, and in those which come, the whole power of the Church doth consist. Whereupon we read in the Acts of the Apostles, It pleased the Apostles and Elders with all the Church. For albeit that all the faithful were not there present (because a great number of them remained at Antioch) yet notwithstanding it was called the whole Church, because the whole power of the Church consisted in the Council. Thus for this present it is sufficient that we understand by the Church the General Council.

The Constitutions of the Bishops of Rome, are not the laws of the Church.

The Acts of the Apostles the Council of Nice.

The title of the Councils

By the Church the General is understood.

The Constitution of Honorius concerneth the Pope to be under the Council.

Simon obtained necessary in the Bishops of Rome.

And now to return unto our purpose, let us hear what our Saviour saith unto Peter, If thy brother do offend against thee, unto this Text following, Tell it unto the Church; and let us understand the Council by the Church. Who is greater in this place, he which is sent unto the Council, or the Council whereunto Peter was sent? The verity doth remit the Bishop of Rome unto the General Council. And why so? verily because the Bishop of Rome should not disdain to acknowledge some power in earth to be above them, the which they should consult withal in matters of importance, and agree unto the determinations thereof. Whereupon Peter is also called by another name, Simon; the which, as Rabanus in his Homilies writeth, is interpreted in the Hebrew Tongue, obedience, that all men might understand obedience to be necessary even in the Bishop of Rome.

The authority of the Council of Constance might suffice us in this point; but we think it good to stay a little upon this matter, and to leave no place open for our adversaries; which while they go about to maintain the unsatiable fatiable wilfulness of one man, preferring a private wealth, before a common commodity, it is incredible how great errors they do stirup. Against the which, besides many other, Zacharias Bishop of Chalcedon, a man both famous and eloquent, did earnestly thrive. Who in the great and sacred Synod of Chalcedon, when as the sentence of the Bishop of Rome was objected unto him, that the Canon of Pope Nicholas and other Patriarchs was above the Council, he replied against it. And Zosimus the Pope saith thus, as touching the Decrees of the General Council, The authority of the feat cannot make or alter any thing contrary to the decrees of the Fathers. Neither doth he here speak of the Decrees of the Fathers which are dispersed abroad in Cities or Wilderness, for they do not bind the Pope; but of them which are made and published by the Fathers in the General Council. For the more manifest declaration whereof, the words of Pope Leo, the moit eloquent of all the Bishops of Rome, are here to be annexed, who wrote unto Anatholius, That the Decrees of the Council of Nice are in no part to be violate and broken; thereby (as it were) excluding himself and the high Patriarch.

The favourers and maintainers of the Pope go about to maintain and prefer the prelature and profit of one before a common commodity.

The authority also of Damasus upon this sentence is more manifest, writing unto Arelius the Archbishop, as Isidorus declareth in the Book of Councils, whose worthy saying as touching the authority of the Synod is this, That they which are not compelled of necessity, but of their own will either frowardly do any thing, either presume to do any thing, or willingly consent unto those which would do any thing contrary and against the sacred Canons. they are worthily thought and judged to blaspheme the Holy Ghost. Of the which blasphemy whether Gabriel, which calleth himself Eugenius, be presently partaker, let them judge which have heard him say, That it is so far from his office and duty to obey the General Council. That he saith, he doth then best merit and deserve, when as he contemneth the Decrees of the Council. Damasus addeth yet moreover, For the purpose, saith he, the rulers of the sacred Canons, which are consecrated by the Spirit of God, and the reverence of the whole world, are faithfully to be known and understood of us, and diligently looked upon, that by no mans, without a necessity which cannot be eschewed (which God forbid) we do transgress against any of the Decrees of the holy Fathers. Notwithstanding we daily fee in all the Popes Bulls and Letters, these words. Non obstante, that is to say notwithstanding, which no other necessity hath brought in, than only unsatisfiable desire of gathering of money. But let them take heed to these things which be the authors thereof.

The Pope can abide no General Councils.

Nos adstante is the Popes Bulls.

But now to return again unto Damasus, mention is made in the Epistles of Ambrose Bishop of Millain, of a certain Epistle, which is said to be written by Damasus, unto the Judges deputed by the Council of Capua, where he declareth that it is not his office to meddle with any matter which hath been before the Council. By the which saying, he doth manifestly reprove all those which affirm and say, the Bishop of Rome to be above the Council. The which, if it were true, Damasus might have taken into his hands the cause of Bonosius the Bishop to determine,which was before begun by the Council; but forsomuch as the Council is above the Pope, Damasus knew himself to be prohibited. Whereupon Hilarius also acknowledging the Synod to be above him, would have his Decrees confirmed by the Council. Also the famous Doctor Saint Augustine in his Epistle which he did write unto Glorius and Eleusius, and Felix the Grammarian, declareth the cafe. Cecilianus the Bishop was accused by Donatus, with others. Melchiades the Pope with certain other Bishops, absolved Cecilian, and confirmed him in his Bishoprick. They being moved with those doings, made a Schism in the parts of Africa, S. Augustine reproveth them, which having another remedy against the sentence of the Pope, did raise a Schism, and doth inveigh against them in this manner: Behold, let us think those Bishops which gave judgment at Rome, not to have been good Judges, there remained yet the judgment of the Universal Church, where the cause might have bin pleaded even with the Judges themselves, so that if they were convict not to have given just judgment, their sentence might be broken.

The Council to be above the Pope.

Whereby it appeareth, that not only the sentence of the Pope alone, but also the Pope with his Bishops joyned with him, might be made fruitrate by the Council; for the full judgment of the Universal Church is not found elsewhere but in the General Council. Let not any man doubt, in that S. Augustine seemeth here only to speak of the Bishops, for if the Text of his Epistle be read over, he shall find the Bishop of Rome to be comprehended amongst the other Bishops. It was also prohibited by the Councils of Africa, that the Bishops of Rome should not receive or hear the Appeals of any which did appeal from the Council; which altogether declare the superiority of the Council. And this appeareth more plainly in the Acts of the Apostles, where Peter is rebuked by the Congregation of the Apostles, because he went in to Cornelius a Heathen man, as if it had not been lawful for him to attempt any greater matter without the knowledge of the Congregation; and yet it was faid unto him as well as others, Ite & baptizate, &c. Go and baptise. But this seemeth to make more unto the purpose, which St. Paul writeth unto the Galatians, where he saith, he resisted Peter even unto his face, because he did not walk according to the verity of the Gospel. Which words, if they be well underftood, signifie none other thing, by the verity of the Gospel, than the Canon of the Council decreed amongst the Apostles for the Disciples being gathered together, have so determined it. Whereupon S. Paul doth shew, that Peter ought to have obeyed the General Council.

{KING} 1 Hen. 6. The full judgment of the Church is not to be found but in the General Council.

No appeal to be made from the Council to the Pope.

Acts 31.

Gal. 2. Peter compelled to obey the General Council.

But now to finish this Disputation, we will here adjoyn the determination of the Council of Constance, which Council aforesaid, willing to cut off all ambiguity and doubts, and to provide a certain order of living, declared by a solemn Decree, That all men, of what estate or condition soever they were, yea, although that they were Popes themselves, be bound under the obedience and ordinances of the sacred General Councils. And although there be a certain restraint, where it is said, in such things as pertain unto the faith, the extirpation of schism, and the reformation of the Church, as well in the head as in the members: notwithstanding this amplificative clause, which is adjoyned, is to be noted, Et in pertinentibus ad ea, that is to say, with all the appurtenants. The which addition is so large, that it containeth all things in it which may be imagined or thought. For the Lord faid thus unto his Apostles, Go ye forth and teach all people. He did not say in three points only, but teach them to observe and keep all things whatsoever I have commanded you. And in another place he saith, not this or that, but whatsoever ye shall bind, &c. and by which all together are alledged for the authority of the Church and General Councils. For the preferment whereof these things alfo come in place, He that heareth you, heareth me. And again, It is given unto you to know the mysteries of God. Also, Where two or three be gathered in my name, &c. Again, Whatsoever ye shall ask, &c. O holy Father, save them whom thou hast given me, &c. And I will be with them even unto the end of the World. Also out of St. Paul these places are gathered, We are helpers of God, &c. Which hath made us apt Ministers of the New Testament, &c. And he appointed some Apostles, and some Prophets, &c. In all which places, both Christ and the Apostles, spake of the authority of many, which all together are alledged for the authority of the Universal Church.

The Decree of the council of Constance.

Divers places are referred out of the Gospels and Apostles, for authority of the Church and General Councils above the Pope.

But forsomuch as that Church, being dispersed and scattered abroad, cannot decree or ordain any thing; therefore, of necessity it is to be said, that the chief and principal authority of the Church doth consist in the General Councils where they assemble together. And therefore it was observed in the Primitive Church, that hard and weighty matters were not intreated upon, but only in the General Councils and Congregations. The same is also found to be observed afterward. For when as the Churches were divided, General Councils were holden. And in the Council of Nice we do find the Heresie of Arrius condemned. In the Council of Constantinople the Heresie of Macedonius. In the Council of Ephesus the Heresie of Nestorius. In the Council of Chalcedon the Heresies of Eutychius were alfo condemned; forsomuch as they thought the judgment of the Bishop of Rome not to suffice to so great and weighty matters; and also they thought the sentence of the Council to be of greater force than the sentence of the Pope, forsomuch as he might err as a Man; but the Council wherein so many Men were gathered together, Weighty matters intreated but only in General Councils.

{KING} 1 Hen. 6. ther, being guided with the holy Ghost, could not err. Also it is a very excellent saying of Arsenius the Emperor, which ferveth for that purpose, whose words are these: Truly he is to be counted a wicked and sacrilegious person, which after the sentence of so many good and holy men will stick to withdraw any part of his opinion. For it is a point of meer madness, at the noon-time and fair day light, to seek for a feigned light; for he which having found the truth seeketh to discuss any thing further, seeketh but after vanities and lies.

Whether the Pope may be deposed by the Council or not.

Now I think it is evident enough unto all men, that the Bishop of Rome is under the Council. Notwithstanding some do yet still doubt, whether he may also be deposed by the Council or not: For albeit it be proved, that he is under the Council, yet for all that will they not grant, that he may be also deposed by the Council. Wherefore, it is bad no digreffing at all from our purpose, somewhat to say upon that matter: and first of all, to speak of these Railers which are yet so eamest for the defence of the Bishop of Rome, which being vanquished in one Bartel still rente another, and contend rather of obstinacy than of ignorance. They would have here recited again that which we have before spoken, as touching the preheminence of the Bishop of Rome, or the Patriarch. And as there are many of them more full of words than eloquent, they stay much of this point, where Christ said unto Peter, Tibi dabo claves regni cœlorum; I will give thee the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt bind upon Earth shall be bound in Heaven; as though by those words he should be made Head over the others. And again they do amplifie it by this, Pasce ove meas, Feed my sheep, which they do not find to be spoken to any other of the Apostles. And because it is said, that Peter was the chief and the mouth of the Apostles, therefore they judge it well spoken, that no man shall judge the chief and principal See; being all of this opinion with Boniface, which said, that the Pope ought to be judged for no cause, except he be perceived or known to swerve from the faith, although he do carry innumerable people with him headlong into Hell, there to be perpetually tormented: as though he could open the Kingdom of Heaven to others, if any other could shut it against him: that he could feed other, if he himself lacked pasture.

The places Tibi dabo claves regni cœlorum, Pasce ove meas, make nothing for the Popes supremacy.

The Popes supremacy confuted.

But we count these as things of no force or difficulty. For Saint Augustine in the Sermon of the Nativity of Peter and Paul, saith in this wife, Our Lord Jesus Christ, before his Passion, chose his Disciples, (as ye do know) whom he called brethren. Amongst those Peter alone almost in every place, represented the person of the Church, And therefore it was said unto him, Tibi dabo claves Regni Cœlorum, that is to say, Unto thee will I give the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven. These Keys did he not receive at one man, but as one he received them for the Church. And in another place, where he writeth of the Christian Agony, he faith, The Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven were given unto the Church, when as they were given unto Peter. And when as it was spoken unto him, Amas me? Pasce oves meas, that is to say, Lovest thou me? Feed my Sheep; it was spoken unto them all. And Saint Ambrose in the beginning of his Pastoral, saith, Which sheep and which flock the blessed Apostle Saint Peter took no charge of alone, but together with us, and we altogether with him. By which words the foundation and principal arguments of those flatterers are utterly subverted and overthrown. For if Peter represented the person of the Church, we ought not to ascribe the force of these words unto Peter, but unto the Church. Neither do I see how that can stand which Boniface doth affirm, for it is far distant from the truth, except it be understood otherwise than it is spoken.

Peter reprefenteth the person of the Church, and not of the Pope.

The Keys given to the Church, and not to one man.

Pope Boniface erreth.

But it may peradventure seem a great thing unto some, that it is said the Bishop of Rome to be the Head of the Militant Church. For as in the body of man, Physicians do never give counsel to cut off the Head for any manner of sickness and disease, although it be never so full of Ulcers, or infected: so in this Mystical Body of the Church, the Head ought always to be kept: and albeit it be never so wicked, yet it is to be suffered and born withal. But now convert this Argument, If it were possible in the body of man, when one Head is taken away, to find another to put in his place, as we see it may be done in the Church; should not Heads then be oftentimes changed for divers diseases? Moreover, if we will thus reason, that the Head of the Church should be, in respect of his body, as the Head of Man in respect of the body of Man; then doth it necessarily follow, that the head being dead, the body must also die, as is manifest in the body of man. So should it grow into an absurdity to confess, that the Pope being dead, the Church also should be dead; the which how far it differeth from the truth, it is most manifest. Therefore whatsoever other men fay. I am not of opinion with them, which affirm the Bishop of Rome to be Head of the Church, except peradventure, they do make him the ministerial Head: for we do read that Christ is the Head of the Church, and not the Pope: and that he is the true Head, immutable, perpetual, and everlasting, and the Church is his body, whereof the Pope himself is also a member, and the Vicar of Christ, not to the destruction, but to the maintenance and edifying of the same body of Christ. Wherefore if he be found a damnable destroyer of the Church, he may be deposed and cast out, because he doth not that he was ordained to do; and we ought, as Pope Leo faith, to be mindful of the commandment given us in the Gospel: that if our eye, our foot, or our right hand do offend us, it should be cut off from the body. For the Lord faith in another place, every tree which bringeth not forth fruit, shall be cut down and cast into the fire. And in another place also it is said unto us, Take away all evil and wickedness from among you. It is very just and true which is written in the Epistle of Clement, unto James the brother of our Lord, that he which will be saved, ought to be separate from them which will not be saved.

They doubt which say that the Pope cannot be deposed for any other cause than for heresie.

The Epistle of Clement to James doubted.

But for the more manifest declaration hereof, we must have recourse to that which is spoken by the Lord in the Gospel of John, I am the true Vine, saith the Lord, and my Father is the Husbandman, but ye are the branches: every branch therefore that bringeth not forth fruit in me, my Father will cut off. These words were spoken unto the Apostles, amongst whom also Peter was present, whom the Lord would have cut off, if he brought not forth his fruit. Also saint Jerome upon these words of Matthew, Unsavoury salt is profitable for nothing, but to be cast forth and troden of swine. Whereupon in the person of Peter and Paul he saith thus, It is no base matter to stand in the place of Peter and Paul, and to keep the chair of them which reign with Christ. This unsavoury salt, that is to say, a foolish Prelate, unsavoury in preaching, and foolish in offending, is good for nothing but to be cast forth to be trodden of swine, that is, of wicked spirits, which have dominion over the wicked and naughty Prelates, as their own flock and herd. Behold this testimony of Jerome is plain and evident, Let him be cast out, saith he.

Prelates are branches cut off.

The Pope is unfavoury salt, to be cast away.

A note for all naughty Prelates.

He expoundeth and speaketh it of the Prelate which usurpeth the place of Peter, and so consequently of the Bishop of Rome, who being unsavoury in preaching, and foolish in offending, ought to be depofed (as Jerome affirmeth) from his degree and dignity. Neither as some do dream, is he to be depofed for Heresie only. Isidorus in the Book of Councils, reherseth a certain Epistle of Clement the Successor of Peter, written unto James the Apostle, where the said Clement, referring the words of Peter unto himself, saith thus, If thou be occupied with worldly cares, thou shalt both deceive thy self, and those which of Peter to shall give ear unto thee; for thou canst not fully distribute unto every man those things which pertain unto salvation; whereby it shall come to pass, that thou, as a man for not teaching those things which pertain unto salvation, shalt be depofed, and thy disciples shall perish through ignorance. Notwithstanding in another place, in stead of this word depofed, it is found, thou shalt be punished; which two words, if they be well underftood, do not much differ, for deposition is oftentimes used in the place of punishment. But peradventure some will here object, that this Epistle is not to be judged Clement's, because it is said to be written unto James, who as the Ecclesiastical Historyaffirmeth, was dead before that Peter was put to death. But Clement might think that James was alive, when as he wrote; which were far distant asunder, and Messengers of the Christians came not often unto Rome. Moreover, there is mention made of this Epistle in divers places of the Decretals, as most true, and therefore

The words of Peter to Clement.

It

It shall be nothing from the purpose to rehearse other sayings out of the same Epistle; where he saith, That he which liveth rebelliously, and refuseth both to learn and to do good, is rather a member of the Devil than of Christ, and doth shew himself rather to be an Infidel than a faithful Christian. Upon which words, the Gloss which Panormitane calleth singular, and is much allowed, saith, That if the crime or offence of the Bishop of Rome be notorious, whereby the Church is offended, if he be incorrigible, he may be accused thereof. If then he may be accused, Ergo, also he may be punished, and according to the exigent of the fault deposed; otherwise he should be accused in vain.

The Pope may and ought to be both accused and punished for ill doing.

Now is there no more any place of defence left for our adversaries, but that the Pope may be deposed. Notwithstanding it is not yet evident whether he may be deposed by the Council or no, which we now take in hand to discourse. And first of all the adversaries will grant this unto us; that the Bishop of Rome may be deposed by the Church, forsomuch as the Pope being the Vicar of the Church, no man doubteth but that a Lord may put out his Vicar at his will and pleasure: neither is it to be doubted but that the Pope is more truly called the Vicar of the Church than of Christ. But if the Church may depose the Pope, Ergo, the Council also may do the same. Also the Gloss, which Panormitane in his writing doth so greatly commend, hath this sentence, That the General Council is judge over the Pope in all cases. Likewise the most sacred Synod of Constantinople, which is allowed of all men, doth appoint the Bishops of Rome to be under the judgment of the Council; and the Council to judge and determine of every doubtful matter or question that doth arise concerning the Bishop of Rome. Neither let any man doubt thereof, because this word deposition is not mentioned; for it is said of every doubtful matter or question; for if the Synod do judge of every doubt, Ergo, it shall also judge whether the Pope shall be deposed or not; for that may also come in doubt. And because we will not seek examples far off, John 23. whom all the World did reverence, was deposed and the Church by his manifold crimes, the sacred Synod thought good to depose him; and ever since continually the Church hath proceeded by like example, that their opinion might cease, which affirm, that the Pope cannot be deposed, but only for Heresie.

Whether the Pope may be deposed by the Council or no.

The Pope is rather to be called the Vicar of the Church than of Christ.

Pope John 23. and deposed, and yet for no Heresie.

But here is yet one thing not to be omitted, that certain men do affirm the General Councils to be of no effect, except the Pope do call and appoint them, and his authority remain with them. Whereupon they said, that Legate of Pope Leo, because that he did enterprise, without the authority of the Apostolick See, to call a Council at Ephesus. They also alledge another testimony of the Synod of Chalcedon; where, when mention was made of the Council of Ephesus, all the Bishops cried out, saying, We ought not to call it a Council, because it was neither gathered by the Apostolick authority, neither rightly kept. By the which authorities, they which say that the Councils cannot be holden without the consent of the Pope, do think themselves marvellously armed. Whose sentence and opinion, if it take place and prevail as they define, it shall bring with it the great ruine and decay of the Church. For what remedy shall we find, if that a wicked Pope do disturb the whole Church, destroy souls, seduce the people by his evil example, if finally he preach contrary unto the Faith, and fill the People full of Heresies, shall we provide no stay or stop for him? Shall we suffer all things to run to ruine and decay with him? Who would think that the Bishop of Rome would congregate a Council for his own correction or depolition? for as Men are prone unto sin, so would they also sin without punishment. But when as I do perule ancient Histories, and the Acts of the Apostles, I do not find this order, that Councils should be gathered only at the will of the Pope; for the first Council of all, after that Matthias was substitute in the place of Judas, was not congregate at the commandment of Peter, but at the commandment of Christ, who commanded the Apostles that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but look for the promise of the Father.

Whether Councils may be congregated without the authority of the Pope.

They err that say the Pope ought only to appoint the Councils. Mark wherefore the Popes will have no General Councils.

The first Council of the Apostles

The second Council, as touching the election of the Deacons, Peter alone did not congregate, but the Twelve Apostles, for it is written, The twelve Apostles calling together the multitude, &c. KING Hen. 6. The second Council of the Apostles.

The third Council, which was holden as touching the taking away of circumcision and other ceremonies of the Law, was gathered together by a general Inspiration: for it is written, The Apostles and Elders came together, &c. The third Council of the Apostles.

The fourth Council, where certain things contained in the Law are permitted, seemeth to be gathered by James, and so discourling throughout all, there can nothing be found in the primitive Church, whereby it should appear that the authority of congregating of Councils should pertain only unto Bishops of Rome. Neither afterwards in the time of Constantine Magnus, and other Emperors, was the consent of the Bishops of Rome greatly required to the congregating of Councils; and therefore it is written thus of the Synod of Chalcedon, The sacred and universal Synod gathered together at Chalcedon, the chief City of the Province of Bethulia, according unto the grace of God, and the sanctions of the most godly and Christian Emperor. Valentinian and Martian do not make any mention of the Bishop of Rome, although his consent were there. The fourth Council of the Apostles

Wherefore, if the Pope would resist, and would have no Council congregate, yet if the greater part of the Church do judge it necessary to have a Council, the Council may be congregate whether the Pope will or no. The Council holden at Pisa, was not congregate by the authority and consent of any Pope, when as Gregory did condemn it, and Benedict cursed it. The same also may be said of the Council of Constance, which was assembled by the authority of Pope John, who in respect of the Spaniards was no true Pope. And if the Council of Pisa were no true Council, Pope John was no true Pope; whereupon his consent to the congregation of the Council of Constance was of no effect. Moreover, it is more than folly to affirm, that when the Pope hath once given his consent, if it should be called back, the Council should then cease, for then it is no more in his power to revoke his consent. And of necessity he must be obedient unto the Council whereof he is a member, and give place unto the greater part: and if he separate himself from the consent of the greater part, and depart from the Unity of the Church, he maketh himself a Schismatick. If the greater part of the Church do confirm a Council it may be holden whether the Pope will or no. How the Pope is a schismatick.

Now, to come unto the second conclusion; if it be true, as it is indeed, that the Pope is under the Council, how can the Pope then dissolve, alter and transport the Council, against the will of the same? For with what countenance can we say, that the inferiour hath power over the superiour? How can the Synod correct the Pope, if the Pope may dissolve the Synod contrary to the will thereof? Admit that the Pope be libidinous, covetous, a lover of war and discord, and a most mortal enemy unto the Church and the name of Christ, how can the Council reprove him, if he have authority to dissolve the Council? For alloon as ever that the Bishop of Rome shall understand that in the Council they do intreat or talk of his correction or punishment, straightways he will seek remedy by dissolving the Council. For as Macrobius saith, he that hath liberty to do more than is fit or necessary, will oftentimes do more than is lawful. If so be that the Bishop of Rome may exempt himself from correction by dissolving or transporting the Council, it followeth that the Council is not above him. Therefore we must either deny that which is aboveforsaid, that the Pope is under the Council, or else deny that the Pope hath power to dissolve the Council, contrary to the will and determination of the Council. The Pope cannot dissolve a General Council against the will of the same. The saying of Macrobius.

And as this first conclusion is most true, so are all other conclusions false, which seem to impugn the same. Wherefore the second conclusion of the Divines is also manifest, albeit that some do admit it in certain cases, and in othersome exclude it again. For if we do admit, that for certain causes the Pope may dissolve the Council contrary to the will and determination thereof, that is to say, to make the Pope Judge of the Council, it were clean contrary unto the first conclusion. Whether the Pope in certain cases may dissolve the Council.

Now it is proved that the Council is above the Pope, and cannot be dissolved by the Pope without consent thereof. Now we must further see, whether it be an Article of KING Hen. 6. of our Faith to believe it: which matter hath respect unto the third Conclusion. For these have been many, which albeit they did confess these two Conclusions to be true, yet they doubted whether it were a verity of the Catholick Faith or no. Therefore this second part must be confirmed. And we must see whether it be an Article of Faith that the Pope be under the Council. Which being proved, it shall also appear to be an Article of Faith, that the Pope cannot Dissolve the Council without the consent thereof. Which consequent none of the contrary part hath refuted. First of all therefore we must inquire what Faith is, that we may thereby the better understand what pertaineth thereunto.

The definition of Faith.

Faith, as the Divines do define it, is a firm and stedfast cleaving unto things, believed by the Authority of him that speaketh; If then we believe, as is aforesaid, that the Pope of Rome is under the Council, some authority doth move us thereunto; so is it the Faith of him which believeth it. But the Question is not whether it be an Article of Faith only, but whether it be an Article of the Catholick Faith. Wherefore we must again enquire what the Catholick Faith is. This word Catholick is a Greek word, and signifieth Universal. The Catholick Faith, that is to say, the Universal Faith, is not to called because that every man holdeth it, but because every man ought to believe it. For all men do not believe that God is Incarnate, but every Man ought so to believe. And albeit that many be against this Faith, yet doth it not cease to be Universal. For what writeth the Apostle unto the Romans? If some of them have not believed, doth their misbelief make the Faith of God Vain? God forbid. Verily God is true, but every man is a lyar. Therefore to believe that the Pope is under the Council, is a point of the Catholick Faith, although some think the contrary: for we are bound to believe it, forsomuch as it is taken out of the Gospel. For we are not bound only to believe those things which are noted to us in the Creed, but also all those things which are contained in the Holy Scriptures, whereof we may not deny one jot. And those things which we alledge for the superiority of the general Council are gathered out of the sayings of our Saviour Jesus Christ, and the Epistles of Saint Paul: Ergo, we are all bound to believe it. And to prove that these things are taken out of the Gospel, the Council of Constance doth witness, the which groundeth his authority upon these words, Die Ecclesiæ, that is to say, Tell it unto the Church. And where two or three are gathered together in my name, &c. And, Whatsoever ye shall bind, &c. with other such like texts. The definition of the Catholick faith. Rom. 3 Catholick what it is.

The Council of Constance Vide supra. Whereupon ta Pope Martin the fourth being yet in Constance, under the licence of the Council, sent out his Bulls, which do reckon up the Articles, whereupon they ought to be examined which had fain into any Heresie; amongst the which Articles he putteth this Article; Whether he doth believe the sacred general Council to have power immediately from God, and that the Ordinances thereof are to be received of all faithful Christians; which if any Man would deny, he should be counted an Heretick. Wherefore, when as the sacred Synod of Constance doth set forth this verity, as touching the superiority of the general Council, what should let, but that we also should confess the same to be a verity of the Catholick Faith? For the Catholick Church being Congregate at Constance received that Faith, that is to say, believed it by the authority of him which spake it, that is, Christ and his Saints. Tell the Church, that is to say the general Council.

The words of the Council of Chalcedon, whereby he is declared an Heretick, that holdeth any opinion contrary to the Council. To this purpose also serve very well the words of the Synod of Chalcedon, written in this manner: It is not lawful for him that is condemned by the whole Synod to nominate any Bishop. The determination pleaseth all men. This is the Faith of the Fathers. He that holdeth any opinion contrary unto this, is an Heretick. And again, it is a rule, that it is not lawful to appeal from the elect and chosen Synod.

Mark the manifest witness of this most sacred Synod, which said, that he is an Heretick, which holdeth any opinion contrary unto the Council: But he is no Heretick, except he refuse the Catholick Faith: Ergo, it was the Catholick Faith to believe that it was not lawful to appeal from the sacred Council. But how was the same any point of the Catholick Faith? Verily forsomuch as the sacred Synod, perusing over the Holy Scriptures, hath received this Conclusion out of the words of Christ and other Holy Fathers. And like as the Synod of Chalcedon took their Conclusions out of the Holy Scriptures, so did the Council of Constance, this we now reason upon. And like as the one is an Article of the Catholick Faith, so is the other also. And he which holdeth any opinion contrary to either of both, is an Heretick.

Furthermore they seem unto me to dream and dote, which confessing them to be verities, will not confess them to be verities of Faith. For if they be verities, I pray you whereof are they verities? Truly not of Grammar, much less of Logick; and from Astronomy and Phylick they are far distant. Neither is there any other Man but a Divine, that will grant this verity, whom Scripture doth force unto it of necessity, if he do believe Christ, or his Apostles. Therefore this is a verity of the Catholick Faith, which all men ought to embrace; and he which obstinately resisteth against the same, is to be judged an Heretick, as the third Conclution doth affirm. Neither let any man think it hard or cruel, that he should be called an Heretick, which goeth about to derogate any thing from the power of the general Council, which is confirmed by so many Testimonies and Authorities. Also Panormitane alledgeth Saint Jerome, saying, He which understandeth the Scripture otherwise than the consent of the Holy Ghost doth require, albeit he do not depart from the Church, may be called an Heretick. Panormitane is noted, and very well rejected by his own supposition.

Whereupon it followeth, that he which upon the words of Christ, saying unto Peter, Die Ecclesiæ. i. Tell it unto the Church, doth not understand by the Church the general Council, understandeth it otherwise than the sense of the Holy Ghost doth require, and thereby may be noted as an Heretick. And to prove that the sense of the Holy Ghost is otherwise than he doth judge it, the Council of Constance doth declare: The which interpreting those words, Die Ecclesiæ. i. Tell it unto the Church, spoken by the Holy Ghost, understandeth them to be spoken of the general Council. By these and many other weightier reasons the three aforesaid Conclusions seemed true unto the Divines, and through them they also allowed the residue.

Now have we sufficiently said, as touching that which was before promised: neither do I think any man now to be in doubt of these three first Conclusions. Now to return again unto our Story, it is our purpose to declare those things which happened after the Conclusions of the Divines; for there are many things worthy of remembrance, which also may happily be profitable unto the posterity. Tell the Church, that is to say the general Council.

When the disputation was ended, and a final Conclusion of these matters even at hand, the Archbishop of Millain and Panormitane with the residue of their fellow Ambassadors of the King of Arragon, and Duke of Millain, armed themselves with all their power to let the matter, exhorting all men of their faction to withstand it with stout and valiant stomachs.

And first of all, as soon as the Congregation was assembled together, the Bishop of Burgen exhorted them to defer the Conclusion, and to tarry for the Ambassadors of other Provinces, which would return from Mentz. The Bishop of Burgen.

After him Panormitane, with a grave and Rhetorical Oration, spake (in a manner) as followeth. Panormitane's Oration.

I have (said he) had a Commandment by the Prophet, to cry without ceasing. Which Prophet said; Cry out, cease not, lift up thy voice as a trumpet. If that in any matter at any time before he ought to have cryed, this matter specially which is now in hand lacketh crying and roaring out, when as the state of the Universal Church is intreated upon either to be preferved, or utterly overthrown: and that he hath cryed so much in this manner, that he doubted not but the saying of David was fulfilled in him, where he saith, Laboravi clamans, rauca sunt fauces meæ; I have laboured, crying out, that my jaws are become hoarse.

Notwithstanding that he would, both now, and as often as need should require, without ceasing still cry out, and specially now in this moft difficult and weighty matter; wherein he required the sacred Council gently to hear both him, and the Ambaſſadors of other Princes: Adding moreover four things to be conſidered in all requeſts made of any man. The which he alſo required the Fathers now preſently to mark and conſider: Who it is that maketh the requeſt. What is required. Why it ſhould be required. And what effect would come by the requeſt either granted or denied. As touching the firſt point he ſaid; The moſt noble Kings and excellent Princes with their Prelates to be of great power: and then he reckoned up the King of Caſtile, the King of Arragon, the Duke of Millain, and the Biſhops of the ſame Princes, rehearſing alſo the merits and good deeds of the ſaid Kings, and alſo of the Duke of Millain. But when as he came to make mention of the Prelates, he could not refrain himſelf, but began to wax ſomewhat hot, ſaying, that the greateſt number of Prelates were on his part. For if the Biſhops and Abbots were counted, it were not to be doubted but the greateſt part of them would have this preſent matter deferred: and forſomuch as the whole power of the Council doth conſiſt in the Biſhops, it is not to be ſuffered, that they being neglected and contemned, that ſhould be concluded, which pleated the greater part of the inferiors. For the Keys (ſaid he) were given to the Apoſtles, and to their ſucceſſors which are the Biſhops: alſo that there are three kinds of Synods, Epiſcopal, Provincial, and General, and none of all theſe without Biſhops. Wherefore the manner and order of the preſent Council ſeemed undecent, whereas things were not weighed according as men excel in Diginity, but by moſt voyces: Notwithſtanding, according to the moſt famous Epiſtle of Clement, the Biſhops were the pillars and keys of Heaven, and the Inferiors had no determining voice, but only a conſultative voice with them: wherefore there would be a great offence in this behalf, if a matter of Faith ſhould be determined without the Biſhops; in which matter not only the Biſhops, but alſo the ſecular Princes ought to be admitted. And forſomuch as they in the name of their Princes, deſired to be admitted to the examination of this preſent matter, and would examine the matter more fully, he complained greatly how unworthy a thing it was that they ſhould be contemned or deſpiſed.

Panormitane would have dignity to be conſidered in Council, and not voices.

After many things ſpoken to this end and effect, he paſſed over to the ſecond part of his Oration, declaring what it was that he required; not Gold, nor Silver, neither precious Stones, neither Provinces nor Kingdoms, neither a thing hard to be done; but that only the delay of the ſacred Council was required, and that the Fathers would ſtay in the proceſs againſt the Pope, and in the concluſion and determination of matters which are now in hand. Neither ſhould the delay be long, but only until the return of the Ambaſſadors from Mentz, whom he knew well would return very ſhortly. That this was but a ſmall matter, and needed but ſmall intreaty, becauſe there was no danger in it. And alſo it ſhould ſeem injurious, not to tarry for the Ambaſſadors of the Princes which were then at Mentz, when as they were not abſent for their own private Commodity, but about the affairs of the Commonwealth, and the commodity of peace; neither had he forgotten, that at their departure they had deſired, that during their abſence there ſhould be nothing renewed concerning the matters of Eugenius.

Panormitane ſeemeth to delay the proceſs againſt the Pope.

The third part of Panormitanes Oration.

Then immediately adjoyning the third part of his Oration, wherefore this delay was required, he concluded, that it was not required for the private Commodity of any one Man, but for a Common-wealth; not to caſte any trouble or unquietneſs, but for the better examination of the matter, that all things might paſs with peace and quietneſs, that the matter might be ſo much the more firm and ſtable, by how much it is ratified and allowed by the conſent of many. And ſo he proceeded to the laſt part of his argument, requiring the Fathers that they would conſider, and weigh in their minds the effect that would follow, if they ſhould grant or deny this requeſt. For (ſaith he) if ye ſhall deny this ſmall petition of the Princes, they all will be agrieved therewith, and take this repulſe in ill part. They will ſay, they are contemned of you, neither will they be obedient unto you, or receive your Decrees. In vain ſhall ye make Laws, except the Princes do execute them, and all your Decrees ſhall be but vain: yet would I think this to be born withal, if I did not fear greater matters, to enſue. What if they ſhould joyn themſelves with Eugenius, who deſireth to ſpoil you, not only of your livings, but alſo of your lives? Alas! what ſlaughter and murther do the eyes of my mind behold and ſee? Would God my opinion were but vain! But if you do grant and conſent unto my petitions, they will think themſelves bound unto you; they will receive and imbrace your Decrees; and whatſoever you ſhall require of them ſhall be obtained. They will forſake your adverſary, they will ſpeak evil of him and abhor him; but you they will commend and praiſe, you they will reverence; unto you they will wholly ſubmit themſelves; and then ſhall follow that moſt excellent fruit of reformation and tranquillity of the Church. And thus he required the matter to be reſpited on all parts. At the laſt he ſaid, that except the Ambaſſadors of the Princes were heard, he had a proteſtation written, which he would command to be read before them all.

Proteſtations of Panormitane.

When Panormitane had made an end of his Oration, Lodovicus the Protonotary of Rome roſe up, a Man of ſuch ſingular wit and memory, that he was thought not to be inferior unto any of the famous Men aforetime. Inſomuch that he had always in memory whatſoever he had heard or read, and never forgat any thing that he had ſeen. This man, firſt commending Panormitane, ſaid; that he came but the day before from the Baths, and that it ſeemed unto him a ſtrange thing which was now brought in queſtion; wherein he deſired to hear other mens minds, and alſo to be heard of others, and that thoſe Prelates which were at Mentz ſhould be tarried for, to be preſent at the diſcuſſing of this matter, in the name and behalf of their Princes, which Prelates were men of great eſtimation, and the Orators of moſt mighty Princes.

The praiſe of Lodovicus the Protonotary.

He allowed alſo the ſaying of Panormitane, touching the voices of the Inferiors, that it ſeemeth not to be againſt the truth, that only Biſhops ſhould have a deciding or determining voice in Councils. And albeit that ſome in this diſputation do think that which is written in the 15. Chap. of the Acts to be their force or defence; notwithſtanding, he was nothing moved therewith, nor took it to be of any effect, albeit it was ſaid, it ſeemed good unto the Holy Ghoſt and to us; whereas both the Apoſtles and the Elders were gathered together: whereby it appeared, that the others had a deciding voice with the Apoſtles. For he ſaid, that there was no argument to be gathered of the Acts of the Apoſtles, whoſe examples were more to be marvelled at, than to be followed; and that it doth not appear there, that the Apoſtles called the Elders of Duty, but that it is only declared that they were there preſent; whereupon nothing could be inferred. And that it ſeemed unto him, that the inferiors in the Council of Baſil were admitted to determine with the Biſhops, but of grace and favor only, becauſe the Biſhops may communicate the authority unto others. He alledged for Teſtimony the Biſhop of Concen, a Man of great Authority, who would not ſuffer any incorporation, or fellowſhip of the meaner ſort, and therefore neither any inferior, neither himſelf, which as yet was not made Biſhop, to have any deciding voice in the Council. Wherefore forſomuch as the matter was weighty which was now in hand, and that the Biſhops ſpake againſt it, he required the Council that they would of neceſſity ſtay and tarry for the Ambaſſadors of the Princes coming from Mentz.

Biſhops only to have determining voice in Councils.

His Oration was ſomuch the more grievous, in that many were touched with his words, and ſpecially in that point, that he ſaid the Apoſtles were not to be followed: for that all men did impugn as a blaſphemy. But here a Man may marvel, that a Man of ſuch ſuch excellency alledged no more or better matter. But in this point the memory of the Man is to be pardoned, which did not willingly ſpeak in this matter, and deſired nothing ſomuch, as not to obtain that which he intreated for. After him many other ſpake their minds, but all to this end, that they might protract the time, and defer the concluſion of theſe matters.

It is no marvel why he alledged no more or better matter; for of naughty teachers no man can make a good ſhooe. And more how God withdraweth his gifts, when men diſſemble and ſpeake the truth.

THen Lodovicus the Cardinal Arelatenſis, a Man of marvelous conſtancy, and born for the governance of the general Councils, gathering together the words of all the Orators, ſpake in this wiſe: Moſt reverend Fathers, this is now no new or ſtrange buſineſs, nor begun to day or yeſterday. For it is now many weeks ago ſince the Chri-

{KING} Hiſt. 6. 5 Concluſions were diſputed upon amongſt the Divines, and ſent unto Mentz, and to all other parts of the world. After this they were diſputed upon ſix days continually, and fully diſcuſſed, and after that not without great delay approved by the Deputies; and as the truth ſeeketh no corners, ſo all things were done publickly and openly. Neither can any Man pretend ignorance, neither are the Prelates or Princes contemned. For we called all that were preſent at Baſil, and exhorted all the reſt to be preſent. And forſomuch as mention is made of the moſt Noble King of Caſtile; who is it that is ignorant that the Kings Orators were there preſent? The Biſhop of Burgen and Ebrun, men of ſingular learning and eloquence, and you alſo Panormitan your ſelf, which here repreſent the perſon of the moſt famous King of Arragon, were twice preſent your ſelf in the Chapter-houſe, and diſputed twice moſt ſubtilly, and twice declared your mind, what you thought in that matter. What do you deſire any more? Alſo out of the Territory of the Duke of Millain there was preſent the Archbiſhop of Millain, who alſoeit he be no Ambaſſador, yet how famous a Prelate he is, you are not ignorant. When he had ſpoken theſe words, the Archbiſhop being ſomewhat moved ſaid unto him, My Lord Cardinal, you ſupply the room of a Preſident no better than I do the place of a Dukes Orator, and began to taunt him with many words. But the Cardinal, (as he was a Man moſt patient, and would not be provoked to anger by any means) ſaid, This is it that I even now deſired. For if the Archbiſhop be an Ambaſſador, then hath the Duke no cauſe to complain, which had his Orator preſent at the diſcuſſing of thoſe matters.

Truth ſeeketh no corners.

The patience and Anſwer of Arelatenſis.

I paſs over other Princes, becauſe they do not complain. Notwithſtanding, the moſt Chriſtian King of France, had there the Biſhop of Lions, a grave and ſober Man, his Ambaſſador at the diſputation. As for other Princes, I ſee no cauſe why they ſhould be tarried for, which knowing the Council to be congregate for ſuch matters as pertain unto Faith, do not think it abſurd that the doubtful matters of Faith ſhould be declared in the Council; Whereupon if they had been willing to come, they would have been preſent ere this.

Why this matter ſhould need ſo much diſcuſſing as ſome will have, I do not underſtand. For if I be well remembred, Panormitan and alſo Ludovicus have oftentimes affirmed in this place even the very ſame thing which the Concluſions ſignifie. And if any of them now will go about to gainſay it, it will happen unto them as it did unto Didimus. To whom, when as on a time he repugned againſt a certain Hiſtory as vain and frivolous; his own Book was delivered unto him, wherein the ſame was written: So likewiſe theſe two Men (meaning Panormitan and Ludovicus the Protonotary) although they be excellently learned, and eloquent, yet may they be confuted by their own writings. Beſides this, there are Synodal Epiſtles and Decrees of this Council, which are full of ſuch Concluſions. What is it then whereupon any difficulty can be raiſed? What is it that may be impugned? Shall we now bring that again in doubt, which hath ſo often been declared, affirmed, and decreed? But (ſay they) the Princes and Ambaſſadors are abſent, which are Biſhops, by whoſe preſence the decrees ſhould be of more authority. Well, they are not only abſent which are gone to Mentz, but almoſt an infinite number of others, diſperſed throughout the whole World; whom if we ſhould tarry to look for, nothing at any time ſhould be decreed. They are all called unto the Council; they might have come if they would. To thoſe that are preſent power is given, and they ought to debate theſe matters. If any man will ſay, that they which are abſent are about the affairs of the Common-wealth; truly we ſent them not thither, but they went rather againſt the will of the Council, than with the conſent thereof.

Didimus reprehended that which was in his own Book found.

He meaneth Panormitan and Ludovicus the Protonotary.

And admit that they had been ſent by the Council, yet were not our power ſo much refrained but that we might reform the Church, for otherwiſe there ſhould never any thing be done in the Council: forſomuch as always ſome are ſent out by the Council, and ſome are always to be looked and tarried for, and therefore we muſt either do nothing at all, or ſend out no Prelates from the Council. Whereas he ſaid that Prelates, and eſpecially Biſhops are contemned, that is moſt far from the truth, for they have the chief and firſt places. They ſpeak firſt, and give their voices firſt of all unto all things: and if ſo be they do ſpeak learnedly and truly, all the inferiors without any gainſaying did ſoon follow their mind.

Mark what worldly pomp dignity and wealth had brought the Prelates to in thoſe days.

Neither peradventure ſhall it be found untrue, that there was never any Synod, which did more amplifie the power and authority of Biſhops, than this. For what have the Biſhops been in our days, but only ſhadows? Might they not well have been called Sheepherds without the Sheep? What had they more than their Miter and their Staff, when as they could determine nothing over their Subjects? Verily in the Primitive Church the Biſhops had the greateſt power and authority: but now was it come to that point that they exceeded the common ſort of Prieſts only in their habit and revenews. But we have reſtored them again to their old State: we have reduced the collation of benefices again into them; we have reſtored unto them the confirmation of elections; we have brought again the cauſes of the Subjects to be heard into their hands, and have made them Biſhops which were none before. What cauſe is there then, that the Biſhops ſhould ſay they are contemned of the Council? Or what injurious thing have we at any time done unto them? But Panormitan faith, that forſomuch as moſt Biſhops are on his part, and few againſt him, the Concluſion is not to be determined by the multitude of the inferiors: but let Panormitan remember himſelf, that this is no new kind of proceeding.

Mark O ye Biſhops, the Council of Baſil confeſſeth for you, and ye will not underſtand it.

This order of Proceeding, the Council ordained from the beginning, neither hath it been changed at any time ſince. And this order, Panormitan, in times paſt hath pleaſed you well enough, when as the multitude did follow your mind. But now, becauſe they do not follow your mind, they do diſpleaſe you. But the Decrees of the Council are not ſo mutable, as the Wills of men. Know ye moreover that the very ſame Biſhops which do conſent with you in word, do not conſent with you in mind, neither ſpeak the ſame ſecretly, which they now do openly. They do fear that which you told them at home in their Country, that except they would follow your mind they ſhould diſpleaſe the King. They fear the power of the Prince, and to be ſpoyled of their temporalties; neither have they free liberty to ſpeak as is requiſite in Councils. Albeit if they were true Biſhops, and true Paſtors of ſouls, they would not doubt to put their lives in venture for their Sheep, neither be afraid to ſhed their bloud for their Mother the Church.

This was a fine Cardinal out of thoſe words which the very diſcreet not, but feared not, the threatnings of Princes, neither fought any worldly glory or dignity.

But at this prefent (the more is the pity) it is too rare to find a Prelate in this world, which doth not prefer his temporalties before his ſpiritualties; with the love whereof they are ſo withdrawn, that they ſtudy rather to pleaſe Princes than God; and confeſs God in corners, but Princes they will openly confeſs. Of whom the Lord ſpeaketh in his Goſpel, Every one, faith he, that confeſſeth me before Men, I will confeſs him before my Father which is in Heaven. And contrariwiſe, the Lord will not confeſs him before his Father, which is afraid to confeſs the Lord before men. Neither is it true which Panormitan faith, moſt Biſhops to be on his part; for here are many Biſhops Proctors whom he doth not reckon, becauſe they are not of his opinion. Neither is the Dignity of the Fathers to be reſpected in the Council, as he ſaith, but only reaſon: nor any thing more to be looked for than the truth: neither will I for my part prefer a lye of any Biſhop, be he never ſo rich, before a verity or truth of a poor Prieſt. Neither ought a Biſhop to diſdain, if he be rude or unlearned, that the multitude doth not follow him, or that the voice of a poor learned and eloquent Prieſt ſhould be preferred before his. For wiſdom dwelleth oftner under a bare and ragged Cloak, than in rich Ornaments and Apparel.

Note here the great endlineſs and moſt Chriſtian dying of theſe good Biſhops.

Truth many times dwelleth under the ragged cloke.

Wherefore I pray you my Lord Biſhops, do not ſo much contemn your Inferiors; for the firſt which dyed for Chriſt, the which alſo opened unto all other the way of Martyrdom, was no Biſhop but only a Levite. As for that which Ludovicus and Panormitan do alledge touching the voices of Biſhops, I know not where they have it. Wherefore I deſire them that they would tell me where they have found it. But if we repeat the examples of old Councils, we ſhall find that the Inferiors were always preſent with the Biſhops. And albeit that Ludovicus

Shewn the firſt Martyrs.

do forbid us the examples of the Apoſtles, I ſtay my ſelf moſt upon their doings. For what is more comly for us to follow, than the Doctrine and Cuſtoms of the Primitive Church? It is faid therefore in the 15. Chap. of the Acts of the Apoſtles, It ſeemed good unto the holy Ghoſt, and to us. The which words (to us) is referred unto them which are before named the Apoſtles and the Elders. Whether this word, (it ſeemed good) ſignifieth in this place conſultation, but deciſion and determination; whereby it appeareth that other beſide the Biſhops had determining voices. In another place alſo of the ſaid Acts, when as the Apoſtles ſhould intreat upon a weighty matter, they durſt not determine by themſelves, but the Twelve called together the multitude.

Note the ſincerity of this good Biſhop, which ſtayed himſelf upon the examples of the Primitive Church; and not upon cuſtoms and Popes.

Here Ludovicus faith, that it doth not appear that the Apoſtles called other of neceſſity: But I ſay unto him, how knoweſt thou that they did not ſay unto them of neceſſity? But forſomuch as both parts are uncertain, nothing doth prohibite us to follow the Apoſtles. For ſeeing that all things are written for our learning, it appeareth that the Apoſtles would give us example, that in weighty matters we ſhould admit our Inferiors. And therefore in all Councils which were celebrate and holden afterwards, we find that Priests were alſo preſent: as in the Council of Nice, which of all other was moſt famous, Athanaſius being then but only a Prieſt, withſtood the Arrians and infringed their arguments, albeit there were alſo other Prieſts. And albeit mention be made of three hundred twenty two Biſhops, yet it is not denyed but that the Inferiors were there, whom I think to be omitted for this cauſe, for that they were almoſt innumerable: for as you know well enough, the denomination for the moſt part is taken of the moſt worthy.

Athanaſius being but a Prieſt and no Biſhop, vanquiſhed an Archbiſhop.

In the Synod of Chalcedon (which was counted one of the four principal Synods) it is ſaid that there were there preſent 600 Prieſts; the which name is common both unto Biſhops and Prieſts. In other Councils the name both of Biſhops and Prieſts is omitted, and mention made only of Fathers, which hath the ſame ſignification that this word Elders hath in the Acts of the Apoſtles. We have alſo a Teſtimony of the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, how that there was a Council gathered at Rome of ſixty Biſhops, and as many Prieſts and Deacons againſt the Novatians, which called themſelves Cathari. Alſo, when Paul the Biſhop of Antioch in the time of Galiene the Emperor, Preached that Chriſt was a Man of common nature, the Council aſſembled againſt him in Antioch; whereunto there came Biſhops out of Ceſarea, Cappadocia, out of Pontus, Aſia, and from Jeruſalem, many other Biſhops, Prieſts and Deacons; and it is ſaid, that for that cauſe the Council was often holden.

The name of Prieſts or Elders common both to Biſhops and Prieſts.

Paul Biſhop of Antioch.

And at the laſt in the ſame place, under Aurelius the Emperor, Paul was condemned of all Chriſtian Churches which were under Heaven: neither was there any man which did more confound the ſaid Paul, than Malchion a Prieſt of Antioch, which taught Rhetorick in Antioch. But to make no long digreſſion from the matter, we have moſt evident Teſtimonies for the defence of Inferiors. For the chief and principal amongſt all the Divines, St. Auſten upon the words of Matthew, where Chriſt ſaith to Peter, I will give thee the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, ſaith, That by thoſe words the judicial Power was given not only unto Peter, but alſo to the other Apoſtles, and to the whole Church, the Biſhops and Prieſts. If then Prieſts have a judicial Power in the Church, what ſhould let that they have not alſo a determining voice in the Councils. The famous Doctor Saint Jerom doth alſo agree with Saint Auſten, whoſe words are theſe upon the Epiſtle of Paul unto Titus. Before that difference was made in Religion by the inſtigation of the Divel, or that it was ſpoken amongſt the people, I hold of Paul, I of Apollo, and I of Cephas, the Churches were governed by the common conſent and Council of the Prieſts; for a Prieſt is the very ſame that a Biſhop is. Wherefore all Biſhops ought to underſtand, that they are of greater power than Prieſts, rather by cuſtom than by diſpenſation of the truth of God, and that they ought to rule the Church together. And this we do alſo gather out of Paul unto Titus, which maketh ſo much concordance between Biſhops and Prieſts, that oftentimes he calleth Prieſts, Biſhops; whereby it doth evidently appear, that Prieſts

St. Auguſtines mind upon this ſentence. Tibi dabo claves regni cœlorum.

Biſhops are of greater power than Prieſts, rather by cuſtom than by diſpenſation of truth.

are not to be excluded from the conventions of Biſhops and determinations of matters. Albeit, as Saint Jerom writeth that Biſhops only by cuſtom are preferred before Prieſts, it may be that a contrary cuſtom may take away that cuſtom. For if Prieſts ought to rule the Church together with the Biſhops, it is evident that it alſo pertaineth unto them to decide and determine the doubtful matters of the Church.

{KING Hen.6.} Biſhops and Prieſts ought to rule the Church together.

Wherefore the Teſtimony of Saint Paul is evident; for (as he writing unto the Epheſians ſaith) If Chriſt inſtituted his Apoſtles, Prophets, Paſtors, and Teachers to the work of the miniſtery, for the edifying of his Church, until ſuch time as we ſhould meet him, for this purpoſe, that there ſhould be no doubt in the diverſity of doctrine; who doubteth then, but that the governance of the Church is committed unto others together with the Apoſtles? Let theſe our Champions now hold their peace, and ſeem to be no wiſer than they ought to be. The memorial of the Council of Conſtance is yet freſh in memory, where divers of us were preſent, and I my ſelf alſo which was neither Cardinal nor Biſhop, but only a Doctor, where I did ſee without any manner of doubt or difficulty, the Inferiors to be admitted with the Biſhops, to the deciding of hard and doubtful matters. Neither ought we to be aſhamed to follow the example of that moſt ſacred and great Council, which alſo followed the examples of the Council of Piſa, and the great Council at Lateran, wherein it is not to be doubted, but that the Prieſts did joyntly judge together with the Biſhops.

Æneas Silvius.

Moreover, if Abbots, as we do ſee it obſerved in all Councils, having a determining voice, which notwithſtanding were not inſtituted by Chriſt; why ſhould not Prieſts have the ſame, whoſe order Chriſt ordained by his Apoſtles? Hereupon alſo, if only Biſhops ſhould have a determining voice, nothing ſhould be done but what pleaſed the Italian Nation, the which alone doth exceed all other Nations, or at the leaſt is equal with them, in number of Biſhops. And howſoever it be, I judge it in this behalf to be a work of God, that the Inferiors ſhould be admitted to the determinations; for God hath now revealed that unto little ones which he hath hidden from the wiſe.

Note that Abbots were not inſtituted by Chriſt.

Italy ſurmounteth all other Nations in number of Biſhops.

Behold you do ſee the zeal, conſtancy, uprightneſs, and magnanimity of theſe Inferiors. Where ſhould the Council now be, if only Biſhops and Cardinals ſhould have their voice? Where ſhould the Authority of the Council's be? Where ſhould the Catholick Faith be? Where ſhould the Decrees and Reformation be? For all things have now a long time been under the will of Eugenius, and he had now obtained his wicked and naughty purpoſe, except theſe Inferiors, whom ye now contemn, had withſtood him. Theſe are they which have contemned the privation made by Eugenius. Theſe I ſay, are they which have not regarded his threatnings, ſpoil and perſecution. Theſe are they which being taken, impriſoned and tormented, have not feared to defend the truth of the Council; yea, even theſe are they, who albeit they were by Eugenius delivered over a prey, yet would they ſtill continue in the ſacred Council, and feared not to ſuffer War, Famine, and moſt cruel Peſtilence: and finally, what thing is it, that theſe men have not willingly ſuffered for the right and equity of the Council? You might have heard this Inferior ſort, even in the midſt of their Tribulations, with a loud voice cry out and ſay, Albeit that all Men become obedient unto that Subverter of the Church Eugenius, and that every Man do depart from the verity of the Faith and conſtitutions of the Fathers, conſenting unto the Commandments of Eugenius, yet we and our Brethren will be conſtant, and doubt not to die for the truth and traditions of the holy Fathers, the which indeed they have done. Neither could they be feared with threatnings or diſcouraged with any ſpoils, neither could any fear or hope turn them from their moſt bleſſed purpoſe. And (to ſpeak ſomewhat of mine own order) whether any Cardinals have done the like or no, that judge you.

Note the terrible perſecution of thoſe days, and the great conſtancy of the truths ſake.

O zeal of Faith, worthy the crown of Martyrdom?

As for the Biſhops, whom Panormitan alone would have to determine, you ſee how few of them are on our part, and even they which are here preſent are not able by vertue to overcome iniquity, they fear the Terrene power, and commit offence with their haſt. Have ye not heard how they all faid, they would conſent unto the Kings will and pleaſure? But the Inferiors are they which have had truth, no

The Biſhops of the Primitive Church what they were. Poor men more meet to give judgment than rich: for riches, wealth, and dignity bring fear: but poverty cauſeth liberty.

* The Biſhops in this age of the Church, what they are.

The Biſhops fear the earthly power, but no God.

{KING Hen.6.} righteouſneſs, and God himſelf before their eyes, and they are greatly to be commended for ſhewing themſelves ſuch Men unto the Church of God. But why do I defend the cauſe of theſe Inferiors? When as ſome will alſo exclude thoſe Biſhops which are but Biſhops by name and title, and have no poſſeſſion of the Church, from our company, not underſtanding that whileſt they go about to put back thoſe men, they do condemn Peter, and the other Apoſtles, who (as it is evident) were long without any great flock; neither was Rome unto Peter, nor Jeruſalem unto James, at any time wholly obedient; for at that time no great number of people, but a ſmall flock believed in Chriſt.

For, I pray you, what is that we ſhould enquire of theſe Biſhops? They have no flock; but that is not their fault. They have no revenews: but Money maketh not a Biſhop, and as the Lord ſaith, Beati pauperes ſpiritu, that is, Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit. Neither was their any rich Biſhops in the Primitve Church, neither did the ancient Church reject Dionyſius Biſhop of Millain, Euſebius Biſhop of Vercelles, or Hilary Biſhop of Poictavia, although they were never ſo poor, and baniſhed without a flock. But if we will grant the truth, the poor are more apt to give judgment, than the rich: becauſe that riches bring fear, and their poverty cauſeth liberty. For the poor Men do not fear Tyranny as our rich Men do, which being given over unto all kind of vanities, idleneſs and ſloath, will rather deny Chriſt, than lack their accuſtomed pleaſures; * whom not their flock, but their revenews make Biſhops, delighting ſo much in Riches, that they judge all poor Men unhappy. But, as Cicero ſaith; Nothing can happen better unto a wiſe Man, than the mediocrity of ſubſtance. Whereupon it is written in the Goſpel; It is eaſier for a Camel to paſs thorow a needles eye, than for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of Heaven.

But now to return to a more full Declaration of Panormitans words, I determine to paſs over two points which he propounded in the beginning of his Oration, that is, Qui petant, & cur petant, that is, who maketh the petition, and for what cauſe they make their petition. We grant that they are great Men, and Men of power, and (as he doth affirm) that they have deſerved good of the Church; neither do I doubt but that they are moved thereunto with a ſincere affection. But whether it be a ſmall matter that is required, or that the ſame effects would riſe thereupon which he ſpake of; it is now to be enquired.

The Eighth year of the Council of Baſil. How ſubtilly they fought delays.

The Biſhops fear the earthly power, but no God.

Likewiſe the French-men, after they had taken Rome and beſieged the Capitol, whileſt that they greedily fought to have great ſums of Money, and delayed the time in making of their Truce, Camillus coming upon them did moſt ſhamefully chaſe them out again. But what need I to rehearſe old Stories, when as our own examples are ſufficient for us? Ye know your ſelves how often theſe delays have been hurtful unto you, and how often the delay of a few days hath grown to a long tract of time. For now this is the Eighth year that you have ſpent in delays; and you have ſeen, that always of one delay another hath ſprung and riſen. Wherefore I do require that Panormitan ſhould conſider, that the Conclusion being this day diſturbed, we know not whether it will be

In matters of Faith and Religion, there ought to be no delays.

A delay (faith he) is required; a delay for a few days. A ſmall matter; a matter of no importance, a matter eaſie to be granted. Notwithſtanding, let Panormitan here mark well, that he requireth a delay in a matter of Faith. The verities are already declared; then be already diſcuſſed and determined. If now there ſhould be but a little delay, it would grow to a long delay: for oftentimes the delay of one Moment, is the loſs of a whole Year; hereof we have many examples. Hannibal when he had obtained his Victory at Cannas, if he had gone ſtraight unto Rome, by all Mens judgments he had taken the City. But forſomuch as he did defer it until the next day, the Romans having recovered their force again, he was ſhut out, and deſerved to hear this Opprobry:

Vincere ſcis Hannibal, uti victoria neſcis.

Hannibal thou knowſt H Victory to get,
But how to uſe it thou know'ſt not yet.

brought to paſs hereafter again or no; many impediments or lets may riſe. Neither doth Panormitan lay, that this delay being obtained, he would afterward content with his Fellows unto the Concluſions; for he denyeth that he hath any Commandment thereunto: and (which is more to be conſidered) he ſaith that the Ambaſſadors at their return from Mantz may bring ſuch news, whereby theſe Concluſions may be omitted; as though any thing were more excellent than the truth.

The which thing doth manifeſtly declare, that they do not ſeek delays for the better examination of the matter, but for to impugn the Concluſions the more ſtrongly. Neither do I agree with Panormitan, as touching the effects which he ſaid ſhould riſe either of the denial, or granting of the requeſts; For I ſee no cauſe why the Princes ſhould greatly require and delay. There are no Letters of any Prince come unto us as touching ſuch requeſt, neither is there any Man lately come from them, neither is it greatly material unto them, but that the matters of Faith ſhould be determined. But this is a moſt pernicious Concluſion which Panormitan hath made, and not to be looked for at the hands of thoſe moſt godly Princes; where he ſaith, if we do pleaſe them, they will take our part. If contrariwiſe, they will decline unto Eugenius, and wholly refuſe and rebel againſt us. This is a marvelous word, and a wonderful Concluſion, altogether unworthy to be ſpoken of ſuch a Man. The Decrees of the Council of Conſtance are, that all manner of Men, of what ſtate or condition ſoever they be, are bound to the Ordinances and Decrees of the general Councils. But Panormitans words do not tend to that effect, for he would not have the Princes obedient unto the Council, but the Council to be obedient unto the Princes.

The decrees of the Council of Conſtance.

If theſe things ſeem to unſtable-like, what ſhall we ſay, when as they make the Pope a God?

Alas, moſt Reverend Fathers, Alas, what times and days, what manners and conditions are theſe? Into what miſery are we now brought? How ſhall we at any time bring to paſs, that the Pope being Chriſts Vicar, and (as they ſay) another Chriſt in Earth, ſhould be ſubject unto the Council of the Chriſtians, if the Council it ſelf ought to obey worldly Princes? But I pray you look for no ſuch things at the Princes hands. Do not believe that they will forſake their Mother the Church. Do not think them ſo far alienate from the truth, that they would have juſtice ſuppreſſed.

The Concluſions, whereupon the controverſie is, are moſt true, moſt holy, moſt allowable. If the Princes do refuſe them, they do not reſiſt againſt us, but againſt the Holy Scriptures, yea, and againſt Chriſt, himſelf; which you ought neither to believe, neither was it comly for Pahormitan ſo to ſay. Panormitan (by your licence be it ſpoken) you have uttered moſt cruel words, neither do you ſeem to go about any other matter than to inculcate terror and fear into the minds of the Fathers: for you have reheaſed great perils and dangers, except we ſubmit our ſelves unto the Princes.

They which teach this Doctrine, are Hereticks and Schiſmatick: but bleſſed are they which live Hereticks for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven.

But you moſt Reverend Fathers, ſhall not be afraid of them that kill the body, the ſoul they cannot kill; neither ſhall ye forſake the truth, although you ſhould ſhed your blood for the ſame. Neither ought we to be any whit more ſluck in the quarrel of our Mother Church, and the Catholick Faith, than thoſe moſt holy Martyrs, which have eſtablished the Church with their blood. For why ſhould it be any grievous matter unto us to ſuffer for Chriſt, which for our ſakes hath ſuffered ſo cruel and grievous death? Who when he was an immortal God, void of all Paſſions, took upon him the ſhape of a mortal Man, and feared not for our redemption to ſuffer torments upon the Croſs. Set before your eyes the Princes of the Apoſtles, Peter, Paul, Andrew, James, and Bartholomew, and (not to ſpeak only of Biſhops) mark what Stephen, Laurence, Sebaſtian and Fabian did. Some were Hanged, ſome Beheaded, ſome Stoned to death, other ſome Burned, and others Tormented with moſt cruel and grievous Torments ſuffered for Chriſts ſake. I pray you for Gods ſake let us follow the example of theſe Men. If we will be Biſhops and ſucceed in honour, let us not fear Martyrdom. Alas, what effeminate hearts have we? Alas, what faint hearted people are we? They in times paſt by the contempt of death converted the whole World, which was full of Gentility and Idolatry and we through our ſluggiſhneſs and deſire of life, do bring the Chriſtian Religion

A Chriſtian exhortation to conſtancy and Martyrdom.

This came to paſs about twenty years after, when Chriſtendom loſt Conſtantinople, and all the Eaſt parts unto the Turks.

out of the whole World into one corner; and I fear greatly, left the little alſo which is left, we ſhall loſe through our cowardlineſs, if that by following Panormitans mind, we do commit the whole governance and defence of the Church unto the Princes. But now play the ſtout and valiant men in this time of Tribulation, and fear not to ſuffer death for the Church, which Curtius feared not to do for the City of Rome: which Mencetheus for Thebes, and Codrus for Athens, willingly took upon them.

Examples of good men dying for their Country.

Not only the Martyrs, but alſo the Gentiles might move and ſtir us to caſt off all the fear of death. What is to be ſaid of Theremenes the Athenian? with how joyful heart and mind, and pleaſant countenance, did he drink the poiſon? What ſay you unto Socrates that moſt excellent Philoſopher? did he either weep or ſigh when he ſupped up the poiſon? They hoped for that which we are moſt certain of: Not by dying to die, but to change this preſent life for a better.

Truly we ought to be aſhamed, being admoniſhed by ſo many Examples, inſtructed with ſo great Learning, yea and redeemed with the precious blood of Chriſt, ſo greatly to fear death.

Cato writeth not of one or two men, but of whole Legions, which have chearfully and couragiouſly gone unto thoſe places, from whence they knew they ſhould not return. With like courage did the Lacedemonians give themſelves to death at Thermopylæ, of whom Symonides writeth thus:

Die hoſpes, Spartanos te hic vidiſſe tacentes,
Dum ſanctis Patriæ legibus obſequimur.

Report thou ſtranger, the Spartans here to lie,
Whiles that their Countrey Laws they obeyed willingly.

The noble Lacedemonians.

Neither judge the contrary, but that the Lacedemonians went even of purpoſe unto death; unto whom their Captain Lecnidas ſaid, O ye Lacedemonians, go forward couragiouſly, for this day we ſhall ſup together with the infernal gods. But I, moſt reverend Fathers, do not invite you unto the Infernals, as he did his Lacedemonians, but unto the celeſtial and everlaſting joys of Paradiſe, if that you can ſuffer death for the truths ſake, and patiently abide the threatnings of theſe Princes, if there be any threatnings at all. I call you unto that eternal Glory, where there is no alteration of State, nothing decayeth or fadeth; where all good and perpetual things do abound: where no man wanteth, no man envieth another, no man ſtealeth from another, no man violently taketh from another, no man baniſheth, no man murdereth; and finally no man dieth. Where all men are bleſſed and happy, all The bleſſed ſtate of the Elect to come. are of one mind and one accord, all are immortal, all are of like eſtate; and that all men have, every man hath, and that every man hath, all men have. Which things if we well conſider, we ſhall truly anſwer Panormitan, as Theodorus Cyrenenſis is ſaid to have anſwered Lyſimachus the King, when he threatned to hang him: who ſaid, I pray you threaten theſe horrible things unto your Courtiers: as for The worthy anſwer of Theodorus the Cyrenen-ſis. Theodorus, it maketh no matter whether he rot above the ground, or under the ground. So likewiſe let us anſwer unto the Princes, if there be any that do threaten us, and let us not fear their Torments.

What doth a longer life prevail to help us? No man hath lived too ſhort a time, which hath obtained the perfect gift of Vertue. And if the death which a man ſuffereth in the quarrel of his Country, ſeemeth not only to be glorious amongſt the Rhetoricians, but alſo happy and bleſſed: what ſhall we ſay for theſe deaths which are ſuſtained for the Country of all Countries, the Church? Truly moſt reverend Fathers, it is too much that our Adverſaries do perſwade themſelves of you, for they judge you fearful, fluggiſh and faint-hearted; and therefore they do object Princes unto you, becauſe they think that you will not ſuffer hunger, thirſt, exile in the quarrel and defence of the Church. But I think you will eſteem it no hard matter, for the obtaining of everlaſting life, to do the ſame which Ship-men do for the obtaining of tranſitory riches, to put themſelves in danger of the Sea and Wind, and ſuffer moſt cruel ſtorms.

No death to be feared for Chriſts Church.

Example of Mariners and Hunters.

The Hunters lie abroad in the nights in the Snow, in the Hills and Woods, and are tormented with cold; yet have they none other reward, but ſome wild Beaſt of no value or price. I pray you what ought you then to do whoſe Reward ſhall be Paradiſe? I am aſhamed of your ignavy, when as I read that Women, yea even young Maidens have violently obtained Heaven through their Martyrdom, and we are made afraid only with the name of death. This River of Rheine, which runneth along by the City, in times paſt hath carried eleven thouſand Virgins unto Martyrdom. In India (as Cicero writeth) when any man was dead, his wives (for there they had many wives) came into contention who ſhould be burned with him; and the whom he loved beſt having vanquiſhed the other (all the reſt joyfully following her) was caſt into the fire with the dead Karcaſs of her Husband, and burnt. The other which were overcome, departed full of heavineſs and ſorrow, wiſhing rather to have died than live.

{KING Hen.6.} {KING Hen.6.}

Example of the eleven thouſand Virgins.

The which courage we now taking upon us for Chriſts ſake, will anſwer Panormitan even as the Lacedemonians anſwered Philip, who when as by his Letters he threatned them, that he would ſtop all that which they went about, they aſked him, Whether he would alſo let them to die. Therefore, as you are excellent men, ſo uſe your vertue, which is always free, and remaineth always invincible. For you do know that Power is given of the Lord, and ſtrength from the moſt High; who will take account of your works, and examine your thoughts, unto whom ye ſhould be careful to render a good account, judging rightly and keeping the law of righteouſneſs, and in all things walking according to the will of God, and not according to the will of men.

And whereas the Ambaſſadors of Eugenius do openly preach and declare a new Doctrine, extolling the Biſhop of Rome above the univerſal Church, to the end that ignorant Souls be not ſnared, ye ſhall not ceaſe or leave to publiſh the three firſt Concluſions, following the example of the Apoſtle Paul, which would in no point give place unto Peter when he walked not according to the Goſpel. As for the other matters which do reſpect the only perſon of Eugenius (becauſe Panormitan and the other Ambaſſadors of the Princes ſhall not ſay that we do paſs our bounds) ye ſhall defer them for this preſent.

When as Cardinal Arelatenſis had made an end of this Oration, there was a great noiſe, crying out and brawling every where. The Preſidents Commandments were not regarded, neither was the acciuſtomed order obſerved; for ſometimes they ſpake unto Panormitan, ſometime unto Ludovicus; no man was ſuffered to ſpeak, but in haſte the Biſhops brawled with Biſhops, and the Inferiors with their Fellows. All was full of contention and debate; which even as Ludovicus the Patriarch of Aquileia perceived, a man of no leſs courage and ſtomach, than of nobility and birth, being alſo a Duke, for the zeal that he bare unto the univerſal Church, turning himſelf unto Panormitan and Ludovicus the Protonotary, he ſaid, Do not think the matter ſhall ſo paſs, you know not yet the manners of the Germans, for if you go forward on this faſhion, it will not be lawful for you to depart out of this Country with whole heads. With which words Panormitan, Ludovicus, and the Archbiſhop of Millain being ſtricken (as it were with Lightning from Heaven,) roſe up, and ſaid, Is our liberty thus taken from us? What meaneth it that the Patriarch doth threaten us, that our heads ſhould be broken? And turning themſelves unto John Earl of Dierſtein, which then ſupplied the Protectors place, they demanded of him whether he would defend the Council, and preſerve all men in their liberty, or no?

Lewis Patriarch of Aquileia.

Duke of Bavaria.

The Earl of Dierſtein.

The Citizens alſo and Senators were preſent to provide and foreſee that no offence ſhould riſe; for the Citizens obſerved always this order, that they would be preſent in all Affairs, which they ſuppoſed would breed diſſention, foreſeeing ſpecially that no tumults ſhould riſe, otherwiſe than with words. They uſed always ſuch a marvelous forelight and providence, that no man unto this day could have any cauſe againſt them, to complain for violating their promiſe. Wherefore if at any time any Citizens have deſerved well at the hands of the Church, ſurely this praiſe is to be given unto the Baſilians. Theſe men together with John Earl of Dierſtein, being preſent in the Aſſembly of the Fathers, gave a ſign of preſervation of their liberty. The Earl (albeit he was moved at the ſtrange-

The praiſe of the Citizens of Baſil.

{KING Hen.6.} ſtrangeneſs of the matter, (for he would not have thought ſo great contentions could have riſen amongſt wiſe men) anſwered by his Interpreter, That they all ſhould be of good cheer. For the Emperors ſafe Conduct ſhould be obſerved and kept even to the uttermoſt: neither ſhould the Patriarch nor any other once violate the liberty, or take away the aſſurance granted by the Emperor. Notwithſtanding he deſired the Patriarch that he would call back his words again, and not to ſpeak any more in ſuch ſort. But that famous Father, being nothing at all moved or troubled, committed his whole mind unto John Bacheiſtein, Auditor of the Chamber, a man both grave and eloquent to be declared. Who affirmed that the Patriarchs mind was not to threaten any man, or diſturb the liberty of the Council, but to move the Fathers unto conſtancy, that they ſhould be mindful of the Reformation which they had promiſed unto the whole World, and not to ſay one thing to day, and another to morrow; for if they would ſo do, it were to be feared, leſt the Laity ſeeing themſelves deluded, and deſpairing of Reformation, ſhould riſe againſt the Clergy.

Therefore he moniſheth the Fathers to foreſee and provide for the peril, that they ſhould not depart from the Council, nothing being determined or done; and finally he deſired pardon, if in his words he had offended either againſt the Council, Panormitan, or any other man. Whereby he declared it to be true which is commonly ſaid, That Humility is the ſiſter of Nobility: both which did very excellently appear in this man. Yet for all this could not the humility of the Patriach ſtop or ſtay their noiſe or cries: for as often as mention was made of reading the Concordatum, great noiſe and rumors were ſtill made to ſtop the ſame. Then Amedeus Archbiſhop of Lions, and Primate of all France, a man of great reverence and authority, being touched with the zeal of Faith, which he ſaw there to be ſtopt and ſuppreſſed, ſaid, Moſt reverend Fathers, I have now a great occaſion to ſpeak: for it is now ſeven years or more, that I have been amongſt you, yet have I never ſeen the matter at that point which it is now at, moſt like unto a Miracle; for even preſently I do behold moſt wonderful ſigns of Miracles: for it is no ſmall matter, that the Lame do walk, the Dumb do ſpeak, and that poor men preach the Goſpel. Whereupon I pray you cometh this ſudden Change? How happeneth it that thoſe which lie lurking at home, are now ſuddenly ſtart up? Who hath given hearing to the Deaf, and ſpeech to the Dumb? Who hath taught the poor men to preach the Goſpel? I do ſee here a new ſort of Prelates come in, which unto this preſent have kept ſilence, and now begin to ſpeak. Is not this like to a Miracle? I would to God they came to defend the Truth, and not to impugn Juſtice.

Humility ſilter to nobility.

Amedeus Archbiſhop of Lions. Anno 1438.

Biſhops that lie at home, here tongues here to ſpeak for the Pope.

But this is more to be marveled at than any Miracle, that I do ſee the beſt learned men of all impugn our Concluſions which are moſt certain and true: And they which now reprove them, in times paſt allowed them. You are not ignorant how that Ludovicus the Protonotary preached theſe Verities at Lovaine and at Collen, and brought them from thence confirmed with the authorities of the Univerſities. Wherefore albeit that he be now changed, yet is the Truth in no point altered. And therefore I deſire you and beſeech you all, that ye will not give ear unto theſe men, which albeit they are moſt excellently learned, yet have they no conſtancy in them, which doth adorn all other Vertues.

Mark how they are turned back which ſometime favoured the truth, and are now become Lyars and flatterers.

Conſtancy lacked in divers of this Council

When he had ended his Oration, Ludovicus the Protonotary riſing up, ſaid, It is moſt true that I brought theſe Verities, but you do call them Verities of Faith, which addition ſeemeth very doubtful unto me. When he had ſpoken theſe words, Cardinal Arelatenſis required that the Concordatum of the twelve men ſhould be read, and many whiſpered him in the ear, that he ſhould go forward, and not alter his purpoſe.

Then Panormitan, as ſoon as the Concordatum began to be read, riſing up with his Companions and other Aragons, cried out with a loud Voice, ſaying, You Fathers do contemn our Requeſts, you contemn Kings and Princes, and deſpiſe Prelates; but take heed leſt whilſt that ye deſpiſe all men, you be not deſpiſed of all men. You would conclude, but it is not your part for to conclude. We are the greateſt part of Prelates, we make the Council, and it is our part to conclude: and I in the name of all other Prelates do conclude, that it is to be deferred and delayed. With this word there ſprang ſuch a noiſe and rumor in the Council, as is accuſtomed to be in battel, with the ſound of Trumpets, and noiſe of Horſemen when two Armies joyn: Some curſing that which Panormitan went about, other ſome allowing the ſame: So that diverſity of minds made divers contentions.

Panormitan ſpake like himſelf.

Then Nicholas Amici, a Divine of Parie, according unto his Office, ſaid, Panormitan, I appeal from this your Concluſion, to the Judgment of the Council here preſent; neither do I affirm any thing to be ratified which you have done, as I am ready to prove, if it ſhall ſeem good. The contrary part ſeemed now to be in the better place, for they had already concluded. The other part had neither concluded, neither was it ſeen how they could conclude amongſt ſo great Cries and Uproars. Notwithſtanding, amongſt all this troublous noiſe, John Segovius, a ſingular Divine of the Univerſity of Salamantine, lacked not audience; for the whole Council was deſirous to hear him: wherefore all men as ſoon as he roſe up kept ſilence, and he perceiving that they were deſirous to hear him ſpeaks, began in this ſort:

Nicholas Amici a Divine of Paris.

The Oration of Segovius.

Moſt reverend Fathers, the zeal and love of the Houſe of God forceth me now to ſpeak: and I would to God that I had been either blind this day, not to have ſeen thoſe things which have happened, or that I had been deaf, that I ſhould not have heard thoſe words which have been ſpoken. Who is it that is ſo ſtony or hard-hearted, which can abſtain from tears, when as the authority of the Church is ſo ſpoiled, liberty taken away both from us and the Council, and that there is no place given unto the verity? O ſweet Jeſus, why haſt thou forſaken thy Spouſe? Behold and look upon thy people, and help us if our Requeſts are juſt.

We come hither to provide for the neceſſity of the Church, we require nothing for our ſelves, and our deſire is only that truth might appear. We truſted now to have concluded upon the Verities which were ſometimes allowed in the ſacred Deputations; The Orators of the Princes are preſent, and require the Concluſions to be declared. But we be not unmindful of thoſe things which Ambroſe wrote unto Valentinian the Emperor in this manner. If we ſhall intreat upon the order of the holy Scripture and ancient times paſt, who is it that will deny but that in caſe of Faith (I ſay in caſe of Faith) the Biſhops ought to judge upon Chriſtian Emperors, and not Emperors upon Biſhops? Neither do we admit their Petition but upon moſt urgent cauſes. Notwithſtanding we heard them patiently and willingly, whilſt that they did ſpeak even ſo long as they would.

Ambroſ. ad Valentinian.

How far and wherein Biſhops ought to judge upon Emperors.

But now if any of our part would ſpeak, by and by he is interrupted, troubled and letted. What honeſty is this? what modeſty or gravity? is it lawful ſo to do in the Council? where is the Decree of the Council of Toloſue now become? (where are our Decrees, which do not only prohibit tumults, but alſo ſmall bablings and talk?) They ſay, it is becauſe we contemn them: but they are they, which not only contemn the Council, but alſo reſiſt the ſame. The Patriarch ſpake but one ſmall word againſt them, and that of no evil intent or purpoſe, and by and by they complained that their liberty was broken: but they, when as they do enforce the Council, when as they forbid the Preſident to ſpeak, and will not ſuffer the Ordinances to be read, do not judge that they do any thing contrary to the liberty of the Council. They ſay, they are the Council themſelves, and yet they intreat the Council. Theſe things do not I underſtand; for if they be the Council, why do they intreat themſelves? If they be not the Council, why do they not ſuffer the Council to ſpeak? Why do they not look for an anſwer of him to whom they make their Petitions?

He excuſeth the Patriarch.

Truly this is too much violence, and certes our patience is alſo too much, to ſuffer ſuch exceſs even in the face of the Church. But this doth moſt of all grieve me, and this do I moſt marvel at, that Panormitan, a man of ſingular wit and Doctrine, did conclude without any diſcuſſing or deciding of the Deputies, and without the examination of the twelve men, or any rite or order. The which, except mine eyes had beheld and ſeen, I would ſcarcely believe,

He meaneth Panormitanus which did conclude without the examination of 12 men.

believe, if any other man should report it unto me of him. Neither do I yet know whether I may sufficiently credit my self, the matter seemeth so terrible: for I do not see by what authority his conclusion doth stand, except it be by the Authority of his King, Who, he saith, will have it so. But you most reverend Fathers, take heed that ye bring in no such custom; for so it shall come to pass, that in all matters, a few froward Prelates shall have one to conclude for them.

Paul would give to Peter no respite when he smarted for piety.

And albeit Panormitan hath proved (as he thinketh) by strong reasons, that the verity ought to be deferred, yet notwithstanding, I do require you most reverend Fathers to follow the example of the Apostle, who (as Arelatensis hath very well declared) would not give one hours respite unto Peter, when he swarved from the truth of the Gospel. The Faith is speedily to be relieved and holpen; neither doth any thing sustain more danger by delays, than Faith doth. For Heresies except they be rooted out at the first, when they are once grown, are hardly taken away. Wherefore, I desire you speedily to help and aid, Hoise up your Sails, and lanch out your Oars. What should we tarry looking for either the Prelates or the Princes? You are now in conflict: I only desire that you would hasten unto the Victory. Regard not the threatnings of those Princes, neither the opprobries of those contumelious persons: For you are blessed, saith the Lord, when as men curse you and persecute you, speaking all evil against you, making lyes and slanders upon you for my sake; rejoyce and be glad, for great is your Reward in Heaven. What is it I pray you that the Princes do so much object against us? Is not our Lord God able to take us out of the Furnace of hot burning fire, and deliver us out of the hands of those Princes? I beseech you most reverend Fathers and loving Brethren, have no less hope in Jesus Christ, than Sidrach, Misach, and Abednego had, which feared not that old King Nabuchodonosor: and let the people know, That the most High ruleth over the Kingdoms of men, and giveth them unto whom he pleaseth. God beholdeth all things from above; He is (I say) in the midst amongst us; wherefore are ye then afraid? Be of good courage, and shew your selves as a strong wall for the Church of God; suffer not the Faith to perish under your hands. The Almighty God is present with you. He is present that will defend you. Fear not them which seek only to kill the body. Do justice and equity, and be assured that he will not deliver you over into the hands of the Backbiter and Slanderer. Again I say unto you, shew your selves valiant and stout, defend your Mother the Church. And unto thee, O thou President, I say, that thou oughtest rather to please God than man; for if thou depart thence without a final conclusion, know assuredly that thou shalt render account in the strait Judgment of God. And thus without any more words he sate down in his place.

Mark the great constancy and Christian zeal of this man.

An exhortation to constancy.

In the mean time many grave and ancient men had exhorted Panormitan that he should give over his conclusion. The Bishop of Burgen was very instant and earnest with him, that he should make unity and concord amongst the Fathers, and went about to make an unity with all men. But neither the Fathers of the Council were determined to depart without a conclusion; neither was Panormitan minded to alter his intent and purpose. All things were disturbed, neither did the Prelates sit in their Seats, as they were accustomed, but as every mans affection led him. Some went to the Cardinal Arelatensis, some unto Panormitan, and exhorted them, as if they had been Princes or Rulers of Armies. Then Arelatensis knowing the matter to be in danger; and that there was no ready way to make a conclusion, thought to use some policy to appease the tumult.

The Bishop of Burgen seeketh conclusion.

How men be ready to hear news.

Note the godly policy of the Cardinal.

Most reverend Fathers, said he, we have received now Letters out of France, which declare unto me marvelous things; that there are incredible news sprung up there, which if you will give me willing Audience, I will declare unto you. By this means there was a sudden silence throughout the whole Council, and by this marvelous policy he made all men attentive to hear. When he saw he had free liberty to speak, without either Fable or History of any Letters feen, he opened the whole order of the matter, and as it is requisite in an Orator, came by little and little to the principal Point, saying, That Eugenius his Messengers filled all France, preaching a new Doctrine, and extolling the Authority of the Bishop of Rome above the General-Council: against whom, except speedy remedy were found, it would come to pass that many would give credit unto them, and therefore the sacred Council ought of necessity to provide remedy, and of necessity to conclude upon the Verities which were examined, that thereby the temerity of the Eugenians might be repressed; which Verities, albeit they were eight in number, yet was it not the Fathers intent to conclude upon them all, but only the three first: even as I also (saith he) here do conclude in the Name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

{KING. Hen.6.} but against the Pope.

The conclusion of three figures Council.

When he had finished his Oration, with a chearful and merry countenance riling up, he departed. Some of them kissed him, and some of them kissed the skirts of his Garments. A great number followed him, and greatly commended his wisdom, that being a Frenchman born, had that day vanquished the Italians, which were men of great policy. Howbeit this was all mens opinion, that it was done rather by the operation of the Holy Ghost, than by the Cardinals own power. The other of the contrary Faction, as men bereft of their minds, hanging down their heads, departed every man to his Lodging. They went not together, neither saluted one another, so that their countenances declared unto every man that they were overcome. Something more also is reported of Panormitan, that when he came to his Lodging, and was gone unto his Chamber, he complained with himself upon his King, which had compelled him to thrive against the truth, and put both his Soul and good name in danger of losing; and that in the midst of his tears and complaints he fell asleep, and did eat no meat until late in the evening, for very sorrow for that he had neither ignorantly, neither unwillingly impugned the truth.

The Holy Ghost worketh.

The Bishop of Eleven and Burgen.

The just answer of the Council.

After this there was great consultation amongst the Eugenianes, what were best to be done in this matter. Some thought good to depart and leave the Council, otherfome thought it meeter to tarry, and withall endeavour to refift that nothing fhould further be done againft the Eugenians; and this opinion remained amongft them. The next day after, being the fifteenth day of April, the Archbifhop of Lions and the Bifhop of Burgen, calling together the Prelates in the Chapter-houfe of the great Church, began many things as touching peace. The Bifhop of Burgen perfwaded that there fhould be Deputations appointed that day, unto whom the Archbifhop of Lions fhould give power to make an agreement. Unto whom anfwer was made, as they thought very roughly, but as other judged gently, but notwithftanding juftly and truly: For they faid, There could be no unity of Concord made before the Adverfaries confeffed their fault, and asked pardon therefore.

The Bishop of Concen fpeaketh.

The anfwer of them both.

The Bifhop of Burgen and other Lombards and Cathelans, went unto the Germans, and from thence unto the Senate of the City, fpeaking much as touching the prohibiting of Schifms. The Germans referred themfelves to thofe things which the Deputation fhould determine. The Senate of the City (as they were great men in wifdom, which would do nothing without diligent advice and deliberation) anfwered, That the matter pertained not unto them, but unto the Council: the Fathers whereof were moft wife men, and were not ignorant what pertained unto the Chriftian Faith; and if there were any danger toward, it fhould be declared unto the Council, and not to the Senate. For they believe that the Elders of the Council, if they were premonifhed, would forefee that there fhould no hurt happen: as for the Senate of the City, it was their duty only to defend the Fathers, and to preferve the promife of the City. With this anfwer the Bifhop of Burgen departed.

Mark what the truth muft fuffer.

O marvelous defpite and contumely in a Bifhop: for if Arelatenfis had kept Whores or Concubines, he would have prefently him: but to maintain learned men was a great offence.

The form of the Decree is written and approved.

In the mean time the Fathers of the Council had drawn out a form of a Decree upon the former Conclufions, and had approved the fame in the facred Deputations. By this time the Princes Orators were returned from the Affembly at Mentz, and holding a Council amongft themfelves, they had determined to let the Decree. The ninth day of May, there was a general Convocation holden, whereunto all men refforted, either part putting forth himfelf unto the conflict.

The Princes Ambaffadors were called by the Bifhop of Lubeck and Comrade de Winfperge the Protector into the the Quire, and there kept where they intreated of a Unity, and by what means it might be had, and there they tarried longer than fome thought to do; the which matter gave occafion to bring things well to paſs, beyond all expectation. The only form of the Decree was appointed to be concluded that day; whereupon, as foon as Cardinal Arelatenfis perceived the Congregation to be full, and that the twelve men had agreed, and that there was a great expectation with filence, he thought good not to delay it for fear of tumult, but commanded by and by the publick Concordances to be read, wherein this was alſo contained, that the Cardinal Arelatenfis might appoint a Seſſion whenſoever he would. Which being read, he being delired by the Promoters, concluded according as the manner and cuſtom is. The Ambaſſadors of the Princes being yet in the Quire, as ſoon as they underſtood how the matter paſſed, being very much troubled and vexed, they brake off their talk, imputing all things to the Biſhop of Lubeck, which of purpoſe had kept them in the Quire, and practiced the time. Whereupon they entering into the Congregation, filled the Church full of complaints.

Firſt of all, the Orator of Lubeck complained both in his own name and the name of the Proctor, as touching the concluſion, and required that the Council would revoke the ſame. If that might be granted, he promiſed to intreat a Peace, and to be a Proctor between the Council and the Ambaſſadors of the Princes. But the Archbiſhop of Turnon ſaid, That it ſeemed unto him, every man to have free liberty to ſpeak againſt that Law which ſhould be promulgate, until the Seſſion, when the Canons ſhould be conſecrated and receive their force: when as the Biſhops in their Pontificalibus, after the reading of the Decree in the Seſſion, ſhould anſwer that it pleaſed them: otherwiſe the demand which was made by the Promoters in the Seſſion, to be but vain: And for that the Concluſions were not yet allowed in the Seſſion, therefore he ſaid that he might without rebuke ſpeak ſomewhat as touching the ſame; and that it was a great and hard matter, and not to be knit up in ſuch a ſhort time, and that he had the knowledge thereof but even now; notwithſtanding that he being an Archbiſhop, ought to have known the matter, that at his return home, he might inform the King, and alſo inſtruct thoſe which were under him. And that he and his Fellows, before any Seſſion ſhould be, would both hear and be heard of others. Neither doth it ſeem good unto him that the Seſſion ſhould be holden, before report were made of thoſe things which the Ambaſſadors of the Princes had done at Mentz, which would peradventure be ſuch as might alter and change the minds of the Fathers.

The Bishop of Eleven and Burgen.

Then the Biſhop of Concen, Ambaſſador of the King of Caſtile, which alſo lately returned from Mentz, a man of great underſtanding, but lacking utterance, grievouſly complained that the Prelates were contemned. Neither had it been (ſaid he) any great matter if they had been tarried for, which not without great danger and expences went to Mentz, not for their pleaſure, but of neceſſity. And afterward as it were ſmiling, he ſaid, How mad am I, that would have the Prelates to be tarried for, until they return from Mentz, when as they are not tarried for, whilſt they came out of the Quire of the Church? Do therefore as ye liſt. If there riſe any offence or miſchief hereupon, neither are we the Ambaſſadors of Caſtile to be blamed, neither can any man of right impute any thing to our moſt noble King.

The Fathers of the Council ſtanded by Paternoſters. Four figns to know the good from the bad.

Here were it long to repeat, with what rebukes and taunts they inveighed againſt the Cardinal Arelatenſis: but eſpecially the Biſhop of Trillan railed moſt cruelly upon him, ſaying, That he foftered and maintained a rabble of Sophiſters and School-Maſters, and that he had concluded in matters of Faith with them; calling him alſo another Catiline, unto whom all deſperate and naughty perſons had refuge, that he was their Prince, and ruled the Church with them; and that he would not give ear unto the Ambaſſadors of the moſt noble Princes, or to the moſt famous Prelates in this moſt weighty matter. Albigamenſis a Biſhop, and a man of great Nobility, deſcended of the Emperors blood, albeit he had never alienate his mind before from the Council, yet left he ſhould ſeem to differ from other Ambaſſadors of the Princes, he made the like complaint as touching the attempt of the Prelates. After this it came unto Panormitan to ſpeak, who as he had a greater vehemency in ſpeaking, ſo alſo he did declare a more angry ſtomach and mind: for in the beginning of his Oration he ſeemeth not to go about according to the Precept of the Orators, to get the good will of the hearers, but rather their hatred. For he ſaid, That our Saviour ſhewed four ſigns in the Goſpel, whereby we ſhould know the good from the reprobate; for he which is of God (ſaith he) heareth the words of God, but ye bear not the words of God, becauſe ye are not of God. And again, He that doth evil hateth the light. And in another place A corrupt tree cannot bring forth evil fruit.

The Bishop of Tarnon.

Look if it be not ſeen of them in the Goſpels, where mention is made of the Seaſt which is fallen into the dirth.

What is it that ambition will not do?

All which ſayings he wreſted againſt the Fathers of the Council, becauſe they would not hear the words of God; that is to ſay, the words of peace: which the Ambaſſadors had ſpoken: becauſe they fled from the light in the abſence of the Ambaſſadors, privily concluding; and becauſe in their deputation they had not holden and kept the holy-day, but had concluded thereupon; alſo becauſe they had the upper-hand in the forefaid concluſion, not by reaſon, but by deceit. As touching the fruits, he ſaid, That the Fathers themſelves ſhould meditate and conſider how that, if their fruits were not good, they alſo themſelves were not good; and that he did ſee another Council at hand, where he feared leſt theſe Concluſions ſhould be revoked, as the fruit of an evil Tree: and therefore they ought not ſo ſuddenly to proceed in ſo weighty matters: and that he would be yet more fully heard before the Seſſion, as well in his own name, becauſe he was an Archbiſhop, as in the name of his Prince, which reigned not over one Kingdom alone, but over many. Alſo he ſaid, That he herein ſhewed by his words, deeds and writings, hath extolled the authority of the Council; and that he feared, leſt by theſe means the authority thereof ſhould be ſubverted. At the laſt he required pardon if he had offended the Fathers of the Council, forſomuch as very ſorrow and grief forced him to ſpeak ſo.

Abbot of Virgilisaceſis.

Lodovicus the Protonotary in ſetting forth of the Creed, labouring to ſeem learned, forgot to be good.

The Apoſtles principally gathered the Creed.

The Abbot of Virgiliascenſis would have made anſwer to thoſe things which Panormitan had touched, concerning his deputation: but Arelatenſis thought good that all the contrary part ſhould ſpeak firſt, among whom, laſt of all Ludovicus the Protonotary; the Manner of Lawyers ſtood up. And albeit that he ſpake unwillingly, yet when he had begun, he could not refrain his words. And whiles he went about to ſeem learned and eloquent, he utterly forgot to be good. He ſaid, That the Council ought to take heed, that they intreated no matter of Faith againſt the Prelates, leſt any offence ſhould follow; for that ſame would ſay it were a matter of no force or effect. For albeit that Chriſt choſe twelve Apoſtles and ſeventy Diſciples, notwithſtanding in the ſetting forth of the Creed only the Apoſtles were preſent, thereby (as it were) giving example that the matters of Faith did pertain only unto the Apoſtles, and ſo conſequently unto Biſhops. Neither that they ought haſtily to proceed in matters of Faith, which ought to be clearly diſtinct, forſomuch as Peter afformeth the trial of Faith to be much more precious than Gold, which is tried by the fire. And if the Biſhops be contemned, which are called the Pillars and Keys of Heaven, the Faith cannot ſeem to be well reviewed or examined. But at length he confeſſed that the Inferiors might determine with the Biſhops, but denied that the leaſt part of the Biſhops with the moſt part of the Inferiors might determine any thing. From thence he paſſing to the matter of Faith, ſaid, That thoſe Verities whereupon queſtion was now had, are Articles of Faith, if they were Verities of Faith. And forſomuch as every man ſhould be bound to believe thoſe, therefore he would be better inſtructed and taught in that matter which he ſhould believe as an Article of Faith. Neither ſhould it be camely for the Council to deny him his requeſt; which according to the rule of the Apoſtle, ought to be ready to give account unto every man which ſhall require it, touching the Faith which it holdeth.

How men be ready to hear news.

After every man had made an end of ſpeaking, the Cardinal Arelatenſis calling his Spirits together, made an Oration, wherein he anſwered now the one, and now the others. And firſt of all he commended the deſires of the Imperial Ambaſſadors, which offered to intreat a Peace and Unity; but neither neceſſity, nor honeſty (he ſaid) would ſuffer thoſe things which are concluded to be revoked. He anſwered alſo, That the Petition of the Ambaſſadors

Basſadors of France is moſt juſt, in that they required to be inſtructed touching the Faith; and that the Council would grant their requeſt, and ſend unto them certain Divines, which ſhould inſtruct them at home at their Lodgings, but the matter was already concluded, and could no more be brought into queſtion, that the Seſſion was only holden, rather to beautifie the matter, than to confirm the ſame. And as touching that which the Biſhop of Concen ſo greatly complaineth of, he doth not much marvel: for he could not know the proceſs of the matter, when he was abſent: who being better inſtructed, he ſuppoſed would ſpeak no more any ſuch words, forſomuch as a juſt man would require no unjuſt thing. Alſo that his proteſtation had no evil ſenſe or meaning, in that he would not have it imputed either unto him, or unto his King, if any offence ſhould riſe upon the Concluſions. Notwithſtanding, it is not to be feared, that any evil ſhould ſpring of good Works. But unto the Biſhop of Mellain, he would anſwer nothing, becauſe he ſaw him ſo moved and troubled, for fear of multiplying of more grievous and hainous words. As for Panormitan he referred unto the laſt. But unto Ludovicus the Protonotary, which deſired to be inſtructed, he ſaid, He willed him to be ſatisfied with the words which were ſpoken unto the Biſhop of Turnon.

To the Biſhop of Concen.

To Ludovicus the Protonotary.

Notwithſtanding, he left not this untouched which Ludovicus had ſpoken concerning the Apoſtles Creed. For albeit that in the ſetting forth of the Creed the Apoſtles be only named, yet it doth not follow (ſaith he) that they only were preſent at the ſetting forth thereof. For it happeneth oftentimes, that Princes are commended and praiſed as chief authors and doers of things, when as notwithſtanding they have other helpers; as it appeareth in battels, which although they are fought with the force of all the Souldiers, yet the Victory thereof is imputed but unto a few. As in theſe our days they do aſcribe all things which the Army doth either fortunately or wiſely, unto Nicholas Picenius, that moſt valiant Captain, which hath obtained ſo many famous Victories; albeit that oftentimes other have been the Inventers of the Policy, and Workers of the Feat. And therefore Ludovicus ought to know and underſtand, that they are not only Articles of Faith, which are contained in the Creed, but all other determinations made by the Councils as touching the Faith. Neither is he ignorant, that there be ſome Articles of the Creed which we now uſe in the Church, that were not put to by the Apoſtles, but afterward by general Councils; as that part wherein mention is made of the Holy Ghoſt, which the Council of Lions did add; in which Council alſo it is not to be doubted, but that the Inferiors did judge together with the Biſhops. But for ſo much as he had ſufficiently declared that matter in the Congregation before paſſed, he would ſtay no longer thereupon. But coming unto Panormitan, he rehearſed his words, Qui ex Deo eſt, verba Dei audit, He that is of God, heareth Gods Word; which is very well taken out of the Goſpel, but not well applied unto the Council (ſaid he;) for he firmly believed, that his Predeceſſors have judged the Holy Ghoſt to be in the midſt of the Councils, and therefore the words of the Councils to be the words of the Holy Ghoſt, which if any man do reject, he denieth himſelf to be of God. Neither doth the Council hate the light, which doth all things publickly and openly, whoſe Congregations are evident unto all men, neither doth it as the Conventicles of the Adverſaries, admit ſome and exclude otheſome. Moreover, the thing which is now in hand was begun to be intreated of for two months ago and firſt the concluſions were largely diſputed upon in the Divinity Schools, and afterward ſent unto Mentz and other places of the world.

Articles of the Creed not all put in by the Apoſtles, but ſome by the Councils.

The Article of the Holy Ghoſt put in by the Council of Lions.

Panormitan wounded with his own darts.

After all this the Fathers were called into the Chapter-houſe of the great Church, to the number of an hundred and twenty; amongſt whom Panormitan, which now complaineth, was alſo preſent, and according to his manner did learnedly and ſubtilly diſpute, and had liberty to ſpeak what he would. Likewiſe in the Diſputations every man ſpake his mind freely, and in the diſputation where Panormitan was, the matter was three days diſcuſſed. After this the twelve men did agree upon it, and the general Congregation did conclude it. Neither hath there been at any time any thing more ripely or exactly handled, both openly and alſo without any fraud or deceit. And whereas the deputation did ſit upon a holy day, there is no hurt in that; neither is it any new or ſtrange thing, foraſmuch as they have often their Seſſion upon Feſtival-days, when as the matter hath had haſte, and ſpecially that the matter of Faith hath no holy days. And further he ſaid, That he did not conclude craftily and deceitfully in the Congregation, as Panormitan hath reported, but publickly and openly at the requeſt of the Promoters. Neither hath any man any juſt cauſe to complain upon him, for ſo much as when he was made Preſident, he was ſworn that always when three or four of the deputations did agree, he ſhould conclude thereupon. And for ſo much as he had already concluded, in divers cauſes touching the Pope, he ſaw no cauſe why he ſhould not conclude in the matter of Faith, for that he was a Cardinal, and did wear his red Hat for this purpoſe, that he ſhould ſhed his blood in the defence of the Faith. Neither hath he done any thing now againſt the Pope, for that omitting the five Concluſions touching Eugenius, except he had done, the Fathers ſhould have had juſt cauſe to complain againſt him (in that they truſting in his fidelity and faithfulneſs, had choſen him Preſident) if by him they ſhould now be forſaken in this moſt neceſſary cauſe of Faith. And turning himſelf unto the people, he delired the Fathers to be of good comfort, for ſo much as he would never forſake them, yea although he ſhould ſuffer death: for he had given his Faith and Fidelity unto the Council, which he ſhould obſerve and keep: neither ſhould any mans flattery or threatnings put him from his purpoſe: that he would be always ready to do whatſoever the Council ſhould command him, and never leave the commandments of the Deputies by any means unperformed.

{KING Hin.6.} Arelatenſis concluded not, but at the requeſt of the Promoters.

Theſe four deputations were four out of the choſen men, which did diligently and determine thoſe things which the Fathers did conclude upon.

Albiganen. ſis readeth the proteſtation, but none could hear him.

Verily this is no Sabbatical Conſtitution, but of the Immaculate Spouſe, Jeſus Chriſt. He ſpeaketh to the whole Council.

The Acts of the Council are read.

As touching that Panormitan had extolled the authority of the Council, he ſaid, That he was greatly to be thanked. But yet he ought to underſtand and know the authority of the Council to be ſuch as cannot be augmented or increaſed by any mans praiſe or commendation, or be diminiſhed by any opprobry or ſlander. Theſe things thus premiſed, he commanded the form of the Decree to be read. Then Panormitan and thoſe which took his part, would needs have a certain Proteſtation to be firſt read. There was great contention on every ſide. Notwithſtanding at the laſt Arelatenſis prevailed, and the form of the Decree was read unto this word Decernimus; that is to ſay, We decree. Then Panormitan riſing up would not ſuffer it to heard any further: And the Biſhop of Catavia cried out ſaying, That it was uncomely that Arelatenſis, with a few other Biſhops by name, ſhould conclude the matter. The like did alſo all thoſe which favoured Panormitan. The Cardinal of Taracomia alſo (which until that time had holden his peace) did grievouſly rebuke his Partakers, that as men being aſleep or in a dream, they did not read the Proteſtation, and commanded by and by one of his Familiars to read it. But like as the Adverſaries before did perturb the reading of the Concordances, ſo would not the Fathers of the Council now give place to the reading of the Proteſtation. Which when Albiganenſis did conſider, he commanded the Writing to be brought unto him, and as he began to ſpeak, ſuddenly Arelatenſis roſe up, with a great number of the Fathers to depart: Which thing pleaſed the Cardinal of Taracomia and Panormitan very well, for that they hoped that they alone with their Adherents, ſhould remain in the Church. They exhorted Arelatenſis to revoke the concluſion and to make another.

Aeneas Sylvius being preſent exhibited this. Arelatenſis concluded here, as he did alſo before, not without the conſent of the Deputies, according to the order of the Council.

Every man may determine of Faith, having the Scripture on his part.

Contention in the Council about reading of the proteſtation.

There was in that Congregation in his place George the Protonotary of Barduxina, ſitting ſomewhat beneath his Uncle, the Cardinal of Taracomia, a man but young of age, but grave in wiſdom, and noble in humanity: who as ſoon as he ſaw the Cardinal Arelatenſis riſe, he determined alſo to depart, and when as his Uncle called him, commanding him to tarry, he ſaid, God forbid farther did I ſhould tarry in your Congregation, or do any thing contrary to the Oath which I have taken. By which words he declared his excellent Vertue and Nobility, and admoniſhed our men which remained, of thoſe things they had to do. His voice was the voice of the Holy Ghoſt, and words more neceſſary than could be thought. For if he had not ſpoken that word, the Fathers of the Council had peradventure departed, and gone their way; and the {KING Hin.6.} the other remaining in the Church had made another concluſion which they would have affirmed to have been of force, becauſe they would ſay the laſt concluſion was to be received. But many being warned by the words of the Protonotary, and calling to remembrance the like chance of other Councils before, called back again the multitude which were departing, and cried upon the Cardinal and the Patriarch to ſit down again, and that they ſhould not leave the Church void and quiet for their Adverſaries. Whereupon ſuddenly all the whole multitude ſate down, and the Gates were ſhut again. In the mean time Matthew Albiganenſis a Biſhop, read the proteſtation to none elſe but to himſelf alone, for it could nor be heard for noiſe: which being ended, the Lombards and the Cathelanes confirmed the Proteſtation. When the Cardinal of Terracomia ſaid, That he did agree to that diffenſion, they marvelled at that ſaying. And when ſome ſmiled and laughed at him: What ſaid he, ye Fools do ye mock me? do not the Ambaſſadors of my King aſſent from you? What do you marvel then if I do ſay I conſent unto their diſſentions? And with theſe words he and almoſt all the Aragoni, Lombards and Cathelanes departed; all the other tarried ſtill. And albeit it was ſomewhat late (for it was paſt Two at Afternoon) Arelatenſis ſeeing the Congregation quier, commanded the affairs of private perſons to be read, as the manner is; which being ended, he commanded alſo the publick affairs to be read, and willed the concluſions and the form of the decree to be read again. There remained in the Congregation, the Ambaſſadors of the Empire of France, talking together of their affairs. Notwithſtanding the Biſhop of Turnon heard mention made of the concluſions, and turning himſelf to the Biſhop of Lubeck, ſaid, Loe, the matters of Faith are now in hand again, let us go hence I pray you, that we be not an offence unto others, or that we be not ſaid, to diſſent from the other Ambaſſadors. To whom the Biſhop of Lubeck anſwered, Tarry Father, tarry here, are not the Concluſions moſt true? Why are you afraid to be here for the truth? Theſe words were not heard of many, for they ſpake them ſoftly between themſelves. Notwithſtanding I heard it, for I ſitting at their feet, did diligently obſerve what they ſaid. Arelatenſis, after all things were read, which he thought neceſſary, at the requeſt of the Deputies concluded, and ſo making an end, diſmiſſed the Congregation. Twice it is declared, with how great difficulty Arelatenſis eonclued, forſomuch as neither the matter, nor the form could be concluded without diffention: and the concluſions were miraculous, and paſt all mens hope, but were obtained by the indutry of Arelatenſis, or rather by the ſpecial Gift of the Holy Ghoſt.

* Aeneas, you did not ſo praiſe this Council after you were Biſhop your ſelf.

After this it was determined between the Lombards and Aragons to abſtain from the Deputations for a certain time, which they did not long obſerve, notwithſtanding the Deputations were holden very quietly for a certain ſpace, neither was there any thing done worthy of remembrance until the fifteenth day of May; during which time, all means poſſible were fought to ſet a concord between the Fathers, but would not be. Then Nicholas Amici Promoter of the Faith, was called into the Congregation, and briefly rehearſed thoſe things which were done the days before, and declared how that Arelatenſis might point a Seſſion. Wherefore forſomuch as delay in matters of Faith was dangerous; he required that a Seſſion ſhould be appointed againſt the morrow after, requiring the Cardinal for his Dignities-ſake, in that he was called the Principal of the Church, and the other Biſhops, that (as they had promiſed in their Confecration) they would not now ſhrink from the Church in theſe weighty Affairs, and ſuffer the Faith to be oppreſſed; but the other Inferiors he required, upon their Oath which they had taken, to ſhew themſelves faithful and conſtant herein. Then again there fell a great contention upon theſe words; and exhorted all men to be there preſent in their Robes. The Biſhop of Lubeck riſing up made a proteſtation in his own name, and alſo in the name of his Protector, That he would not conſent that there ſhould be any Seſſion, if it ſhould in any part derogate from the agreement had at Mentz. Gregorius Miles alſo, his Fellow-Ambaſſor, conſented to this proteſtation. When as the Protector of the Council, appointed by the Emperor, underſtood himſelf to be named by the Biſhop of Lubeck, he marvelled a while what the matter ſhould be. But being certified by an Interpreter, he anſwered, That he would in no caſe conſent unto the Proteſtation of the Biſhop of Lubeck, and that he did not know any thing of their doings at Mentz; alſo that he was ſent by the Emperor to the ſacred Council, and hath his Charge which he doth well remember, and would be obedient thereunto. After whom the Biſhop of Concenſe, according to his accuſtomed manner, made his proteſtation, and after him alſo followed Panormitan. Whoſe words before I will repeat, I deſire that no man would marvel that I make mention ſo often of Panormitan; for it is neceſſary to declare the matter in order as it was done.

The Biſhop of Lubeck.

Move God ſometimes by occaſion.

Arelatenſis anſwer to Panormitan. This deputation of Faith, was ſpecially for the compaſſing of chooſen men which did determine matters of Faith.

It happned in theſe matters, even as it doth in Warlike affairs: for as there, ſuch as are moſt valiant and ſtrong, and do moſt worthy Feats, obtain moſt fame, as in the battel of Troy, Achilles and Hector: ſo in theſe Spiritual Wars and Contentions, thoſe which moſt excel in Learning and Eloquence, and do more than other, ſhould be moſt renowned and named: for on the one part Panormitan was Prince and Captain; on the other, Arelatenſis: but his own will made not the one Captain, but only neceſſity, for it behoved him to obey his Prince. Notwithſtanding he was not ignorant of the truth and verity, neither did he refuſe willingly againſt it; for I have ſeen him oftentimes in his Library complain of his Prince, that he followed other mens counſel. When as his time came to ſpeak, he ſaid, That he did not a little marvel why the Protector of the Faith ſhould require the Prelates to have a Seſſion, which was nothing pertaining to his Office, and that he ought not to uſurp the Preſidents place. And again, He complained touching the contempt of the Prelates, for the matter did preſently touch the ſtate of the Apoſtolick See, and for that cauſe the See ought to be heard before any Seſſion be holden. Neither is it to be regarded (ſaid he) that the Council of Conſtance ſeemeth to have decreed, that it ſhould now be ſpoken of, forſomuch as Pope John was not heard at Conſtance, neither any man elſe, to ſpeak for the See; by which words he ſeemed both to conterm and bring in doubt all the Decrees of that moſt great and ſacred Synod of Conſtance: therefore there was a great tumult, and all men cried out with one voice, ſaying, That the Synod of Conſtance is holy, and the Authority thereof ought to be inviolate. But he, being ſtill inſtant, with a ſtout and haughty courage affirmed, That the matter could not be finiſhed without the Ambaſſadors of the Princes, and that the Princes ought to be heard in a matter of Faith. And again, that the Ambaſſadors themſelves cannot conſent, for ſo much as in the Colloquie holden at Mentz they had promiſed, during the Treaty of Peace by them begun, they would receive and allow nothing that the Pope ſhould either do againſt the Council, or the Council againſt the Pope; and that he doubted not but that the three firſt Conclusions declared Eugenius an Heretick, inſomuch that it was evident that Eugenius did vehemently reſiſt the two laſt firſt. And therefore forſomuch as the Seſſion was not yet holden, and that it was lawful for every man before that Seſſion to ſay what he will, he deſired and required them moſt inſtantly that there might be no Seſſion as yet holden. Unto whom Arelatenſis anſwered, That it was not to be doubted but that the Promoter of the Faith, by his Office might call the Prelates to determine a matter of Faith, and ſpecially forſomuch as the deputation of the Faith and the whole Council had ſo given him in Commandment.

S. Jerome unto Nepotianus de vita clericali. Mark how politickly and ſincerely he doth confute his Adverſaries.

As touching the Prelates, he ſaith, That albeit without all doubt Biſhops have chief Authority, yet notwithſtanding it is accuſtomed in Councils not to make any concluſion in the name of the Biſhops, but in the name of the whole Council: and the univerſal Church hath decreed certain Laws in this Council which ſhould remain inviolate. Neither let the Biſhops think the preſence of the Inferiors grievous unto them, when as oftentimes under a bare and torn Coat, wiſdom lieth hid, and under rich Veſtures and Ornaments folly lurketh. Biſhops ought alſo to be mindful of the ſaying of Dominius, which (as S. Jerome reporteth) ſaid, Why ſhould I eſteem thee as a Prince, if thou doſt not regard me as a Senator? For the Biſhops ought to eſteem Priests as Priests, if they will have reverence done unto them as Biſhops. Neither ought ought the Princes to be looked for to the deciding of this matter, forsomuch as the Church is not congregated in the name of the Princes, but in the name of Christ, which hath not received his Power from Princes, but immediately from God: to the defence whereof he should perceive the Inferiors to be no leſs encouraged than the Biſhops, for that he did well underſtand and know, that they would not only ſpend their Temporal goods, but alſo their lives for the defence thereof. As for ſome Biſhops, rather than they will loſe any part of their Temporalties, they will ſell the liberty of the Church unto the Emperor, and make them Judges and Lords over the Councils. As touching the Acts at Mentz, he doth not regard them, forſomuch (as it is ſaid) they counted without their Hoſt: for he ſaith, He doth not underſtand how this can be, that they had decreed neither to obey the Pope, nor the Council. The one or the other they muſt needs be obedient unto; for there is no third Tribunal whereunto any Obedience is due in theſe matters which concern the faith and ſalvation of Souls. And finally; that the Church would not ſuffer that their affairs and matters of Faith ſhould be determined by the Judgment of Princes: for the Holy Ghoſt is not ſubject unto Princes, but Princes unto him: and upon this concluſion he would not fear either the loſs of his goods, or any death or martyrdom. And whereas Panormitane doth now ſhew himſelf ſo great a Defender of Eugenius; he ſaith, That he doth not a little marvel at it, for that in times paſt no man hath more publiſhed Eugenius his Errors, than he: by whoſe ſpecial labour and counſel, both a decree monitory, and alſo the ſuſpenſion was admitted and ſet out againſt Eugenius. And now, whereupon this ſudden change ſhould come, he ſaith, That he was utterly ignorant, forſomuch as neither Eugenius had altered his life, neither could the Church continue in ſuch a Schiſm. Wherefore he defined Panormitane diligently to conſider, whether he ſpake according to his conſcience or not: For (ſaith he) the Concluſions which now ſhall be decreed, are moſt general: neither is there any mention in them of the Pope: and moreover the verity of Faith is contained in them: againſt the which if Eugenius did contend, it were more meet that the Pope ſhould be corrected, than the verity omitted. And thus he maketh an end, all were warned to come the next day unto the Seſſion. The Protector alſo deſired the ſacred Council, that none ſhould be ſuffered to bring any weapon to the Seſſion: forſomuch as he was ready to obſerve the ſafe conduct of the Emperor, and together with the Senate of the City, to prohibite all quarrels for doing of injury.

No man hath heretofore more than Panormitane publiſhed the errors of Eugenius: whom he now ſo greatly defendeth.

The Seſſion proclaimed.

When the ſixteenth day of May was come, all they whom the Seſſion contented and pleaſed, aſſembled at the hour. The Ambaſſadors alſo of the Princes were come together into the Quire of the Church, to attempt further what they could do; and ſending the Biſhop of Lubeck and Concenſe, and the Dean of Turnon, an excellent learned man, they offered themſelves to be preſent at the Seſſion, if that the depoſition of Eugenius might yet be deferred four months. Who when they had received a gentle anſwer of Arelatenſis and the other Principals, returning again unto the Ambaſſadors, they would only have the firſt Concluſion decreed, and thereupon ſent again unto Arelatenſis: unto whom anſwer was made, That the chief force did conſiſt in the two other Concluſions, and that the Council would ſpecially determine upon them. If the Ambaſſadors would not be preſent, they ſhould underſtand, that the Concord was broken by them, which would not obſerve that which they had offered. With which anſwer they departed, and the Seſſion began to be celebrate. There was no Prelate of Aragon preſent at it, neither out of Spain, nor out of Italy, only the Biſhop of Groſſetane, and the Abbot of Dona, which for their conſtancy and ſtedfaſt good will toward the Univerſal Church, could not be changed from their purpoſe: but of Doctors and other Inferiors, there were a great number of Aragons, and almoſt all the Inferiors of Spain and Italy (for the Inferiors feared not the Princes, as the Biſhops did) and then the worthy ſtoutneſs of the Aragons and Carbelanes appeared in the inferior fort, which would not ſhrink away in the neceſſity of the Church. Of the two other Nations there were only preſent twenty Biſhops. The reſidue lurked in their Lodgings, profeſſing the Faith in their hearts, but not in their mouths.

In Italy there were ſcarcely two Prelates found which fought for the commodity of the Univerſal Church, in Spain there was none.

{KING} 1 Hiſt. 6.

Arelatenſis conſidering afore what would come to paſs, cauſed prayers to be made, and after their prayers made unto Almighty God, with tears and lamentation, that he would ſend them his holy Spirit to aid and aſſiſt them, they were greatly comforted and encouraged. This Congregation was famous, and albeit that there were not many Biſhops preſent, yet all the Seats were filled with the Biſhops Proctors, Archdeacons, Preſidents, Priors, Prieſts and Doctors of both Laws, which I judged to be about the number of 400 or more: amongſt whom there was no noiſe, no chiding, no reproprious words or contention, but one exhorted another to the profeſſion of the Faith, and there appeared a full and whole conſent of them all to defend the Church. The Biſhop of Maſſilia had not one word. a noble man, read the Decree, which was attentively hearkened unto, and not one word interrupted. When it was ended, Te Deum laudamus was ſung with great joy and gladneſs, and ſo the Seſſion diſſolved, which was in number the thirty third Seſſion, and amongſt all the firſt the moſt quiet and peaceable.

Prayers made with tears.

Among 400 Doctors that were preſent, there was

The day following, being the 22th of May, the Princes Ambaſſadors without all mens expectation came unto the general Congregation, by that their doing at the laſt giving their aſſent unto the Seſſion before paſſed. In celebrating whereof, if the Fathers had erred, it had not been lawful for the Princes and Ambaſſadors to have holden the Council with thoſe Fathers. But it was thought that they were touched with remorſe of conſcience, and even now ſo deteſted and abhor that which they had done; as it was not hidden to the Ambaſſors of the Empire and France. For the Biſhop of Lubeck ſaid, That the cauſe of his abſence was, for that he was appointed by the Emperors Commandment to intreat a peace: Wherefore it was not comely for him to be preſent at any buſineſs, whereby he ſhould be vexed or troubled, with whom the peace ſhould be intreated. Notwithſtanding, he did much commend the Seſſion before holden, and believed the Decree therein promulgate to be moſt good and holy, and the Verities therein contained to be undoubted; and ſaid, That he would ſtick thereunto both now and ever, even to the death. But the Biſhop of Turnon, a man both learned and eloquent, ſpeaking for him and his Fellows, ſaid, That he heard how that they were evil ſpoken of amongſt ſome, in that they had not honoured their King in that moſt ſacred Seſſion, whom it becometh ſpecially to exalt and defend the Faith; which alſo for that cauſe above all other Kings was named moſt Chriſtian: notwithſtanding, he ſaid, that they had a lawful excuſe, in that it was convenient that they, which were ſent to intreat peace, ſhould do nothing whereby their Ambaſſage ſhould be ſtopped or letted. Alſo there are two kinds of Injuſtice (ſaid he) whereby either things are done that ſhould not be done, or of ſalvation. things that ſhould be done are not done. The firſt doth not always bind, becauſe it is convenient to have reſpect of time, place, and perſon. But the laſt doth always bind, wherein he ſaid they were not culpable. But as touching the firſt point, they might ſeem unto ſome to have erred, becauſe they were not preſent at the Seſſion: but yet in this point they had ſufficient to anſwer, forſomuch as if they had been preſent at that Seſſion, they ſhould have been unmeet to have entreated any peace with Eugenius. And therefore albeit they were wanting at ſo holy a buſineſs, in that point they followed the example of Paul, which albeit he deſired to be diſſolved and to be with Chriſt, yet for the further profit and advancement of the Church, it was deferred. So likewiſe he ſaid, That they had now done; for that they were not abſent becauſe they doubted of the Concluſions (which they judged to be moſt true and holy, and wherewnto they would ſtick even unto the death) but becauſe they would not be unmeet for the Treaty of Peace for which they came: and yet that which they had not done in their own Perſons, they had fulfilled (ſaid he) by their Servants and Houſhold, whom altogether they commanded to reverence that Seſſion. I would that I had been then in the place of ſome great Prelate; ſurely they ſhould not have gone unpuniſhed, which thought to have played bo-peep. For what doth the declaration of the truth hinder the treaty of peace? Or if it do hurt, why is he not accounted as a great Offender, which conſenteth to him that declareth the truth, as he which doth declare it? What ſhall we need any further teſtimony? For now the Embaſſadors of the Princes have declared Eugenius to be an enemy unto the truth. But to paſs over theſe things, it is ſufficient that Eugenius wrote afterward unto the King of France, that he did underſtand the Biſhop of Tournon to become his enemy.

The 23th Seſſion. The Ambaſſadors conſent to the former Seſſion.

{KING} 1 Hiſt. 6.

Arelatenſis commendeth the Embaſſadors.

After that the Biſhop of Tournon had made an end, Cardinal Arelatenſis gave thanks unto God, which had ſo defended his Church, and after great Storms and Clouds had ſent fair and clear weather; and commending the good will of the Emperor and the King of France toward the Church, he alſo praiſed the Biſhop of Lubeck and Tournon, for that oftentimes in the Council, and alſo of late at Mentz, they had defended the authority of the Council. But ſpecially he commended this their preſent doings, that they had openly confeſſed the truth, and had not ſequeſtred themſelves from the faith of the Church.

This Council was gathered to take away the ambition of the Biſhops of Rome, that they ſhould not think they might do all things according to their own pleaſures, and further to revoke them from the care of temporal things unto ſpiritual things, which now they regarded not.

Afterward he, entring into the declaration of the matter, ſaid, that he was at Piſis and at Conſtance, and never ſaw a more quiet or devout Seſſion, than this; affirming that this Decree was moſt neceſſary, to repreſs the ambition of the Biſhops of Rome, which exalting themſelves above the Univerſal Church, thought it lawful for them to do all things after their own pleaſure, and that no one man from henceforth ſhould tranſport the Council from one place to another, as Eugenius attempted to do, now to Bononia, after to Florentia, then again to Bononia, after to Ferraria, and after that again to Florentia; and that hereafter the Biſhops ſhould withdraw their minds from the careſulneſs of temporal goods, which (as he himſelf did ſee) had no mind at all on ſpiritual matters; and therefore by how much this Seſſion was moſt holy and neceſſary, by ſo much more the aſſent of the Embaſſadors was moſt laudable and acceptable to all the Fathers. Theſe words thus ſpoken, he roſe up, and the Congregation was diſſolved.

The Council doth deliberate upon the Popes Election.

Now after that Gabriel Condulmarius was depoſed from the Biſhoprick of Rome, the principal Fathers of the Council, being called together in the Chapter-houſe of the great Church, conſulted together, whether it were expedient that a new Biſhop ſhould be created out of hand, or deferred for a time. Such as thought good that the Election ſhould be done with ſpeed, ſhewed how dangerous a thing it was for ſuch a Congregation to be without a Head; alſo what a peſtiferous ſickneſs was in all the City, which not only conſumed young men and children, but alſo men of middle age, and old men in like manner; and that this Plague came firſt by ſtrangers unto the poor of the City, and ſo infected the rich, and now was come unto the Fathers of the Council; amplifying moreover, and encreaſing the terour thereof, and making the thing worſe than it was, as the manner is. Neither doth the Decree (ſaid they) any thing let or hinder, wherein it is provided, that there ſhould be delay of ſixty days after the See is void; for that is to be underſtood when as the See is void, at ſuch time as there is no Council holden; neither ought we to tarry or make any delay, leſt the Princes being perſwaded by Gabriel, ſhould reſiſt; unto whom the Depoſition of Gabriel, and the Election of ſome other, is to be certified all under one meſſage. The other, which thought good that there ſhould be a delay, ſaid, that the Council did lack no Head, forſomuch as Chriſt was the Head thereof: neither did lack a Ruler, forſomuch as it was governed by the Preſidents and other Officers; and that no mention ſhould be made of any Peſtilence in ſuch caſe, ſeeing that unto ſtout and ſtrong men, death is not to be feared, neither can any thing daunt or fear them which contend for the Chriſtian Faith. As for that Peſtilence which doth now increaſe and grow in the City, forſomuch as judgment is now given, it is to be hoped that it will aſſwage, which was thought to have come for the neglecting of Juſtice. Alſo, that in ſo doubtful a matter, they ought rather to uſe the Princes againſt their will, than to neglect them; and that it is not to be feared, but that in this caſe God will help thoſe that are ſtout and vallant. The matter being thus diſcuſſed amongſt them, (albeit that there were as many minds as there were men) yet it ſeemed unto them all, that it was moſt profitable to chuſe the Biſhop by and by, but moſt honeſt to defer it.

Two kinds of Injuſtice.

40 days muſt be delayed after the See is void.

Note, the Chriſtian zeal of their men, which would refuſe no danger for Gods cauſe.

Arelatenſis commendeth the Princes for their zeal.

Hereupon John Segovius, a man of excellent learning, ſaid, Moſt Reverend Fathers, I am diverſly drawn by ſundry reaſons, to this ſide and that. But as I weigh the matter more deeply in my mind, this is my opinion, that to come to a ſpeedy election it ſeemeth good, to ſpeak after mans judgment; but to delay it for two Months, to ſpeak after Gods judgment, it ſeemeth much better. I do judge that not only the words, but alſo the meaning of our Decree ought to be obſerved. Wherefore, if ye will give any credit unto me, follow rather dangerous honeſty, than ſecure utility; albeit that indeed utility cannot be diſcerned from honeſty. This opinion of delay took place among the Fathers, and they determined to ſtay for the ſpace of two Months.

Dangerous honeſty preferred before ſecure utility.

J. Segovius.

In the mean time Meſſengers were ſent unto the Princes, to declare the Depoſition of Eugenius by the Synod, and publiſh it abroad.

During this time, the corrupt Air was nothing at all purged, but the Mortality daily increaſing, many died and were ſick. Whereupon a ſudden fear came upon the Fathers. Neither were they ſufficiently adviſed what they might do; for they thought it not to be without danger, either to depart or to tarry. Notwithſtanding, they thought it good to tarry, and alſo they cauſed others to tarry; that ſince they had overcome famine, and the aſſaults of their enemies on earth, they would not ſeem to ſhrink for the perfection of any Plague or Sickneſs. But forſomuch as they could not all be kept there, it was politickly provided, that the Council ſhould not ſeem to be diſſolved for any mans departure. And for the more eſtabliſhment of the matter, there were certain things read before the Fathers, which they called De ſtabilimento, whoſe authority continued long time after. When as the Dog-days were come, and that all Herbs withered with heat, the Peſtilence daily increaſed more and more, that it is incredible how many died. It was too horrible to ſee the Coarſes hourly carried through the Streets, when on every ſide there was weeping, wailing and ſighing. There was no houſe void of mourning; no mirth or laughter in any place, but Matrons bewailing their Husbands, and the Husbands their Wives. Men and Women went through the Streets, and durſt not ſpeak one to another. Some tarried at home, and otherſome that went abroad, had Perfumes to ſmell unto, to preſerve them againſt the Plague.

A great Peſtilence in Basil.

The Common People died without number; and like as in the cold Autumn the Leafs of the Trees do fall; even ſo did the Youth of the City conſume and fall away. The violence of the diſeaſe was ſuch, that ye ſhould have met a man merry in the Street now, and within ten hours heard that he had been buried. The number of the dead Coarſes was ſuch alſo, that they lacked place to bury them in; inſomuch that all the Church-Yards were digged up, and filled with dead Coarſes, and great holes made in the Pariſh Churches, where a great number of Coarſes being thruſt in together, they covered them over with earth. For which cauſe the Fathers were ſo afraid, that there appeared no bloud in their faces; and ſpecially the ſudden death of Ludovicus the Protonotary died alſo, who was a ſtrong man, and flouriſhing in age, and ſingularly learned of all in both Laws, whom the ſame envious and raging ſickneſs took away in a few hours. By and by, after died Ludovicus the Patriarch of Aquileia, a man of great age, and brought up always in troubles and adverſity, neither could he ſee the day of the Popes Election which he had long wiſhed for. Notwithſtanding, he took partly a conſolation, in that he had ſeen Gabriel depoſed before his death. This mans death was grievous unto all the Fathers; for now they ſaid, that two Pillars of the Council were decayed and overthrown, meaning the Prothonotary and the Patriarch, whereof the one by the law, and the other with his deeds, defended the verity of the Council.

Ludovicus the Prothonotary died of the Plague.

About the ſame time alſo died the King of Arragon's Almoner in Switzerland, a man of excellent learning, being Biſhop of Ebrom. The Abbot of Vergilia died at Spire, and John the Biſhop of Lubeck, between Vienna and Buda.

The exhortation of Inſtincts which died.

Theſe two laſt rehearſed, even at the point of death, did this thing worthy of remembrance. When as they perceived the hour of their death approach, calling unto them certain grave and wiſe men, ſaid, All you that be here preſent, pray to God that he will convert ſuch as knowledge Gabriel for high Biſhop, for in that ſtate they cannot be ſaved; and profeſſing themſelves, that they would die in the Faith of the Council of Baſil, they departed in the Lord. In Boheme alſo departed the Biſhop of Conſtance, which was Embaſſador for the Council. There was great fear fear and trembling throughout all the Council. There had been alſo in the Council, by a long time, the Abbot of Dona, of the Dioceſs of Cumana, a man poor unto the World, but rich unto God, whom neither flattering nor threatning could turn away from his good purpoſe and intent, chuſing rather to beg in the truth of the Fathers, than to abound in riches with the falſe flattering adverſaries.

The Biſhops of Conſtance dieth.

The Abbot Dona, a true Abbot.

Whereupon, after the Lords were departed which gave him his living, he remaining ſtill, was ſtricken with the Plague and died. Likewiſe a great number of the Regiters and Doctors died; and ſuch as fell into that Diſeaſe, few or none eſcaped. One amongſt all the reſt, Æneas Sylvius, being ſtricken with this Diſeaſe, by Gods help eſcaped. This man lay three days even at the point of death, all men being in deſpair of him; notwithſtanding it pleaſed God to grant him longer life. When as the Peſtilence was moſt fervent and hot, and that daily there died about one hundred, there was great intreaty made unto Cardinal Arelatenſis, that he would go to ſome other Town or Village near hand; for theſe were the words of all his friends and houſhold, What do you moſt reverend Father? At the leaſt void this Wane of the Moon and ſave your ſelf; who being ſafe, all we ſhall alſo be ſafe; if you dy, we all periſh. If the Plague oppreſs you, unto whom ſhall we fly? Who ſhall rule us? Or who ſhall be the guide of this moſt faithful flock? The infection hath already invaded your Chamber. Your Secretary and Chamberlain are already dead. Conſider the great danger, and ſave both your ſelf and us. But neither the intreaty of his Houſhold, neither the coarſes of thoſe which were dead could move him, willing rather to preſerve the Council with peril of his life, than to ſave his life with peril of the Council; for he did know, that if he ſhould depart, few would have tarried behind, and that deceit ſhould have been wrought in his abſence.

Æneas Sylvius the author hereof eſcaped death hardly.

The invincible conſtancy and fortitude of the Cardinal Arelatenſis.

Wherefore, like as in Wars the Soldiers fear no danger, when as they ſee their Captain in the midſt of their enemies: ſo the Fathers of the Council were aſhamed to fly from this Peſtilence, ſeeing their Prelident to remain with them in the midſt of all dangers. Which theſe doings did utterly ſubvert the opinion of them, which babbled abroad, that the Fathers tarried in Baſil, to ſeek their own profit and commodity, and not the verity of the faith; for there is no commodity upon earth which men would change for their lives; for that all ſuch as do ſerve the World, do prefer it before all other things. But theſe our Fathers, ſhewing themſelves an invincible ſtrong Wall for the Houſe of God, vanquiſhing all the craftey deceits which Gabriel uſed, and overcoming all difficulties, which this moſt cruel and peſtiferous year brought upon them, at the length all deſire of life alſo being ſet apart, they have overcome all dangers, and have not doubted with moſt conſtant minds to defend the verity of the Council, even unto this preſent.

The time of the Decree being paſſed, after the Depoſition of Gabriel, it ſeemed good unto the Fathers, to proceed to the Election of another Biſhop. And firſt of all, they nominated thoſe that together with the Cardinals, ſhould elect the Pope. The firſt and principal of the Electors, was the Cardinal Arelatenſis, a man of invincible conſtancy, and incomparable wiſdom; unto whoſe verdict I may juſtly aſcribe whatſoever was done in the Council; for without him, the Prelates had not perſevered in their purpoſe, neither could the ſhadow of any Prince have ſo defended them. This man came not to the Election by any favour or denomination, but by his own proper right. The reſt of the Electors were choſen out of the Italian, French, German and Spaniſh Nations and their Cells and Chambers appointed to them by lots, without reſpect of dignity or perſon, and as the lots fell, ſo were they placed; whereby it chanced a Doctor to have the higheſt place, and a Biſhop the laſt. Wherein the diſtribution of lots was very ſtrange, or rather a divine diſpenſation, reproving the devices of man, whereas the Prelates had determined to have the beſt Chambers appointed for themſelves, and had earneſtly contended before to have their Chambers appointed according to their dignity.

The commendation of Arelatenſis.

The counſel of Marcus.

The next day after there was a Seſſion holden, wherein Marcus a famous Divine, made an Oration unto the Electors, wherein he reckoned up the manifold crimes of Gabriel, which was depoſed. He endeavoured to perſwade the Electors to chuſe ſuch a man, which ſhould in all points be contrary unto Gabriel, and eſchew all his vices; that as he, through his manifold reproaches, was hurtful unto all men, ſo he which ſhould be choſen, ſhould ſhew himſelf acceptable unto all men, through juſtice; and as Gabriel was covetous and full of rapine, ſo this man ſhould ſhew himſelf continent.

{KING} 1 Hen. 6.

There was ſo great a number of people gathered together to behold this matter, that neither in the Church, neither in the Streets, any man could paſs. There was preſent John Earl of Dierſein, who ſupplied the place of the Emperors Protector; alſo the Senators of the City, with many other Noblemen, to behold the ſame, whereof you ſhall hear (Chriſt willing) more largely hereafter. The Citizens were without in Armour, to take care that there ſhould be no uproar made. The Electors received the Communion together, and afterwards they received their Oath; and the Cardinal Arelatenſis, opening the Book of Decrees, read the form of the Oath in the audience of all men, and firſt of all, he taking the Oath himſelf, began in this manner:

The godly Oath of Arelatenſis.

Moſt reverend Fathers, I promiſe, ſwear and vow before my Lord Jeſus Chriſt (whoſe moſt bleſſed Body I unworthy ſinner have received, unto whom in the laſt Judgment, I ſhall give an account of all my deeds) that in this buſineſs of Election, whereunto now by the will of the Council we are ſent, I will ſeek nothing elſe, but the only ſalvation of the Chriſtian People, and the proſit of the Univerſal Church. That I ſhall be my whole care and ſtudy, that the authority of the General Councils be not contemned, that the Catholick Faith be not impugned, and that the Fathers which remain in the Council be not oppreſſed. This will I ſeek for; this ſhall be my care; unto this, with all my whole force and power, will I bend my ſelf; neither will I reſpect any thing in this point, either for mine own cauſe, or for any friend, but only God, and the proſit of the Church. With this mind and intent, and with this heart will I take mine Oath before the Council.

The other Electors take their Oath.

His words were lively and fearful. After him all the other Electors in their order, did ſwear and take their Oath. Then they went with great ſolemnity unto the Conclave, where they remained ſeven days. The manner of their Election was in this ſort. Before the Cardinals Seat was ſet a Desk, whereupon there ſtood a Baſon of Silver, into the which Baſon all the Electors did caſt their Schedules; which the Cardinal receiving, read one by one, and four other of the Electors wrote as he read them.

The tenor of the Schedules was in this manner: I George Biſhop of Vicene, do chuſe ſuch a man, or ſuch a man, for Biſhop of Rome, and peradventure named one or two; every one of the Electors ſubſcribed his name unto the Schedule, that he might thereby know his own, and ſay nay, if it were contrary to that which was ſpoken; whereby all deceit was utterly excluded. The firſt ſcrutiny thus ended, it was found that there were many named to the Papacy; yet none had ſufficient voices, for that day there were 17 of divers Nations nominate. Notwithſtanding, Amedeus Duke of Savoy, a man of ſingular vertue, ſurmounted them all; for in the firſt ſcrutiny he had the voice of 16 Electors, which judged him worthy to govern the Church.

Amedeus Duke of Savoy.

A ſcrutiny in a privy election by voices.

After this, there was a diligent inquiſition had in the Council touching thoſe which were named of the Electors, and as every mans opinion ſerved him, he did either praiſe or diſcommend thoſe which were nominate. Notwithſtanding, there was ſuch report made of Amedeus, that in the next ſcrutiny, which was holden in the Nones of November, the ſaid Amedeus had 21 Voices, and likewiſe in the 3d and 4th ſcrutiny, 21 Voices. And forſomuch as there was none found in all the ſcrutiny to have 2 parts, all the other Schedules were burnt. And forſomuch as there lacked but only one Voice to the Election of the high Biſhop, they fell unto prayer, deſiring God that he would vouchſafe to direct their minds to an unity and concord, worthily to elect and chuſe him which ſhould take the charge over the flock of God. Forſomuch as Amedeus ſeemed to be nearer unto the Papacy than all other, there was great communication had amongſt them touching his life and diſpoſition. Some ſaid that a Lay-man ought not ſo ſuddenly to be choſen; for it would ſeem a ſtrange thing, for a ſecular Prince to be called unto the Biſhoprick of Rome; which would alſo too much derogate from the Eccleſiaſtical ſtate,

Prayer for unity and concord.

{KING} 1 Hen. 6.

as though there were none therein meet or worthy for that dignity. Otherſome ſaid, that a man which was married and had children, was unmeet for ſuch a charge. Otherſome again affirmed, that the Biſhop of Rome ought to be a Doctor of Law, and an excellet learned man.

When theſe words were ſpoken, otherſome riſing up, ſpake far otherwiſe; that albeit Amedeus was no Doctor, yet was he learned and wiſe, forſomuch as all his whole youth he had beſtowed in learning and ſtudy, and had ſought not the name, but even the ground of Learning. Then ſaid another, if ye be deſirous to be inſtructed further of this Princes life, I pray you give ear unto me, which do know him throughly. Truly this man from his youth upward, and even from his young and tender years, hath lived more religiouſly than ſecularly, being always obedient to his Parents and Maſters, and being always indued with the fear of God, never given to any vanity or wantonneſs; neither hath there at any time been any child of the Houſe of Savoy, in whom hath appeared greater wit or towardneſs; whereby all thoſe which did behold and know this man, judged and foreſaw ſome great matter in him; neither were they deceived. For if ye deſire to know his rule and governance, what and how noble it hath been; firſt, know ye this, that this man hath reigned, ſince his Fathers deceaſe, about forty years.

Let lying Eugenius be aſhamed of his falſe Invective againſt Amedeus.

During whoſe time, Juſtice, the Lady and Queen of all other Vertues, hath always flouriſhed: For he, hearing his Subjects himſelf, would never ſuffer the poor to be oppreſſed, or the weak to be deceived. He was the defender of the Fatherleſs, the advocate of the Widows, and protector of the Poor. There was no Rapine or Robbery in all his Territory. The poor and rich lived all under one law, neither was he burthenous to his Subjects, or importune againſt ſtrangers throughout all his Country; there were no grievous exactions of Mony throughout all his Dominion. He thought himſelf rich enough, if the Inhabitants of his Dominions did abound and were rich; knowing that it was the point of a good Shepherd to ſhear his Sheep, and not to devour them. In this alſo was his chief ſtudy and care, that his Subjects might live in peace, and ſuch as bordered upon him, might have no occaſion of grudge.

By which policies he did not only quietly govern his Fathers Dominion, but alſo augmented the ſame by others, which willingly ſubmitted themſelves unto him. He never made War upon any, but refuſing againſt ſuch as made War upon him, he ſtudied rather to make peace, than to ſeek any revenge, deſiring rather to overcome his enemies with benefits, than with the Sword. He married only one Wife, which was a Noble Virgin, and of ſingular beauty and chaſtity. He would have all his Family to keep their hands and eyes chaſt and continent, and throughout all his houſe, honeſty and integrity of manners was obſerved. When as his Wife had changed her life, and that he perceived his Dutchy to be eſtabliſhed, and that it ſhould come without any controverſie unto his Poſterity, he declared his mind, which was always religious, and dedicate unto God, and ſhewed what will and affection he had long born in his heart. For he contemning the pomp and ſtate of this World, calling unto him his dear friends, departed and went into a Wilderneſs; where building a goodly Abby, he addicted himſelf wholly to the ſervice of God, and taking his Croſs upon him, followed Chriſt. In which place he being converſant by the ſpace of many years, ſhewed forth great examples of holineſs, wearing no other garments but ſuch as could withſtand the cold, neither uſing any kind of dainty fare, but only to reſiſt hunger, watching and praying the moſt part of the Night. Wherefore this Prince is not newly come unto the Church (as ſome do ſuppoſe) but being a Chriſtian, born of Progenitors, a thouſand years and more, being Chriſtians, doth now ſerve God in a Monaſtery.

Commendation of Amedeus Pope elect.

But as touching that alſo which is ſpoken concerning a Wife, I do not regard it; when as not he only which hath had a Wife, but he alſo which hath a Wife may be elect and choſen Pope. For why do the Doctors diſpute, whether a married man choſen Pope, ought to perform his duty towards his Wife, but only becauſe a married man might be received and choſen? For as you know well enough, there were many Popes that had Wives; and Peter alſo was not without a Wife. But what do we ſtand about this? For peradventure, it had been better that more Prieſts had been married; for many ſhould be ſaved through Marriage, which are now damned through their ſingle life. But hereof we will (ſaith he) ſpeak in another place. But this ſeemeth unto me rather to be laughed at, than worthy any anſwer, which is objected touching his children; for what can children (ſpecially being of great age) be impediment or let unto the Father being a Biſhop? Doth not the Scripture ſay, We be unto him that is alone; for if he fall, he hath none to help him up again? This cannot be imputed unto the Prince? for he hath two ſons, both comely and wiſe, whereof the one is Prince of Piemont, the other Earl of the Gevennians; theſe men will rule the Country of Savoy in the abſence of their Father, and will help him if he have need; for they have already learned to rule over that people. I pray you what hurt is it for a Biſhop of Rome to have valiant children, which may help their Father againſt Tyrants? O moſt reverend Fathers, the more I do behold the ſtorm of this moſt perverſe and froward time, the more I do conſider the vexations and troubles which the Church is now tormented withal; I do ſo much the more think it profitable, yea and neceſſary, that this man ſhould be choſen Prince and Head; I will think that God hath ſhewed his mercy upon us, if I may ſee him have the governance over this Boat; I pray you conſider into what ſtraits we are now driven, with what perils we are now vexed and toſſed? What Prince is it that is obedient unto this Council? For ſome will not confeſs, that the Council is here, neither receive our Decrees: Otherſome confeſs it in their words, but by their deeds they declare it to be at Florence. For albeit that by their words and Letters, they do not deny that the Church is here, yet do they procure Promotions at the hands of Gabriel which is defaced. This is the ſtate of the Church with theſe ſtorms and tempeſts the Ship is ſhaken and bruiſed; wicked children have riſen up againſt their Mother, which being unmindful of their Mothers labours and kindneſs towards them, deſpiſe her, contemn her, and beat her. What is to be done herein? Shall we chuſe a bare man, which ſhall rather be derided of our Princes, than had in reverence? The days are not now, that men have reſpect only unto vertue, for (as the Satyrical Poet writeth) vertue is praiſed, but is coldly followed. A poor man ſpeaketh, and they aſk what he is? Truly vertue is good, but for our purpoſe it muſt be marked and looked upon, whether it be in a rich man, or a poor man; you muſt chuſe a Governour which may rule the Ship not only by counſel, but by power alſo. The wind is great; wherefore except the counſel be good, and the power ſtrong, the Ship ſhall be broken and all put in danger. The memorial is yet freſh before our eyes, that the Princes do neglect the authority which is of no force or power. Is there not great valiantneſs ſhewed in this point, in that you fearing no peril or danger, either of life or goods, have ſo long contended for the truth of Chriſt? But the moſt mighty and high God looketh down from on high, and will reſiſt this their pride. I have often conſented unto their opinion, which ſaid it was expedient that the Temporal Dominions ſhould be divided from the Eccleſiaſtical ſtate; for I did think that the Prieſts ſhould thereby be made more apt to the divine Miniſtry, and ſecular Princes more obedient to the Clergy. But forſomuch as at this preſent the Churches of the World are poſſeſſed, partly by Eugenius, and partly by other Tyrants, we muſt provide that we chuſe ſuch a one, which may recover again the Patrimony of the Church, and in whom the office of Chriſts Vicar may not be contemned; through the ſhield of whoſe power their contumacy may be ſuppreſſed, which contemn both vertity and reaſon. Whereunto no man ſeemeth unto me more apt or meet, than Amedeus Duke of Savoy, which holdeth the one part of his poſſeſſions in Italy, and the other in France; unto whom all Chriſtian Princes are allied either by conſanguinity, or joyned by amity and friendſhip, and whoſe vertue, how famous it is, I have already declared. Why do we then ſtay or doubt to chuſe him, than whom Gabriel feareth no man more. Let him therefore periſh with the ſword wherewithal he hath ſtricken. There is no man which can more pacifie the Church than he. Do ye require devotion in a Biſhop? there is no man more devout than he. Do you require prudence? Now ye underſtand by his former life what manner of man is he. If ye seek for Justice, his people are a witness thereof; so that whether you seek for vertue or power, all are here present before you. Whereupon do ye flay? Go to I pray you, chuse this man. He will augment the faith, he will reform manners, and preserve the authority of the Church. Have ye not heard these troubles of the Church to have been afore spoken of, and that the time now present should be an end of all troubles? Have ye not heard that about this time there should a Pope be chosen which should comfort Sion, and set all things in peace? And who I pray you should be be that could fulfil these things except we chuse this man? Believe me, these sayings must be fulfilled, and I trust that God will move your minds thereunto. Notwithstanding, do whatsoever you shall think most good and holy.

To have a Wife is no let for a good man to be elected Pope. Popes have been married.

Amedeus Duke of Savoy chosen Pope.

When he had spoken these words, the greateſt number of the Electors seemed to consent unto him, and his words took such effect, that in the next scrutiny the matter was finished and ended, and when the scrutiny was opened, it was found that Amedeus, the most devout Duke of Savoy, according to the Decree of the Council, was chosen Pope. Wherefore suddenly, there was great joy and gladness amongst them, and all men highly commended their doings. Then the Cardinal Arelatenſis published unto them the name of the elect Bishop. After this all the Prelates in their Robes, Pontificalibus and Miters, and all the Clergy of the City coming unto the Conclave, the Electors being likewise adorned, they brought him unto the great Church, where after great thanks given unto God, and the Election again declared unto the people, a Hymn being sung for joy, the Congregation was dissolved.

This Amedeus aforesaid, was a man of reverent age, of comely stature, of grave and discreet behaviour; also before married. Who thus being elect for Pope about November, was called Felix the Fifth, and was crowned in the City of Basil, in the Month of July. There was present at his Coronation, Lewis Duke of Savoy; Philip Earl Gebenenſe. Lewis Marquess of Saluzz; The Marquess of Rotelen; Comrade of Winsperg Chamberlain of the Empire: The Earl of Dierstein: The Embassadors of the Cities of Strasbourgh, Bern, Friburgh, Solatorn, with a great multitude of other besides, to the view of 50000 persons. At this Coronation, the Popes two Sons did serve and minister to their Father. Lewis Cardinal of Hostia did set on his Head the Pontifical Diadem, which was esteemed at thirty thousand Crowns. It were long here to recite the whole order and solemnity of the Procession, or the Popes riding about the City. First proceeded the Pope under his Canopy of Cloth of Gold, having on his Head a Triple-Crown, and blessing the people as he went. By him went the Marquess of Rotelen, and Conrade of Winsperg, leading his Horse by the Bridle. The Procession finished, they went to dinner, which lasted four full hours, being excellively sumptuous; where the Popes two Sons were Butlers to his Cup; the Marquess of Saluzz was the Steward, &c.

Of this Felix thus writeth Volaterane in his third Book. That he being desired of certain of the Embassadors, if he had any Dogs or Hounds to shew them; he willed them the next day to repair unto him, and he would shew unto them such as he had. When the Embassadors according to the appointment were come, he shewed to unto them a great number of poor People and Beggars sitting at his Tables at meat, declaring that those were his Hounds, which he every day used to feed, hunting with them (he trusted) for the glory of Heaven to come.

And thus you have heard the ſtate of this Council hitherto, which Council endured a long season, the space of 17 years.

The death of Sigismund the Emperor. Albert the 5th Emperor. Anno 1438.

About the sixth year of the Council, Sigismund the Emperor died, leaving but one Daughter to succeed him in his Kingdoms, whom he had married to Albert the second Duke of Austrich, which first succeeded in the Kingdom of Hungary and Bohemе, being afore adversary to the Bohemians, and afterward was made Emperor, Anno 1438, and reigned Emperor but two years, leaving his Wife, which was Sigismund his Daughter, great with Child. After which Albert succeeded his Brother Frederick, the third Duke of Austrich, in the Empire, &c. Whereof more (Christ willing) hereafter.

The death of Albertus.

In the mean time Eugenius hearing of the death of Sigismund above recited, began to work the dissolution of the Council of Basil, and to transfer it to Ferraria, pretending the coming of the Grecians. Notwithstanding, the Council of Basil, through the disposition of God, and the worthiness of Cardinal Arelatenſis, constantly endured. Albeit in the said Council were many stops and practices to impeach the same, beside the sore Plague of Pestilence which fell in the City, during the said Council. In the which Plague time, besides the death of many worthy men, Æneas Sylvius also himself, the Writer and Compiler of the whole History of that Council, sitting at the feet of the Bishops of Turnon and Lubeck, lay sick three days of the same sore, as is above touched, and never thought to escape. They that died, departed with this exhortation, desiring men to pray to God, that he would convert the hearts of them that stuck to Eugenius as Pope, against that Council, as partly is afore noted, and now repeated again for the better marking. Arelatenſis being moſt instantly exhorted by his friends to fly that danger, could by no means be intreated to avoid, fearing more the danger of the Church, than of his own life.

{KING} {Hen. 6.} The Plague at Basil in the time of the Council.

Æneas Sylvius sick of the Plague in Basil.

The contentful zeal of Arelatenſis to the truth.

Beside these so great difficulties and obstacles to stay and hinder this Council, strange it was to behold the mutation of mens minds. Of whom such as first seemed to favour the Council, after did impugn it; and such as before were against it, in the end shewed themselves most friends unto the same. The chief Cardinals and Prelates, the more they had to lose, the sooner they slipt away, or else lurked in Houses or Towns near, and absented themselves for fear; so that the stay of the Council most rested upon their Proctors, Doctors, Archdeacons, Deans, Provosts, Priors, and such other of the inferiour sort. Whereof Æneas Sylvius, in his 183 Epistle, maketh this relation, where one Caspar Schlick, the Emperors Chancellor, writeth to Cardinal Julian in these words, Those Cardinals (saith he) which so long time magnified so highly the authority of the Church, and of General Councils, seeming as though they were ready to spend their lives for the same, now at the sight of one Letter from their King (wherein yet no death was threatned, but loss of their promotions) slipt away from Basil. And in the same Epistle, deridingly commendeth them, as wife men, that had rather lose their faith than their flock. Albeit (saith he) they departed not far away, but remained about Solatorn, waiting for other commandments from their Prince. Whereby it may appear how they did shrink away not willingly; but the Burse (quoth he) bindeth faster than true honour,

Æneas Sylvius, epiſt. 189.

The wealthy Prelates slide away from the Council. Wealthy Prelates a-fraid of truth. Fide quam mutant, carne mutant. Promotions choke the Clergy.

Quid enim salvis infamia nummis? that is to say, What matter maketh the name of a Man, so his Many be safe? Hæc Æneas.

Moreover, in one of the Sessions of the said Council, the worthy Cardinal Arelatenſis is said thus to have reported, that Christ was sold for thirty pence; but I (said he) was sold much more dear: For Gabriel, otherwise called Eugenius Pope, offered threescore thousand Crowns, who so would take me, and present me unto him. And they that took the said Cardinal, afterward excused their fact by another colour, pretending the cause, for that the Cardinals Brother, what time the Armiakes wasted Asiatia, had brought great damage to the Inhabitants there, and therefore they thought (said they) that they might lawfully lay hands upon a Frenchman, wheresoever they might take him. At length by the Bishop of Strasbourgh, Rupert, and the said City, the matter was taken up, and he refused. Wherein no doubt appeared the hand of God, in defending his life from the peſtilent danger of the Pope his adversary. Ex Paralip. Abbat. Urſper.

60000 Crowns offered by Pope Eugenius, for the betraying of Arelatenſis. &c.

Arelatenſis taken and refused. Gods defence toward his servants. Ex Paralip. Abbat. Urſper.

And thus far having proceeded in the matters of this forefaid Council, until the election of Amedeus, called Pope Felix the Fifth, before we prosecute the reſt that remaineth thereof to be spoken, the order and course of times requireth to intermix withal the relidue pertaining to the matters concluded between this Council and the Bohemians, declaring the whole circumstances of the Embassage, their Articles, Disputations and Answers, which they had first in the said Council, then in their own Country with the Councils Embassadors; also with their Petitions and Answers unto the same.

Touching the story of the Bohemians, how they being sent for, came up to the Council of Basil, and how they appeared, and what was there concluded and agreed, partly before before hath been expressed. Now as leisure serveth from other matters, to return again unto the same, it remaineth to prosecute the reſt that lacketh, so far as both brevity may be observed, and yet the Reader not defrauded of such things, principally worthy in the same to be noted and known.

The Bohemians then (as is before declared) having always the upper hand, albeit they were accused by the new Bishop Eugenius, yet it was thought good that they should be called unto Basil, where the Council was appointed. Whereupon Cardinal Julian sent thither before John Pulmiar Doctor of the Law, and John de Ragusio, a Divine. Who coming unto Basil in the Month of August, Anno 1431. called by their Letters unto the Council, John Abbot of Muldrun, and Johan Gelhusius, Monk of the same Cloister; which men for dexterity of their wit and experience, and knowledge of Countries, were very meet and neceſſary for Embassages.

Within a few days after, Julianus also came thither, as he had promiſed, and immediately sent out John Gelhusius, and Hammon Offenburgh, a Senator of Basil, first unto the Emperor Sigismund being at Feldirch, and afterward unto Frederick Duke of Austrich, for the appeasing of the Wars between him and Philip Duke of Burgundy. This was done, to the intent that peace being had, not only the Eccleſiaſtical Prelates, but also the Merchants might have safe access unto Basil, and so bring in all things neceſſary for sustentation.

The Bohemians invited to come to the Council.

They going on this Embassage, received Letters from the Synod, to be delivered unto the Emperor Sigismund, whereby the Bohemians and Moravians were called unto the Council. These Letters he by and by caused to be carried unto Boheme. But forsomuch as he himself went into Italy, to receive the Imperial Crown of the Bishop, he left William Duke of Bavaria, as his Deputy, to be Protector unto the Council. Furthermore, when as the Synod understood that our men would take a peace with the Bohemians, after their moſt shameful flight, they sent John Niderus a Divine, and John Gelhusius, to comfort the people which joyned upon Boheme, and earneſtly to move the Moravians and Bohemians, which were before called, to come unto the Council.

They departing from Basil, about the end of October, took their journey toward Monacum, a Town of Bavaria; where, after they had saluted William Duke of Bavaria, and his Brother Ernestus, and Albert the Son of Ernestus, and had declared the Commission of their Embassage, and had shewed unto Duke William, how that as soon as he should come unto Basil, the protection of the Council should be committed unto him by the Emperor; they exhorted Frederick Marquess of Brandenburgh, and John Duke of Bavaria, the Senate of Noremberg, and other Princes and Lords, partly by the Letters of the Council, and partly by words of mouth, that they should by no means take any Truce with the Bohemians, for that it might be hurtful unto the Church, and said they should have aid out of hand. They desired them also in the name of the Council, That if the Bohemians would send their Embassadors unto Basil, they would guide them, every man through his Country in safety; which they promised to do. It is incredible how all men rejoyced that the Bohemians were sent for.

The Bohemians labored to come to the Council.

After this, when as they counselled with the Senate of Noremberg, touching the sending of the Councils Letters unto Boheme, it seemed best first of all to inquire of the Rulers of Egra, whether the Bohemians had made any answer to the former Letters of the Council which they had sent. The Rulers of Egra, being advertised by these Letters, sent him which carried the Councils Letters into Boheme, unto Noremberg. He reported how reverently the Council of the greater City of Prague received the Letters, and how he was rewarded.

Whereupon they conceived great hope of the good ſucceſs of the Embassage. Therefore the Embassadors uſing the counsel of the Senate of Noremberg, and divers others, sent the messenger back again unto Egra, with their own private Letters, and with Letters of the Council; for there was no better mean to send the Letters to Boheme. Much travel was taken by them of Egra, Frederick Marquess of Brandenburgh, and John Duke of Bavaria, in this matter; for that they were very desirous that peace might be had amongſt Chriſtians. The Copy of those Letters, whereby the Synod did call the Bohemians unto the Council, and other Letters exhortatory of the Embassadors, and the Bohemians answer unto the same, for brevities cause we have here pretermitted. The Bohemians not in all points truſting unto the Embassadors, required by their Letters that the Councils Embassadors, with the other Princes, would come unto Egra, where their Embassadors should also be present, to intreat upon the safe conduct, and other matters.

The day was appointed for the meeting, the Sunday after Easter, which was the twenty seventh day of April. Then came the Embassadors of the Council unto Egra, with the noble Princes Frederick Marquess of Brandenburgh, and John Duke of Bavaria, with other Nobles, almoſt to the number of 252 Horse. But none of the Bohemians were present, because the Inhabitants of Pilsana, and the Lord Swambergius had not sent their safe conduct. When they understood this by their Letters, they brought it to pass, that the Embassadors of the Bohemians, Nicolaus Humpelzius, Secretary of the greater City of Prague, and Matthew Clumpezane, President of Pisina, should be brought forth by them of Egra, and the Elenbogenſes, and so they came unto Egra with nineteen Horse, the 8th day of May. The next day after Henry Tocgye received the Bohemian Embassadors before the Marquess with an eloquent Oration, taking this part of the Gospel for his Theme, Pax vobis, i. Peace be with you. When they propounded what great injuries they had hitherto received at their hands, which was the cause of so many great slaughters on either party, and that they were glad that yet now at the length there were some hope that they should be heard.

The Embassadors of the Bohemians, and of the Council, meet together at Egra.

After this they conferred as touching the safe conduct. The Bohemians required pledges, and that not of the common sort, but Princes and Nobles. Which thing, forasmuch as it did not content the Embassadors, and that the matter should so be put off, the common People of Egra began to cry out, That it was long of the Eccleſiaſtical Princes, that a concord was not made with the Bohemians. Then Frederick Marquess of Brandenburgh, and John Duke of Bavaria, bound themselves of their own good wills. The like also did William Duke of Bavaria, at the requeſt of the Council. Likewise also did the Council and the Emperor Sigismund. Furthermore, promise was made, That all the Princes and Cities should do the like, through whose dominion they should come, and the City of Basil also. The copy of which safe conduct was afterward sent unto Prague. This also was required by the Bohemians, That if it were possible the Emperor should be present at the Council.

The Bohemians require the Emperor to be present at the Council.

This convention at Egra, continued 21 days. But the Bohemians, albeit they heard the Councils Embassadors make great promises, yet did they not fully give credit unto them. Whereupon they chose out two Embassadors, Nicholas Humpelzius, and John Zaczenſes, which should go to Basil, and diligently enquire out all things. These men, Conrade Bishop of Ratisbone, and Conrade Seglawer Dean of Eistein brought into Cattelſburg, where the Marquess dwelt, being sent out by the Synod a little before, to enquire whether the Bohemian Embassadors would come or not. When they were come to Biberach, one being overcurious, inquired of one of the Bohemian Embassadors, of what County he was. He answered that he was a Zaczen. There (said he) are moſt execrable heretickes and naughty men, &c. Who for that slanderous word, as a breaker of the truce, was straightway carried to Priſon, and there should have suffered more punishment, if the Bohemian Embassadors, and the Abbot of Eberz, had not intreated for him. When they came unto Basil, they were honourably received with Wine and Fish. They tarried there five days and a half. The tenth day of October they came unto the Synod, which was assembled at the Friers Augustines.

The Bohemians bound to return.

These Embassadors, when as they were returned home with the Charter of the Synod, and declared those things which they had seen, and that the matter was earneſtly handled without fraud or deceit; there were Embassadors chosen to be sent unto the Council, both for the Kingdom of Boheme, and the Marquesdom of Moravia, which coming unto Tuſca, were brought from thence with thirty two Horse, and divers Noblemen unto Chambia. From thence they came to Swenkenderph, and so unto Noremberg, where, beside their entertainment of Wine and Fish, 22 Horsemen accompanied them unto Ulmes; from thence they of Ulmes brought them unto Biberach and Sulgotia, where James Tunches a Knight, receiving them, brought them to Stockacum, and from thence the Bands of the Duke of Bavaria, brought them unto Schaf-huse. There they taking Ship the fourth day of January, came unto Basil the ninth day of the same Month. What were the names of these Embassadors of the Bohemians, which were brought up with three hundred Horse, and how they were received at Basil, mention is made before. When as they came unto the Synod, Cardinal Julian made an Oration, That what soever was in any place in doubt, the same ought to be determined by the authority of the Council, forsomuch as all men are bound to submit themselves to the judgment of the holy Church, which the General Council doth represent. Which Oration was not allowed of all the Bohemians.

The Oration of the Cardinal Julian to the Bohemians. Vide supra.

Then Rochezanus made an Oration, requiring to have a day appointed when they should be heard, which was appointed the fifteenth day of the same Month. Upon which day John Rochezanus, having made his Preface, began to propound the first Article, touching the Communion to be ministred under both kinds, and disputed upon the same by the space of three days always before Noon. Then Wenceslaus the Thaborite disputed upon the second Article, touching the correction and punishing of sin, by the space of two days. After whom Uldericus Priest of the Orphans propounded and disputed upon the third Article by the space of two days, touching the free preaching of the Word of God.

The 1st Article of the Bohemians propounded by the first Embassador.

The 2d Article of the Bohemians, by the second Embassador.

The 3d Article of the Bohemians, by the 3d Embassador.

Last of all, Peter Pain an Englishman, disputed three days upon the 4th Article, touching the civil dominion of the Clergy, and afterward gave Copies of their Disputations in writing unto the Council, with hearty thanks that they were heard. The three last did somewhat inveigh against the Council, condemning John Hus and John Wickliff for their Doctrine. Whereupon John de Ragusio, a Divine riling up, defired that he might have leave to answer in his own name, to the first Article of the Bohemians. The Council consented thereunto; so that by the space of eight days in the Fore-noon, he disputed thereupon. But before he began to answer, John the Abbot of Sistertia made an Oration unto the Bohemians, that they should submit themselves to the determination of the holy Church, which this Council doth represent. This matter did not a little offend the Bohemians. John Ragusinus a Divine, after Scholas fashion, in his answer spake often of Heresies and Hereticks. Procopius could not suffer it, but riling up with an angry stomach complained openly to the Council of this injury. This our Countryman (saith he) doth us great injury, calling us oftentimes Hereticks. Whereunto Ragusinus answered, forsomuch as I am your Countryman both by Tongue and Nation, I do the more delire to reduce you again unto the Church. He was a Dalmatian born, and it appeareth that the Dalmatians, going into Boheme, took their name by their Country which they possessed. It came almost to this point, that through this offence the Bohemians would depart from Basil, and could scarcely be appeased. Certain of the Bohemians would not hear Ragusinus finish his Disputation.

The Oration of the Abbot of Sistertia, offensive to the Bohemians.

John Ragusinus replieth against the 1st Article.

The Bohemians displeased with Ragusinus.

After him a famous Divine, one Egidius Carlerius, Dean of the Church of Cambray, answered unto the second Article, by the space of four days. To the third Article answered one Henricus, firnamed Frigidum Fegrum, three days together. Last of all one Johannes Polomarius, Master of the requests of the Palace, answered unto the 4th Article likewise by the space of 3 days, so that the long time which they used in Disputations seemed tedious unto the Bohemians. Notwithstanding this answer, the Bohemians still defended their Articles, and specially the first, insomuch as John Rochezanus did strongly impugn Ragusinus answer by the space of six days. But forsomuch as one Disputation bred another, and it was not perceived how that by this means any concord could be made; the Prince William Duke of Bavaria Protector of the Council, attempted another remedy, that all Disputations being set apart, the matter should be friendly debated.

Egidius Carlerius answereth to the second Article. Henry Cadoren answereth to the 3d Article. J. Polomarius answereth to the 4th Article.

There were certain appointed on either part to intreat upon the concord; who coming together the eleventh day of March, those which were appointed for the Council, were demanded to say their minds. It seemed good, said they, if these men would be united unto us, and be made one body with us, that this body might then accord, declare and determine all manner of diversities of opinions and sects, what is to be believed or done in them.

{KING Hen. 5. Ex Cochlæo, Hist. lib. 7.} Certain chosen on both sides to determine the matter.

The Bohemians, when they had a while paused, said, This way seemed not apt enough, except first of all the four Articles were exactly discussed, so that either we should agree with them, or they with us; for otherwise it would be but a frivolous matter, if they being now united, again disagree in the deciding of the Articles. Here answer was made to the Bohemians, That if they were rightly united, and the aid of the Holy Ghost called for, they should not err in the deciding of the matter, forasmuch as every Christian ought to believe that Determination; which if they would do, it would breed a most firm and strong concord and amity on either part. But this answer satisfied them not, insomuch that the other three rose up and disputed against the answers which were given. At that time Cardinal Julian Freisident of the Council, made this Oration unto the Bohemian Embassadors.

The Oration of Cardinal Julian to the Bohemians.

That sacred Synod, saith he, hath now by the space of ten days patiently heard the Propositions of your four Articles; and afterward he annexed, You have propounded, saith he, four Articles, but we understand that, beside these four, you have many other strange Doctrines, wherein ye dissent from us. Wherefore it is necessary, if that a perfect unity and fraternity shall follow between us, that all these things be declared in the Council, to be end that by the grace of the Holy Ghost, which is the author of peace and truth, due provision may be made therein. For we have not gathered these things of light conjectures, but have heard them of credible persons, and partly here are some present which have seen them with their own eyes in Boheme, and partly we do gather it by your own reports. For Master Nicholas, which was the second that did propound, amongst other things alledged, that John Wickliff was an Evangelical Doctor. If ye believe him to be a true Doctor, it followeth that you must repute his works as authentick; if ye do not so think, it is reason that it should be opened unto us.

The Oration of Cardinal Julian.

Nicholas the second propounders, charged by the Cardinal, for commending of John Wickliff.

Wherefore we desire you, that you will certifie us upon these and certain other points, what you do believe, or what credit you do give unto them. But we do not require, that you should now declare your reasons but it shall satisfie us, if you will answer unto every Article by this word, Credimus aut non credimus, that is, We believe, or believe not. Which if you will do, (as we trust you will) then we shall manifestly perceive that you desire that we should conceive a good estimation of you. If there be any thing wherein you would be certified by us, ask it boldly, and we will give you an answer out of hand; for we are ready, according to the Doctrine of Saint Peter, to render account unto every man which shall require it, touching the Faith which we hold. Hereunto the Bohemian Embassadors answered in few words, That they came only to propound those four Articles, not in their own name, but in the name of the whole Kingdom of Boheme, and spake no more. Whereupon William the noble Protector of the Council, calling upon him four men on either part, intreated touching the pacifying the matter, by whose advice the Council decreed to send a famous Embassage with the Bohemian Embassadors, unto Prague, where the People should assemble upon Sunday. But they would not receive these conditions of peace which were offered, but made hafte to depart. Whereupon the 14th day of April, there were ten chosen out of the Council, to go with the Bohemian Embassadors unto Prague.

A prudent answer of the Bohemians to the Cardinal Julian.

The Embassadors of the Bohemians return without agreement.

It were too long here to declare what honour was done unto these Embassadors all the way in their journey, and specially when they came unto Boheme, by the Citizens of Prague, when as a great number of Bohemians were assembled at Prague at the day appointed, both of the Clergy, Nobility and Common people.

The coming of the Legates to Prague. Jo. Rochezanus speaks.

After the coming of those Embassadors, much contention began to rise between the parties. First began John Rochezanus, who speaking in the publick person of the Commonalty, laboured to commend and prefer the four {KING Hen. 5. Ex Cochlæo, Hist. lib. 7.} four verities of the Bohemians before propounded; charging also the Prelates and Priests for their slanderous obtrectations and undeserved contumelies wherewith they did infame the noble Kingdom of Boheme, complaining also that they would not receive those Christian verities, left and allowed by their King Wenceslaus now departed. Wherefore he required them in the behalf of the whole Nation, that they would leave off hereafter to oppress them in such fort, that they would reltore to them again their Josephs vesture, that is, the ornament of their good fame and name, wherein their brethren, their enemies had spoiled them, &c.

To this Polomar. maketh answer again, with a long and curious Oration, exhorting them to peace and unity of the Church, which if they would embrace, all other obstacles and impediments (said he) should be soon removed, promising also, that this their vesture of honour and fame should be amply reltord again; and afterward, if there were any doubtful matters, they might and should be the better discussed.

Polomar answereth to the Bohemians.

The Bohemians reply again to Polomar.

But all this pleased not the Bohemians, unless they might first have a declaration of their four Articles, which if they might obtain, they promised then to embrace peace and concord. Which peace (said they) began first to be broken by themselves, in that the Council of Constance, by their unjust condemnation, burned John Hus, and Jerome of Prague, and also by their cruel Bulls and Censures, raised up first Excommunication, then War against the whole Kingdom of Boheme.

Polomar enticeth the Councell. General Councils may err and have erred.

Hereunto Polomar, reclaiming again, began to advance and magnifie the honour and dignity of General Councils. To conclude, as much as the said Polomar did extol the authority of the Council, so much did the answer of the Bohemians extenuate the same; saying, That the later Councils which are not expressed in the Law of God, have erred, and might err, not only in faith, but also in manners. For that which hath chanced to the green wood, may also chance unto the dry. But of other, the moft strong Pillars of the Militant Church, the Apostles I mean, seem all to have erred, and the Catholick Faith to have remained three days found and incorrupt only in the Virgin Mary. No christian man therefore ought to be compelled to stand to the determination of the Pope or the Council, except it be in that which is plainly expressed in the Law of God. For it is evident, that all the General Councils which have been of long time, have reformed very few things as touching the faith, peace and manners of the Church, but have always, both in their lite and decrees, notoriously swarved, and have not eltablished themselves upon the foundation which is Christ. Wherefore the said Bohemians protested, that they would not simply and plainly (God being their good Lord) yield themselves to their Doctrine, nor to such rash and hatty Decrees; left through that their hatty and unicircumspect submission, they should bind their faith and life contrary to the wholesome and found Doctrine of our Lord Christ Jesus. In sum, in no cale they would enter into any agreement of peace, except their four Articles which they counted for Evangelical verities, were first accepted and approved. Which being obtained (said they) if they would condescend with them in the verity of the Gospel, so would they joyn together, and be made one with them in the Lord, &c. Ex Cochleo, hist. lib. 7.

Ex Cochleo, Hist. lib. 7.

The Embassadors of the Council and the Bohemians could not agree.

A declaration of three Articles granted to the Bohemians by the Council.

The Embassadors of the Bohemians when they came to the Council, declared unto them in a certain form, which they sent unto the Council by three Bohemian Embassadors.

Afterward the Council sent a Declaration into Boheme, to be published unto the People in the common Assemblies of the Kingdom, by the Embassadors, which were commanded to report unto the Bohemians, in the name of the Council, that if they would receive the Declaration of those three Articles, and the Unity of the Church, there should be a mean found whereby the matter touching the fourth Article, of the Communion under both kinds, should be passed with peace and quietness.

A Declaration of the Council to the Bohemians concerning the first three Articles.

They propounded in Prague, in an open Assembly of the Nobles and Commons, the Declarations of the three Articles in form following:

Forsomuch as touching the Doctrine of the verity, we ought to proceed soberly and warily, that the truth may be declared with words being so orderly conceived and uttered, that there be no offence given to any man, whereby he should fall to take occasion of error, and (to use the words of Modene) that nothing by obscurity be left doubtful; whereas you have propounded touching the inhibition and correction of sins in these words, All mortal sins and specially open offences ought to be rooted out, punished and inhibited, by them whose duty it is so to do, reasonably and according to the Law of God: here it is to be marked and understood, that this word (whose duty it is) is too general, and may be an offence; and according to the meaning of the Scripture, we ought not to lay any stumbling stock before the blind, and the ditches are to be closed up, that our neighbours Ox do not fall therein; all occasion of offence is to be taken away. Therefore we say, that according to the meaning of the holy Scripture, and the Doctrine of the holy Doctors, it is thus universally to be holden, That all mortal sins, especially publick offences, are to be rooted out, corrected and inhibited, at reasonably as may be according to the Law of God, and the Institutions of the Fathers. The power to punish these offenders doth not pertain unto any private person, but only unto them which have jurisdiction of the law over them, the distinction of law and justice being orderly observed.

The 1st proposition propounded by the Bohemians with the declaration from the Council.

Punishing of publick offences how and by whom. Note here the Popes addition.

As touching the preaching of the Word of God, which Article you have alledged in this form, That the Word of God should be freely and faithfully preached by the fit and apt Ministers of the Lord: Left by this word (freely) occasion might be taken of disordered liberty (which as you have often said you do not mean) the circumstance thereof is to be understood; and we say, that (according to the meaning of the holy Scripture, and Doctrine of the holy Fathers) it is thus universally to be believed, That the Word of God ought freely, but not every where, but faithfully and orderly to be preached by the Priests and Levites of the Lord, being allowed and sent by their superiors unto whom that office appertaineth, the authority of the Bishop always reserved, who is the provider of all things according to the institution of the holy Fathers.

The 2d Article of the Bohemians with the declaration from the Council.

Liberty of preaching, how far, and to whom it extendeth.

As concerning the last Article expressed under these words, It is not lawful for the Christian Clergy, in the time of the law of grace, to have dominion over temporal goods; we remember that in the solemn Disputation holden in the sacred Council, he which was appointed by the Council to dispute, propounded two conclusions in this sort:

The 4th Article of the Bohemians, with the Declaration from the Council.

Temporal possessions in the Clergy means hands.

First, That such of the Clergy as were not religious, and had not bound themselves thereunto by a vow, might lawfully have and possess any temporal goods; as the inheritance of his Father or any other, if it be left unto him; or any other goods justly gotten by means of any gift, or other lawful contract or else some lawful Art.

The Second conclusion, The Church may lawfully have and possess temporal goods, moveable and unmoveable, Houses, Lands, Towns and Villages, Castles and Cities, and in them a private and civil dominion. Your Embassador which disputed against him, granted those conclusions, saying, That they did not impugn the sense of this Article being well understood, forsomuch as he understandeth this Article of civil dominion, formally meant. Whereby, and also by other things, it may be understood, that this Article, to have secular dominion, expressed in the foresaid Article, seemeth to be referred to some special manner or kind of dominion. But forsomuch as the Doctrine of the Church is not to be intreated upon by any ambiguous or doubtful words, but fully and plainly; therefore we have thought good more plainly to express that, which according to the Law of God, and the Doctrine of the holy Doctors, is universally to be believed, that is to say, the two aforesaid conclusions to be true. And also, That the Clergy ought faithfully to distribute the goods of the Church, whose Administrators they are, according to the decrees of the holy Fathers; and that the usurpation of the administration of the Church goods, done by any other than by them, unto whom the administration is canonically committed, cannot be without guilt of sacrilledge.

The Popes hand hard for their temporal kingdom.

Thus the sacred Council (said they) hath diligently gone about according to the verity of the Gospel, all ambiguity set apart, to expound the true sense of the three foresaid Articles. Wherefore, if there do yet remain any doubt; according to the information which we have received in the sacred Council, we are ready by Gods help (who is the principal principal verity) to declare the truth unto you. If ye do receive and embrace the declaration of the faid three Articles, which is grounded upon the verity of the holy Scripture, as you are bound, and will effectually have a pure, true, and perfect unity touching the liberty of the Communion under both kinds which you defire and require, which alſo you cannot lawfully have without the licence of holy Church; we have authority from the General Council, by certain means to intreat and conclude with you, truſting that you will ſhew your ſelves as you will continue.

The Bohemians take a deliberation of the 4th Article.

Theſe things thus declared, after the Bohemians had taken deliberation, they ſaid, That they would give no anſwer unto the premiſes, before they underſtood what ſhould be offered them as touching the Communion. Wherefore it ſhall be neceſſary to declare the matter, as it was written in form following.

A Declaration of the Council touching the 4th Article of the Communion.

In the Name of God and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, upon the Sacrament of whoſe moſt bleſſed laſt Supper we ſhall intreat, that he which hath inſtituted this moſt bleſſed Sacrament of unity and peace, will vouchſafe to work this effect in us, and to make us that we may be one in the faid Lord Jeſus our Lord, and that he will ſubvert all the fubtilties of the Devil, which through his envious craftineſs hath made the Sacrament of peace and unity, an occaſion of war and diſcord; that whilſt Chriſtians do contend touching the manner of communicating, they be not deprived of the fruit of the Communion. Whereupon S. Auguſtine in his Sermon upon Infants, in the Decrees De conſecrat. diſtinct. 2. Quia paſſus, ſaith thus, So the Lord Jeſus Chriſt cerrified us, and willed that we ſhould appertain unto him, and conſecrate the myſtery of our peace and unity upon the Table. He that receiveth the myſtery of unity, and doth not keep the bond of peace, doth not receive a myſtery for himſelf, but a teſtimony againſt himſelf. This we thought good above all things to be premiſed, that the general cuſtom of the Church, which your Fathers and you alſo in times paſt have obſerved, hath a long time had and ſtill uſeth, that they which do not conſecrate, communicate only under the kind of Bread. Which cuſtom being attempted without the authority and licence of the Church, ſhould be unlawful, when it is done with the authority of holy Church, ſhall be lawful, if other things let it not; becauſe (as the Apoſtle ſaith) He that eateth and drinketh unworthily, eateth and drinketh his own damnation.

Conſecrat. diſt. 2. quia paſſus.

Talk is to ſet up the Church above the Scripture.

The holy Communion requireth amendment of life.

Whereupon St. Iſidore of the ſecond Diſtinct. upon the Confeſſion written thus, They which live wickedly, and ceaſe not daily to communicate in the Church, thinking thereby to be cleanſed, let them learn that it doth nothing at all profit them to the cleanſing of their ſins. And St. Auguſtine in the ſame diſtinction ſaith, Holy things may hurt the evil, for unto the good they are ſalvation, but unto the evil damnation. There are beſides this many other authorities. The Apoſtle Judas was amongſt them which did firſt communicate, but forſomuch as he received unworthily, having that ſin of Treaſon in his heart, did profit him nothing, but the Devil by and by exerciſed the more power and authority over him. This is declared by a great reaſon, Which of you is it, that if you ſhould receive your Lord into your houſe, would not with all diligence and care ſtudy to make clean and adorn his houſe, that he may receive the Lord honeſtly? much more he that ſhall receive the Lord and Saviour into the houſe of his ſoul, ought diligently to make clean and deck his ſoul, to cleanſe it by the Sacrament of Penance, with ſorrow and contrition of heart, humbly, purely and truly confeſſing his ſins, and receiving due Satisfaction and Penance, to adorn and deck the ſame with the purple or rich aray of devotion, that the heart being ſo purged and adorned with fervent deſire, he may come to that moſt holy Sacrament, whereby God reconcileth all the World unto him.

Holy things nothing profit the wicked.

The reverent receiving of the Sacraments.

Wherefore the moſt ſacred Synod admoniſheth, exhorteth and commandeth, that all Prieſts ſhould diligently exhort and admoniſh the people, and that they ſhould uſe all their care and endeavour, that no man come to that moſt bleſſed Sacrament, except he be duly prepared with great reverence and devotion, leſt that which is received for the ſalvation of the ſoul, redound to the condemnation, through the unworthy receiving thereof. {KING 1 Hen. 6.}

Moreover, Doctors do ſay, that the cuſtom of communicating unto the people, only under the kind of bread, was reaſonably introduced by the Church and holy Fathers, for reaſonable cauſes, ſpecially for the avoiding of two perils; of error and unreverence. Of error, as to think that the one part of Chriſts Body were in the Bread, and the other part in the Cup, which were a great error. Of unreverence, forſomuch as many things may happen, as well on the part of the Miniſter, as on the part of the Receiver: As it is ſaid, that it happened when as a certain Prieſt, carried the Sacrament of the Cup unto a ſick man, when he ſhould have miniſtred, he found nothing in the Cup, being all ſpilt by the way, with many other ſuch like chances. We have heard moreover, that it hath often happened, that the Sacrament conſecrate in the Cup, hath not been ſufficient for the number of Communicants, whereby a new Conſecration muſt be made, which is not agreeable to the Doctrine of the holy Fathers, and alſo that oftentimes they do miniſter Wine unconſecrate for conſecrate Wine, which is a great peril. By this means when it ſhall be brought to paſs, that if you will effectually receive the unity and peace of the Church in all other things beſides the uſe of the Communion under both kinds, conforming your ſelves to the faith and order of the Univerſal Church, you that have that uſe and cuſtom ſhall communicate ſtill by the authority of the Church under both kinds, and this Article ſhall be diſcuſſed fully in the ſacred Council, where you ſhall ſee what as touching this Article, is to be holden as an univerſal verity, and is to be done for the profit and ſalvation of the Chriſtian people, and all things being thus throughly handled, then if you perſevere in your deſire, and that your Embaſſadors do require it, the ſacred Council will grant licence in the Lord unto your Miniſters, to communicate unto the people under both kinds, that is to ſay, to ſuch as be of lawful years and diſcretion, and ſhall reverently and devoutly require the ſame: this always obſerved, that the Miniſters ſhall ſay unto thoſe which ſhall communicate, that they ought firmly to believe, not the fleſh only to be contained under the form of Bread, and the blood only under the Wine, but under each kind to be whole and perfect Chriſt.

Error grounded upon error.

Cauſes why to miniſter under one kind.

Receiving in both kinds, permitted to the Bohemians.

The condition annexed.

Thus hitherto we have declared the Decree of the Council. As touching the other doubts and queſtions which were afterward moved by the Maſters and Prieſts of Boheme, the Embaſſadors of the Council anſwered thus.

Doubts or queſtions of the Bohemians.

Firſt they ſaid, That it was not the meaning of the ſacred Council, to ſuffer the Communion under both kinds by toleration, or as the Libel of divorcement was permitted to the Jews, forſomuch as the Council, intending even to open the bowels of motherly charity and pity unto the Bohemians and Moravians, doth not mean to ſuffer it with ſuch kind of ſufferance, which ſhould not exclude ſin, but ſo to grant it, that by the authority of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and of his true Spouſe the Church, it may be lawful, profitable and healthful unto thoſe which worthily receive the ſame. Alſo as touching that which was ſpoken by the ſaid Bohemians, of the puniſhing of offences, that it is in the Scriptures, how that God oftentimes ſtirreth up the hearts of private perſons to the correcting and puniſhing of ſins, and ſo it ſhould ſeem lawful unto the inferiours to correct and puniſh their ſuperiors; they anſwered, alledging the Text of S. Auguſtine in the 23d Decree. He that ſtriketh wicked men in that they are wicked, and hath cauſe of death againſt them, is the Miniſter of God; but he which without any publick adminiſtration or office murthereth or maimeth any wicked thief, facrilegious, adulterous or perjured perſon, or any other offender, ſhall be judged as an Homicide, and ſo much the more ſharply, in that he feared not to abuſe and uſurp the power not granted him of God; and truly this City would take it much more grievouſly, if any private man ſhould attempt to puniſh an offender, and ſet up a Gallows in the Street and there

Permiſſion of both kinds granted to the Bohemians, not of ſufferance, but by full authority.

Puniſhing of offences conſidered.

How and by whom offenders ought to be puniſhed.

{KING 1 Hen. 6.} there hang him, than if one man ſhould kill another in brawle or quarrel. They alledged alſo other Texts of St. Ambroſe and St. Hierome agreeable to the ſame. They ſaid that no man doubteth that the Law of God is duly and holily appointed, and therein is ſimply written, Thou ſhalt not ſtea. And notwithſtanding by the Commandment of God the Children of Iſrael carried away the Goods of the Egyptians, which they had borrowed of them. Alſo in the ſame Law it is plainly written, Thou ſhalt do no murther. Whereupon St. Auguſtine in his firſt Book De Civitate Dei, proveth that it is not lawful for any man to kill himſelf; and when as he maketh example of Samſon, he anſwereth with theſe words: When as God commandeth and doth affirm himſelf to command without any doubt, who is he that will call obedience ſin? or who will accuſe the obedience to God?

To do that God commandeth, is obedience, and no ſin, though it be extraordinary.

The Iſraelites did ſtea from the Egyptians without ſin.

Samſon killed himſelf without ſin.

Of extraordinary commandment no general Laws to be made.

Here in this Propoſition you have the words of St. Auſtin for anſwer. But let every man well foreſee, if God do command, or that he do intimate the commandment without any circumſtances, and let him prove the ſpirits whether they be of God. But in ſuch caſes there are no Laws to be given, neither are they much to be talked of; for thereby there ſhould eaſily occaſion riſe to make fedition, and for the inferiors to riſe againſt the ſuperiors. For when any man had ſtollen any thing, or killed any man, he would ſay that he was moved thereunto by the Spirit of God: but without manifeſt proof thereof, he ſhould be puniſhed.

Objection. Anſwer. How the laity hath power over the Clergy, and wherein. The Pope will be judged by his own Laws.

Again they ſaid that there were certain caſes wherein the Laity had power over the Clergy. It was anſwered, that there were certain caſes in the law, wherein the laity had power over the Clergy, and oftentimes over Cardinals. For if the Pope being dead, the Cardinals would not enter the Conclave to elect a new Pope, the King, Prince, or other Lord or Secular power may compell them: but in theſe caſes he is now no private perſon, but uſeth his juriſdiction by the authority of the Law. The like is to be underſtood of all other caſes expreſſed in the Law.

Objection.

They ſaid further, That no common Law hath any right or juſtice, except Gods Law do allow the ſame.

Anſwer.

It was anſwered, That no common Law hath right or juſtice, if it be againſt the Law of God; becauſe the Law of God is the rule of all other Laws. But there is great cunning and knowledg in applying the rule to that which is made by the rule; for oftentimes it ſeemeth that there is diverſity in the thing made by the rule, when there is none indeed; but the default is in the applying, becauſe the rule is not duly applied to the thing made by it.

Objection.

As touching the Article of preaching the Word of God, it was moved that oftentimes ſome Prelates through their own envy and malice, without any reaſonable cauſe, do inhibit a good and meet Preacher that preacheth Catholickly and well.

Anſwer. Abuſe of Prelates inhibiting true Preachers.

Anſwer was made, How that they underſtood well enough that the abuſe of certain Prelates, which did inordinately behave themſelves, gave a great occaſion of thoſe troubles. Alſo that they never heard of any ſuch complaints in thoſe parts, but that the Prelates do favour good Preachers, and ſtir them up to preach, by intreaty, favour, and promotion. In all ſuch caſes there are remedies already provided by the Law; for when any man is ſo prohibited to uſe his right, he hath remedy to appeal: and if he do truſt his appeal to be juſt, he may uſe his right, all violence both of the Spiritual and Secular power ſet apart; for the end of the matter ſhall declare if he had juſt cauſe to appeal. Then ſhall it be declared that the ſuperior hath done evil in prohibiting, and the Plaintiff juſtly in doing, and the ſuperior for his unjuſt prohibition ſhall be puniſhed. But if he be juſtly prohibited, and that through his temerity he do contemn the juſt commandment of his ſuperior, he is worthy to be puniſhed with condign puniſhment.

Remedy of Appeal.

Objection.

Where it was moved concerning the third Article, whether it were lawful for the Eccleſiaſtical Prelates to exerciſe in their proper perſon, the Acts of Secular dominion: Hereunto it was anſwered, that if by this word, Acts of Secular dominion, are underſtood Acts which a Secular Lord may do or exerciſe, then it is to be ſaid, that a Prelate may lawfully exerciſe ſome ſuch Acts in his proper perſon, as to ſell, pawn, or pledg, to infeoffe by manner and form ordained by Law: but there are ſome Acts which it is not lawful for them to exerciſe in their proper perſon, but ought to have afterward a Vicegerent or Proctor to do the ſame; whereupon there is priſhion made in the Law in the Rubrick, Ne Clerus vel Monachus ſeculariibus negotiis ſe immiſceat, & in aliis rebus.

Objection.

It was alſo moved, whether that coactive power, which ought to be exerciſed by a Steward, &c. be in the hands of an Eccleſiaſtical Prelate.

Anſwer.

Whereupon John Polomair anſwered, That this Queſtion preſuppoſeth another; whereof there are divers opinions amongſt the Doctors, in whoſe power the dominion of the Church ſhould be: and furthermore, whether the actions be in the perſon of the Tutor or Proctor, or if they be not in their perſon, notwithſtanding by the conſtitution of any Actor or Proctor (whoſe exerciſing of thoſe actions do give authority unto the Actor or Proctor) they be; with other difficulties, whereof it is not needful to ſpeak at this preſent. But forſomuch as he was urged to ſay his opinion, he ſaid, that to ſuch as had either leiſure or pleaſure in diſputation, and would argue againſt him, he would be contented to give the choice to take which part he would; but his opinion was rather that the dominion of Church-matters ſhould be in the power of Chriſt: and the Prelates with the other Clergy, are but Canonical adminiſtrators in manner of Tutors; but they have more power and adminiſtration than Tutors, and by conſtituting a Steward or Vicegerent, &c. their conſtitution being duly made, the Steward or Vicegerent hath the ſame coactive power and exerciſe of juriſdiction.

Coactive power, whether it belongeth to the Clergy, and how.

Alſo as touching the fourth Article, for the declaration of the firſt Concluſion, it is agreed that theſe words, Juſte requiſita, i.e. juſtly gotten, alledged therein, determine all things contained in the ſame.

Alſo as touching the ſecond Concluſion, whereas the Sacred Canons and holy Doctors ſpeak thus, The Goods of the Church, the ſubſtance of the Church, and the poſſeſſions of the Church, and divers other opinions there be amongſt the Doctors, in whoſe power the rule thereof ſhould be, as it is noted in the Gloſſ. Cap. expedit xxi. Quæſt. 1. they do not intend to conſtrain any man to any of thoſe opinions; neither to exclude any of them, but that every man ſhould have liberty probably to maintain which of them he thinketh beſt.

The Goods of the Church in whoſe poſſeſſion they be properly.

2 q. 1. cap. Expedit.

Moreover the Bohemians ſaid, that they did believe that the Clergy are but adminiſtrators of the Temporalities of the Church, and not Lords thereof, according to the manner of ſpeaking of the Scriptures, holy Doctors and Canons. Alſo the Bohemians ſaid, that in all occaſions which ſhall hereafter riſe, they would wholly ſtand to the determination of the Judg agreed upon in Egra, with one conſent. In this manner did the Ambaſſadors make anſwer unto the Bohemians. At the laſt, after much communication had to and from, a concord and unity was concluded and confirmed by ſetting to their hands. The Bohemians promiſed to receive the peace and unity of the Church, and the declaration of the three Articles. This was done in the year of our Lord 1433. About the Feaſt of St. Martin, it was afterward agreed both by the Ambaſſadors of that Council, and of Bohemе, that whatſoever remained ſhould be determined and agreed upon, firſt at Ratiſbona, afterward at Bruna in the Diocels of Olymutes; then at Alba in Hungary, before the Emperor Sigiſmund, but the matter could not be ended in any place.

The Clergy be adminiſtrators, not Lords of the Temporalties of the Church.

At the laſt the concord was confirmed by writing with their Seals at Inglaxia, a City of Moravia, the fifth day of July, in the preſence of the Emperor.

¶ Certain Petitions which the Bohemians put up loſt of all in the Sacred Council of Basil, Anno 1438, in the Month of November.

Certain Petitions of the Bohemians put up to the Council. 1 Anno 2. 1438.

UNto the moſt reverend Fathers in Chriſt, and our moſt gracious Lords: We the Ambaſſadors of the Kingdom of Boheme do moſt humbly and heartily require you that for the perpetual preſervation of peace and concord, and for the firm preſervation of all things contained in the compoſition, you will vouchſafe of your Clemency to give and grant unto us all and ſingular our requeſts here underwritten, with effectual execution of the ſame.

First, And above all things we deſire and require you, for the extirpation of divers diſſentions and controverſies which will will undoubtedly follow amongſt our people under the diverſity of the Communion, and for the aboliſhing of infinite evils which we are not able to expreſs as we have conceived them, that you will gently vouchſafe of your goodneſs and liberality to give, grant and command, unto our Kingdom of Boheme, and Marqueſdom of Moravia, one uniform order of the Communion unto all men, under both kinds, that is to ſay, unto the Archbiſhop of Prague, the Biſhop of Luthonius, Olimutz, and other Prelates of the Kingdom and Marqueſdom, having charge of Souls, and to their Vicars, and alſo to their flocks and ſubjects, and that according to thoſe things which are contained in the Bull of the Ambaſſadors, and in the compoſitions made in the name of the whole Council, written in the Chapter, Pro firmitate, where it is thus ſaid, And all other things ſhall be done, which ſhall be meet and neceſſary for the preſervation of the peace and unity. For this done, by your benefit the whole Kingdom ſhall be comforted above meaſure, and eſtabliſhed in brotherly love; whereby an uniform ſubjection and obedience ſhall be perpetually attributed unto the holy Church.

The Communion in both kinds to be generally granted.

Item, We require and deſire (as before) that for the avoiding of all falſe ſuſpition and doubtfulneſs of many, which ſuppoſe that the Sacred Council hath granted the ſaid Communion under both kinds unto us but for a time, as neither profitable nor wholſome, but as the libel of divorcement; that you will vouchſafe, according to this Chapter alledged in the Compoſitions: Firſt they ſaid, that it was not the intent of the Sacred Council, &c. wholſomely and ſpeedily to provide for our ſafety, and with your grant in this behalf, and with the Bulls of your Letters, to confirm that Chapter together with the other pertaining to the office of your Ambaſſadors.

To have a good and lawful Paſtor and Biſhop.

Item, We beſeech you (as before) that for the confirmation of obedience, and for the diſcipline of all the Clergy, and for the final defence and obſervation of all things determined and agreed upon, and for the good order in Spiritualties, ye will vouchſafe effectually to provide for us a good and lawful Paſtor, Archbiſhops and Biſhops, which ſhall ſeem unto us moſt meet and acceptable for our Kingdom, to execute thoſe offices and duties.

Free Communion under both kinds to be permitted to all Princes.

Item, We require you (as aforeſaid) that your Fatherly reverences will vouchſafe, for the defence of the holy fame of the Kingdom and Marqueſdom, to declare and ſhew our innocency, in that they have communicated, do, and hereafter ſhall communicate under both kinds; to give out, ordain, and direct the Letters of the Sacred Council, in manner and form moſt apt and meet for ſuch declaration, unto all Princes, as well Secular as Spiritual, Cities and Communalties, according to the Compoſitions, and as the Lords the Ambaſſadors are bound unto us to do.

Item, We deſire you that in the diſcuſſing of the matter for the Communion under both kinds, and of the Commandment thereof given unto all faithful, ye will not proceed otherwiſe than according to the Concordatum agreed upon in Egra: that is to ſay, according to the Law of God, the order of Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, the General Councils, and the minds of the holy Doctors, truly grounded upon the Law of God.

The Goſpels and Epiſtles to be read in the vulgar tongue. The Scriptures read in the Greek tongue of old time.

Item, We deſire that your Fatherly reverences conſidering the great affection of our people, will give us the deſired liberty to communicate unto the younger ſort the Sacrament of the Supper. For if this uſe of Communicating ſhould be taken away, which our Kingdom being godly, moved by the writings of moſt great and holy Doctors, and brought in by example, hath received as Catholick, and exerciſed now a long time; verily it ſhould raiſe up an intolerable offence amongſt the people, and their minds would be grievouſly vexed and troubled.

Incorporation to be granted to Univerſities an unlawful requeſt.

Item, We require you (as before) that for like cauſes your Fatherly reverences would vouchſafe to permit, at the leaſt the Goſpels, Epiſtles, and Creed, to be ſung and read in the Church in our Vulgar Tongue, before the people, to move them unto devotion; for in our Slavon language it hath been uſed of old in the Church, and likewiſe in our Kingdom.

Item, We require you in the name of the ſaid Kingdom, and of the famous Univerſity of Prague, that your Fatherly reverences would vouchſafe to ſhew ſuch diligence and care toward the deſired reformation of that Univerſity, that according to the manner and form of other Univerſities reformed by the Church, Prebends and Colleges of certain Benefices of Cathedral and Pariſh-Churches may be annexed and incorporate unto the ſaid Univerſity, that thereby it may be increaſed and preferred.

{KING Hen. 6.}

A requeſt for reformation and diſcipline.

Item, We deſire you (as before) as heartily as we may, and alſo (ſaving always your Fatherly reverences) require you, and by the former Compoſitions we moſt inſtantly admoniſh you, that with your whole minds and endeavours, and with all care and ſtudy, your reverences will watch and ſeek for that long deſired and moſt neceſſary reformation of the Church and Chriſtian Religion, and effectually labour for the rooting out of all publick evils, as well in the head, as in the members, as you have often promiſed to do in our Kingdom, in the Compoſitions, and as our fourth Article, touching the avoiding of all publick evils doth exact and require.

There were certain anſwers provided by the Council to theſe Petitions of the Bohemians, which were not delivered unto them, but kept back, for what purpoſe and intent we know not. Wherefore becauſe we thought them not greatly neceſſary for this place, and alſo to avoid prolixity, we have judged it meet at this preſent to omit them. Thus have ye heard compendiouſly the chief and principal matters intreated and done in this famous Council of Baſil. And here (to conclude withal) we have thought good to declare unto you, for the aid and help of the ignorant people (which judg many things to be of longer time and continuance than indeed they be) and thereupon have eſtabliſhed a great part of their opinions) how that toward the latter end of this Council, that is to ſay, in the 37th Seſſion of the ſame, holden the 17 of September, in the year of our Lord 1439, the Feaſt of the Conception of our Lady was ordained to be holden and celebrated yearly. In like caſe alſo in the 44th Seſſion of the ſame Council, holden the firſt day of July, Ann. 1441, it was ordained that the Feaſt of the Viſitation of our Lady ſhould be celebrate and holden yearly in the Month of July. VVe have alſo thought it good, before we do end this ſtory, to annex hereunto certain Decrees, profitably and wholſomely ordained in the ſaid Council, againſt the inordinate giving of the Eccleſiaſtical Benefices and Livings by the Pope, with certain other Conſtitutions alſo, fruitful for the behalf and edification of the Church.

The Conception of our Lady brought in to the Church.

The Viſitation of our Lady brought in.

During the time that the General Council at Baſil was ſo diligent and careful about the reformation of the Church, this one thing ſeemed good unto them to be proſecuted and followed with an earneſt care and diligence, that thorough every Church apt and meet Miniſters might be appointed, which might ſhine in vertue and knowledg, to the glory of Chriſt, and the healthful edifying of the Chriſtian people: whereunto the multitude of expectative graces hath been a great impediment and let, in that they have been found to have brought grievous troubles, divers diſorders, and many dangers upon the Eccleſiaſtical ſtate. For hereby oftentimes ſcarcely apt or meet Miniſters have been appointed for the Churches, which are neither known nor examined; and this expectation of void Benefices (as the old Laws do witneſs) doth give occaſion to deſire another mans death, which is greatly prejudicial unto ſalvation: beſides that, innumerable quarrels and contentions are moved amongſt the ſervants of God; rancor and malice nouriſhed; the ambition and greedy deſire of Pluralities of Benefices maintained; and the riches and ſubſtance of Kingdoms and Provinces marvelouſly conſumed. Poor men ſuffer innumerable vexations by running unto the Court of Rome. They are oftentimes ſpoiled and robbed by the way, troubled and afflicted with divers plagues; and having ſpent their Patrimony and ſubſtance left them by their parents, they are conſtrained to live in extream poverty. Many do challenge Benefices, which without any juſt title (yea ſuch indeed as ought not to have them) obtain and get the ſame; ſuch I ſay, as have moſt craft and ſubtilty to deceive their neighbour, or have greateſt ſubſtance to contend in the Law. It happeneth oftentimes that under the intrication of theſe prerogatives, antelations, and ſuch other as do aſſociate theſe expectative graces, much craft and deceit is found. Alſo oftentimes the Miniſtry is taken away from young men by their ordinary givers, whiles that by the troubles of thoſe contentions, and divers diſcourſes, running to and fro by means of thoſe graces, they are vexed and trubled; the Eccleſiaſtical cal order is confounded, whiles that every mans authority and juriſdiction is not preſerved; and the Biſhops of Rome alſo, by challenging and taking upon them too much the office of the inferiors, are withdrawn from more weighty and fruitful matters, neither do they diligently attend to the guiding and correction of the inferiors, as the publick utility doth require. All which things do bring a great confuſion unto the Clergy and Eccleſiaſtical ſtate, to the great prejudice and hinderance of Gods true worſhip, and publick ſalvation.

No controverſies to be brought to Rome beyond four days journey from thence.

In the ſame Council alſo divers other Conſtitutions were made, not unprofitable for reformation, and for removing of certain abuſes and diſorders brought in, eſpecially by the Biſhop of Rome, as touching cauſes not to be brought up and tranſlated to the Court of Rome: Wherein it was decreed, that no actions nor controverſies ſhould be brought from other Countries to be pleaded at Rome, which were beyond four days journey diſtant from the ſaid Court of Rome, a few principal matters only excepted. Alſo that no frivolous Appeals ſhould be made to the Pope hereafter. It was moreover in the ſame Council decreed, for the number, age, and condition of the Cardinals, that they ſhould not exceed the number of four and twenty, beſides them that were already, and that they ſhould be freely taken out of all Countries; and that they ſhould not be of kin to the Biſhop of Rome, or to the Cardinals, nor yet blemiſhed with any ſpot or crime. Alſo for Annates or firſt fruits, or half fruits, it was there provided that no ſuch Annates or confirmation of Elections, or collation of Benefices, ſhould be paid or referred any more to the Pope, for the firſt years voidance. All which things, there agreed and concluded by them, were afterward confirmed and ratified by the French King, Charles the Seventh, with the full conſent of all his Prelates, in his High Court of Parliament in Bitures, and there called Pragmatica Sanctio, Ann. 1438. whereupon great utility enſued afterward to the Kingdom of France. Albeit in proceſs of time divers Friers there were which wrote againſt the ſame. Ex lib. Pragm. Sanctionis.

No Appeal to be made to the Pope, Againſt the ſuperfluous number of Cardinals.

Pragmatica Sanctio per Carolum 7.

Amongſt many Decrees of the ſaid Council of Baſil, in the Nineteenth Seſſion there was alſo a Decree made touching the converting of Jews, and young Novices in Religion, unto the Chriſtian Faith.

An Act made for the Converſion of the Jews.

Alſo that all Ordinaries ſhould yearly at appointed times, provide certain men well learned in the Holy Scriptures, in ſuch places where Jews and other Infidels did dwell, to declare to them the truth of the Catholick Faith, that they acknowledging their error might forſake the ſame; unto the which preaching the ſaid Miniſters ſhould compel them to reſort, and to hear, under pain of excluding them from occupying any more in that place; provided that the ſaid Diocеſans and Preachers ſhould behave themſelves towards them mercifully and with all charity, whereby they might win them to Chriſt, not only by the declaring of the verity, but alſo in exhibiting their offices of humanity.

An Act for ſtudying the Hebrew, Greek, and Chaldee.

And to the intent their preaching might be the more fruitful, and that the Preachers might be the better inſtructed in the Tongues, it was alſo in the ſame Council provided and commanded, that the conſtitution made before in the Council of Vienna for learning the Hebrew, Chaldee, Arabick and Greek Tongues, ſhould by all means be obſerved and kept, and ordinary ſtipends provided for them that ſhould teach the ſame tongues.

Againſt Prieſts that kept Concubines.

Another Decree moreover in the twentieth Seſſion was Enacted, that whoſoever was known or publickly noted to be a keeper of Concubines, ſhould be ſequeſtred from all fruits of his Benefices for the ſpace of three months, which fruits ſhould be converted by the Ordinary to the reparations, or ſome other utility of the Church; and if he did not ſo amend, it was by the Synod decreed, that he ſhould be clearly depoſed from all his Benefices.

Furthermore the ſaid Synod did greatly inveigh againſt them, which having the juriſdiction of the Church, did not ſhame to ſuffer ſuch Whoremaſters, for bribes and money, ſtill to continue in their filthineſs, &c.

By theſe Decrees of the Council above ſpecified, it is to be ſeen, what corruption had been then frequented in the Church of God, through the Biſhop and Court of Rome. For the more expreſs declaration whereof, we thought it not much impertinent here to infer the words of one Martin Meyre, writing to Æneas Sylvius, touching and noting the ſaid corruptions; the tenour of whoſe Epiſtle here enſueth.

Unto the Reverend Father, the Lord Æneas, Cardinal of Scene; Martin Meyre, Chancellor to the Biſhop of Mentz, witheth health.

The Epiſtle of Martin Meyre to Æneas Sylvius, tranſlated into Latin out of the Dutch, the Latin whereof is extant in the former Edition of this Book Ex Ord. Cruc.

I Have underſtood by certain of my friends Letters, that you are created Cardinal. I am glad for your part, that you have received ſo worthy rewards for your vertues. I rejoyce alſo for mine own part, that my friend hath attained unto ſuch a dignity wherein he may in time to come both help me and my friends: But this is a grief unto me, that you have happed upon thoſe days, which ſeem to be trouble ſome unto the Apoſtolick See. For there are many complaints made unto my Lord the Archbiſhop upon the Pope, that he will neither keep the Decrees of the Council of Conſtance, neither of Baſil, neither yet thinketh himſelf bound to the Covenants of his Predeceſſors, and ſeemeth utterly to contemn our Nation, and to ſeek the utter ruin thereof. For it is evident that the Election of Prelates is every where rejected; Benefices and Dignities, of what ſort ſoever they be, are reſerved for the Cardinals, and chief Notaries; and you your ſelf have obtained the reſervation of three Provinces of Germany, under ſuch a form as hath not been acciuſtomed or heard of. Vowſons or gifts of Benefices are granted without number; yearly ſtipends and half the revenues are exacted without delay; and it is evident that there is more extorted than is due. The Regiments of Churches are not committed unto ſuch as beſt deſerve them, but unto ſuch as offer moſt money for them, and new pardons are granted out daily to ſcrape and gather together money. Tythes are commanded to be exacted without the conſent of our Prelates, for the Turkiſh war; and thoſe matters which were acciuſtomed to be debated and determined at home, are now carried unto the Apoſtolick See of Rome. A thouſand ways are invented and deviſed, how the See of Rome may, by ſubtilty and craft, extort and get gold and treaſure from us, even as it were of the Turks or Barbarians; whereby our Nation, which was ſometime famous and valiant, which by their power and blood conquered the Roman Empire, and was once the Lady and Queen of all the world, now being brought into poverty, is made a hand-maid, and become tributary, and being now in extream miſery, hath of long time bewailed her cruel fortune and poverty. But now our Nobles, being (as it were) wakened out of their ſleep, have begun to conſider and deviſe with themſelves, by what means they might withſtand this calamity, and utterly ſhake off this yoke and bondage, and have determined with themſelves to challenge again their former liberty. This will be no ſmall loſs unto the Court of Rome, if the Princes of Germany bring to paſt that which they have deviſed. Wherefore as much as I do rejoice of your late obtained dignity, ſo much alſo am I moved and grieved that theſe things happen in your days. But peradventure Gods determination is otherwiſe, and his Will ſhall ſurely take place. You in the mean time be of good cheer, and deviſe according to your wiſdom, by what means the vehemency of theſe floods may be ſtayed. Thus fare ye well.

From Haſtaffenberge the laſt day of Auguſt.

The authority of the Council of Baſil expended.

Concerning the authority of this General Council of Baſil, what is to be eſteemed of it by the acts and fruits thereof may be underſtood of all good men. Neither was it of any man doubted in the firſt beginning, ſo long as the Pope agreed and conſented unto it. But after the Pope began to draw back, many other followed, eſpecially of the richer ſort of Prelates, which had any thing to loſe; whereof ſufficiently hath been ſaid by Arsdatenſis the Cardinal before. In the number of thoſe unconſtant Prelates, beſides many other, was firſt Cardinal Julian, the firſt Collector of this Council, and Vicegerent of the Pope, as by his fervent and vehement Letter, written to Pope Eugenius in defence of this Council, may well appear. VVherein he moſt earneſtly doth expoſtulate with the foreſaid Pope Eugenius, for ſeeking to diſſolve the Council, and declareth in the same many causes, why he should rather rejoyce, and give God thanks for the godly proceedings and joyful agreement between the Council and the Bohemians, and so exhorteth him with manifold perswasions to resort to the Council himself, and not to seek the dissolution of the same. The copy and tenour of whose Epistle to the Pope, if any be disposed to peruse the same, we thought here good to set down to be seen.

The Copy of an Epistle, which Julian Cardinal of S*t.* Angen, and the Popes Ambassador into Germany, wrote marvellous boldly and freely unto Eugenius Bishop of Rome, for that he went about to dissolve the Council of Basil.

Most blessed Father, after the devout kisses of your blessed feet.

'NOW shall the whole world understand and know, whether that your Holiness have in you the bowels of fatherly love and charity, and the zeal of the House of God, whether you be sent to make peace or discord, to congregate or disperse, or whether you be that good shepherd which giveth his life for his sheep. Behold the door beginneth now to be opened, whereby the lost sheep may return again unto their own Folds: now is there good hope even at hand of the reconciliation of the Bohemians. If that your Holiness, as it is your duty, do help and further the same, you shall obtain great glory both in Heaven and Earth. But if peradventure you go about to let the same (which is not to be feared at your hands) all men will reprove you of impiety; Heaven and Earth will conspire against you, all men will forsake you. For how is he to be followed, which with one word may restore peace and quietness to the Church, and refuseth to do it? But I conceive a better hope in you, how that your Holiness without any excuse, will, with your whole heart and mind, favour this most Sacred Council, and give thanks unto Almighty God for his great goodness, that this Congregation hath not departed. Behold the Ambassadors of this Sacred Council are returned with great joy and gladness from Egra, reporting how that, through the Grace of the Holy Ghost, they have firmly concluded with the Ambassadors of the Bohemians, that is to say, of the Pragues, Orphans and Thaborites, amongst whom were also present the Captains of their enemies, and specially Procopius: That a solemn Ambassade of all the Estates of the Realm should come unto the Council of Basil: After that a safe Conduct is sent unto them by the said Council in form conditioned, which shall be done with speed, this Sacred Congregation is marvellously exhilerate and joyful. For those our Ambassadors affirm, that all things were handled with such charity at Egra, and that they did see such things amongst the Bohemians, that not without cause, they do conceive great hope of their reconciliation.

The Ambaſsadors of the Councell are returned from Egra.

'And at last gently embracing one another, even with tears of gladness, they departed from Egra; the Bohemians requiring our Ambassadors, that the matter might be ended with all expedition. They report also, that many things happened in that Treaty, which if any man heard, and did not weep for joy, he might well think himself to be but finally affectioned unto Christ. As for three of the four Articles, they seem not to make any great difficulty upon. As touching the fourth, that is, of the Communion under both kinds, there is good hope that they will follow the judgment of the Council. Who is it then that dare counsel your Holiness to perfer vere any longer in the purpose of dissolution? for if the Council had not been appointed at all, for so great hope and necessity; it ought to have been appointed in this place. How worthy praise and commendation should your Holiness do, if that you would leave Italy and all other affairs, and come hither in your own person; although you should need to be carried in a Wagon or Litter; The keeping and defence of the Temporal Patrimony of the Church may well be disposed and done by Legates and Vicars. This is the true Patrimony of the Church, to win souls. For the Church is not an heap of stones and walls. Christ hath not made you a keeper of Castles and Forts, but a Pastor of souls. Therefore you should do that in your own person which is most necessary and acceptable unto Christ, and all other things by your substitutes. For so did the Apostles, which to the intent they might the more freely attend to the preaching of the Word of God, did institute seven to serve the Tables, and for the ministration of other inferior things. I hear that by the Grace of God your Holiness doth daily recover and amend; and if so be, as it is said, you do visit some Churches on foot, ye may also come hither on Horseback; for you cannot go unto any thing more profitable or concordant to your office, than to go unto the place where innumerable benefits and goodness may spring. Let your Holiness understand and consider wherein Christ, whose Vicar you are, and Saint Peter whose Successor you are, and the Apostles and holy Bishops did exercise and occupy themselves; and as you do succeed them in office, so succeed them in manners. But if peradventure your Holiness cannot come hither, I do counsel you, that for so great a benefit you would send the more part of the reverend Lords, Cardinals of the Court of Rome, and command all other Prelates to come hither. Do not let or hinder them that are willing to come, as it is reported you do, but rather allure them to come hither.

What the Church is.

'Your Holiness may believe me, that only charity moveth me to counsel you in this fort, be ye not separate from your members, nourith your children as the Hen doth her Chickens under her wings. And if so be that you will do nothing else, yet speak this only word, Placet, that is to say, that it pleaseth you that the Council of Basil should go forward. For a few days past there came news hither, for the which your Holiness ought altogether to cease from your dissolution. The reverend Father the Archbishop of Lions hath written unto the Council, and unto me also, how that the Prelates of France have assembled together in the City of Bituria, and there after long and exact examination have concluded, that the Council is lawfully congregate in this place. And that it is necessary that it should be holden and celebrate here at this present; and how the Prelates of France should come unto it: he also directed hither the cause which moved them so to conclude, the copy whereof I suppose is sent unto your Holiness by some other. Whereupon then doth your Holiness stay? You have gone about as much as in you lay, by your Messengers, Letters, and divers means to draw back the Prelates, and have laboured with all your endeavour to dissolve the Council; yet notwithstanding, as you do see, it is increased day by day. And the more it is forbidden, the more are all mens minds inflamed to the contrary. Is not this then to resist the will of God? Why do ye provoke the Church to anger? Why do ye stir up the Christian people? Vouchsafe I pray you so to do, that ye may get the love and favour of the people, and not the hatred; for all Nations are greatly offended when they hear these your doings. Suffer not your Holiness to be seduced by any man, which peradventure shall inculcate fear unto you, whereas there is nothing at all to be doubted; or that do perswade you this to be no lawful Council. I know I should offend your Holiness if I should go about to prove the contrary; but it is better that I do offend you a little in words, and profit you in my deeds; for a Physician layeth a burning corrosive unto the disease, and healeth the sore: For the medicine cannot profit except it be sharp and bitter in taste. Under this hope and confidence I will not fear to declare the truth; that it being known, your Holiness may the better provide both for your self and the Church. It dependeth upon the Council of Constance, whether this Council be lawful or not. If that were a true Council, so is this also. No man seemeth to doubt whether that Council were lawful, and likewise whatsoever was there decreed to be lawful: for if any man will say, that the Decrees of that Council are not of force, he must needs grant that the deprivation of Pope John, which was done by the force

Eugenius prevented the Church.

A strong argument against Eugenius.

{KING Hen. 6.}

'force of those decrees, was of no effect. If that deprivation were not of effect; neither was the election of Pope Martin of any force, which was done he being yet alive. If Martin were no true Pope, neither is your Holiness, which was chosen by the Cardinal that he made; wherefore it standeth no man more upon to defend the decrees of that Council, than your Holiness, for if any decree of that Council be called into doubt; by like means may all the rest of the decrees be revoked. And by like means shall the decrees of any other Council be of no force and effect: for by like reason, as the faith of one Council is weakned, all the rest shall also be weakned, according to Saint Augustins saying in the 9. Distinct. cap. Si ad scripturas. Then, saith he, both the Faith and all other Sacraments shall be put in doubt, if that there be once any doubt made of the force and power of any Council lawfully congregate. There was a decree made in the Council of Constance, intituled Frequens. Whereby it was ordained, that the first Council after that should be holden within five years, and another within seven years after that again. The Council of Constance being ended, and the five years passed, the Council of Papia or Seene was holden, after which seven years passed also run over, this Council is begun to be celebrate. To what end then is it expressed in the Bull of the dissolution, amongst other causes, that the seventh year is already past? When as of necessity it ought to be passed before the Council can be celebrate. For these words, from seven year or five year, signifie according to the Law, that all parts of time should be passed, and the last day looked for. Wherefore it behoved that seven years to be fully compleat, before this Council of Basil should begin. Like as five years were fully expired, before that the Council of Papia did begin. But peradventure some man will say, that it ought to have begun the first day after the seventh year was expired. For otherwise the term of the Council is passed. But hereunto we may answer, that it is not contained in the Chapter Frequens, that except it were holden the first day, it should not be holden at all, neither can it be gathered either by the words or meaning. For it is only required that it should be holden after seven years expired, but whether it be the second or third day, or the third or four month after the seventh year, it doth satisfie the Chapter Frequens. For when the first day is come, then beginneth the power and liberty to celebrate the Council, but not afore; but it is not prohibited to celebrate it after; neither doth this word, In quinquennium, that is to say, against five years, next following, which is alledged in the Chapter Frequens, and seemeth to be repeated also for the seven years; for it is not understood that it is necessary to be holden the first day precisely after the seventh year, but because it should not be understood of other seven years to come. For in speaking simply of seven years, it is understood of seven years next ensuing. Admit also that in the Chapter Frequens, any of these words had been joyned with immediately following, as by and by, out of hand, immediately, or straightways after, or such other words; yet ought they to be understood with a certain moderation, and distance of time, that as soon as might be convenient: as these words are expounded by the Lawyers and Doctors, for they are inlarged and restrained according to the Subject and divers circumstances of the matters and affairs. For it is not by any means likely that it was the mind of those which made the decree, that considering the long journey and hard preparation of such affairs, and also the manifold impediments which may happen, that they would restrain so precise a time, even at the first day, that if it were not then celebrated, it should not be holden at all, for by such fabull means it should also be holden even in the first moment and very instant after the same year.

'But forsomuch as words are civilly to be understood, this sense or understanding is too far disagreeable. For if any man will say, then it is commanded to be prorogued, that is also forbidden in the Chapter Frequens. He that doth so argue, doth not understand himself, nor the force of the words. It is not prorogued if it be begun the second or third month, but it is rather a continuation or execution of that which is in their power. For if it were a prordgation, then forsomuch as a prorogation doth favour of the nature of the first delay, it could not be begun before the time prorogued; but this happeneth not in our case: for albeit it were not begun in the first month, but in the second or third: it is not thereby concluded that it could not be begun in the first: but if there had been any prorogation made till the second month, then it could not have been begun in the first, as for example, I promise to give an hundred pounds after Easter; afore Easter it cannot be required, but by and by after Easter it may be required; and albeit that I be not urged for it, notwithstanding I do not cease to be bound; and if so be I be demanded it in the second or third month after, it is not thereby understood that there is any prorogation made; Neither doth it follow, but that it might have been demanded in the beginning, which could not have been done if that there had been any prorogation made. Also it is the nature of prorogation to be made before the first day or term or day be passed. For otherwise it is no prorogation, but a new appointment. And albeit it may be said, that then it may be long delayed; it is answered, that in this point we must stand unto the judgement of the Church, which considering divers circumstances would think the time meet. For the liberty of celebrating of Councils was institute for the profit and favour of the Church. What if it should happen that when the time cometh, in the place where a Council should be kept there be a great Plague, or some Siege, which should continue by the space of three or four months, and the Pope in the mean time doth not change the place according to the form of the Chapter Frequens, and that through such impediments the Prelates did not come the first day unto the place, or if any were coming and were taken by the way, which if they had not been taken, had been present at the first day in the place appointed; is it therefore to be said that the power of the Council is past? Or that the impediment ceasing, and the Prelates coming thither, the Council cannot be holden? That truly were greatly absurd and too much prejudicial to the Church of God: but in this our case, the cause is probable why that the Prelates did defer to come at the beginning of the time appointed; for so much as when the time drew near, Pope Martin dyed the twentieth of February. For which cause the Prelates might well doubt upon some impediment of the Council also. Also they tarried looking that some should come thither in the name of the Pope, because they would not tarry in that place in vain without a President. As for the Legate which was appointed for the Council, whose presence all men tarried for before he would prepare himself for that journey, he came not at the time appointed unto the Council, but went unto Norenberge, to persecute the Bohemians; according to the commandment of Pope Martin, which had enjoyned him to go first thither before he went to Basil.

The cause of the long delay of the Prelates.

'And the same Legate being oftentimes required at Norenberge, that he should go to Basil to hold the Council, he answered, that he would not go before he had the consent of the new Bishop. This was the cause of the Prelates delay, neither is it greatly to be imputed unto the Prelates, which suspected that Pope Martin would not have holden the Council, and feared to bring themselves in trouble, and good cause had they so to fear, through those things which happned in the Council of Seene. For there were many things spoken which caused great suspition. It was reported unto me that many had said, I came unto Germany to disturb the Council.

The doubt of Seene.

'Also this was Pope Martini mind and intent, that albeit the Council was not begun at the beginning of March, notwithstanding the authority of holding the Council should not be void. For he, when as the time of the Council approached, willed me that I should first go unto Bohemia, before I went unto the Council; whereof

'also mention is made in the Bull of the Consistory dis-
'solution.

'But what need we any other proof, than by your 'Holiness Letters? In which your Letters dated the second 'of the Kalends of June, and delivered unto me long
'after the time, by the space of three months, you
'do commend me, that my business being done in 'Bohemia, I should take my way to Basil to hold the 'Council, and there to foresee unto all things as it was 'enjoyned me, and ordained in the Council of Con-
'stance. The same also ye repeat in the Bull of
'the dissolution brought unto me by the Lord Paren-
'tine, the words are these; Unto your circumspection.
'Since your going into Germany no Prelates have as'sembled in Basil for the celebrating of the Council:
'We gave you in commandment that in the mean time
'you should be diligent about the expedition against
'the Bohemian Hereticks, which is committed to 'your charge, and afterward you shall come unto Basil,
'the place appointed for the Council, and there rule
'in Our place in the name of the Church. What is 'more evident than this? If any thing were doubt-
'ful, by the tenour of these Letters it were evidently taken 'away. If any man would say, that neither Pope Mar-
'tin nor Eugenius could confirm the Council by writ-
'ing of such Letters, because there was a prorogation
'which is prohibited by the Chapter Frequens: It
'is answered, that there is no prorogation, but executi-
'on of that which is in power, or a declaration that it is 'not necessary to hold the Council precisely even at the 'beginning. Also it is no prorogation. For a proroga-
'tion is made before the term is expired and not after; for
'after, it is rather called a new indiction or appointment.
'And if any man will say that there can be no new indi-
'ction made, then may this be objected; How could the 'Council of Bononia be newly appointed? If they will 'answer, that the appointment of the Council of Bo-
'nonia was of force, because the Council of Basil was 'dissolved by your Holiness, then I have my intent. For
'if it were dissolved; Ergo, it was a Council be'fore, because it presupposeth the habit. If it were a 'Council before, then, as hereafter shall be proved, it
'could not be dissolved without the consent of the Coun'cil; what can be more answered hereunto? For the 'greater declaration and evidence of the matter, the Ab-
'bot of Virgilia, even upon the same day of the time ap'pointed or afore, gathering together the Prelates of the 'great Church, and many other Prelates and Notable
'men, made a solemn protestation, how the time was
'come to celebrate and hold the Council, and that he was
'come unto Basil for the same purpose, requiring them
'that they would confer and intreat together upon mat'ters touching the Council, and hereupon there is a pub-
'lick instrument or testimonial.

'Within a month after the Ambassadors of the Uni'versity of Paris came thither, and began to entreat
'of matters touching the Council, writing also unto
'the Emperor, and to the other Princes of Germany,
'that they should send unto the Council; which Letters I
'my self did see; neither doth the small number of men
'let; for whereas authority is, a great number is not re'quired, according to the saying of Christ, where as two 'or three are gathered together in my name, I am in 'the midst of them. Upon the which authority the 'Councils are grounded. Now therefore your Holiness
'doth manifestly see the said objection to be but frivolous.
'For to what end should any dissolution be made, if it 'had not been a Council? Wherefore it is not to be 'doubted but that it was a lawful Council, and cano-
'nically congregate. And peradventure it is scarfly found
'where any Council hath been confirmed by so many
'authorities as this, that is to say, by the two Councils
'before passed, of Constance and of Seene, and confirm'ed by two Bishops of Rome.

'Besides this, I have heard that some do report at 'Rome, that I could not call the Prelates unto the Coun'cil, because that clause was not added in the Bull of 'Pope Martin. I greatly marvel why this should be 'objected, specially seeing that not I alone have cal-
'led them, but I together with the rest which are here
'assembled in the Council. It is a marvellous matter;
'Pope Martin gave me authority by the advice of the 'Council to root out Heresies, to pacifie Kingdoms, {KING Hen. 6.}
'to reform the manners of every state of Christen-
'dom, and yet they will say that I cannot cite them.
'Power is given me to judge and to condemn, and 'have I not also power to cite? The Law doth say; un-
'to whom any power or jurisdiction is committed, all 'things seem to be committed unto him, without
'the which he cannot exercise his jurisdiction; for
'how could all the premises be done, if the Prelates or 'others should not come hither? Also why is it said
'in the Chapter, Ego enim de jurejurando, I will come
'unto the Synod if I be called, if he cannot be cal-
'led? By whom then is it presupposed that he should 'be called, but only by the Council, or by him which
'ruleth the Council? Also the whole eighteenth di'stinction intreateth of no other matter, but that the 'Bishops being called unto the Council, if they come
'not, they may be Excommuniate and Suspended. Let
'these men read the Book of Councils of Saint Isidore,
'and they shall find how that in many Councils the Pre-
'lates have been called by the Synod. Now it remains
'eth, that we should declare, whether the dissolution be
'of force or no. Wherein I do again fear to move your
'Holiness unto anger. But charity forceth me thereunto;
'for peradventure your Holiness doth think the dissoluti-
'on to be effectual, and therefore do persevere in it;
'whereby for so much as many offences may arise, my 'Conscience doth move me not to hold my peace. First of 'all the chapter, Frequens, declareth that it is of no force; for
'if prorogation be forbidden and prohibited, which is 'a small matter, much more is dissolution, which is a
'greater matter, for it is a greater matter to take away
'than to defer: For by proroguing a thing is but 'deferred, and by dissolving it is utterly taken away.
'Also these men say, that the said constitution in the chap'ter, Frequens, may be made void, forsomuch as soon as
'the Council is begun, it may be dissolved without any 'thing done, as it is said that it was done at Senes; and now
'they say also that your Holiness hath been perverfly inform'ed touching the dissolution. They say also, that the said
'dissolution doth manifestly tend to the subversion of faith,
'the ruin of the Church, and the trouble of the Christian
'people. Therefore it cannot be done, neither obeyed.

'They say moreover, that the said dissolution could not 'be made by means of a certain decree of the Council of 'Constance in that behalf provided; That in such matters as
'appertain unto Faith, the extirpation of sin, and reforma-
'tion of the Church in the head and in the members, all 'men of what estate or condition soever they be, yea the 'Pope himself should be bound to obey the statutes, pre-
'cepts and ordinances of every general Council; and ex'cept they did obey, it had power to punish them. Mark
'now that these things, to have power to determine upon
'any man, to command him and punish him if he be not
'obedient, are signs of superiority, in those matters which
'he doth decree, command or punish; and to be bound
'to obedience, to be subject and obey the same, are signs of 'inferiority in the said cases. Ergo in the foresaid cases,
'seeing that the Pope, as they say, is under the Council,
'which also hath been; in that for one of the said three
'cases the Council did deprive John, and for the other
'Benedict, neither could the Pope dissolve the Council, in 'that he is inferiour unto the Council, he cannot bind or
'compel the superiour; As in the Chapter Cum inferior,
'otherwise it should contain in it a contradiction, that he
'is bound to obey, and is not bound to obey, because he
'may dissolve; for how should he be obedient unto the 'ordinance and decree of the Council, if he may annihi-
'late and take away the same ordinance and decree?
'This Council is congregate for the rooting out of 'Heresies, for the making of peace, and reformation of 'manners; and in the first Session it did ordain, that
'their whole intent and respect should be thereunto, and
'that he which should procure to let the Council, to pro-
'rogue or alter it, should be punished, and have process
'against him as against a common disturber of the peace,
'&c. If it may be dissolved, it is evident that they do
'not obey the said ordinance; whereby this also must of 'necessity be granted, that if it may be dissolved, the de-
'cree of the Council of Constance is of no force.

This

{KING Hen. 6.} 'This is also proved by another reason. No man doubteth
'but if any controversie of Heresie should be moved against 'any Bishop of Rome, that he could not dissolve the Coun'cil: For if he might dissolve the Council, he could not 'be judged, which were contrary to the Chapter. Si Pap.
'40. Ergo, like as it is in Heresie, so is it in the two other 'cases. For these three were pacified by the Council of 'Constance: for thus speaketh the Council, as it is in the 'Chapter, Si Papa in illo uno. And as I have before said,
'the Council of Constance allowed this decree, through
'the which they deprived Peter de Luna, for making of a
'Schism, and Pope John for the deformity of his life.

'And albeit there be certain Laws that say, The prin'cipal seat cannot be judged of any man; and again, no
'man judgeth the chief seat; and, no man saith unto
'himself, why doest thou so? There are to be undestood
'in the three cases; first, that there was provisio made
'for the faith in the Chapter Si Papa; and in the 'other two points, by the decree of Constance. Other'wise it should be understood, without any exception,
'that the first seat, &c. and then the Chapter Si Pa-
'pa 40 distinct. and the said decree of Constance should 'be false. If the Chapter Si Papa had added cases of 'Heresies, no man would have doubted upon these two 'cases, touching the said sentence; so likewise no man
'ought to doubt of the decree of the Council, that it
'was made by the authority of the Pope, and represent-
'eth the universal Church. And if any man would say,
'that in all Councils the authority of the Pope is excep-
'ted: I answer, that is true, when as the person of the 'Pope is not specially included. But if he be specially in'cluded, he cannot be excepted, because it should favour
'of contradiction. Most blessed Father, God is my wit'ness that I have spoken these things with great anguish
'and sorrow of mind; but I am forced so to speak, that
'your Holiness may cease from the said dissolution, left
'there might happen infinite evils in the Church of God.
'If your Holiness did see my pure mind, my upright
'Conscience, and entire affection towards you, whereby
'I am moved to write those things, even for very love
'you would embrace and kiss me, and without doubt
'love me as your own Son. I have often said, and now
'do say and protest before God and man, that you will 'be the cause of Schism, and infinite mischiefs, if you do
'not alter and change your mind and purpose. Almighty
'God preserve your Holiness in the prosperity of a vertuous
'man. Unto whose feet I do most humbly recommend
'me. From Basil the 5th day of June.

Thus endeth the Epistle of Cardinal Julian, written unto Pope Eugenius. Wherein, forsomuch as mention is made how that the Bohemians had promised to send their Ambassadors unto the Council, and, as before is partly touched in the Bohemian story, of their coming into Basil and propounding of certain Articles, wherein they dissented from the Pope; we do not think it any thing differing from our purpose, to annex a brief epitome, declaring the whole circumstance of their Ambassage, their Articles, disputations and answers which they had at the said Council of Basil, with their petitions and answers unto the same. Faithfully translated out of Latine by F. W.

In like manner Æneas Sylvius also, with his own hand writing, not only gave testimony to the authority of this Council, but also bestowed his labour and travel in setting forth the whole story thereof. Notwithstanding the same Sylvius afterward being made Pope, with his new honour, did alter and change his old sentence. The Epistle of which Æneas touching the commendation of the said Council, because it is but short, and will occupy but little room, I thought here following, for the more satisfying of the Readers mind, to insert.

An Epistle of Æneas Sylvius to the Rector of the University of Colen.

An Epistle of Æneas Sylvius, in defence of the Council of Basil.

TO a Christian man which will be a true Christian indeed, nothing ought to be more desired, than that the sincerity and pureness of Faith, given to us of Christ by our forefathers, be kept of all men immaculate: And if at any time any thing be wrought or attempted against the true doctrine of the Gospel, the people ought with one consent to provide lawful remedy, and every man to bring with him some water to quench the general fire; neither must we fear how we be hated or envied, so we bring the truth. We must resist every man to his face, whether he be Paul or Peter, if he walk not directly to the truth of the Gospel. Which thing I am glad and so are we all, to hear that your University hath done in this Council of Basil. For a certain Treatise of yours is brought hither unto us, wherein you reprehend the rudeness, or rather the rashness of such, which do deny the Bishop of Rome, and the consistory of his judgement, to be subject unto the general Council; and that the supream tribunal seat of judgment standeth in the Church, and in no one Bishop. Such men as deny this, you so confound with lively reasons and truth of the Scriptures, that they are neither able to slide away like slippery Eels, neither to cavil or bring any objection against you. These be the words of Sylvius.

The Tribunal seat standeth not in one Bishop.

Furthermore, as touching the authority and approbation of the foresaid Council, this is to be noted, that during the life Sigismund the Emperor no man resisted this Council. Also, continuing the time of Charles the Seventh, the French King, the said Council of Basil was fully and wholly received through all France. But after the death of Sigismund, when Eugenius was deposed, and Felix Duke of Savoy was elected Pope, great discords arose, and much practise was wrought, but especially on Eugenius part; who being now excommunicated by the Council of Basil, to make his part more strong, created eighteen new Cardinals. Then he sent his Orators unto the Germans, labouring by all perswasions to dissolve the Council of Basil. The Germans at that time were so divided, that some of them did hold with Felix and the Council of Basil; othersome, with Eugenius and the Council of Ferraria; and some were Neuters. After this, the French King being dead, which was Charles the Seventh, about the year of our Lord 1444, the Pope beginneth a new practice, after the old guise of Rome, to excite (as is supposed) the Dauphin of France by force of Arms to dissipate that Council collected against him. Who, leading an Army of fifteen thousand men into Alsatia, did cruelly waste and spoil the Country; after that, laid Siege unto Basil, to expel and drive out the Prelates of the Council. But the Helvetians, most stoutly meeting their enemies, with a small power did vanquish the Frenchmen, and put them to Sword and Flight; like as the Lacedemonians only with three hundred did suppress and scatter all the mighty Army of Xerxes at Thermopylæ.

The authority of the Council of Basil maintained by the Emperor and the French King, so long as they lived.

The practise of Pope Eugenius, to undo the Council of Basil.

The Pope stirreth up War.

The Dauphin driven to pay by a few Germans.

Although Basil was by the valiantness of the Helvetians thus defended, yet not withstanding the Council, through these tumults, could not continue by reason of the Princes Ambassadors, which shrunk away and would not tarry. So that at length Eugenius brought to pass, partly through the help of Frederick (being not yet Emperor, but labouring for the Empire) partly by his Orators (in the number of whom was Æneas Sylvius above mentioned amongst the Germans) that they were content to give over both the Council of Basil, and their neutrality.

The dissolution of the Council of Basil.

This Frederick of Austrich being not yet Emperor, but towards the Empire, brought also to pass, that Felix, which was chosen of the Council of Basil to be Pope, was contented to renounce and resign his Papacy to Nicholas the Fifth, successor to Eugenius, of the which Nicholas the said Frederick was confirmed at Rome to be Emperor, and there Crowned, An. 1451.

Frederick of Austrich Crowned Emperor, great Grandfather to this Ferdenandus.

As these things were doing at Basil, in the mean season Pope Engenius brought to pass in his convocation at Florence, that the Emperor and the Patriach of Constantinople, with the rest of the Grecians there present, were perswaded to receive the sentence of the Church of Rome, concerning the proceeding of the holy Ghost; also to receive the Communion in unleavened Bread, to admit Purgatory, and to yield themselves to the authority of the Romish Bishop. Whereunto notwithstanding the other Churches of Grecia would in no wise assent at their coming home; insomuch that with a publick execration they did condemn afterward all those Legats which had consented to these Articles, that none of them should be buried in Christian burial: which was, An. 1439. Ex Casp. Pencer.

The Legates of the Greeks condemned here to the Popes Law.

The Greek Churches refuse the Popes doctrine.

And thus endeth the story, both of the Council of Basil, and of the Council of Florence, also of the Emperor Sigismund, and of the Schism between Pope Engenius and Pope Felix, and also of the Bohemians. The which Bohemians, notwithstanding all these troubles and tumults abovesaid, did right well, and were strong enough against all their enemies, till at length through discord, partly between the two preachers of the old and new City of Prague, partly also through the discord of the messengers and Captains taking sides one against the other, they made their enemies strong, and enfeebled themselves. Albeit afterward, in process of time, they so defended the cause of their Religion, not by Sword, but by argument and disputation, that the Bishop of Rome could never yet to this day remove the Thaborites and City of Prague from the communion of both kinds, nor could ever cause them to keep the conditions, which in the beginning of the Council was enjoyned their Priests to observe, as testifieth Cochleus, lib. 8. hist. Hus. With whom also recordeth Antoninus, who in 3. part. hist. saith; That the Doctrine of the Bohemians, which he termeth by the name of Zizania, did take so deep root with them, and grew so fast, that afterward neither by Fire nor Sword it could be extinct. Anton. 3. part. hist. tit. 22. cap. 10.

The inconvenience of discord.

Ex Cochlæ lib. 8. hist. Husitis.

Ex Antonin. 3. part. tit. 22. cap. 10.

Concerning the which Bohemians, briefly and in a general sum to recapitulate their whole acts and doings, here is to be noted, that they in their own defence, and in the quarel of John Hus, and Hieronm of Prague, provoked by their Catholick adversaries to War, fighting under Zisca their Captain, had eleven battels with the Popes side, and ever went away victors. Ex Paral. Abb. Ursp. in Epitaphio Joan. Zisc. Moreover in the History of Peucer it is testified that Pope Martain the fifth, sending for the Bishop of Winchester then Cardinal, had levied three main Armies, intending to over-run all the Bohemians; one Army of the Saxons under the Prince Elector: the second of the Francones, under the Marquis of Brandenburge; the third of Renates, Bavarians and Suechers, under Otto Archbishop of Treveris. With these, Sigismund also the Emperor, and Cardinal Julian the Popes Legate (who at last was flain in war, and being spoiled of all his attire, was left naked in the field) joyned all their force. Who joyning together five times (saith the story) with five sundry battles, affailed and invaded the Bohemians: at every which battel, five times the said adversaries, stricken and daunted with a sudden fear, ran away out of the field, leaving their Tents with all their implements and furniture behind them, before any stroke was given. Ex Casp. Peuc. lib. 5. whereby it may appear that the holy Angels of God do fight for them which embrace the sincere doctrine of Christs Gospel.

Marvelous fear fallen upon the Popes Army.

Ex hist. Cæs. part. Peucer. lib. 5.

Gods holy Angels pitch their tents about them that fear him. Isa. 54.

Thus the Bohemians, through the mighty protection of Almighty God, continued a long time invincible, during all the life of Zisca, and also of Procopius, till at length, through discord growing between them and their Captains Procopious and Mainardus, they were subdued unto their enemies.

The cruel deceit and wicked fact of Mainardus against the Souldiers of Bohemia.

And here by the way is not to be omitted the wicked and cruel fact of Mainardus, who after the death of Procopius, Thinking to purge the Realm of Bohemia of those chief and principal Souldiers, which had been long expert and trained up in Wars, found means for a Proclamation made, as though he would War against other Countries of their enemies bordering about them, craftily to train all them which were disposed to take wages, into certain Barns or Hovels prepared for the same purpose, and so shutting the doors upon them, the wicked dissembler set fire upon them, and burnt of them divers thousands, and so brought the rest by that means under subjection to the Emperor during his life time; which after that continued not long. Ex Æn. Sylv. The which Souldiers if they had fought so much for the Catholik liberties of the Pope and his Church, as they had fought against him, it is marvel if the Pope had not dignified them all for holy Martyrs. But they that kill with the sword (faith Christ) shall perish with the sword. Notwithstanding, the cruel deceit of Mainardus is worth of all men to be detested.

During this business among the Bishops beyond the Sea, in the mean time our Bishops here also in England were not unoccupied. Whether it be the nature of the Country that so giveth, or whether the great livings and wealthy promotions of the Clergy do draw with them a more insensible untowardnesh in Gods religion, had it is to say: this is manifeth to all men which will read and mark our stories from time to time, that in England is more burning and flaying for Religion and for all other matters; more bloodshed among us, than in any other Land or Nation in Christendom besides. After the burning of Richard Hoveden, of Nicholas Canon, and of Thomas Bagley Priest, above recorded, whom the Bishops condemned to death, An. 1431. not long after about the year of our Lord, 1439. which was the eighteenth of the reign of K. Henry the sixth, they had another poor man by the back named Richard Wiche Priest, mentioned both in Robert Fabian, and also in another old English Chronicle borrowed of one Perminger. What his opinions were they do not expresse. This they record, that this Richard Wiche first was degraded, then burnt at Tower-hill for Heresie. Some do affirm, that he before his death revolted; but that seemeth by his burning not to be true.

England condemned for cruelty.

Burning and flaying in England.

{Anno 1439. Rich. Wiche Priest, Martyr. Ex Fabian. part. 7. Ex antiqua alia Chronic.

It is also testified of him, that before his death he spake (as professying) that the Postern of the Tower should sink; which also afterward came as he saith to pass, wherefore of the people he was counted for an holy man; insomuch that (as it is affirmed) they came to the place where he was burnt, and there made their Oblations and prayers, and areared a great heap of flones, and fet up a Cross there by night: so that by this means a great clamor ran upon the Church-men, and especially upon such as put him to death. Then, to cease the rumor, the King gave commandment to punish such as went thither on Pilgrimage. The copy whereof is here to be seen as followeth.

Rich. Wiche after his death taken for a Saint.

Rex Vicecomitibus London & Midd. salutem. Albeit Richard Wiche late Clerk, who heretofore long sithence hortically did hold, teach, and publickly preach certain Heresies and erroneous opinions in many places within our Realm of England, and for the same many years now past being judicially convicted, did before a Judge in that behalf sufficiently abjure all Heresie generally, and afterward, as a Dog returning to his vomit, did presume to maintain, teach, and publickly preach his former errors and hereses, so that he was worthily adjudged a Relapse. And again, being impeached, for the same before the reverend Father in God Robert Bishop of Lond. his lawful Ordinary, was called forth to judgement, and being before him, did judicially confess his errors and hereses: For the which cause the Reverend Father, upon mature deliberation by him the said Reverend Father first had with the advice of the learned in the Law, his assistants, lawfully proceeding against the said Richard, did by his sentence definitive pronunce and adjudge him to be a Relapse, and did degrade him from the order and dignity of priesthood, and took from him all Priestly Ornaments, and deprived him of all Priestly function and priviledge (according to justice) and last of all turned him over to the secular power as the manner is: and afterwards you, by our Princely commandment and Warrant, did according to the Law of our Realm, for his last punishment, consume the body of the said Richard to ashes, being a Relapse convict, and degraded as a notorious Traitor, not only against God, but also against us, and our Crown and dignity; All which notwithstanding, certain our Subjects (as we have been sundry times informed) being pricked forward with a diabolical spirit, practising of all likelihood not only Sedition, but also Idolatry with- in our Realm, are not afraid publickly to affirm, that the said Richard was altogether innocent of heretical pravity. Nay rather they do most shamefully with their vain devices, and wickedly conceived imaginations, blaze abroad, that he was, and died a good, just, and an holy Man, and that he doth many miracles (whereas indeed no such miracles be done by him.) Which disordinate persons we may well, and upon probable causes, repute and deem culpable not only of heretical pravity, but also of High treason, and as Rebels to our person, Adherents, and violaters of the peace and dignity of our Realm, as withal breakers and Trespassers against the sacred Canons of the Church, who dare so presumptuously adventure to worship the said Richard as a Saint, whereas it is not lawful to worship any manner of person, be he never so holy, before he be canonized by the authority of the Bishop of Rome: We therefore being very careful for the good preservation of our peace, and desirous to abolish from out of all the coasts of the same all manner of Idolatry, do charge and command you, that in certain places within your liberties, where you shall think most convenient, you cause forthwith Proclamations to be made on our behalf, straightly charging that no person from henceforth presume to resort to the place where the said Richard was executed under colour of a Pilgrim, or for any other cause of devotion whatsoever, nor send any offering thither, nor worship him hereafter openly or secretly, or adjudge, esteem, repute, name, or talk of him as otherwise justified or innocent, than such as the said Reverend Father by his definitive sentence hath pronounced him to be, upon pain and penalty to be taken and reputed for an Heretick or a favourer of Hereticks, and to receive condigne punishment provided for Hereticks. And that you arrest all and every person whom ye shall find to do any thing contrary to this our Proclamation, and the same so arrested commit to our Prison, there to remain until we shall think good to send countermand for their deliverance. Witness the King at his Manor of Eltampited, the fifteenth day of July, in the eighteenth year of his reign.

Like Writs and to the same effect were directed to all the Sheriffs through all the Realm, bearing all one and the same date. By the vertue of which Letter, the Mayor and Sheriffs did use such diligence, that thortly after, that concourse and seeking of the people was left off.

Ex Regist. Honr. Chicheley.

The Bishops consult to abolish the Law of Premunire facias.

Then after the burning of this man, which was about the month of June, in the same year about November, a convocation was called by Henry Archbishop of Canterbury, wherein was propounded among the Clergy, to consult with themselves what way were best to be taken for the removing away the Law of Premuniri facias; for so were the hearts then of the temporality set against the Ecclesiastical fort, that where any vantage might be given them by the Law, they did nothing spare; by reason whereof the Church-men at that time were greatly molested by the said Law of Premuniri, and by the Kings Writs, and other Indictments, to their no small annoiance. By long consultation and good advisement, at last this way was taken, that a petition or supplication should be drawn and presented, to the King, for the abolishing of the aforesaid Law of Premuniri facias, and also for the restraining of other Briefs, Writs, and Indictments, which seemed then to lye heavy upon the Clergy. This Bill or Supplication being contrived and exhibited, by the Archbishop of Canterbury and of York, unto the King, standing in need the same time of a Subsidy to be collected of the Clergy; This answer was given to their Supplication, on the Kings behalf: That forsomuch as the time of Christmas then drew near, whereby he had as yet no sufficient leisure to advise upon the matter, he would take therein a farther pause. In the mean time, as one tending their quiet, he would send to all his Officers and Ministers within his Realm, that no such Brief of Premuniri should pass against them or any of them, from the said time of Christmas, till the next Parliament, Anno 1439. Ex Regist. Cant.

The Kings answer to the Bill of the Clergy touching the Law of Premunire.

In my former Edition of Acts and Monuments, so hastily raked up at that present, in such shortnesh of time, as in the said Book thou mayest see (gentle Reader) declared and signified; among many other matters therein contained, there is a short note made of one Eleanor Cobham, Dutchess of Glouceester, and of Sir Roger Only Knight (Priest, it should have been Printed,) which two persons, about the year of our Lord 1440, or the next year following, were condemned, the one to Death, the other to perpetual Prison. Of this little short matter Mr. Cope the Popes scout, lying in privy waight to spie faults in all mens works wheresoever any may appear, taketh Pepper in the Nose, and falleth again unto his old barking against me, for placing these foresaid persons in my Book of Martyrs; but especially he thinketh to have great vantage against me, for that in the same story I do joyn withall, one Margaret Foxtleman, the Witch of Eye, condemned also with them the same time, and burned for practising the Kings death by an Image of Wax, &c. To answer hereunto.

A brief answer to Cope concerning Lady Eleanor Cobham.

First, I say (as I before said) that I profess no such title to write of Martyrs, but in general to write of Acts and Monuments passed in the Church and Realm of England. Wherein, why should I be restrained from the free walk of a story writer, more than other that have gone before me?

To the third Objection.

Secondly, Touching my condemnation of Sir Roger Only, and the Lady Eleanor; if Mr. Alane be therewith offended; I answer, that I commended them for favouring and favouring of the truth of Christs doctrine: for the fact, if any such were in them, I do not commend them. And although I did commend them, yet neither did I it with any long tarrying upon it, nor yet altogether upon mine one head, without some sufficient warrant of authority. For why may not I as well believe John Bale, as Mr. Alane believe Mr. Fabian? Especially feeing, I do know, and was privy, that the said John in recognising his Centuries, followed altogether the History of Leland de Catalogo virorum illustrium; which Book being borrowed of Mr. Cheek, I my self did see in the hands of the foresaid John Bale, what time we were both together, dwelling in the House of the Noble Lady Dutchess of Richmond. Wherefore if he think me so lewd to speak without mine Authors, he is deceived. And if he think mine Authors not to be believed, then let this Nomothetes, or jolly Dictator, come forth and prescribe us a Law, what Authors he would have us to take, and what to refuse. For else why is it not as free for me to credit John Bale, and Leland, as for him to credit Robert Fabian, and Edward Hall; especially seeing they had seen his books and works left behind him, whereupon they might better judge, and so did never theste?

Thirdly, For the name of Roger Only; if Cope deny that there was any such name in stories meationed, but that there was one called Roger Bolinbroke, &c. hereby it may appear, that either his prompter out of England deceived him, or else that he, going no farther but to Fabian and Hall, lacketh no good will in him, but only a little matter to make a perfect Sicophant. And admit the said name of Only could not be found in those writers, yet were it not unpossible for a man to have two names, especially if he were a religious man, to bear the name of the Town where he was born, besides his own proper firname. But now, what if I (Mr. Cope) can avouch and bring forth to you the name of Roger Only out of sufficient Record, which you seem not to have yet read? Have ye not then done well and properly (think you) so bitterly to flee in my face, and bark so eagerly all this while at Moon-shine in the water, having no more cause almost against me, than against the man in the Moon? And now left you should think me so unprovided of unjust authority for my defence, as I see you unprovided of modesty and patience; write you to your prompter or fubomer (wherefoever he lurketh here in England) to send you over unto Lovane the book of John Harding a Chronicler, more ancient than either Fabian or Hall, printed in the house of Richard Grafton, Anno 1543. Where turn to the fol. 223. fac. b. lin. 19. and there you shall find and read these words.

Again, the Church and the King cursedly,
By help of one Master Roger Only, &c.

By the which words you must necessarily confess Roger Only to be the name of the man, or else must ye needs deny the Author. For otherwise, that Master Roger Bolinbroke was the only helper to the Duchess in that fact,

Pat. Cresser. 6. Bal. cap. 4.

by no wife it can ſtand with the ſtory of theſe Authors, which ſay, that four other beſides him were condemned for the ſame crime, &c. And moreover, though the ſaid Sir Roger Only was no Knight (as I have ſaid in my former Edition) yet this ye cannot deny, by the Teſtimony of them that have ſeen his works, but that he was a Prieſt, which you will grant to be a Knights fellow. And thus much for the name and condition of Mr. Roger Only.

To the fourth objection.

Fourthly, As concerning Margaret Jourdeman, whom ye call the Witch of Eye, ye offer me herein great wrong, to ſay that I make her a Martyr, which was a Witch; when as I here profeſs, confeſs and aſcertain both you, and all Engliſh men, both preſent, and all poſterity hereafter to come, that this Margaret Jourdeman I never ſpake of, never thought of, never dreamed of, nor did ever hear of, before you named her in your book your ſelf. So far is it off, that I either with my will, or againſt my will, made any Martyr of her.

M. Cope maketh without a cauſe.

Furthermore, I profeſs and denounce in like manner, that neither have you any juſt or congrue occaſion in my Book ſo to judge, much leſs to rail on me. For where in expreſs words I do ſpeak of the Mother of the Lady Young, what occaſion have you thereby to ſlander me and my Book with Margaret Jourdeman? Which Margaret whether ſhe was a Witch or not, I leave her to the Lord. As for me, neither did I know of her then, nor did I mean of her now. But becauſe I couple her in the ſame ſtory, you ſay. To this I ſay, becauſe ſhe was the Mother of a Lady, I thought to joyn her with another Lady in the ſame ſtory, as in one Pew together, although in one cauſe I will not ſay. And yet notwithſtanding I do ſo couple the ſaid Mother with the Dutcheſs, in ſuch diſtinct difference of years, that you Maſter Cope might eaſily have underſtood, or beſide you, no man elſe would have thought the contrary but Margaret Jourdeman was neither here in my Book, nor yet in my Memento. For the words of my ſtory are plain, where the condemnation of the Lady Eleanor, and of the Mother of Lady Young, being referred to the year of our Lord, 1441. I do alſo in the ſame ſtory (through the occaſion of that Lady) infer mention of the Mother of the Lady Young, declaring in expreſs words, that ſhe followed certain years after, and in the end of that Chapter do name alſo the year of her burning to be 1450 which was fifty years after the death of Only, and Margaret Jourdeman: by the computation of which years it is plain, that no other woman could be noted in that place, but only the Lady Youngs Mother.

The former Edition, p. 371.

But Mr. Cope, continuing ſtill in his wrangling mood, objecteth again, for that in my Calender the ſaid Lady Youngs Mother hath the next day in the Catalogue next after death of Roger Only, which day pertaineth properly to Margaret Jourdeman, which was burned the ſame day in Smithfield, and not to the Ladies Mother, &c.

What order was taken in placing the names and days, what is that to me? If he which had the diſpoſing of the Catalogue, did place them ſo in months, as he ſaw them joyned in Chapters, not peruſing peradventure nor adviſing the Chapters, that doth nothing prejudice the truth of my ſtory, which ſufficiently doth clear it ſelf in diſtinguiſhing them rightly in names and alſo in years, as is afore declared.

The fifth Obiection.

Fifthly and laſtly, Having thus ſufficiently anſwered to your circumſtances of perſons, names, and times (Maſter Cope) I will now enter to encounter with you concerning the fact and crime objected to the Lady Dutcheſs, and to the reſt; with this proteſtation before premiſed unto the Reader, that if the fact be true, and ſo done as is reported in the Hiſtories of Fabian, Hall, and Harding, I deſire the Reader then to take me, as though I did not deal here withal, nor ſpeak of the matter, but utterly to have pretermitted, and diſpunctted the ſame. But for ſo much as the deed and offence laid and given forth againſt theſe parties, may be a matter made, and of evil will compacted, rather than true indeed; therefore I do but only move a queſtion by way of Hiſtory, not as defending, nor commending, nor commemorating the thing, if it be true, but only moving the queſtion, whether it is to be judged true, or ſuſpected rather to be falſe and forged, and ſo having briefly propounded certain conjectural ſuſpitions or ſuppoſals concerning that matter, I will paſs it over, neither meddling on the one nor on the other.

The ſtory of the Lady Eleanor and Roger Only here pretermitted.

A queſtion whether Eleanor the Dutcheſs was culpable of treaſon againſt the King.

The firſt conjecture, why it may be poſſible that this act of Treaſon, laid to the charge of the Dutcheſs and Roger Only, againſt the King, may be untrue, is this; that the ſaid Only (otherwiſe named Bolingbroke) took it upon his death, that they never intended any ſuch thing as they were condemned for.

{KING Hen. 6.} Although theſe with many moe conjectures may be alledged in ſome part of defence of this Dutcheſs, and of her Chaplains and Prieſts, yet becauſe it may not be unpoſſible again the matter laid againſt them to be true, I leave it therefore at large as I find it; ſaying as I ſaid before, That if it be true which the Stories ſay in this matter, think I beſeech thee gentle Reader, that I have laid nothing hereof. Only, becauſe the matter may be diſputable, and not unpoſſible to be falſe, I have but moved thereof a queſtion, and brought my conjectures, leaving the determination and judgment hereof to thy indifferent and free arbitrement. And if M. Cope be ſo highly offended with me, becauſe in my firſt Edition of Acts and Monuments, I durſt name the Lady Eleanor Cobham, and Roger only; let him take this for a ſhort anſwer, becauſe my leaſure ſerveth not to make long brawls with him, That if I had thought no imperfections to have paſſed in my former Edition before, I would never have taken in hand the recognition thereof now the ſecond time, whereby to ſpunge away ſuch motes, as I thought would ſeem great ſtumbling blocks in ſuch Mens walks, which walk with no charity to edifie, but with malice to carp and reprehend, neither admoniſhing what they ſee amiſs in others, neither carrying with other Men reform themſelves, and finally finding quarrels where no great cauſe is juſtly given. And here an end with Maſter Cope for this time.

A brief anſwer to Maſter Cope's cavillations concerning Duke Humphrey's Wife.

Forſomuch as in the Proceſs before, mention was touched concerning the grudge between the Cardinal, called the rich Cardinal of Wincheſter, and the good Duke Humphry Duke of Glocester, the Kings Uncle and Protector of the Realm, order of Story now requireth to open ſome part of that matter more at large. Wherein this firſt is to be underſtood, that long before great flames of grudge and diſcord did burſt out between theſe two. For as the noble heart of the Duke could not abide the proud doings of the Cardinal, ſo much again the Cardinal in like manner fore envied and diſdained at the rule of the Duke of Glocester. Notwithſtanding that, by the means of the Duke of Bedford, the braſling out between them was before appeaſed and cured: yet not ſo, but that under imperfect amity, privy hatred, as ſparkles under the imbers, did ſtill remain: ſo that the Cardinal, joyning with the Archbiſhop of York, attempted many things of their own preſumption, contrary to the conſent, not only of the King (being then under age) but alſo of the Protector and Governor of the Realm. Wherewith the Duke (like a true hearted Prince) being not without juſt cauſe offended, declared in writing to the King certain complaints contained in 21 Articles, wherein the Cardinal and Archbiſhop had tranſgreſſed both againſt the King and his Laws. The tenor whereof more at large is in other Stories expreſſed, the briefe abſtract thereof followeth in a ſhort Summary here to be ſeen.

The contention between the Cardinal of Wincheſter and Duke Humfrey, Lord Protector.

{Anno 1440}

Ex Polydoro.

Certain Points or Articles objected by Duke Humphry againſt the Cardinal of Wincheſter.

Wincheſter preſumeth to be Cardinal againſt the mind of the King.

FIrſt, complained to his Sovereign Prince his right reſpected Lord Duke Humphry, his Uncle and Protector of the Realm, That the Biſhop of Wincheſter, in the days of his Father King Henry the fifth, took upon him the ſtate of a Cardinal, being denied by the King, ſaying, That he had as lief ſee his own Crown beſide him, as to ſee him wear a Cardinals Hat; and that in Parliaments, he, not being contented with the place of a Biſhop among the Spiritual perſons, preſumed above his order; which the ſaid Duke deſired to be redreſſed.

Wincheſter incurreth the Law of Præmunire.

2. Item, Whereas he being made a Cardinal was voided of his Biſhoprick of Wincheſter, he procured from Rome the Popes Bull, unknowing to the King, whereby he took again his Biſhoprick, contrary to the Common Law of this Realm, incurring thereby the caſe of proviſion, and forfeiting all his Goods to the King, by the Law of Præmunire facias.

Wincheſter Intruded himſelf to be the Kings Governor.

3. Item, He complained that the ſaid Cardinal, with the Archbiſhop of York, intruded themſelves to have the governance of the King, and the doing under the King of Temporal matters, excluding the Kings Uncle, and other Temporal Lords of the Kings kin, from having knowledge of any great matter.

The Cardinal diſcloſeth the King of his Jewels.

4. Item, Whereas the King had borrowed of the Cardinal four thouſand pounds, upon certain Jewels, and afterward had his money ready at the day to quit his Jewels; the Cardinal cauſed the Treaſurer to convert that money to the Payment of another Army, to keep the Jewels ſtill to his own uſe and gain.

The Cardinal deliverith the King upon his own Authority.

5. Item, He being then Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Chancellor of England, delivered the King of Scots upon his own Authority, contrary to the Act of Parliament, Wedding his Niece afterward to the ſaid King. Alſo, where the ſaid King of Scots ſhould have paid to the King forty thouſand pounds, the Cardinal procured Ten thouſand marks thereof to be remitted, and yet the reſt very ſlenderly paid.

The Cardinal playeth the Merchant.

6. Item, The ſaid Cardinal, for lending notable ſums to the King, had the profit of the Port of Hampton, where he ſetting his ſervants to be the Cuſtomers, Wool and other Marchandiſe was, under that cloke, exported, not ſo much to his ſingular vantage, being the chief Merchant, as to the great prejudice of the King, and detriment to his ſubjects.

The Cardinal diſcloſeth the Merchant.

7. Item, The Cardinal in lending out great ſums to the King, yet ſo deferred and delaied the ſum thereof, that coming out of ſeaſon the ſame did the King little pleaſure, but rather hinderance.

The Cardinal a defender of the King.

8. Item, Where Jewels and Plate were priſed at Eleven thouſand pounds in weight of the ſaid Cardinal forfeited to the King; the Cardinal for Loan of a little piece, got him a reſtorement thereof, to the Kings great damnage, who better might have ſpared the Commons, if the ſum had remained to him clear.

9. Item, Where the King's Father had given Elizabeth Berwichamps Three hundred Marks of Livelood, with this condition, If the Wedded within a year; the Cardinal, notwithſtanding ſhe was Married two or three years after, yet gave her the ſame, to the Kings great hurt, and diminiſhing of his Inheritance.

The Cardinal diſturbeth upon him like a King.

10. Item, The Cardinal, having no Authority nor Intereſt in the Crown, preſumed notwithſtanding to call before him, like a King, to the Kings high derogation.

11. Item, That the Cardinal ſued a Pardon from Rome, to be freed from all Diſtins, due to the King by the Church of Wincheſter, giving thereby example to the Clergy, to withdraw their Diſms likewiſe, and lay all the charge only upon the Temporalty and poor Commons.

12, 13. Item, By the procuring of the ſaid Cardinal and Archbiſhop of York, great Goods of the Kings were loſt and diſpended upon needleſs Ambaſſades, firſt to Arras, then to Calice.

14. Item, It was laid to the charge of the ſaid Cardinal and Archbiſhop, That by their means, going to Calice, the two Enterviſes of the King, the Duke of Orleance and Duke of Bergain, were deduced together in one and alliance; who being at War before between themſelves, and now confederate together again, joyned both together againſt the Kings Towns and Countries over the Sea, to the great danger of Normandy, and deſtruction of the Kings people.

The Cardinal Traitor to the Crown.

15. Item, By the Archbiſhop of York, and the Cardinal, perſuations were moved openly in the Kings preſence, to with allurements and inducements, that the King ſhould leave his right, his title, and honour of his Crown, in nominating him King of France, during certain years, and that he ſhould utterly abſtain, and be content only in writing with Rex Angliæ, to the great note and infamy of the King, and all his Progenitors.

16, 17. Item, Through the ſleight and ſubtilty of the ſaid Cardinal and his mate, a new convention was intended between the King and certain adverſaries of France; alſo the deliverance of the Duke of Orleance was appointed in ſuch ſort, as thereby great diſworthip and inconvenience was like to fall, rather of the Kings ſide, than of the other.

The Cardinal a ſpoyler of the Kings Lands.

20. Item, Seeing the Cardinal was risen to such Riches and Treasure, which could grow to him, neither by his Church, nor by Inheritance (which he then had) it was of necessity to be thought, that it came by his great deceits, in deceiving both the King and his Subjects, in selling Offices, Preferments, Livelioods, Captainships, both here, and in the Realm of France, and in Normandy so that what hath been there lost, he hath been the greatest causer thereof.

Furthermore, when the said Cardinal had forfeited all his Goods by the Statute of Provition, he having the rule of the King, and of other matters of the Realm, purchased from the Pope a Charter of Pardon, not only to the defeating of the Laws of the Realm, but also to the defrauding of the King, who otherwise might and should have had wherewith to sustain his Wars, without any Tallage of his poor people, &c.

Prelates hold one with another.

When the King heard these accusations, he committed the hearing thereof to his Council, whereof the most part were Spiritual persons. So, what for fear, and what for favour, the matter was winked at, and dalled out, and nothing said thereunto, and a fair countenance was made to the Duke, as though no displeasure had been taken, nor malice born in these Spiritual stomachs. But shortly after, the smoke hereof not able to keep in any longer within the Spiritual breasts of these charitable Church-men, brast out in flames of mischief. For upon the neck of this matter, as witnesseth Fabian, Polychronicon, and Hall which followeth Polychronicon, first enfied the condemnation of Lady Eleanor the Dutchess and her Chaplains, as ye have heard before. Whereby it may appear, the said Dutchess more of malice than of any just cause thus to have been troubled. Also within six years after followed the lamentable destruction of the Duke himself, as hereafter more is to be declared.

{Ann. 1445} The death of Henry Chichesly Archbishop of Canterbury.

And after the condemnation of Lady Eleanor the Dutchess aforesaid, within few years, Anno 1445, followed the death of Henry Chichesly Archbishop of Canterbury, by whom the was condemned in St. Stephen's Chappel at Wynchester, for Penance to bear a Taper through Cheapside three sundry times, and afterward Out-lawed to the Isle of Man, under the custody of Sir John Standly, Knight. This Henry Chichesly builded in his time two Colleges in the University of Oxford, the one called Alsolne College, the other named Barnard College.

The building of Alsolne College and Barnard College of Oxford.

Proceeding now to the year, wherein suffered Humphry that good Duke of Glocester, which was the year of our {Ann. 1447} Lord 1447, first we will begin in few words to intreat of his life and converfation; then of the manner and cause of his death. As touching the offspring and descent of this Duke, first, he was the Son of Henry the fourth, Brother to King Henry the fifth, and Uncle to King Henry the sixth, affigned to be the Governor and Protector of his person. Of manners he seemed meek and gentle, loving the Common-wealth, a fupporter of the poor Commons, of wit and wisdom, discreet and studious, well affected to Religion, and a friend to verity, and no lefs Enemy to pride and ambition, especially in haughty Prelates, which was his undoing in this present evil World. And which is feldom and rare in such Princes of that calling, he was both learned himself, and no lefs given to study, and also a singular favourer and Patron to them which were studious and learned. And that my commendation of him may have the more credit I will produce the Teftimony of learned writers, who living in his time, not only do commend his famous knowledge, and ripeneſs of learning in him, but also commit and submit their works to his Judgment to be examined. Of which writers, one is Petrus de Monte, writing, De virtutum & vitiorum differentia; who in his Epiſtle Dedicatory beginning with the singular commendation of this Duke, and afterward speaking De optimarum artium, liberalium; scientiarum peritia, saith thus: Cui tu quidem omni conatu, omni ingenio, atque studio incumbis: adeo ut nihil tibi sine librorum lectione jucundum, gratum aut certe delectabile videatur, &c. And in further proceſs of his work, thus he further declareth, saying, Delectaris autem non una tantum arte aut scientia, quamquam & id quidem esset satis; verum fere omnibus, earumque ordines magna quadam avviditate legisti, &c. Besides this Petrus de Monte, let us hear also the judgment of another writer of the same age, named Lapideatellius, who likewise Dedicating to the faid Duke Humphry, his Book intituled Comparatio studiorum & rei militaris, Amongst divers other words commendatory, hath these which follow, Ad te potissimum mitto, quod horum te optimum, & sapientissimum judicem sore existimo, qui ut ex integerrimo patre domino Zenone Bajocensi Episcopo, homine tuæ laudæ cupidissimo, accepi, ita in hu humanitatis studia invigilaveres, ut nullus toto terrarum orbe princeps nec doctrina, nec eloquentia, nec humanitate tecum comparandus sit, &c. Many other arguments and places may be brought to declare what is to be efteemed of the learning and studious wit of this noble Prince.

{KING Hen.6.}

Lapideatellius. De comparatione studiorum & rei militaris ad D. Humfridum.

Furthermore, As the learning of this Prince was rare and memorable, so was the discreet Wisdom and singular Prudence in him no lefs to be considered; as for the more manifeſt proof thereof I thought here good, amongst many other his godly doings, to recite one example reported as well by the Pen of Sir Thomas More, as also by M. William Tindal, the true Apoſtle of these our later days, to the intent to see and note, not only the crafty working of falſe Miracles in the Clergy, but also that the prudent discretion of this high and mighty Prince, the foresaid Duke Humphry, may give us the better to underſtand what Man he was. The story lieth thus:

A falſe miracle espied.

In the young days of this King Henry the sixth, being yet under the governance of this Duke Humphry his Protector, there came to St. Albans a certain begger with his Wife, and there was walking about the Town begging, five or six days before the Kings coming thither, saying, That he was born blind, and never saw in his life, and was warned in his dream, that he should come out of Barwick, where he faid he had ever dwelled, to seek St. Alban, and that he had been at his Shrine, and had not been holpen, and therefore he would go and seek him at some other places; for he had heard fome say, since he came, That St. Albans body should be at Colen, and indeed such a contention hath there been. But of truth, as I am surely informed, he lieth here, at St. Albans, saying some reliks of him, which they there shew Shrined. But to tell you forth my tale, when the King was come, and the Town full, suddenly this blind Man at St. Albans Shrine, had his sight again, and a miracle solemnly Rung, and Te Deum Sung, so that nothing was talked of in all the Town, but this miracle. So hapned it then, that Duke Humphry of Glocester, a Man also no lefs wise than well learned, having great joy to see such a miracle, called the poor Man unto him; and first shewing himself joyous of Gods glory so shewed in the getting of his sight, and exhorting him to meekneſs, and to no ascribing of any part of the worship to himself, nor to be proud of the peoples praise, which would call him a good and godly man thereby; at last, he looked well upon his Eyes, and asked whether he could see nothing at all in all his life before. And when as well his Wife as himself affirmed fally no, then he looked advisedly upon his Eys again, and said, I believe you very well, for me thinketh ye cannot see well yet. Yea Sir, quoth he, I thank God and his holy Martyr, I can see now as well as any Man. You can (quoth the Duke) What colour is my Gown? Then anon the begger told him. What colour (quoth he) is this Mans Gown? He told him also, and so forth, without any flicking he told him the names of all the colours that could be shewed him. And when the Duke saw that, he had him walk Traitor, and made him to be set openly in the stocks: for though he could have seen suddenly by miracle the difference between divers colours, yet could he not by the sight so suddenly tell the names of all these colours, except he had known them before, no more than the names of all the Men that he should suddenly see.

Diſſimulation well punished.

By

{KING Hen.6.}

By this may it be seen how Duke Humphry had not only an head to diſcern and diſſever truth from forged and fained Hypocriſie, but study also, and diligence likewise was in him to reform that which was amiss.

Commendation of Duke Humphry. The good Duke of Glocester.

And thus much hitherto for the noble Prowess and Vertues, joyned with the like ornaments of knowledge and literature, shining in this princely Duke. For the which as he was both loved of the poor Commons, and well spoken of of all Men, and no lefs deſerving the same, being called The good Duke of Glocester; so neither yet wanted he his enemies and privy enviers, whether it was through the fatal and unfortunate luck of the name of that House, which is but a vain and frivolous obſervation of Polydore and Hall which followeth him, bringing in the examples of Hugh Spenser, of Thomas of Woodstock, Son of King Edward the third, of this Duke Humphry, and after of King Richard the third, Duke likewise of Glocester: or whether it was, That the nature of true vertue is such, that as the flame ever beareth the smoke, and the body his shadow, so the brightneſs of vertue never blazeth, but hath some diſdain or envy waiting upon it; or else whether it was rather for some divorcement from his Wife, or for some other vice or treſpaſs done (as seemeth moſt like truth) which God as well in Dukes Houſes correcteth, as in other inferior persons, especially where he loveth. But howsoever the cauſe is to us unknown, this good Duke of Glocester, albeit being both the Kings sole Uncle, and having so many well-willers through the whole Realm, yet lacked not his Satan, lacked not his secret ministers. Of whom specially was Henry Beuford Cardinal, Bithop of Winchester, and Chancellor of England; who, of long time diſdaining, and envying the rule and authority of this Duke, first had diſposed and appointed himself to remove the Kings Perſon from Eltham unto Windsor out of the Dukes hands, and there to put in such Governors as him liſted. After that, intending the Dukes Death, he set Men of Arms and Archers at the end of London-bridge, and fore-barring the Highway with a draw-chain, set Men in Chambers, Cellers and Windows with Bows and Arrows, and other Weapons, to the purposed destruction both of the Duke and his retinue, if God had not so diſposed to turn his journy another way. Beside other manifold injuries and moleſtations, the ambitious Cardinal, seeking by all means to be Pope, procured such trouble against him, that great division was thereby in the whole Realm; insomuch that all the Shops within the City of London were shut in, for fear of the favourers of these two great Perſonages; for each part had assembled no small number of people. For the pacifying whereof, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the Duke of Quinbre, called the Prince of Portingale, rode seven times in one day between those two adversaries. Such were then the troubles of this tumultuous diviſion within the Realm, and all by the excitation of this unquiet Cardinal.

The enemies of the Duke of Glocester.

The malicious working of the Cardinal against the Duke of Glocester.

William de la Pool, Duke of Suffolk, the cauſe of the Duke of Glocester's death.

Over and beside this Cardinal afore-mentioned, an other capital enemy to the said Duke was William de la Pole, first Earl, then Marquesś, at last Duke of Suffolk, a Man very ill reported of in Stories, to be not only the Organ and Inſtrument of this good Mans death, but also to be the annoyance of the Common-wealth, and ruin of the Realm. For by him and his only device was first concluded the unprofitable and unhonorable Marriage between the King and Lady Margaret, Daughter of the Duke of Angeou; whereas the King had concluded and contracted a Marriage before with the Daughter of the Earl of Armonick, upon conditions so much more profitable and honourable, as more convenient it is for a Prince to Marry a Wife with Riches and Friends, than to take a Maid with nothing, and diſinherit himself and his Realm of old Rights, and ancient Inheritance; which so came to paſs. And all this the good Duke did well forefee, and declared no lefs; but his Counsel would not be taken. Whereupon followed first the giving away the Dutchy of Angeou, and the City of Maine, with the whole Country of Maine, to Reiner Duke of Angeou and Father of the Damsel, called then King of Sicile, and of Jeruſalem, having thereof no peny profit, but only a vain name to play withal.

The unprofitable marriage between King Henry the fifth and Queen Margaret.

Queen Margaret mortal enemy to the Duke of Glocester.

Another sore Enemy and mortal Plague to this Duke was the Queen her self, lately before Married to the King, Who being of haughty ſtomach, and all set upon glory, of wit and wilineſs, lacking nothing, and perceiving her Husband to be simple of wit, and eaſie to be ruled, took upon her to Rule and Govern both the King and Kingdom. And because the Advice and Counsel of Humphry Duke of Glocester was somewhat a ſtay that her Authority and Regiment could not so fully proceed; and partly because the said Duke before did diſagree from that Marriage, this manly Woman and courageous Queen ceaſed not by all imaginations and practiſes poſſible to fet forward his deſtruction, having also for her helper herein the Duke of Buckingham, &c.

The malice of a Woman.

These being his principal Enemies and mortal Foes, fearing leſt some commotion might arise, if such a Prince so near the Kings blood, and so dear to the people, and of all Men so beloved, should be openly executed and put to death, they deviſed how to trap him, and circumvent him unknowing and unprovided. For the more speedy furtherance whereof a Parliament was Summoned to be kept at Bury, Anno 1447, far from the Citizens of London, as William Tindal in his Book of praćtise writeth, where resorted all the Peers of the Realm, and amongst them the Duke of Glocester, thinking no harm to any Man, and leſs to himself. Who on the second day of the Seſſion was by the Lord Beamond, High Conſtable then of England, accompanied with the Duke of Buckingham and other, arrested, apprehended and put in Ward, and upon the same all his servants diſcharged and put from him, of whom 32 of the principal, being also armed themselves, were diſperſed into divers Priſons, to the great murmuring and grievance of the people. After this Arreſt thus done, and the Duke put into Ward, the night after (said Hall, six nights after saith Fabian and Polychron.) he was found dead in his Bed, the 24th of February, and his body shewed to the Lords and Commons, as though he had been taken naturally with some suddain Diſeaſe. And although no wound in his Body could be seen, yet to all indifferent Perſons it might well be judged, that he died of no natural pang, but of some violent hand. Some ſuſpected him to be ſtrangled, some that a whole Spit was privily forced into his Body; some affirm that he was ſtifled between two Feather-beds. After the death of this Duke, and his Body being interred at St. Albans, after he had politickly by the space of 25 years governed this Realm, five of his Houſhold, to wit, one Knight, three Eſquires, and a Yeoman, were Arraigned, and Convict to be Hanged, Drawn and Quartered. Who being Hanged and cut down half alive, the Marquesś of Suffolk, there preſent, ſhewed the Charter of the Kings Pardon, and so they were delivered. Notwithſtanding, all this could not appeaſe the grudge of the people, saying, That the saving of the servants was no amends for the murthering of the Maſter.

A ſnare to catch the Innocent. {Anno 1447} A Parliament at Bury.

The cruel death or Martyrdom of the good Duke of Glocester.

In this cruel Fact of these perſons, which did so conſpire and conſent to the death of this noble Man, and which thought thereby to work their own safety, the marvellous works of Gods Judgment appeareth herein to be noted, who as in all other like cruel policies of Man, so in this also turned all their policies clean contrary. So that where the Queen thought most to preſerve her Husband in honour, and her self in State, thereby both she lost her Husband, her Husband loſt his Realm, the Realm loſt Angeou, Normandy, the Dutchy of Aquitane, with all her parts beyond the Sea, Calice only except, as in the ſequel of the matter, whoſo will read the Stories, ſhall right well underſtand.

The judgment of God upon them which perſecuted the Duke of Glocester.

The next year following, it followed also that the Cardinal, who was the principal Artificer and Ringleader of all this miſchief, was ſuffered of God no longer to live. Of whose wicked conditions, being more largely set forth in Edward Hall, I omit here to ſpeak. What he himself and manner of the ſame. ſpake on his death-bed for example to other, I thought not beſt to pretermit. Who hearing that he ſhould die, and that there was no remedy, murmured and grudged, wherefore he ſhould die having ſo much Riches, ſaying, That if the whole Realm would ſave his life, he was able either by Policy to get it, or by Riches to buy it; adding and ſaying moreover. Fie (quoth he) will not Death be hired? Will mony do nothing? When my Nephew of Bedford died, I thought my ſelf half up the wheel, but when I ſaw mine other Nephew of Glocester deceaſed, Hallo.* And thus is the rich Bishop of Winchester, with all his Pomp and Riches, gone; with the which Riches he was able, not only to build Schools, Colleges, and Universities, but also was able to sustain the Kings Armies in War (as is specified in Stories) without any Taxing of the Commons.

Will. Wanfleet Bishop of Winchester. Magdalen College in Oxford builded.

In whose seat next succeeded William Wanflet, preferred to the Bishoprick of Winchester, who though he had less substance, yet having a mind more godly disposed, did found and erect the College of Mary Magdalen in Oxford. For the which Foundation as there have been and be yet many Students bound to yield grateful thanks unto God, so I must needs confess my self to be one, except I will be unkind.

Gods punishment upon the Marquess of Suffolk.

Among the other mischievous adversaries which sought and wrought the death of Humphry Duke Glocester, next to the Cardinal of Winchester (who as is said, died the next year following) was William de la Pole, Marquess of Suffolk, who also lived not long after, nor long escaped the unpunished. For although he was highly exalted, by the means of the Queen, (whose Marriage he only procured) unto the favour of the King, and was made Duke of Suffolk, and magnified of the people, and bare the whole sway in the Realm, whose acts and facts his vain glorious head caused also by the assent of the Commons to be Recorded, and substantially to be Registred in the Rolls of the Parliament, for a perpetual renown to him and all his Posterity for ever; yet notwithstanding, the hand of Gods Judgment still hanging over him, he enjoyed not long this his Triumphant Victory. For within three years after the death and ruin of the Cardinal, the voices of the whole Commons of England were utterly turned against him, accusing him in the Parliament at the Black-Friers for declaring himself to be the Author of the Dutchy of Angeou and the Earldom of Maine; also for the death of the noble Prince Humphry Duke of Glocester. They imputed moreover to him the loss of all Normandy, laying unto him, That he was a swallower up and consumer of the Kings Treasure, the expeller of all good and vertuous Counsellors from the King, and advancer of vitious persons, apparent adversaries to the publick wealth; so that he was called in every Mans mouth, A Traitor, a Murtherer, and a Robber of the Kings Treasure.

The vain glory of mans heart forgetting himself in honour.

The Commons unconstant.

The Duke of Suffolk accused by the Commons.

The Queen, albeit she tenderly loved the Duke, yet to appease the exclamation of the Commons, was forced to commit him to the Tower, where he, with as much pleasure and liberty as could be, remained for a month, which being expired, he was delivered and restored again unto his old place, and former favour with the King; whereat the people more grudged than before. It hapned by the occasion of a commotion then beginning amongst the rude people, by one whom they called Blewbeard, that the Parliament was for that time adjourned to Leicester, the Queen thinking by force and rigour of Law to repress there the malice and evil will conceived against the Duke. But at that place few of the Nobility would appear. Wherefore it was again rejourned unto London, and kept at Westminster, where was a whole company, and a full appearance with the King and Queen, and with them the Duke of Suffolk as chief Counsellor. The Commons, not forgetting the old grudge, renewed again their former Articles and Accusations against the said Duke, against the Bishop of Salisbury, and Sir James Fines, Lord Say, and other. When the King perceived that no glossing nor dissimulation would serve to appease the continual clamour of the importunate commons, to make some quiet pacification, first, he sequestred from him the Lord Say, Treasurer of England, and other the Dukes adherents from their offices. Then he put in exile the Duke of Suffolk for term of five years, supposing by that space the furious rage of the people would assuage. But the hand of God would not suffer the guiltless blood of Humfry Duke of Glocester to be unrevenged, or the flagitious perfon further to continue. For when he was shipped in Suffolk, intending to be transported into France, he was encountred with a Ship of War belonging to the Tower; whereby he was taken, and brought into Dover-roade, and there on the one side of a Ship-boat, one stroke off his head; which was about the year of our Lord 1450.

The Duke of Suffolk again accused.

Example of Gods judgment and of blood revenged.

The Duke of Suffolk beheaded.

And thus have ye heard the full story and discourse of Duke Humphry, and of all his adversaries; also of Gods condign punishment upon them for their bloody cruelty. But before I remove from the said story of the foresaid Duke, and of the proud Cardinal his enemy, I will here by the way annex a certain instrument, by the King and advice of his Council, made against the said Cardinal, taking upon him to enter into this Realm as Legate from the Pope, contrary to the old Laws and customs of this Realm, as by the words of the said instrument here in Latine may well appear.

The Benefit and Invention of PRINTING.

{Ann. 1440} The Art of Painting Invented. Ex Typographo per Mathiam Fusdicem.

IN following the course and order of years, we find this foresaid year of our Lord 1450, to be famous and memorable, for the divine and miraculous inventing of Printing. Nauclerus, and Wymfelingus following him, refer the invention thereof to the year 1440. In Paralip. Abbatis Ursp. It is Recorded this faculty to be found, An. 1446. Æneas Antonius and Ziegleras do say, Anno, 1450. The first Inventor thereof (as most agree) is thought to be a German, dwelling first in Argentine, afterward Citizen of Mentz, named J. Fausius, a Goldsmith. The occasion of this Invention first was by Engraving the Letters of the Alphabet in Metal; who then laying black Ink upon the Metal gave the form of Letters in Paper. The Man being industrious and active, perceiving that, thought to proceed further, and to prove whether it would frame as well in words, and in whole sentences, as it did in Letters. Which when he perceived to come well to pass, he made certain other of his counsel, one J. Guttemberg and P. Schaffard, binding them by their Oath to keep silence for a season. After ten years John Guttemberg, compartner with Faustus, began then first to broach the matter at Strausbrough. The Art, being yet but rude, in process of time was set forward by inventive wits, adding more and more to the perfection thereof. In the number of whom, J. Mentel, J. Prus, Adolphus Ruschius, were great helpers. Ulricus Han, in Latin called Gallus, first brought it to Rome. Whereof the Epigram was made:

Printing came of God.

Notwithstanding, what Man soever was the Instrument, without all doubt God himself was the ordainer and disposer thereof, no otherwise, than he was of the gift of Tongues, and that for a singular purpose. And well may this gift of Printing be resembled to the gift of Tongues: for like as God then spake with many Tongues, and yet all that would not turn the Jews so now, when the Holy Ghost speaketh to the adversaries in innumerable sorts of Books, yet they will not be converted, nor turn to the Gospel.

Printing likened to the Gift of Tongues.

Now to consider to what end and purpose the Lord hath given this gift of Printing to the Earth, and to what great utility and necessity it serveth, it is not hard to judge, who so wisely perpendeth both the time of the sending, and the sequel which thereof ensueth.

The time considered when Printing was found.

And first, touching the time of this faculty given to the use of Man, this is to be marked, that when as the Bishop of Rome with all the whole and full consent of the Cardinals, Patriarchs, Archbishops, Bishops, Abbats, Priors, Lawyers, Doctors, Provosts, Deans, Archdeacons, assembled together in the Council of Constance, had condemned poor John Hus, and Jerome of Prague to death for Heresie, notwithstanding they were no Hereticks, and after they had subdued the Bohemians and all the whole World under the Supreme Authority of the Romish See; and had made all Christian people obediencies and vassals unto the same, having (as one would say) all the World at their will, so that the matter now was past, not only the power of all Men, but the hope also of any Man to be recovered; in this very time so dangerous and desperate, where Mans power could do no more, there the blessed Wisdom and Omnipotent Power of the Lord began to work for his Church, not with Sword and Target to subdue his exalted adversary, but with Printing, Writing and Reading to convince darkness by light, error by truth, ignorance by learning. So that, by this means of Printing, the secret Operation of God hath heaped upon that proud Kingdom a double confusion. For whereas the Bishop of Rome had burned J. Hus before, and Jerome of Prague, who neither denied his Transubstantiation, nor his Supremacy, nor yet his Popish Mass, but said Mass, and had Mass themselves, neither spake against his Purgatory, nor any other great matter of his Popish Doctrine, but only exclaimed against his excessive and pompous Pride, his unchristian or rather antichristian abomination of life: thus while he could not abide his wickedness only of life to be touched, but made it Heresie, or at least matter of Death, whatsoever was spoken against his detestable conversation and manners, God of his secret Judgment, seeing time to help his Church, hath found a way by this faculty of Printing, not only to confound his life and conversation, which before he could not abide to be touched, but also to cast down the foundation of his standing, that is, to examine, confute, and detect his Doctrine, Laws and Institutions, most detestable in such sort, that though his life were never so pure, yet his Doctrine standing as it doth, no Man is so blind but he may see, that either the Pope is Antichrist, or else that Antichrist is near Cousin to the Pope. And all this doth and will hereafter more and more appear by Printing.

Double confusion upon the Pope by Printing.

The reason whereof is this: for that hereby Tongues are known, Knowledge groweth, Judgement encreaseth, Errors are dispersed, the Scripture is seen, the Doctors be read, Stories be opened, Times compared, Truth discerned, Fallhood detected, and with Finger pointed, and all (as I said) through the benefit of Printing. Wherefore I suppose, that either the Pope must abolish Printing, or he must seek a new World to reign over: for else, as this World standeth, Printing doubtless will abolish him. But the Pope, and all his College of Cardinals, must this understand, That through the Light of Printing, the World beginneth now to have Eyes to see, and Heads to judge: He cannot walk so invisible in a Net, but he will be spied. And although through might he stopped the mouth of John Hus before, and of Jerome, that they might not preach, thinking to make his Kingdom sure: yet, in stead of John Hus and others, God hath opened the Press to preach, whose voice the Pope is never able to stop with all the puissance of his Triple Crown. By this Printing, as by the Gift of Tongues, and as by the singular Organ of the Holy Ghost, the Doctrine of the Gospel founded to all Nations and Countries under Heaven, and what God reveleth to one Man, is dispersed to many, and what is known in one Nation, is opened to all.

Good counsel to the Pope.

The first and best were for the Bishop of Rome, by the benefit of Printing, to learn and know the truth. If he will not, let him well understand that Printing is not set up for nought. To strive against the stream it availeth not. What the Pope hath lost, since Printing and the Press began to preach, let him cast his Counters. First, When Erasmus wrote, and Frobenius Printed, what a blow thereby was given to all Friers and Monks in the World? And who seeth not that the Pen of Luther following after Erasmus, and set forward by writing, hath set the Triple Crown so awry on the Popes head, that it is like never to be set straight again?

Briefly, if there were no demonstration to lead, yet by this one argument of Printing, the Bishop of Rome might understand the counsel and purpose of the Lord to work against against him, having provided such a way in Earth, that almost how many Printing Presses there be in the World, so many Block-houses there be against the high Castle of Sr. Angel; so that either the Pope must abolish Knowledge and Printing, or Printing at length will root him out. For if a Man wisely consider the hold and standing of the Pope, thus he may repute with himself, that as nothing made the Pope strong in time past, but lack of knowledge and ignorance of simple Christians: so contrariwise, now nothing doth debilitate and shake the high Spire of his Papacy so much, as Reading, Preaching, Knowledge and Judgment; that is to say, The fruit of Printing; Whereof some experience we see already, and more is like (by the Lords Blessing) to follow. For although, through outward force and violent cruelty, Tongues dare not speak, yet the hearts of Men daily (no doubt) be instructed through the benefit of Printing. And though the Pope both now by cruelty, and in times past by ignorance, had all under his possession: yet neither must he think, that violence will always continue, neither must he hope for that now which he had then; forsomuch as in those former days Books then were scarce, and also of such excessive Price, that few could attain to the Buying, fewer to the Reading and Studying thereof; which Books now by the means of this Art, are made eatie unto all Men. Ye heard before, pag. 755, how Nicholas Belward bought a New Testament in those days for four Marks and forty Pence, whereas now the same Price will well serve forty persons with so many Books.

So preached the Vicar of Croydon in King Henry the eighth's days, as Paul's Cross is, That either we must root out Printing, or else Printing will root out us.

Moreover, it was before noted and declared by the Testimony of Armachanus, how for defect of Books and good Authors, both Universities were decaied and good wits kept in ignorance, while begging Friers, scraping all the wealth from other Priests, heaped up all Books that could be gotten, into their own Libraries; where either they did not diligently apply them, or else did not rightly use them, or at least kept them from such as more fruitfully would have perused them. In this then so great rarity, and also dearth of good Books, when neither they which could have Books would well use them, nor they that would, could have them to use, what marvel if the greedines of a few Prelates did abate the blindnes of those days, to the advancement of themselves? Wherefore Almighty God of his merciful Providence, seeing both what lacked in the Church, and how also to remedy the same, for the advancement of his Glory, gave the understanding of this excellent Art or Science of Printing, whereby three singular commodities at one time came to the World. First, The price of all Books is diminished. Secondly, The speedy help of Reading more furthered. And Thirdly, The plenty of all good Authors enlarged; according as Aprutinus doth truly report:

Tright commodity by Printing.

Imprimit ille die, quantum non scribitur anno. i.

The Press in one day will do in Printing,
That none in one year can do in Writing.

When Guns were first Invented.

By reason whereof, as Printing of Books Minisired matter of Reading, so Reading brought Learning, Learning shewed Light, by the brightnes whereof blind Ignorance was suppressed, Error detected, and finally Gods Glory with Truth of his Word advanced. This faculty of Printing was after the Invention of Guns the space of 130 years; which Invention was also found in Germany, Anno 1380. And thus much for the worthy commendation of Printing.

The lamentable losing of Constantinople.

The losing of Constantinople.

{Anno 1453.} ANno 1453, Constantinus Paleologus, being Emperor of Constantinople, the 29th day of May, the great City of Constantinople was taken by the Turk Mahometes, after the Siege of 54 days; which Siege began in the beginning of April. Within the City, beside the Citizens, were but only 6000 refuers of the Greeks. And 3000 of the Venetians and Genues. Against these, Mahometes brought an Army of 400 Thousand, collected out of the Countries and Places adjoyning near about, as out of Grecia, Illyrica, Wallachia, Dardania, Triballis, Bulgaria, out of Bithynia, Galatia, Lydia, Cicilia, and such others which Places had the name yet of Christians. Thus one Neighbour for lucre sake helped to destroy another. {KING Hen.6.}

The City was compassed of the Turks both by the Sea and Land. Mahometes the Turk divided his Army into three sundry parts, which in three parts of the City so beat the Walls and brake them down, that they attempted by the breaches thereof to enter the City. But the valiantnes of the Christians therein won much commendation; whose Duke was called John Justinianus, of Genua. But forsomuch as the assaults were great, and the number of the Christian Soldiers daily decreased, fighting both at the Walls and at the Haven against such a multitude of the Turks, they were not able long to hold out. Beside the Armies which lay battering at the Walls, the Turk had upon the Sea his Navy of 250 Sail, lying upon the Haven of the City, reaching from the one side of the Havens mouth unto the other, as if a Bridge should be made from the one Bank to the other. Which Haven by the Citizens was barred with Iron Chains, whereby the Turks were kept out a certain space. Against which Navy 7 Ships there were of Genua within the Haven, and 3 of Creta, and certain of Chio, which stood against them. Also the Soldiers issuing out of the City, as occasion would serve, did manfully gainstand them, and with wilde fire set their Ships on fire, that a certain space they could serve to no use. At length the Chains being brast, and a way made, the Turks Navy entred the Haven, and assaulted the City; whereby the Turk began to conceive great hope, and was in forwardnes to obtain the City. The assault and skirmish then waxing more hot, Mahometes the tyrant stood by upon an Hill, with his warriors about him, crying and howling out unto them to scale the Walls and enter the Town; otherwise, if any reculled, he threatned to kill them, and so he did. Wherefore a great number of his Soldiers, in their repulse and retire, were slain by the Turks Men, being sent by his commandment to slay them, and so they were justly served, and well payed their hire. The tyranny of th. Turk toward his own Men.

Although this was some comfort to the Christians, to see and behold out of the City the Turks retinue so confumed, yet that hope lasted not long. Shortly after by rage of War, it hapned Justinian the Duke above-named to be hurt; who notwithstanding that he was earnestly desired by Paleologus the Emperor, not to leave his Tower which he had to keep, seeing his wound was not deadly dangerous; yet could he not be entreated to tarry, but left his standing, and his Fort dis-furnished, setting none in his place to ward the same. And so this doughty Duke, hurt more with his false-heart than with force of Weapon, gave over and fled to Chius, where shortly after for sorrow, rather than for soreneſs of his wound, he died. Many of his Soldiers, seeing their Captain flee, followed after, leaving their Fort utterly destitute without defence. The Turks, understanding that vantage, soon brast into the City. The Emperor Paleologus seeing no other way but to fly, making toward the Gate, either was slain, or else troden down with the multitude. In the which Gate Eight hundred dead Mens bodies were found and taken up. The conveyances of Duke Justinian.

The City of Constantinople thus being got, the Turks facking and ranging about the streets, houses, and comers, did put to the Sword moſt unmercifully whomsoever they found, both Aged and Young, Matrons, Virgins, Children and Infants, sparing none; the noble Matrons and Virgins were horribly ravished, the Goods of the City, the Treasuries in houses, the Ornaments in Churches brisoully handled, in hatred of Christ. The spoil and havock of the City lasted three days together, while the barbarous Souldiers murdered and rifled what them lifted. The Emperour of Constantinople slain. Constantinople won of the Turk. The bloody victory of the Turks.

Theſe things thus being done, and the tumult ceased, after three days Mahometes the Turk entreth into the City, and first calling for the heads and Ancients of the City, such as he found to be left alive, he commanded them to be mangled and cut in pieces. It is also (saith my Author) reported, that in the Feasts of the Turks, honeſt Matrons and Virgins, and such as were of the Kings stock, after other contumelies, were hewn and cut in pieces for their diſport. The horrible tyranny of the Turk.

And

{KING Hen.6.} And this was the end of that Princely and famous City of Constantinople, beginning first by Constantinus, and ending also with Constantinus, which for the Princely Royalty thereof was named and ever honoured, from the time of the first Constantine, equally with the City of Rome, and called also by the name thereof New Rome, and also continued the space of 1120. years. I pray God that Old Rome may learn of New Rome, to take heed and beware betime. Constantinople called New Rome.

This terrible destruction of the City of Constantinople, the Queen of Cities, I thought here to describe, not so much to set forth the Barbarous cruelty of these filthy Raske-hells and merciful Murderers; as specially for this, that we being admonished by the doleful ruine and misery of these our even Christened, may call to mind the plagues and miseries deserved, which seem to hang no less over our own heads, and thereby may learn betime to invocate and call more earnestly upon the name of our terrible and merciful God, that he for his Sons sake will keep us, and preserve his Church among us, and mitigate those plagues and sorrows, which we no less have deserved, than these above minded have done before us. Christ grant it, Amen. Ex Hist. Wittenbergica Peucer. A warning to all Christendom by Constantinople.

The Hiſtory of Reynol Pecock Biſhop of Chichester, afflicted and imprisoned for the Goſpel of Chriſt.

The Story Reynold Pecock.

AFter the death of Henry Chichesley before mentioned, next succeeded John Stafford, Anno 1445. who continued eight years. After him came John Kemp, Anno 2453. who sate but three years. Then succeed Thomas Burchere. In the time of which Archbishop fell the trouble of Reynold Pecock, Bishop of Chichester, afflicted by the Popes Prelates for his Faith and profession of the Gospel. Of this Bishop, Hall also in his Chronology toucheth a little mention, declaring that an overthwart judgment (as he termeth it) was given by the Fathers of the spiritualty against him. This man (saith he) began to move Questions not privately, but openly in the Universities, concerning the Annates Peter-pence, and other jurisdictions, and authorities pertaining to the See of Rome, and not only put forth the Questions, but declared his mind and opinion in the same; wherefore he was for this cause abjured at Pauls Cross. Thus much of him writeth Hall. Of whom also recordeth Polychronicon, but in few words. This Bishop, first of Saint Asaph, then of Chichester, so long as Duke Humfrey lived (by whom he was promoted and much made of) was quiet and safe, and also bold to dispute and to write his mind, and wrote (as Leland recordeth) divers Books and Treatises. But after that good Duke was thus (as ye have heard) made away, this good Man lacking his back-stay, was open to his enemies, and matter soon found against him. Whereupon he being complained of, and accused by privy and malignant promoters unto the Archbishop, Letters first were directed down from the Archbishop, to cite all Men to appear that could say any thing against him. The form of which Citation here ensueth.

The Copy of the Citation sent by the Archbiſhop.

The Citation of the Archbishops. The Names, Alias's, Surnames.

THomas by the permission of God, Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England, and Legate of the Apostolick See, to all and singular, Parsons, Vicars, Chaplains, Curates, and not Curates Clerks, and learned Men, whatsoever they be, constituted and ordained in any place throughout our Province of Canterbury, health, grace and benediction.

We have received a grievous complaint of our Reverend fellow Brother, Reynold Pecock Bishop of Chichester, containing in it, that albeit our said Reverend fellow Brother, the Bishop, delivered unto us, certain Books written by him in the English Tongue, by us and our authority to be examined, collected, reformed and allowed; notwithstanding many (the examination and reformation of the said Books depending and remaining before us undiscussed) have openly Preached and taught at Pauls Cross in London, and in divers other places of our Province of Canterbury, that our said fellow Brother the Bishop hath propounded, made and written, or caused to be written in the said Books, certain Conclusion repugnant to the true Faith, and that he doth obstinately hold and defend the same. By the pretence of which preaching and teaching, the state and good name and fame of the Lord Reynold the Bishop, are grievously offended and hurt, and he and his opinion marvellously hardened. Wherefore we charge you all together, and severally apart do command you, firmly enjoyning you, that openly and generally you do warn or cause to be warned, all and singular such persons, which will object any thing contrary, and against the Conclusions of our said Reverend fellow Brother the Bishop, had or contained in his Books or Writings; that the twentieth day after such monition or warning had, they do freely of their own accord appear before us and our Commissaries in this behalf appointed, wheresoever we shall then be in our City, Diocess, or Province of Canterbury, to speak, propound or alledge, and affirm fully and sufficiently in writing, whatsoever Heretical or Erroneous matter they will speak, propound or object against the said Conclusions contained in his said Books; and both to satisfie and receive, whatsoever shall seem meet and right in this behalf by the holy institution and ordinances.

And forsomuch as this matter depending yet undetermined and discussed, nothing ought to be attempted or removed; we charge you that by this our authority you inhibit and forbid all and every one so to preach and teach hereafter. Unto whom also we by the Tenor of these presents do likewise forbid, that during the examination of the Conclusions and Books aforesaid, depending before us and our Commissaries undiscussed, they do not presume by any means, without advice and judgment, to preach, judge and affirm any thing to the prejudice or offence of the said Lord Reynold the Bishop: and if so be you do find any in this behalf gainsaying or not obeying this our inhibition, that you do cite or cause them peremptorily to be cited, to appear before us our Commissaries, in this behalf appointed, the tenth day after their Citation, if it be a Court day, or else the next Court day following, wheresoever we shall then be, in our City, Diocess, or Province of Canterbury, to make further declaration by form of law of the cause of their disobedience, and to receive such punishment as justice and equity shall determine in their behalf; and that by our Letters you do duly certifie us or our Commissaries, what you have done in the Premises at the day and place aforesaid; or that he which hath so executed our Commandment, do so certifie us by his Letters. Dated at our Mannour of Lambeth the 22d day of October, Anno 1457. and in the fourth year of our Translation.

Pecock appeareth at Lambeth before the Archbishop.

This Citation being directed, the Bishop upon the summon thereof was brought, or rather came before the Judges and Bishops unto Lambeth, where the foresaid Thomas the Archbishop, with his Doctors and Lawyers, were gathered together in the Archbishops Court. In which convention also the Duke of Buckingham was present, accompanied with the Bishops of Rochester, and of Lincoln. What were the opinions and Articles against him objected, after in his revocation shall be specified. In his answering for himself, in such a company of the Popes friends, albeit he could not prevail; notwithstanding he stoutly defending himself, declared many things worthy great commendation of learning, if learning against power could have prevailed.

Great labor to reduce Pecock, from his opinions.

But they on the contrary part, with all labour and travel extended themselves, either to reduce him, or else to confound him. As here lacked no blustering words of terror and threatning, so also many fair flattering words and gentle persuasions were admixt withal. Briefly, to make a short Narration of a long and busie travesse, here was no stone left unturned, no ways unproved, either by fair means to intreat him, or by terrible menaces to terrifie his mind, till at length, he being vanquished and overcome by the Bishops, began to faint, and gave over. Whereupon, by and by a recantation was put unto him by the Bishops, which he should declare before the people. The Copy of which his recantation here followeth.

The form and manner of the retractation of Reynold Pecock.

The retractation of Bishop Pecock.

IN the name of God, Amen. Before you the most Reverend Father in Christ and Lord, the Lord Thomas by the grace of God, Archbishop of Canterbury, Primate of all England and Legate of the Apostlick See, I Reynold Pecock, unworthy Bishop of Chichester, do purely, willingly, simply, and absolutely confess and acknowledge, that I in times past, that is to say, by the space of these twenty years last past and more, have otherwise conceived, holden, taught and written, as touching the Sacraments, and the Articles of the Faith, than the Holy Church of Rome, and Universal Church; and also that I have made, written, published and set forth many and divers pernitious Doctrines, Books, Works, Writings, Heresies, contrary and against the true Catholick and Apostolick Faith, containing in them Errors contrary to the Catholick Faith, and especially these Errors and Hereties here under written.

Ex Regist.

His Articles.

1. First of all, That we are not bound, by the necessity of Faith, to believe that our Lord Jesus Christ after his death descended into Hell.

2. Item, That it is not necessary to salvation to believe in the Holy Catholick Church.

3. Item, That it is not necessary to salvation to affirm the Communion of Saints.

4. Item, That it is not necessary to salvation to affirm the body material in the Sacrament.

5. Item, That the Universal Church may err in matters which pertain unto Faith.

6. Item, That it is not necessary unto salvation to believe that which every general Council doth Universally ordain, approve, or determine, should necessarily for the help of our Faith, and the salvation of souls, be approved and holden of all faithful Christians.

Wherefore I Reynold Pecock, wretched sinner, which have long walked in darkness, and now by the merciful disposition and ordinance of God, am reduced and brought again unto the light and way of truth, and restored unto the unity of our holy Mother the Church, renounce and forsake all Errors and Hereties aforesaid.

Notwithstanding (godly Reader) it is not to be believed that Pecock did so give over these opinions, howsoever the words of the recantation pretend. For it is a policy and play of the Bishops, that when they do subdue or overcome any Man, they carry him whither they list, as it were a young Steer by the nose, and frame out his words for him beforehand, as it were for a Parret, that he should speak unto the people; not according to his own will, but after their lust and fantasie. Neither is it to be doubted but that this Bishop repented him afterward of his recantation; which may eatily be judged hereby, because he was committed again to prison, and detained captive, where it is uncertain whether he was oppressed with privy and secret Tyranny, and there obtained the the crown of Martyrdom, or no.

The Articles of Reynold Pecock condemned by Thomas Gascoigne, in Theol. lib. de Dictis Pecocks. Fascic. Rerum.

The Dictionary of Thomas Gascoigne I have not in my hands at present. But it credit be to be given to such as have to us alledged the Book, this we may find in the eighth Century of John Ball, Chapter nineteen, That the said Thomas Gascoigne in his third part of his Dictionary, writing of Reynold Pecock, maketh declaration of his Articles, containing in them matters of foure Hereſie.

First (saith he) Reynold Pecock at Pauls Cross Preached openly, that the Office of a Christian Prelate, chiefly above all other things, is to preach the Word of God. That Mans reason is not to be preferred before the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament. That the use of the Sacraments, as they be now handled, is worse than the use of the law of nature. That Bishops which buy their admissions of the Bishop of Rome, do sin. That no Man is bound to believe and obey the determination of the Church of Rome. Also that the riches of Bishops by inheritance, are the goods of the poor. Item, That the Apostles themselves personally were not the makers of the Creed; and that in the same Creed once was not the Article, He went down to Hell. Item, That of the four senses of the Scripture none is to be taken, but the very first and proper sense. Also, that he gave little edification, in some points, to the authority of the old Doctors. Item, That he condemned the willful begging of the Friers, as a thing idle and needless. This out of Thomas Gascoigne. Leland also, adding this moreover, saith, that he, not contented to follow the Catholick sentence of the Church, in interpreting of the Scripture, did not think soundly (as he judged it) of the holy Eucharist.

{KING Hen. 6.}

At length, for these and such other Articles, the said Reynold Pecock was condemned for an Heretick, by the Archbishops and Bishops of Ross, Lincoln, and Winchester, with other Divines moe. Whereupon he, being driven to his recantation, was notwithstanding detained still in prison. Where some say, that he was privily made away by death.

R. Pecock detained in prison.

Hall addeth, that some say his opinions to be, that spiritual persons by Gods law ought to have no temporal possessions. Other write, that he said, that personal Tithes were not due by Gods Law. But whatsoever the cause was, he was caused at Pauls Cross to abjure, and all his Books burnt, and he himself kept in his own house during his natural life. I marvel that Polydore, of his extremity of the Bishops handling, and of his Articles, in his History maketh no memorial. Belike it made but little for the honesty of his great Master the Pope.

Polydor noted.

From perfecution and burning in England now out of the way to digress a little, to speak of foraign matters of the Church of Rome; you remember before, in the later end of the Council of Basil, how Eugenius was deposed. Of whose conditions and martial affairs, how he made War against Sforcia a famous Captain of Italy, and what other Wars he raised betide, not only in Italy, but also in Germany, against the City and Council of Basil, I shall not need to make any long rehearsal. After his deposition he heard also how Felix Duke of Savoy was elected Pope. Whereupon another great Schism followed in the Church during all the life of Eugenius.

Eugenius waged battail against Sforcia and divers others.

Pope Felix.

After his death, his next succesſor was Pope Nicholas the fifth, who (as you before have heard) brought to passe with the Emperor Frederick the Third, that Felix was contented to renounce and resign his Papacy to Nicholas, and was therefore of him afterward received to the room of Cardinal for his submission; and Frederick for his working was confirmed at Rome to be full Emperor, and there Crowned, Ann. 1451. For Emperors, before they be confirmed and crowned by the Pope, are no Emperors, but only called Kings of Romans.

Pope Nicholas the 5th.

Emperors are but Kings of Romans before they be Crowned by the Pope.

This Pope Nicholas here mentioned, to get and gather great sums of Money, appointed a Jubile in the year of our Lord 1450, at which time there reſorted a greater number of people unto Rome, than hath at any time before been seen. At which time we read in the Story of Platina that to have happened, which I thought here not unworthy to be noted for the example of the thing. As there was a great concourse of people reſorting up to the mount Vatican to behold the Image of our Saviour, which there they had to shew to Pilgrims, the people being thick going, too and fro between the Mount and the City, by chance a certain Mule of the Cardinals of Saint Mark, came by the way, by reason whereof the people not being able to avoid the way, one or two falling upon the Mule, there was such a preaſe and throng upon that occasion on the Bridge, that to the number of two hundred bodies of Men, and three Horſes were there strangled, and on each side of the Bridge many besides fell over into the Water, and were drowned.

The example of Idolatry punished.

By means of which occasion the Pope afterward caused the small Houſes to be plucked down, to make the way broader. And this is the fruit that cometh by Idolatry. Ex Platin.

In the time of this Pope one Mat. Palmerius wrote a Book De Angelis, for defending whereof he was condemned by the Pope, and burned at Corna, An. 1448. Ex Tritemio.

Next after this Calixtus ſucceeded Pius Secundus, otherwiſe called Æneas Sylvius, who wrote the two Books of Commentaries upon the Council of Baſil before mentioned. This Æneas, at the time of the writing of thoſe his Books, ſeemed to be a Man of an indifferent and tolerable Judgment and Doctrine, from the which he afterward being Pope ſeemed to decline and ſwarve, ſeeking by all means poſſible how to deface and abolish the Books which heretofore he had written.

Marriage was taken from Prieſts not without great reaſon; but with much greater reaſon it ought to be reſtored again.

Marriage of Prieſts allowed by Æneas Sylvius.

The like ſentence to this he uttereth in his ſecond Book of the Council of Baſil before ſpecified, ſaying, Peradventure it were not the worſt, that the moſt part of Prieſts had their Wives; for many ſhould be ſaved in Prieſtly marriage, which now in unmarried Prieſthood are damned. The ſame Pius alſo, as Celius reporteth, diſſolved certain Orders of Nuns, of the Orders of Saint Briget and Saint Clare, bidding them to depart out, that they ſhould burn no more, nor cover a Harlot under the Veſture of Religion.

This Pius, if he had brought ſo much piety and godlineſs as he brought learning unto his Popedom, had excelled many Popes that went before him.

It ſhall not be impertinent here to couch, what the ſaid Æneas, called Pius the Pope, writeth touching the peace of the Church, unto Gaſper Sclick, the Emperors Chancelor, in his 54th Epiſtle.

Ex Epiſt. 54. Pii. ſecundi ad Caſparem Schlick.

All Men do abhor and deteſt Schiſm. The way to remedy this evil Charles the French King hath ſhewed us both ſafe and brief, which is, that Princes or their Orators ſhould convene and aſſemble together in ſome common place, where they may conclude upon matters amongſt themſelves. To bring this to paſs, it were needful writings to be ſent again to all Kings and Princes, to ſend their Orators to Strawesborow, or to Conſtance, with their full authority, there to intreat of matters appertaining to the peace of the Church. Neither would it require ſo great expences: For aſmuch as we ſee the year before 300 Gilderns to be ſufficient. Conſtantine the Emperor beſtowed not much more in the Congregation of the Council of Nice. And this way could not be ſtopped, neither could the Pope or the Council withſtand it, or make excuſe, as though this might not eaſily be done without them. For why? The ſecular Princes may convent and aſſemble together, will they, nill they: and yet notwithſtanding unity may there be concluded: For he ſhall be an undoubted Pope, whom all Princes would obey. Neither do I ſee any of the Clergy ſo conſtant to death, which

The way to exclude Schiſm in general Councels of Princes.

The Popes Clergy will not abide the fire, wherfore Princes or Pope.

will ſuffer Martyrdom either For the one part or the other. All we lightly hold that Faith which our Princes hold: which if they would worſhip Idols, we would alſo do the ſame, and deny not only the Pope, but God alſo, if the ſecular Power ſtrain us thereunto, for charity is waxed cold, and all Faith is gone. Howſoever it be, let us all deſire and ſeek for peace: the which peace, whether it come by a Council, or by aſſembly of Princes, call it what you will, I care not, for we ſtand not upon the term, but upon the matter. Call bread, if you will, a ſtone, ſo you give it me to aſſuage my hunger. Whether you call it a Council or a Conventicle, or an Aſſembly, or a Congregation or a Synagogue, that is no matter, ſo that Schiſm may be excluded, and peace eſtabliſhed.

Thus much out of the Epiſtle of Pius.

The breath of this peſtilent ſore corrupteth all that ſit in it, whatſoever they were before.

By this it may appear, of what ſentence and mind this Pius was in the time of the Council of Baſil, before he was made Pope. But as our common proverb ſaith, honours change manners; ſo it happened with this Pius, who after he came once to be Pope, was much altered from what he was before. For when as before he preferred general Councils before the Pope, now being Pope, he did decree that no Man ſhould appeal from the high Biſhop of Rome to any general Council.

Æneas Sylvius, now puffed up with worldly pomp and glory, forgeteth the truth which he did before both know and profeſs.

And likewiſe for Prieſts marriage, whereas before he thought it beſt to have their Wives reſtored, yet afterward he altered his mind otherwiſe, inſomuch that in his Book intreating of Germany, and there ſpeaking of the Noble City of Auguſt, by occaſion he inveighed againſt a certain Epiſtle of Hulderick once Biſhop of the ſaid City, written againſt the conſtitution of the ſingle life of Prieſts. Where-by it appeareth how the mind of this Pius was altered from that it was before. This Epiſtle of Hulderick is before expreſſed at large.

Diſcord between Pope Pius and the Archbiſhop of Mentz.

Here alſo might I touch ſomething concerning the diſcord betwixt this Æneas Sylvius and Diotherus, Archbiſhop of Mentz, and what diſcord was ſtirred up in Germany upon the ſame between Frederick the Palatine, and the Duke of Wittenberge, with others; by the occaſion whereof, beſides the ſlaughter of many, the City of Mentz, which was free before, loſt her freedom and became ſervile.

The cauſes of the diſcord betwixt Pope Pius and Diotherus were theſe.

Firſt, Becauſe that Diotherus would not conſent unto him in the impoſition of certain Tallages and Taxes within his Country.

Secondly, For that Diotherus would not be bound unto him, requiring that the ſaid Diotherus, being Prince Elector, ſhould not call the other Electors together without his licence, that is, without the licence of the Biſhop of Rome.

And Thirdly, Becauſe Diotherus would not permit to the Popes Legates, to convocate his Clergy together after their own hill. This Pope Pius began his See, about the year of our Lord 1458.

Anno 1458. R. Fowler. in Ex Stanislao, Rutheno, ubi Cent. 8. Bal.

After this Pius Secundus ſucceeded Paulus Secundus, a Pope wholly ſet upon his Belly and ambition, and not ſo much void of all learning, as the hater of learned Men. This Paulus had a Daughter begotten in fornication, becauſe he ſaw her to be had in reproach, for that he was gotten in fornication, began (as the Stories report) to repent him of the Law of the ſingle life of Prieſts, and went about to reform the ſame, had not death prevented him. Ex Stanislao Ruthено.

The Feaſt of the conception of our Lady. Beads brought in.

After this Paulus came Sixtus the Fourth, which builded up in Rome a Stews of both kinds, getting thereby no ſmall revenews and rents unto the Church of Rome. This Pope amongſt his other Acts, reduced the year of Jubile from the fiftieth unto the twenty fifth. He alſo inſtituted the Feaſt of the conception, and the preſentation of Mary and of Anna her Mother, and Joſeph. Alſo he Canonized Bonaventure and Saint Francis for Saints.

By this Sixtus alſo were Beads brought in, and inſtituted to make our Ladies Pſalter, through the occaſion of one Alanus and his Order, whom Baptiſta maketh mention of in this verſe, His filo inſertis numerant ſua murmura Baccis. That is, Theſe men putting their Beads upon a ſtring, number their Prayers. This Sixtus the Pope made two and thirty Cardinals in his time, of whom Petrus Ruerius was the firſt, who for that time that he was Cardinal, which was but two years, ſpent in luxurious Riot, waſted wasted and consumed two hundred thousand Florens, and was left 60000. in debt. Wefelius Groningensis, in a certain Treatise of his de indulgentiis papalibus, writing of this Pope Sixtus, reporteth this, That at the request of the forefaid Peter Cardinal, and of Hieronm his Brother, the faid Pope Sixtus permitted and granted unto the whole Family of the Cardinal of Saint Lucy, in the three hot Months of Summer, June, July, and August (a horrible thing to be spoken) free leave and liberty to use Sodomitry, with this clause, Fiat ut Petitur, That is, Be it as it is asked.

Wefelius Groningensis Tax Pope Hermith the whole family of a certain Cardinal to play the Sodomites three Months in the year.

Next after this Sixtus came Innocentius the Eighth, as rude, and as far from all learning, as his Predecessor was before him. Amongst the noble Facts of this Pope this was one, that in the Town of Polus apud Equiculos, he caused eight Men and six Women, with the Lord of the place, to be apprehended and taken, and judged for Heretick, because that they said none of them was the Vicar of Christ which come after Peter, but they only which followed the poverty of Christ. Also he condemned of Heresie, George the King of Boheme, and deprived him of his Dignity and also of his Kingdom, and profured his whole flock to be utterly rooted and put down, giving his Kingdom to Matthias King of Pannonia.

Now from the Popes to descend to other estates, it remaineth likewise somewhat to write of the Emperors incident to this time, which matters and grievances of the Germans, and also other Princes, first beginning with our troubles and mutations here at home, pertaining to the overthrow of this King Henry and his Seat, now following to be shewed. And briefly to contract long process of much tumult and business in a short Narration, here is to be remembred, which partly before was signified, how after the death of the Duke of Glocester, mischiefs came in by heaps upon the King and his Realm. For after the giving away of Angeou and Main, to the French-men, by the unfortunate Marriage of Queen Margaret above mentioned, the said French-men, perceiving now by the death of the Duke of Glocester, the stay and pillar of this Common-wealth to be decayed, and seeing moreover the Hearts of the Nobility amongst themselves to be divided, forebacked no time, having such an open way into Normandy, and in short time they recovered the same, and also got Gascoine, so that no more now remained to England of all the parts beyond the Sea, but only Calis. Neither yet did all the calamity of the Realm only rest in this: For the King now having loft his friendly Uncle, as the stay and staff of his age, which had brought him up so faithfully from his youth, was now thereby the more open to his enemies, and they more emboldned to set upon him; as appeared first by Jack Cade the Kentish Captain, who, encamping first on Blackheath, afterward afpired to London, and had the spoil thereof, the King being driven into Warwickshire. After the suppressing of Cade, ensued not long after the Duke of York, who, being accompanied with three Earls, set upon the King near to Saint Albans, where the King was taken in the field captive, and the Duke of York was by Parliament declared Protector, which was in the year of our Lord 1453. After this followed long division and mortal War between the two Houses of Lancaster and York, continuing many years. At length about the year of our Lord 1459, the Duke of York was slain in Battel by the Queen near to the Town of Wakefield, and with him also his Son Earl of Rutland. By the which Queen also shortly after, in the same year, were discomfited the Earl of Warwick, and Duke of Norfolk, to whom the keeping of the King was committed by the Duke of York, and so the Queen again delivered her Husband.

The Duke of York a-gainst King Henry.

Anno 1459.

After this Victory obtained, the Northern Men, advanced not a little in pride and courage, began to take upon them great attempts, not only to spoil and rob Churches, and religious Houses, and Villages, but also were fully intended, partly by themselves, partly by the inducement of their Lords and Captains, to sack, waste, and utterly to subvert the City of London, and to take the spoil thereof; and no doubt (saith my History) would have proceeded in their conceived greedy intent, had not the opportune favour of God provided a speedy remedy. For as these mischiefs were in brewing, suddenly cometh the Noble Prince Edward unto London with a mighty Army, the seven and twentieth day of February, who was the Son and Heir to the Duke of York above mentioned, accompanyed with the Earl of Warwick, and divers moe. King Henry in the mean time, with his Victory, went up to York; when as Edward being at London, caused there to be proclaimed certain Articles concerning his Title to the Crown of England, which was the second day of March.

The Northern men Intended the subversion of London.

Ex historia manuscripta, ad finem Scala mundi.

Whereupon the next day following, the Lords both temporal and spiritual being assembled together, the said Articles were propounded, and also well approved. The fourth day of the said Month of March, after a solemn general procession (according to the blind superstition of those days) the Bishop of Exceter made a Sermon at Pauls Cross, wherein he commended and proved by manifold evidences, the Title of Prince Edward to be just and lawful, answering the same to all objections which might be made to the contrary.

KING Hen. 6.

London refused by Prince Edward.

Anno 1461. The title of Edward to the Crown proved at Pauls Cross.

This matter being thus discussed, Prince Edward accompanied with the Lords spiritual and temporal, and with much concourse of people, rode the same day to Westminster Hall, and there by the full consent, as well of the Lords, as also by the voice of all the Commons, took his possession of the Crown, and was called King Edward the Fourth.

King Edward takes both possession of the Crown.

These things thus accomplished at London, as to such a matter appertained, and preparation of Money sufficiently being minister of the people and Commons, with most ready and willing minds, for the necessary furniture of his Wars; he with the Duke of Norfolk, and Earl of Warwick, and Lord Fauconbridge, in all speedy wise took his journey toward King Henry; who now being at York, and forsaken of the Londoners, had all his refuge only reposed in the Northern Men.

Ex Scala mundi.

When King Edward with his Army had passed over the River of Trent, and was come near to Ferebridge, where also the Host of King Henry was not far off, upon Palm-Sunday, between Ferebridge and Tadcaster, both the Armies of the Southern and Northern Men joyned together in Battel. And although at the first beginning divers Horsemen of King Edwards side turned their backs, and spoiled the King of Carriage and Victuals; yet the courageous Prince with his Captains, little discouraged therewith, fiercely and manfully set on their adversaries. The which Battel on both sides was so cruelly fought, that in the same conflict were slain to the number, as is reported, beside Men of name, 30000 of the poor Commons. Notwithstanding, the Conquest fell on King Edwards part, so that King Henry having lost all, was forced to flie into Scotland, where also he gave up to the Scots the Town of Barwick, after he had Reigned eight and thirty years and a half.

The claim and title of the Duke of York, and after him of Edward his Son, put up to the Lords and Commons, whereby they challenged the Crown to the House of York, is thus in the Story of Scala mundi, word for word, as hereunder is contained.

The Title of the House of York to the Crown of England.

EDward the Third, right King of England, had Issue, First, Prince Edward. Secondly, William Hatfield. Thirdly, Lionel. Fourthly, John of Gaunt, &c. Prince Edward had Richard the Second, which died without Issue. Lionel Duke of Clarence had Issue lawfully begot, Philip, his only Daughter and Heir; the which was lawfully coupled to Edmund Mortimer, Earl of March, and had Issue lawfully begot, Roger Mortimer Earl of March, and Heir; Which Roger had Issue, Edmund Earl of March, Roger, Anne, and Alienor; Edmund and Alienor died without Issue, and the said Anne, by lawful Matrimony was coupled unto Richard Earl of Cambridge, the Son of Edmund of Langley, who had Issue and lawfully bare Richard Plantaginet now Duke of York; John of Gaunt gat Henry, which unrightfully intreated King Richard, then being alive Edmund Mortimer Earl of March, Son of the said Philip, Daughter to Lionel. To the which Richard Duke of York and Son to Anne, Daughter to Roger Mortimer

The Title of the house of Lancaster.

Richard Plantaginet.

KING Edw. 4. timer Earl of March, Son and Heir to the said Philip, Daughter and Heir to the said Lionel, the third Son of King Edward the Third, the right and dignity of the Crown appertained and belonged, before any Issue of the said John of Gaunt. Notwithstanding, the said Title of Dignity of the said Richard of York, the said Richard desiring the wealth, rest and prosperity of England. agreeth and consenteth that Henry the Sixth should be had and taken for King of England during his natural life, from this time without hurt of his title.

Wherefore the King understanding the said Title of the said Duke to be just, lawful, true, and sufficient, by the advice and assent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in the Parliament, and by the authority of the same Parliament declareth, approveth, ratifieth, confirmeth, accepteth the said title for just, good, lawful and true, and thereto giveth his assent and agreement of his free will and liberty. And over that, by the said advice and authority declareth, calleth, stablisheth, affirmeth, and reputeth the said Richard of York very true and rightful Heir to the Crown of England and France; and that all other Statutes and Acts made by any of the late Henries, contrary to this advice, be annulled, repelled, damned, cancelled, void, and of no force or effect. The King agreed and consented that the said Duke and his Heirs should after his natural life enjoy the Crown, &c. Also, that all sayings and doings against the Duke of York, shall be high Treason, and all Acts of Parliaments contrary to this principal Act be void and of none effect, &c.

And thus much for the Reign of King Henry the Sixth, who now lacked his Uncle and Protector, Duke of Glocester, about him. But commonly the lack of such friends is never felt before they be missed.

In the time of this King was builded the House in London called Leaden-Hall, founded by one Simon Eyre, Maior once of the said City of London, An. 1445.

In the Reign of this Henry the Sixth, it is not to be passed over in silence which we find noted in the Parliament Rolls, how that Lewis Archbishop of Rhoan, after the death of the late Bishop of Ely, had granted unto him by the Popes Bulls, during his life, all the profits of the said Bishoprick, by the name of the administrator of the said Bishoprick. Lewis the foresaid Archbishop theweth his Bulls to the King, who utterly rejected his Bulls. Notwithstanding, for his service done in France, the King granted to him the administration aforesaid, the which to all intents, at the petition of the said Lewis, should be affirmed to be of as great force as though he were Bishop, touching profits, liberties and liability.

The King rejecteth the Popes Bulls.

Ex vetusto cod. cui in-stitulum, Nomina confulum &c. Ex ex Fabiano.

Neither again is here to be overpault a certain Tragical act done between Easter and Whitsuntide of a false Briton, Anno 1427. which murdered a good Widow in her Bed (who had brought him up of Alms, without Algat in the Suburbs of London) and bare away all that she had, and afterward he took succour of Holy Church at St. Georges in Southwark; but at the last he took the Cross and forswore the Kings Land. And as he went his way, it happened him to come by the same place where he had done that cursed deed; and Women of the same Parish came out with Stones and Channel-dung, and there made an end of him in the High-street, so that he went no further, notwithstanding the Constables and other Men also which had him under governance to conduct him forward; for there was a great company of them, so that they were not able to withstand them.

Example of Gods rod and judgment.

King Edward the Fourth.

Anno 1461. King Edward the Fourth.

KIng Edward, after his Conquest and Victory atchieved against King Henry, returned again to London, where, upon Vigil of St. Peter and Paul, being on Sunday, he was Crowned King of England, and Reigned twenty two years, albeit not without great disquietnes, and much perturbation in his Reign.

Queen Margaret, hearing how her Husband was fled into Scotland, was also faign to flie the Land, and went to her Father Duke of Angeou; from whence the next year following she returned again to renew War against King Edward, with small succor and less luck. For being encountred by the Earl of Warwick, about November the was driven to the Seas again, and by tempest of weather she was driven into Scotland.

Queen Margaret fled the Land.

Anno 1462. K. Edward sitteth in the Kings Bench judging.

In this year we read that King Edward, in the cause of a certain Widow for rape, sate in his own person in Westminster-Hall upon his own Bench, discussing her cause.

Anno 1463. King Henry the sixth again retained into the battel of Exham.

The year following, King Henry, issuing out of Scotland with a sufficient power of Scots and Frenchmen, came into the North Country to recover the Crown, unto whom the Lord Radulph Percy, and Lord Radulph Gray flying from King Edward, did adjoyn themselves: But the Lord so disposing, King Henry with his power was repulsed in battel at Exham by the Lord Mountecute, having then the rule of the North; where the Duke of Somerset, Lord Hungerford, Lord Rosse, with certain other were taken. The Lord Radulph Percy was slain, the residue fled, Albeit the History of Scala mundi, refereth this battel to the year 1464. the 15th day of May. In the which Month of May were beheaded the Duke of Somerset, Lord Hungerford, Lord Rosse, Lord Philip Wentworth, Lord Thomas Hussy, Lord Tho. Finders, beside Twenty one other belonging to the retinue and houshold of King Henry the Sixth. Queen Margaret, finding no resting place here in England, took her progress again from whence she came, learning in her own Country to drink that Drink, which she her self had brewed here in England.

Ex Scala mundi.

And not long after, the next year, An. 1465. on the day of St. Peter and Paul, King Henry being found and known in a Wood by one Cantlow (as they say) was arrested by the Earl of Warwick, and at last, of a King made prisoner in the Tower of London.

K. Henry 6th taken, arrested, and committed to the Tower. Anno 1465.

In this mean time, King Edward (after the motion of Marriage for him being made; and first the Lady Margaret Sister to James the fourth King of Scots thought upon, but that motion taking no effect, afterward the Lady Elizabeth, Sister to Henry King of Castile, being intended; but she being under age, the Earl of Warwick turning then his legation and voyage to the French King Lewes the eleventh, to obtain Lady Bona, Daughter of the Duke of Savoy, and Sister to Carlos the French Queen, had obtained the same) had cast favour unto one Elizabeth Grey, Widow of Sir John Grey Knight, slain before in the battel of St. Albans, Daughter to the Dutches of Bedford, and Lord Rivers, and first went about to have her to his Concubine. But she as being unworthy (as she said) to be the Wife of such an high Personage, so thinking her self to be too good to be his Concubine, in such fort was the Kings heart, that incontinent before the return of the Earl of Warwick, he married her; at the which marriage were no moe than only the Dutches of Bedford, and Gentlewomen, the Priest and Clerk. Upon this so hafty and unlucky marriage ensued no little trouble to the King, much bloodshed to the Realm, undoing almost to all her Kindred, and finally confusion to King Edwards two Sons, which both were declared afterward to be Bastards, and also deprived of their lives. For the Earl of Warwick, who had been the faithful friend and chief maintainer before of the King, at the hearing of this marriage, was therewith so grievously moved and chafed in his mind, that he never after fought any thing more, than how to work displeasure to the King, and to put him beside his Cushion. And although for a time he dissembled his wrathful mood, till he might spie a time convenient, and a world to set forward his purpose, at last finding occasion somewhat serving to his mind, he breaketh his heart to his two Brethren, to wit, the Marques Mountecute, and the Archbishop of York, conspiring with them how to bring his purpose about. Then thought he also to prove a far off the mind of the Duke of Clarence, King Edwards Brother, and likewise obtained him, giving also to him his Daughter in Marriage.

The King fleeth marriage with Queen Elizabeth.

The first falling out between King Edward and the Earl of Warwick.

Conspiracy against King Edward.

This matter being thus prepared against the King, the first flame of his conspiracy began to appear in the North Country. Where the Northern Men in short space gathering themselves in an open Rebellion, and finding Captains of their wicked purpoſe, came down from York toward London. Againſt whom was appointed by the King, W. Lord Herbert Earl of Pembroke, with the Lord Stafford, and certain other Captains to encounter. The Yorkſhire men giving the Overthrow firſt to the Lord Stafford, then to the Earl of Pembroke, and his Company of Welchmen at Banbury Field, at laſt joyning together with the Army of the Earl of Warwick, and the Duke of Clarence, in the dead of the night ſecretly fealing on the Kings Field at Wolney by Warwick, killed the Watch, and took the King Priſoner, who firſt being in the Caſtle of Warwick, then was conveyed by night to Middleham Caſtle in Yorkſhire, under the cuſtody of the Archbiſhop of York, where he having looſe keeping, and liberty to go on hunting, meeting with Sir William Stanley, Sir Thomas of Borough, and other his Friends, was too good for his Keepers, and eſcaped the hands of his Enemies, and ſo came to York, where he was well received; from thence to Lancaſter, where he met with the Lord Haſting his Chamberlain, well accompanied, by whoſe help he came ſafe to London.

King Edward taken Priſoner by the Earl of Warwick.

The Rebellion in Lincolnſhire repreſſed.

After this tumult, when Reconciliation could not come to perfect Peace and Unity, although much labour was made by the Nobility, the Earl of Warwick raiſeth up a new War in Lincolnſhire, the Captain whereof was Sir Robert Wells Knight, who ſhortly after being taken in battel with his Father, and Sir Thomas Duncock, were beheaded, the reſidue caſting away their Coats, ran away and fled, giving the name of the Field, called Lofecoat-Field.

The Earl of Warwick, and the Duke of Clarence flee into Exeter.

The Earl of Warwick after this, put out of comfort and hope to prevail at home, fled out of England, Anno 1470. firſt to Calice, then to Lewis the French King, accompanied with the Duke of Clarence. The fame of the Earl of Warwick and of his famous Acts was at that time in great admiration above meaſure, and ſo highly favoured, that both in England and France all men were glad to behold his Perſonage. Wherefore the coming of this Earl, and of the Duke of Clarence, was not a little grateful to the French King, and no leſs opportune to Queen Margaret, King Henries Wife, and Prince Edward her Son, who alſo came to the French Court to meet and confer together touching their Affairs; where a League between them was concluded, and moreover a marriage between Edward Prince of Wales, and Anne the ſecond Daughter of the Earl of Warwick was wrought. Thus all things falling luckily upon the Earls part, beſide the large Offers and gre. : Promiſes made by the French King, on the beſt manner to ſet forward their purpoſe, the Earl having alſo intelligence by Letters, that the hearts almoſt of all men went with him, and longed fore for his preſence, ſo that there lacked now but only haſte with all ſpeed poſſible to return; he with the Duke of Clarence, well fortified with the French Navy, ſet forward toward England; for ſo was it between them before decreed, that they two ſhould prove the firſt venture, and then Queen Margaret, with Prince Edward her Son, ſhould follow after. The arrival of the Earl was not ſoon heard of at Dartmouth in Devonſhire, but great concourſe of people by thouſands went to him from all quarters to receive and welcome him; who immediately made Proclamation in the name of King Henry the Sixth, charging all men, able to bear Armor, to prepare themſelves to fight againſt Edward Duke of York, Uſurper of the Crown. Here lacked no friends, ſtrength of men, furniture, nor policy convenient for ſuch a matter.

The Earl of Warwick, and the Duke of Clarence return into England.

The recruiting of the Earl of Warwick into England.

King Henry again proclaimed King.

When King Edward (who before not paſſing for the matter, nor ſeeking how either to have ſtopped his landing, or elſe ſtraightways to have encountred with him, before the gathering of his Friends, but paſſing forth the time in Hunting, in Hawking, in all Pleaſure and Dalliance) had knowledge what great reſort of multitudes inceſſantly more repaired and more daily about the Earl and the Duke, he began now to provide for remedy, when it was too late. Who truſting too much to his Friends, and Fortune before, did now right well perceive what a variable and inconſtant thing the people is, and eſpecially here of England, whoſe nature is never to be content long with the preſent ſtate, but always delighting in News, ſeeketh new variety of changes, either envying that which ſtandeth, or elſe pitying that which is fallen. Which inconſtant mutability of the light people, changing with the Wind, and wavering with the Reed, did well appear in the courſe of this Kings ſtory. For he, through the favour of the people when he was down, was exalted; now being exalted of the ſame was forſaken. Whereby this is to be noted of all Princes, that as there is nothing in this mutable world firm and ſtable; ſo there is no truſt nor aſſurance to be made, but only in the favour of God, and in the promiſes of his Word, only in Chriſt his Son, whoſe only Kingdom ſhall never have end, nor is ſubject to any mutation.

The inconſtant levity of the people.

{KING Edw. 4}

Theſe things thus paſſing on in England on the Earls ſide againſt King Edward, he accompanied with the Duke of Gloceſter his Brother, and the Lord Haſtings, who had married the Earl of Warwicks Siſter, and yet was never untrue to the King his Maſter; and the Lord Scales, Brother to the Queen, ſent abroad to all his truſty Friends for furniture of able Souldiers for defence of his perſon, to withſtand his Enemies. When little reſcue and few in effect would come, the King himſelf ſo deſtitute, departed to Lincolnſhire, where he perceiving his Enemies daily to increaſe upon him, and all the Countries about to be in a roar, making fires, and ſinging Songs, crying, King Henry, King Henry, a Warwick a Warwick, and hearing moreover his Enemies the Lancaſtrians to be within half a days journey of him, was adviſed by his Friends to fly over the Sea to the Duke of Burgoyne, which not long before had married King Edwards Siſter.

The conſtant heart and truth of the Lord Haſtings.

King Edward forſaken of his people, and his need.

The weak ſtate of King Edward.

Here might be thought, by the common judgment and policy of man, peradventure that King Edward, as he had in his hands the life of King Henry, of his Queen and Prince, ſo if he had diſpatched them out of the way, when as he might, he had not fallen into this miſery: but becauſe he took not the vantage, which time rather than godly reaſon gave him, therefore that ſparing pity of his, turned now to his confuſion and ruine. And certes I ſuppoſe no leſs, but if the ſame caſe had fain in theſe our pitileſs days, in which charity now waxeth utterly cold, and humanity is almoſt forgotten, the occaſion of ſuch a time ſhould not be ſo neglected. But let us here note and learn, how godly ſimplicity always in the end of things gaineth more than mans policy, forſomuch as man worketh with the one, but God worketh with the other.

Whether godly ſimplicity, or mans policy be ſtronger.

Queen Elizabeth taketh Sanctuary.

Prince Edward born in Sanctuary

And ſo far is it off, that event and ſucceſs of things be governed by mans adviſed policy, or unadviſed affection in this world, that that is judged to be weaker which flouriſheth in man, than that which is caſt down in the Lord; as in the double caſe of both theſe Kings may well appear. And firſt let us conſider the caſe of King Edward, who, being ſo beſet and compaſſed with evils and diſtreſſes on every ſide, firſt was compelled to take the Wathes between Lincolnſhire and Linne (which was no leſs dangerous to his life, than it was unſeemly for his ſtate.) Being come to Linne, in what peril was he there, through the doubtful mutability of the Townſmen, if he had been known to his Enemies? And how could he be but known, if had tarried any ſpace? But though men and friends forſook him, yet the mercy of God, not forſaking the life of him which ſhewed mercy unto other, ſo provided, that at the ſame preſent there was an Engliſh Ship, and two Hulks of Holland ready to their journey. Thus King Edward without proviſion, without bag or baggage, without cloth-ſack or mail, without ſtore of money, without raiment, ſave only apparel for War; alſo without all friends, except only his Brother the Duke of Gloceſter, the Lord Scales, and Lord Haſtings, with a few other truſty friends, to the number of ſeven or eight hundred perſons, took Shipping toward Holland; at which time he was in no leſs jeopardy almoſt on the Sea, than he was on the Land. For certain Eaſterlings having many Ships of War, which lay roving the ſame time on the Sea, and had done much damage the year before, as well to the Engliſh Merchants as to the French Nation, ſpying the Kings Ship, with ſeven or eight gallant Ships, made Sail after the King and his Company. The Kings Ship was good of Sail, and gate ſome ground, albeit not much, of the Eaſterlings, that ſtaid came to the Coaſt of Holland before Alquemare, and there caſt Anker; for otherwiſe, being an ebbing-water, they could not enter the Haven. The Eaſterlings with their great Ships approached as near as they could poſſibly come for the low water, purpoſing at the Flood to obtain their prey, and ſo were like to do, if the Lord had not there alſo pro-

Charles Duke of Burgoyne, King Edwards Brother in law.

King Edward forſaken of his friends.

provided Mounſieur de Grounture, Governor for Duke Charles in Holland, at that ſeaſon to be perſonally preſent in the Town of Alquemare, who, hearing of the Jeopardy of the King being there at Anker, prohibited the Eaſterlings, on pain of death, to meddle with any Engliſhmen, which were the Dukes Friends and Allies.

Thus King Edward well chuſtified of God for his wantonneſs, both by Sea and Land, but not utterly given over from his protection, eſcaping ſo many hard chances, was ſet on land with his company; who there well refreſhed, and newly apparelled, were conducted to Hage.

Duke Charles, at the hearing of the unproſperous caſe and condition of King Edward his Brother in law, was greatly amazed and perplexed in himſelf, much caſting and doubting what he ſhould do. For being then in war with the French King, he could not well provoke the Engliſh Nation againſt him, without his manifeſt grievance and decay; neither yet could he, without great ſhame and obloquie, leave the King his Brother in that neceſſity. Notwithſtanding, ſo he demeaned himſelf through fair ſpeech, pretending to the Engliſhmen to joyn part with the houſe of Lancaſter, being himſelf partly deſcended of the ſame Family by his Grandmothers ſide; that he both was his own Friend openly, and the Kings Friend covertly, pretending that he did not, and doing that he pretended not.

When tydings was ſpread in England of King Edwards flying, innumerable people of all bands reſorted to the Earl of Warwick, to take his part againſt King Edward, a few only except of his conſtant Friends which took Sanctuary. Amongſt whom was alſo Elizabeth his wife, who, deſperate almoſt of all comfort, took alſo Sanctuary at Weſtminſter, where ſhe in great penury forſaken was delivered of a fair Son called Edward, which without all pomp was baptized like another poor womans Child, the Godfathers being the Abbot and Prior of Weſtminſter, the Godmother was the Lady Scroope.

King Henry the Sixth brought out of the Tower.

To make the ſtory ſhort, the Earl of Warwick having now brought all things to his appetite, upon the twelfth day of October rode to the Tower, which was then delivered to him, and there took King Henry out of the Ward, and placed him in the Kings Lodging. The five and twentieth day of the ſame month, the Duke of Clarence accompanied with the Earls of Warwick, Shrewſbury, and the Lord Stanley, with a great company, brought him in a long Gown of blew Velvet through the high Streets of London, firſt to Pauls Church to offer, then to the Biſhops Palace of London, and there he reſumed again to the Crown Royal, Anno 1471. which he did not long enjoy.

King Henry reſtored again to his Kingdom.

After this followed a Parliament, in the which King Edward with all his Partakers were judged Traytors. Queen Margaret with her Son Prince Edward, all this while was tarrying for a fair Wind, thinking long belike till ſhe came to an evil Bargain, as it proved after. For King Edward within ſix months after his departure out of England unto the Duke of Burgoyne, whether by Letters from his Friends ſollicitate, or whether by his adventurous courage incited, made inſtant ſuit to Duke Charles his Brother, to reſcue him with ſuch Power as he would beſtow upon him; for he was fully reſolved to defer the matter, and to protract the time no longer.

The Duke camped in double fear in ſuch a dangerous caſe, notwithſtanding overcome by nature and affinity, ſecretly cauſed to be delivered to him 50000 Florence, and further cauſed four great Ships to be appointed for him in a Haven in Zeland, where it was free for all men to come. Alſo the ſame Duke had for him hired fourteen Ships of the Eaſterlings well appointed, taking bond of them to ſerve him truly till he were landed in England, and fifteen days after.

Thus King Edward being furniſhed but only with two thouſand men of War, with more luck than hope to ſpeed, ſped his Voyage into England, and landed at Ravenſpur in the Coaſt of Yorkſhire. Although there was no way for the King with ſuch a ſmall Company of Souldiers to do any good, yet, to uſe policy where ſtrength did lack, firſt he ſent forth certain light horſemen to prove the Country on every ſide, with perſwaſions, to ſee whether the Uplandiſh people would be ſtirred to take King Edwards part. Perceiving that it would not be, King Edward flieth to his ſhifts, diſſembling his purpoſe to be, not to claim the Crown and Kingdom, but only to claim the Dutchy of York, which was his own Title, and cauſed the ſame to be publiſhed. This being notified to the people, that he deſired no more but only his juſt Patrimony and lineal Inheritance, they began to be moved with mercy and compaſſion towards him, either to favour him or not to reſiſt him; and ſo journeying toward York, he came to Beverley. The Marquiſs Mountacute, Brother to the Earl of Warwick, was then at Pomfret, to whom the Earl had ſent ſtraight charge, with all expedition to ſet upon him, or elſe to ſtop his paſſage; and likewiſe to the Citizens of York and all Yorkſhire, to ſhut their Gates and take Armor againſt him. King Edward being in theſe ſtraits, proceeded notwithſtanding near to York without reſiſtance, where he required of the Citizens to be admitted into their City. But ſo ſtood the caſe then, that they durſt not grant unto him, but on the contrary ſent him word to approach no nearer, as he loved his own ſafeguard. The deſolate King was here driven to a narrow ſtrait, who neither could retire back, for the opinion of the Country and loſs of his cauſe: neither could go further, for the preſent danger of the City. Wherefore uſing the ſame policy as before, with lovely words and gentle ſpeech he deſired the Meſſengers to declare unto the Citizens, that his coming was not to demand the Realm of England, or the Title of the ſame, but only the Dutchy of York, his old Inheritance; and therefore determined to ſet forward, neither with Army nor Weapon. The Meſſengers were not ſo ſoon within the Gates, but he was at the Gates in a manner as ſoon as they.

The gentle and fair words of King Edward.

The Citizens hearing his courteous Anſwer, and that he intended nothing to the prejudice of the King, nor of the Realm, were ſomething mitigated toward him, and began to commune with him from the Walls, willing him to withdraw his Power to ſome other place, and they ſhould be the more ready to aid him, at leaſt he ſhould have no damage by them.

Two conditions put to King Edward.

Notwithſtanding he again uſed ſuch lowly Language, and delivered ſo fair ſpeech unto them, intreating them ſo courteouſly, and ſaluting the Aldermen by their names, requiring at their hands no more but only his own Town, whereof he had the name and title, that at length the Citizens, after long talk and debating upon the matter, partly alſo enticed with fair and large promiſes, fell to this convention, that if he would ſwear to be true to King Henry, and gentile in entertaining his Citizens, they would receive him into the City.

King Edward put to his Oath.

This being concluded, the next morning at the entring of the Gate, a Prieſt was ready to ſay Maſs, in the which after the receiving of the Sacrament the King received a ſolemn Oath to obſerve the two Articles afore agreed. By reaſon of which ſo raſhly made, and as ſt rdly broken, and not long after puniſhed (as it may well be thought) in his poſterity, he obtained the City of York. Where he, in ſhort time forgetting his Oath, to make all ſure, ſet in Garriſons of armed Souldiers. Furthermore, perceiving all things to be quiet, and no ſtir to be made againſt him, he thought to foreſtack no opportunity of time, and ſo made forward toward London, leaving by the way the Marquiſs Mountacute, which lay then with his Army at Pomfret, on the right hand, not fully four miles diſtant from his Camp: and ſo returning to the high-way again, he went forward without any ſtirring to the Town of Nottingham; where came to him Sir William Parre, Sir Thomas of Borough, Sir Thomas Mountgomery, and divers elſe of his aſſured Friends, with their Aids, which cauſed him by a Proclamation to ſtand to his own Title of King Edward the Fourth, ſaying, That they would ſerve no man but a King: At the fame hereof being blown abroad as the Citizens of York were not a little offended (and that worthily) ſo from other Towns and Cities, Lords and Noble men began to fall unto him, thinking with themſelves that the Marquiſs Mountacute either favoured his Cauſe, or was afraid to encounter with the man. Howſoever it was, King Edward, being now more fully furniſhed at all points, came to the Town of Leiceſter, and there hearing that the Earl of Warwick, accompanied with the Earl of Oxford were together at Warwick with a great Power, minding to ſet on the Earl, he removed from thence his Army, hoping to give him battel. in the mean time about London had levied a great Host coming toward the Earl of Warwick, as he was by the Earl appointed. But when the Earl saw the Duke to linger the time, he began to suspect (as it fell out indeed) that he was altered to his Brethrens part. The King advancing forward his Host, came to Warwick, where he found all the people departed. From thence he moved toward Coventry, where the Earl was; unto whom the next day after he boldly offered battel. But the Earl, expecting the Duke of Clarence his coming, kept him within the Walls. All this made for the King. For he hearing that his Brother the Duke of Clarence was not far off, coming toward him with a great Army, raised his Camp, and made toward him, either to entreat or else to encounter with his Brother. When each Host was in sight of the other, Richard Duke of Glocester, Brother to them both, as Arbiter between them, first rode to the one, then to the other. Whether all this was for a face of a matter made, it is uncertain. But hereby both the Brethren, laying all Army and weapon aside, first lovingly and familiarly communed; after that, brotherly and naturally joyned together. And that fraternal Amity by Proclamation also was ratified, and put out of all suspition.

Then was it agreed between the three Brethren to attempt the Earl of Warwick, if he likewise would be reconciled; but he crying out thame upon the Duke of Clarence, stood at utter defiance. From thence King Edward so throughly furnished, and daily increasing, taketh his way to London. Where, after it was known that the Duke of Clarence was come to his Brethren, much fear fell upon the Londoners, casting with themselves what was best to do. The suddenness of time permitted no long consultation. There was at London the same time the Archbishop of York, Brother to the Earl of Warwick, and the Duke of Somerset, with other of King Henries Council, to whom the Earl had sent in Commandment a little before, knowing the weakness of the City, that they should keep the City from their Enemies two or three days, and he would follow with all possible speed with a puissant Army, who, according to their commandment, defended the City with all their power, but yet to little purpose. For the Citizens consulting with themselves for their own most indemnity, having no Walls to defend them, thought best to take that way which seemed to them most sure and safe, and therefore concluded to take part with King Edward. This was not so soon known abroad, but the Commonalty ran out by heaps to meet King Edward, and to salute him as their King. Whereupon the Duke of Somerset, with other of King Henries Council, hearing thereof, and wondering at the sudden change of the World, to shift for themselves, fled away and left there King Henry alone. Who, the same day being caused by the Archbishop of York to ride about London like a King, was before night made Captive, and reduced again to the Tower.

It was not long after these things thus done at London, but the coming of the Earl of Warwick was heard of; who, thinking to prevent mischiefs with making speed, came a little too late and mischief of his purpose. In the Earls Army were John Duke of Exceter, Edmund Earl of Somerset, John Earl of Oxford, and Marquess Mountacute, the Earls Brother. The Earl had now passed a great part of his Journey, when he hearing news of the World so changed, and of the Captivity of King Henry, was not a little thereat appalled in his mind; wherefore he stayed with his Army at S. Albans, to see what way further to take. And forsomuch as there was no other remedy, but either he must yield, or one conflict must finish the matter, he removed to Barnet ten miles from S. Albans.

The Earl of Warwick cometh to Barnet.

Against him set forth King Edward, well appointed with a strong Army of picked and able persons, with Artillery, Engins and Instruments meet for the purpose; bringing with him also King Henry. On Easter even he came to Barnet, and there he embattelled himself. In the morning upon Easter-day the battel began, and fiercely continued almost till noon, with murder on each side, much doubtful till both parts were almost weary with fighting and murdering. King Edward then desirous to see an end, off or on, with a great crew of new fresh Souldiers set upon his wearied enemies. Where the Earls men, encouraged with words of their Captain, stoutly fought, but they sore wounded and wearied could not long hold out. The Earl, rushing into the midst of his Enemies, ventured so far, that he could not be rescued; where he was stricken down and slain, and there lay he. Marquess Montacute thinking to succour his Brother, whom he saw to be in great jeopardy, was likewise overthrown and slain. After that Richard Nevil, Earl of Warwick, and his Brother were gone, the rest fled, and many were taken. The number of them which were in this Field slain, are judged about ten thousand, as Polydore Virgil reciteth. Fabian numbereth of them that were slain but fifteen hundred. The Duke of Somerset and Earl of Oxford, thinking to fly to Scotland, returned to Jasper Earl of Pembroke in Wales. The Duke of Exceter, hardly escaped to Westminster, and there took Sanctuary. For the death of the Earl of Warwick, the King was not so glad, as he was sorry for the Marquess of Mountacute, whom he took to be his Friend. The Corps of these two were brought to the Church of Pauls, where they lay open in two Coffins two days, and then were interred. Ex Polyd. & aliis.

{KING Edw.4}
The Earl of Warwick and his Brother slain.

In the narration of this History Polydore Virgil, whom Hall followeth word for word, doth some deal differ from Robert Fabian. Neither do I doubt but both these had their Authors by whom they were directed. Notwithstanding this I marvel, that Polydore, writing of so many things which he never saw, doth not vouchsafe to cite unto us those Writers of whom he borrowed. And more do I marvel or rather lament, if it be true that I have heard, that he not only nameth no Author unto us, but also burned an heap of our English stories unknown, after the finishing of his, in the days of King Henry the Eighth. But now to our Text again.

Difference between Fabyan and Fabian.
Hall follower of Polydore, Polydore is said to have burned a number of our English Writers.

All this while yet Queen Margaret, with young Prince Edward her Son, was scarce come over, being long let with contrary Winds; who at length in the month of April arrived at Weymouth in Dorsetshire, and hearing the sorrowful tydings of these things lately happened to her Husband, and to the Earl of Warwick and his Brother, and of the prosperous success of King Edward, was so dismayed, disquieted, and pierced with sorrow, seeing all things contrary to her expectation, so to frame against her, that she feared and took on with her self, lamenting her Husband, bewailing her Son, curling her coming, and crying out of Fortune, as though blind Fortune were she that governeth times and tides (rewarding just punishments to unjust deservings of men) and not the secret Power and terrible Justice of Almighty God. Such was then the impatience of that Queen, being not able to bear the vehemency of her passion, (who rather should have sorrowed the dolorous death of Duke Humfrey, slounden. whom before she neglected, but now the lacked) that her senses failed, her spirits were taken, her speech decayed, and life almost gone, she fell to the ground, as one that would rather die than live. In this desolate case Queen Margaret learning now to know her Friends from her Foes, when it was too late, fraught full of heavines, without solace or hope of remedy, she with her Son and her Company departed for the next Refuge, to a Monastery of Monks called Beauly in Hampshire, there to take Sanctuary and Privilege of the House.

Yet all hearts were not found nor subdued in England, especially Edmund Duke of Somerset, with Lord John his Brother, Thomas Courtney Earl of Devonshire, Jasper Earl of Pembroke, Lord Wenlock John Longserother, being Prior of the Knights of Rodes in Saint Johns. These hearing of the Queens return, with speed resorted to her; by whom she being somewhat quickned in her spirits, and animated to War, began to take some heart, and to follow their counsel; which was, in all the hot haste, to renew War against King Edward, being now unprovided, by reason his Army was now dispersed, and chiefest of his Souldiers wasted. Here great hope of Victory was shewed, great Promises made. Although the Queens mind was, being more careful for the young Prince than for her self, to send him over into France, before some proof or trial made; yet following the contrary counsel of them, and partly cut off by shortness of time, which required haste, he began with all Expedition to gather their Power. Likewise Jasper Earl of Pembroke polled into Wales to do the same.

Queen Margaret moved to renew wars against King Edward.

{KING Edw.4}
King Edward wanteth aguinst Queen Margaret.

King Edward having Intelligence of all these doings, first sendeth out certain light Horsemen, to espy abroad through the West parts what was in his Enemies did take. In the mean time he, using all celerity to meet them before they came to London, gathered a power, such as he could make about London, and first cometh to Abingdon, from thence to Marlbridge, hearing that the Queen was at Bathe, thinking to encounter with them, before they diverted into Wales to the Earl of Pembroke, whither he thought (as they indeed intended) that they would take. But the Queen, understanding the King to be so nigh, removeth from Bathe to Bristow, sending word in the mean while to the Citizens of Glocester, that they would grant her leave safely to pass by their City. Which when it could not be obtained, with her Army she departed from Bristow to Tewkesbury; where the Duke of Somerset, knowing King Edward to be at hand at his very back, willed the Queen there to stay, and in no wise to fly backward, for certain doubts that might be cast. Although this counsel was against the consent of many other Captains, who thought it best rather to draw aside, while the Earl of Pembroke with his Army were with them associate; yet the mind of the Duke prevailed, the place was prefixed, the Field pitched, the time of battel came, the King was looked for; who being within one mile of Tewkesbury, with like industry and policy, as his Enemies had done, disposed his Army likewise in their array. The celerity of the King, taking the time, was to him great advantage; who otherwise, if he had deferred till he had conjoyned with the Earl of Pembroke, had put the matter in great hazzard. Such a matter it is to take a thing in time.

Queen Margaret removed from Glocester.
The battel of Tewksbury.
A great matter to take a thing in time.

Of this battel Hall thus reporteth, adding more than Polydore, that the Duke of Somerset, although he was strongly intrenched, yet through the occasion or policy of the Duke of Glocester, which had the fore-ward of the Kings part, a little reculing back, followed the chase, supposing that the Lord Wenlock, who had the middle-ward, would have followed hard at his back. The Duke of Glocester, whether for thame rather than of policy, espying his advantage, suddenly turned face to his enemies. Whereupon the contrary part was estsoons discomfited, and so much the more, because they were separated from their company. The Duke of Somerset not a little agrieved, at this so unfortunate a case, returneth to the middle-ward, where he seeing the Lord Wenlock abiding still, revileth him, and calleth him Traytor, and with his Ax striketh the brains out of his head.

Thus much addeth Hall besides Polydore; but sheweth not his Author where he had it. Polydore, writing of this Conflict, writeth no more but this, that the Queens Army being overset with the number and multitude of their Enemies, and she having no fresh Souldiers to furnish the Field, was at last overmatched, and for the most part slain or taken. In which battel were named to be slain, the Earl of Devonshire, the Lord Wenlock, Lord John Duke of Somerset his Brother, besides other. Among them that were taken was Queen Margaret, found in her Chariot almost dead for sorrow, Prince Edward, Edmund Duke of Somerset, John Prior of Saint Johns, with twenty other Knights; all which were beheaded within two days after, the Queen only and the young Prince excepted. Which Prince Edward being then brought to the Kings presence, it was demanded of him how he durst be so bold to stand in battel against him. To this Edward Hall addeth more, and saith, That after the Field was finished the King made Proclamation, That whosoever would bring Prince Edward to him, should have Annuity of an hundred pound during his life, and the Princes life should be saved. Whereupon Sir Richard Crofts, not mistrusting the Kings promise, brought forth his Prisoner, &c. And to the King demanding of the Prince (as is said) how he durst so presumptuously enter this Realm with his Banner displayed against him, he answered, saying, That he came to recover his Fathers Kingdom and Inheritance from his Grandfather and Father to him descending; whereat (said Polydore) the King with his hand disdainfully thrust him from him. Other say, that the King struck him on the face with his Gauntlet.

At the speaking of these words was present George Duke of Clarence, Richard Duke of Glocester, and the Earl Lord William Hastings. Who upon the same uncourteously falling upon the Prince, did slay him. Queen Margaret, being brought Prisoner to London, was to afterward ranfomed of her Father Duke of Angeou, for a great sum of money which he borrowed of the French King, and for the payment thereof was fain to yield unto him the Title of the Kingdom of Sicily and Naples, &c. King Edward for these prosperous Wars rendred to God his hearty thanks, and caused publickly through his Realm solemn Processions to be kept three days together. The same year, and about the same time, upon the Ascension-even, King Henry, being Prisoner in the Tower, departed, after he had reigned in all thirty eight years, and six months. Polydore and Hall following him, affirm that he was slain with a Dagger by Richard Duke of Glocester, the Kings Brother, for the more quiet and safeguard of the King his Brother. In the History, intituled, Scala mundi, I find these words, Quod in turri, in vigilia Ascensionis Dominicæ, ibidem feliciter morieni, per Thamesim navicula usque ad Abbatiam de Chertesey deducitur, ibi sepultus est; That is, That King Henry being in the Tower, upon the Ascension-even, there happily or quietly departing, was brought by Thames in a Boat to the Abbey of Chertesey, and there buried.

Polydore, after he hath described the Vertues of this King, recordeth that King Henry the Seventh did afterward translate the Corps of him from Chertesey to Windsor, and addeth moreover, that by him certain Miracles were wrought. For the which cause the said King Henry the Seventh (saith he) laboured with Pope Julius, to have him canonized for a Saint, but the death of the King was the let why that matter proceeded not. Edward Hall, writing of this matter, addeth more, declaring the cause, why King Henries fainting went not forward, to be this; For that the Fees of canonizing of a King were of so great a quantity at Rome (more than of another, Bishop or Prelate) that the said King thought it better to keep the money in his Chests, than with the impoverishing of the Realm to buy so dear and pay so much for a new Holy day of S. Henry in the Kalender, &c. Ex Hallo. Which if it be true, it might be replied then to Pope Julius, that if Popes be higher than Kings in the Earth, and especially in Heaven, why then is a Pope-Saint so cheap in the Marketplace of Rome, and a King-Saint so dear? Again, if the valuation of things in all Markets and Burses be according to the price and dignity of the thing that is bought; what reason is it, seeing the fainting of a King beareth a bigger sale than the fainting of any Pope in Heaven, but that Kings should be set above Popes also upon the Earth? Sed extra jocum, as I do not doubt, but that King Henry was a good and a quiet Prince, if he had not otherwise been abused by some; so touching the ruine of his House, I think not contrary, but it came not without the just appointment of the Lord, either for that the Henries of Lancaster house were such Enemies to Gods people, and for the burning of the Lord Cobham and many other; or else for the unjust displacing of King Richard the Second; or else thirdly, for the cruel slaughter of Humfrey the good Duke of Glocester his Uncle; whereof sufficiently hath been said before.

The cause examined of Lancaster House.
Example of Gods just rod of correction.

During the time of these doings, being about the year of our Lord 1465, there was here in England a certain Frier Carmelite, who about the term of Michael the Archangel preached at Pauls in London, That our Lord Jesus Christ, being here in this present World, was in poverty, and did beg. To whose Opinion and Doctrine the Provincial of that Order seemed also to incline, defending the same both in his reading and preaching, with other Doctors more and Brethren of the same Order; unto whom also adjoyned certain of the Jacobites; and stiffly did take their parts. On the contrary side, many Doctors and also Lawyers, both in their publick Lectures and preaching, to the uttermost of their cunning did withstand their assertion, as being a thing most pestiferous in the Church to be heard. Such a bitter contention was among them, that the Defendant part was driven for a while to keep silence. Much like to those times I might well resemble these our days now present, with our tumultuous contension of Forms and Fashions of Garments.

A Frier Carmelite, preached at Pauls Cross.
Contention in the Church whether Christ was a Begger or not.
Times compared.

But

But I put my self here in Pythagoras School, and keep silence with these Friers. In the story moreover it followeth, that this beggerly question of the begging-Friers, whether Christ did beg or no, went so far, that at length it came to the Popes ears, Paulus 2. who was no beggar ye may be sure. After that the fame of this Doctrine mounting over the Alpes, came flying to the Court of Rome, which was about the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, the year next following, Anno 1465, it brought with it such an evil smell to the fine Noses there, that it was no need to bid them to stir; for begging to them was worse than high Heresie. Wherefore the holy Father Pope Paulus the Second to repress the sparkles of this Doctrine, which otherwise perhaps might have set his whole Kitchin on fire, taketh the matter in hand, and estoons directeth down his Bull into England, insinuating to the Prelates here, Heresim illam pestiferè asserentem quod Christus publice mendicavit, esse antiquitus a Romanis Pontificibus, cum suis concilijs damnatam, & eam pro damnata undique declarandam & concludendam, &c. That is, that this Heresie, which peskiferously doth affirm that Christ did openly beg, was condemned of old time by the Bishops of Rome, and his Councils, and that the same ought to be declared in all places for a damned Doctrine, and worthy to be trodden down under all mens feet, &c. This was in the same year when Prince Edward, King Edwards Son was born in the Sanctuary at Westminster, Anno 1465.

Ex Mss. Sanct. mon. de fol. xii.

The Popes determined falsehood, that Christ was no beggar.

As touching the rest of the doings and affairs of this King, (which had vanquished hitherto in nine battels, himself being present) how afterward he, through the incitement of Charles Duke of Burgoyne his Brother in law, ventured into France with a puissant Army, and how the Duke failed him in his promise; also how Peace between these two Kings was at length concluded in a solemn meeting of both the said Kings together (which meeting is notified in stories, by a white Dove sitting the same day of meeting upon the top of King Edwards Tent) also of the Marriage promised between the young Dolphin and Elizabeth King Edwards eldest Daughter, but afterward broken off on the French Kings part; moreover as touching the death of the Duke of Burgoyne slain in War, and of his Daughter Mary, Niece to King Edward, spoiled of her Lands and Possessions wrongfully by Lewis the French King, and married after to Maximilian; Furthermore, as touching the Expedition of King Edward into Scotland, by reason of King James breaking promise in marrying with Cicely the second Daughter of King Edward, and of driving out his Brother, and how the matter was composed there, and of the recovery again of Berwick of these (I say) and such other things more, partly becaufe they are described sufficiently in our common English stories, partly also because they are matters not greatly pertaining to the Church, I omit to speak, making of them a Supersedeas. Two things I find here, among many other, specially to be remembred.

{KING Edw. 4.

Marriage between the French Kings Son and King Edwards Daughter, made and broken.

The first is concerning a godly and constant Servant of Christ, named John Goose, which in the time of this King was unjustly condemned and burnt at the Tower-hill, Anno 1473, in the month of August. Thus had England this is to be noted, that since the time of King Richard the Second, there is no Reign of any King to be assigned hitherto, wherein some good man or other hath not suffered the pains of fire for the Religion and true testimony of Christ Jesus. Of this said John Goose, or John Hus, this moreover I find in another English Monument recorded, that the said John being delivered to Robert Belisdon, one of the Sheriffs, to see him burnt the Afternoon; the Sheriff, like a charitable man, had him home to his house, and there exhorted him to deny (saith the story) his Errors. But the godly man after long exhortation heard, desired the Sheriff to be content; for he was satisfied in his conscience. Notwithstanding this he desired of the Sheriff, for Gods sake to give him some meat, saying, That he was very sore hungred. Then the Sheriff commanded him meat; whereof he took and did eat, as if he had been toward no manner of danger, and said to such as stood about him, I eat now a good and competent dinner, for I shall pass a little sharp shoures ere I go to Supper. And might shortly be led to the place where he should yield up his spirit unto God. Ex Polychron.

Prophesies not rashly to be believed.

Satan can lay truth for a wicked end. Devilish Prophesies although they tell truth, yet are not to be followed.

The Burning of John Goose

The unworthy death of the Duke of Clarence.

The second thing herein to be noted, is the death of George Duke of Clarence, the Kings second Brother; of whom relation was made before, how he assisted King Edward his Brother, against the Earl of Warwick at Barnet Field, and helped him to the Crown; and now after all these benefits was at length thus requited, that (for what cause it is uncertain) he was apprehended and cast into the Tower, where he being adjudged for a Traytor, was privily drowned in a Butt of Malmsey. What the true cause was of his death it cannot certainly be affirmed. Divers Conjectures and Imaginations there be diverstly put forth. Some partly imputed it to the Queens displeasure.

Other

{KING Edw. 4.

The cause of his death expounded. The artificial cheat. Satan worketh by false Prophesies.

Other suppose it came for taking part in the cause of his Servant, which was accused and condemned for poysoning, Sorcery or Inchantment. Another fame there is, which furmiseth the cause hereof to rise upon the vain fear of a foolish Prophesie, coming no doubt (if it were true) by the crafty operation of Satan, as it doth many times elfe happen among Infidels and Gentiles, where Christ is not known; where among high Princes and in Noble houses much mischief groweth, first murther and paricide, and thereby ruine of ancient Families, and alteration of Kingdoms. The effect of this Prophelie (as the fame goeth) was this, That after King Edward should one Reign whole name should begin with G. And because the name of the Duke of Clarence, being George, began with a G. therefore he began to be feared, and afterward privily (as is aforesaid) was made away.

The Prophesie of G.

By these experiments and mischievous ends of such Prophesies, and also by the nature of them, it is soon to be seen from what Fountain or Author they proceed, that is (no doubt) from Satan, the ancient enemy of Mankind, and Prince of this World; against whose deceitful delusions, Christian men must be well instructed, neither to marvel greatly at them though they seem strange, nor yet to believe them though they happen true. For Satan being the Prince of this World, in such worldly things can foresee what will follow, and can say truth for a mischievous end, and yet for all that is but a Satan. So the dream of Astiages, seeing a Vine to grow out of his Daughter, which should cover all Asia, and fearing thereby that by his Nephew he should lose his Kingdom, proved true in the sequel thereof; and yet notwithstanding of Satan it came, and caused cruel murther to follow, first of the Shepherds Child, then of the Son of Harpagus, whom he fed before his own Father to eat. Ex Justo. lib. 1. Martyrs Prophesies. 1 Reg. 18. Mat. 16.

Three things to be noted concerning false Prophesies.

Many there be, which being not contented with things present, curiously occupy their wits to search what is to come, and not giving thanks to God for their life which they have, will also know what shall become them, how and when their end will come, how long Princes shall Reign, and who after shall succeed them, and for the same get unto them Soothsayers, Astrologers, Sorcerers, Conjurers, or Familiars. And these are not so much inquisitive to seach or ask, but the Devil is as ready to answer them, who either fallly doubleth with them to delude them, or else telleth them truth, to work them perpetual care and sorrow. Thus was Pope Silvester the Sorcerer circumvented by the Devil, who told him, that he should be at Jerusalem before he died, and so it fell out. For as he was saying his Mass at a Chappel in Rome, called Jerusalem, there he fell sick, and within three days after died: To King Henry the Fourth alfo it seemeth it was prophesied, that he should not die before he went to Jerusalem, who being brought to the Abbots Chamber of Westminster, and hearing the name of the Chamber to be called Jerusalem, knew his time to be come, and died.

Vide supra.

Vide supra.

By such deceitful Prophesies it cannot be lamented enough to see what inconvenience both publickly and privately groweth to the life of men, either causing them fallly to truft where they should not, or else wickedly to perpetrate that they would not; as may appear both by this King, and also divers more. So was Pompeius, Craffus, and Cæsar (as writeth Cicero) deceived by the false Chaldees, in declaring to them that they should not die but in their beds, and with worship, and in their old age. Of such a false truft rising upon false Prophelies, S. Ambrose in his Book of Exameron writeth, speaking of rain, which being in thofe parts greatly defired, was promised and prophefied of one certainly to fall upon such a day, which was at the changing of the new Moon: but (saith S. Ambrofe) there fell no such rain at all, till at the prayers of the Church the fame was obtained; giving us to understand, that rain cometh not by the word of man, nor by the beginnings of the Moon, but by the providence and mercy of our Creator. Ex Ambrof. in Examer.

False truft by deceitful Prophesies.

Ambrosius in Examer.

Joan. Picus Earl of Mirandula, in his excellent Books written against thefe vain Star-tellers and Astrologers, writeth of one Ordelaphus a Prince, to whom it was prognofticated by a famous cunning man in that Science, called Hieronymus Manfredus, that he fhould injoy long continuance of health, and prosperous life; who notwithstanding the self same year, and in the first year of his marriage, deceased: and after divers other examples added moreover upon the same, he inferreth alfo mention, and the name of a certain rich Matron in Rome, named Constantia, who in like manner departed the fame year, in which she received great promises by these Soothsayers and Astrologers, of a long and happy life, saying to her husband thefe words, Behold (faith she) how true be the Prognostications of these Sooth-tellers? If it were not for noting of them which now are gone, and whofe names I would in no cafe to be blemished with any spot; I could recite the names of certain, especially one, which taking his journey in a certain place, after diligent calculation and forecasting of the fuccefs and good speed of his Journey, was notwithstanding in the fame Journey apprehended and brought where he would not, and after that never injoying good day, in short time he departed. In Basil this I my self heard of one which knew and was conversant with the party, who having a curious delight in thefe Speculations of Chances and Events to come, by his Calculation noted a certain day which he misstruted fhould be fatal unto him, by fomething which at that time fhould befal upon him. Whereupon he determined with himself all that day to keep him fure and safe within his Chamber; where he reaching up his hand to take down a Book, the Book falling down upon his head, gave him his deaths wound, and shortly after he died upon the fame. Of thefe and fuch like examples the World is full, and yet the curiousness of mens heads will not refrain, still to pluck the Apple of this unlucky and forbidden Tree.

Foan. Pic. Mirandan contra Aftr. l. 1. ca. 9. Experiment of false Prophesies.

This man by false dissemblers was taken, betrayed, and brought into Bondage.

A perilous matter for a man to be curious of times and things to come.

Besides all this, what murther and paricide cometh by the fear of thefe Prophefies, in great bloods and noble houses, I refer it unto them which read and well advise the stories, as well of our Kings here in England, as in other Kingdoms more both Christened and Turkish, whereof another place shall serve as well (Christ willing) more largely to entreat, and particularly to discourse. To this pertaineth alfo the great inconvenience and hinderance that groweth by the fear of such Prophesies in the vocation of men, forsomuch as many there be which fearing, some one danger, some another, leave their vocations undone, and follow inordinate ways. As if one having a blind Prophesie, that his destruction fhould be on the day, would wake and do all his business by night and candle-light; and so forth forth in other several cases of men and women, as every one in his own conscience knoweth his own case best.

The second part above Prophecies are to be discerned.

The second thing to be considered in these Prophesies, is rightly to discern and understand, as near as we can, the difference between the Prophesies proceeding from God, and the false Prophesies counterfeited by Satan. For Satan sometime playeth Gods Ape, and transformeth himself into an Angel of Light; bearing such a resemblance and colour of Truth and Religion, that a wise man is scarcely able to discern one from the other, and the most part is beguiled. Concerning Prophesies therefore, to know which be of God, which be not, three things are to be observed:

To the second part three things to be considered.

1. First, Whether they go simply and plainly, or whether they be doubtful and ambiguous; whereof the one seemeth to taste of Gods Spirit, such as be the Prophesies of the Scripture; the other to come otherwise, having a double or doubtful interpretation. Although the time of Gods Prophesies, as also of Miracles is commonly and ordinarily expired, yet if the Lord in these days now extraordinarily do shew any Prophesie, by the simpleness and plainness thereof it may partly be discerned.

The second thing to be considered in the Prophesies.

2. Secondly, This is to be expended, whether they be private, tending to this Family or that Family, or public. For as the Scriptures, so commonly the Prophesies of God have no private interpretation, but general: for somuch as the care of Gods holy Spirit is not restrained partially to one person more than to another, but generally and indifferently respecteth the whole Church of his Elect in Christ Jesus his Son. Wherefore such Prophesies as privately are touching the arms of houses or names of men, riding or falling of private and particular Families, are worthily to be suspected.

The third thing to be considered in Prophesies.

3. The third note and special argument to descry the true Prophesies of God from the false Prophesies of Satan and his false Prophets, is this, to consider the matter and the end thereof; that is, whether they be worldly, or whether they be spiritual, or whether they tend to any glory or state of this present World, or whether they tend to the spiritual instruction, admonition, or comfort of the publick Church.

The third part, how to avoid the danger of sinister Prophesies. Two remedies against devilish Prophesies. The first remedy.

Now remaineth thirdly, after we know what Prophesies be of God, and what not, that we be instructed next how to eschew the fear and peril of all devilish Prophesies which make against us. Wherein two special remedies are to be marked of every Christian man, whereby he may be safe and sure against all danger of the enemy. The first is, that we fet the name of Christ Jesus the Son of God against them, through a true Faith in him, knowing this, that the Son of God hath appeared to dissolve the Works of the Devil. And again, This is the Victory (saith the Scripture) that overcometh the World, even our Faith. Whatsoever then Satan worketh, or can work against us, be it never so forcible, Faith in Christ will vanquish it. Such a Majesty is in our Faith, believing in the Name of the Son of God.

The second remedy against dangerous Prophesies.

The other remedy is faithful Prayer, which obtaineth in the Name of Christ all things with the Lord. So that wicked Fiend, which had killed before seven Husbands of Tobias Wife, could not hurt him entring his Matrimony with earnest prayer; so no more shall any sinister Prophetie prevail, where prayer out of a faithful heart doth strive against it. Neither am I ignorant, that against such Temporal evils and punishments to this life inflicted, a great remedy lieth also in this, when Satan findeth nothing wherein greatly to accuse our conscience. But because such a conscience is hard to be found, the next refuge is to fly to repentance, with amendment of life. For many times where sin doth reign in our mortal bodies, there also the operation of Satan is strong against us, to afflict our outward bodies here; but as touching our eternal Salvation, neither work nor merit hath any place, but only our Faith in Christ. And thus much briefly touching the two special remedies, whereby the operation of all devilish Prophesies may be avoided and defeated.

Man policy can nothing do against the Devil.

Now many there be, which leaving these remedies aforesaid, and the safe protection which the Lord hath set up in Christ, take other ways of their own, seeking by their own policy how to withstand and escape such Prophesies, either in eschewing the place and time subtilly, or else cruelly by killing the party whom they fear; whereof cometh injury, murther, and parricide, with other mischiefs in Common-wealths unspeakable. To whom commonly it cometh so to pass, that whereby they think most to save themselves, by the same means they fall most into the snare, being subverted and confounded in their own policy, for that they trusting to their own device, and not unto the Lord, which only can dissolve the operation of Satan, the Lord so turneth their device into a trap, thereby to take them, whereby they think most surely to escape. Examples whereof we see not only in Astyages, King of the Medes aforesaid, and Cyrus; but in infinite other like events, which the trade of the World doth daily offer to our eyes. So Queen Margaret thought her then cockfure, when Duke Humfrey was made away; when nothing else was her confusion so much as the loss and lack of that man.

{KING Edward 5. No power can withstand Satan, but only Christ, and our faith in him.

So if King Richard the Second had not exercised such cruelty upon his Uncle Thomas, Duke of Glocester, he had not received such wrong by King Henry the Fourth as he did. Likewise this King Edward the Fourth, if he had suffered his Brother George Duke of Clarence to have lived, his House had not so gone to wrack by Richard his other Brother, as it did. What befel upon the Student of Astrology in the University of Basil ye heard before; who, if he had not mewed himself in his Chamber for fear of his Divination, had escaped the stroke that fell. Now in avoiding such Prophetical events which he should not have searched, he fell into that which he did fear. These few examples for instruction sake, I thought by occation to infer, not as though these were alone; but by these few to admonish the Reader of infinite other, which daily come in practise of life, to the great danger and decay, as well in private houses, as in weals publick.

Only Christ able to withstand the power of Satan. Psal. 90.

Wherefore briefly to repeat what before simply hath been said touching this matter, seeing that Satan through such subtil Prophecies hath yet and daily practise to manifold mischiefs in the World, setting Brother against Brother, Nephew against the Uncle, House against House, and Realm against Realm, gendring hatred where love was, and subverting privily the simplicity of our Christian Faith; therefore the first and best thing is for godly men not to bulke their brains about such Phantasies, neither in delighting in them, nor in hearkening to them, nor in searching for them, either by Soothsayer, or by Conjuration, or by Familiar, or by Astrologer; knowing and considering this, that whosoever shall be delirous or ready to search for them, the Devil is as ready to answer his curiosity therein. For as once, in the old time of Gentility, he gave his Oracles by Idols and Priests of that time; so the same Devil, although he worketh not now by Idols, yet he craftily can give now answer by Astrologers and Conjurers in these our days, and in so doing, both to say truth, and yet to deceive men when he hath said. Wherefore, leaving off such curiosity, let every Christian man walk simply in his present vocation, referring his things not in the word expressed, unto him which is faith in his word, Non est vestrum scire tempora & momenta temporum, &c. It is not for you to know the times, and seasons of times, which the Father hath kept in his own Power, &c.

Sigismundus Emperor. Sigismundus unprosperous in his wars.

A brief remembrall of the matter of Prophesies before pasted.

Sigismundus overcomed of the Turks.

Sigismundus overcomed of the Bohemians.

The Devil ready to answer, in matters of Divination.

Curiosity of Prophesies to be avoided.

Secondly, In this matter of Prophesies, requisite it is (as is said) for every Christian man to learn, how to discern and distinguish the true Prophesies, which proceed of God, and the false Prophesies which come of Satan. The difference whereof, as it is not hard to be discerned; so necessary it is that every good man do rightly understand the same, to the intent that he, knowing and flying the danger of the one, may be the more certain and constant in adhering to the other.

Thirdly, Because it is not sufficient that the deceitful Prophesies of the Devil be known, but also that they be resisted, I have also declared, by what means the operation of Satans Works and Prophesies are to be overcome; that is, not with strength and policy of man, for that there is nothing in man able to countervail the power of that Enemy. Under Heaven there is nothing else that can prevail against his Works, but only the Name of the Lord Jesus the Son of God, not outwardly pronounced only with our Lips, or signed in our Foreheads with the outward Cross, but inwardly apprehended and dwelling in our hearts by a silent Faith, firmly and earnestly earnestly trusting upon the promises of God, given and sealed unto us in his Name. For so it hath pleased his Fatherly wisdom to set him up, to be both our righteousnes before himself, and also to be our fortitude against the enemy, accepting our faith in his Son in no less price than he accepteth the works and worthiness of the same his Son in whom we do believe.

{KING Ed. 4.

The strength of a Christian mans faith in Christ.

Such is the strength and effect of Faith both in Heaven, in Earth, and also in Hell: In Heaven to justifie, in Earth to preserve, in Hell to conquer. And therefore when any such prophesie, or any other thing is to us objected, which seemeth to tend against us, let us first confider whether it favour of Satan, or not. If it do, then let us seek our succour, not in our selves where it doth not dwell, neither let us kill, nor slay, nor change our vocation therefore, following unordinate ways; but let us run to our Castle of refuge, which is to the power of the Lord Jesus, remembring the true promise of the Psalm, Qui habitat in adjutorio altissimi, in protectione Dei cœli commorabitur: That is, Who so putteth his trust in the succour of the Lord, shall have the God of Heaven to be his Protector. And then shall it afterward follow in the same Psalm, Ipse liberabit te a laqueo venantium, & a verbo aspero: That is, And he shall deliver him from the snare of the hunter, and from all evil words, and prophecies, be they never so sharp or bitter against him, &c. And thus much by the occasion of King Edward, of Prophecies.

Now having long tarried at home in describing the tumults and troubles within our own land, we will let out our story more at large, to consider the afflictions and perturbations of other parties and places also of Christs Church, as well here in Europe under the Pope, as in the East parts under the Turk, first deducing our story from the time of Sigismund, where before we left. Which Sigismund, as it is above recorded, was a great doer in the Council of Constance against John Hus, and Jerome of Prague. The Emperor had ever evil luck fighting against the Turks. Twice he warred against them, and in both the Battels was discomfited and put to flight; once about the City of Mysia, fighting against Bajazetes the Great Turk, Anno 1395, the second time fighting against Celebinus the Son of Bajazetes, about the Town called Columbacium. But especially after the Council of Constance, wherein were condemned and burned these two godly Martyrs, more unprosperous succes did then follow him, fighting against the Bohemians his own subjects, Ann. 1420, by whom he was repulsed in so many Battels, to his great dishonour, during all the life of Zisca, and of Procopius, as is afore more at large expressed; who was so beaten both of the Turks, and at home of his own people, that he never did encounter with the Turks after. Then followed the Council of Basil, after the beginning whereof within six years, this Sigismundus which was Emperor, King of Hungary, and King of Boheme, died in Moravia, Anno 1434.

¶ Albertus, Emperor.

Albertus Duke of Austrich Emperor, K. of Hungary, King of Boheme.

THis Sigismund left behind him one only Daughter Elizabeth, who was married to Albert Duke of Austrich, by reason whereof he was advanced to the Empire, and so was both Duke of Austrich, Emperor, King of Hungary, and King also of Boheme. But this Albert, (as is afore declared) being an enemy and a disquieter to the Bohemians, and especially to the good men of Thabor, as he was preparing and setting forth against the Turks, in the mean time died, in the second year of his Empire, Ann. 1439, leaving his wife great with child; who lying then in Hungary, and thinking her self to be great with a Daughter, called to her the Princes and the Chieftains of the Realms, declaring to them that she was but a woman, and unsufficient to the Governance of such a state; and moreover how the thought her self to be with child of a Daughter; and therefore required them to provide among them such a Prince and Governour, (referring the right of the Kingdom to her self) as were fit and able under her, to have the Regiment of the Land committed. The Turk in the mean while, being elevated and incouraged with his prosperous victories against Sigismundus aforesaid, began then more fiercely to invade Hungary, and those parts of Christendom. Wherefore the Hungarians making the more haste, consulted among themselves to make Duke Uladislaus, Brother to Casimirus King of Polonie, their King.

But while this was in working between the Hungarians and Uladislaus the Duke, in the mean space Elizabeth brought forth a Son called Ladislaus, who being the lawful heir of the Kingdom, the Queen called back again her former word, minding to reserve the Kingdom for her Son, being the true heir thereof, and therefore refuseth Marriage with the said Uladislaus, which she had before pretended. But Uladislaus joyning with a great part of the Hungarians, perfisting still in the condition before granted, would not give over; by reason whereof great contention and division kindling among the people of Hungary, Amaratbes the Great Turk taking his advantage of their discord, and partly surprized with pride of his former succes against Sigismund aforesaid, with his whole main and force invaded the Realm of Hungary; where Huniades, Sirnamed Vaivoda, Prince of Transilvania, joyning with the new King Uladislaus, did both together set against the Turk, Ann. 1444, and there Uladislaus the new King of Hungaria, the fourth year of his Kingdom was slain. Elizabeth with her Son was fled in the mean while to Frederick the Emperor. Of Huniades Vaivoda the Noble Captain, and of his Acts, and also of Ladislaus (Christ willing) more shall be said hereafter, in his time and place.

Fredericus the Third Emperor.

AFter the decease of Albert succeeded in the Empire, Fredericus the Third, Duke of Austria, Ann. 1440. By whom it was procured (as we have before signified) that Pope Felix, Elected by the Council of Basil, did resign his Popedom to Pope Nicholas the Fifth; upon this condition, that the said Pope Nicholas should ratifie the Acts decreed in the said Council of Basil. In the days of this Emperor much War and diffention raged almost thorough all Christian Realms, in Austria, Hungaria, Polonia, in France, in Burgoine, and also here in England, between King Henry the Sixth, and King Edward the Fourth, as ye have already heard; whereby it had been easie for the Turk, with little mastery, to have over-run all the Christian Realms in Europe, had not the Providence of our merciful Lord otherwise provided to keep Amurathes the Turk occupied in other civil Wars at home in the mean while. Unto this Frederick came Elizabeth (as is aforesaid) with Ladislaus her Son; by whom he was nourished and entertained a certain space, till at length, after the death of Uladislaus aforesaid, King of Hungary, (which was slain in Battel by the Turks) the men of Austria, through the instigation of Ulricus Eizingerus, and of Ulricus Earl of Cilicia, rising up in armour, required of Frederick the Emperor, either to give them their young King, or else to stand to his own defence.

Uladislaus K. of Hungary slain in battel by the Turk.

When Frederick heard this, neither would he render to them a fudden answer, neither would they abide any longer delay; and so the matter growing to war, the new City was belieged, where many were slain, and much harm done. At length the Emperors part being the weaker, the Emperor, through the intervention of certain Nobles of Germany, restored Ladislaus into their hands, who being yet under age, committed his three Kingdoms to three Governours; whereof John Huniades, the worthy Captain above mentioned, had the ruling of Hungary: George Pogiebracius had Boheme: and Ulricus the Earl of Cilicia had Austria. Which Ulrice having the chief custody of the King, bare the greateft authority above the reft; a man as full of ambition and tyranny, as he was hated almoft of all the Austrians, and thortly after, by the means of Eizingerus, was excluded allo from the King and the Court, but afterward reftored again, and Eizingerus thruft out. Such is the unftable condition of them which be next in place about Princes. But this contention between them I overpafs.

Ladislaus could not abide the Doctrine of Hus.

Not long after, Ladislaus the young King went to Boheme, there to be Crowned, where George Pogiebracius (as is faid) had the Governance. But Ladislaus during all the time of his being there, though being much requested, yet would neither enter into the Churches, nor hear the fervice of them which did draw after the Doctrin of Hus. Informuch that when a certain Prieſt, in the high Tower of Prague, was appointed and addreſſed, after the manner of Prieſts, to ſay ſervice before the King, being known to hold with John Hus and Rochezana, the King diſdaining at him, commanded him to give place and depart, or elſe he would ſend him down headlong from the rock of the Tower; and ſo the good Miniſter repulſed by the King, departed. Alſo another time the ſaid Ladiſlaus ſeeing the Sacrament carried by a Miniſter of that ſide, whom they called then Huſſites, would do thereunto no reverence. Ex Æn. Sylvio.

At length the long abode of the King, although it was not very long, yet ſeemed to the godly diſpoſed to be longer than they wiſhed; and that was not to the King unknown, which made him to make the more haſte away; but before he departed, he thought firſt to viſit the noble City Uratiſlavia in Schleſia. In the which City the foreſaid King Ladiſlaus being there in the high Church at Service, many great Princes were about him. Among whom was alſo George Pogiebracius, who then ſtood neareſt to the King, unto whom one Chilianus, playing the Paraſite about the King, as the faſhion is of ſuch as begin themſelves fools, to make other men as very fools as they, ſpake in this wiſe as followeth. With what countenance you do behold this our Service I ſee right well, but your heart I do not ſee. Say then, doth not the order of this our Religion ſeem unto you decent and comely? Do you not ſee how many and how great Princes, yea, the King himſelf, do follow one order and uniformity? And why do you then follow rather your Preacher Rochezana than theſe? Do you think a few Bohemians to be more wiſe than all the Church of Chriſt beſides? Why then do you not forſake that rude and ruſtical people, and joyn to theſe Nobles, as you are a Nobleman your ſelf?

Unto whom thus Pogiebracius ſagely again doth anſwer. If you ſpeak theſe words of your ſelf (ſaith he) you are not the man whom you feign your ſelf to be; and ſo to you I anſwer, as not to a Fool. But if you ſpeak this by the ſuggeſtion of others, then muſt I ſatisfie them. Hear therefore, As touching the Ceremonies of the Church, every man hath a conſcience of his own to follow. As for us we uſe ſuch Ceremonies, as we truſt pleaſe God: Neither is it in our arbitrement to believe what we will our ſelves. The mind of man, being perſwaded with great reaſons, is captivated: will he, nill he; and as nature is inſtructed and taught, ſo is ſhe drawn, in ſome one way, and in ſome another. As for my ſelf, I am fully perſwaded in the Religion of my Preachers. If I ſhould follow thy Religion, I might perchance deceive men, going contrary to mine own conſcience, but I cannot deceive God, who ſeeth the hearts of all; Neither ſhall it become me to frame my ſelf to thy diſpoſition. That which is meet for a Peſſer, is not likewiſe convenient for a Nobleman. And theſe words either take to thy ſelf, as ſpoken to thee, if thou be a wiſe man; or elſe I refer them to thoſe which ſet thee on work. Ex Æneas Sylv. in Hiſt. Bohem.

An anſwer proceeding of a Heavenly wiſdom.

After the King was returned from the Bohemians again to Auſtria, the Hungarians likewiſe made their petitions to the King, that he would alſo come unto them. The Governour of Hungary (as ye before have heard) was Johannes Huniades, whoſe victorious acts againſt the Turks are famous. Againſt this Huniades, wicked Ulricus Earl of Cilicia did all he could with the King to bring him to deſtruction, and therefore cauſed the King to ſend for him up to Vienna, and there privily to work his death. But Huniades having thereof intelligence, offereth himſelf within Hungary to ſerve his Prince to all affairs: Out of the land where he was, it was neither beſt (ſaid he) for the King, nor ſafeſt for himſelf to come. The Earl being ſo diſappointed, came down with certain Nobles of the Court to the borders of Hungary, thinking either to apprehend him and bring him to Vienna, or there to diſpatch him. Huniades without in the fields ſaid he would commune with him, within the Town he would not be brought. After that another train alſo was laid for him, that under pretence of the Kings ſafe conduct he ſhould meet the King in the broad fields of Vienna. But Huniades ſuſpecting deceit, came indeed to the place appointed, where he neither ſeeing the King to come, nor the Earl to have any ſafe conduct for him, was moved (and not without cauſe) againſt the Earl, declaring how it was in his power there to ſlay him, which went about to ſeek his blood, but for the reverence of the King he would ſpare him and let him go.

{KING} {Ed. 4.}

Not long after this, the Turk with a great power of fighting men, to the number of an hundred and fifteen thouſand, arrived in Hungary, where he laid ſiege to the City Alba. But through the merciful hand of God, John Huniades, and Capiſtranus a certain Minorite, with a ſmall Garriſon of Chriſtian Souldiers gave him the repulſe, and put him to flight with all his mighty hoſt: Whereof more (Chriſt willing) hereafter. Ex Hiſt. Bohemic. Æn. Sylvio. Huniades ſhortly after this victory deceaſed. Of whoſe death when the King and the Earl did underſtand, they came the more boldly into Hungary, where he being received by Ladiſlaus Huniades Son into the Town of Alba, there viewed the place where the Turks before had pitched their Tents. When this Ladiſlaus heard that the King was coming firſt toward the Town, obediently he opened to him the Gates. Four thouſand only of armed Soldiers he debarred from entring the City.

In the mean time while the King was there reſident in the City, the Earl with other Nobles did ſit in Council, requiring alſo Ladiſlaus to reform unto them; who firſt doubting with himſelf what he might do, at length putteth on a privy coat of Mail, and cometh to them. Whether the Earl firſt began with him, or he with the Earl, it is not known. The opinion of ſome is, that Ulricus firſt called him Traytor, for ſhutting the Gates againſt the Kings Soldiers. Howſoever the occaſion began, this is undoubted, that Ulricus taking his ſword from his Page let fly at his head. To break the blow, ſome putting up their hands had their fingers cut off. The Hungarians hearing a noiſe and tumult within the Chamber, brake it open upon them, and there incontinent flew Ulrick the Earl, wounding and cutting him almoſt all to pieces. The King hearing thereof, although he was not a little diſcontented thereat in his mind: yet ſeeing there was then no other remedy, diſſembled his grief for a time.

Ulricus Earl of Cilicia ſlain.

From thence the King took his journey again to Buda, accompanied with the foreſaid Ladiſlaus; who paſſing by the Town where the Wife of Huniades was mourning for the death of her Husband, feemed with many fair words to comfort her, and after he had there ſufficiently repaſted himſelf, with ſuch pretence of diſſembled love, and fained favour, that they were without all ſuſpition and fear; from thence he fet forward in his journey, taking with him the two Sons of Huniades, Ladiſlaus and Matthias, who were right ready to wait upon him. The King being come to Buda (whether of his own head, or by miniſter counſel fet on) when he had them at a vantage, cauſed both the Sons of Huniades, to wit, Ladiſlaus and Matthias, to be apprehended. And firſt was brought forth Ladiſlaus the elder Son to the place of Execution, there to be Beheaded, where meekly he ſuffered, being charged with no other crime but this, publiſhed by the voice of the Cryer, ſaying, Thus are they to be chaſtned, which are rebels againſt their Lord, Peucerus writing of his death addeth this moreover, That after the Hangman had three blows at his neck, yet notwithſtanding the ſaid Ladiſlaus, having his hands bound behind him, after the third ſtroke roſe upright upon his feet, and looking up to Heaven called upon the Lord, and protefted his innocency in that behalf; and ſo laying down his neck again, at the fourth blow was diſpatched: Matthias the other Brother was led captive with the King into Auſtria. It was not long after this cruelty was wrought upon Ladiſlaus, the King being about the age of twenty and two years, that talk was made of the Kings marriage with Magdalen Daughter to the French King. The place of the Marriage was appointed at Prague, where great preparation was for the matter. At the firſt entrance of the King into the City of Prague, Rochezana with a company of Miniſters, ſuch as were favourers of John Hus, and of ſincere Religion, came with all ſolemnity to receive the King, making there his Oration to gratulate the Kings moſt joyful and proſperous acceſs into the ſame his own Realm and Country of Bohemе. Unto which Rochezana, after he had ended his Oration, ſcarce would the King open his mouth to give thanks to him, or any cheerful countenance unto his Company, but fiercely ſeemed {KING} {Ed. 4.} ſeemed to frown upon them. In the next Pagent after theſe came forth the Prieſts of the high Miniſter, after the moſt Popiſh manner, meeting him with Proceſſion, and with the Sacrament of the Altar: For as Panacea among Phyſicians ſerveth for all diſeaſes, ſo the Sacrament of the Popes Altar ſerveth for all pomps and Pagents. Firſt it muſt lye upon the Altar, then it muſt be holden up with hands, then it muſt hang in the Fixe, it muſt ſerve for the quick, it muſt alſo help the dead, it muſt moreover viſit the ſick, it muſt walk about the Churchyard, it muſt go about the ſtreets, it muſt be carried about the fields to make the graſs to grow, it muſt be had to the battail, it muſt ride on horſeback before the Pope: And finally it muſt welcome Kings into Cities. Wherein theſe Catholick Fathers do ſeem ſomewhat to forget themſelves. For if the Pope being inferior to the Sacrament of the Altar, at the coming of Kings do uſe to fit ſtill while the Kings come and kiſs his feet, what reaſon is it that the Sacrament of the Altar, which is (I trow) above the Pope, ſhould meet Kings by the way, and welcome them to the Town? But this by the way of Parentheſis: Let us now continue the Text.

The Sacrament of the Altar uſed to many purpoſes.

When Ladiſlaus this Catholick King, who had ſhewed himſelf before ſo ſtout and ſtern againſt Rochezana and his company, had ſeen theſe Catholick Prieſts with their Proceſſion, and eſpecially with their bleſſed Sacrament, to come with all reverence and much devotion he lighted down from his Horſe, he embraced the Croſs and kiſſed it, and with chearful countenance ſaluted the Prieſts in order. All this while his young Wife was not yet come out of France, but Legates were ſent, after moſt ſumptuous wiſe, to conduct her. Other Legates alſo were ſent the ſame time to the Emperor Frederick, for concluſion of peace. The third Legacy was directed likewiſe to Pope Calixtus about Religion, how to reduce the Bohemians to the Church of Rome. The Author of this Story (which was Pope Pius himſelf) declareth further the opinion of ſome to be, that King Ladiſlaus the ſame time had intended to make a final end and deſtruction of all that ſect in Bohemia, which held with the Doctrine of John Hus and Hieronme, by the aſſembly and concourſe of the Catholick Princes, and Popiſh Prelates which were appointed there to meet together at that Marriage in Prague. For there ſhould be firſt the Emperor Frederick, Elizabeth the Kings Mother, and his Siſters Elizabeth and Anna, the Princes of Saxony, Bavaria, Sileſia, Francovia, the Palatine, and other Princes of Rhene: many alſo of the Lords of France, beſides the Popes Cardinals, Legates, Prelates, and other Poteſtates of the Popes Church; who if they had altogether converted in Boheme, no doubt but ſome great miſchief had been wrought there againſt the Huſſites; againſt whom this Ladiſlaus, following the ſteps of Sigiſmundus his Grandfather, and Albertus his Father, was ever an utter enemy. But when man hath purpoſed, yet God diſpoſeth as pleaſeth him.

Ex Æneas Sylvio in Hiſt. Bohem.

Governance of Empires and Kingdoms is not in mans power.

Man purpoſeth, and God diſpoſeth. Ex Æneas Sylvio.

And therefore truly it is written of Æneas Sylvius in the ſame place, ſaying, De regimine Civitatum, de mutatione regnorum, de orbis imperio, minimum eſt quod homines poſſint (tum vero de religionis conſtitutione multo minus) magna magnus diſponit Deus. That is, In Regiment of Cities, in alteration of Kingdoms, in ruling and governing the world, it is leſs than nothing that man can do; it is the High God that ruleth high things. Where-unto then I may well add this moreover, and ſay, That if the governance of worldly Kingdoms ſtandeth not in mans power, but in the diſpoſition of God, much leſs is it then that mans power can do in the Regiment and governing of Religion. Example whereof in this purpoſed device of Princes doth evidently appear. For as this great preparation and ſolemnity of Marriage was in doing, and the Princes ready to ſet it forth, with a little turn of Gods holy hand, all theſe great purpoſes were ſuddenly turned and dathed. For in the midſt of this buſineſs, about the one and twentieth day of November, Anno 1461, this great adverſary of Chriſts people, King Ladiſlaus, King of Boheme, of Hungary, and Prince of Auſtria ſickned, and within ſix and thirty hours died; ſome ſay of a Peſtilent ſore in his Groin, ſome ſay of poyſon. But howſoever it was, as it came not without the juſt judgment of God, revenging the innocent blood of Ladiſlaus Huniades Son, wrongfully put to death before; ſo by the opportune death of this King, the poor Churches of Boheme were graciouſly delivered. And this end made Ladiſlaus one of the mightieſt Princes at that time in all Europe; in whom three mighty Kingdoms were conjoyned and combined together, Auſtria, Hungaria, and Bohemia; which Countries do lye South-Eaſt from England, in the fartheſt parts of all Germany, toward Conſtantinople, and the Dominions of the Turks, and contain theſe principal Towns in them.

George Pogiebracius.

Scanbius Hamades.

After the death of Ladislaus, the Kingdom of Boheme fell to George Pogiebracius above mentioned, whom Pope Innocent the Eighth did Excommunicate and depose for his Religion, as is afore declared.

Furthermore the Kingdom of Hungary was given to Matthias Son of Huniades, who was in captivity (as is said) with King Ladislaus, and should have been put to death after his Brother, had not the King before been prevented with death, as is above recorded. Moreover, here is to be noted that the said King Ladislaus thus dying without wife and iſſue, left behind him two Siſters alive, to wit, Elizabeth, which was married to Caſimirus King of Polonie; and Anna, married to William Duke of Saxonie; Elizabeth by her Husband Caſimirus, King of Polonia, had Uladiſlaus, who at length was King of both Boheme and Hungary. This Caſimirus firſt was married to Beatrix, Wife before to Matthias. Then being divorced from her by the diſpenſation of Pope Alexander, he married a new Wife, a Counteſs of France, by whom he had two Children, Lewes and Anna; Lewes which was heir of both Kingdoms, of Boheme and Hungary, was ſlain fighting againſt the Turks. Anna was married to Ferdinandus, by whom he was Archduke of Auſtria, King of Boheme, &c.

War between Maximilian and Frederick, the Emperor.

Ye heard before how after the deceaſe of Ladiſlaus the Hungarians by their Election preferred Matthias, Sirnamed Corvinus, which was Son of Huniades, to the Kingdom of Hungary. For which cauſe diſſention fell between Frederick the Emperor and him, for that the ſaid Frederick was both nominated himſelf by divers unto that Kingdom, and alſo becauſe he had the Crown of Hungary then remaining in his hands, which Elizabeth Mother to King Ladiſlaus had brought to the Emperor, as was before declared. But this war between them was ceaſed by the interceſſion of the Princes of Germany, ſo that Matthias ranſomed that Crown of Frederick for Eight thouſand Florences.

George Pogiebracius depoſed from his Kingdom, for favouring of John Hus.

Not long after, Pope Innocent being diſpleaſed with George Pogiebracius (or Bojebracius) King of Bohemia, for favouring of John Hus and his Religion, that is to ſay, for playing the part of a godly Prince, did Excommunicate and depoſe him, conferring his Kingdom to Matthias. But forſomuch as Frederick the Emperor would not thereto conſent, and eſpecially after the death of the aforeſaid George, when the Emperor and the Bohemians, leaving out Matthias, did nominate Uladiſlaus Son of Caſimirus King of Polonie, and of Elizabeth, to be King of Boheme, therefore great war and trouble kindled between him and Frederick the Emperor. Wherein the Emperor had utterly gone to ruin, had not Albertus Duke of Saxony, reſiſted the Emperor, and repreſſed the vehemency of Matthias.

Albert Duke of Saxony.

The noble acts of John Huniades and of this Matthias his Son, were not only great ſtays to Hungary, but almoſt to all Chriſtendom, in repelling back the Turk. For beſide the other Victories of John Huniades the Father aforementioned, this Matthias alſo his Son ſucceeding no leſs in valiantneſs than in the name of his Father, did ſo recover Sirmium, and the confines of Illyrica, from the hands of the Turks, and ſo vanquiſhed their power, that both Mahometes and alſo Bajazetes his Son were inforced to ſeek for Truce.

The noble acts of John Huniades and Matthias his Son, againſt the Turks, Sirmium & the borders of Illyrica, recovered from the Turks.

Boſna recovered. The fabrile practiſe of Satan to ſtop good proceedings.

Over and beſides, the ſame Matthias conducting his Army into Boſna (which lyeth South from Hungary) recovered again Jaitza, the principal Town of that Kingdom from the Turks poſſeſſion. Who if other Chriſtian Princes had joyned their helps withal, would have proceeded farther into Thracia. But behold here the malicious ſubtilty of Satan, working by the Pope. For while Matthias was thus occupied in this expedition againſt the Turks, wherein he ſhould have been let forward and aided by Chriſtian Princes, and Biſhops; the Biſhop of Rome wickedly and ſinfully miniſteth matter of civil diſcord between him and Pogiebracius aforeſaid, in removing him from the right of his Kingdom, and transferring the ſame to Matthias. Whereupon not only the courſe of victory againſt the Turks was ſtopped, but alſo great war and bloodſhed followed in Chriſtian Realms, as well between this Matthias and Pogiebracius, with his two Sons Victorinus and Henricus, as alſo between Caſimirus Uladiſlaus, and Matthias warring about Uratiſlavia, till at length the matter was taken up by the Princes of Germany.

The Popes Excommunication not obeyed of divers in Bohemia.

Albeit, for all the execrable Excommunication of the Pope againſt Pogiebracius, a great part of Boheme would not be removed from the obedience of their King, whom the Pope had curſed, and depoſed; yet Matthias took from him Moravia, and a great portion of Sileſia, and adjoyned it to his Kingdom of Hungary, Anno 1474.

¶ Where this by the way is to be noted, that the Religion in Bohemia, planted by John Hus, could not be extinguiſhed or ſuppreſſed with all the power of four mighty Princes, Vincellaus, Sigiſmundus, Albertus and Ladiſlaus, notwithſtanding they with the Popes did therein what they poſſibly could; but ſtill the Lord maintained the ſame, as ye ſee by this Pogiebracius King of Boheme, whom the Pope could not utterly remove out of the Kingdom of Bohemia.

{ Anno 1474. } The Raiſing on of the Bohemians defended by God againſt the four greateſt Princes in Europe.

This forementioned Matthias, beſide his other memorable acts of Chivalry, is no leſs alſo commended for his ſingular knowledg and love of Learning and of Learned men, whom he with great Stipends procured into Pannonia; where by the means of good Letters, and furniture of Learned men, he reduced in ſhort ſpace the barbarous rudeneſs of that Country into a flouriſhing Commonwealth. Moreover ſuch a Library he did there erect, and replenish with all kind of Authors, Sciences and Hiſtories, which he cauſed to be tranſlated out of Greek into Latin, as the like is not thought to be found next to Italy, in all Europe beſide. Out of which Library we have received divers fragments of Writers, as of Polybius, and Diodorus Siculus, which were not extant before. Ex Peucer.

The conſtant fortitude alſo of Georgius Pogiebracius, King of Boheme, is not unworthy of commendation; whom alſo Pope Pius himſelf, in Deſcriptione Europæ, doth honeſtly report (as a Pope may ſpeak of a Proteſtant) in theſe words writing, Magnus vir aliquoi, & rebus belli-cis clarus, &c. Who although Pope Innocent did execrate with his Children, yet he left not off the profeſſion of the verity and knowledg which he had received. Moreover, the Lord ſo proſpered his Sons, Victorinus and Henricus, that they ſubdued their enemies, and kept their Eſtate: Inſomuch that when Frederick the Emperor at Vienna was in cuſtody incloſed by the Citizens, Victorinus did reſcue, and deliver him out of their hands. Whereforé the Emperor afterward advanced them to be Dukes. Alſo God gave them ſometimes proſperous victory againſt Matthias, as at the City of Glogovia, &c.

God's favour to the Sons of Pogiebracius.

After the deceaſe of Georgius Pogiebracius King of Boheme, Frederick the Emperor aſſigned that Kingdom, not to Matthias upon whom the Pope had beſtowed it before, but upon Uladiſlaus Son of Caſimirus King of Polonie, Caſimirus and of Elizabeth, Daughter of the Emperor Albert, and Siſter to Ladiſlaus. out of Boheme, and alſo proclaimed war againſt Frederick. But before he accompliſhed his purpoſed preparation, death prevented him, who without iſſue departed, Anno 1490.

After the death of Matthias, departing without iſſue, Uladiſlaus Son of Caſimirus King of Polonie, and of Elizabeth Daughter to Albert Emperor, and Siſter to King Ladiſlaus, married his Wife Beatrix, whom Matthias left a Widow, and with her was Elected King of Hungary, with this condition made between him and Frederick the Emperor, that if he died without lawful iſſue, then the Kingdoms of Hungary and of Boheme ſhould return to Maximilian Son to Frederick. But Uladiſlaus not long after did repudiate his Wife Beatrix, and deprived her of her Kingdom, cauſed the ſaid Beatrix to ſwear and to conſent to his marrying of another woman, which was the Daughter of the French King, named Anne, procuring from Pope Alexander a diſpenſation for the ſame, as is before ſignified. By this Anne Uladiſlaus had Lewis, and Anne, which Anne afterward was married to Ferdinandus.

Of Charles Duke of Burgoyne ſomewhat was before touched, who had married King Edwards Siſter; and what troubles by him were ſtirred up in France, partly was before notified. This Charles after he had beſieged the City Nuſſia, or Noveſium, the ſpace of a whole year, went about to alienate the Territory of Colen from the Empire to his own Dominion: wherefore war began to be moved between him and Frederick the Emperor. At length through communication had, peace was concluded, and a Marriage appointed between Mary the only Daughter of Charles, and Maximilian the Emperors Son, Anno 1475. Then from Noveſium, Charles leadeth his Army toward Helvetia, againſt Renatus, or Reinhardus Duke of Lotharing; then againſt the Helvetians, where he being thrice overcome, firſt at Granſon, then at Moratum, or Murta, in the higher part of Helvetia, at laſt at the Town of Nanſe, was overthrown and ſlain, Anno 1477. The procurer of which wars was chiefly Lewis the 11th, the French King, to the intent he might compaſſe the Dominion of Burgundy under his ſubjection; which afterward by open wrong and privy fraud he brought about, defrauding Mary the Daughter of Charles, of her rightful inheritance; for the which cauſe the Burgundians were the more willing to joyn her Marriage with Maximilian, Son of Frederick the Emperor: by reaſon whereof the Title of Burgundy was firſt joyned to the houſe of Auſtria.

Mary Daughter of Charles of Burgoyn married to Maximilian.

War and diſſention among Chriſtian Princes.

And thus have you the miſerable vexations and contentions among our Chriſtian Princes here in Europe deſcribed, under the reign of this Frederick the Third Emperor, ſo that almoſt no angle or portion of all Chriſtendom (whether we conſider the ſtate of the Church, or Civil Government) was free from diſcord, tumults, and diſſentions. This cankered worm of ambition ſo mightily creepeth, and every where prevaileth in theſe later ends of the world, that it ſuffereth neither reſt in Commonwealth, nor peace in the Church, nor any ſparkle of charity almoſt to remain in the life of men. And what marvel then if the Lord ſeeing us ſo far to degenerate, not only from his precepts and counſels, but almoſt from the ſenſe and bond of nature, that Brother with Brother, Uncle with Nephew, Blood with Blood cannot agree, in ſtriving, killing, and fighting for worldly Dominions, do ſend therefore theſe cruel Turks upon us, ſo to ſcourge and devour us? Of whoſe bloody tyranny and daily ſpilling of Chriſtian blood hereafter (by the Grace of Chriſt) we will diſcourſe more at large, when we come to the peculiar conſideration of the Turkiſh Stories. In the mean time this ſhall be for us to note and obſerve not ſo much the ſcourge how grievous it is; but rather to behold the cauſes which bring the whip upon us, which is our own miſerable ambition and wretched wars among our ſelves.

The diſcord of Chriſtian ſcourged by the Turks.

Diſcord and diſſention in the Church noted.

And yet if this Chriſtian peace and love, left and commended ſo heartily unto us by the mouth of the Son of God, being now baniſhed out of Chriſtian Realms, and Civil Governance, might at leaſt find ſome refuge in the Church, or take Sanctuary among men profeſſing nothing but Religion, leſs cauſe we had to mourn. Now ſo it is, that as we ſee little peace and amity among Civil Potentates; ſo leſs we find in the ſpiritual fort of them, which chiefly take upon them the adminiſtration of Chriſts Church. So that it may well be doubted whether the ſcourge of the Turk, or the civil ſword of Princes have ſlain more in the fields, or the Popes Keys have burnt more in Towns and Cities. And albeit ſuch as be profeſſed to the Church do not fight with Sword and Target for Dominions and Revenues, as warlike Princes do; yet this ambition, pride and avarice, appeareth in them nothing inferior unto other worldly Poteſtates; eſpecially if we behold and adviſe the doings and infatiable deſires of the Court of Rome. Great arguments and proof hereof neither is hard to be found, nor far to be fought, what Realm almoſt through all Chriſtendom hath not only ſeen with their eyes, but have felt in their purſes the ambition intolerable, and avarice inſatiable of that devouring Church, and alſo have complained upon the grievance thereof, but never could be redreſſed? What exactions and extortions have been here in England out of Biſhopricks, Monaſteries, Benefices, Deanries, Archdeaconries, and all other Offices of the Church, to fill the Popes Coffers? and when they had all done, yet every year brought almoſt ſome new invention from Rome to fetch in our Engliſh money; and if all the floods in England (yea in all Europe) did run into the See of Rome, yet were that Ocean never able to be ſatisfied.

Ambition and avarice of the Church of Rome.

¶ In France likewiſe what floods of money were ſwallowed up into this See of Rome? It was openly complained of in the Council of Baſil, as is teſtified by Henry Token, Canon and Ambaſſador of the Archbiſhop of Meidenburge, written in his Book intituled Populari, where he writeth that in the Council of Baſil, Ann. 1436, the Archbiſhop of Lions did declare that in the time of Pope Martin there came out of France to the Court of Rome, Nine Millions of Gold, which was gathered of the Biſhops and Prelates, beſides thoſe which could not be counted of the poor Clergy, which daily without number ran unto the Court of Rome, carrying with them all their whole ſubſtance. The Archbiſhop of Turome ſaid alſo at Baſil, in the year of our Lord 1439, that Three Millions of Gold came unto Rome in his time, within the ſpace of fourteen years, from the Prelates and Prelacies, whereof no account could be made, beſide the poor Clergy which daily run to that Court. Let the man who feareth God judg what a devouring gulf this is; a Million containeth Ten hundred thouſand.

Ex Repoſitorio Henrici Tokeu.

The See of Rome is turned into an Ocean, that hath no bottom.

What a Million is.

And what made Pope Pius the Second to labour ſo earneſtly to Lewis the Eleventh, the French King (who as is aforeſaid was a great enemy to the Houſe of Burgoine) that he would (according to his former promiſe) abliſh and utterly extinguiſh the conſtitution eſtabliſhed before at the Council of Bitures, by King Charles the Seventh his Predeceſſor, called Pragmatica Sanctio; but only the ambition of that See, which had no meaſure, and their avarice which had no end? The ſtory is this, King Charles the Seventh the French King, willing to obey and follow the Council of Baſil, did ſummon a Parliament at Bitures; where by the full conſent of all the States in France, both Spiritual and Temporal, a certain conſtitution was decreed and publiſhed, called Pragmatica Sanctio; wherein was comprehended briefly the pith and effect of all the Canons and Decrees concluded in the Council of Baſil. The which conſtitution the ſaid King Charles willed and commanded through all his Realm inviolably to be obſerved and ratified for the honour and increaſe of Chriſtian Religion for ever. This was Ann. 1438.

Concilium Biturienſe.

Pragmatica Sanctio.

Ex Tom. Mirei Belg. Chronic. & Concilior. Cap. 24.

If followed that after the deceaſe of the foreſaid Charles the Seventh, ſucceeded King Lewis the Eleventh, who had promiſed before, being Dauphin, Pope Pius, that if he ever came to the Crown, the foreſaid Sanctio Pragmatica ſhould be abroliſhed. Whereupon Pius hearing him to be Crowned, did ſend unto him John Balerus a Cardinal, with his great Letters-patent, willing him to be mindful of his promiſe made. The King either willing, or elſe pretending a will to perform, and accomplish that he had promiſed, directed the Popes Letters-patent, with the ſaid Cardinal, to the Council of Paris, requiring them to conſult upon the cauſe.

Pope Pius laboureth that Pragmatica Sanctio ſhould be abroliſhed.

Thus the matter being brought and propofed in the Parliament-Houſe, the Kings Attorney named Joannes Romanus, a man well ſpoken, ſingularly witted, and well reaſoned, ſtepping forth, with great eloquence, and no leſs boldneſs, proved the faid ſanction to be profitable, holy and neceſſary for the wealth of the Realm, and in no caſe to be abolithed. Unto whoſe ſentence the Univerſity of Paris adjoyning their conſent, did appeal from the attempts of the Pope to the next General Council. The Cardinal underſtanding this, took no little indignation thereat, fretting and fuming, and threatning many terrible things againſt them; but all his minatory words notwithſtanding, he returned again to the King, his purpoſe not obtained, Anno 1438. Ex Joan. Mario.

The Council of Pavy appealeth from the Pope to the General Council. Vide ſupra.

Thus the Popes purpoſe in France was diſappointed, which alſo in Germany had come to the like effect, if Frederick the Emperor had there done his part likewiſe toward the Germans; who at the ſame time, bewailing their miſerable eſtate, went about with humble ſuit to perſwade the Emperor, that he ſhould no longer be under the ſubjection of the Popes of Rome, except they had firſt obtained certain things of them as touching the Charter of Appeals; declaring their eſtate to be far worſe, (although undeſerved) than the Frenchmen or Italians, whoſe ſervants (and eſpecially of the Italians) they are worthily to be called, except that their eſtate were altered. The Nobles and Commonalty of Germany did inſtantly intreat with moſt weighty reaſons and examples, both for the utility and profit of the Empire, to have the Emperors aid and help therein, for that which he was bound unto them by an Oath; alledging alſo the great diſhonour and ignominy in that they alone had not the uſe of their own laws, declaring how the French Nation had not made their ſuit unto their King in vain againſt the exactions of Popes, by whom they were defended; which alſo provided Decrees and Ordinances for the liberty of his people, and cauſed the ſame to be obſerved; the which thing the Emperor ought to foreſee within his Empire, and to provide for his People and States of his Empire, as well as other Kings do; for what ſhall come to paſs thereby, if that foreign Nations, having recourſe unto their Kings, being relieved and defended by them from the ſaid Exactions, and the Germans, and States of the Empire flying unto their Emperor, be by him forſaken, or rather betrayed and deprived of their own Laws and Decrees? The Emperor being moved, and partly overcome by their perſwaſions, promiſed that he would provide no leſs for them, than the King of France had done for the Frenchmen, and to make Decrees in that behalf. But the grave authority of Æneas Sylvius, as Platina writeth in the Hiſtory of Pius the ſecond, brake off the matter; who by his ſubtle and peſtiferous perſwaſions, did ſo bewitch the Emperor, that he, contemning the equal, juſt and neceſſary requeſts of his Subjects, choſe the ſaid Æneas to be his Embaſſador unto Calixtus then newly choſen Pope, to ſwear unto him in his name, and to promiſe the abſolute obedience of all Germany, as the only Country (as they call it) of obedience, neglecting the Ordinances and Decrees of their Country, as before he had done unto Eugenius the 4th, being Embaſſador for the ſaid Frederick, promiſing that he and all the Germans would be obedient unto him from henceforth in all matters, as well ſpiritual as temporal.

The complaint of the Germans to the Emperor, for help and aid againſt the oppreſſion of the Pope.

Thus twice Frederick of Auſtrich contemned and deſpiſed the Germans, and fruſtrating them of their native Decrees and Ordinances, brought them under ſubjection and bondage of the Pope; which partly was the cauſe that ſeven years before his death, he cauſed his Son Maximilian, not only to be choſen, but alſo crowned King of Romans, and did aſſociate him to the miniſtration of the Empire, left after his death (as it came to paſs) the Empire ſhould be tranſported into another Family, ſuſpecting the Germans, whom he had twice contrary to his Laws made ſubject, and in bondage unto the Popes Exactions; firſt before he was crowned in the time of Eugenius the fourth; and again, the ſecond time after his Coronation, and death of Pope Nicholas the fifth, denying their requeſts. Whereupon Germany being in this miſerable poverty and grievous ſubjection under the Popes tyranny and pollings with tears and ſighs lamenting their eſtate, continued ſo almoſt unto Luther's time; as the Hiſtories hereafter following do teſtifie.

Frederick made the Germans twice ſubject unto the Pope.

And here ceaſing with the ſtory of Frederick, we will now proceed to the Reign of Maximilian his ſon, omitting divers things elſe incident in the time of this Emperor; as firſt touching the unbrotherly contention and conflicts between this Frederick and Albertus his Brother, and Sigiſmundus his Uncle, for the Dukedom of Auſtria, after the death of Matthias afore mentioned. Omitting alſo to ſpeak of the long and cruel War between the Pruſſians and Polonians, with the religious Sect of them; which were called Tentones fratres ſanctæ Mariæ, in the time of Uladiſlaus: Omitting alſo the ſtrife and variance for the Dukedom of Millain, between Fredericus the Emperor, Alphonſus, Carolus Duke of Orleance, and Franciſcus Sforcia; And how the ſaid Princedom being after given to Sforcia, great Wars were kindled and long continued between Sforcia and the Milleners, then between the Milleners and Venetians, and after between the Frenchmen and the Milleners. All which tumults and commotions, as not pertinent greatly to the purpoſe of this ſtory, I refer to other Writers, where they are to be found more amply diſcourſed.

{KING {Ed. 4.} Frederick, Albertus his Brothers, and Sigiſmund ſtrive for the Dukedom of Auſtria. War between Franciſcus Sforcia and the Venetians about Millain. War between Lewis the French K. and the City of Millain.

This as more properly belonging to the ſtory of the Church, I thought good not to paſs over, touching ſuch as were condemned, and ſuffered the pains of fire for teſtimony of Chriſt and his Truth. Of whom one was John a Paſtor or a Neat-herd, which was a keeper of Cattel: The other was Joannes de Weſalia, although not burned, yet perſecuted near to death, under the Reign of this Emperor Fredericus the 3d.

And firſt touching this John the Neat-herd, thus writeth Sebaſt. Munſterus, That the Biſhop of Herbipolis condemned and burned for an Heretick one John, which was a Keeper of Cattel at a Town called Nicholas Hauſen in Franconia, becauſe he taught and held that the life of the Clergy was ignominious and abominable before God. Ex Munſter.

John Neat-herd of Franconia Martyr. {Anno 1476.

The other was Doctor Joannes Weſalia, who was complained upon unto Dietherus the Archbiſhop of Mentz, by the Thomiſts, upon certain Articles and Opinions gathered out of his Books. Wherefore the ſaid Dietherus fearing elſe to be depoſed again from his Biſhoprick, directeth forth Commiſſion to the Univerſities of Heidelburgh and Colen, to have the matter in examination; who converting together the year above mentioned, called this Doctor de Weſalia before them, making him to ſwear that he ſhould preſent and give up all his Treatiſes, works and writings, whatſoever he had made or preached; that being done, they divided his Books amongſt themſelves, ſeverally every man to find out what Hereſies and Errors they could. His Articles and Opinions are theſe:

John de Weſalia perſecuted by {Anno 1479

That all men be ſaved freely, and through meer grace by faith in Chriſt. Free will to be nothing. That we ſhould only believe the Word of God, and not the Gloſs of any Man, or Fathers. That the Word of God is to be expounded with the collation of one place with another. That Prelates have no authority to make Laws, nor to expound the Scriptures, by any peculiar right given unto them more than to another. That mens Traditions, as Faſtings, Pardons, Feaſts, long Prayers, Peregrinations and ſuch like, are to be rejected. Extream Unction and Confirmation to be reproved; Confeſſion and Satisfaction to be reprehended. The Primacy of the Pope alſo be affirmed to be nothing.

The Articles and Opinions of J. de Weſal. Free-will nothing. Prelates have no more power over Scriptures than other men. Extream Unction reproved. Againſt the primacy of the Pope.

Certain other Articles alſo were gathered out of him by his adverſaries, but in ſuch ſort, that they may ſeem rather to follow their own malicious gathering, than true intelligence of his mind, whereof more is to be underſtood in this proceſs hereafter.

Thus when Weſelianus was commanded to appear, there convented together firſt the Archbiſhop, the Inquiſitor, the Doctors of Colen, and the Doctors of Heidelburg, with the Maſters of the ſame, and the Rector of the Univerſity of Mentz, the Dean of Faculties, Bachelors of Divinity, and many other Maſters of the ſame Univerſity, Canons, Doctors, with the Biſhops Chancellor, and his Counſellors, beſides many religious Prelates, Scholars, with a Doctor of Francfort, the Sumner and Bedles, which all met together in the great Hall of the Minorites, for the examination of this Jo. de Weſalia.

The Inquiſitor ſpeaks.

Frier Elton the Inquiſitor firſt ſitteth in the higheſt place, then after him, others according to their degree. In the beginning of the Examination, firſt the Inquiſitor be-

{KING {Ed. 4.} beginneth with theſe words, Moſt Reverend Fathers, and honourable Doctors, &c. Our reverend Father and Prince Elector hath cauſed this preſent Convocation to be called, to hear the examination of Maſter John de Weſalia, in certain ſuſpected Articles concerning the Catholick Faith. But ſomething I will ſay before, that may do him good, and deſire that two or three of them that favour him, or ſome other, will riſe up and give him counſel to forſake and leave his errors, to recognize himſelf, and to ask pardon; which if he will do, he ſhall have pardon; if he will not, we will proceed againſt him without pardon. And thus Weſelianus being cited, and brought in the midſt betwixt two Alphonſus, being very aged, and having a ſtaff in his hand, was ſet before the Inquiſitor. Who beginning to anſwer for himſelf with a long proteſtation, could not be ſuffered to proſecute his Oration, but was cut off, and required briefly to make an end, and to tell them in few words, whether he would ſtand to his opinions, or to the determination of the Church. To this he anſwered, that he never ſpake any thing againſt the determination of the Church, but ſaid, That he had written diverſe and ſundry Treatiſes, in the which if he had erred, or were found to ſay otherwiſe than well, he was contented to revoke and call back the ſame, and do all things that were requiſite. Then ſaid the Inquiſitor, Do you ask then pardon? The other anſwered, Why ſhould I ask pardon, when I know no crime or error committed? The Inquiſitor ſaid, Well, we will call you to the remembrance thereof, and proceed to the Examination.

John of Weſalias brought before the Prelates.

The cruel proceeding of the Inquiſitor.

In the mean time, others called upon him inſtantly to ask pardon. Then ſaid Weſalianus, I ask pardon. Notwithſtanding the Inquiſitor proceeded to the Examination, reading there two Inſtruments, declaring that he had authority from the Apoſtolick See; after this, he cited the ſaid John to appear to his Examination. Thirdly, he commanded him under pain of diſobedience, in the vertue of the Holy Ghoſt, and under pain of Excommunication of the greater Curſe (from the which no man could abſolve him, but only the Pope, or the Inquiſitor, except only at the point of death) to tell plainly the truth upon ſuch things as ſhould be demanded of him concerning his faith, without ambages and ſophiſtication of words. And ſo being demanded firſt whether he did believe upon his Oath taken, that he was bound to tell the truth, although it were againſt himſelf or any other; To this he anſwered, Scio, that is, I know. Then the Inquiſitor biddeth him ſay, Credo, that is, I believe. To which he anſwered again, What need I ſay that I believe that thing which I know? There the Inquiſitor ſomething ſtirred with the matter, as hot as a Toaſt (as they ſay) cried with a loud voice, Maſter Joannes, Maſter Joannes, Maſter Joannes, ſay Credo, ſay Credo; then he anſwered, Credo.

The greater curſe of the people. Scio. Credo.

After this, being demanded whether he had written any Treatiſe, concerning the binding of humane Laws, to one Nicholas of Boheme; and whether he had written any Treatiſe of the Eccleſiaſtical power of Indulgences and Pardons, and of Faſting and other Treatiſes; he anſwered, That he believed that he had ſo written, and had conferred with divers learned men's alſo, That he had ſent to the Biſhop of Worms a certain Treatiſe of Faſting.

His opinion of the Sacrament.

Many other interrogatories were minuted unto him, whereof ſome were vain, ſome falſe. Such as were more principal, here we will briefly touch, leaving out ſuperfluities.

Being demanded whether he was a Fautor of the Bohemians, he ſaid, he was not. Alſo, being demanded concerning the Sacrament of the holy Body and Blood of our Lord, whether he thought Chriſt there to be contained really, or only divinely, and whether he did believe in the ſaid Sacrament, the ſubſtance of Bread there to remain, or only the form thereof; To this he anſwered, not denying but the Body of Chriſt was there really contained, and alſo that the Body of Chriſt the ſubſtance of Bread did remain.

His opinion of Monks and Nuns. The vow of Chaſtity.

After this, he was demanded his Opinion concerning Religious Men, as Monks, Nuns or Begwines, whether he thought them to be bound to the Vow of Chaſtity, or to the keeping of any other Vow, and whether he ſaid to the Friers Minorites any ſuch word in effect, I cannot ſave you in this your ſtate and Order. This he confeſſed that he had ſaid, how that not your Religion ſaveth you, but the grace of God, &c. not denying but they might be ſaved.

Item, Being required whether he believed, or had written, that there is no mortal ſin, but which is expreſſ to be mortal in the Canon of the holy Bible; To this he anſwered, that he did ſo believe as he hath written, till he wax better informed. Likewiſe, being required what he thought of the Vicar of Chriſt in earth, he anſwered, That he believed that Chriſt left no Vicar in earth; for the confirmation whereof he alledged and ſaid, That Chriſt aſcending up to Heaven, ſaid Ecce ego vobiſcum ſum, &c. Behold I am with you, &c. In the which words he plainly declared, that he would ſubſtitute under him no Vicar here in earth; Chriſt left no Vicar in earth. in the abſence of the Principal hath to do the works of the Principal, then Chriſt hath no Vicar here in earth.

Mortal ſin. Found by the Pope beſide that which is expreſſed to be mortal in the Scripture.

What is this Article, but to make the Pope a God?

In like manner, concerning Indulgences and Pardons, ſuch as the Church doth uſe to give, they demanded of him, whether they had any efficacy, and what he thought thereof; who anſwered again, That he had written a certain Treatiſe of that matter, and what he had written in that Treatiſe he would perſiſt therein, which was thus, That he believed that the treaſure-box of the merits of Saints could not be diſtributed of the Pope to others, becauſe that Treaſure is not left here in earth, for ſoit is written in the Apocalyps, Opera enim illorum ſequuntur illos, &c. that is, their works follow them.

Pardons and Indulgences be of no effect.

The treaſure of Saints merits is not in earth

Item, That their Merits could not be applied to other men, for the ſatisfaction of their pain due unto them; and therefore that the Pope and other Prelates, cannot diſtribute that treaſure to men.

It was objected to him moreover, that in the ſaid his Treatiſe he called Pardons and Indulgences, Pias fraudes fidelium, that is, holy fraud's and deceits of the faithful.

This ſaying was taken out of one Caeſar Baronius, which was wont to ſay, that Pardons were holy deceits, becauſe that lay-men were provoked, by naughty deſerts, to give good alms.

Alſo being demanded what he thought of the hallowing and bleſſing of Altars, Chalices, Veſtments, Wax-Candles, Palms, Herbs, Holy-water, and other divine things, &c. He anſwered, That they had no ſpiritual vertue and power in them to drive away Devils, and that Holy-water hath no more efficacy than other water not hallowed, as concerning remiſſion of venial ſins, and driving away Devils, and other effects, which the School Doctors do attribute to it.

Item, For degrees of Marriage forbidden in the Scriptures, he believeth, That all Chriſtian men under deadly ſin are bound unto the ſame.

Degrees in Scripture forbidden to marry.

Item, That he believeth, That God may give grace to a man, having the uſe of reaſon, without all motion of free will. Alſo he thinketh, that Saint Paul in his Converſion did nothing of his own free will for his Converſion. He believeth moreover, That God may give ſuch grace to a man having the uſe of reaſon, not doing that which in him is.

Nothing to be believed, but which is in Scripture contained.

Item, He affirmed, That nothing is to be believed which is not contained in the Canon of the Bible.

Alſo, That the Elect are ſaved only by the grace of God.

Beſides all theſe, moreover he was charged with the old Opinion of the Grecians, which they did hold contrary to the Roman Church, unto the time of the Council of Ferraria above mentioned, concerning the proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt.

The Church giveth witneſs who were the Writers of the Scriptures, but hath no authority above which is written.

The Wedneſday next following, three Doctors, the Suffragan, Herwicus and Jacobus Sprenger, were ſent unto him, with perſwations to exhort him; and when he would not ſtand to their Canons, whereby they went about to refute his Doctrine, he, was then demanded of Herwicus, why he would believe rather the four Evangeliſts, than the Goſpel of Nicodemus? To whom he anſwered, becauſe he would. Being asked again why he believed the four Evangeliſts, he ſaid, becauſe he ſo received of his Parents. Then being demanded, why he would not believe the Doctors; becauſe (ſaid he) their Doctrine is not Canonical Scripture. Again, it was to him objected, why he would be credited himſelf when he preached, ſeeing he would not believe the holy Doctors? To whom he anſwered in this wiſe, ſaying, That he did preach as his duty was; but whether they gave credit to his words, he did not care.

This Examination being ended, after theſe Articles were condemned by the Inquiſitor and his Aſſiſtants, then ſaid he after this manner, As you do with me, if Chriſt himſelf were here, he might be condemned as an Heretick.

By this Inquiſition, Chriſt himſelf might be condemned.

After

After this they fent divers to him to have communication with him, and to perfwade him, fending alfo to him, with his Articles, a form of asking pardon; at length, within three or four days after, he was content to condefcend unto them, and to fubmit himfelf to their holy Mother Church, and the information of the Doctors. In the Book of Ordinaire Gratitat, and in Paralipomena, adjoyned to Abbas Urfpergenfis Gratitat, we read thefe words written of this Joannes de Weſalia, Dempto ſolo articulo de proceſſione ſpiritus ſancti in aliis videtur non ita grave cenſura, &c. That is, Except only the Article of the proceeding of the Holy Ghoſt, in other Articles it ſeemeth that he was not to be chaſtned with ſo ſharp cenſure, if raſhnie and ſpace had been given him, if good counſellors had been about him, if all they which did accuſe and molest him had not been de via veritatis, as Thomiſts, that is, of the Sect of Thomas; which Thomiſts were ſet at that time againſt the other Sect of the Seculars, which were called Nominales, and therefore they ſo ſtirred this Doctor, becauſe he did not hold with their Thomas, againſt whom otherwiſe (had it not been for that cauſe) they would never have been ſo fierce and malicious in proceeding againſt him. I take God to witneſs, which knoweth all things, that this Proceſs which was made againſt him, for his revoking and burning of his Books, did greatly diſpleaſe Maſter Engeline of Brumfwick, a great Divine, and alſo, Maſter John Keifersburg, being both learned and famous men; but namely Maſter Engeline thought, that too much malice and raſhneſs was ſhewed in handling of that ſame man, and did not fear to ſay, That many of his Articles, and the greater part thereof, might be holden well enough, and greatly blamed the mad and phantaſtical diſſention of the Thomiſts, ſeeking by all manner of ways how to get the triumph over the Secular Divines, &c. Hæc ille.

Although this aged and feeble old man by weakneſs was conſtrained to give over unto the Romiſh Clergy by outward profeſſion of his mouth; yet notwithſtanding, his Opinions and Doctrine declared his inward heart, of what judgment he was, if fear of death preſent had not inforced him to fay otherwiſe than he did think. Again, although he had revoked after their minds, yet we read no ſuch form of Recantation to be preſcribed to him to read openly unto the People, as the uſe is here in England. This ſtory of this man is more fully to be found in the Books of Orth. Gratius, &c.

As touching the Reign of this Frederick Emperor, ſeeing we have comprehended hitherto ſufficiently the moſt principal matters in his time incurrent, we will now paſs forward (the Lord guiding us) to Maximilian, after I have firſt given a brief Memorandum of three valiant Princes and Captains, flouriſhing in the ſame time of this Frederick in Germany: Of the which, one was Albert Duke of Saxony; who for his renowned and famous acts, was called by publick voice, Dextra manus Imperii, The right hand of the Empire. The other was Albert, Marqueſs of Brandenburgh, to whom alſo the name was attributed, named of Pope Pius to be Achilles Germanicus. The third was Frederick Earl Palatine, ſirnamed Victoriofus, who manfully defended the Freedom and Majeſty of the Empire, from the fraudulent oppreſſions of the Popes tyranny.

In the year of our Lord 1484, in this Emperors time died Pope Sixtus the fourth, a little before touched, a Monſter rather of Nature, than a Prelate of the Church. Of him writeth Platina, that unjuſtly he vexed all Italy with war and diſſention. Agrippa writing of him ſaith, That among all the Bawds of theſe our later days, which were builders of Brothel-houſes, this Pope Sixtus the 4th, ſurmounted all other; who at Rome erected a Stews of double abomination, not only of Women, but alſo, &c. whereupon no ſmall gain redounded to his Coffers. For every ſuch common Harlot in Rome paid him a July piece, the ſumm whereof grew in the year, ſome while to 20000, at length to 4000 Duckets. Whereunto accordeth right well the Epitaph of John Sapidus, which in the end hereof we will annex.

John Carion alſo, ſpeaking of this Biſhop, witneſſeth him to be a man rather born to War than to Religion. For he warred againſt Vitellius, Tiphernates, againſt the Florentines, the Venetians, whom he excommunicated, and did not abſolve till he died; alſo againſt Columnenſis, againſt Ferdinandus King of Apulia, and Duke of Calabria alſo againſt other Nation and Princes more. Ex Joan. Lanzardo.

Of the ſaid Pope it is recorded, that he was a ſpecial Patron and Tutor to all Begging-Friers, granting them to have and enjoy Revenues in this World, and in the World to come everlaſting life. Among the which Friers there was one named Alanus de rupe, a black Frier, which made the Roſary of our Ladies Pſalter (ſo they term it) and erected a certain new fraternity upon the ſame, called Fraternitas Coronarium, pertaining to the Order of the Dominicks, of the which Order Jacobus Sprenger, one of the condemners of Joannes de Weſalia above mentioned, was a great advancer, and eſpecially this Pope Sixtus the fourth, who gave to the ſaid Fraternities large graces and priviledges.

A large gift of the Pope to the begging Friers. Alanus author of our Ladys Pſalter.

Concerning the Inſtitution of this Roſary, there was a Book ſet forth about the year of our Lord 1480. In the beginning whereof is declared, That the bleſſed Virgin entred into the Cell of this Alanus, and was ſo familiar with him, that not only ſhe did eſpouſe him to her Husband, but alſo kiſſed him with her heavenly mouth, and alſo for more familiarity opened to him her Pap, and powred great plenty of her own milk into his mouth. For the confirmation whereof the ſaid Alanus this holy Babe (ſaith the ſtory) did ſwear deeply, curſing himſelf, if it were not thus as he had made relation.

Then had the bleſſed Virgin Mary a ſtepfonne.

This fabulous figment when I read in the Centuries of John Bale, I began with my ſelf to miſtruſt the credit thereof, and had thought not to trouble the Reader with ſuch incredible Forgeries. But as the Providence of God worketh in all things, ſo alſo it appeared in this, that the very ſame Book came to my hands at the writing hereof, wherein this ſelf ſame narration is contained, wherein I found not only this to be true, which in John Bale is expreſſed, but alſo found in like manner another wonder as prodigious as this; where in another place not far off, it is ſtoried in the ſame Book, how that about the time of Saint Dominick; there was a certain Matron in Spain, named Lucia, which being taken Captive by the Saracens, having her Huſband killed, was carried great with Child into the Turkiſh Land.

When the time of her labour came, ſhe being left deſolate among Beaſts and Hogs, and remembring this twice holy Roſary; (firſt inſtituted, ſaith the Book, by Saint Dominick, and afterward renewed by Alanus) eſtſoons the holy Virgin was ready and ſtood by her, and received the Child at her travel, ſupplying all the parts of a diligent Midwife; and moreover cauſing a Prieſt ſuddenly to appear, ſhe gave the Child to be Chriſtened, calling it after her own name, Marianus; and ſo was the Wife to Alanus, Midwife to Lucia, and Godmother to Marianus. Which ſtory if it be true, then is the Popes Canon by this example to be controlled, which permitteth Midwives in time of neceſſity to baptiſe, ſeeing the bleſſed Virgin, playing the part her ſelf of a Midwife, durſt not baptiſe this Child without a Prieſt.

If followeth more in the ſtory, that by the help of the ſaid bleſſed Virgin, this Lucia our Ladies Goſſip, after her Purification, was reſtored with her Child ſafe to her Country again. This Book, being in Latine and printed, beareth this Title Roſacea Auguſtiſſimæ Chriſtiferæ Mariæ Eu Latins Codice impreſſi, cui titulus, Roſacea Mariæ Coronæ.

But leaving here Pope Sixtus with his Verſes and Vices, let us now proceed, as we before promiſed, to enter the ſtory of Maximilian, keeping notwithſtanding, the order of our Kings here in England. For a little before the Reign of Maximilian, King Edward the fourth ceaſed his life, Anno 1483. after he had Reigned twenty two years. In the time of which King Edward this alſo is not to be forgotten, that one Burdet, a Merchant dwelling in Cheapſide, at the Sign of the Crown, which is now the Sign of the Flower-de-luce, merrily ſpeaking to his Son, ſaid that he would make him inheritor of the Crown, meaning indeed his own Houſe. For the which words, King Edward cauſing them to be miſconſtrued, and interpreted as though he had meant the Crown of the Realm, within leſs ſpace than four hours, he was apprehended, judged, drawn and quartered in Cheapſide.

King EDWARD the Fifth.

K. Edward the Fifth.

THIS King Edward left behind him by his Wife Elizabeth, two Sons, Edward and Richard, and two Daughters, Elizabeth and Cecile. Which two Sons Edward and Richard, forſomuch as they were under Age, and not ripe to govern, a Conſultation was called among the Peers, to debate whether the aforeſaid young Prince and King, ſhould be under the government of his Mother, or elſe that Richard Duke of Glocester, Brother to King Edward the fourth, and Uncle to the Child, ſhould be Governor of the King, and Protector of the Realm, there hath been and is an old Adage, the words whereof, rather than the true meaning, wreſted out of Solomon, Væ Regno cujus Rex eſt puer, &c. i. Wo to the Kingdom, the King whereof is a Child, &c. But if I may find leave herein to thruſt in a Gloſs, I would add this, and ſay, Væ illi puero, qui ſui Regni Rex non eſt. i. Wo to that child, which is a King in a Kingdom unruly and ambitious. There was the ſame ſeaſon, among other noble Peers of the Realm, the Duke of Buckingham, a man of great authority, who had married King Edward's Wives Siſter. Becauſe the Duke being ſo near allied to the King, had been unkindly (as he thought) of the King entreated, having by him no advancement, nor any great friendſhip ſhewed, according to his expectation, he took part therefore with Richard Duke of Glocester, both againſt the Queen and her children, to make the foreſaid Duke the chief Governor and Protector. The which thing being brought to paſs, by the aid, aſſiſtance and working of the Duke of Buckingham, the Queen took Sanctuary with her younger Son (the elder Brother, which was the King, remaining in the cuſtody of the Duke of Glocester, his Uncle. Who, being now in a good towardneſs to obtain that which he had long looked for, fought all the means, and ſoon compaſſed the matter, by falſe colour of diſſembled words, by perjury, and labour of friends, namely of the Duke of Buckingham, and the Cardinal Archbiſhop of Canterbury, that the other Brother alſo ſhould be committed to his credit. Thus the ambitious Protector and unnatural Uncle, having the poſſeſſion of his two Nephews, and innocent Babes, thought himſelf almoſt up the Wheel where he would climb; although he could not walk in ſuch miſts and clouds, but his deviſed purpoſes began to be eſpied; which cauſed him more covertly to go about to remove from him all ſuſpicion, and to blind the peoples eyes. But before he could accompliſh his execrable enterpriſe, ſome there were whom he thought firſt muſt be rid out of the way, as namely the Lord Haſtings, and the Lord Stanley; who as they were ſitting together in Council within the Tower, the Protector (the matter being ſo appointed before) ſuddenly ruſhed in among them, and after a few words there communed, he ſuddenly halted out again, his mind belike being full of miſchief and fury, was not quiet. Who within the ſpace of an hour returned again into the Chamber, with a ſtern countenance and a frowning look, and ſo there fate down in his place. When the Lords were in great marvel and muſe at the meaning hereof, then he out of a cankered heart thus began to bray, asking them, What are they worthy to have, which go about to imagine the deſtruction of him being ſo near to the Kings Bloud, and Protector of the Realm? At the which queſtion as the other Lords fate muſing, the Lord Haſtings, becauſe he had been more familiar with him, thus anſwered, That they were worthy of puniſhment, whatſoever they were. Which when the other Lords alſo had affirmed; that is (quoth the Protector) yonder Sorcereſs, my Brothers Wife, meaning the Queen and other with her; adding moreover, and ſaying, That Sorcereſs and other of her Council, as Shore's Wife with her affinity, have by their Witchcraft thus waſted my body, and therewith ſhewed forth his left Arm, a wearith withered thing, as it was never otherwiſe, as was well known.

The deſtruction of him being ſo near to the King's Bloud, and Protector of the Realm?

The devil-like Protector picketh quarrels.

The Queen and Shore's Wife falſly accuſed of the Protector to be witch his Arm.

This Shore's Wife had been before a Concubine to King Edward, and afterward was kept by the ſame Lord Haſtings. Moreover, here is to be noted, that by the conſent of the ſaid Lord Haſtings, the cruel Protector had deviſed about the ſame time, the Kindred of the Queen innocently to be beheaded at Pomfret, of meer ſpight and hatred. Wherefore, this puniſhment not undeſervedly, by the juſt hand of God, fell upon the Lord Haſtings.

Adultery puniſhed of God.

Murder juſtly puniſhed of God.

It followeth then more in the ſtory, that when the Lord Haſtings had heard of theſe falſe accuſations of the Tyrant, which he knew to be untrue; Certainly (my Lord) ſaid he, if they have ſo done, they be worthy of heinous puniſhment. Why, quoth the Protector, doſt thou ſerve me with if and with and? I tell thee, they have ſo done, and that I will make good on thy body, Traytor; and therewith giving a great rap on the Board (for a token or a watch-word) one cried Treaſon within the Chamber was full of armeſſed men. The Protector then approaching to the Lord Haſtings, arreſted him as a Traytor. Another let fly at the Lord Stanley; who to avoid the blow, ſhrunk under the Table, or elſe his Head had been cleft aſunder; notwithſtanding he received ſuch a wound, that the bloud ran about his ears. There were in that Council the ſame time the Archbiſhop of York, and Doctor Morton Biſhop of Ely, (by whoſe procurement afterward King Henry the Seventh was ſent for into England, and he made Archbiſhop and that of Canterbury) theſe with the Lord Stanley diverſly were beſtowed in divers Chambers. The Lord Haſtings was commanded to ſpeed and ſhrieve him apace, for before Dinner the Protector ſware by Saint Paul that he ſhould die; and ſo incontinently, without further judgment, his Head was ſtricken off, by whoſe counſel the Queens Kindred were at the ſame time and day beheaded at Pomfret.

The tyranny of the Protector.

The Lord Haſtings beheaded.

After this tyrannous Murder accompliſhed, the miſchievous Protector aſpiring ſtill to the Crown, to ſet his devices forward, firſt through gifts and fair promiſes, did ſuborn Doctor Shaw a famous Preacher then in London, at Paul's Croſs to infinuate to the people, that neither King Edward with his Sons, nor the Duke of Clarence were lawfully begotten, nor the very Children of the Duke of York, but begotten unlawfully by other perſons in Adultery on the Dutcheſs their Mother, and that he alone was the true and only lawful Heir of the Duke of York. Moreover, to declare and to ſignifie to the audience, that King Edward was never lawfully married to the Queen, but his Wife before was Dame Elizabeth Lucy, and ſo the two Children of King Edward to be baſe and Baſtards, and therefore the Title of the Crown moſt rightly to pertain unto the Lord Protector. Thus this falſe flatterer and loud lying Preacher, to ſerve the Protectors humour, ſhamed not moſt impudently to abuſe that holy Place, that reverend Auditory, the ſacred Word of God, taking for his Theme, Sapi. 4. Adulteræ plantationes non dabunt radices altas, &c. which he he most impiously did apply against the innocent Children, and right Heirs of the Realm. Whereupon such grudge and disdain of the people with worldly wonder followed him, that for fhame of the people crying out of him, in few days after he pined away.

The Duke of Buckingham another Minister for the Protectors fury.

When this Sermon would take no effect with the people, the Protector, unmercifully drowned in ambition, refused not thus, but within a few days after excited the Duke of Buckingham, first to break the matter in covert talk to the Mayor and certain Heads of the City picked out for the purpose; that done, to come to the Guildhall, to move the people by all flattering and lying perswations to the same, which shamefully Shaw before had preached at Pauls Cross. Which the Duke with all diligence and helps of eloquence, being a man both learned and well spoken, endeavoured to accomplish, making to the people a long and artificial Oration, suppoling no less, but that the people, allured by his crafty insinuations, would cry, King Richard, King Richard. But there was no King Richard in their mouths, less in their hearts. Whereupon the Duke looking to the Lord Mayor, and asking what this silence meant, contrary to the promise of the one, and the expectation of the other; it was then answered of the Lord Mayor, that the people peradventure well understood him not: wherefore the Duke, reiterating his narration in other words, declared again that he had done before. Likewise the third time he repeated his Oration again and again. Then the Commons which before stood mute, being now in amaze, feeing this opportunity, began to mutter softly among themselves, but yet no King Richard could found in their lips, fave only that in the nether end of the Hall, certain of the Dukes servants, with one Nashfield, and other belonging to the Protector, thrusting into the Hall among the Prease, began suddenly at mens backs to cry King Richard, King Richard, throwing up their Caps, whereat the Citizens turning back their heads, marvelled not a little, but said nothing.

The Duke of Buckingham speaketh for the Protector in Guildhall.

An hard thing to make the tongue forge against the heart.

A stoln consent in the Guildhall.

The Duke and the Lord Mayor with that side, taking this for sufficient testimony, incontinent came blowing for haste to the Protector, then lying at Baynards Castle. Where the matter being made before, was now so contrived, that forsooth humble petition was made in the name of the whole Commons, and that with three sundry sutes, to the humble and simple Protector, That he, although it was utterly against his will to take it, yet would of his humility stoop to low, as to receive the heavy Kingdom of England upon his shoulders. At this their tender request and sute of the Lords and Commons made (ye must know how) the mild Duke, seeing no other remedy, was contented at length to yield, although fore against his will (ye must so imagine) and to submit himself so low, as of a Protector to be made King; not much herein unlike to our Prelates in the Popish Church, who when they have before well compounded for the Popes Bulls, yet must they for manner take make courtesie, and thrice deny that for which they so long before have gaped, and so sweetly have payed for.

Fie of hypocrisie.

The hypocrisie of the Protector, denying the Crown thrice before he would take it.

King RICHARD the Third, Usurper.

K. Richard, Usurper.

AND thus Richard Duke of Glocester took upon him to be made and Proclaimed King of England, the year aforesaid, Anno 1483. in the Month of June. Who then coming to the Tower by Water, first made his Son, a child of ten year old, Prince of Wales, and John Howard (a man of great industry and service) he advanced to be Duke of Northfolk, and Sir Thomas Howard his Son he ordained Earl of Surry. Also William Lord Barkley was appointed Earl of Nottingham. Francis Lord Lovel was made Viscount Lovel. Lord Stanley for fear of his Son was delivered out of the Tower, and made Steward of the Kings Houthold. Likewise the Archbishop of York was set free; but Morton Bishop of Ely was committed to the Duke of Buckingham, by whom was wrought the first device to bring in Henry Earl of Richmond into England, and to conjoyn Marriage between Elizabeth King Edward's Daughter and him, whereby the two Houses of York and Lancaster were united together.

After the Kingdom of England was thus alotted to King Richard the Usurper, as in manner above remembred, she tarried not long for his Coronation, which was solemnized the Month next ensuing, the sixth day of July.

KING Rich. 3.

K. Richard crowned.

The triumph and solemnity of his usurped Coronation being finished, and all things to the same appertaining, this unquiet Tyrant yet could not think himself safe, so long as young Edward the right King and his Brother were alive; wherefore the next enterprise which he did set upon was this, how to rid those innocent Babes out of the way, that he might reign King alone.

In the mean time, while all this ruffling was in hand, what dread and sorrow the tender hearts of these fatherless and friendless children were in, what little joy of themselves, what small joy of life they had, it is not so hard as dolorous for tender hearts to understand. As the younger Brother lingred in thought and heavines; so the Prince, which was eleven years old, was so out of heart, and so fraught with fear, that he never tyed his points, nor joyed good day, till the traiterous impiety of their cruel Uncle had delivered them of their wretchedness which was not long in dispatching. For after King Richard their Uncle had first attempted to compass his devilish device by Robert Brandon Constable of the Tower, and could not win him to such a cruel fact (to die therefore) then he got one James Tyrril, joyning with him Sir Dighton, and Miles Forrest, to perpetrate this heinous murther. Which Dighton and Forrest, about midnight entring into their Chamber, so bewrapped and intangled them amongst the Cloaths, keeping down the Featherbed and Pillows hard unto their mouths, that within a while they smothered and stifled them piteously in their Bed.

The truth of Rob. Brandon by no means to his Prince.

James Tyrril, Sir Dighton, Miles Forrest, cruel Traitors, and Murtherers of their Prince.

Young Princes, the children of K. Edward murthered.

And thus ended these two young Princes their lives, through the wretched cruelty of these forenamed tormentors, who, for their detestable and bloudy murther committed, escaped not long unpunished by the just hand of God. For first Miles Forrest, at S. Martins le graund, by piece-meal miserably rotted away; John Dighton lived at Calis long after, so disdained and hated, that he was pointed at of all men, and there died in great misery. Sir James Tyrril was beheaded at Tower-Hill for Treason. Also King Richard himself, within a year and a half after, was slain in the field, hacked and hewed of his enemies hands, torn and tugged like a Cur-dog.

The left vindictment of God upon the murtherers of them two.

The punishment of God upon K. Richard.

Furthermore, the said justice of Gods hand let not the Duke of Buckingham escape free, which was a great maintainer and setter up of this butcherly Usurper: for less than within a year after, so God wrought, that he was himself beheaded for Treason by the said King, whom he so unjustly before had advanced and set up.

The punishment of God upon the Duke of Buckingham.

In the same Catalogue and order of these wicked doers afore recited, we have also to comprehend two other, as well worthy of memorial as the best, or rather as the worst. The name of the one was Doctor Shaw above rehearsed; the other Doctor Pinky, Provincial of the Austen Friers; both famous Preachers, and both Doctors in Divinity, both of more learning than vertue (saith the story) of more fame than learning, and yet of more learning than truth. Shaw made a Sermon in praise of the Protector, before his Coronation. Pinky preached after his Coronation. Both were so full of tedious flattery, that no good ears could abide them. Pinky in his Sermon so lost his voice, that he was feign to leave off and came down in the midst. Dr. Shaw by his Sermon lost his honesty, and soon after his life, for very shame of the world, so that he never durst utter that shew his face again. But as for the Frier, he was so far past shame, that the losts thereof did little touch him. Mention was made a little before of Doctor Morton Bishop of Ely, by whose means the device was first broached, for the conjoyning of the two Houses of York and Lancaster together. This device was first broken to the Duke of Buckingham, which soon after coft him his life. But that Bishop, more crafty to save himself, incontinent fled into Britain. Notwithstanding, the device once being broached, was (to plausible and took such effect, that message was sent over the Sea to Henry Earl of Richmond, by his Mother, and by the Queen, Mother to the Lady Elizabeth, that if he would make his return, and promise to marry with the said Lady Elizabeth King Edward's Daughter, he should be received. matter which is sufficiently set forth by Sir Tho. More, so ornately, it needeth not.

Earl Henry maketh preparation toward his Journey.

Briefly, (to contract that in a small compass of words, which was not so small a thing in doing) after that the Earl Henry, with such other banished men as fled out of England at the taking of the Duke of Buckingham, had perfect intelligence by his Mother, and by the Queen and other friends more out of England, how the case of the Realm stood, and how it was here purposed by his friends, that is, that he should with all convenient speed haste his return over into England, promising to marry with Lady Elizabeth; he with all diligence, as time and preparation would serve, advanced forward his journey, being well helped and furnished by Francis Duke of Britain, and so shipped his men. Albeit his first Voyage sped not; for that, the Winds turning contrary, by force of Weather his Ships were dispersed, and he repulsed back into France again. His second Voyage was more prosperous. Who taking the Seas at Harfleet, in the Month of August, Anno 1485, accompanied only with two thousand men, and a small number of Ships, arrived at Milford-Haven in Wales, and first came to Dale, then to Harford west, where he was joyfully received, and also by the coming in of Arnold Butler and the Pembroke men, was in power increased. From thence he removing by Cardigan to Shrewsbury, and then to Newport, and so to Stafford, from thence to Lichfield, his Army still more and more augmented. Like as a great flood, by coming in of many small Rivers, gathereth more abundance of water; so to this Earl, divers noble Captains and men of power adjoyned themselves, as Richard Griffith, John Morgan, Rice ap Thomas, then Sir George Talbot, with the young Earl of Shrewsbury his Ward, Sir William Stanley, Sir Thomas Burchier, and Sir Walter Hungerford, Knights. At the last the said Earl, hearing of the Kings coming, conducted his whole Army to Tamworth.

The arriving of Henry Earl of Richmond in Wales.

K. Richard gathered his power to encounter with Earl Henry.

King Richard first hearing of the arrival of the Earl Henry in the parts of Wales after his slender fort, did give little or no regard unto it. But after understanding that he was come to Lichfield, without relistance or incumbrance, he was fore moved, and exceedingly took on, curling and crying out against them which had so deceived him, and in all post speed sent for John Duke of Northfolk, Henry Earl of Northumberland, Thomas Earl of Surry, with other his friends of special trust. Robert Brakenbury, also, Lieutenant of the Tower, was sent for, with Sir Thomas Burchier, and Sir Walter Hungerford, with certain other Knights and Esquires, of whom he partly misdoubted, or had fome fuspicious jealousie. Thus King Richard, after most forcible manner, well fortified and accompanied, leaving nothing undone that diligence could require, fet forward toward his enemies. The Earl by this time was come to Tamworth, to whom secretly in the Evening resorted Sir John Savage, Sir Bryan Sanford, Sir Simon Digby, and many other, forsaking the part of King Richard, whom all good men hated, as he no otherwise deserved. The King, having perfect knowledge the Earl to be encamped at Tamworth, embattelled himself in a place near to a Village called Bunworth, not far from Leicester, appointing there to encounter with his adversaries. Here the matter lay in great doubt and suspence concerning the Lord Stanley, (which was the Earls Father-in-law, and had married his Mother) to what part he would incline. For although his heart went (no doubt) with the Earl, and had secret conference with him the night before, yet becaufe of his Son and Heir George Lord Strange, being then in the hands of King Richard, left the King should attempt any prejudicial thing against him, he durst not be fen openly to go that way where in heart he favoured, and therefore closely kept himself between both, till the path came that his help might serve at a pinch.

K. Richard taketh the field of Bosworth.

This Lord Stanley was he, which was hurt at the Towser when the L. Hastings was attched.

The number of the Earls part exceeded not to the one half of the side of King Richard. When the time and the place was appointed, where the two Battels should encounter and joyn together, fore stripes and great blows were given on both sides, and many flain. If number and multitude might govern the succefs of Battel, King Richard had double to the Earl. But God is he, not Man, that giveth Victory, by what means it seemeth to his Divine Providence best. In what order, and by what occasion this Field was won and lost, the certain intelligence we have not certainly expressed, but only the History of Polydore Virgil, whom Sir Thomas More doth follow word for word. In the which story it doth appear, that as these two Armies were coupling together, King Richard understanding by his Espials where the Earl of Richmond was, and how he was but slenderly accompanied, and seeing him to approach more near unto him, rather carried with courage, than ruled with reason, set Spurs to his Horse, and ranging out of the compass of his Ranks, prefsed toward the Earl, setting upon him so sharply, that first he killed Sir William Brandon the Earls Standard-bearer, Father to the Lord Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk, then after overthrew Sir John Cheinie, thinking likewife to oppress the Earl. But as the Lord by his secret Providence disposeth the event of all things, as the Earl with his Men about him, being overmatched, began to despair of Victory, suddenly and opportunely came Sir William Stanley with three thousand well appointed able men, whereby King Richard's men were driven back, and he himself, cruelly fighting in the thick of his enemies, was there slain, and brought to his confution and death, which he worthily deserved.

Sr. Brandon, Charles Brandon.

The death of K. Rich.

In the mean time the Earl of Oxford, who had the guiding of the foreward, discomfited the forefront of King Richard's Host, and put them to flight, in which Chase many were slain, of Noblemen especially above other, John Duke of Northfolk, Lord Ferrers, Sir Richard Radcliff, and Robert Brankenbury Lieutenant of the Tower, &c. Lord Thomas Haward Earl of Surrey there submitted himself, and although he was not received at first to grace, but long remained in the Tower, yet at length for his fidelity, he was delivered and advanced to his recovered honour and dignity again.

Duke of Northfolk slain. L. Thomas Howard Earl of Surrey advanced by King Henry 7th.

This King Richard had but one Son, who, shortly after the cruel Murther of King Edward's Sons, was taken with sickness and died. The Wife of the said King Richard (whether by poyson or by sickness) died also a little before the Field of Bosworth, after whose decease, the story of Polydore and of Sir Thomas More affirmeth, that he intended himself to marry the Lady Elizabeth, his own Brothers Daughter, and so to prevent the Earl of Richmond.

K. Richards Son punished for the wickednesh of his Father.

K. Richard purposed to marry his Brothers Daughter.

Moreover, as touching the Lord Stanley, thus reporteth the story, that King Richard being in Bosworth Field, sent for the Lord Stanley by a Purlevant, to address forward with his company, and come to his prefence; otherwise he swore by Christs Passion, that he would strike off his Sons Head before Dinner. The Lord Stanley sent word again, That if he did, he had more Sons alive. Whereupon the King immediately commanded the Lord Strange to be beheaded; which was the very time when both the Armies were within fight, and were ready to joyn together. Wherefore the Kings Counsellors, pondering the time and the case, perswaded the King that it was now time to fight, and not to do execution, advising him to delay the matter till the Battel were ended. And so (as God would) King Richard breaking his Oath, or rather keeping his Oath, for he himself was flain before Dinner, the Lord Strange was committed to be kept Prisoner within the Kings Tent; who then, after the Victory gotten, was fought out and brought to his joyful Father. And thus have ye the tragical life and end of this wretched King Richard.

L. Stanley Husband to K. Henry's Mother, forsook K. Richard.

The Lord Strange marvellously preserved.

Henry the Earl of Richmond, after hearty thanks given to Almighty God for his glorious Victory obtained, proceeded to the Town of Leicester, where was brought to him, by the Lord Strange, the Crown, and put on the Earls Head.

In the mean time the dead Corps of King Richard was shamefully carried to the Town of Leicester, being naked and despoiled to the skin; and being stuffed behind a Purfevant of Arms, was carried like a Hog or a Dog, having his Head and Arms hanging on the one side of the Horse, and the Legs on the other side, all sprinkled with mire and bloud. And thus ended the usurped Reign of King Richard, who reigned two Years and two Months, Ex Polyd. & Th. More.

King Henry the 7th.

WHEN King Henry, by the Providence of God, had obtained this Triumphant Victory and Disdein of the Realm, first feading for Edward Plantaginet Earl of Warwick, Son to George Duke of Clarence, and committing him to safe custody within the Tower, for Leicester he removed to London, and not long after, according to his Oath and Promise made before, espoused to him the young Lady Elizabeth, Heir of the House of York; whereby both the Houses of York and Lancaster were conjoyned together, to the no little rejoycing of all English hearts, and no less quiet unto the Realm, which was Anno 1485. This King Reigned 23 Years and 8 Months, and being a Prince of great Policy, Justice and Temperance, kept his Realm in good tolerable rule and order. And here interrupting a little the course of our English matters, we will now (the Lord willing) enter the story above promised, of Maximilian the Emperor, and matters of the Empire, especially such as pertain to the Church.

¶ Maximilian the Emperor.

{Ann. 1485 Maximilian Emperor.

IN the Year of our Lord 1486, Fredericus waxing aged, and partly also misfrusting the hearts of the Germans, who had complained before of their grievances, and could not be heard; and therefore misdoubting that his House, after his decease, should have the less favour among them, for that cause in his life time did associate his Son Maximilian to be joyned Emperor with him; with whom he Reigned the space of seven years, till the death of the said Frederick his Father, who departed Anno 1494, after he had Reigned over the Empire 53 years, lacking only but three years of the Reign of Augustus Cæsar, under whom was the Birth of our Lord and Saviour Christ.

The Reign and Death of Frederick Emperor. {Anno 1494.

This Maximilian, as he was a valiant Emperor, prudent and singularly learned, so was his Reign intangled in many unquiet and difficil Wars; first in the lower Countries of Flanders and Brabant, where the said Maximilian was taken captive, but shortly after refcued and delivered again by his Father, Anno 1487. It was signified before how this Maximilian, by the advice of the Burgundians, had to Wife Mary the only Daughter of Charles Duke of Burgundy afore mentioned, by whom he had two children, Philip and Margaret. Anno 1477. Which Mary not long after, about the year of our Lord 1481. by a fall from her Horse, fell into an Ague, and departed. Other Wars many more the same Maximilian also atchieved, both in France, in Italy, in Hungary, and divers besides.

Maximilian married with the Dutchess of Burgundy.

This Mary was Neece to King Edward the fourth.

So happy was the education of this Emperor in good Letters, so expert he was in Tongues and Sciences, but especially such was his dexterity and promptness in the Latine stile, that he, imitating the example of Julius Cæsar, did write and comprehend in Latine Histories his own acts and feats done, and that in such sort, that when he had given a certain taste of his History to one Pircamerus a learned Man, asking his judgment how his warlike stile of Latine did like him, the said Pircamerus did affirm and report of him to John Carion (the witness and writer of this story) that he did never see nor read in any German story, a thing more exactly (and that in such haste) done, as this was of Maximilian. Moreover, as he was learned himself, so was he a singular Patron and advancer of learned Students, as may well appear by the erecting and setting up the University of Wittenburgh. By this Emperor many in those days were excited to the embracing as well of other Liberal Arts, as also namely, to the searching out of old Antiquities of Histories, whereby divers were then by him first occasioned in Germany, to set their minds, and to exercise their diligence in collecting and explicating matters pertaining to the knowledge of History, as well of ancient as also of later times, as namely Cuspinianus, Nauclerus, Conradus, Pentingerus, Manlius, and other.

The learning of Maximilian commended.

Maximilian Writer of his own stories. In Jean. Carione.

Maximilian first ordainer of the University of Wittenburg.

Here now it began night well to appear, what great benefit was broached to the World by the Art and Faculty of Printing, as is before mentioned. Through the means of which Printing the Church and Commonwealth of Christ, began now to be replenished with learned Men, as both may appear by this Emperor, being so induced himself with such excellent knowledge of good Letters, and also by divers other famous and worthy wits, which began now in this age exceedingly to encrease and multiply; as Baptista Mantuanus, Aug. Politianus, Hermolaus, Barbarus, Picus Mirandula, and Franciscus his Cosin, Rodol. Agricola, Pontanus, Philippus, Beroaldus, Marsilius, Ficinus, Volaterranus, Georgius Valla, with infinite other.

{KING Hen. 7. Learned men begin to grow in Christendom

Among whom is also to be numbred Weselus Groningensis, otherwise named Basilius, who was not long after Joan. de Wesalia above recited, both much about one time, and both great friends together. This Weselus died in the year of our Lord 1490. After that Johannes Doctor de Wesalia aforesaid, was condemned, this Weselus being familiar with him, thought that the Inquisitor would come and examine him also, as he himself in a certain Epistle doth write. He was for notable and worthy a man, that of the people he was called Lux Mundi, that is, The light of the World.

Dr. Weselus of Groningan. his Epistle. Wesselus called Lux Mundi.

Concerning his Doctrine, first he reprehended the Opinion of the Papists, as touching Repentance, which they divided into three parts, of the which three parts, Satisfaction and Confession he did disallow. Likewise Purgatory and Supererogation of works and pardons he did disprove, both at Rome and at Paris. He spake against the Popes Indulgences, by the occasion whereof divers of the Popes Court perswaded by him, began to speak more freely against the same matter, than he himself had done.

The Doctrine of Wesselus Groningens.

The abuses of Masses, and praying for the dead he disallowed; and likewise the Supremacy of the Pope he utterly rejected (as appeareth in a Book of his, De sacramento panitentiæ) denying utterly that any supream Head or Governor ought to be in the World over all others; affirming also, and saying many times, That the Pope had no authority to do any thing by commandment, but by truth, that is, so far as truth goeth with him, so far he sentence to stand; neither that he ought to prevail by commanding, but only by teaching, so at every true Christian Bishop may prevail over another. Also in some place in his writings he denieth not, but that Popes and their spiritual Prelates, proceeding against Christs Doctrine, be plain Antichrists. Such as were infirm and not able to perform the bond of Chastity taken upon them, he said they might well break their Vow.

Ex lib. D. Weselli. De Sacramento Panitentiæ. The Popes supremacy written against.

Also the said Weselus witnesseth, that the forefathers which were before Albert and Thomas, did relish and withstand the Popes Indulgences, calling them in their Writings plain Idolatry, meer fraud and error; adding moreover, that unless the severity of some good Divines had withstood these Pardons and Indulgences of the Pope, innumerable errors had overflown the Church.

Amongst these works of Weselus, there is a certain Epistle of one written to him, in which the Author of the Epistle confesseth, that in his time there was a certain learned man at Paris, called Mr. Thomas de Curselis a Dean; who being in the Council of Basil, with 22 divers began to advance the power of the Pope too far, declared and affirmed, to be said to him of Christ, Quicquid ligaveris super terram, erit ligatum & in cælo, &c. Et non quicquid dixeris esse ligatum; that is, Whatsoever thou shalt bind upon earth, shall be bound in Heaven, but not, Whatsoever thou sayst to be bound. As who should say, the Pope cannot nor doth not bind therefore, because he so saith, except truth and righteousness go alwayes with him; then he doth so bind indeed. There is a certain Book of this man amongst divers others, which he intituled, De fabulis & superioribus, in the which he disputeth greatly against the Pope and his Prelates; affirming that the Pope, unless his Faith and Doctrine be found, ought not to be obeyed. He affirmeth also that the Pope may err, and when he erreth, men ought by all manner means to resist him. Item, That great and superfluous riches in the Clergy do not profit, but hurt the Church. That the Pope doth wickedly distribute the Rents of the Church, and the Church it self, to unworthy Ministers by Simony, for his own profit and gain, whereby it may appear, that he neither careth for God, nor the health of the Church. Item, That the precepts and commandments of the Pope and Prelates be no otherwise but as the counsels and precepts of Phylicians, binding no further than they are found to be wholesome and standing with the word.

Ex epist. cujusdam apud Wesel. Christs answer to Tho. de Curselis touching this place, Quicquid ligaveris super terram. &c. But whatsoever is bound in earth, that is also bound in Heaven. Against riches in the Church. The precepts of the Pope and Prelates how they bind.

{KING Hen. 7. The Popes keys. Vows. Doctrine to be received without examination.

word. Item, That the Pope can command no man under pain of deadly sin, except God command him before. He saith, that the Keys of the Pope and of the Prelates be not such wherewith they open the Kingdom of Heaven, but rather shut it, as the Pharisees did. Concerning Vows, he disputeth that such as be foolish and impossible ought to be broken; that the hearers ought to discern and judge of the doctrine of their Prelates, and not to receive every thing that they say, without due examination.

Excommunication.

He sheweth moreover that the sentence of Excommunication is of more force, proceeding from a true godly, honest, simple and learned man, than from the Pope; as in the Council of Constance, Bernard was more esteemed than Eugenius. Also if the Pope with his Prelates govern and rule naughtily, that the inferiors, be they never so base, ought to resist him.

Writing moreover of two Popes, Pius the Second, and Sixtus the Fourth, he saith, that Pius the Second did usurpe unto himself all the Kingdoms of the whole World, and that Sixtus the Pope did dispense with all manner of Oaths, in causes temporal, not only with such Oaths, as have been already, but also with all such as shall be made hereafter; which was nothing else but to give liberty and licence for men to forswear themselves and deceive one another.

This Weselus being a Phrygian born, and now aged in years, upon a certain time when a young man, called M. Joannes Ostendorpius, came to him, said these words; Well my child, thou shalt live to that day, who thou shalt see that the doctrine of these new and contentious Divines, as Thomas and Bonaventure, with others of the same fort, shall be utterly rejected and exploded from all true Christian Divines. And this which Ostendorpius then being young heard Weselus to speak, he reported himself to Noviomagus, which wrote the story, Anno 1520, and heard it of the mouth of the said Weselus, An. 1490, Martii. 18.

Ex Noviomago. Ostendorpius was a man well learned and Canon of the Minster of Lubeck.

Philippus Melanthon writing of the life of Rodulphus Agricola, saith, that Jossquinus Groningensis, an ancient and a godly man, reported that when as he was young, he was oftentimes present at the Sermons of Rodulphus and Weselus, wherein they many times lamented the darkness of the Church, and reprehended the abuses of the Mass and of the single life of Priests. Item, that they disputed oftentimes of the righteousness of Faith, why Saint Paul so oftentimes did inculcate, that men be justified by Faith, and not works. The same Josquine also reported, that they did openly reject and disprove the opinion of Monks, which say that men be justified by their works. Item, Concerning mens Traditions their opinion was, that all such were deceived, whosoever attributed unto those Traditions any opinion of Gods worship, or that they might not be broken. And thus much for the story of Doctor Wesellianus and Weselus.

Here it appeareth that this Rodulphus Agricola was of good judgment though the Friers afterward buried him in a Friers weed. Rodulphus Agricola, Weselus lamenteth the darkneſs of the Church.

By this it may be seen and noted, how, by the grace of God and gift of Printing, first came forth learning; by learning came light to judge and discern the errors of the Pope from the truth of Gods Word; as partly by these above said may appear, partly by other that follow after (by the grace of Christ) shall better be seen.

About the very same time and season, when as the Gospel began thus to branch and spring in Germany, the Holy of Christs Church began also to mutter and to multiply likewise here in England, as by these Histories here consequent may appear. For not long after the death of this Weselus, in the year of our Lord 1494, and in the ninth year the Reign of Henry the 7th, the 28th of April, was burned a very old Woman named Joane Boughton widow, and Mother to the Lady Young, which Lady was also suspected to be of that opinion which her Mother was. Her Mother was of fourscour years of age or more, and held eight of Wickliffs opinions (which opinions my Author doth not shew) for the which she was burnt in Smithfield the day aboresaid. My Author saith, she was a Disciple of Wickliff, whom the accounted for a Saint, and held so fast and firmly eight of his ten opinions, that all the Doctors of London could not turn her from one of them: and when it was told her that she should be burnt for her obstinacy and false belief, she fet nothing by their menacing words, but defied them; for the said she was so beloved of God, and his holy Angels, that she passed not for the fire, and in the midst thereof she cryed to God to take her soul into his holy hands. The night following that she was burnt, the moft part of her ashes were had away of such as had a love unto the Doctrine that she dyed for.

{Anno 1494. Joane Boughton Mother to the Lady Young burnt.

Shortly after the Martyrdom of this godly aged Mother, in the year of our Lord, 1497, and the 17th of January, being Sunday, two men, the one called Richard Milderale, and the other James Sturdy, bear Faggots before the procession of Pauls, and after stood before the Preacher in the time of his Sermon. And upon the Sunday following stood other two men at Pauls Cross all the Sermon time; the one garnished with painted and written papers, the other having a Faggot on his neck. After that in Lent season upon Passion Sunday one Hugh Glover bear a Faggot before the procession of Pauls, and after with the Faggot stood before the Preacher all the Sermon while at Pauls Cross. And on the Sunday next following four men stood, and did their open Penance at Pauls, as is aforesaid, in the Sermon time, and many of their Books were burnt before them at the Cross.

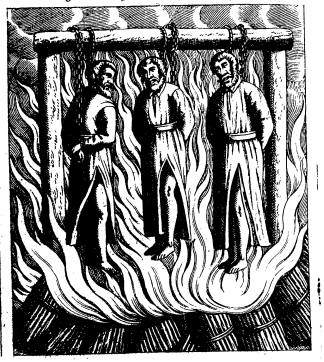
FUrthermore the next year following, which was the year of our Lord 1498, in the beginning of May, the King then being at Canterbury, was a Priest burnt, which was so strong in his opinion that all the Clerks and Doctors then there being could not remove him from his Faith: Whereof the King being informed, he caused the said Priest to be brought before his presence, who by his perswasion caused him to revoke, and so he was burnt immediately.

{Anno 1498. A Priest burnt.



IN the same year above meritioned, which was the year of our Lord 1498, after the beheading of Edward Plantaginet Earl of Warwick, and son to the Duke of Clarence, the King and Queen being removed to Calis, a certain godly man and a constant Martyr of Christ, named Babram, in Norfolk, was burnt in the mouth of Yarmouth, as is in Fabian recorded, after the Copy which I have written. Albeit in the Book Fabian Printed, his burning is referred to the next year following, which is, An. 1500. Ex Fabiatio, & alio scripto codem.

An old man burned.

ABout which year likewiſe, or in the next following, the twentieth day of July, was an old man burnt in Smithfield.

Anno 1498. Hieromus Savanarola with two Friers Martyrs.

In the ſame year alſo, which was of the Lord, one thouſand four hundred ninety and nine, fell the Martrydom and burning of Hieronymus Savanarola, a man no leſs godly in heart, then conſtant in his profeſſion. Who being a Monk in Italy, and ſingularly well learned, preached ſore againſt the evil life and living of the ſpiritualty, and eſpecially of his own Order, complaining ſore upon them as the ſprings and authors of all miſchiefs and wickedneſs. Whereupon by the help of certain learned men he began to ſeek reformation in his own order. Which thing the Pope perceiving and fearing that the ſaid Hierom, which was now in great reputation amongſt all men, ſhould diminiſh or overthrow his authority, he ordained his Vicar or Provincial to ſee reformation of theſe matters; which Vicar with great ſuperſtition began to reform things: but the ſaid Hierom did always withſtand him, whereupon he was complained of to the Pope, and becauſe that contrary unto the Popes commandment he did withſtand his Vicar, he was accuſed. But for all that the ſaid Ieronymus left not off preaching, but threatned Italy with the wrath and indignation of God, and propheſied before unto them, that the Land ſhould be overthrown for the pride and wickedneſs of the people, and for the untruth, hypocriſie and falſhood of the Clergy, which God would not leave unrevenged, as afterward it came to paſs, when as K. Charles came into Italy and to Rome, and ſo ſtraightly befet Pope Alexander, that he was forced to make compoſition with the King.

Propheſie of Ieronymus againſt Italy.

Pope Alexander beſieged by Charles the French King.

Now forſomuch as the ſaid Hierom would not leave off preaching, he was commanded to appear before the Pope, to give account of his new learning (for ſo then they called the truth of the Goſpel) but by means of the manifold perils, he made his excuſe that he could not come. Then was he again forbidden by the Pope to preach, and his learning pronounced and condemned as pernitious, falſe and ſeditious.

Savanarola cited to appear before the Pope.

The doctrine of Savanarola condemned becauſe he would not come before the Pope.

Savanarola preacheth contrary to the Popes commandment.

This Ieronymus, as a man worldly wiſe, foreſeeing the great perils and dangers that might come unto him, for fear left off preaching. But when as the people, which fore hungred and longed for Gods Word, were inſtant upon him that he would preach again, he began again to preach in the year of our Lord, 1496, in the City of Florence, and albeit that many counſelled him that he ſhould not ſo do without the Popes commandment, yet did he not regard it, but went forward freely of his own good will. When as the Pope and his ſhavelings heard news of this, they were grievouſly incenſed and inflamed againſt him, and now again curſed him, as an obſtinate and ſtiffnecked Hereticke. But for all that, Ieronymus proceeded in teaching and inſtructing the people, ſaying that men ought not to regard ſuch curſes, which are againſt the true doctrine and the common profit, whereby the people ſhould be learned and amended, Chriſts Kingdom enlarged, and the Kingdom of the Devil utterly overthrown.

In all his preaching he deſired to teach no other thing than the only pure and ſimple Word of God, making often proteſtation that all men ſhould certifie him if they had heard himteach or preach any thing contrary thereunto, for upon his own conſcience he knew not that he had taught any thing but the pure Word of God. What his doctrine was all men may eaſily judge by his Books that he hath written.

Hierom with two other Friers and brought out of Saint Marks Cloiſter, and two other Fryers with him, named Dominick and Silveſter, which favoured his learning, and was carried into Priſon, where he wrote a godly meditation upon that moſt comfortable thirty firſt Pſalm; In te Domine ſperavi, non confundar in æternum, ſed in juſtitia tua libera me. Wherein he doth excellently deſcribe and ſet forth the continual ſtrife between the fleſh and the ſpirit.

Hierom with two other Friers committed to priſon.

The commentary of Ierom. upon the Pſalm beginning. In te domine ſperavi.

After this the Popes Legates came to Florence and called forth theſe three good men, threatning them marvelouſly; but they continued ſtill conſtant. Then came the chief Counſellers, of the City, with the Popes Commiſſioners, which had gathered out certain Articles againſt theſe men, whereupon they were condemned to death; the tenor of which Articles hereafter enſue.

Articles objected againſt Ierom and the two Friers.

1. The firſt Article was as touching our free Juſtification on through Faith in Chriſt.

2. That the Communion ought to be miniſtred under both kinds.

3. That the Indulgencies and Pardons of the Pope were of no effect.

4. For preaching againſt the filthy and wicked living of the Cardinals and ſpiritualty.

5. For denying the Popes Supremacy.

6. Alſo

{KING Hen.7.}

6. Alſo that he had affirmed that the Keys were not given unto Peter alone, but unto the Univerſal Church.

7. Alſo, that the Pope did neither follow the life nor doctrine of Chriſt, for that he did attribute more to his own Pardons and Traditions, than to Chriſts meats, and therefore he was Antichriſt.

8. Alſo, that the Popes excommunications are not to be feared, and that he which doth fear or flee them is excommunicate of God.

9. Item, That Auricular confeſſion is not neceſſary.

10. Item, That he had moved the Citizens to uproar and ſedition.

11. Item, That he had neglected and condemned the Popes Citation.

12. Item, That he had ſhamefully ſpoken againſt, and ſlandred the Pope.

13. Item, That he had taken Chriſt to witneſs of his naughtineſs and Hereſie.

14. Alſo, that Italy muſt be cleanſed through Gods ſcourge, for the manifold wickedneſs of the Princes and Clergy.

These and ſuch other like Articles were laid unto them and read before them. Then they demanded of the ſaid Hierom and his companions, whether they would recant and give over their opinions. Whereunto they anſwered, that through Gods help they would ſteadfaſtly continue in the manifeſt truth, and not depart from the ſame. Then were they degraded one after another by the Biſhop of Veſon, and ſo delivered over to the ſecular Rulers of Florence, with ſtraight commandment to carry them forth, and handle them as obſtinate and ſtiffnecked Hereticks Hierom with his two companions hanged and burnt for the Goſpels truth.

Thus was the worthy witneſs of Chriſt, with the other two aforeſaid, firſt hanged up openly in the Market place, and afterward burnt to aſhes, and the aſhes gathered up, and caſt into the River of Arnus, the 24th of May, in the year of our Lord, 1499. Ex Catal. teſtium Ilyrici.

The Propheſies of Hieronymus Savanarola.

This man foreſhewed many things to come, as the deſtruction of Florence and Rome, and the renewing of the Church; which three things have hapned in theſe times within our remembrance. Alſo he foreſhewed that the Turks and Mores in the later days ſhould be converted unto Chriſt. He alſo declared that one ſhould paſs the Alpes into Italy, like unto Cyrus which ſhould ſubvert and deſtroy all Italy. Whereupon Johannes Franciſcus Picus, Earl of Mirandola, called him a Holy Prophet, and defended him by his writings againſt the Pope. Many other learned men alſo defended the innocency of the ſaid Savanarola. Maſſilius Ficinus alſo in a certain Epiſtle doth attribute unto him the ſpirit of Propheſie, greatly commending and praiſing him. In like manner Philippus Cominеus a French Hiſtoriographer, which had conference with him, witneſſeth that he was a holy man, and full of the ſpirit of Propheſie, forſomuch as he had foreſhewed unto him ſo many things which in event had proved true.

Anton. Flaminius an Italian, and for piety and learning famous, in that age, wrote this Epigram upon the death of Hierm. Savanarola.

Dum fera flamma tuos, Hieronyme, paſcitur artus,
Relligio, ſanctas dilaniata comas,
Flevit, & O, dixit, crudeles parcite flammæ,
Parcite, ſunt iſto viſcera noſtra rogo.

Which may be thus Engliſhed.

Whilſt flames unjuſt (bleſt Saint) thy body burns,
Weeping Religion with diſhevel'd hairs,
Cries out, and ſays, Oh ſpare his ſacred urnes,
Spare cruel flames; that fire our ſoul impairs.

There were beſides theſe, many other, not to be paſſed over or forgotten: as Philip Norice an Irithman, profeſſor at Oxford, who albeit he was not burned, yet (as it is ſaid) he was long time vexed and troubled by the religious rout. But would to God, that ſuch as have occupied themſelves in writing of Hiſtories, and have ſo diligently committed unto memory all other things done in foreign Common-wealths, had beſtowed the like diligence and labour in noting and writing thoſe things which pertain unto the affairs of the Church: whereby the poſterity might have had fuller and more perfect underſtanding and knowledge of them.

This Savanarola abve mentioned, ſuffered under Pope Alexander the Sixth, of which Pope more leiſure and opportunity ſhall ſerve hereafter (Chriſt willing) to entreat, after that we ſhall firſt make a little digreſſion, to entreat of certain cauſes and complaints of the Germans, incident in the mean time, which as they are not to be overpaſt in ſilence, ſo can they have no place nor time more convenient to be inferred. What complaints of the Germans were made and moved unto the Emperor Frederick againſt the Popes ſuppreſſions and exactions, mention was made before; where alſo was declared, how the ſaid Germans at that time were twice put back and forſaken of the Emperor, whereby they continued in the ſame yoke and bondage until the time of Luther. Wherefore it cometh now to hand, and we think it alſo good here briefly to declare, how the ſaid Germans, in the time of Maximilian the Emperor, renewing their complaints again, delivered unto the Emperor ten principal Grievances, whereby, the Germans have been long time oppreſſed; ſhewing alſo the remedies againſt the ſame, with certain adviſements unto the Emperors Majeſty, how he might withſtand and reſiſt the Popes ſubtilites and crafts: The order and tenor whereof here enſueth.

The complaint of the Germans againſt the Popes oppreſſions reſerved.

The ten Grievances of the Germans.

Ten Grievances complained of by the Germans.

1. THat the Biſhops of Rome, ſucceſſors one unto another, do not think themſelves bound to obſerve and keep the Bulls, Covenants, Priviledges, and Letters, granted by their Predeceſſors, without all derogation; but by often diſpenſation, ſuſpenſion and revocation, even at the inſtance of every vile perſon, they do gainſay and withſtand the ſame.

2. That the elections of Prelates are oftentimes put back.

3. That the elections of Preſidentſhips are withſtood, which the Chapter houſes of many Churches have obtained with great coſt and expence, as the Church of Spire and Haſſel do well know; whoſe Bull, touching the election of their Preſident, is fruſtrate, he being yet alive which granted the ſame.

4. That Benefices and the greateſt Eccleſiaſtical dignities are reſerved for Cardinals and head Notaries.

5. That expectative graces, called Vowſons, are granted without number, and many oftentimes unto one man, whereupon continual contentions do ariſe, and much money is ſpent, both that which is laid out for the Bulls of thoſe Vowſons, which never take effect, and alſo that which is conſumed in going to Law. Whereupon this proverb is riſen, Whoſoever will get a Vowſon from Rome, muſt have C. or C. C. pieces of Gold laid up in his Cheſt, for the obtaining of the ſame, which he ſhall have need of, to proſecute the Law withal.

6. That Annates, or yearly revenews are exacted without delay or mercy, even of the Biſhops lately dead, and oftentimes more extorted than ought to be, through the new Offices and new Servants, as by the examples of the Churches of Mentz and Straſsbourgh, may be ſeen.

7. That the rule of the Churches is given at Rome unto thoſe that are not worthy, which were more fit to feed and keep Mules, than to have the rule and governance of men.

8. That new Indulgences and Pardons, with the ſuſpention and revocation of the old, are granted to gather and ſcrape money together.

9. That Tenths are exacted, under pretence of making War againſt the Turk; when as no expedition doth follow thereupon.

10. That the cauſes which might be determined in Germany, where there are both learned and juſt Judges, are indifferently carried unto the Court of Rome; which thing S. Bernard writing to Pope Engenius, ſeemeth wonderfully to reprove.

Here enſueth the remedy againſt the ſaid Grievances.

Remedy againſt the foreſaid Grievances.

IF it ſhall ſeem good unto the Emperors Majeſty, let it be declared unto the Biſhop of Rome, how grievous and intolerable a thing it is unto the Germans, to ſuffer continually ſo great charges and grievances, to pay

So great Annates for the confirmation of the Bishops and Archbishops, and especially in such Bishopricks, whereas the Annates by succes of time are enhanced, and in many (as it is said) doubled. For the Archbishops See of Mentz (as it is said) sometime paid only ten thousand Florens; which then, when as one which was chosen there, refused to give, and so continued even unto his death, he which was afterward elect, being desirous of confirmation, fearing to withstand the Apostlick See, offered the said sum of 10000 Florens: but notwithstanding, he could not get his confirmation, except he would pay the other 10000, which his predecessor before him had not paid.

By this means he was compelled to pay 20000 Florens. Which being enrolled in the register of the Chamber, as much hath been exacted of every Archbishop since, until these our days; and not only 20000, but also 25000 for their new offices, and new servants. At last, the sum drew to 27000 Florens, which James the Archbishop of Mentz was compelled to pay, as his Commissary did report. Step by this means, in a little time there was seven times 25000 Florens payd out of the Archbishoprick of Mentz unto Rome, for the confirmation of the Archbishop. And when this Archbishop James had kept the Archbishoprick scarce four years, the Lord Uriel was elect after him, who was compelled to pay at the least 24000, or 25000 Florens. Whereof a part he borrowed of Merchants: but to satisfie and pay them again, he was forced to exact a Subsidy of his poor Subjects and Husbandmen, whereof some have not yet satisfied and paid the tribute for the Bishops Pall, so that by this means our people are not only tormented and brought to extream poverty, but also are moved unto rebellion, to seek their liberty by what means soever they may, grievously murmuring against the cruelty of the Clergy.

The Pope also should be admonished, how that, through divers and sundry Wars and Battels, the Lands of Germany lye desolate and waste, and through many mortalities, the number of men is diminished, so that for the scarsenes of Husbandmen, the Fields for the most part lye untilled, the Tolls are by divers means diminished, the Mines consumed, and the profits daily decay, whereby the Archbishops and Bishops should pay their Annates unto the Apostolick See, besides their other necessary and honest charges; wherefore, that not without just cause, James the Archbishop of Mentz, being even at the point of death, said, That he did not so much sorrow for his own death, as for that his poor Subjects should be again forced to pay a grievous exaction for the Pall. Wherefore let the high Bishop, as a godly Father, and lover of his children, and a faithful and prudent Pastor, deal more favourably with his children the Germans, lest that persecution happen to rise against the Priests of Christ, and that men following the example of the Bohemians, do swerve from the Church of Rome.

At the least, let him be more favourable, as often as any Archbishop or Bishop hapned to rule his Church but a few years; as it hapned to the Bishops of Bamberge, whereof three died within few years. The like also might happen by other Bishopricks, whereof (as Æneas Sylvius witnesseth) there are in Germany to the number of fifty, besides Abbots, whereof a great number are confirmed at Rome.

And admit that in Germany there were greater profits and Revenues rising of the Ground, Mines and Tolls; notwithstanding the Emperor and the other Princes should lack treasure and munition of War against their enemies, and specially the Infidels, and to preserve Germany in peace and quietnes, and to minister justice unto every man: for which purpose the Council of the Chamber, being most hollily instructed and furnished with great cost and charges, doth chiefly serve. Besides that, the Emperor hath need of treasure, to suppress the Rebels in the Empire, to banish and drive away Thieves and Murtherers, whereof a great number are not ashamed to spoil Churches only, and to rob them of their goods, but also to assail the Clergy themselves. Finally, our Nation and Country of Germany hath need of great riches and treasure, not only for the repairing of Churches and Monasteries, but also for Hospitals for Children that are laid out in the Streets, for Widows, for Women with Child, for Orphans, for marriage of the Daughters of poor Men, that they be not deflowred, for such as have need and necessity, for the Old and Weak, for the Sick and the Sore, whereof (the more is the sorrow) Germany is fully replenished and filled.

Advertisements unto the Emperors Majesty.

LEt the Emperors Majesty foresee and provide that the begging Friers do not preach against his Majesty, which are wont to complain gladly unto the Apostolick See, fearing to lose their priviledges, which I would to God were as well grounded upon Christ, as they are upon profit. Let the Emperors Majesty also beware, that the Pope do not give commandment unto the Electors, to proceed to the Election of a new King of the Romans, as he did against Frederick the Second, when as the Landgrave of Thurin, and William Earl of Holland, were elect by the commandment of the Pope. Let the Emperors Majesty also fear and take heed of all the Prelates of the Churches, and especially of the Presidents, which by their Oath are bound to advertise the Pope. Let the Emperors Majesty also fear and beware, that the Pope do not take away from his Subjects their obedience, and provoke the people bordering upon him, to make invasion into the Emperors Dominions and Archduchy of Austrich; which those men, under colour shewing obedience unto the Popes commandment, be ready to do.

The Emper. advertised of the fulfil practises of the Pope and popish Prelates.

Let the Emperors Majesty also take heed of the Apostolick censures, from which the Pope will in no case refrain. Finally, let the Emperors Majesty diligently foresee and take heed, that the Pope do not persuade the people with most subtil Arguments, contrary to the Pragmatical sanction, excusing himself, and getting the good will of the simple, alledging that with great costs and charges, he will repair the Church of Saint Peter in Rome, and build in certain places against the Turks, and recover again the Lands and Patrimony pertaining unto the Church of Saint Peter, as he is bound by his Office. Therefore let your Majesty diligently foresee and deliberate, how through your most wise and discreet Counsel, if need shall require, you will answer to those subtilities to the Pope.

The Popes pretence of building S. Peters Church in Rome.

A certain godly Exhortation unto the Emperors Majesty.

YOur Majesty can do nothing better, nothing more acceptable, or more worthy eternal remembrance, than to moderate the great exactions and oppressions of the Germans; to take away all occasions from the Laity, to persecute the Clergy: also to take away the Benefices out of the hands of Courtesans, which can neither preach, comfort, nor counsel any man (of which Benefices, as Æneas Sylvius writeth, some are equal to the Bishopricks of Italy) to encrease Gods honour and worship; and so to use with, that not only they going so contrary to God and all honesty; but also all their favourers, which do help, Council, harbour or give them any thing, all their Messengers, and Writers, Proctors, Sureties, and other their friends, shall incur, and receive condign punishment for so great offence and contempt of our commandment. From Octopent, &c.

A supplication or Exhortation to Maximilian Emperor of the Church.

No man to have two Canonships or Prebends at once.

{KING Hen.7.}

from the Grecians unto Germany, have reigned many years before.

Hereafter ensueth the Copy of a certain Letter of the Emperor Maximilian, given out in manner of a Decree or Commandment against certain abuses of the Clergy. Whereunto we have also annexed the answer of Jacobus Seleſtadiensis unto the Emperors Letters, wherein he seemeth also to have sought advice for the remedy of the like abuses, which we thought good here not to be omitted.

An Edict of Maximilian the Emperor.

WE, according to the example of our dearly beloved Father, Frederick Emperor of Rome, reverencing the chief Pastor of the Church, and all the Clergy, have suffered no small revenues of the Ecclesiastical dignities to be carried out of our dominion by the Prelates and Clergy that are absent, whose faults committed by humane frailty, with Constantine our Predecessor, we have not disdained to hide and Cover. But forsomuch as through our liberality, the decay of Gods honour is risen, it is our part to foresee (which are elect into the Empire, without any desert) that among all other affairs of Peace and War, the Churches do not decay, Religion quail not, or Gods true worship be not diminished; which we have manifestly experimented, and daily do perceive by the insatiable covetousnes of some, which are never satisfied in getting of Benefices, through whose absence (being resident but only upon one) GODS honour and worship is diminished, houses decay, Churches decrease, the Ecclesiastical liberty is hurt, Learning and Monuments are lost and destroyed, Hospitality and Alms diminished, and by their insatiable greedines, such of the Clergy, as for their Learning and Vertue were worthy of Benefices, and their Wisdom profitable in Commonwealths, are hindered and put back. Wherefore according to the office and duty of our estate, for the love of the encrease of GODS honour, we exhort and require, that no man from henceforth, having any Canonship or Vicarage in one City of our Empire, shall occupy or possess a Prebend in another Church of the same City, except he give over the first within a years space unto some person fit and profitable for the Church; neither that he do by unjust quarels, vex or trouble any man in getting of Benefices, neither that any man do falsly feign himself to have been of the Emperors houshold, which hath not been comprehended within the league and agreement made by the Princes, neither that any man attempt to take away the Patronages from any Lay-man, or aggravate the small Prebends of Curates, or Churches with Pensions, neither that they do use in getting of Benefices and Bulls, any fraud, deceit, false instruments, corrupt witnesses, and cloaked Simony; neither that any man presume to obtain any regress, or other thing contrary to the sacred Canons, right, honesty, equity and reason, upon pain of the most grievous offence of treason: the which to use with, that not only they going so contrary to God and all honesty; but also all their favourers, which do help, Council, harbour or give them any thing, all their Messengers, and Writers, Proctors, Sureties, and other their friends, shall incur, and receive condign punishment for so great offence and contempt of our commandment. From Octopent, &c.

¶ Here ensueth the Copy of a Letter written unto the Emperor Maximilian.

To our Most victorious Lord, Maximiliam the Emperor, Jacobus Seleſtadiensis most humble commendations.

MOst Victorious Emperor, when I had read your Majesties Epistle, and received instructions of your Secretary, I prepared my self with all my whole endeavour to satisfie your Majesties desire. For even from my youth hitherto, I have applyed all my care and study, first for the honour of your Majesty, and consequently for the amplifying of the German nation, and sacred Roman Empire. Albeit I know my self far unable to satisfie your desire and purpose, and there are many which can fulfill this matter much better, which have greater learning and experience of these common matters. There be also with other Princes, and in the Senates of Commonwealths, many excellent learned men, which can exornate and beautifie Germany, and perswade to reduce all the Clergy unto a Christian Discipline, and to an unity and peace of the universal Church. Wherein, not only your Majesty, but also your predecessors, as Charles the Great, and his Son Ludovicus Pius, the Othoes, Conrades, Fredericks, and Henricks, and last of all, Sigismundus, have with all labour and diligence travelled, being stirred thereunto undoubtedly through the zeal and charity which they bear unto almighty God, and thankfulnes to Christ for his benefits which he hath bestowed upon mankind, and specially for the benefit of his most bitter passion. For Christ became not poor for us, that we should live in all vice and wantonnes upon his patrimony, and shew forth our ambition and covetousnes; neither did he suffer hunger, that we should glut up our selves; nor suffered labours, chastity, and grievous torments, that we should live in idlenes, wantonnes, and all kind of voluptuousnes. Neither they which were contributers, and Benefactors to Churches, indowing the Ministery thereof with their temporal riches, had any such respect herein, that the Clergy should live only in idlenes, having all things at their will, without labour. Surely there was another cause, why that they in times past did impoverish themselves and their, to endow the Church; verily, that they might the better attend unto Divine Service, without care of want of living (which they might easily get and gather out of the Fields, Woods Meadows and Waters), and to the intent that they should liberally give Alms unto the poor Christians, Widows, Orphans, Aged and Sick persons. For in the Institutions of the Canonical profession, which we suppose was written by the commandment of Ludovicus Pius the Emperor, and allowed by the Council of the Bishops, thus it is read: The goods of the Church (as it is alledged by the Fathers, and contained in the Chapters before) are the vows of the faithful, and patrimony of the poor. For the faithfull, through the forwardnes of their faith and love of Christ, being inflamed, having an earnest desire of that heavenly Kingdom, have enriched the holy Church with their own goods, that thereby the Souldiers of Christ might be nourished, the Church adorned, the poor refreshed, and captives according to the opportunity of time redeemed. Wherefore such as have the administration of those goods, ought diligently to be looked upon, that they do not convert them unto their own proper use, but rather according to their substance and possibility they do not neglect them, in whom Christ is fed and cloathed. Prosper is also of the same mind, affirming that holy men did not challenge the Church goods to their own use, as their own proper goods, but as things commended unto the poor, to be divided amongst them. For that is to contemn that which a man possesseth, not to possess a thing for himself, but for others, neither to covet the Church goods with covetousenes to have them to himself, but to take them with a godly zeal to help other. That which the Church hath, is common to all them which have nothing, neither ought they to give any thing of that unto them (saith he) which have of their own; for to give unto them which have enough, is but to cast things away.

Ex Illyrico.

To return now to the order of Popes, where we left before, speaking of Innocentius the eighth. After the said Innocentius, next succeeded Pope Alexander the sixth. In which Alexander, among other horrible things, this is one to be noted, that when Gemes (Princeps named him Demes) brother to Bajazetes the Great Turk, was Pope Alexander.

was committed by the Rhodians to the safe custody, first of Pope Innocent, then of Alexander the sixth, for whose keeping, the Pope received every year 40000 Crowns; yet notwithstanding, when Pope Alexander afterward was compelled to send the said Gemes to Charles the eighth, the French King, for a pledge, because the French King should not procure the Great Turks favour, by sending his Brother Gemes to him to be slain, he being hired by the Turk, caused the said Gemes to be poysoned, who, in his journey going toward the French King, died at Terracina. Ex Hieronymo Mario.

The Pope poysoneth Gemes the Turks Brother, being committed to his custody. Ex Paulo Jovio lib. 2. Ex Pencero lib. 5. Ex Hieronymo Mario.

Moreover, in the said Hieronymus Marius, it appareth that this Alexander taking displeasure with the foresaid Charles the French King, about the winning of Naples, sent to Bajazetes the Turk, to fight against the forsaid Charles. Ex eodem.

The Pope feeteth the Great Turk against the French King. Ex Sab. Monsterillo 2. Cosmograph.

Munsterus lib. 4. Cosmog. declaring the foresaid History of Gemes something otherwise, first calleth him Zizemmus, and saith that he was first committed by the Rhodians to the French King. And when as Joannes Huniades aforementioned did labour to the French King to have him, thinking by that means to obtain a noble victory against the Turk, as it was not unlike: This Alexander the Pope, through his fraudulent flattery, got him of the French King into his own hands, by whose means the said Gemes afterward was poysoned, as is in manner before expressed.

Unto these poysoned acts of the Pope, let us also adjoyn his malicious wickedness, with like fury exercised upon Antonius Mancinellus, which Mancinellus being a man of excellent learning, because he wrote an eloquent Oration against his wicked manners and filthy life, with other vices, he therefore commanded both his hands and his tongue to be cut off, playing much like with him, as Antoninus the Tyrant once did with M. Cicero, for writing against his horrible life, as length, as one poyson requireth another, this poysond Pope, as he was sitting with his Cardinals, and other rich Senators of Rome at dinner, his servants unawars brought to him a wrong Bottle, wherewith he was poysoned, and his Cardinals about him.

Mancinellus, writing against the wickedness of the Pope, lost his hands and tongue.

Poyson requited with poyson.

In the time of this Pope Alexander also it hapned (which is not to be pretermitted) how that the Angel, which stood in the high top of the Popes Church, was beaten down with terrible Thunder; which thing seemed then to declare the ruine and fall of the Popedom. After this Pope, next succeeded Pius the third, about the year of our Lord, 1503. After whom came next Julius the second, a man so far passing all other in iniquity, that Wicelius, and such other of his own friends writing of him, are compelled to say of him, Marti illum quam Christo deditiorem fuisse; that is, that he was more given to War and Battel, than to Christ. Concerning the madnes of this man; this is most certainly known, that at what time he was going to War, he cast the Keys of Saint Peter into the River Tibris, saying, that forsomuch as the Keys of Peter would not serve him to his purpose, he would take himself to the Sword of Paul. Whereupon Philip Melanthon, amongst many other writing upon the same, maketh this Epigram.

The high Angel of the Palace throwen down.

Pope Pius 3. Pope Julius 2.

Cum contra Gallos bellum Papa Julius esset
Gesturus, sicut fama vetusta docet:
Ingentes Martis turmas contraxit, & urbem
Egressus sævas edidit ore minas.
Iratusque sacras claves in flumina jecit
Tibridis, hic urbi poni ubi junget aquas.
Inde manu strictum vagina diripit ensem,
Exclamansque truci talia voce refert:
Hic gladius Pauli nos nunc defendet ab hoste,
Quandoquidem clavis nil juvat ista Petri.

Whereupon also Gilbert Ducherius maketh this Epigram.

In Gallum, ut fama est, bellum gesturus acerbum,
Armatam eduxit Julius urbe manum.
Accinctus gladio, claves in Tibridis amnem
Projecit, & sævus talia verba facit:
Quum Petri nihil efficiant ad prælia claves,
Auxilio Pauli forsitan ensis erit.

{KING Hen.7.}

The sense of these Epigrams in English, is this.

When Julius Pope against the French determined to make War:
As fame reports, he gathered up great troops of men from far.
And to the Bridge of Tibur then,
marching as he were wood;
His holy Keys he took and cast them down into the flood.
And afterward into his hand
he took a naked Sword:
And shaking it broke forth into this fierce and warlike word:
This Sword of Paul (quoth he) shall now defend us from our foe;
Since that this Key of Peter doth.
nothing avail thereto.

Of this Julius it is certainly reported, that partly with his Wars, partly with his cursings, with in the space of seven years, as good as 200000 Christians were destroyed. First, he besiged Ravenna against the Venetians; then Servia, Imolia, Faventia, Forolivium, Bononia, and other Cities, which he gate out of Princes hands, not without much bloodshed. The Chronicles of John Sleyden make mention, that when this Julius was made Pope he took an Oath, promising to have a Council within two years: but when he had no leisure thereunto, being occupied with his Wars in Italy among the Venetians, and with the French King, and in Ferraria, and in other Countries; nine of his Cardinals, departing from him, came into Millain, and there appointed a Council at the City of Pise; amongst whom, the chief were Bernardus, Cruceus, Guilelmus Prenestimus, Franciscus, Constantinus, with divers others; unto whom also were adjoyned the Procurators of Maximilian the Emperor, and of Charles the French King. So the Council was appointed the year of our Lord, 1511, to begin in the Kalends of September. The cause why they did so call this Council, was thus alledged, because the Pope had so broken his Oath, and all this while he gave no hope to have any Council; and also becaufe there were divers other crimes, where upon they had to accuse him. Their purpose was to remove him out of his seat, the which he had procured through Bribes and ambition. Julius hearing this, given out contrary commandment, under great pain, that no man should obey them, and calleth himself another Council against the next year, to be begun the 19th day of April. The French King understanding Pope Julius to joyn with the Venetians, and so to take their part against him, convented a Council at Thurin, in the Month of September; in which Council these Questions were proposed.

The Popes Law giveth leave to kill all that be secured of him.

The Wars and bloodshed of Pope Julius 2.

A Council called to depose Pope Julius.

The Pope perjured.

Whether it was lawful for the Pope to move War against any Prince without cause.

Whether any Prince in defending himself, might invade his adversary, and deny his Obedience.

Unto the which Questions it was answered, That neither the Bishop ought to invade, and also that it was lawful for the King to defend himself. Moreover, that the Pragmatical sanction was to be observed through the Realm of France: Neither that any unjust Excommunications ought to be feared, if they were found to be unjust. After this the King sent to Julius the answer of his Council, requiring him either to agree to Peace, or to appoint a general Council some other where, where this matter might be more fully decided. Julius would neither of both these, but forthwith accurfed Charles the French King, with all his Kingdom. At the length a Ravenna, in a great War he was overcome by the French King, and at last, after much slaughter and great bloodshed, and mortal War, this Pope died in the year of our Lord, 1513, the 21. day of February.

The Pragmatical Sanction established, mentioned before.

No unjust Excommunication to be feared.

If

{KING Hen.7.}

The Turks doings requisite to be known of christians.

IF it were not that I fear to overlay this our Volume with heaps of forreign Histories, which have professed chiefly to intreat of Acts and Monuments here done at home; I would adjoyn after these Popes above rehearsed, some discourse also of the Turks story; of their rising and cruel persecution of the Saints of God, to the great annoyance and peril of Christendom: yet notwithstanding, certain causes there be, which necessarily require the knowledge of their order and doings, and of their wicked proceedings, their cruel tyranny, and bloody victories, the ruine and subversion of so many Christian Churches, with the horrible murders and captivity of infinite Christians, to be made plain and manifest, as well to this our country of England, as also to other Nations.

The first cause.

First, For the better explaining of the Prophefies of the New Testament, as in Saint Pauls Epistle to the Thessalonians, and also in the Revelation of Saint John. Which Scriptures otherwise, without the opening of these Histories, cannot so perfectly be understood. Of the which Scriptures, we mind hereafter (Christ granting) orderly, as the course of matter shall lead us, to make rehersal.

The second cause.

Another cause is, that we may learn thereby, either with the publick Church to lament with our Brethren, such a great defection and decay of Christian faith, through these wicked Turks; or else may fear thereby our own danger.

The third cause.

The third cause, that we may ponder more deeply with our selves the scourge of God for our sins, and corrupt doctrine; which in the sequel hereof, more evidently may appear to our eyes, for our better admonition.

The fourth cause.

Fourthly, The consideration of this horrible perfecution of the Turks, rising chiefly by our discord and dissention among our selves, may reduce us again from our domestical Wars, in killing and burning one of another, to joyn together in Christian patience and concord.

The fifth cause.

Fifthly, But chiefly, these great victories of the Turks, and improsperous speed of our men fighting against them, may admonish and teach us, following the example of the old Israelites, how to seek for greater strength to encounter with these enemies of Christ, than hitherto we have done. First, we must consider that the whole power of Satan, the Prince of this World, goeth with the Turks. Which to resist, no strength of mans Army is sufficient, but only the name, spirit, and power of our Lord Jesus the Son of God, going with us in our battels; as among the old Israelites the Ark of Gods covenant and promise went with them also fighting against the enemies of God. For so are we taught in the Scripture, that we Christian men have no strength but in Christ only. Whether we War against the Devil, or against the Turk, it is true that the Scripture saith, Sine me nihil potestis facere, i. without me you can do nothing. Otherwise there is no puissance to stand against the Devil, or to conquer the world, Nisi fides nostra, that is, our Faith only; to which all the promises of God (touching salvation) be annexed, beyond which promises we must not go, for the Word must be our rule. He that presumeth beyond the promises in the Word expressed, goeth not, but wandreth, he cannot tell whether. Neither must we appoint God how to save the World, but must take that way which he hath appointed. Let us not set God to school, nor comprehend his holy spirit within our Sculs. He that made us without our Council, did also redeem us as pleased him. If he be merciful, let us be thankful. And if his mercies surmount our capacity, let us therefore not refuse but search his Word, and thereunto apply our Will; which if we will do, all our contentions will be foon at a point. Let us therefore search the Will of our God in his Word, and if he will his salvation to stand free to all Nations, why do we make merchandise thereof? If he have graciously offered his waters to us, without mony or money worth, let us not hedge in the plenteous springs of his grace given us.

Admonition to fight against the Turk.

Christian faith necessary to be joyned with outward force against the Turk.

Gratis accumulati estis, gratis redimimini. Esay 52.

Omnes sitientes venite ad aquas, emite absque argento & commutatione. Esay 55.

And finally, if God have determined his own Son only to stand alone, let not us presume to admix with his Majesty any of our trumpery. He that bringeth Saint George or Saint Dennis as Partners to the field to fight against the Turk, leaveth Christ (no doubt) at home. Now how we have fought these many years against the Turk, though stories keep silence, yet the successe declareth. We fight against a persecutor, being no less persecutors our selves. We wrestle against a bloody Tyrant, and our hands be as full of blood as his. He killeth Christs people with the Sword, and we burn them with fire. He observing the works of the Law, seeketh his justice by the same; the like also do we. But neither he nor we seek our justification as we should, that is, by Faith only in the Son of God.

And what marvel then, your Doctrine being as corrupt almost as his, and our conversation worse, if Christ fight not with us, fighting against the Turk? The Turk hath prevailed so mightily, not because Christ is weak, but because that Christians be wicked, and their Doctrine impure. Our Temples with Images, our hearts with Idolary are polluted: our Priests think before God for Adultery, being restrained from lawful Matrimony. The Name of God is in our mouths, but his fear is not in our hearts. We War against the Turk with our Works, Masses, Traditions and Ceremonies; but we fight not against him with Christ, and with the Power of his Glory, which if we did, the Field were won.

Reformation of religion requisite before we fight the Turks.

Wherefore briefly to conclude, saying my judgment in this behalf, what I suppose; this hope I have, and do believe, That when the Church of Christ with the Sacraments thereof shall be so reformed, that Christ alone shall be received to be our Justifier, all other Religions, Merits, Traditions, Images, Patrons and Advocates set apart, the Sword of the Christians, with the strength of Christ, shall soon vanquith the Turks pride and fury. But of this more largely in the process of this story.

Faith getteth victory.

The fifth cause.

The fifth and last cause, why I think the knowledge of the Turks History requisite to be considered, is this: because that many there be, which for that they be further from the Turks, and think therefore themselves to be out of danger, take little care and study what hapneth to their other Brethren. Wherefore, to the intent to excite their zeal and prayer to Almighty God, in this so lamentable state of Christs Church, I thought it requisite, by order of History, to give this our Nation also fourning to understand, what hath been done in other Nations by these cruel Turks, and what detriment hath been, and is like more to happen by them to the Church of Christ, except we make our earnest invocation to Almighty God, in the Name of his Son, to stop the course of the Devil by these Turks, and to stay this defection of Christians falling daily unto them, and to reduce them again to his Faith which are fallen from him. Which the Lord Jesus of his grace grant with speed. Amen.

Earnest invention necessary in the Church of Christ.

Before we enter into this story of the Turks and Saracens, first let us call to remembrance the Prophetie and forewarning of Saint Paul writing to the Thessalonians, in his second Epistle, in these words: Be not moved or troubled in your minds, either by preaching or writing, or by Letter from us, as though the day of the Lord were at hand; for the Lord will not come, except there come a defection first, and the wicked person be revealed, &c. Of this defection, sundry minds there be of sundry Expositors: some thinking this defection to mean a falling away from the Empire of Rome: some from the obedience of the Pope. But as Saint Paul little passed upon the outward glory of the Roman Empire; so lets he passed upon the proud obedience of the Pope. What Saint Paul meant by this defection, the reading of these Turkish stories, and the miserable falling away of these Churches by him before planted, will soon declare.

The place of S. Paul expounded, 2 Thes. 2. Speaking of the outward defection to come.

Another Misery there is in the Revelation, Apocal. 13. where the number of the Beast is counted 666. Whereby may seem, by all evidences, to be signified the rise Origin and springing of these beastly Saracens, as by the sequel hereof may appear, by the first rising of this devillish sect of Mahomet.

The number of the Apostate cap. 13. expounded.

Moreover, another place there is, cap. 16. Apocal. where we read, that by pouring out of the Vial of Gods wrath, of the sixth Angel, the great flood Euphrates was dryed up, to let in the Kings of the East; the opening of which prophetie may also more evidently appear, in considering the order and manner of the coming of these Turks into Europe.

Another place Apoc. 16.

Some also apply to the Turks certain Prophefies of Daniel, Ezechiel, and other places of the Old Testament, but I omit, forsomuch as the Prophefies of the Old Testament, if they be taken in their proper and native sense, after my judgment, do extend no further than Et statua Angelus ejus pedibus suis &c.

to

to the death of our Saviour, and to the end of the Jews Kingdom. Albeit herein I do not prejudicate to any mans opinion, but that every man may abound in his own senſe.

The time of Mahomet the falſe Prophet expounded.

As touching the year and time when this peſtiferous ſect of Mahomet the firſt began, Hiſtories do not fully conſent, ſome affirming that it began, Anno 621. and in the tenth year of Heraclius the Emperor of Conſtantinople; in which mind is Ioannes Lucidus. As Munſterus counteth, it was in the year of our Lord, 622. Martin Luther and John Carion refer it to the 18th year of the reign of Heraclius, which is the year of our Lord, 630. Unto the which number, the computation of the Beaſt ſignified in the Apocalypſe, doth not far diſagree, which numbereth the name of the Beaſt, with three Greek letters χ ξ ϛ, which Greek letters, after the ſupputation of the Greekians, make the number of ſix hundred ſixty and ſix.

Mahomet of the ſtock of the Iſhmaelites, diſtelling in Arabia.

In this all writers agree, that this damnable Mahomet was born in the Country of Arabia, bordering on the Eaſt part of Jewry. His father was a Syrian, or a Perſian, his mother was an Iſhmalite, which Iſhmalites being a people of Arabia, were called the Agareni; Which term Mahomet afterward turned to the name of Saracens. Of this wretched Mahomet, mention was made before, where we ſhewed, how he making himſelf the higheſt Prophet, of all other, yet denieth not Chriſt to be an holy Prophet, and next to him, and Moſes alſo to be another. Moreover, he denieth not Mary the Mother of Chriſt to be a Virgin, and to have conceived Chriſt by the Holy Ghoſt: affirming further, that Chriſt in his own perſon was not crucified, but another called Judas for him. He greatly commendeth alſo John the ſon of Zachary for a Virgin: when he himſelf permitteth a man to have four Wives, and as many Concubines as he is able to find: and ſaith that whereas Chriſt and other Prophets had the gift given them to work miracles, he was ſent by force of ſword, to compel men to his Religion.

Mahomets Alchoran mingled with divers lawes.

The prodigeous vanities, lyes and blaſphemies contained in his Law called Alchoran, are rather to be laught at, than recited.

It is thought that Sergius a Neſtorian was a great doer with Mahomet, in contriving of this lying Alchoran, and ſo it doth well appear by the ſcope and pretence thereof, which eſpecially tendeth to this end, to take the divinity from the perſon of Chriſt, whom he granteth notwithſtanding to be a moſt holy man, and alſo that he is received up to God, and ſhall come again to kill Antichriſt, &c.

The number ration of the Apocal. 666.

Moreover, this ridiculous Alchoran is ſo blanched and powdered with divers mixtures of the Chriſtians, Jews, and the Gentiles Laws, giving ſuch liberty to all wantonneſs of fleſh, ſetting up Circumciſion, abſtaining from ſwines fleſh, and Judaical lotions, and ſo much ſtanded upon Father Abraham, that it is ſuppoſed of ſome, this filthy Alchoran, not to be ſet out in the days of Mahomet, but that certain Jews had ſome handling alſo in this matter, and put it out after his death, and ſo ſeemeth ſtrit to take his force about the number of years limited in the Apocalypſe, as is aforeſaid, where thus it is written: He that hath intelligence, let him count the number of the Beaſt: for it is the number of a man, and his number is ſix hundred ſixty and ſix.

Throughout ſubdued of the Saracens.

After this deviliſh Mahomet had thus ſeduced the people, teaching them that he came not by miracles, but by force of ſword to give his Law, and that they which will not obey it, muſt either be put to death, or elſe pay tribute (for ſo be the words of the Alchoran;) and after that he had gathered ſtrength about him of the Arabians, which Arabians had then occaſion to rebel againſt the Emperor, becauſe their ſtipends were not paid them of Heraclius the Emperors Officers, he began to range with force and violence in the parts of Syria, bordering near unto him, and firſt ſubdued Mecha, then Damaſcus; and further increaſing in power, he entred into Ægypt, and ſubdued the ſame. From thence he turned his power againſt the Perſians, with whom Coſroes the King of Perſia encountred with a puiſſant Army, overthrew the Saracens, and put Mahomet to flight. Of theſe Perſians came the Turks, which afterward joyning with the Saracens, maintained them againſt the Chriſtians. Ex Monſter.

Mahomet put to flight by Coſroes, King of the Perſians.

After the death of this Beaſt, which as ſome ſay, was poyſoned in his houſe, ſucceeded Ebeconra, or Ebubecer his Father in law, or as Bibliander affirmeth, his Son in law, who took upon him the government of the Chriſtians, and got the City Garza, and beſieged alſo Jeruſalem two years. He reigned two years, having for his chief City Damaſcus.

{KING Hin.7.}

Jeruſalem beſieged.

After him followed Omar, or Abumer, who conquered a great part of Syria, and got Ægypt.

The fourth King of the Saracens, after Mahomet, was Odman, then followed Haly, and after him Muhanias: which after a Siege of 7 years, obtained and got the Chriſtian City of Coſarea: alſo overcame the Perſians, with their King Orimalda, and ſubdued that Country to his Law.

Coſarea got of the Saracens.

The Kingdom of the Perſians ſubdued to the Saracens.

Thus the wicked Saracens, in the ſpace of thirty years, ſubdued Arabia, got Paleſtina, Phenicia, Syria, Ægypt, and Perſia, which came directly to the 666 years, Propheſied of in the Revelation of Saint John, as is aforeſaid. And not long after they proceeded further, and got Aſrik, and then Aſia, as in the proceſs of their ſtory ſhall appear, the Lord willing.

Arabia, Paleſtina, Phenicia, Syria, Ægypt, Perſia, ſubdued of the Saracens.

Conſtance the Emperor overcome by the Saracens.

Not long after Heraclius Emperor of Conſtantinople, ſucceeded Conſtance his Nephew, who in the 13. year of his Empire, fighting unluckily againſt the Saracens in Lycia, was overthrown of Mahamias aforeſaid, in the year of our Lord 655. Which Conſtance, if he were not prospered by the Lord in his Wars, it was no great marvel, conſidering that he had ſlain his brother Theodoſius before at home; moreover, lived in inceſtuous Matrimony: alſo, being inclined to certain new Sects, could not abide the contrary teachers, but ſlew them which admoniſhed him thereof. The ſaid Conſtance going afterward to Italy, was alſo overcome of the Lumbardi, &c. The Saracens after this victory, ſpoiled all Rhodes.

Rhodes ſpoiled of the Saracens.

Although theſe curſed Saracens in theſe their great victories and conquelts, were not without domeſtical ſedition and diviſions among themſelves, yet the Princes of the Saracens, being called then Sultans, had in their poſſeſſion the government of Syria, Ægypt, Aſrik, and of a great part of Aſia, about the term of 400 years, till at length the Saracen King which ruled in Perſia, fighting againſt the Saracen of Babylon, fought aid of the Turks, to fight with him againſt the Sultan of Babylon. The which Turks by little and little ſurpriſed upon the Sultan of Perſia, and not long after putting him out of place, uſurped the Kingdom of Perſia: which afterwards went further, as ye ſhall hear, the Lord willing. And this is the firſt beginning of the Turks dominion.

Sultans firſt called.

The firſt riſing of the Turks.

The deſtruction of the Turks unordinate Empire.

Theſe Turks, after they had thus overcome many Countries and Provinces, and made their power large and mighty both in Aſia and Europa, began to divide their Kingdoms and Countries amongſt themſelves. But when they could not agree, but with deadly War contended for the bounds of thoſe Kingdoms and Dominions, in the mean time four of the principal Families, conquering and ſubduing all the reſt, parted the whole Empire amongſt themſelves. And yet they alſo not ſo contented, fell to ſuch cruel hatred, contention, war and ſlaughter, (no doubt by the juſt Judgment of God againſt his blaſphemous Enemies) that there was no end thereof, until the remnant of the ancient Turks was utterly rooted out.

The Turks dominions parted into four families.

For it is evident that there are few now remaining, which are Turks indeed by birth and blood, and that the State of that great Empire is not upholden, but by the ſtrength and power of Soldiers, which have been Chriſtians, and now are turned to Mahomets Religion; ſo that even their own natural Language is now out of uſe amongſt them, ſaving in certain Families of their Nobility and Gentlemen.

The Chriſtian Kingdoms and Churches deſtroyed by the Turks are a warning for us, whom God hath yet ſpared.

Theſe four Families above-mentioned, with their Captains and Armies, about the year of our Lord 1330, went raging throughout all Aſia and Europe, and every one of them conquered ſome part of the Countries where they paſſed.

The diſſenſion of the Chriſtians do make the Turk ſo ſtrong.

The cauſes of theſe great Invaſions and Victories, were the diſſention and diſcord, falſhood, idleneſs, uncouſtancy, greedy avarice, lack of truth and fidelity among Chriſtian Men of all ſtates and degrees, both high and low. For by the wilful defection and back-ſliding of the Chriſtians, the Turkiſh power did exceedingly increaſe, in that many many deſiring the licentious life and liberty of War, and allured with the proſperous ſucceſs of things, forſook the Church of God, and made themſelves bondſlaves to Mahumet and his Deviliſh Sect; both becauſe that fleſhly liberty is delightful to all Men, and partly alſo becauſe as fortune favoureth, ſo commonly the wills of Men incline. And again, ſuch as be prophane and without the fear of God, (whereof there is an infinite number in the Church) in all Ages are wont commonly to judge of Religion, according to the ſucceſs of Realms and Kingdoms. For many, not only for the variety of opinions, but alſo for the diverſity of events and fortune amongſt Men, have enquired and do enquire, Whether there be any Church of God diſtinct from other Nations: what it is, and where it is: eſpecially, forſomuch as the greateſt part of Men, both in the old time, when as the four Monarchies flouriſhed in order, was ignorant of this Doctrine, which is peculiar to the Church alone, and now alſo the barbarity of Mahumet prevaileth and reigneth in the moſt part of the World. And how ſtandeth this with Mans Reaſon, that a ſmall number, both miſerable and alſo feebled and broken with many Battels, ſhould be regarded and loved of God, and the other flouriſhing in all Wealth, Proſperities, Victories, Authority and Power, ſhould be rejected and deſpiſed of God, ſeeing there is no Power and Authority, but by the Ordinance of God? Albeit therefore the power of the Turks hath been, for theſe two hundred years, of greater force than any other Monarchy of the World beſides, yet is there no Imperial Dignity to be eſteemed in that Turkiſh tyranny, but amongſt thoſe Nations only, where the Heavenly Doctrine of the Goſpel is preached, and other Diſciplines neceſſary for the Church of God, and the common life of Man maintained and regarded; whereas the Laws of God, and other honeſt and civil Ordinances agreeable to the ſame, do flouriſh and reign: where lawful Judgment is exerciſed; where vertue is honoured and rewarded; where ſin and wickedneſs is puniſhed; where honeſt Families are maintained and defended.

{KING Hin.7.}

No Imperial Country in all the Turkiſh Dominions.

Theſe things are not regarded amongſt the Turks, the enemies of the Son of God, and all lawful Empires: becauſe they diſſolve and reject all godly Societies, honeſt Diſcipline, good Laws, Policies, righteous Judgment, the Ordinance of Matrimony, and godly Families. For what hath the Empire of the Turks been hitherto, but moſt deadly, cruel, and perpetual War, to work all miſchief, deſtruction and deſolation? To ſubvert good Laws, Cities, Kingdoms, Policies, and to enlarge their cruel Power and Dominion? The ſtay and ſtrength whereof is not love and favour proceeding of vertue and juſtice, as in Lawful and well Governed Empires; but fear, violence, oppreſſion, ſwarms and infinite thouſands of barbarous and moſt wicked people, Miniſters of Satans malice and fury. Which kind of Dominion and Tyranny hath been condemned by the Voice of God many years ago; the Teſtimonies whereof the Lord would have to remain in the Church, leſt the godly, being moved with the power and ſucceſs thereof, ſhould fall away and forſake the Son of God.

Ezek. 39 Apo. 20.

Wherefore, let us not ſeek for any Imperial ſtate in that barbarity: but let us be thankful, and acknowledge the great benefit of God, for that he hath reſerved to us certain remnants of the Roman Empire: And let us call upon him daily with hearty petitions and groans, and with zeal and love to the Houſe of God, that this Turkiſh power joyned with the malice of Satan againſt the Son of God, prevail not againſt the poor Congregations and little Remnant of his Church, as it hath hitherto done againſt thoſe ſtrong and noble Chriſtian Kingdoms and Churches, where now we ſee the Turkiſh tyranny to reign, and Satan to have taken full poſſeſſion. Whoſe ſtate was once far better than ours is now, and more like to continue without ſuch horrible overthrows and deſolation. Oh that we might foreſee a little the great danger that hangeth over our heads. For though the Turk ſeemeth to be far off, yet do we nouriſh within our breaſts at home, that which may ſoon cauſe us to feel his cruel hand and worſe, if worſe may be; to over-run us; to lay our Land waſte; to ſcatter us amongſt the Infidels, the Enemies and Blaſphemers of the Son of God.

Now, although theſe four Families above-mentioned long continued together in bloody Wars, deadly hatred, yet one of them paſſed the reſt in all cruelty and tyranny, and ſubduing the other three Families, took upon him the Government alone, and ſo became the firſt Monarch, or Emperor, that reigned amongſt them, called Ottomannus; of whom all that reigned after him were called Ottomanni. Who ſucceeding orderly of his Line, have occupied the ſame Dominion and Seat of the Turks, from the year of our Lord 1300, unto this preſent time, which have been to the number of 12, of the which 12, in ſuch order as they lived and reigned, I intend (Chriſt ſo permitting) ſeverally and compendiouſly ſomething to intreat, briefly abſtracting, out of prolix and tedious writers, ſuch ſpecialties, as for us Chriſtians ſhall be briefly requiſite to be known.

Four principal Families of the Turks.

The Family of Ottomannus.

Ottomannus the firſt great Emperor, or Tyrant of the Turks.

Ottomannus the firſt Emperor of the Turks.

THIS Ottomannus was at the firſt of poor eſtate, and of obſcure amongſt the common ſort of Men, coming of a baſe Progeny, and of ruſtical Parents; but through his valiantneſs and activity in War, he got him a great name amongſt the Turks. For he being a Man of hierce courage, refuſing no labour, and delighting in War, and gathering together by great ſubtilty a multitude of common Soldiers, began to make War, and by conqueſt and victories to advance himſelf and his Family. Firſt, He began to rob and ſpoil with a great band of rovers, and afterward he attempted to ſet upon all Men. Neither did he vex and deſtroy the Chriſtians only, but ſet upon his own Nation alſo, and fought all occaſion to ſubdue them wholly unto him. For now the Princes and Captains of the Turks inflamed with ambition and deſire of rule, began to fall out and contend among themſelves, inſomuch that they fell to domeſticial and inward War, with all the power they could.

Forward War among the Turks.

Ottomannus having this occaſion very fit and meet to accompliſh that which he long had fought for, gathering unto him all ſuch as he thought to be given to robbing and ſpoiling, and ſet all upon miſchief, in ſhort time began to grow in Authority, and firſt ſet upon certain Towns, as he ſaw opportunity to ſerve him. Of which Towns ſome he took by force, ſome by yielding, other ſome he ſpoiled and overthrew to terrify the reſt, thus laying the firſt foundation of his riſing. In the mean time, the diſcord which was amongſt the Chriſtians was no ſmall advantage to this Ottomannus, by occaſion whereof, he within ten years ſpace ſubdued Bithynia, and all the Provinces about Pontus: alſo Natolia, which comprehendeth all the Dominion of the Greeks within Aſia: Ancyra in Phrygia: Synope a City in Galatia; and Sabaſtia a City in Cappadocia: and thus ſtill prevailing, he increaſed in ſhort time to a mighty power, either through the ſecret Judgment of God againſt that Nation, or elſe becauſe God would have them ſo far and ſo cruelly to prevail, for the puniſhment of the ſins of other Nations, like as it was Propheſied before, that ſuch a Kingdom there ſhould be of Gog and Magog.

The coming up of Ottomannus.

Bithynia, Natolia, Ancyra, Synope, Sabaſtia ſubdued.

Ezek. 38

This Ottomannus, after he had reigned 28 years, in the year of our Lord 1327, died, and departed to his Maihumet, leaving behind him three Sons, of whom Orchanes, being the youngeſt, killed his two Brethren, whilſt they were at variance between themſelves.

Orchanes the ſecond Emperor after Ottomannus.

Orchanes, the ſecond Emperor of the Turks after Ottomannus.

Miſia, Lydia, Lycaonia, Phrygia, Caria, Frigia, Sicilia, Nicomedia: Chriſtipol, Sea Euxinus, Byſia.

ORchanes, the youngeſt of the Sons of Ottomannus, obtained after he had ſlain his two Brethren, took the Regiment of the Turks after his Father. Who after he had drawn to him the hearts of the multitude, ſuch as had their diſpoſitions ſet upon the licentious life of War, converted his power further to enlarge his Fathers Dominion, winning and ſubduing Myſia, Lydia, Lycaonia, Phrygia and Caria: All which Countries, being within the compaſs of Aſia, unto the Sea-ſide of Helleſpontus, and the Sea Euxinus, he added to the Turkiſh Empire. Alſo he wan Priſia, which was the Metropolitan City of Bithynia, nia, which then he made the chief seat of the Turks Empire. Besides thefe moreover, he conquered Nicea, and got Nicomedia: all which were before Chriſtian Cities and Regions. And yet all this could not make the Chriſtian Princes in Grecia to ceaſe their civil Wars, and to joyn and accord among themſelves; Such debate and variance, was then between Cantacuzenus on the Greeks part, and Paleologus the Emperor of Conſtantinople. By reaſon whereof, the Turks aid was ſent for out of Aſia to help our Chriſtians one to kill another, and at length to get all thoſe parts of Europe from them both. Who if they had, according to their profeſſion, ſo well joyned in Brotherly Unity, as they did in cruel hoſtility diſſent, neither had Orchanes ſo prevailed in getting Pruſia from the Grecians, neither had the Turks ſo ſoon preſumed into Europe as afterward they did. Orchanes after theſe victories, when he had reigned two and twenty years, was ſtrucken, ſome ſay, with a Dart in the ſhoulder, at the Siege of Pruſia. The opinion of other is, that he fighting againſt the Tartarians, where he loſt a great part of his Army, was there alſo ſlain himſelf, Anno 1349.

Civil War among the Greeians.

By the diſcord of Chriſtians the Turks increaſe.

Amurathes the third after Ottomannus.

THE Greek writers do hold that Orchanes had two Sons Solimannus and Amurathes. Of which two, firſt Solimannus reigned, albeit not long. After him followed Amurathes, who after that Aſia now was ſubdued by his predeceſſors, fought by all means and ways how to proceed further, and to invade Europe. To whoſe ambitious purpoſe the Domeſtical Wars of the Chriſtians gave unproſperous occaſion, which occaſion is thus declared. Certain diſcord fell between the Princes of Greece (whoſe Captain was Cantacuzenus) and Paleologus Emperor of Conſtantinople. Whereupon Paleologus, for that he was not able to make his party good with the Greciens, moſt unwiſely ſent for Amurathes to help him. Who being glad to have ſuch an occaſion offered, which he ſo long had fought, ſent to aid him 12000 Turks into Thracia: but firſt he uſed all delays he could of craftie policy, to the intent that the Greeks firſt ſhould waſte their ſtrength, and power upon themſelves, whereby he might be more able afterward to ſet upon them, and to accompliſh his conceived deſire.

Amurathes the third after Ottomannus, Amurathes ſeeketh occaſion to invade Europe.

The Turks thus being called into Europe, by the Chriſtians, whether they taſting the ſweetneſs of the ſoil, incenſed Amurathes their Emperor to make Invaſion, or whether Amurathes of his own head thought good to uſe the time, in the year of our Lord 1363, he came himſelf over into Europe with 60000 Turks, falling upon the Greciens, being waſted and ſpent with their long Wars and Battels before. The pretence of the Deviliſh Turk was, to aid and aſſiſt the Emperor Paleologus, whether he would or no, and to ſubdue ſuch as had fallen from him. The Chriſtian Ships of the Ligurians, for many were hired to conduct them over, taking for every Soldier a piece of Gold. Ex Pencer & aliis.

The firſt coming of the Turks into Europe.

The covetouſneſs of the Chriſtian brought over the Turks.

Thus the Turks Army being conveyed over by the Grecian Sea called Hellеſpontus, firſt got Calipolis, with other Towns and Cities bordering about the Sea, and their planting themſelves, and preparing Ships of their own for tranſporting their Munitions out of Aſia, advanced their power further into Thracia, and there won Philippolis, then got Adrianopolis, which was not far from Conſtantinople, and there Amurathes made his chief ſeat. Then began Paleologus the Emperor at length to bewail his offer and covenant made with Amurathes. When the Turks had expugned thus a great part of Thracia, they extended forth their Army unto Myſia, which they ſoon ſubdued: from thence proceeding and conquering the Beſſos and Triballos, they entred into Servia and Bulgaria, where they joyning Battel with Lazarus Deſpota, Prince of Servia, and with other Dukes of Dalmatia and Epyrus, won of them the Field, and put them to the worſe; where Lazarus Deſpota being taken, and committed to Priſon, ended his life. This Lazarus had a certain faithful client or ſervant, who to revenge his Maſters death, with a bold courage, although ſeeing death before his eyes, yet ventured his life ſo far, that he came to the Tyrant and thruſt him through with his Dagger. This Amurathes reigned 23 years, and was ſlain in the year of our Lord, 1372.

Bajazetes the fourth after Ottomannus.

THE power of the Turks began to increaſe in Europe, what time Bajazetes, the firſt of that name, after the death of his Father, entred the poſſeſſion of the Turks Kingdom. This Bajazetes had two Brethren, Solimannus and Sauces: which Sauces had his Eyes put out by his Father, for ſtriving for the Kingdom. Solimannus was ſlain of his Brother. Thus Bajazetes, beginning his Kingdom with the murther of his Brother, reduced his Imperial Seat from Pruſia a City of Bithynia, unto Adrianople, intending with himſelf to ſubdue both Aſia and Europe to his own power. Firſt he ſet upon the Servians and Bulgarians, thinking to revenge his Fathers Death, where he gave the overthrow to Marcus Defpota, with all the Nobility of the Servians and Bulgarians, and the put all thoſe parts under his ſubjection, unto the Fines and Borders of the Illyrians. All Thracia moreover he brought likewiſe under his yoke, only Conſtantinople and Pera excepted. That done, he invaded the realme of Grecia, prevailing againſt the Countries of Theſſalia, Macedonia, Phocides and Attica, ſpoiling and burning as he paſſed without any reſiſtance; and ſo, returning with innumerable ſpoil of the Chriſtians unto Adrianople, laid Siege to Conſtantinople the ſpace of eight years, and had expugned the ſame, but that Paleologus, being brought to extremity, was driven to crave aid of the French-men, and of Sigiſmund the Emperor. Who, being accompanied with a ſufficient power of French-men and Germans, came down to Hungaria, and toward Servia, againſt the Turk. Bajazetes hearing of their coming, raiſed his Siege from Conſtantinople, and with 60000 Horſemen came to Nicopolis, where he encountring with them, overthrew all the Chriſtian Army, took John the Captain of the French power Priſoner: Sigiſmundus, which before in the Council of Conſtance had burned John Hus and Jerome of Prague, hardly eſcaped by flying. Bajazetes, after the Victory got, carried away Duke John, with five other in Bands, into Pruſia, where before his face he cauſed all the other Chriſtian Priſoners to be cut in pieces. Afterward the ſaid John, being Ranſomed with 200000 Crowns, was delivered. Some Authors refer this Story to the time of Calepinus, as followeth hereafter to be ſeen.

Marcus Deſpota ſlain with all the Nobility of the Servians, Bulgarians, Macedonians, Theſſalians, Phocides, Attica, Beotia, Boeotia, Bulgaria, Rhodope, Thracia, Aſtica, Troſſalia: with other Chriſtian Countries, conquered by the Turk.

Conſtantinople beſieged eight years by the Turks.

The Chriſtians overthrown of the Turks; Sigiſmund the Emperor put to flight.

The barbarous cruelty of the Turk againſt the Chriſtians.

Bajazetes the cruel Tyrant after this Victory won, and Tyranny ſhewed upon the Chriſtians, returned again to the Siege of Conſtantinople, fully bending himſelf to conquer and ſubdue the ſame; which thing, no doubt he had accompliſhed, but that the Providence of God had found ſuch a means, that Tamerlanes King of Parthia, with an hundred thouſand Horſemen, and ſwarms of Footmen, like a violent flood over-running Aſia, and preſſing upon Syria and Sebaſtia, had taken Orthobules, the Son of Bajazetes, Priſoner, and afterward ſlew him, exerciſing the like cruelty upon his Priſoners, as Bajazetes had done before upon the Chriſtians; inſomuch that he ſpared neither Sex nor Age of the Turkiſh multitude: of whom he cauſed twelve thouſand at one time to be over-ridden and trodden down under his Horſes feet. By reaſon whereof, Bajazetes the Tyrant was enforced to raiſe his Siege from Conſtantinople, and to return his power into Aſia; where he, near the Hill called Stella, pitched his Tents there to encounter with Tamerlanes.

Tamerlanes a Parthian ſtirred up of God, to revenge the Chriſtians.

Bajazetes taken and ſlain. Cruelty laſtly revenged with cruelty.

Bajazetes raiſeth his Siege from Conſtantinople.

The Fight between theſe two, was long and great on both ſides, which was in the year of our Lord 1397, and the ſecond year after the ſlaughter of our Chriſtians at Nicopolis in Pannonia; but the Victory of this Battel fell to Tamerlanes at length. In the which Battel, as Munſterus writeth, were ſlain 200000 Turks. Among whom Bajazetes the Tyrant, having his Horſe ſlain under him, was taken Priſoner; and to make a ſpectacle of his wretched fortune, he was bound in Golden Fetters, and ſo being incloſed in an Iron Grate (whom before all Grecia could not hold) was led about and ſhewed through all Aſia, to be ſcorned and laught at: and moreover, was uſed inſtead of a ſtoolſtool to Tamerlanes, or a block, as often as he mounted upon his Horſe. Some add alſo, That he was made like a Dog to feed under Tamerlanes Table. The tyranny of which Bajazetes againſt the Chriſtians, as it was not much unlike to the cruelty of Valerianus the Roman Emperor above-mentioned, ſo neither was the example of his puniſhment much diſcrepant; for as Sapores King of the Perſians did with Valerianus in time of the Eighth Perſecution of the Primitive Church, ſo likewiſe was Bajazetes this Perſecutor worthily handled by Tamerlanes King of the Parthians, as in manner above-ſaid.

Tamerlanes after this Conqueſt paſſed with his Army into Meſopotamia, to Egypt, and all Syria, where he victoriouſly ſubduing the Cities and Munitions of the Turks, at length alſo conquered Damaſcus. In his Sieges his manner was, the firſt day to go all in White attire, the ſecond day in Red, the third day in Black, ſignifying thereby Mercy the firſt day, to them that yielded; the ſecond day the Sword; the third day fire and aſhes. At laſt, after great Victories, and Spoils gotten of the Turks, he returned into his Country again, and there died, Anno 1402.

In the mean time Bajazetes, in the ſecond year of his Captivity, died, leaving behind him divers Sons, Jeſus or Joſua the eldeſt, Muſſumanes, Moſes, Celebinus, or Calepinus, Jeſus the younger; Muſtaphas and Hali; of whom, firſt Jeſus the eldeſt was overcome and ſlain of Muſſumanes, which Muſſumanes afterward was delivered to Moſes his Brother, and by him was ſlain likewiſe; which Moſes had alſo the like end by his Brother Calepinus, having his Neck broken with a Bow-ſtring, which was then the uſual manner among the Turks in killing their Brethren. The ſame Calepinus ſparing only the life of Muſtaphas his other Brother, condemned him to perpetual Priſon. Jeſus the younger was Baptiſed, and ſhortly after departed at Conſtantinople. In theſe ſuch diſcords and diviſions among the Turks, what occaſions were given to the Chriſtians to have recovered again of the Turks that they had loſt, if they had not been either negligent, or in their own private Wars otherwiſe occupied with themſelves?

Calepinus the Fifth after Ottomannus.

Calepinus or Celebinus, was the Son of Bajazetes, and of four Brethren the eldeſt; who being all taken Captives of the Parthians, he only eſcaped and obtained his Fathers Kingdom. This Calepinus encouraged by the ſloth and negligence of the Princes of Europe, and by the diſcord of the Greciens amongſt themſelves and other Nations near about them, long troubled and vexed the Bulgarians, Servians, and Macedonians, even to the time of Sigiſmundus. Which Sigiſmundus ſeeing now Bajazetes to be overcome and taken of Tamerlanes, and the power of the Turks weakned in Europe, and having ſuch occaſion offered him, as it were from Heaven, to deſtroy and utterly to root out, not only out of Aſia, but alſo all Europe, that barbarous Nation, and cruel Enemies to the Name and Religion of Chriſt: and alſo to revenge the great ſlaughter and diſcomfiture of his Army in Fighting before with Bajazetes at Nicopolis a City in Myſia; with great Power made War againſt Calepinus at Colombatium a Town in Servia, as is alſo before-mentioned, but as unluckily and with as little ſucceſs as he did before againſt Bajazetes his Father. For in that Battel were ſlain of the Chriſtians to the number of Twenty thouſand, and the reſt utterly diſcomfited, the King himſelf eſcaping ſo hardly, that he entred not again into his Kingdom for the ſpace of Eighteen months after. Some write that this was done under Bajazetes; otherſome refer this Battel to Amurathes; but howſoever it was, moſt pernicious was it to the Chriſtians. He Reigned but Six years and died very young, Anno 1404.

Orchanes and Moſes his Uncle, the Sixth after Ottomannus.

AFter the Captivity of Bajazetes above-mentioned, making no mention at all of Calepinus, only make mention of the Sons of Bajazetes, and of the contention among them, until the time of Mahumetes. The Latin Stories writing of the Children of Bajazetes and of their ſucceſſion, do not therein agree, ſome affirming, That Bajazetes had two Sons, Orchanes, ſurnamed Calepinus, and Mahumetes his Brother, which within two years flew the ſaid Calepinus, and entred his Dominion. Other attribute to Bajazetes more Sons, as is above-rehearſed. Some again do give to Bajazetes only theſe two Sons, Celebinus and Muſtaphas; and hold that Calepinus or Celebinus had two Sons; to wit, Orchanes and Mahumetes; and add moreover, That the ſaid Orchanes, being ſomewhat young, was ſlain of his Uncle Moſes, who governed but two years. For Mahumetes, to revenge his Brothers death, ſlew Moſes, and invaded his Dominion. The Greek Stories make no mention at all of Orchanes.

Mahumetes the Seventh after Ottomannus.

THIS Mahumetes, whether he was the Son of Bajazetes, or elſe of Calepinus, converted to himſelf alone the Kingdom, or tyranny rather of the murdering Turks. Who afflicted the Chriſtians with ſore Wars within Europe, eſpecially the Country called Wallachia, lying not far from the Flood Danubius, between Hungary and Thracia. From thence he removed into Aſia, where he recovered divers parts in Galatia, Pontus, Cappadocia, Licia, which before Tamerlanes had alienated from the Turks. This Mahumetes planted his Chief Imperial Seat in Adrianople not far from Conſtantinople, within the Country of Thracia. In ſome Writers the conflict between Sigiſmund and the great Turk, wherein the Chriſtians were ſo diſcomfited, is referred rather to this Mahumetes, than to Calepinus; of which conflict mention is above made in the Story of Sigiſmundus. This Mahumetes Reigned, as ſome ſay, fourteen years, and died in the year of our Lord 1419. Othes affirm ſeventeen years.

Amurathes the Second, Eighth after Ottomannus.

Amurathes as Philelphus ſaith, was the Son of Celebinus as Laonicus Chalcondiles teſtifieth, of Mahumetes: whoſe Son ſoever he was, a wretched Tyrant he was, and permitted as a ſcourge of God, to correct the ſins of the Chriſtians. In the ſtory of Bajazetes mention was made before of Muſtaphas his Son, who was condemned to perpetual Priſon by Calepinus his Brother. This Muſtaphas eſcaping out of his Brothers Priſon, was conveyed to the Greciens, where he remained long in cuſtody, till at length they underſtanding the purpoſe of Amurathes, ſet him up with ſufficient Habiliments and Furniture of War, to Fight againſt the ſaid Amurathes his Nephew. But in concluſion he being not able to make his party good, came into the hands of his Enemy, and had his neck broke with a Bow-ſtring, after the manner of the Turkiſh execution.

Muſtaphas murdered by Amurath ſet upon his Nephews.

The Greciens then terrified with this ſiniſter adverſity, required truce of the Turk; but when that would not be granted, they procured unto them Muſtaphas, the other Brother to Amurathes, being of the age of 13 years; who, likewiſe being Armed of the Greciens, got the City of Nice in Bithynia, from Amurathes his Brother. Albeit it was not long but he was circumvented in the ſame City, and brought to Amurathes; who cauſed him likewiſe to raiſe of the ſame Whip, as the other Muſtaphas had done before. Amurathes, being now out of all fear and doubt of Brethren and Kinſfolk to riſe againſt him, converted all his power power against the Grecians: and first ranging throughout Thracia, where divers Cities yielded unto them, which before belonged to the Emperor of Constantinople, from thence he fet forward to the Noble and Famous City Thessalonica, being then under the league and protection of the Venetians. This Thessalonica is a City in Greece, bordering upon Macedonia, to the Citizens whereof Saint Paul writeth, forethewing unto them, in his fecond Epistle, of a defection to come before the coming of the day of our Lord, 2 Thes. 2. By the which Apostate or defection what the holy Apostle doth mean, this story of the Turks may eafily declare. After Thessalonica was subdued, Phocis with all the Country about Athens, Beotia likewise, Aetolia, Acarnania, with all the Region beyond Peloponnesus, unto the Coast of Corinth, to whom Saint Paul also wrote other two Epistles, were brought in bondage and slavery unto the Turk.

The defection of S. Paul declared, 2 Thes. 2.

Joannes Castriotus, Croia given to the Turk. The 3. Son of Castriotus Hostages with the Turk, Georgius Scanderbeg, Alexander the Great.

In Epirus, and in that quarter that adjoyneth to Macedonia named Albania, Reigned then one Joannes Castriotus; who, perceiving himself too weak to match with the Turks power, made with the Turk this convention, that he fhould have Croia, a Famous City in Greecia, and alfo gave to him his three Sons for hoftages, to wit, Constantinus, Reposius, and Georgius.

In this George fuch towardnefs of noble courage, fuch vigor of mind, and ftrength of body fingularly did appear, that the Turk caufed him more freely to be inftructed after the Turkifh Religion and manner in his own Court: where he being trained up, did fo fhoot up as well in feats of activity, as in ftrength of body, that he excelled all his equals; infomuch that he was named Scanderbeius, which foundeth as much as Alexander Magnus.

After this Alexander was grown up to mature ripenefs of age, and was well trained up in feats of War, he was fent out by the Turk, to War againft Caramannus of Cilicia, the Turks enemy. In which expedition he efped himfelf moft manfully, fighting hand to hand, firft with a footman of Scythia, then with an Horfeman of Perfia, being challenged by them both to encounter, firft with the one, after with the other; whom he fo valiantly overthrew that he wan great renown with the Turk: In fo much that he trufting to the Turks favour, when he heard of the deceafe of his Father, durft ask of the Turk the grant of his Fathers Dominion to be given unto him. Which requeft although Amurathes the Turk did not deny him; yet notwithftanding, he perceiving the matter to be dallied out with fair words, by fubtile means and policy ftipt out of the Turks Court, and came to Epyrus his own inheritance, where firft by forged Letters he recovered Croia. The other Cities of their voluntary mind yielded themfelves unto him; who then gathering unto him the people of Epyrus and Macedonia (which were not fo many in number, as with good willing minds they ftuck unto him fo manfully and valiantly behaved himfelf, that againft all the puiffance both of Amurathes, and alfo of Mahumetes, he maintained his own, repulfed their violence, and put to flight their Armies many years together. But to return again to the courfe of Amurathes victories, after he had thus prevailed (as is before figuified) againft the Eaft parts of Europa and Grecia, and had converted thus for the Dominion of Epyrus, he invaded Illyricum, (otherwife called now Sclavonia) containing in it Dalmatia, Croatia, Istria, and Liburnia: which Countries after he had fpoiled and wafted, he continued his courfe to Albania and Bosna. In which Regions, when he had fubdued a great part, and had led away an innumerable multitude of captives, he moved further to Walachia and Servia, upon hope to Conquer all Pannonia.

Illyricum or Sclavonia, Dalmatia, Croatia, Istria, Liburnia, Sclavonia, Bosna fpoiled and wafted by the Turk. Georgius Despota Prince of Servia.

There Reigned at the fame time in Servia a certain Prince named Georgius Despota, who made great fute to the Turk for Truce and Peace, promifing to give his Daughter to marriage; for by the Turks Law they marry as many wives as they lift. It was not long after Amurathes had married the Daughter of Despota, but he contrary to his league and promife, made War upon Despota his Father-in-law, and expelled him out of his Kingdom, taking from him divers Cities, as Scopia, Novomonte, Sepolia, and all Albania. Georgius himfelf fled into Hungary, leaving behind him his Son to defend the Town of Sinderovia. Amurathes underftanding of the flight of Despota his Father in law, compaffed the City of Cinderovia with a ftrong Siege, which when in few days had expugned, he took his Wives Brother the Son of Despota, and without all regard of mercy and affinity, after the barbarous Tyranny of the Turks, put out his eyes, with a Bafon red hot fet before his eyes, and after that led him about with him in derifion in defpite of his cowardly Father. *Ex Chriftopb. Servia being thus won and gotten, Amurathes, thinking to go further into Hungary, befieged the City called Belgradum, and no doubt had alfo fuppreffed the fame, had not the Providence of God found means, that partly through flaughter of his men, partly for lack of Victual and other Forrage, he was compelled to raife his Siege and retire.

Belgradum befieged of the Turk.

In the mean time Joannes Huniades (of whom mention was made before:) had got great victories againft the Turkifh power, and had recovered part of Servia, and all Muldavia; againft whom Amurathes the Turk, with a mighty Army, moved into Pannonia. But Huniades with the power and aid of Ladislaus King of Polonia (but fpecially by the power of the Lord) did foon infringe the puiffance of the Turk, and gave him the overthrow, recovering unto the Chriftians the greateft part of Servia and Bulneria.

Joannes Huniades Valvoda.

Five Victories of John Huniades, againft the Turk gotten in one day. The great Baffa or Duke of the Turks overthrown by Huniades.

In this Battel Huniades had five fundry conflicts with the Turks upon one day, and with five Victories put them to the worfe, and toward night did fo difcomfit and overthrow the great Captain of Amurathes, called Baffa, the Duke of Anatolia (which is otherwife named Afia Minor) that he flew of the Turks that day to the number of Thirty Thoufand. Amurathes, although he was not a little thereat difcouraged, yet diffembling his fear, with ftout countenance fent for Carambanus his principal ftay and Captain, with a new power brought out of Afia to affift him in his wars. This Carambanus, in the Downs of Tranfylvania, Ladiflaus the forefaid King of of Polonia (the Lord fo working) through the induftry of Joannes Huniades, fo received and with fuch celerity oppreffed him unprovided, that all his ftout and fturdy Army either was ftain down right, or elfe put to flight and difparkled, Carambeius the Captain being himfelf taken prifoner in the fame field.

These Victories of Huniades ſtrook no little terror to Amurathes, infomuch that for diſtreſs of mind he was ready to defeiroy himſelf (as ſome do write) but being confirmed by Helibeus Baſſa his Counſellor, he kept himſelf within the ſtraits of Mount Rhodope. Who then hearing that Caramannus invaded the ſame time the Country of Bithynia and Pontus in Aſia, was glad to take truce with Ladiſlaus and Huniades upon ſuch conditions as they liſted to make themſelves: which conditions were theſe, that Amurathes ſhould depart clearly from all the Region of Servia, and ſhould remove from thence all his Garriſons, which were placed in the Caſtles and Forts of the ſame: alſo he ſhould reſtore George Deſpota (which is to ſay) Prince of Servia, unto his poſſeſſion, and ſet his children free, whom he had in captivity, before them to their inheritance. Item, that he ſhould make no more claim nor title to the Country of Muldavia above mentioned, nor to that part of Bulgravia which he had loſt; and that he ſhould deſiſt hereafter from all wrongs and injuries againſt the Chriſtians. Upon theſe conditions the Turk being agreed, ſo was truce concluded on both parts for ten years, and with ſolemn Oath between them confirmed.

Amurathes keepeth the truce of the Chriſtians. The conditions between Ladiſlaus King of Polonia, and Amurathes.

Truce between the Chriſtians and the Turks for ten years. Amurathes returned into Aſia. The Popes diſſimulation and abſolution abuſed.

This done, Amurathes the Tyrant addreſſeth himſelf toward Aſia, to reſiſt the invaſion of Caramannus aforeſaid. At what time Pope Eugenius ſo ſoon as he heard the Turk to be returned into Aſia, ſendeth Julianus Cæſarianus his Cardinal (whoſe ſtory is before touched) unto Ladiſlaus the foreſaid King, with full diſpenſation and abſolution to break his Oath and league with the Turk, promiſing moreover great hope and aid, if he would go in Arms ſtoutly againſt the Tyrant.

The Popes moſt Lawleſſe to break truce.

The falſe dealing of the Italian Navy. The battel of Varna, between Ladiſlaus King of Polonia, and Amurathes.

The Popes falſe counſel pernicious to Chriſtendom.

¶ Where by the way is to be noted, that as there is no truth of promiſe in that Peſtilent Sea of Rome, neither was there ever any War proſpered, which was taken in hand by the Popes Council: ſo was there never any Councel of the Pope that brought with it more detriment to Chriſtianity, than this. But the Pope belike thought, that that as he might lawfully break promiſe with John Hus, and with other Chriſtians, ſo alſo he needed not to obſerve any League or Truce taken with the Turk: But it turned much otherwiſe than the Popes blind Brains imagined, as by the ſequel is to be ſeen. For Ladiſlaus being thus excited by the unadviſed and ſiniſter inſtigation of Pope Eugenius, contrary to the Truce ſtabliſhed a little before, ſet out with his Army from Seledinus, and ſo proceeding to Walachia and Burgaria, came to Varna, a Town of Bulgary, where he fell ſick.

It was not long but the Turk, having thereof intelligence, left his Wars begun with Caramannus in Aſia, and with great journeys made haſte into Europ, paſſing over by the Straits near to Callipolis, where all the Italian Navy ſtill looking on, and whether of purpoſe, or whether for cowardlineſs, would not ſtir one Ore to ſtop the paſſage of the Turkiſh Army. When Amurathes was come to Adrianopolis in Thracia, uſing ſuch celerity as no Man looked for, within eight days he was in Burgaria, and there encamped himſelf againſt Ladiſlaus. The day of battel being ſet, the Armies joyned on both ſides. Huniades was himſelf there preſent, but all the matter was ruled by Julianus the Cardinal, and the Popes Clergy. The Fight continued three days and three nights together, with great courage and much bloodſhed on each ſide; inſomuch that the field did ſtand with lakes of blood. It ſeemed at the firſt to incline to the Chriſtians, by breaking the firſt ranks of the Turks. But the Prieſts and Prelates which were at the field (which had been more fit to have been in the Church) ſeeing the Turks to begin to flie, unskilfully left their array to purſue the Enemy, ſo that they leaving the other ſtandings of the Chriſtians naked, gave great advantage to the Turks with their Darts and ſhot to diſturb the Chriſtian ranges. By the which occaſion Amurathes inclofing the Chriſtians with his Army round about, obtained the Victory. In the which field, Ladiſlaus the young King of Polony, having his Horſe firſt killed under him, was ſtrucken down and ſlain. The Popes Biſhops flying to ſave themſelves, fell into the Marſhes, and there were deſtroyed, ſuſtaining a durty death condign to their filthy fallhood and untruth. Julianus the Cardinal, which with the Pope was the chief doer in breaking the League, in the way was found dead, being full of Wounds, and ſpoiled to his naked ſkin. Of the reſt of the Army that eſcaped by flying, part was drowned in the Marſhes, ſome periſhed miſerably for hunger, ſome for cold, watching and wandring in the Woods. Huniades hardly eſcaped the danger, by the merciful providence of God, being referved to the further profit and Commodity of Chriſtendom.

The worthy commendation of John Huniades.

This John Huniades the worthy Warrior was born in Walachia, being Earl of Biſtice, of all Captains that ever went againſt the Turks moſt famous and lingular, prudent in wit, diſcreet in Council, expert and politick in War, prompt of hand, circumſpect before he attempted, quick in expedition: in whom wanted almoſt no good property requiſite in a warlike Captain. Againſt two moſt mighty and fierce Tyrants, Amurathes and Mahumetes, through the Lords Might, he defended all Pannonia, and therefore was called the Thunderbolt and Terror of the Turks. Like as Achilles was unto the Grecians, ſo was he ſet up of God to be as a Wall or Bulwark of all Europe againſt the cruel Turks and Enemies of Chriſt and of his Chriſtians. Neither was there any King or Prince that ever atchieved ſuch noble Victories, either ſo many in number, or ſo profitable for the publick utility of all Europe, as did he, and that not only in the days of this Amurathes, but alſo of Mahumetes his ſucceſſor, as hereafter remaineth further to be ſeen. This battel of Amurathes againſt the Chriſtians at Varna in Bulgaria, was fought in the year of our Lord, 1404.

Amurathes by reaſon of this Victorious overthrow againſt the Chriſtians, furpriſed with no ſmall Pride, directed his journey incontinent toward the Grecians, where Caſtriotus was, otherwiſe called Scanderbeius. And firſt coming to Peloponneſus, and breaking down the Wall about the Straits of Corinth, encountred with the Brother of the Emperor of Conſtantinople, whom with his ſudden coming he oppreſſed, with all the Greeks Army, ere they were provided. Paleologus the Emperor after that, did build up the Wall again, but at the Turks bidding he was compelled to undo it again: which Wall afterwards the Venetians did repair. After the demolition of the Wall, Amurathes entring into * Peloponneſus took divers Towns and Cities, as Scyone, and Patris; and moreover made all the parts of Theſſalia and Achaia Tributaries unto them.

* Peloponneſus ſo Syrnetus, Patris, with all the parts of Theſſalia and Achaia, brought under the Turk.

The next year after this battel of Amurathes fought againſt the Chriſtians at Varna, the Turk being now about the parts of Grecia, purpoſed to bend all his force and main againſt the Country of Epyrus belonging to Georgius Caſtriotus Scanderbeius. Of this Scanderbeius mention was made before, how he was brought up in the Turks Court, from whence we declared alſo how ſubtilly he conveyed himſelf, and came to the poſſeſſion of his own patrimony of Epyrus. * Which Epyrus this noble and victorious Scanderbeius (whom the Lord alſo had raiſed up the ſame time with Huniades, to bridle the furyy of the Turks) valiantly defended againſt all the power of Amurathes; inſomuch that he diſcomfited and vanquiſhed ſeven of the moſt expert Baſſaes or Dukes of the Ottoman Emperor, one after another, with all their Armies of moſt picked and choſen Souldiers, diſlodged them of their Tents, and expulſed them utterly out of all Epyrus. Alſo when Amurathes himſelf with his whole puiſſance had invironed about the City of Croja, with cruel ſiege and ordinance out of meaſure, yet notwithſtanding the ſaid Scanderbeius (through the power and bleſſing of the Lord) beat him out of the field, and repulſed him from the ſiege.

The Tirk ſubdueth Theſſalonica. Phocis, Beotia, Aetolia, Acarnania, Corinth, Peloponneſus. The Epiſtles of Paul to the Theſſalonians.

Tirk ſubdueth Epyrus. Croia recovered. Epyrus and Macedonia recovered from the Turk. The valiant acts of Georgius Scanderbeius againſt the Turks. Illyricum or Sclavonia, Dalmatia, Croatia, Iſtria, Liburnia, Sclavonia, Boſna ſpoiled and waſted by the Turk. Georgius Deſpota Prince of Servia. An ungodly grant of a Chriſtian Father to marry his Daughter to the Turk. Scopia, Novomonte, Sepolia, Albania. Deſpota fled into Hungary. Sinderovia.

Amurathes renounced his Dominion, and made himſelf a Turkiſh Monk.

After this diſcomfiture, the ſaying is, that Amurathes, to keep his Vow made before, after his Victory at Varna, gave himſelf unto a religious Order, living a contemplative life with certain other Prieſts joyned unto him, in the Forreſt of Birlymia, renouncing the government of his Realm to the hands of Haly, one of the Turks alſo be not without their ſundry Sects of Religion, no more than we Chriſtians are without our Friers and Monks.)

In the mean time while Amurathes this Turkiſh Tyrant was cloyſtered up in his Monkiſh Religion, Joannes Huniades in the Kingdom of Hungary, and Caſtriotus Scanderbeius in Grecia, kept a great ſtir againſt the Turks. By reaſon whereof Amurathes was taken again from his Monkiſh vow and profeſſion, and brought again into the field: For firſt Huniades had refcued the whole Country of Hungaria, and had propulſed moreover all the might of the Turks far from Servia. And although the peeviſh practice of Georgius Prince of Servia had oftentimes diſcloſed his Councils unto the Turks, whereby twice he was brought in danger, yet notwithſtanding (through the Lords gracious Protection) ye was preſerved and delivered by the ſaid George unto the Hungarians again, and after that manfully vanquiſhed the Turks, ſo that they had no reſting place about thoſe parts of Servia and Bulgaria, ſo long as he lived.

Joannes Huniades ſo reported of the Turks. The Kingdom of Hungary, and Caſtriotus Scanderbeius in Grecia, kept a great ſtir againſt the Turks. Twenty battels with the Turk, to loſe but two.

On the other ſide in Grecia, Caſtriotus Scanderbeius ſo foiled the Turk in defence of his Country Epyrus and Macedonia, and kept Amurathes ſo ſhort, that not only he was not able to win any great Town in all Epyrus; but alſo coming from Epyrus in the Straits, he was ſo intangled by Caſtriotus, that he was forced to give battel: In the which battel he was ſo vanquiſhed, and moſt part of his Army ſlain, that, for grief and ſorrow conceived, he falling into a raving ſickneſs, was tranſported out of his Pavillion unto Adrianople, and there in fury and madneſs died, after he had Reigned 34 years, which was about the year of our Lord, 1450.

Epyrus and Macedonia, defended by Scanderbeius.

Amurathes overcome by Scanderbeius.

This Amurathes firſt ordained the order of the Janizarites. Which were the Men-children of ſuch Chriſtians as he conquered and took captive; whom he forced to renounce the Faith of Chriſt, wherein they were Baptized, and brought them up in Mahumetes Law, and exerciſed them in the ſame Feats of War as he did his own people, and after that they came to Mans eſtate, he named them Janizari (that is to ſay) Souldiers of a ſtrange Country, and made them to guard his perſon. They wear on their head, inſtead of an Helmet, a white Attire made of the groſſeſt ſort of Wooll, and in ſo many folds about their head that it cannot be pierced with a Sword. It hangeth down on the back with a Tail, before on the forehead it is garnished with Gold and Silver. They were wont to use Bows and Lances in the field, but now they use Dags as our Horsemen do.

At the first institution there were but Eight thousand in their Garrison, but now there be twice so many. This of all bondage and servitude that the Christians suffer under the Turks is most intolerable, and greatly to be of all true Christians lamented. For what can godly minds behold more to their grief, than to see their Children pulled from the Faith of Christ wherein they were Baptized, and by whose blood they should eternally be saved, and to be instructed and nourished with the blasphemous Doctrine of Mahumet, and so be proffered Enemies of Christ and his Church, to make War against Heaven, and to perish everlastingly? And finally, what a lamentable thing is it, to see and behold our own Children born of our own bodies, to become our mortal and cruel Enemies, and to cut our Throats with their own hands? This servitude of mind is far greater than death it self: which if our Princes would well consider, it would cause them the rather to agree, and bend their whole force and power against this cruel Enemy.

A lamentable slavery of Christian Mens Children under the Turk.

Mahumetes Second, the ninth after Ottomannus.

Mahumetes the ninth Turk, after Ottomannus.

Amurathes left behind him three Sons, Mahumetes born of the Daughter of Despota, Prince of Servia, being Twenty years of Age, the second Son called Turcines, the Third named Calepinus. This Turcines being an Infant, and but eighteen Months old, was Strangled at the commandment of the Turk by his servant Moses, himself being there present and beholding the horrible Murther. And when Moses the Executer of the murther had desired him not to pollute his hands with the blood of his Brother, he answered, that it was the manner of all the Race of Ottoman Turks, that all the other Brethren being destroyed, none should be left alive but one to govern the Empire. Wherefore Moses was commanded by the Tyrant, there presently, and in his sight, to kill the Infant. This horrible Fact when the Mother of the Child understood, the cried out, and almoft mad for sorrow, cursed the Tyrant to his face. But he to mitigate the rage of his Mother, at her request, being desirous to be revenged upon the Executer of her Sons death, delivered the said Moses bound into her hands, who then in the presence of the Tyrant thrust him to the Heart with a Knife, and opening his side took out his Liver, and threw it to the Dogs to be devoured.

The Tyranny of Mahumetes in murthering his Brethren.

The third Son called Calepinus, which was but six Months old, the forefaid Amurathes his Father commended to the custody of Halibassa, one of his Nobles, who, to gratifie and please the Tyrant, betrayed the Infant, and brought him unto him, and thereupon he at the Tyrants commandment was strangled. Some affirm, that in stead of Calepinus another Child was offered unto the Tyrant, and that Calepinus was conveyed to Constantinople, and after the taking of Constantinople was carried to Venice, and then to Rome to Pope Calixt, where he was Baptized, and afterward came into Germany to Frederick the Emperor, and there was honorably entertained, and kept in Austrich during his life. Where note how the merciful Providence of God, whom he lift to save, can fetch out of the Divels mouth. And note moreover the forefaid Halibassa the betrayer of the Infant, how he escaped not unrevenged. For Mahumet understanding him to be a Man of great substance and riches, through forging of false Crimes, with great Torments put him to death to have his Riches: for this Tyrant was given to insatiable avarice. Thus this bloody Mahumet began regiment with horrible Murther, after the example of other cursed Tyrants his Predecessors.

Halibassa Traytor to his Master. Horrible parricide of the abominable Turk. Gods providence can fetch out of the Divels mouth whom he lift to save. Note here Gods possibilnes, to out the betrayer of innocent blood.

Although this Mahumet, notwithstanding that he came of a Christian Mother, being the Daughter of Despota Prince of Servia, and by her was brought up and instructed from his Childhood in the Precepts of Christian Religion and manners, yet he soon forgetting all, gave himself to Mahumets Religion, and yet so, that he being addicted to neither Religion became an Atheist, believing and worthipping no God at all, but only the Goddess of good Fortune, irriding and mocking the minds and judgments of Men, which believe that God by his Providence governeth and regardeth the state of human things on Earth.

{KING Hen. 5.}

After that this Mahumet heard of the Victories and Conquests of other his Predecessors, and had understanding how Bajazetes lay eight years about Constantinople, and could not win it; he disprailing Bajazetes, and disdaining that so long time should be spent about the siege thereof, and yet no Victory gotten, bent all his study and device how to subdue the same. But first having a privy hatred against the City of Athens, and having his hands lately imbrued with the blood of his Brethren, this murthering Mahumet first of all taketh his Voyage to subvert and destroy the City aforesaid, being a famous School of all good learning and discipline. Against the which City he did so furiously rage for the hatred of good Letters, that he thought he ought not to suffer the Foundation thereof to stand, because that City was a good nurse and fosterer of good Arts and Sciences; wherefore he commanded the City to be raced and utterly subverted, and whereso ever any Monumets or Books could be found, he caused them to be cast into durty Sinks, and the filthiest places of the City, or put to the most vile uses that could be devised, for extirping and abolishing of all good literature; and if he understood any to lament the case, and ruine of that noble Place, those he grievously punished and put to death.

Mahumet the cruel murther by the Turks in the City of Constantinople.

Mahumet set fifteth upon Athens.

The fury of the Mahumet a-gainst the City and School of Athens.

Thus the famous and ancient School of Athens being destroyed and overthrown, he returned his Army and Power into Thracia, where in all haste he, gathering up his Power together both by Sea and Land, with a mighty multitude compassed the City of Constantinople about, and began to lay his siege against it, in the year of our Lord, 1453. and in the four and fiftieth day of the said siege it was taken, sacked, and the Emperor Constantinus slain. As touching the cruelty and fiercenes of the Turks in getting of this City, and what slaughter there was of Men, and Women, and Children, what calamity and misery was there to be seen, forsomuch as sufficient relation, with a full description thereof, hath been made before, it shall be superfluous now to repeat the same. This only is not to be omitted touching three principal Causes of the overthrow of this City; whereof the first was the filthy avarice of those Citizens, which hiding their Treasures in the Ground, would not imploy the same to the necessary defence of their City. For so I find it in the Story expressed, that when the Turk, after the taking of the City, had found not so much Treasure as he looked for, suspecting with himself (as the truth was) the Treasures and riches to be hidden under the Ground, commanded the Earth to be digged up, and the Foundations of the Houses to be searched: where when he had found Treasures incredible. What (quoth he) how could it be that this place could ever lack munition and fortification, which did flow and abound with such great Riches as here is, and plenty of all things? The second cause was the absence of the Navy of the Venetians, which, if they had been ready in time, might have been a safeguard against the invasion of the enemies. A third cause also may be gathered upon occasion incident in Stories, either for that the City of Constantinople fifteen years before, did yield to the Bishop of Rome, as is before to be seen, or else because (as in some Writers it is evident) the Images were there received and maintained in their Churches, and by the Turks the same were destroyed.

There causes specially noted in the winning of Constantinople.

Ex Thuano Ramo, lib. 3. rerum Turcicarum.

Joannes Ramus, writing of the destruction of this City, amongst other matters maketh relation of the Image of the Crucifix, being there in the high Temple of Sophias which Image the Turk took, and writing this superscription upon the head of it, Hic est Christianorum Deus, i. This is the God of the Christians, gave it to his Souldiers to be scorned, and commanding the said Image with a Trumpet to be carried thorow all his Army, made every Man to spit at it most contumeliously. Wherein thou hast (good Reader) by the way to note, what occasion of slander and offence we Christians give unto the barbarous Infidels by this our ungodly superstition, in having Images in our Temples, contrary to the expres preſs commandment of God in his Word. For if Saint Paul, writing to the Corinthians, saith, We know Christ now no more after the flesh; how much less then is Christ to be known of us in blind Stocks and Images set up in our Temples, serving for none other purpose, but for the Infidels to laugh both us and our God to scorn, and to provoke Gods vengeance? which by the like example (I fear) may also fall upon other Cities, which such Images and Idolatrous superstition is maintained; whereof God grant Vienna to take heed betime, which hath been so long, and yet is in such great danger of the Turk, and polluted with so many Images, and plain Idolatry.

Vienna admonished.

In summa, to make the Story short, such was the cruelty of thefe Turks in winning the City, that when Mahumet had given licence to the Souldiers three days together, to spoil, to kill, and to do whatsoever they lifted, there was no corner in all Constantinople, which did not either flow with Chriſtian blood, or else was polluted with abominable abuſing of Maids, Wives, and Matrons, without all reverence of nature. Of the which Citizens, some they Murthered, some they Reſted upon Spits, of some they flayed off their skin, hanging them up to consume with Famine, of otherſome they put Salt into their Wounds, the more terrible to torment them, inſomuch that one of them contended with another, who could deviſe moſt ſtrange kinds of new Torments and Puniſhments, exerciſing ſuch cruelty upon them, that the place where the City was before, ſeemed now to be no City, but a Slaughter-houſe or Shambles of Chriſtian Mens bodies. Among the dead bodies, the body alſo of Conſtantine the Emperor was found; whoſe Head being brought to Mahumet, he commanded it to be carried upon a Spear thorow the whole City for a publick ſpectacle and deriſion to all the Turkiſh Army. And becauſe he would diminiſh the number of the Captives, which ſeemed to him to be very great, he never roſe from his Table, but he put every day ſome of the Nobles to death, no leſs to fill his cruel Mind with Blood, than his Body was filled with Wine; which he uſed ſo long to do as any of the Nobles of that City was left alive. And of the other ſort alſo, as the Stories do credibly report, there paſſed no day in the which he did not orderly ſlay more than three hundred Perſons, the reſidue he gave to his raſcal Souldiers to kill, and to do with them what they would. Where is to be noted, that as Conſtantinus the Son of Helena was the firſt Emperor of Conſtantinople, ſo Conſtantinus the Son alſo of Helena was the laſt Emperor thereof.

The cruel murther by the Turks in winning the City, that when Mahumet had given licence to the Souldiers three days together,

A lamentable deſtruction of the City of Conſtantinople.

The bloody cruelty of the Turks againſt the Chriſtian Captives.

Not far from the ſaid City of Conſtantinople there was another little City called Pera, and once called Gallatia, ſituated by the Sea ſide; who hearing of the miſerable deſtruction of Conſtantinople, and ſeeing the City ſtanding with fire, but certain of the chief Men with ſpeed to Mahumet, declaring unto him, that they neither had ſent any help to the City of Conſtantinople, neither yet wrought any detriment to any of his Army: wherefore they deſired and prayed him, that as they would gladly yield unto him, ſo he would be favourable unto them and ſpare them, and not to puniſh the guiltleſs with the guilty. Mahumet, although he was not ignorant that for fear, rather than of any good will, they ſubmitted themſelves, and that they would rather reſiſt him if they had been able, yet he received for that time the ſubmiſſion of the Meſſengers; but ſending with them his Ambaſſadors into the City, he commanded alſo his Army to follow withal, and to enter with him into the City, which although it was greatly ſuſpected and miſliked of the Citizens, yet they durſt not otherwiſe do but ſuffer them to enter: which being done, the Ambaſſador gave a ſign to the Souldiers, every Man to do whatſoever he was bidden; of whom ſome ran to the Walls, ſome to the Temples and Churches, ſome to the Streets and Houſes of the City, plucking all things down to the ground, ſacking and ranging with no leſs fury and abominable filthineſs, than they had done at Conſtantinople before, ſaving only that they abſtained from murther: but the ſame day Letters came from Mahumet to the Ambaſſador, that he would ſpare none, but deſtroy and murther all that ever were in the City; which meſſage, becauſe it ſeemed to the Ambaſſador to be too cruel, forſomuch as they had yielded themſelves, he ſtayed his hand a little until night came. In the mean time, drunken Mahumet coming ſomething to himſelf (whom drunkenneſs had before overcome) ſent his ſecond Letters to revoke the firſt. Where again is to be noted the merciful Providence of God towards his people in their deſerved Plagues, by ſtaying the hands, and bridling the fury many times of their Enemies, when otherwiſe the caſe ſeemeth to be paſt all remedy.

The City of Pera yieldeth it ſelf for fear to the Turk.

Drunken Mahumet calls of promiſe.

Mahumet thus being in himſelf not a little advanced and elevated by the winning of Conſtantinople, where he had now made the Imperial Seat of the Turkiſh Dominion, the third year next following, to adventure more maſteries, he ſet out to the ſiege of Belgradum, a City of Hungary, lying near to the Banks of Danubius, thinking to have the like ſucceſs there, as he had in the winning of Conſtantinople, albeit, through the Lords diſpoſing, it fell out much otherwiſe. Within the City of Belgradum, the ſame time of the ſiege thereof, was Joannes Humiades, the valiant Captain, of whom in divers places mention hath been made before; who with a ſufficient ſtrength of picked Souldiers, albeit in number nothing equal to the Turks Army, valiantly defended the City with great courage, and no leſs ſucceſs. In the which ſiege great diligence was beſtowed, and many of the Turks ſlain. Among whom alſo Mahumet himſelf, being ſtrucken with a Pellet under the left Arm, was fain to be carried out of the Field for half dead, and the reſt ſo put to flight, that of the Turks the ſame time were deſtroyed to the number, or not much under the number of forty thouſand, beſides the I-ſs of all their Ordinance, which the Turks in haſte of their flight, were forced to leave behind them.

Forty thouſand Turks ſlain at the ſiege of Belgradum.

Hieronymus Zieglerus, writing of the ſiege of this Belgradum, addeth moreover, that when Mahumet was at the ſiege thereof, ſeeing the Town to be ſo ſmall and weak of it ſelf, that it could not be won with all his great multitude, he ſtaring and faring like a mad Man, commanded all his brazen pieces to be laid, to batter down the Walls and Towers of the Town: So that the Chriſtians within the Walls were vehemently diſtreſſed; for the Siege continued both night and day without intermiſſion. Among the reſt of the Chriſtians which defended the Town Hieronymus Zieglerus maketh mention of a certain Bohemian, much worthy of his condign commendation; Who being upon the Walls, and ſeeing a Turk with a Banner or Enſign of the Turks to be gotten up, by the ſight whereof, the whole Town was in danger to be conquered and taken, runneth unto the Turk, and claſping him about the middle, ſpeaking to John Capiſtranus ſtanding below, asking him, whether it were any danger of damnation to him, if he of his voluntary mind did caſt himſelf with that Dog (ſo he termed him) down headlong from the Wall to be ſlain with him; what ſhould become of his ſoul, and whether he might be ſaved or not? To whom when the other had anſwered, that he ſhould be ſaved without doubt, he eſtſoons tumbleth himſelf with the Turk down off the Wall, where by his death he ſaved the ſame time the life of all the City. Mahumet being ſo wounded, and in deſpair of winning the City, was carried (as ye heard) out of the field. Who at length coming again to himſelf, partly for fear, and partly for ſhame, was ready to kill himſelf. And thus was the Town of Belgradum at that time reſcued through Gods Providence, by the means of Joannes Huniades and this good Bohemian.

The noble Act of a Bohemian in defence of his country.

The Town of Belgradum valiantly defended from the Turk.

This ſiege of Belgradum began in the year of our Lord, 1456. and endured ſix and forty days. At which ſiege were numbred of the Turks two hundred thouſand. Of whom more than forty thouſand (as is aforeſaid) were ſlain, where the victory fell to the Chriſtians through the proſperous ſucceſs given of God to Joannes Huniades, and Capiſtranus. Which Huniades not long after the ſaid victory, through the importune labour and travel in defending of the Town, was taken with a ſore ſickneſs, and thereof departed; to whoſe valiant prowels and ſingular courage, Stories do give great laud and commendation.

Mahumetes the Turk, after this done in Europe, returned into Aſia to War with Uſumcaſſanes a Perſian, one of the Turks ſtock, with whom he had three Battels. The firſt was about the River Euphrates, where the Turk loſt Ten thouſand Men, and was put to the worſe.

In the second field likewise he was discomfited. The third Battel at Arsinga, where through the terrible noise of the brazen pieces, the Persian Horses disturbed the Camp, and so was Usumcassanes overcome.

The Turks gain victories and against the Christians.

From thence the Turk reduced again his power against the Christians, and first subdued unto him Synope and all Paphlagonia: Also the Kingdom of Trapezuntine, which he befieging both by Land and water, was from the Christians, and sent David the King of the same with his two Sons, and Calus his Uncle, unto Constantinople, where they were miserably and cruelly put to death, and all the stock of the Comneni, which were of the Kings flock, by the Turk were destroyed. Which was about the year of our Lord, 1459. at which time this mischievous Mahumet was first saluted Emperor.

Synope, Paphlagonia, Trapezuntine gotten of the Turks.

David Emperor of Trapezuntine with his two Sons, and Uncle cruelly killed of the Turks.

Corinthus, Mystenes, Lesbos, Lemnus subdued of the Turks.

Not long after, he got from the Grecians Corinthus and Mitylene, not without great flaughter of Christian men; insomuch that the whole City of Mitylene was utterly to the ground almost destroyed. The Iles also of Lemnus and Lesbos he wan from the Venetians; in the which Iland of Lesbos is the City of Mitylene aforesaid.

Not far from this Ile of Lesbos and Mitylene, there is a Country in Asia toward the Sea side bordering next to Europe, called Mysia, or of some called Meesia, whereof the chief City is Troy. This Country Mahumet covetous to have it rather by policy and falshood, than by doubtful danger of War, secretly sent for the Prince thereof to come to speak with him for certain causes (as he pretended) which would concern the profit and commodity of them both. Which when the King of Mysia either for shame would not, or for fear durst not deny, he came to him as to confer upon neceffary affairs in common to them appertaining. Mahumet, when he had brought that to pass which he would, he caused the King to be apprehended, and cruelly to be slain, or rather torn in pieces: and so invading the Land of Mysia, he exercised the like Tyranny upon his kindred and affinity.

The falshood of the Turk against the Prince of Mysia.

The cruelty of the Turk against the King of Mysia.

The siege of Chalcis in Euboia.

This Mysia by fraud being taken and lost, Mahumet flyeth again toward Europe, where he affailed the Iland Euboia, otherwise called Nigroponte, making a Bridge of a marvelous frame over the Sea Euripus, to convey over his Army out of Grecia, and there laid his siege to the City Chalcis, which at length in thirty days he overcame, not without a great flaughter of his Army; who in the siege thereof, is said to have lost Forty thousand of the Turks.

The cruel Tyranny of the Turk against the City of Chalcis. Ex Joanne Homo de rebus Turcicis.

But the slaughter of the Christians was greater; for when the City was won, the Tyrant commanded most cruelly, none to be spared within the whole City, but to be put to the Sword, whosoever was above the Age of Twenty Years. This cruelty was shewed of the barbarous Tyrant for anger and fury, because such a number of his Turks were slain at the siege thereof, being reckoned (as is said) to Forty thousand. In the fierce siege of this City it is memorable that is in Stories recorded, how that the Women of that City, seeing the Men begin to faint, and the City to lie in prefent danger, took the matter themselves in hand, and playing the Men, went to the Walls, and there defended the City with no less trouble to the Enemy, than the Men had before done, and so for a space continued, so long as any Mans strength and diligence could do any good. A great cause of the loss of this City and Iland, is imputed to the cowardly timidity of the Venetians Navy; who being there present, and having prosperous Wind, yet durst not, or would not adventure upon the Turks Bridge, which if they had done, the Iland of Euboia and Chalcis had not so soon been overmatched of the Turks.

The noble stratagem of women in defending that City.

Peloponnesus, Achaia, Messenia, Laconia, Argolica, Archadia, Christian Provinces in Grecia, subdued of the Turk.

Thus all the East parts of Grecia being subdued to the Turkish Tyrant, with all Achaia, Attica, Acarnania and Euboia, shortly after followed also Peloponnesus, brought, in like subjection to the Turk. Within Peloponnesus were these Provinces contained, Achaia, Messenia, Laconia, Argolica and Archadia, &c. The Venetians in this Peloponnesus had great possessions, and had made up the Wall again toward the Sea side, near to the Straits of Corinth before mentioned, where for the more speed of the work, they had Thirty thousand Work-men to the building thereof: which, when it came to the knowledge of the Turk, he brait into the Country of Peloponnesus with an Army of Eight thousand, and first wasted the Regions of the Coroneans, and Methoneans, and making a great flaughter of the Venetians, in short time he brought the whole Dominion of Peloponnesus under his yoke and tribute.

{KING 1. Hen. 7.}

Long it is, and more lamentable to recite all the victories of this Mahumet, gotten against the Christians both by Land and Sea: who, after he had overcone the Ile Lesbos above mentioned, and had cruelly slain Nicholas Catalusius the Prince thereof, turning his Army toward the Sea of Pontus Euxinus, got the Country of Capha from the Genuans. Before was declared how Truce was taken between Georgius Scanderbeius, and the Turk for ten years: which Truce being expired, Mahumet leaveth no time unspent, no diligence unsought, but maketh all his Power to Egypt and Albania, which he, after long fatigation of siege, at length overcame and subdued. In the which Tract also he wan from the Venetians, Scodra, Lyssion and Dinastrum. Notwithstanding, when Scanderbeius the valiant Captain had done against the Turk, what in Mans strength did lie, yet being overmatched with power and multitude, seeking no possibility to make his party good, he was forced to depart his Country as an exile, and went to Italy, and there being sent for by the Popes Letters, openly declared that it was not pofible otherwise to refist the furious rage of the barbarous Turks by the strength of any one King or Prince, unless all Europe with one consent should joyn their power and force together. And thus Gregorius Scanderbeius, a Man of puissant courage, being driven out of his Country, continued his age in exile. Whose courage and vehemency is reported to have been such, that in fighting, against the barbarous Enemy, for very eagerness of Spirit, his blood was seen to burst out of his Lips. It is testified also of him, that being provoked, he neither denied to fight, and in his fighting, never turned his back, neither yet was ever wounded but only once with a light staff in his foot, neither ever fet against the Turk with more than six thousand Horsemen, and three thousand Footmen; who is said with his own hand to have slain above 2000 Turks, whom with such violence he did strike, that many of them he did cleave asunder from the head to the middle.

Neither yet was the unsatiable greedinesse of this Turkish Hell-hound with all this satisfied, but still he conceived greater things in his mind, thinking to conquer the whole World? and so passing forward towards Europe, he subdued all Illyria, slaying Stephanus the King of Bosna, about the year of our Lord 1463. But afterward Matthias Corvinus, the Son of Huniades afore mentioned, recovered again the faid Kingdom of Bosna, with many other Cities near unto Croatia and Dalmatia, and moreover repulfed Mahumet the Turk in his second siege of Jaitza, taking his Tents and munitions left behind him.

Matthias the Son of Huniades.

Moreover, the faid Mahumet passing unto Walachia, set upon Dracula the Prince thereof; which Dracula, although he had no greater power of Souldiers, yet he so enclosed and environed the Turk, that he had almoft loft his whole Army, of whom a great part notwithstanding was destroyed, and many of his Ensigns taken. Into Dalmatia were fent two Captains of the Turk, who, fighting against the Provinces of the Venetians, made great spoil and waste about the Regions of Stiria and Carinthia; where also the Venetian Power was discomfited, and Hieronymus Novel their Captain slain. At length Truce was was taken between the Turk and the Venetians, upon this condition, that Scodra, Tenarus and Lemnus should be yielded unto him, and that they should pay to him yearly, Eight thousand Duckets, for the free passage of their Merchants.

Stiria and Carinthia taken of the Turk.

After this peace concluded with the Venetians, Mahumet himself faileth over into Asia, sending two of his great Captains abroad to sundry places; of whom, Mesithes was sent against the Rhodes with a mighty Navy. The other called Acomates Bassas was sent into Italy to take Rome, and all the Weft Empire. Concerning the Voiage of which two Captains, this was the event, that Mesithes, after his great Travel, and bloody siege against the Rhodians, was fain to retire, at length with great shame and loss. The other Captain Acomates (as is said) was sent into Italy with a Navy of a hundred Ships, and fifteen thousand Men, who by the way sailing, got Leucadia (which now they call S. Maure) Cephalonia and and Zacynthus, and sailing by Fovelona, arrived in Apulia, and so passing along by the Sea side, spoiled and wasted divers parts by the coast, till at length he came to Hydruntium a City in Calabria in Italy, which after long siege he overcame and subdued, and brought such a terror into all Italy, that the Pope forgetting all other things, yet mindful of himself, with all haste fled out of Rome. After the City of Hydruntium was taken, and the Turks placed in the same, which was the year of our Lord 1481. Matthias Corvinus, Huniades Son, was sent for by the Italians, to set upon the faid City, upon the refcue whereof, when Acomates was about to make his return with five and twenty thousand Turks, in the mean time news came, that Mahumet the great Turk was dead; by reason whereof, the siege brake up, and the City was delivered to the Italians again, and so was Italy delivered at that time out of that prefent peril and danger. This Mahumet wan from the Christians two hundred Cities, and twelve Kingdoms, and two Empires, which he joyned both together. He died in the year abovesaid, Anno 1481.

Bajazetes the Second, the tenth after Ottomannus.

Mahumetes aforesaid had three Sons; of the which Mustapha the Eldest, through voluptuousness and carnal Lust, died before his Father. The other two were Bajazetes and Demes, otherwise called Zizimus. About whom great controversie arose amongst the Turks, which of them should succeed in their Fathers Kingdom. For neither of them was present at Constantinople when Mahumetes died; Bajazetes being in Cappadocia, and Demes, in Lycaonia, wherefore, when great diffention was among the Nobles for the succession, and great strife and bloodshed for the matter, the Janizarites, which were the Turks guard, did proclaim Bajazetes Emperor; others, in the absence of Bajazetes the Father, did choose Corchuthus his Son. Bajazetes the Father coming at length from Cappadocia, partly through yielding, partly by corrupting with Money, got the Wills of the Janizarites, and was made Emperor. Demes the other Brother being in Lycaonia more near, although he made no less speed in his coming, yet was prevented of Bajazetes, and excluded out of Constantinople. Wherefore he being put back from all hope of his Kingdom, incited by some of his Friends, moved War against his Brother; who being overcome in three Battels by Acomates, Bajazetes Captain, who had got Hydruntum before, did flie to the great Master of the Rhodes, leaving in a place called Carræ, his Mother and two young Children, whom Bajazetes slew.

This Demes being with the Master of the Rhodes, was defired first of Pope Innocent the fourth, then of Ludovicus the second French King, but especially of Matthias Corvinus, King of Hungary, intending by him to obtain great victory against Bajazetes. But in conclusion, the Knights of the Rhodes sent him to the Bishop of Rome, where he being kept, and afterwards sent to Charles the 8th French King, for an Hostage of Pope Alexander the Sixth, was poisoned by the way of Terracina, by the said Pope Alexander, as is before declared. After whose death, Bajazetes, to requite the foresaid Acomates for his good service, put him to the Halter, partly misdoubting his power, partly for lucre sake to have his Treasure: Whose death redounded to the great profit of the Christians, forsomuch as he was ever an utter enemy to the Religion and name of Christ.

Lithostomus, Moncastrum, Christian Forts subdued of the Turk.

Bajazetes thus being confirmed in his Tyranny, made his expedition against Wallachia, where he subdued two great Forts, one called Lithostomus, the other called Moncastrum. From thence he removed his Power, taking his Voiage into Asia, thinking to be revenged of the Sultan of Egypt, which had succoured and entertained before his Brother Demes against him; where he loft two great Battels, the one fought at Adena, the other at Tarsa, but especially at the field at Tarsus, the Army of the Turk took such a wound, that of an hundred thousand brought into the field, scarce the third part remained unslain. But as touching the Rhodians, although they were succourers of Demes aforesaid, yet Bajazetes (whether for fear, or for subtilty) abstained to provoke them with War, but rather entring with them the League of peace; requiring the Master of the Rhodes to keep his Brother safe under his custody, promising for his yearly salary, to be payed unto him every year in every Month of August, 45000 Duckets.

Thus Bajazetes being overthrown and terrified with evil luck, fighting against the Sultan of Egypt, removed from Asia, and directed his Army into Europe, where he got Dyrachium near unto Velona, and had a great victory over the Christian Army in the Country of Croatia, where the Illyrians, Pannonians and Croatians, joyning their Powers together, encountred with the Turk, and lost the field, about the year of our Lord, 1493.

Dyrachium taken of the Turk.

From thence the Turk leading his Army against the Venetians, had with them divers and doubtful conflicts, where the Turk sometimes was put to the worse, and sometimes again prevailed, out of Padua and divers other Cities about Dalmatia, carried away great multitudes of Christians into Captivity, which was about the year of our Lord, 1458.

The Turk, a painter of the Venetians.

The Christians carried away captives.

Two years after this, which was the year of our Lord 1500. Bajazetes with 150000 armed Men, entred into Peloponnesus; which although Mahumet had expugned before, yet the Venetians had defended Methone, otherwise called Modon, all this while against the Turk? Which Methone the Turk befieged with three Armies, having about the Walls five hundred great brasen Canons, whereof twenty two were most violent and hurtful, wherewith he battered the City both day and night: but the Citizens, which were within the City, committing themselves to God, defended their City as well as they could, rather chusing to die than to yield unto the Turks Tyranny. But the Turk prevailing, and they not able to withstand the siege, the Christians convented together into a certain House prepared for the purpose, both Men, Women and Children; where they setting the House on fire, gave themselves rather to be burned, than to come into the Tyrants hands. Certain Women also, with their Children, cast themselves headlong into the Sea, by that means to avoid the Turkish Captivity. Some writers there be, which affirm that the Methonians, seeing five great Ships of the Venetians coming with Men and Victuals toward them, issued down from the Walls to the Sea side to receive them; which were all taken Captives, being above the number of a thousand: which all being tyed with long Ropes, were brought before the Tyrant, and in his sight were cruelly slain, except certain Nobles, whom Cherseogles, Son in Law to Bajazetes, got to be pardoned, amongst whom was Andreas Gritto. The City of Coron, and also Pilus, Crisseum yielded themselves to the Power of the Turks. Crisseum, otherwise called Caput Sancti Galli, was expugned by Cherseogles, by force of Guns.

Peloponnesus again invaded by the Turk.

Methone taken of the Turk, and cruelly destroyed.

Coron, Pilus, Crisseum yielded to the Turk.

These things thus atchieved, although Bazajetes went away Victor unto Constantinople, yet notwithstanding the Venetians, through the help of the Kings of France and Spain, had won from the Turk, Chephalania an Iland very commodious for their Traffick. Also they had gotten other two Lands, Leucas and Nerine, otherwise called Sancta Maura, flaying all the Garrison of the Turks. But afterwards peace being taken between the Venetians and the Turks, by the Counsel of Andreas Gritto aforesaid, the Turks so agreed, that Leucas and Nericus, the Ilands abovesaid, should be rendred unto the Turks, and the Venetians should keep still the possession of Chephalania.

Chephalonia, Leucas, Nericus recovered of the Turk by the Venetians.

Truce between the Venetians and the Turks.

Unto this League the Turk did the rather condescend, for that he had to maintain War against Ismael Sophus in Asia, King of Persia. Which Sophus was stirred up by Gods Providence to War with this Bazajetes, whereby the Christian Churches in Europe might have some breathing time, and freedom from the Turks cruel Tyranny and bloodshed. This Sophus was a valiant Turk, who with great Power and Victories had over-run a great compass of the East parts of Asia: then passing from Assyria into Media, and returning again into Armenia, he made War against the Albanians, Hiberians, and Scythians, and from thence coming into Asia Minor, encountred with Corchuthus Bajazetes Son, and afterward coming to Bithynia, fought with Caragius Bassa, Bajazetes Captain, whom he overcame and put to flight, and afterward took him alive, and his Wife, prisoners. Afterward he was encountred by Halibassa another Captain of the Turks, whom Techellus one of the said Sophus Captains, meeting in the plain of Galatia, did withstand, and so by the way slew Caragius the Captain, and hanged him upon a Pole in the sight of Halibassa; which Halibassa shortly after was slain in War, and his Army scattered and put to flight.

Halibassa the Turks Captain slain.

Thus through the admirable example of Gods Justice and Providence, were these Turks kept occupied, and so came it to pass, that these Barbarians being blaspheamous against the Son of God, should thus horribly run on to the destruction one of another, being worthily punished with mutual slaughter and bloodshed, for their Impiety and Blaspherny against Christ and his Religion, whereby in the mean time some rest was given to the Christians.

Rest given to the Christians by the discord of the Turks.

Bajazetes partly by these Victories discouraged, partly diseased and languishing of the Gout, and partly also broken with age, finding himself unweildy to the Regiment of that tumultuous Kingdom, began to have talk with his Nobles about the chusing of one to succeed him. The occasion whereof minisired much matter of inward Wars amongst the Turks. This Baiezetes had in all six Sons, whereof three died before him, and three yet were left alive; to wit, Acomates, Corchutus and Zelymus. Bajazetes himself had most mind to Acomates, but the chiefest of his Nobles did favour rather Zelymus; who through their traiterous instication, provoked him to the War against his Father: and notwithstanding that he was overcome in War, yet through intercession, he was reconciled again to his Father, and afterward proclaimed again Emperor against his Fathers will, through the help and favour of the Soudliers, entring the first beginning of his Kingdom, with the murthering of his own Father. The story whereof in some Authors is thus declared.

Zelymus made Emperor against his Fathers will.

What these Janizaries were, read before.

After that the Janizaries had perswaded with Bajazetes, for that he himself was unweldy, therefore he should do well to continue some Successor, and that he had assigned Acomates to succeed him; the Janizaries being offended with the said Acomates, because he would not inlarge their stipends, and bribe them, compassing about the Kings Palace with their privy Swords which they had under their Garments, with a mighty cry, required Zelymus to be appointed for their Emperor. Unto whom when Bajazetes had answered, That he had assigned Acomates, they refused him, because he was far, grosse, and unable thereunto; but needs would have Zelymus, which was stout and warlike, to be made Emperor: and withall they drew out their Swords, crying Zelymus, Zelymus. Then Bajazetes giving place to their fury, shewed himself content to give them Zelymus; whom the Janizaries receiving, brought him into the Palace unto whom Bajazetes his Father giving place, willed him not to be so haisty and furious in his doings, but to be modest and take heed what he did, and not to follow his fury, but to give place unto time, which revealeth all things, and think himself to be a man subject to dangers and jeopardies as other men are: and thus speaking, he religned his Imperial Throne and Seat unto him, and went away all heavy, entring into a certain Order of their Religion. Whereupon followed great exclamations of the people, saluting Zelymus as Emperor. Who then taking the Rule upon him, began with great cruelty to govern, destroying many of his Nobles, such as had stood against him, some with poison, some by other cruel means, and advancing his own side, with great Honours and Promotions.

The counsil of Bajazetes to his Son Zelymus.

Not long after that Zelymus was thus setled in his Kingdom, Bajazetes his Father intending to see and prove how he behaved himself in his Government, first entred into his Treasure-house, where he found all his riches to be scattered and gone. Afterward he came into his Armory, where all the spoils gotten by War were likewise wasted; then he entred into the Jewel-house, where all his Plate and Gifts sent from Kings and Princes were kept, which likewise were dispersed and given away. At length he came into the Stable, where also he seeing his principal Horses to be lacking, fighing with himself, and crying Vengeance upon him, he prepared himself, with the residue of the treasure which was remaining, to sail over into Natolia unto his eldest Son; and passing by an Orchard near to the Sea-side, where he had appointed to take Ship, in the mean time whilst the Ships were in furnishing, he fate down under a Tree, and began to curse his Son, and to ask Vengeance upon him, for that he had so despised his Father, and was become so impious a Wretch.

{KING Hen. 7.}

Zelymus understanding of his Fathers departure came into the Orchard where his Father was, seeming to be very heavy, and much lamenting that his Father would so privily depart and go away, seeing that he delired not the Government of the Empire, but was contented only with the Title thereof. O Father (said he) do not thus privily depart away; do not procure this shame to your Son, who so tenderly loveth you. Let me have but the name only, and be you the Emperour indeed. The end of your natural life most patiently I shall expect, which I pray God may long continue. And thus uling many fair and flattering words to his Father, he commanded a Banquet with many dainty Junkets to be brought unto him, but tempered and infected with poyson. Which affoon as Bajazetes had begun to taste of, and felt the strength of the poison working in his body, he took his last Farewel of his Son, and going out of the City accompanied with a great retinue of men, yelling and crying out in the Streets, in the middle of his journey fell down and miserably died, in the year of our Lord, 1512. Here maist thou see, good Reader, a curled brood of this Turkish Generation, where the Father dieth in curling the Son, and the Son reigneth by poisoning his Father.

The dissemblings words of Zelymus to his Father.

Zelymus the Son poisoneth his Father.

Zelymus the Eleventh after Ottomanus.

Zelymus the Eleventh after Ottomanus.

After that this wretched Zelymus had exercised his barbarous cruelty upon his Father, with like impiety he seeketh the destruction of his Brethren and their Children, first beginning his murther with the five Children his Nephews, which were the Sons of his three Brethren before departed. Which done, then remained his other two Brethren yet alive, Acomates and Corchutus with their Children, likewise to be destroyed. Of whom the one had three Sons, whom the Father sent to Zelymus his Brother, and their Uncle, with fair and gentle words, to intreat him to be good unto their Father, offering to him their duty and service in all things honouring him also as Emperor. But cruel Zelymus commanded forthwith his said Nephews to be strangled. The Father hearing of the cruel murther of his Sons, leaving house and home, went and hid himself in Mountains, where he lived for a space with herbs and wild honey; but being betrayed by one of his men, he was brought to Zelymus, and so was strangled.

The cruelty of Zelymus against his Father and his Brethren.

The cruelty of Zelymus against his Cosins.

Christopherus Richerius, writing of these matters, seemeth something to differ from other stories, and saith, That Zelymus, after the death of his Brother Corchutus, came to Burfia, where he under the colour of making a great Triumph, ordained a Feast for his Friends and Kinsfolk, whereunto were called especially his Nephews, who then at the end of the Feast calling his Nephews aside (as under the pretence of conferring with them secretly about his necessary affairs) commited them to his Servants to be strangled and put to death. All this while Acomates his other Brother, through the help and instruction of his Mother, was kept out of the Tyrants hands, till at length, after great labour and search made how to get him, certain forged Letters were cast abroad, wherein was contained, that Acomates, to revenge the great Impiety, and subdue the tyranny of Zelymus his Brother, should shew himself abroad. Which if he would do, he shall find Friends enough to take his part. Acomates circumvented with these subtil trains, partly for hope of revengement, partly for delire of the Empire, shewed himself abroad with such power and strength as he had; who, being set upon incontinent by Zelymus his Brother, was overcome in battel, and falling from his horse, being a man corpulent and grosse, and his horse falling upon him, was so overpressed and slain.

Ex Christ. Rich.

Zelymus the Turk warreth against his Brother.

Touching the death of this Acomates, Munsterus somewhat differing from this Narration, addeth moreover, and saith, That he was not killed with the fall from his horse, but sitting all distmayed upon a stone, and seeing no other remedy but death, desired the Captain, taking his Rings from his Fingers, to deliver the same to his Brother, desiring him that he might not be put to any extream cruelty of death, but that he gently would suffer him to be let blood in the Bath, and so to die. But Zelymus, being not ignorant ignorant of this, suborneth privy Tormentors, who binding his hands behind him, with their feet, cast him down upon the ground, and so twisting his Neck with a cord, did strangle him. This Acomates had two Sons, who hearing of the death of their Father, did fly for succour, the one to Sophus in Persia, and the other to the Sultan in Egypt.

The cruelty of Zelymus against his Brother. The two Sons of Acomates fly from the tyranny of Zelymus the Turk.

By the means whereof, new occasion of War grew unto Zelymus, whereby he was kept in Asia, at home, to fight against the Persians and Egyptians: so that through the Lords Providence, Christendom by that means was delivered from great danger and peril of the Turks tyranny. For otherwise the Turk was wholly minded, with all his Force and Puissance, to Invade the Christians, being in doubt whether first to begin with Rhodes, or whether to assault Pannonia, or else to set upon Italy, being then at great discord within it self: but this cause occupied the Turks mind otherwise, and kept him at home. Such was then the Providence of the Lord for the safeguard of his people.

The Providence of God, in stirring up occasions for his people.

Wherefore, forsomuch as the affairs and doings of this Turk were spent for the most part in the Turkish and Heathenish Countries: it shall not be greatly necessary to trouble our Christian stories therewith, but only shall suffice to contract them in a brief sum, declaring superficially what unquietnels was amongst them there, which could never be quieted, but ever working some mischief either abroad or at home. Amurathes the Turks Nephew aforesaid, after he had obtained Aid of Sophus the King of the Persians, first invaded Cappadocia: not long after whom followed Ismael Sophus the Persian King. By reason whereof, a great battel was fought betwixt the Persians and Zelymus, in the fields of Armenia major. In the which battel, Ismael Sophus the Persian King was hurt on the shoulder with a pellet, and so being carried out of the field, left the Victory to Zelymus: who, albeit he had an Army of 150000 men, yet in the same field lost about 30000 of his Turks. Which field was fought in year of our Lord, 1514. Zelymus after this Victory, went to Tauricia, the Imperial City of the Persians, which he, by yielding, subdued.

War between Zelymus and Sophus the Persian King.

In this mean time it hapned that one Aladulus, a King of Armenia the greater, was also a helper to Ismael against the Turk; whereupon Zelymus the Turk taking great indignation, the next year following, leaving the Persians, fought against the said Aladulus, and in the end overcame him: and afterward being found in a Cave in a Wood, he was taken out and brought to Zelymus, and so beheaded: whole head, being first carried about Asia for a Triumph, was afterward sent to the Senate of Venice for a terrour unto them. The eldest Son of Aladulus, escaping the hands of his Pursuers, fled into Egypt. This battel thus fought and ended, Zelymus after he had divided the Kingdom of Aladulus into three Provinces, went to Lycenia, and from thence to Europe, there to defend the City of Samandria, against the Christians in Hungary, but the Hungarians being foon repressed by Juno Bassa the Turks Captain, great preparation began to be made by the Turks against the Confines of Servia bordering upon Hungary. The terrour whereof stirred up Maximilian the Emperor, and Ladislaus King of Hungary, and Sigismundus King of Polony, to consult together, and conjoyn their Power for defence of Christendom. But through new incumbrances incident, the Turk leaving Europe, made haste again into Asia, to renew again his Wars against the Persians, who had made a Vow not to give over that War before Ismael was overthrown.

War between Zelymus and Aladulus another Turk.

Precaration of War between Zelymus and the Christians.

The Turk called away from the Christians.

A Turkish Vow.

But before he entred that War, first he sent his Messengers to the Sultan of Egypt, requiring him not to intermeddle in that War: for this Sultan before had promised to assist the Persians against the Turk. The name of the Sultan which reigned then in Egypt, was Campson, set up by the Mamaluci. These Mamaluci were a certain Order amongst the Egyptians, much like to the Janizaries about the Turk, who being the Children of Christian men, and after denying Christ, were the chiefest doers in the Sultans Court, and being grown into a great multitude, did degenerate into a Turkish barbarity, or rather became worse than Turks. This Campson unto the Messengers of the Turk, gave this Answer again, That unless he would leave off this War against Ismael, and restore the Son of Aladulus, he would not lay down his Armour.

Cajetbius false to his Master.

Zelymus being incensed not a little with this insolent Answer of the Sultan, leaving all other Wars aside, with great celerity advanced his Power against the Sultan. Which Sultan, partly through the falsehood of his Captain Cajerbeius, partly by the suddenness of the Turks coming, not far from the City of Damascus, encountred with the Turk, and there overthrown from his horse, being a fat and grosse body, and falling under his horse, and his horse also falling upon him, was quashed in pieces, and so died, which was the year of our Lord, 1516.

Campson slain.

The Mamalucs, of whom more than a thousand in this battel were slain, flying from thence to Memphis, set up Tomumbeius in stead of Campson: whose Captain Gazelles was overcome at the City of Gaza, and he afterward himself driven out of Memphis, where a great part of the Mamalucs were destroyed. Then Tomumbeius, flying over the Flood Nilus, renewed his Army again; but in the end was discomfited and chased into a Marish, where he was found standing in the water up to the chin, and so being brought to Zelymus, was put to the rack and great torments, to make him confess where Campsons treasures were: but when he would not declare, he was carried about the Town with an halter about his Neck, and hanged up upon an high Gibbet for a Spectacle to all Egypt; which was the year of our Lord, 1517. And thus were the two Sultans of Egypt destroyed with the Mamalucs, which there had born the Rule in Egypt, the space of 243 years. The Progeny of the which Mamalucs remaining of the Wars, the Turk commanded in the prifon gates of Alexandria to be cut in pieces. Zelymus from thence triumphing, departed to Constantinople, intending to spend the reit of his time in persecuting the Christians. But in that mean space he was stricken with a cankered sore rotting inward, and died after he had reigned seven years like a Beast, in the year of our Lord 1520.

Tomumbeius made Sultan of Egypt.

Tomumbeius executed.

A worthy destruction of the Mamalucs forsaking their Faith and Religion.

Note again the Providence of God.

The death of Zelymus.

The Reign of this Turk was but short in number of years: but in number of his murders and cruel bloodshed it might seem exceeding long, which seemed more like a beast than a man: for he never spared any of his friends or kindred. His Father first he poisoned, his Brethren and all his cosins he quelled, leaving none of all his Kindred alive. Moreover, his chief and principal Captains for small occasions he put to death, as Mustapha, Calogere, Chendeme, Bostang his Son in law, and Juno Bassa.

The beastly cruelty of Zelymus against his Kindred.

The cruelty of Zelymus against his Son Solyman.

It is said moreover, that he intended the poisoning of his own Son Solyman, sending unto him a shirt infected with poison, because he seemed something freely to speak against the cruel demeanor of his Father: but by the means of his Mother, the gift being suspected, was given to another which was his Chamberlain, who putting on the shirt was strucken with the poison thereof, and therewithall died.

As touching this Turk Zelymus, by the way here may be noted how the secret Providence of the Lord kept him occupied with his Turkish Wars at home, while that the Reformation of Christian Religion here in Europe, the same time began by Martin Luther, might the more quietly take some rooting without disturbance or interruption. For so it appeareth by the computation of time, that in the days of this Zelymus, Martin Luther first began to write against the Popes Indulgences, which was in the year of our Lord, 1516.

A note of Gods Providence for the Reformation of Religion.

Solymannus the Twelfth after Ottomannus.

Solymannus the Twelfth after Ottomannus.

Solymannus the only Son of Zelymus succeeded after his Fathers death, who in the first beginning seemed to some to be simple and sheepish, and not meet for the Turkish Government. Wherefore certain of his Nobles, consulting how to depose him, intended to set up another Emperor. In which Conspiracy especially are named Cajerbeius and Gazelles. This Cajerbeius was he that betrayed before Campson the Sultan of Egypt to Zelymus, as is aforesaid; who now also being in consultation with Gazelles and other about this matter, detected them also unto Solyman. Wherefore the said Gazelles and his Fellows being thus detected, were put to death by Solyman, declaring thereby that he was not so sheepish as he was thought of them to be, and as also by his Acts afterward did more appear.

Solymannus,

Belgradum again beſieged of the Turk, as it had before.

Solymannus, after this execution done upon the Conſpirators, taking his Voyage into Europe, firſt beſieged Belgradum; which being a City in Hungary was the ſtrongeſt Fort of all the Roman Empire, and the chief defence at that time of all Chriſtendom; which alſo aſſaulted before time by Amuratbes the Second, was valiantly defended by Joannes Humiades, as is above ſpecified. But there now lacked ſuch an one as Huniades was. For the Kingdom of Hungary at that time was under the government of Ludovicus a young King, unexpert and of a ſimple wit. Whom other Princes, and ſpecially the covetous Cleirchmen did ſo pill and poll, that they left him nothing but only the bare Name and Title of his Kingdom, whereby, he being unfurniſhed both of men and money, was unable to match with ſuch an Enemy.

Diſſord amongſt Chriſtian Princes, what miſchief it bringeth.

Another vantage alſo the Turks had in beſieging Belgrade: For the Chriſtian Princes at that time were in civil diſſention and variance amongſt themſelves; and the Pope with his Churchmen alſo were to buſie in ſuppreſſing of Luther, and of the Goſpel then newly ſpringing, that they minded nothing elſe, except it were to maintain the wealth of their own Bellies: Which Pope if he had ſet his care (as his duty was) ſo much in ſtirring up Princes againſt the common Enemy, as he was bent to deface the Goſpel, and to perſecute the true Profeſſors thereof; ſome might have brought to paſs, not only that Belgrade might have been defended againſt the Turk, but alſo that to be recovered again which was loſt before; and moreover he might have ſtopped the great dangers and perils which now are like to fall upon the Religion and Church of Chriſt; which the Lord of his great mercy avert and turn away.

The Pope to buſie againſt Luther, that he neglecteth the ruine of Chriſtendom.

Certes whatſoever the Pope then did, this had been his duty, ſetting all other things apart, to have had an earneſt compaſſion of ſo many miſerable and loſt Captives, which were ſain from their Faith and Religion, unto the miſery and ſlavery of the Turk, and thraldom of the Devil, and to have fought all means poſſible to have reduced them, as loſt ſheep, into the Fold again. Which then might ſoon have been done, if Prelates and Princes, joyning together in Chriſtian concord, had loved ſo well the public Glory of Chriſt, and Souls of Chriſtians, as they tendered their own private, worldly, and frivolous quarrels.

True compaſſion lacking in the Pope.

And admit that the Pope had conceived never ſo much malice againſt Luther, his quarrel alſo being good; yet the publick Church ſtanding in ſuch danger, as it then did by the Invaſion of the Turk, Reaſon would, Nature led, Religion taught, time required, that a good Prelate, forgetting lighter matters, ſhould rather have laid his ſhoulder to the excluding of ſo great a danger, as then was imminent both to himſelf, and the univerſal Church of Chriſt: But now his quarrel being unjuſt, and the cauſe Chriſt: But now his quarrel being unjuſt, and the cauſe of Luther being moſt juſt and godly, what is to be ſaid or thought of ſuch a Prelate, who forbearing the Turk, whom in a time ſo dangerous he ought chiefly to have reſiſted, perſecuted the Truth which he ſhould ſpecially have maintained? But Chriſt of his mercy ſtand for his Church, and ſtir up zealous Princes and Prelates, if not to recover that that is loſt, yet at leaſt to retain that little which is left.

The City of Belgrade won of the Turk.

Solyman therefore taking this occaſion, and uſing the commodity of time, while our Princes were thus at variance betwixt themſelves, without any reſiſtance or interruption brought his Army unto Belgrade, in the year of our Lord, 1521. Which City being but ſlenderly defenced, the Turk through his Underminers, Guns, and other Engins of War, without great difficulty, and with little loſs of his Souldiers, ſoon ſubdued and overcame.

After this Victory, Solyman reſting himſelf a whole year, and caſting in his mind how to make all ſure behind him, for fear of Enemies to come upon his back, thought it expedient for his purpoſe if he might obtain the Iſland of Rhodes: for that only remained yet Chriſtian betwixt him and Aſia: wherefore the next year following, he brought his Army of 450 Ships, and 300000 Men, to the beſieging thereof. This Rhodes was a mighty and ſtrong Iſland, within the Sea called Mare mediterraneum. The Inhabitants whereof at the firſt did manfully reſiſt the Turk, ſparing no labour nor pains for the defence of themſelves and of all Chriſtendom. But afterward being brought to extremity, and pinched with penury, ſeeing alſo no Aid to come from the Chriſtians, ſomewhat began to languiſh in themſelves. The Turks in the mean time caſting up two great Mountains with ſtrength of hand, two miles off from the City, like rolling Trenches carried them before them near unto the City, in the tops whereof they planted their Ordnance and Artillery, to batter the City. The Maſter of the Knights of the Rhodes was then one Philippus Villadamus, a Frenchman, in whom no diligence was lacking that appertained to the defence of the City. The Rhodians likewiſe ſo valiantly behaved themſelves upon the Walls, that with their ſhot all the Ditches about the City were filled with the Carkaſſes of dead Turks. Beſides this, ſuch a diſeaſe of the Bloody-Flux reigned in the Turks Camp, that 30000 of them died thereof; and yet for all this Solyman would not ceaſe from his ſiege begun: who, at length by Underminers caſting down the Vamures and uttermoſt parts of the City, won ground ſtill more and more upon the Rhodians, and with Mortar-pieces ſo battered the houſes, that there was no free place almoſt ſtanding in all the City. And thus continued the ſiege for the ſpace of five or ſix months, and yet all this while came no help unto them from the Chriſtians. Wherefore they being out of all hope, through the advice of Villadamus, yielded themſelves unto the Turk, upon condition that he would ſpare them with life and goods; which convention the Turk kept with them faithfully and truly.

This Solyman with his great glory, and utter ſhame to all Chriſtian Princes, and alſo ruine of all Chriſtendom, got the noble Ile of Rhodes, although not without great loſs and detriment of his Army, inſomuch that at one aſſault twenty thouſand Turks about the Walls were ſlain with Fire, Sword, Stones, and other Engins. Whereby it may be conjectured what theſe Rhodians might or would have done, if ſuccour had come to them from other Chriſtian Princes as they looked for. This City was won upon Chriſtmas-day, Anno 1522.

Rhodes won of the Turk.

This Conqueſt of Rhodes obtained, Solyman the fourth year after bringeth back his Army again into Hungary, where he found none to reſiſt him but only Ludovick the young King, who being accompanied with a ſmall Army, and nothing able to match with the Turk, yet of a haſty raſhneſs and vain hope of victory, would needs ſet upon him; who if he had ſtaid but a little, had proſpered the better. For Joannes Vaivoda, being a Captain well exerciſed in Turkiſh Wars before, was not far off, coming with a ſufficient Power of able Souldiers. But Paulus the Archbiſhop of Colocz, a Franciſcan-Frier, a man more bold than wiſe, with his temerity and raſhneſs troubled all their doings. For the whole ſum of the Army of the Hungarians, contained in all but only four and twenty thouſand Horſemen and Footmen, who at length coming unto the battel, and being compaſſed about with a great multitude of the Turks Army, were brought into great diſtreſs. The Turks twice ſhot off their pieces againſt the Chriſtian Army; yet ſcarce was any Chriſtian touched with the ſtroke thereof: which was thought to be done of purpoſe, becauſe they were Chriſtians which had the ordering of the Guns, for then the ſpecial Gunners of the Turks were Chriſtians, whom for the ſame cauſe they ſpared. Then the Turkiſh Horſemen, coming upon the back of the Chriſtian Army, compaſſed them about, and by reaſon of their multitude overcharged their Horſemen. Amongſt whom was ſlain the ſame time the Archbiſhop Frier aboveſaid, with the Biſhops of Strygone and Varadine, and many other Nobles beſide. Alſo the King himſelf, being deſtitute of his neceſſary aid and ſuccour, was compelled to fly into a Mariſh, where he falling from his Horſe, being heavy laden with the Harneſs, was not able to riſe again, but there miſerably periſhed.

Ferdinandus of Hungary

After the deceaſe of Ludovick, Ferdinandus ſucceeded in the Kingdom, being Duke of Auſtria and King of Hungary. Then Solyman, ſetting contention betwixt Joannes Vaivoda and Ferdinandus for the Kingdom of Hungary, ſped his Voyage to the City of Buda, which alſo also in ſhort time he made to be yielded unto him upon condition that they ſhould eſcape with their lives and goods; which condition ſome ſay he kept, and ſome ſay he did not. Beſides Buda, divers places and munitions the ſaid Turk, contrary to his League made before, did ſpoil and waſte, as Varadinum, Quinque Eccleſias, and other Forts and Munitions more, bordering about the Coaſts of Hungary.

In the year of our Lord, 1529. Ferdinandus King of Hungary aforeſaid recovered divers Holds gotten of the Turk before, and alſo warring againſt Joannes Vaivoda his Enemy, with whom he had variance (as ye heard before) expulſed him out of his Kingdom. Whereupon Vaivoda, flying to the Turk, deſired his aid. The Turk, glad to take that occaſion, with great preparation addreſſed himſelf to return into Hungary, where he recovering again the City of Buda which Ferdinandus had gotten from him a little before, removed his Army into Auſtria, ſpoiling and deſtroying by the way all that came to his hands, ſhewing many examples of great cruelty and tyranny moſt lamentable to hear and underſtand. For of ſome he put out their Eyes, of ſome he cut off their Hands, of ſome their Ears and Noſes, and of their Children he cut off their Privy Members. The Maidens he corrupted, the Matrons had their Breaſts cut off, and ſuch as were with child were ript and their Children call into the fire. And theſe examples of horrible and barbarous tyranny this wretched Turk perpetrated by the way coming toward Vienna a noble City in Auſtria, beſides the Captives which he took by the way and led into Servitude moſt miſerable, mounting to the number of 30000.

Among other Holds by the way as the Turks came, there was a Caſtle called Altenburch, ſtrongly by nature ſituated, and by art defenced; which Caſtle the Turk intending not to overpaſs, becauſe he would make all things ſure behind him, began to make his Aſſault, and lay his Ordnance againſt it. The Warders and Keepers of the Caſtle, ſo ſoon as the Turk began to lay ſiege againſt them, making no reſiſtance, of a womanly cowardlineſs ſent their Meſſengers to the Turk, to yield themſelves ready to do his commandment, and further him with their victual. Amongſt whom were three hundred Bohemians, who were commanded to follow the Hoſt, that the Turk by them might learn what ſtrength was in the City of Vienna; alſo where the King was, and what was to be done for the winning thereof.

Of whom when the Turk had underſtanding how all things ſtood, and how that there were but twenty thouſand men in Vienna able to bear Armor, and that other Cities of Auſtria would ſoon yield if that were gotten, and that Vienna was victualled but for two months, and that the King was of late in Boheme; thus the Turk of all things being certified, having no doubt in his mind of Victory, made ſpeed toward Vienna; and firſt coming to Neapolis, a City but eight miles diſtant from Vienna, he required them to yield themſelves; who notwithſtanding withſtood them, and repulſed them manfully. Then the Tugks aſſigned a placed for the pitching of their Tents; which becauſe it ſeemed ſomething too little for ſuch a great multitude, they took in more ground to the compaſs of ſeven miles circuit. The multitude of his Army, which he there planted, is accounted of ſome to extend to 250 thouſand Souldiers. The Turk thus being planted, made daily excurſes over all the Country of Auſtria, ſpecially about the City of Vienna, waſting and ſpoiling with great cruelty and murther amongſt the poor Chriſtians.

Moreover, to make all things more ſure toward the preparation of the ſiege, Scouts were ſent abroad, and Embaſſinments were laid about the River ſide of Danubius, to provide that no aid nor victual ſhould be brought to Vienna. So it pleaſed the Providence of the Lord (who diſpoſeth all things) that three days before the coming of the Turk. Fredericus the Earl Palatine, which was then aſſigned by the Empire to take the charge of Vienna, was come down by the River of Danubius with 14000 and with a certain Troop of Horſemen well appointed and picked for the purpoſe. After the coming of this Frederick, proviſion alſo of victual was appointed to follow ſhortly after by the ſaid River of Danubius.

In the mean time, they which had the carriage and tranſporting thereof, hearing how the ways were laid, and all the Paſſages ten miles about Vienna ſtopped by the Turks, although they knew the City to ſtand in great need of victual, yet ſeeing there was no other remedy, rather than it ſhould come to the Enemies hand, thought it beſt to ſink their Boats with their carriage, and ſo they did. Whereby albeit the Chriſtians wanted their reliefe, yet were the Turks diſappointed of their prey and purpoſe. The Captains which had the keeping of the City, which were chiefly Fredericus the Earl Palatine, Gulielmus Rogendorfius, and Nicolaus Earl of Salme, ſeeing themſelves ſo ſtraitned contrary to their expectation, although they had great cauſes to be diſcouraged, yet calling their courage unto them, they conſulted together for the beſt way to be taken: and ſeeing that the little City Neapolis (above mentioned) being eight miles diſtant from them, ſo valiantly withſtood the Turks, that in one day they ſuſtained ſeven grievous Aſſaults againſt all the main force of the Turkiſh Army; by their example and manful ſtanding being the more animated and encouraged, thought to abide the uttermoſt before they would give over; and firſt plucking down all the Suburbs and Buildings without the Walls, whereby the Enemy might have any Succour, they willed all the Farmers and Inhabitants about the City to have themſelves, and to bring in their goods within the Walls. Such places as were weak within the Walls, they made ſtrong. About the Towers and Munition of the Walls they provided Rampiers and Bulwarks diſtant eighty foot one from another, to keep off the ſhot; and every man had his place and ſtanding awarded to him upon the Wall, and his office appointed what to do: but eſpecially that ſide of the City which lieth to the River of Danubius they fortified after the beſt wiſe; for that way only now remained for victual to be tranſported from the Bohemians unto them. Whereſore eight Enſigns were aſſigned to the keeping of the Bridge, and in the Plain, which was like an Iſland incloſed within the River, a ſufficient Garriſon of Horſemen were placed, lying within the gunſhot of the City, to the intent that if any grain or victual were ſent from the Bohemians, they might provide the ſame ſafely to be brought into the City.

Theſe things thus being diſpoſed and ſet in order, Lord William Rogendorff, to aſſay the ſtrength of the Turks, made divers Rodes out with his Horſemen, albeit much againſt the minds of the Auſtrians; who, knowing the manner of the Turks, thought it better to ſuffer them, while either with time they might be overwearied, or for lack of victuals conſumed. Among many and fundry Skirmiſhes which the Chriſtians had with the Turks, one eſpecially was to our men unproſperous; in which certain of the Horſemen, eſpying a ſmall Troop of the Turks ſcattering abroad from their company, made out after them, who ſuddenly and guilefully were incloſed and circumvented by the Turks, before they could recover the Gates of the City, and ſo were all taken alive: Of whom three were ſent from the Turks into the City, to declare to the Viennians what ſtrength they had ſeen in the Camp of their Adverſaries, and to ſollicite them to yield their City for fear of punihment which would follow. The reſidue they reſerved to torments and puniſhment, whom in the ſight of the whole Army, and of the Chriſtians (which ſhould tell the ſame to the Citizens) they cauſed every man to be drawn with four Horſes apieces, and ſo to be diſmembred and pluckt aſunder.

The wretched cruelty of the Turks againſt the Chriſtian Captives.

After this done, the barabrous Turk immediately ſent his Herald to talk with the Captains of the City, whether they would yield the City upon honeſt conditions, or elſe would abide the arbitrement of War. If they would gently ſubmit themſelves, they ſhould have all gentleneſs to them ſhewed. If they would be ſtubborn, and ſtand to their defence, he would alſo ſtand to his ſiege begun, ſo that he neither would ſpare man, woman, or child. To this the Captains anſwered again, That they were contented that Solyman ſhould ſtand to his ſiege begun, and do his uttermoſt, what he would, or what he could. As for them, they were at a point to defend themſelves and their City ſo long as they might; the event and fall of Victory to be doubtful, and many times ſo to happen, that they which begin the War, are wearied ſooner than they which be provoked; neither that they were ſo unmindful either of themſelves, or of their Country, but that they did remember well what they are, and what they be called, named to be Germans;

Soliymannus approcheth Vienna with three great armies.

Solyman not a little disdaining at this Answer, first burning and consuming all the Villages, Houses and places round about the City, infecting allo the Springs and Fountains which gave water into the City, and so stopping all Passages that no Relief should have way unto them, began with angry mood to approach more near to the City, with three great Campes; sending them word in scorn and contumely by one of his Captains, that if they stood in need of help of Souldiers, he would send unto them the three hundred Bohemians (mentioned a little before) to aid them in their defence. To whom the Palatine directed answer again, That they had more Souldiers in the City than they needed. As for the Bohemians which had yielded themselves, he might do with them what he would, for Vienna stood in no great need of them.

A Messenger sent from Ferdinando to Vienna.

In the mean time a Messenger coming from Ferdinando was privily let in by night into the City, which brought word that they should play the men in keeping out the Enemy a while; for it would not be long, but both Ferdinandus and Carolus his Brother, with the strength of all Germany, would be ready to rescue them. At which Message the hearts of the Souldiers began somewhat to be cheared, and to contemn the huge multitude of the Adversaries, being so great as they never did behold, nor did ever almost hear of before. The largeness of whose Army extended no less in compass (as is above-said) than of seven miles round about the City Walls.

The siege of Vienna beginneth.

Long it were to recite the whole Order of this terrible siege, with all the parts and circumstances thereof. Briefly to touch so much as shall suffice for this History, with fewer words than were stripes given at the siege thereof; this is to be judged and confessed, whosoever beholdeth the number and fierceness of the Turks, the absence of King Ferdinandus, the lack of provision and victual within the City, the noise of the Guns, the violence of the shot, the terrour of the sight, and yet no succour sent unto them; that the custody of that City was no mans doing, but the Arm only of the Lord God of Hosts, according to the true saying of the Psalm. Unless the Lord do keep the City, the Watchmen watch in vain which watch to save it: Unless the Lord do build the House, the Builder striveth in vain which taketh upon him to build it. Experience whereof in keeping this City may well appear.

The Lords Power and Providence in keeping the City of Vienna.

First, Solyman bending his shot and Ordnance against the City, beat down to the ground the Vamures with all the uttermost Suburbs of the City, and that in such a short moment of time, that the hearts of the Viennians, a little before refreshed, were now as much appalled again with fear, misdoubting with themselves, lest the Turk with the same celerity and violence would have prevailed against the inward Walls, as he did in beating down the outward Vamures. And no doubt the same time the Turk had put the City in great hazard, had not night coming on, broken off the siege for that day.

The slaughter of the Turks about the ways of Vienna.

In the mean time the Citizens laboured all night in repairing and refreshing the Walls, to make all things sure against the next Assault. The next day early in the morning the Turks approaching the City again with a new Assault, thinking to scale the Walls, were so repulsed and manfully resisted by the Germans, that unneth any ditches about the Walls could be seen for the bodies of the dead Turks, wherewith they were replenished; so that the Turks were fain to fight standing upon the bodies of them which were slain. By the which Calamity the force of the Enemy was not a little abated.

The manlinesse of Captain Rogendorffius against the Turks.

It happened the same time, that a Company of the Turks being sped out of the City wandering out of order, the Captain Rogendorffius with two Legions of Horsemen issuing out of the City Gate called Salmaria, and so passing closely under the hills side, did so set upon them, that they slew a great number of them; the rest being driven to take the River, whom with stones and shot likewise they destroyed, and so retired back into the City again. By this Victory the Captain Rogendorffius began to be terrible to the Turks. For in the same Skirmish (as after was known) were slain of them so many, that of 5000 and 300 Horsemen and Footmen scarce 140 escaped alive.

Solyman disdaining at this repulse thought to prove another way, and so bringing his Power toward the Gate called the Kings-Gate, there making his Trenches and Bulwarks, planted his Ordnance, with the violence whereof the Walls were so battered and shaken, that no man was able there to stand. Wherefore the Turk, seeing two great breaches made in the Wall, commanded his Souldiers coverly in the dark smoke of the Gunpowder to press into the City. The like also was done at the Scotish Tower, whereby the City was invaded in two sundry places at one time. The Viennians at the first freshly began to withstand them, new Souldiers still coming in the place of them that were slain and hurt; and so this assault continuing more than six hours together, our men began at length to languish and faint, not only in strength but also in courage, whereby the City had been in great danger of losing, had not the two aforesaid Captains, Rogendorffius in the one place, and the Earl of Salme in the other place, manfully encouraged the Souldiers to abide the brunt, and to bear out a while the violence of the Turks, promising that immediately they should have aid from Ferdinandus.

{KING} Hen. 7. Another Assault of the Turks against Vienna.

Another repulse of the Turks.

In the mean time the Turks came so thick for the greedinesse of the Victory, scaling, climbing, and fighting upon the Walls, that had it not been for that press and throng of the great multitude of the Turks, coming so thick that one of them could not fight for another, Vienna that same day had been taken and utterly loft. But by the policy of the Captains giving a sign within the City, as though new Souldiers were called for, our men began to be encouraged, and the Turks hearts to be discomfited.

Vienna undermined by the Turks.

When Solyman saw his Army the second time repulsed, he began to attempt a new way, purposing by undermining to overthrow the City; in the which work specially he used the help of the Illyrians, of whom he had a great number in his Camp, expert in that kind of feat. These Illyrians beginning to break the earth at the Gate Carinthia, and coming near to the foundations of the Tower, which they by strength of hand attempted to break, could not work so closely under the ground, but they were perceived by certain men above, which were skilful and expert in that kind of matter; who contrariwise undermining against them, and filling their Trenches as they went with Gunpowder, so conveyed their train, that when fire should be set unto it, the violence thereof should burst out by the trenches of the Enemies: which done, suddenly the ground beneath made a great flaking, so that the Tower did cleave asunder, and all the Underminers of the Turks, working in their Trenches, were smothered and destroyed, which came to the number (as it was supposed afterward) of eight thousand persons; informuch that yet till this day a great number of dead mens scals are found in the ground.

Another assault of the Turks against Vienna.

When Solyman saw that this way also would not serve, and had privy Intelligence that the Walls about the Gates of Stubarium were negligently kept, and that he might have there more easie entrance; secretly he conveyeth about ten Garrisons of fresh Souldiers, in such sort as the Townsmen should not perceive them: who came so suddenly upon them, that they had filled their Ditches, and were upon the top of the Fortresses and Munitions, before that our men were aware of them, or could make themselves ready to resist them. For although there was no lack of Souldiers within the City, yet forsomuch as the whole brunt of the siege did lie, especially at the two Gates aforesaid, from whence the Souldiers which were there warding could not be well removed, for a shift the Refcuers (which within the City were ready for all sudden adventures) were sent to the Walls; by whose coming, those few which kept the Enemies off before, being sore hurt and wounded, were succoured and sent to Surgery; and thus the said Assault continued terrible and doubtful until (the dark night coming upon them) they could not well know the one from the other. In this bickering were counted of the Turks to be slain more than 5000.

Then the Captain Rogendorffius commending the valiant standing of his Souldiers, misdoubting with himself (as it happned indeed) that the Turks would not so give over, but would set upon him the next day with a fresh assault, providing with all diligence for the purpose, made up the breaches of the Walls, and prepared all things necessary for resistance. The next morning following, which was something dark and misty, the Turks thinking to prevent our men with their sudden coming, began again busily to bicker upon the top of the Walls.

It would require a long tractation here to describe the great distress and danger that the City those three days following was in. During all the which time there was no rest, no intermission, nor diligence lacking, either in the Enemies, fighting against the City, either in our men in defending the same. For the Turks, besides the multitude of the great Ordnance, wherewith (as with a great tempest of Gun-shot) they never ceased, till battering the Walls, and beating the Munitions of the City, sent also such heaps and multitudes of the Turks, to the scaling and climbing of the Walls, that unneth with all the Ordnance and shot of the City, either the violence of them could be broken, or the number of them diminished; till at the last the Souldiers of the Turks, perceiving themselves able by no means to prevail, but only to run in danger of life, and to do no good, began to wrangle among themselves, grudging and repining against their Dukes and Captains, imputing the whole cause only to them, that the City was yet untaken, seeing there was in them neither diligence nor good will lacking; and so ceased the siege for that time.

Another default of the Turks repulsed.

The Turks at variance among themselves.

After this, when Solyman had purposed in himself with his last and strongest siege to try against the City the uttermost that he was able to do, and had encouraged his Souldiers to prepare themselves in most forcible wise thereunto: the Souldiers shewed themselves much unwilling to return again from whence they were so often repulsed before; by reason whereof great commotion began to rise in the Turks Camp. The rumor whereof when it came to Solymans ears, he sendeth his grand Captain to keep all the Souldiers in Order and Obedience; or if they would be stubborn, to compel them, whether they would or not, to accomplish his Commandment. Who coming to the Souldiers, shewed to them the great Turks Message; and to animate and incourage them, declared that the opportunity of the time present was not to be neglected, neither could they now without great shame give over, except so many Affaults attempted; who, if they would sustain but one brunt more, the Victory were in their own hands. The Townsmen, he said, were wasted, and their Victuals spent; and the more to enflame their minds, he promised them not only great Thanks and Reward of their Emperor, but also the whole spoil of the City, in recompence of their travel.

The Turk and his Souldiers could not agree.

The Turk entreateth his Souldiers.

Compulsion of men serveth not where the Lord defended.

But when all this could not stir up the sturdy stomacks of the tired Turks, using compulsion where perswasion would not serve, he appointed a number of Horsemen to be set at their backs; whereby to inforce them either to go forward, or if they be denied, with Guns and Spears to destroy them. The Turks seeing themselves in such a strait, that whether they went or tarried it was to them like peril, yet would they not set forward except the Captain would take the venture before them. Who warding forward in his array thus spake unto his Fellows, saying, Do you forsake your Faith and Allegiance, and betray the Emperor of Constantinople unto the Christians if you will; but I will discharge my duty towards the Common-wealth and my Emperor, and with that word advanced his Ensign, making toward the City Walls. Whom when other followed, and still more and more pressed after, so it came to pass that whole routs of them were overthrown and slain of our men upon the Walls, before it was known what they meant. Others terrified by their example gave back and left their Array, and winding themselves by-ways and under covert of hills, returned again into their Tents, and so came it to pass, that the strength of the Enemies daily more and more decreasing, they had less hope every day more and more than other of obtaining the City. For besides the innumerable slaughter of Turks upon the Walls, the Townsmen also watching the Forrages and Purveyers of the Turks, as they ranged about for Victual for the Camp, ever as occasion served them did compass them about, and so encountred with them by that way, that of a whole Legion scarcely the tenth part returned again to their Fellows alive, by means whereof the courage of the Enemies began greatly to faint. Whereby such a marvelous alteration hapned, that as our men began to receive more hope and courage, so the Turks began still more to droop and to languish with dispair; so that at length scarce durst they appear without the bounds where they were intrenched, but only in light Skirmishes, when they were provoked by our men to come out and to shew themselves.

The Turk beginneth to take counsel to retire.

Solyman perceiving his Souldiers thus daily to go to wracks, of whom he had lost already more than eighty thousand, and that with long tarrying he could do no good, being also in lack of Forrage, for that the Country about him was wasted, beginneth to consult with his Captains and Counsellors, what remained best to be done, Of whom the most part advised him to raise his siege, and betime to provide for himself. Which to do many causes there were that moved him. First, the loss of his men, which daily were cut from him by great numbers, besides them which lay in his Camp wounded, or sick, or famished. Secondly, lack of purveyance. Thirdly, the approaching near of Winter. But the chiefest cause was, for that he heard Frederick Palatine above mentioned, coming with a great Army at Ratisbone towards Vienna, and there had done great molestation to a great number of the Turks Forragers, whom by the way he prevented, and so enclosed in the Woods that he slew them. Whereof when Solyman had intelligence, thinking it not best to abide the coming of the Palatine, made haste with bag and baggage to remove his Camp, and to retire; and first sending away his Carriage before him, he made speed himself with his Army to follow shortly after.

Solyman removeth and raiseth his siege from Vienna.

The Viennians, when they heard of the removing away of the Turks, although at the first they scarcely believed it to be true, being afterward certified out of doubt, both of their removing, and also of the Order thereof, how it was in a manner of a flight or chase, were greatly desirous to make out of the City after them. Wherein, albeit the prefence of the Palatine with his Army, if he had been there present, might have stood them in great stead, yet notwithstanding they took the opportunity of the time present, and issuing out of the City, in most speedy wise set after them with their Horsemen; and first overpassing the Tents (where the Turks had pitched their stations or pavilions) for haste of the way, they made such pursuit after them, that within little time they overtook the rereward or later end of the Army, whereof they made such havock and destruction, that (as the Author reporteth) there was never a shot of the Pursuers, nor Weapons drawn, nor stroke strucken, which light in vain. Which was no hard thing for our men to do. For as the Turks in their flight went scattered out of order and array, neither would they in the fore-rank (being so far off from jeopardy) return back to help their Fellows, it was easie for our men, without resistance, to come upon their backs as they would. Yet notwithstanding in long pursuits, when our men could not see the Carriage of the Turks, which was wont in Armies to come away behind after the Host, and suspecting (as truth was) some ambush to be left in privy waight behind them, to come betwixt them and home; they called themselves to retreat, and consulted upon the matter, thinking good, first to send out certain Scouts, to espy and bring them word where the Enemies lay, and what was the number of them. Whereof when intelligence was given them that the remnant of the Turks Army was remaining in the Tents behind, word was sent to their Fellows in Vienna to issue out, and to joyn also with them against the tail of the Turks, which had entrenched themselves within the Camp. Other were appointed to follow the chase, lest peradventure the Turks seeing our men to recul back, might return again upon them and help their Fellows. Which things being thus ordered and appointed, in the mean time, while part of the Viennians were hovering after the main Army, the rest encountred with them that were left in the Camp. Who seeing themselves overmatched, first defenced their Camp with a deep Ditch and Bulwark, to delay the time until some help might come to them from the Army. Secondly, they directed Messengers to the Christians, to intreat for peace. Thirdly, they conveyed their privy Letters unto Solyman for speedy aid and rescue. But all the ways and passages being stopped by the Christians, their Letters were intercepted, and so the miserable Turks being destitute of all hope and succour, seeing no other remedy, made out of their Camp, to hazard and prove the uttermost for their defence; but in conclusion, in their desperate venture they

Thus through the merciful protection and benefit of Almighty God, Auſtria was delivered from the fierce and barbarous Hoſtility of the cruel Turks. Notwithſtanding, that neither Ferdinandus the King, nor the Emperor his Brother were there preſent, but only the Power of God, through the valiantneſs of the worthy Germans, defended that City; in defence whereof conſiſted the ſafety and deliverance (no doubt) of all theſe Weſt parts of Chriſtendom. Wherein by the way take this for a note (gentle Reader) how and after what manner Gods bleſſing goeth with the true Reformers of his Religion; and ſo much the more is it to be noted, for that the Turks in ſo many battels and ſieges heretofore were never ſo repulſed and foiled, as at this preſent time in encountring with the Proteſtants and Defenders of ſincere Religion. This City of Vienna was beſieged and delivered the year of our Lord, 1529. The Aſſaults of the Turk againſt the City are numbered to be twenty, and his repulſes as many. The number of his Army which he firſt brought, was 250000, whereof were reckoned to be ſlain eighty thouſand and above. Solyman thus put from the hope of Victory of Vienna, after he had breathed himſelf a while at home, the ſecond year after, which was Anno 1531, repairing his Hoſt, returned again into Hungary, with no leſs multitude than before; where firſt he got the Town called Gunza, being but ſlenderly kept with a ſmall Garriſon. Melchior Soiterus in his Second Book writing De bello Pannonico, touching the foreſaid Town of Gunza or Guntiani, differeth herein ſomething from Ramus, declaring how this Gunza, being a ſmall Town in Hungary, and having in it but only an hundred Souldiers (or as Wolfgangus Drechſlerus in his Chronicle reporteth, at the moſt but two hundred Souldiers) under the valiant Captain Nicholaus Jureſchitz, defended themſelves ſo manfully and wonderfully, through the notable Power of God, againſt the whole puiſſance of two hundred thouſand Turks, that they being notwithſtanding diſtreſſed with lack and penury of purveyance, and ſuddenly of the Turks invaded, yet with pure courage and promptneſs of heart ſuſtained the uttermoſt force and violence of thirteen Aſſaults of that great multitude, for the ſpace of twenty five days together.

Nicolaus Jureſchitz a valiant Captain.

Although the Narration of the Author may ſeem to ſome incredible, yet thus he writeth, That what time the great Ordnance and Battering pieces of the Turks were planted upon two Mountains much higher than the Town, whereby they within the Town were oppreſſed both before and behind, inſomuch that eight Enſigns of the Turks were already within the Town, yet by the reaſon of Women and Children, and other impotent perſons, who in the middle of the Town were congregate in an houſe together, ſuch a noiſe and clamor went up to Heaven, praying and crying to God for help, that the Turks within the Walls, ſuppoſing a new Army of freſh Souldiers to be ſent into the Town, for ſudden fear voided the Town, and leaped down from the Walls again, (which before they had got) whom no man either purſued or reſiſted; for never a Souldier almoſt was left on the Walls, which was not either ſlain or elſe wounded with the Turks Ordnance. At what time through the Lords Providence it ſo hapned, that one Ibrahimus Baſſa near about the Turk, feeing both the Town to be ſmall, and the great deſtruction of the Turks in the ſiege thereof, and that the Captain in no caſe would yield, perſwaded ſo the Turk, declaring how the Town being ſo little was not worth the loſs of ſo many men, in the winning whereof there was no glory, and if he were repulſed, great diſhonour might follow: whereby the Turk being perſwaded did follow his counſel, which was this; that Nicolaus the Chriſtian Captain being called unto him, under pledges and ſafe conduct, ſhould receive the Town as of his hand and gift, with condition that he ſhould do no violence to his Souldiers left behind and wounded, but ſhould procure ſuch means as he could for the recuring of them; and ſo he raiſing his ſiege departed. Another cauſe might be alſo, which moved him ſo ſuddenly to raiſe his ſiege, for that he heard the Palatinate not to be far off in purſuing after him; and therefore taking his flight by the Mountains of the Noricians, he returned with much ſpoil of Chriſtian mens goods unto Conſtantinople. Ex Melchiore Soit. lib. 2. de bello Pannonico.

A miraculous example of the Lords protection and providence.

The Turk raiſeth his ſiege from Gunza.

For ſo it was provided the ſame time in Germany, after the Council of Auguſt and Ratiſbon (at what time the Controverſie of Religion between the Proteſtants and the Papiſts was deferred and ſet off to the next general Council) that Charles the Fifth and Ferdinandus his Brother, having underſtanding, of the Turk thus ranging in Hungary, ſhould collect of the Germans, Hungarians, and Spaniards, and others, an able Army of eighty thouſand Footmen, and thirty thouſand Horſemen to repulſe the Invaſions of the Turk. But Solyman having intelligence of this preparation of the Chriſtian Power coming toward him, whether for fear, or whether to eſpy further opportunity of time for his more advantage and our detriment, refuſed at that time to tarry their coming, and ſo, ſpeeding his return unto Conſtantinople, retired with much ſpoil and prey ſent before him, as is above premiſed: which was in the year of our Lord, 1532.

The Emperor Charles and Ferdinandus begin at length to reſiſt againſt the Turk, refuſeth to tarry for the Chriſtian Army.

Not long after, being the year of our Salvation, 1534. Solyman intending two Wars at once, firſt ſent Conradinus Barbaroſſa the Admiral of his Navies into Africk, to war againſt the King of Tunis; whom Barbaroſſa alſo diſpoſſeſſed and deprived of his Kingdom: but Charles the Emperor, the next year following, Anno 1535, reſtored the ſaid King again into his Kingdom, and delivered in peace the ſame Voyage twenty thouſand Captives out of Servitude.

The Turk warreth againſt the King of Tunice. Tunice won of the Turk, and reſtored again by Charles the Emperor.

The ſame time the Turk alſo ſent another Captain into Hungary, to War againſt Voivoda, while he himſelf taking his courſe to Perſia, planted his ſiege againſt the City Taurus, which he in ſhort ſpace ſubdued and expugned. Albeit he long enjoyed not the ſame; For Tahames King of the Perſians, ſuddenly coming upon the Turks unprepared, flew of them twenty thouſand, and took his Cohorts, to the great ſoil and reproach of the Turk.

Two years after this, which was the year of our Lord, 1537. Solyman, who could not be quiet at home, nor reſt in peace, returning again out of Aſia into Europe with 270 Ships, great and little, ſet upon Corcyra, another Iſland belonging to the Venetians, which he beſieged ten days, waſting and burning the Towns and Fields as he went, beſide the deſtruction of much people therein, whom partly he ſlew, partly led away Captives. From thence he ſailed to Zacinthus and Cythara, another Iſland not far from Corcyra, bordering near to the Coaſts of Epyrus and Grecia. Where he ſuddenly by night invading the Husbandmen in Villages and Fields, ſleeping and miſtruſting no harm, drew them out of their Houſes and Poſſeſſions, Men and Women, beſides Children, to the number of nine hundred, whom he made his Bondſlaves; burning moreover their Houſes, and carrying away all the Goods and Cattel being without the ſaid City of Zacinthus and Cythara. *Ex Joan. From thence theſe Hellhounds turned their courſe to the Iſle and ſpoil of Egina, a rich and populous Iland, lying between Greecia and Aſia. Where firſt the Eginians did manfully in battel reſiſt them, and were like to have prevailed; but being wearied at length, and oppreſſed with innumerable thouſands of freſh Turks, which ſtill were ſent in, to reſcue the other which were overcome before, were compelled to fly unto the City of Egina. The Women both noble and unnoble, with their Infants, were given to the Mariners to be abuſed, and from thence being ſhipped unto Conſtantinople, were led away to perpetual miſery and Slavery, which was in the Year of our Lord, 1537.

The Iſle Paxum and Naxus.

In the ſame Journy Solyman alſo took the Iſle in the ſaid Sea of Eugeum, called Paxum; alſo the Ille adjoyning to the ſame named Naxus, and made them to him Tributaries. This done, Solymannus directed his Navy unto Apulia, where he ſet on Land Ten thouſand Foot-men, and 2000 Horſe-men, which ſpoiled likewiſe and waſted thoſe parts, while the Emperor, the Pope, and the Venetians were together in War and Diſſention. Furthermore, the next Year following, Anno 1538. great Attempts began in Stiria, but by the reſiſtance of the Inhabitants, the force of the barbarous Turky was repulſed, notwithſtanding great ſpoils of Men and Cattel were carried from thence, and the Country miſerably ſpoiled. In the which Year alſo, the Turk burning into Hungary, gat ſtarted unto the Chriſtians in Saxia; where, through fraudulent falſhood of the Captain Caſſianerus (Wolfgangus nameth him Calcianus) being (as they ſay) corrupted with money, our men were put to the worſe, Anno 1538.

Note, what hurt cometh by the diſſention of Chriſtian Princes. Stiria is a Country or Province near adjoyning to Auſtria.

The falſhood of the Turks with the Venetians.

After that the Turky had invaded the Iſland of Corcyra aboveſaid, the Venetians, with Solyman the Turk, had joyned Truce for a certain time, for the which they gave the Turk 300 thouſand Crowns, with the City Neapolis, and Malvaſia, in the borders of Macedonia. But within four or five Years, the Turk, to get a new ſtipend of the Venetians, brake his League, and invaded their Dominions, whereby they were enforced to enter new Conditions again with him.

Novum Caſtellum in Dalmatia overthrown by the Turk and the people ſlain.

In the Year of our Lord, 1540. the reſtleſs Turk, making his return toward Hungary, by the way paſſing by Dalmatia, lay againſt the Town called Newcaſtle, being defended by the Spaniards. In the which Town, becauſe they refuſed to yield themſelves, all the Inhabitants and Souldiers were put to the Sword, and ſlain every one. This Novum Caſtellum, or New Caſtle, was a ſtrong Fort of the Chriſtians, which being gone in the Turks power, he had great advantage over all thoſe Quarters of Dalmatia, Stiria, Carinthia, and Hungaria. From thence he proceeded further, keeping his courſe into Hungary, where he planted his Power againſt the City of Buda.

This Buda was a principal City in Hungary, about which great Contention had been (as ye have heard before) between Joannes Voivoda and Ferdinandus. By reaſon whereof the Turk occaſioned by Voivoda, came into Hungary, and delivered the City of Voivoda. This Voivoda living not long after, left behind him a Son, whom being an Infant, he committed to the Government of one Georgius Monachus, who, being left Tutor unto the Infant, reduced all Tranſylvania, Buda, Peſta, with other parts of Hungary, which belonged to Voivoda before, to the ſubjection of the Child. Ferdinandus hearing thereof, in a great haſte and anger, levied an Army to recover his Lands in Hungary, and ſo laid ſiege to Buda. Monachus ſeeing his part weak, firſt ſent his Legate to Ferdinandus, deſiring him to talk and confer with him upon matters, as he pretended, pertaining to the behoof of them both. Whereupon, both the Parties being agreed, the place and manner of their Convention was appointed, and alſo the day and time aſſigned. Thus the parties (according to the Agreement) conventing together with their Armies, withdrawing a little aſide, as they were entred in Communication, ſuddenly among Ferdinandus men hapned a Dag to be heard, which by the heat of the day (as is thought) looſing of his own accord, gave a crack. The ſound whereof coming to the Ears of Monachus, he ſuppoſing the ſame to have been diſcharged againſt him, in great anger drew out his Sword, bidding Ferdinandus avaunt with his doubling diſſimulation, ſaying, That he would never any more truſt the Promiſes of Chriſtians; and immediately upon the ſame, ſent to Solymannus the Turk for aid againſt the Chriſtians, promiſing that he would ſurrender to him free poſſeſſion of Hungary, if he would come and vanquiſh the Army of Ferdinandus lying about the Siege of Buda. The Turk maketh no long tarrying, but taketh the occaſion, and with a mighty Power paſſeth into Hungary, and eſtſoons diſcharging the Hoſt of Ferdinandus, and putting them off from the Siege of Buda, getteth the City into his own hands, commanding the ſon of Voivoda, with his Mother, to follow after his Carriage.

The Turk called again into Hungaria by the diſſention between Monachus and Ferdinandus.

In the Hiſtory of Joannes Ramus, it followeth, that when Solyman the Turk had thus prevailed againſt the City of Buda aforeſaid, and againſt other parts more of Hungary, by the aſſent of the Empire, one Joachimus the Duke of Brandenburg, Prince Elector, was aſſigned with a puiſſant Army of choſen Souldiers of all Nations, collected to recover the City of Buda from the Turk, and to deliver the other parts of Chriſtiandom from the fear of the Turk, Anno 1542. Which Joachimus at his firſt ſetting forth, appeared ſo Couragious and Valiant, as though he would have Conquered the whole World: but this great heat was ſo ſlacked in ſhort time by the Turks, that before any great jeopardy was offered unto him, he was glad to be diſcharged of the Voyage, and with ſhame enough returned home again. And would God he had left behind him in the fields no more but his own ſhame. For the Enemies having intelligence before of his cowardly departure, thinking to work ſome point of Maſtery or Victory before his going, did ſet upon the Right wing of his Army (which chiefly conſiſted of Dutchmen of Low Germany) out of the which they took away with them above Five hundred ſtrong and valiant Souldiers, not killing them, but carrying them away alive. For whom it had been much better to have ſtood to their Weapon, and to have died manfully upon the Turks, than by yielding themſelves to be diſtripulled of Weapon and Armor, and ſo to be left to the curſed courteſie of the foul Turky. To whom what courteſie was ſhewed by the ſequel, did appear. For after the Turky had led them out of Hungary into their own Dominions, after a moſt horrible and beaſtly fort they did figured and mangled them, and ſo ſent them abroad through all Grecia, to be witneſſes of the Turky Victory. Their kind of puniſhment was thus. Firſt, They had their right Arm thruſt through with an Iron red hot, whereby they ſhould be unable and unmeet to all labor and warfare. Secondly, Their Heads ſlope down to the very Sculls, after the manner of our Friers and Monks, when they are newly ſhaven. Thirdly, They had all their Privy Members cut off from their Bodies, to the intent to make them unfruitful for Propagation; which wound was ſo grievous unto them, that the greateſt part of them died thereupon: the few that recovered the torment thereof, led a life more bitter and more miſerable than death it ſelf. And this kind of Cruelty was executed in order upon them all. In much like ſort did cruel Pharaoh exerciſe his Tyranny againſt the People of God in Egypt; who to deſtroy the Generation of them, cauſed all the Male Children to be drowned in the River. Whereby it is the more to be hoped, that ſeeing the Tyranny of this Turkiſh Pharaoh is come to ſuch an Extremity, the merciful Goodneſs of God will the more ſhortly ſend ſome Moſes or other unto us for our ſpeedy Deliverance. This was by the cruel Turky done, Anno 1542.

But to return again to the City of Buda, from whence we have digreſſed, here is not to be pretermitted, what fallhood and what cruelty the Turky uſed toward the Chriſtians there after their Victory. For after that Solyman the Turk, upon yielding and ſubmiſſion of the Men of Buda, had given to them his promiſe of Safety and Life, within ſhort time the ſaid Turk, picking a Quarrel with them for ſelling Oxen unto the Chriſtians, and for bargaining with them, ſlew all the Magiſtrates of the ſaid City of Buda; like as in all other Cities wherſoever the Chriſtians yielded unto him, he never, or very rarely kept his promiſe with them, neither did ever any Christians fpeed better with the Turk, than they which moit conftantly did refift him.

An horrible example of the deadly cruelty of the falfe Turke.

And as his Promiſe with the Magiſtrates of Buda was falſe and wretched; ſo his Cruelty with the Souldiers thereof, was much more notorious and abominable. For in the expugnation of Buda, amongſt the reſt which were ſlain, two Cohorts or Bands of Chriſtian Souldiers came alive to his hands. To whom, when he ſeemed at the firſt to grant Pardon of Life, he commanded to put on their Armor again; and to diſpoſe themſelves in order and Battel array, after the Warlike manner of the Chriſtians. Which when they had accomplihed readily, according to his Commandment, and he riding about the Ranks of them, had diligently viewed and beholden them a certain ſpace, at length he commanded them to put off their Armor again. Which done, certain of the talleſt and ſtrongeſt of them he picked out, the reſidue, he commanded by his Souldiers coming behind them with Swords, to be cut in pieces and ſlain. Of the other, whom he had elected and choſen, ſome he ſet for Marks and Buts to be ſhot at; ſome he appointed to his two Sons, for them to ſlaſh with their Swords and try their ſtrength, which of them could give the deeper Wound, and (as they termed it) the fairer blow, whereby the moſt Blood might follow out of their Chriſtian Bodies. *Ex Epiſt. After the winning of Buda, the Turk purpoſing not ſo to ceaſe, before he had ſubdued and brought under his obedience all Hungary; proceeding further with his Army, firſt, brought under a ſtrong Hold of the Chriſtians, named Peſthum or Peſta, where a great number of Chriſtian Souldiers partly were ſlain, partly were led away to more cruel affliction.

The Caſtle of Walpo woth of the Turke.

Then he came to another Caſtle called Walpo, ſituate in the Confines of Boſnia, Croatia, and Hungary. Which Fort or Caſtle he beſieged three months, while no reſcue or aid was ſent unto them, neither from Ferdinandus King of Hungary, nor from any other Chriſtian Prince or Princes. Whereupon at length the Fort was given up to the Turk; but more through the falſe treachery, or cowardly heart of the Souldiers than of the Captain. Whereas is to be noted an Example not unworthy of memory.

A notable example of Captains Judgments fighting upon themſelves, which mean ſtand favour with the Turk, and gave him to Solyman. But ſee how the Juſtice of God, ſometimes by the hand of the Enemy, diſpoſeth the end of things to the rewarding of Virtue and puniſhing of Vice. For where they thought to ſave themſelves by the danger of the faithful Captain, the Event turned clean contrary; ſo that the Turk was to the Captain bountiful and very liberal, and the Souldiers, notwithſtanding that they had all yielded themſelves, yet were all put to death, and commanded pitioully to be ſlain. Ex Joan. Marino Stella de Turcarum in Hungaria ſucceſſibus, &c.

For when the cowardly Souldiers, either for fear or flattery, would needs ſurrender themſelves and the place unto the Turk, contrary to the mind of the Captain, which in no caſe would agree to their yielding; they thinking to fhoot toward the innocent.

The City of five Churches, ſo yielded to the Turke.

There is in Hungary another Town, bearing the name of Five-Churches, called Quinque-eccleſienſes, which being partly ſpoiled before, as is above-mentioned, which now through the loſs of Walpo, and by the hugeneſs of the Turkey Army (containing in it two hundred and twenty thouſand fighting Men) ſo diſcouraged, and put out of hope and heart, that the Biſhop and chief Nobles of the Town, fled before the Jeopardy: the reſt of the Commons, which were partly prevented by the ſudden coming of the Turke partly for poverty could not avoid, ſent their Meſſengers to the Turk, to yield and ſurrender the Town, upon promiſe of life, unto his hands. Whoſe promiſe how firm it ſtood, the ſtory leaveth it uncertain. This is affirmed, that three days after the yielding of this Quinque-eccleſienſis, never a Turk durſt enter the City, Anno 1543. Ex Joan. Martino Stella, & aliis.

Sexfina, a Town in Hungary ſpoiled of the Turk.

The next Fort or Hold gotten by the Turky in Hungary, was Sexfina. The Town at the firſt Invaſion of the Turky was won, ſack'd, and fired. The Caſtle within the Town did ſomething hold out for a time, and firſt requiring truce for fourteen days, to ſee what aid ſhould be ſent unto them, to deliberate upon the Conditions that ſhould be propoſed unto them, after the fourteen days expired, they truſting to the ſituation and munition of the place, which was very ſtrong, began for a certain ſpace ſtoutly to put back the Enemy. But afterward, ſeeing their Walls to be battered, their Foundations to ſhake (for the Turk, had ſet twelve thouſand Underminers under the Ditches of the Caſtle) and their ſtrength to diminiſh, and miſdoubting themſelves not to be able long to hold out, agreed in like manner to yield themſelves, upon condition to eſcape with Life and Goods. Which condition of ſaving their Goods was the loſing of their Lives, eſpecially of the richer ſort. For the Turky perceiving by that condition, that they were of Wealth and Subſtance, omitting the inferior or baſer ſort, fell upon the Wealthy men for their Riches, and ſlew them every one, Anno 1543. Ibid.

In the which his Hiſtory, this is alſo to be noted, that during the time while the Caſtle of Soclofia was beſieged, the Villages and Pages round about the ſame, came of their own accord, ſubmitting and yielding themſelves unto the Turk, bringing in (as they were commanded) all kind of Victual and Forrage into the Turky Camp. Which done, Solyman the Turk commanded all the Headmen of the Pages to appear before him, which humbly obeyed and came. Then the Turk warned them to return again the next day after, every one bringing with him his Inferior Retinue and Houſhold Servants. Which when they had with like diligence alſo according to his Commandment accomplihed, the Turk immediately commanded them every one, in the face of his whole Army to be ſlain, and ſo was this their reward. Which reward, the more that it declareth the Bloody Cruelty of the Turk, the more Courage it may miniſter to our Men the more conſtantly to withſtand him. Ex Martino Stella.

Strigonium, a City in Hungary, beſieged of the Turk.

Another ſtrong Town there is in Hungary, named Strigonium, diſtant from Buda abovefaid, the ſpace of five Dutch Miles, againſt the which the Turky made great preparation of Ordnance, and all other Inſtruments of Artillery neceſſary for the Siege thereof. Which City in like manner began alſo to be compaſſed and incloſed by the Turky, before it could be ſufficiently prepared and garniſhed of our Men, but that the Archbiſhop only of Strigon privily conveyed unto them two hundred Oxen. Such was then the negligence of Ferdinandus King of Hungary, which ſo ſlenderly looked unto the neceſſary defence of his Towns and Cities. Moreover, ſuch was the Diſcord then of Chriſtian Kings and Princes, which in their Civil Diſſention and Wars were ſo occupied and hot in needleſs Quarrels, that they had neither leiſure nor remembrance to help in time there where true need required. Which ſlender care, and cold zeal of the Chriſtian Rulers, not in tendring the publick Cauſe, while they contended in private Triffles, hath cauſed the Turk to come ſo far as he hath; and yet farther is like, unleſs the mercy of the Lord do help more than our diligence. One of the chief Captains within the City, was Martinus Laſcanus, a Spaniard.

Negligence of Chriſtian Princes in publick defence.

The Turky in the beginning of the Siege, began firſt to attempt the Citizens with fair words, and accuſtomed promiſes, to yield and gently to ſubmit themſelves. But they not ignorant of the Turky promiſes, wiſely refuſed, and manfully ſtood ſo long as they could to the defence of their City; now and then ſkirmiſhing with them in out-corners, and killing certain numbers of them; ſometime with their ſhot diſturbing their munitions, and breaking the Wheels of their Guns, &c.

Who ſeeing the ſmall quantity of their number, burning and caſting down the Town and Suburbs, took them to the Caſtle; from whence they beat off the Turky valiantly with their Ordnance a good ſpace, and with Wild-fire deſtroyed great Companies of them, till at laſt they feeing their Walls to fall them, and the whole Caſtle to ſhake by Undermining, but eſpecially by the working of a certain Italian ſurnamed Presbyter, they gave over. This Italian, whether for fear or fallhood, ſecretly unknown to the reſt of the Souldiers, accompanyed with two other, conveyed himſelf down from the Walls, and being brought into the Tents of the next Captain or Baſſa of the Turky, there in the name of all his Fellows convented with the Turky, to give up to them the Caſtle; whereupon the Turky were bid to ceaſe the ſhooting. The Turky in the mean time had got into the Caſtle, and occupied all the utter parts. Then was Salamanca, by the conſent of the reſt, ſent out to the Turk, who there being ſtayed that night; the next morrow the Turky Bull or Warrant was ſent into the Caſtle, permitting free liberty to the Chriſtians to depart with Bag and Baggage: who now being ready to depart, firſt were commanded by the Turky, compaſſing them round about, to caſt from them their Dags, Lances, Bartelaxes, into the Trench. Then coming to the Gate to go out, their Swords were taken from them, looking then for nothing but preſent death.

The falſe Turke never true in promiſe.

At laſt, when they were come a little further, other were ſent to them to diſcharge them of their Helmets, their Targets, Curets, and whatſoever piece of Harneſs was about them: whereupon great fear came upon them, leſt ſome great cruelty ſhould be ſhewed upon them. Solyman, after he had long deliberated with himſelf, whether to kill them or not; at laſt, contrary to all expectation, granted their lives: but before they ſhould be diſmiſſed, he firſt cauſed them, in deriſion of Chriſtianity, to be baited with ſcorns and mocks throughout all the Turkiſh Army; and ſo the next day commanded them, being ſtript of their Coats and Apparel, to be reduced again into the Caſtle by Companies, ſetting over them certain Turky with Cudgels and Bats to lay upon their backs and ſides, cauſing them to bary the dead Carkaſſes, and to gather up the rubbiſh broken down from the Caſtle-walls, and to ſcour the Ditches: which done, the next day following he demanded of them, by an Interpreter, whether they would enter wages with him, and take Horſe and Armor to ſerve him in his Wars; which Condition, divers for fear were contented to take, feeing no other remedy to avoid preſent death. Some, neither by menacing words, nor for any fear of death, could be compelled thereunto; of whom certain, which ſtood ſtoutly in refuſing thereof, were preſently ſlain, whom I may worthily recite in the number and Catalogue of Martyrs.

The miſerable affliction of our Chriſtian Souldiers taken at Strigonium.

Holy Souldiers and Martyrs ſlain of the Turks for their faithful Religion.

Of the aforeſaid Chriſtians, part were carried over the River Danubius, not without great villany, and contumely moſt deſpightful. For ſome had their Wives taken from them, and carried away, ſome had their Wives raviſhed before their face; and ſuch as made or ſhewed any reſiſtance thereat, had their Wives before them caſt into the River and drowned; alſo their Infants and young Children, being appointed by the Turky to the abominable Order of the Janizarites, mentioned before, their Parents not conſenting thereunto, were precipitate and thrown into the River and drowned. All which things are teſtified by John Martinus Stella, in his Epiſtles in Print extant, written to his two Brethren, Wil-liam and Michael, &c. which Martin Stella moreover addeth and affirmeth this, That he himſelf, being the ſame time at Vienna, did ſee one of the foreſaid Wives, who being held faſt by the hair of the Head; yet notwithſtanding having her Hair pluckt off, caſt her ſelf into the River Danubius, for the ſingular love to her Husband, and ſo ſwam to the Ship where he was. And thus this miſerable company of Germans, Spaniards and Italians mixt together, macerate with labors, with hunger pined, with watchings, dolours and ſorrow conſumed, came at length to Selsinda.

Ex Joan. Mart. Stella in Epiſt. ad Fratres.

When the tidings thereof was noiſed at Vienna, partly with fear and dread, partly with indignation, all mens hearts were moved and vexed diverſly. Some thought them not worthy to be received into their City, ſhewing themſelves ſo daſtardly and cowardly. Others thought again, that mercy was to be ſhewed unto them, and commended their Fact, for that they being ſo few, and unfurniſhed of aid, neither able to match by any means with ſuch an innumerable multitude of the Turky, kept themſelves till better time might ſerve them. But howſoever the matter was to be thought of, the Captains brought the poor remnant of that ruful company unto Poſſidonium, where the ſaid Captains were laid faſt, and there kept in durance, to render account of the whole matter how it was wrought and handled. And thus have ye the lamentable ſtory of Strigonium.

Divers opinions of the Viennians touching their miſerable affliced Souldiers.

The Turk proceeding in his Victories conducted his Army next unto Tath, and to the parts lying near about Comaron. This Tath was alſo a ſtrong Hold in Hungary, wherein were placed certain Garriſons, partly of the Germans, partly of the Italians. The Chieftain of the Italians was one Annibal Taſſo, conſtitute by Philippus Tornelius. This Taſſo was a Man well expert in Proweſs of War, but of a filthy corrupt Life, and alſo a fowl Swearer, and horrible Blaſphemer of God and his Saints. To make the ſtory ſhort, this Fort of Tath, before any Siege was laid unto it, was yielded and given up to the Turky; upon what conditions, or by whoſe means, the Author theweth not. Thus much he ſheweth, That the ſaid Annibal ſhortly upon the ſame, returning into Italy, was commanded by Tornelius aforeſaid, to be apprehended and beheaded.

Tath ſubdued of the Turks.

Vilenyſs hath never ſuccours under a wicked Captain and Swearer.

After the Turky had ſubverted and deſtroyed the Fort of Tath, they turned their Power againſt Alba, ſurnamed Regalis, for that the Kings of Hungary have been of late always wont there to be Crowned and Buried. This Alba is a little well compacted City in Hungary, having on the one ſide a Marſh fomewhat foggiſh or fenny, which made the Town leſs affaultable. But near to the ſame was a Wood, from the which the Turky every day with fix hundred Carts brought ſuch matter of Wood, and Trees felled for the ſame purpoſe, in the Marſh, that within leſs than twelve days, they made it apt and hard to their feet, which the Townſmen thought never could be gone upon, but only in the hard Froſts of winter. At the firſt beginning of the Siege, there ſtood a little without the Munitions, in the front of the City, a certain Church or Monaſtery, which the Citizens pretending to maintain and keep againſt the Turky, had privily conveyed light matter eaſily to take flame, with Powder in ſecret places thereof, and had hid alſo Fire withal: which done, they (as againſt their wills being driven back) withdrew themſelves within the Munitions, waiting the occaſions when this Fire would take. Thus the Turky having the poſſeſſion of the Church, ſuddenly the Fire coming to the Powder, raiſed up the Church, and made a great ſcatter and ſlaughter among the barbarous Turky.

Alba Regalis beſieged and won of the Turks.

The Turke device in filling up the Marſhy

A ſtrata-gem of the Chriſtians againſt the Turks.

This was not so soon espied of them within the Town, but they issued out upon them in this disturbance, and slew of them a great number. Among whom, divers of their Nobles also the same time were slain, and one Bassa an Eunuch, which was of great estimation with the Turks. Moreover, in the same skirmish was taken one of those Gunners which the French King is said to have sent to the Turk a little before. Which if it be true, let the Christian Reader judge what is to be thought of those Christian Princes, which not only forsaking the common cause of Christs Church, joyned League with the Turk, but also sent him Gunners to set forward his Wars to the destruction of Christs People, and to the shedding of thir blood, for whom they know the blood of Christ to be shed. If this be not true, I shew mine Author; if it be, then let the Pope see and mark well how this Title of Christianissimus can well agree with such doings.

A note touching the French King that sent him.

Ex Epist. Tom. Navis. Stella ad Fratres de Turcar. in Hungaria incisiones.

But to let this matter sleep, although the Turks (as ye heard) had won the Fen with their Policy and Industry against the City of Alba, yet all this while the Albanes were nothing inferior to their Enemies, through the valiant help and couragious indeavor of Ottavianus Strozzi, a Captain of Millain. By whose prudent Counsel and constant standing, the bulie Enterprizes of the Turky did little prevail a long time, till at length suddenly arose a thick Fog or Mist upon the City, whereas round about besides the Sun did shine bright. Some said it came by Art Magical, but rather it may appear to rise out of the Fen or Marish, being so prested down with Mens feet, and other matter laid upon it.

The outward Walls got by the Turks.

The Turky using the occasion of this misty darkness, in secret wise approaching the Walls, had got up to a certain Fortress where the Germans were, before our Men could well perceive them: where they prested in so thick, and in such number, that albeit the Christian Souldiers, standing strongly to the defence of their Lives, did what valiant Men in cases of such extremity were able to do; yet being over-matched by the multitude of the Turks, and the suddenness of their coming, gave back, seeking to retire unto the inward Walls. Which when their other Fellows did see to refuse, then was there flying of all hands, every man striving to get into the City. There was between the outward Walls or Vamures, and inward Gate of the City, a strait or narrow Passage, cast up in the manner of a Bank or Causeway, ditched on both sides; which Passage or Ingress hapned the same time to be barred and stopped. By reason whereof the poor Souldiers were forced to cast themselves into the Ditch, thinking to swim as well as they could into the City, where many of them sticking in the Mud were drowned, some pressing upon another; many were slain of their enemies coming behind them, they having neither heart nor power to resist. A few which could swim out, were received into the City; but the chief Captains and Warders of the Town were there slain.

A miserable Slaughter of Christian Souldiers.

The Citizens being destitute of their principal Captains and Warriers, were in great perplexity and doubt among themselves what to do, some thinking good to yield, some counselling the contrary. Thus while the minds of the Citizens were distract in divers and doubtful Sentences, the Magistrates minding to stand to the Turky gentlenesse, sent out one of their Heads unto the Turk, who in the name of them all should surrender to him the City, and become unto him Tributaries, upon condition they might enjoy liberty of Life and Goods; which being to them granted, after the Turkish Faith and Assurance: first, the Souldiers which were left within the City, putting off their Armor, were discharged and sent away: who being but only 300 left of four Enfigns of Italians, and of 1000 Germans, by the way were laid for by the Tartarians for hope of their spoil; so that they scattering afunder one one way, and another another to save themselves as well as they could, fled every one what way he thought best. Of whom, some wandring in Woods and Marishes fainted for Famine; some were taken and slain by the Hungarians; a few, with bare and empty withered Bodies, more like Ghosts than Men, escaped and came to Vienna. And this besel upon the Souldiers.

Art never paid Civil courtesies stand to the Turky gentleness.

Now understand what happened to the yielding Citizens. So in the Story it followeth, That when the Turk had entred the Town, and had visited the Sepulchre of the Kings, for three or four days he pretended much Clemency toward the Citizens, as though he came not to oppress them, but to be revenged of Ferdinandus their King, and to deliver them from the servitude of the Germans. On the fourth day, all the Chief and Head men of the City were commanded to appear before the Turk, in a Plain not far from the City, where the condemned Persons before were wont to be Executed, as though they should come to swear unto the Turk. At this commandment of the Turk, when the Citizens in great number, and in their best Attire were assembled; the Turk, contrary to his Faith and Promise, commanded suddainly a general slaughter to be made of them all. And this was the end of the Citizens of Alba.

{KING} Hen. 7. 5.

The cruelty of the Turks against the Christians. What it is to yield to the Turk, & to stick to his promise. The Citizens of Alba destroyed of the Turky.

In the mean time, during the Siege of Alba, the Hungarians meeting sometimes with the Horsemen of the Tartarians, which were sent out to stop their Victuals from the City, slew of them at one bickering, three thousand Turky. In which story is also reported and mentioned of mine Author, an horrible sight and example of Misery, concerning a certain Captain (a Christian belike) who coming unto Vienna, was found to have in his Scrip or Satchel the half of a young Child of two years old, which remained yet uneaten, the other half being eaten before, Anno 1543. Ibid.

Half of a young child found in the satchel of a Captive coming from the Turky.

Next after this, was expugned the Castle of Pappa by the Turks. Let the Castle now of Pappa take heed, left one day it follow after.

The Castle of Pappa won by the Turky.

The like fidelity the Turky also kept with the Fort of Wiziegradum, and the Souldiers thereof. This Wiziegradum, is situate in the mid-way between Buda and Strigonium. Of the which Fort or Castle, the highest Tower so mounteth upon the Hill, that unlesse it be for Famine or lack of Water, they have not to dread any Enemy. Notwithstanding to it hapned, that the lower piece being won, they in the higher Tower abiding four days without drink, were compelled, with liberty granted of Life and Goods, to yield themselves. But the Devilish Turky keeping no Faith nor Promise, slew them every one: only Petrus Amandus the Captain of the Place, excepted: who privily was conveyed by the Captain of the Turky out of the slaughter, Anno 1544.

Wiziegradum got and inforced of the Turks. The false dealing and cruelty of the Turky against the Christians.

To these moreover, may be added the winning of Novum Castellum in Dalmatia, where he slew all that were within, both Souldiers and other, for that they did not yield themselves in time. Thus the Turk, whether they yielded to him or not, never feared the People and Flock of Christ.

Novum Castellum in Dalmatia won by the Turky.

As the false and cruel Turk was thus raging in Hungary, and intended further to rage without all mercy and pity of the Christians, and might easily then have prevailed and gone whither he would, for that Charles the Emperor, and Francisous the French King, were at the same time in War and Hostility, and also other Christian Princes; as Henry Duke of Brunswick against John Frederick, Duke of Saxony; also Princes and Rulers were contending among themselves: Behold the gracious Providence of our Lord and God toward us, who, seeing the misery, and having pity of his poor Christians, suddenly as with a snatle reined this ravging Beast, and brought him out of Europe into his own Country again, by occasion of the Persians, who were then in great preparation of War against the Turks, and had invaded his Dominion. By reason whereof the Turks were kept there occupied, fighting with the Persians a long continuance. Which Wars at length being atchieved and finished (wherein the said Turk lost great victories, with slaughter of many thousands of his Turks); he was not only provoked by the instigation of certain evil disposed Hungarians, but also occasioned by the discord of Christian Princes to return again into Europe, in hope to subdue all the parts thereof unto his Dominion. Wherein when he had levied an Army incredible of such a multitude of Turks, as the like hath not lightly been heard of, see again the merciful providence and protection of our God toward his People. As the Turk was thus intending to set forward with his innumerable multitude against the Christians, the hand of the Lord sent such a Pestilence through all the Turky Army and Dominions, reaching from Bythinia, and from Thracia to Macedonia, and also to Hungary, that all the Turks possessions seemed almost nothing else, but as an heap of dead Corses, whereby his Voyage for that time was stopt, and he almoft compelled to seek a new Army.

Besides this Plague of the Turks aforesaid, which was worse to them than any War, other lets also and domestical Calamities, through Gods providence, hapned unto Solymanus, the great rover and robber of the world, which stayed him at home from vexing the Christians, especially touching his eldest Son Mustapha.

This Mustapha being hated, and partly feared of Rustanne the chief Councellor about the Turk, and of Rosa the Turks Concubine and after his Wife, was divers times complained of to his Father, accused, and at length so brought into suspition and displeasure of the Turks, by them aforesaid, that in conclusion, his Father caused him to be sent for to his Pavilion, where six Turks with Visors were appointed to put him to death: who coming upon him, put (after their manner) a small Cord or Bow-string full of knots about his Neck, and so throwing him down upon the ground, not suffering him to speak one word to his Father, with the twitch thereof throtled and strangled him to death, his Father standing in a secret corner by, and beholding the same. Which Fact being perpetrate, afterward when the Turk would have given to another Son of his and of Rosa, called Granger, the Treasures, Horse, Armor, Ornaments, and the Province of Mustapha his Brother: Granger crying out for sorrow of his Brothers death: Fy of thee, faith he to his Father, thou implous and wretched Dog, Traytor, Murtherer, I cannot call thee Father, take the Treasures, the Horse and Armor of Mustapha to thy self: and with that, taking out his Dagger, thrust it thorow his own body. And thus was Solyman Murtherer and Parricide of his own Sons: which was the year of our Lord, 1552.

Solyman the Turk murdereth Mustapha his own Son.

Wherein notwithstanding, is to be noted the singular providence and love of the Lord toward his afflicted Christians. For this Mustapha, as he was couragious and greatly expert and exercised in all practise of War, so had he a cruel heart, maliciously set to shed the Blood of Christians: wherefore great cause have we to congratulate, and to give thanks to God for the happy taking away of this Mustapha. And no less hope also and good comfort we may conceive of our loving Lord hereby minifted unto us, to think that our merciful God, after these fore afflictions of his Christians under these twelve Turks afore recited, now after this Solyman intenderh some gracious good work to Christendom, to reduce and releafe us out of this so long and miserable Turkish captivity, as may be hoped now, by taking away thefe young Imps of this implous Generation, before they should come to work their conceived malice against us: The Lord therefore be glorified and praised. Amen.

The loving providence of our Lord for his Christians.

Good hope and hand to be conceived of the Christians.

Moreover, as I was in writing hereof, opportunely came to my hands a certain Writing out of Germany, certifying us of such News and Victory of late atchieved against the Turk, as may not a little increase our hope and comfort us, touching the decay and ruine of the Turks power and tyranny against us. Which News are these: That after the Turkish Tyrant had besieged, with an Army of 30000 Men, the famous and strong Town and Castle of Jula in Hungary, lying forty Dutch miles beyond the river Danubius, which City had by the space of six weeks sustained many grievous assaults: God through his great Mercy and Goodness so comforted the said Town of Jula, and the poor Christians therein, at their earnest Prayers, that the Turk, with all his Host, was driven back by the hands of the General, called Karetphim Lasław, and his valiant Company: who not only defended the said Town, but also constrained the Turks to retire to their great shame and confusion, with a great slaughter of the Turkish rabble; for the which, the everlasting God be praised for ever.

Good news of the Turky lately repulsed by the Christians.

Christian captives released and taken from the Turky.

Boo Turky Bula.

The manner of the overthrow was this. As the foresaid General did see his Advantage, with Captain George, and other Horse-men of the Silesians and Hungarians, they set on the Rereward of the Turks and killed about eight thousand of them, and took also some of their Artillery, and followed them so fast, that the Turks were constrained to fly into a Marish Ground, and to break the wheels of the reft of their Artillery to save themselves, and therewith they got a very rich Booty, refcuing besides, and taking from the Turks, a great number of Christian Prisoners. Like thanks are also to be given to God, for the prosperous succes given to Magotzeby the valiant Captain of Erla, who making toward the Turks and encountring with the Tartarians, slew of them about eight hundred.

Not long after this it hapned, through the like providence of our God, a Turkish Captain called Begon, accompanied with a thousand fresh Horsemen, came newly out of Turky, to go toward the City named Quinque Ecclesiæ, or Finffenkyrchen, with whom the Earl of Serin by the way did encounter, and in the night setting upon him, killed the Captain, and took eight Camels, and eight Mules laden with Treasure, and also got two red Guidons, with a whole great piece of rich Cloth of Gold, and with another fair and strange Jewel. The Horse of this forefaid Turkish Captain was betraped and decked most richly. The Saddle whereof had the Pommel and back part covered over with Plate of fine Arabick Gold, and the reft of the Saddle, beside the sitting place, was plated with Silver very fair gilded. The sides of the Saddle was covered with purple Velvet; the Trappers and Beidle befet with little Turkises and Rubies; which Horse was sent to Vienna unto the Emperor Maximilian for a Present.

A great Captain of the Turky slain, and his treasure taken.

Although the Earl would very fain have saved the Captain, not knowing what he was, yet the Janizaries laboring to carry away their Captain, so stifly defended themselves, that the Earl with his Company, was constrained to kill both them and their Captain. From whom the said Earl of Serin the same time got fifteen thousand Turkish and Hungarian Ducates; which mony was brought for the payment of the Turkish Souldiers in the Town aforesaid of Finffenkyrchen, &c. All which be good beginnings of greater Goodnefs to be hoped for hereafter, through the Grace of Christ our Lord, especially if our Christian Rulers and Potentates, first the Church-men and Prelates for their parts, then the Civil Powers and Princes for their parts, with-holding their affections a little, will turn their brawls and variance into brotherly concord and agreement; which the Lord of Peace put in their minds to do. Amen. Or otherwise, if it will so please the Lord that the Turk come further upon us, so as he hath begun for our punishment and caitigation, his Grace then give to the Flock of his poor Christians constancy of Faith, patience in Suffering, and amendment of Life. For so I understand by publick fame, although uncertainly rumored by the voice of some, that the Turkes power of late, this present year of our Lord, 1566. hath pierced the parts of Apulia within Italy, wasting and burning the space of an hundred miles toward Naples. Which if it be certain, it is to be feared, that the Turk having thus fet in his foot, and feeling the sweetnefs of Italy, will not so ceafe before he get in both head and shoulders also so far into Italy, that he will display his Banners within the Walls of Rome, and do with old Rome the like, as Mahumet his great Grandfather did with new Rome, the City of Constantinople, and as the Persians did with Babylon.

The Turks piercing into Italy.

Conjectures why it is to be feared that the Turk shall get Rome.

The causes why we have so to judge, be divers: first, That the See of Rome hath been defended hitherto and maintained with much Blood; and therefore it may seem not uncredible, but that it will not long continue, but be loft with Blood again, according to the verdict of the Gofpel: He that striketh with the Sword, shall perish with the Sword, &c. Another cause is, the fulfilling of the eighteenth Chapter of the Apocalyps, where it is written, That great Babylon shall fall, and be made an habitation of Devils, and a Den of unclean Spirits, and a cage of filthy and unclean Birds: the fall whereof shall be like a mill-stone in the Sea, that is, which shall not rise again. And this to come before the Day of Judgment, the Text of the said Chapter doth apertly declare; where the words do follow, shewing, That the Kings of the Earth, and the Merchants which had to do with the whorish City, standing afar off for fear of the heat, and beholding the smoke of the said City flaming and burning with fire, shall bewail and rue her destruction and desolation, &c. What City this is, called Great Babylon, which like a Millstone shall fall and burn, and be made an habitation of unclean Spirits and Beasts; let the Reader consider. This is certain and plain by these her Kings and Merchants standing afar off for fear, and beholding her Burning, that the destruction of this City (what City soever it be) shall be seen here in Earth before the coming of the Lords judgment, as may easily be gathered by these three circumstances, that is, by the standing, the beholding and bewailing of her Merchants. By the which, Merchants and Kings of the Earth, peradventure may be signified the Pope, the rich Cardinals, the great Prelates and fat Doctors, and other Obedientiaries of the Romish See, who at the coming of the Turks, will not adventure their Lives for their Church, but will flye the City (no doubt) and stand afar off from danger; and when they shall see with their eyes, and hear with their ears the City of Rome to be set on fire and consumed by the cruel Turks, the sight whereof shall seem to them pitious and lamentable, to behold the great and fair City of Rome, the tall Castle of Saint Angel, the mighty See, (where they were wont to fish out such riches, Dignities, Treasures and Pleasure) so to burn before their Eyes, and to come to such utter desolation, which shall never be re-edified again, but shall be made an habitation of Devils and unclean Spirits, that is, of Turks and Heathen Sultans, and barbarous Saracens, &c. This (I say) peradventure may be the meaning of that Prophetical place of the Apocalyps; not that I have here any thing to pronounce, but only give my guess what may probably be conjectured. But the end at length will make this and all other things more plain and manifest. For mystical Prophecies lightly are never so well understood, as when the event of them is past and accomplished.

The Prophesies of the 18 chapter of the Apocalyps expounded.

Another cause, concurring with the causes aforesaid, may be collected out of Paulus Jovius, who writing of the subversion of Rhodes, which was as ye heard, Anno 1522. upon Christmas day, saith, That it chanced suddenly the same day in Rome, that as Pope Hadrian the sixth, was entring into the Church to his Service, suddenly over his head the upper frontier or top of the Chappel door, which was of Marble, immediately as the Pope was entring, fell down, and flew certain of his Guard waiting upon him. Whereby peradventure may be meant, that the ruine of Rome was not long after to follow the losse of Rhodes.

The third cause. Ex Paulo Jovio.

The fourth cause. Ex Joan. Aventino Annal. lib. 8. f. 570. de Prophetiis.

The fourth cause I borrow out of Joannes Aventinus, who in his third Book alleaging the names, but not the words of Hildegardis, Brigit, and other Prophetical Men, hath these words; Si vera sunt carmina & vaticinia, D. Hildegardæ, & Brigittæ, Sybillarum Germaniæ, & Bardorum fatidicorum. qui ea quæ nostro ævo completa videmus longo ante tempore nobis cecinerunt, Ægyptiporcelis Colonia, longo ante tempore nobis cecinerunt, Ægyptiporcelis Colonia, ultimus volumen, Turcarum caput erit, &c. that is, If the Sayings and Prophecies of Hildegard, of Brigit, and of other Prophetical Persons be true, which being foretold long before, we have seen now in these our days accomplished; the Town of Colen, will-we nill-we, must needs be the head City of the Turk; &c.

And this I writ, not as one pronouncing against the City of Rome what will happen, but as one fearing what may fall. Which if it come to pass (as I pray God it do not) then shall the Pope well understand, whether his wrong understanding of the Scriptures, and his false flattering Glozes upon the same, have brought him.

A Counsel to the Bishop of Rome, if he be wise.

Wherefore my counsel is to the Pope, and all his Popish maintainers and upholders, to humble themselves, and to agree with their Brethren better, letting all contention fall; lest that while the Bishop of Rome shall strive to be the highest of all other Bishops, it so fall out shortly, that the Bishop of Rome shall be found the lowest of all other Bishops, or peradventure no Bishop at all.

Whereunto also another cause may be added, taken out of Jeronymus Savanarola, who Prophesieth, that one shall come over the Alpes like unto Cyrus, and destroy Italy. Whereof see more before.

Ex Paulo Jovio.

This Solymannus, if he be yet alive, hath now raigned forty six years, who began the same year in the which the Emperor Charles the fifth was Crowned, which was, Anno 1520. and so hath continued by Gods permission, for a scourge to the Christians, unto this year now present, 1556. This Solyman, by one of his Concubines, had his eldest Son called Mustapha. By another Concubine called Rosa, he had four Sons, Mahumet, Bajazetes, Zelymus, and Gianger. Of the which Sons, Mustapha and Gianger were slain (as ye heard before) by the means of their own Father. And thus much concerning the wretched Tyranny of the Turks, out of the Authors hereunder written.

A notice touching the miserable Persecution, Slaughter and Captivity of the Christians under the Turks.

Persecution under the Turks.

HItherto thou hast heard (Christian Reader) the lamentable Persecutions of these later days, wrought by the Turky against the People and Servants of Christ. In the reading whereof, such as sit quietly at home, and be far from jeopardy, may see what misery there is abroad; the knowledge and reading wherof shall not be unprofitable for all Christians earnestly to weigh and consider, for that many there be, which sadly deceiving themselves, imagine that Christianity is a quiet and restful state of Life, full of pleasure and solace in this present World, when indeed it is nothing less testified by the mouth of our Saviour himself, who rightly defining his Kingdom, teacheth us, That his Kingdom is not of this World, premonishing us also before, That in this World we must look for affliction, but in him we shall have peace. Examples hereof in all parts of this History through all Ages, are plenteous and evident to be seen, whether we turn our Eyes to the first Ten Persecutions in the Primitive Church, during the first three hundred years after Christ: or whether we consider the later three hundred years in this last Age of the Church, wherein the poor Flock of Christ hath been so afflicted, oppressed and devoured, that it is hard to say, whether have been more cruel against the Christians, the Infidel Emperors of Rome in the Primitive Age of the Church, or else these barbarous Turky in these our later times of the Church now present.

Comparison between the perfecutions of the Primitive Church and of the later Church.

Thus from time to time the Church of Christ almost hath had little or no rest in this Earth; what for the Heathen Emperors on the one side; what for the proud Pope on the other side; on the third side, what for the barbarous Turk: for these are and have been from the beginning, the three principal and capital Enemies of the Church of Christ, signified in the Apocalyps, by the Beast, the false Lamb, and the false Prophet, from whom went out three foul Spirits like Frogs, to gather together all the Kings of the Earth to the Battle of the day of the Lord God Almighty. Apoc. 16. The cruelty and malice of these Enemies against Christs People hath been such, that to judge which of them did most exceed in Cruelty of Persecution, it is hard to say; but that it may be thought that the bloody and beastly Tyranny of the Turks, especially above the rest, incomparably surmounteth all the afflictions and cruel slaughters that ever were seen in any Age, or read of in any Story. Insomuch, that there is neither History so perfect, nor Writer so diligent, who writing of the miserable Tyranny of the Turks, is able to express or comprehend the horrible Examples of their unspeakable cruelty and slaughter, exercised by these twelve Turkish

Three special enemies of Christs Church.

Apoc. 16. The cruelty of the Turk out of Christ.

{KING 1. Hist. 7.} Turkish Tyrants upon poor Christian mens bodies, within the compass of these later Three hundred years. Wherein although no sufficient relation can be made, nor number expressed; yet to give to the Reader some general guess or view thereof; let us first perpend and consider what Dominions and Empires, how many Countries, Kingdoms, Provinces, Cities, Towns, strong Holds, and Forts, these Turks have surprized and won from the Christians. In all which Victories, being so many, this is secondly to be noted, That there is almost no place which the Turky ever came to and subdued, where they did not either slay all the Inhabitants thereof, or led away the most part thereof into such Captivity and Slavery, that they continued not long after alive, or else so lived, that Death almost had been to them more tolerable.

Two things to be noted in the Turks, how many Victories they have got, and how cruelly they have used their Victories.

Like as in the time of the first Persecutions of the Roman Emperors, the Saying was, That no man could step with his feet in all Rome, but should tread upon a Martyr: So here may be said, That almost there is not a Town, City or Village in all Asia, Grecia, also in a great part of Europa and Africa, whose Streets have not flowed with the Blood of the Christians, whom the cruel Turks have murdered. Of whom are to be seen in Histories, heaps of Souldiers slain, of Men and Women cut in pieces, of Children sticked upon Poles and Stakes, whom these detestable Turks most spitefully (and that in the sight of their Parents) use to gore to death; some they drag at their Horse tails, and famish to death; some they tear in pieces, tying their Arms and Legs to four Horses; otherwhile they make Marks to shoot at; upon some they try their Swords how deep they can cut and slash, as before ye have read. The aged and feeble they tread under their Horses: Women with Child they spare not, but rip their Bodies, and cast the Infants into the Fire, or otherwise destroy them. Whether the Christians yield to them, or yield not, all is a matter. As in their promises their is no truth, so in their Victories there is no sense of Manhood or Mercy in them, but they make havock of all.

Ex Marino Barletio de Scod. expugnat. lib. 2.

So the Citizens of Croja, after they had yielded and were all promised their Lives, were all destroyed, and that horribly. In Mysia, after the King had given himself to the Turky hand, having promise of life, Mahumet the Turk, slew him with his own hands. The Princes of Rasia had both their Eyes put out, with Basons red hot set before them. Theodosia, otherwise called Capha, was also furrendred to the Turk, having the like assurance of life and safety; and yet contrary to the League, the Citizens were put to the Sword and slain. At the winning and yielding of Lesbos, what a number of young Men and Children were put upon sharp flakes and poles, and so thrust thorow? At the winning of the City of Buda, what tyranny was shewed and exercised against the poor Christians which had yielded themselves, and against the two Dukes, Christopher Bissores, and Joannes Tranbinger, contrary to the promise and hand-writing of the Turk, is to be seen in the Story of Melchior Soiterus, De bello Pannonico.

Ex Michael. Soiter lib. 1. de bello Pannonico, fol. 515.

Ex Bernardo de Breydenbach. Decan. Eccl. Magunt.

The like also is to be read in the Story of Bernardus de Breydenbach, who writing of the taking of Hydruntum, a City in Apulia, fetcheth of the miserable slaughter of the young Men there slain, of old Men troden under the Horse feet, of Matrons and Virgins ravished, of Women with child cut and rent in pieces, of the Priests in the Churches slain, and of the Arch-Bishop of that City, who being an aged Man, and holding the Crosse in his hands, was cut asunder with a wooden Saw, &c. The same Bernardus, also writing of the overthrow of Negropontus, otherwise called Chalcides, Anno 1471. describeth the like terrible slaughter which there was exercised, where the Turk, after his promise given before to the contrary, most cruelly caused all the Youth of Italy to be pricked upon sharp flakes; some to be dashed against the hard stones, otherwhile to be cut in sunder in the midst, and otherwhile with other kinds of Torments to be put to death: insomuch, that all the streets and ways of Chalcides, did flow with the Blood of them which were there slain. In which History the foresaid Writer recordeth one memorable Example of Maidenly chastity, worthy of all Christians to be noted and commended. The Story is told of the Pretors Daughter of that City, who being the only Daughter of her Father, and noted to be of an exceeding singular Beauty, was saved out of the slaughter, and brought to Mahumet the Turk to be his Concubine. But the denying to consent to his Turkish appetite and filthiness, was commanded therewith to be slain and murdered, and so dyed she a Martyr, keeping both her Faith and her Body undefiled unto Christ her Spouse. Ibid.

The superstitious use of the material cross.

Vide supra. Ex Bernard. Breydenb.

A notable example of maidenly chastity.

Vide supra. The miserable fulfilling of Christian mens blood by the wretched Turky.

The like cruelty also was shewed upon them which kept the Castle, and afterward yielding themselves upon hope of the Turky promise, were slain every one. What should I speak of the miserable slaughter of Methone, and the Citizens thereof dwelling in Peloponnesus? who, seeing no other remedy but needs to come into the Turky hands, set the Barn on fire where they were gathered together, Men, Women and Children; some Women also with child, voluntarily cast themselves into the Sea, rather then they would sustain the Turky captivity.

Miserable it is to behold, long to recite, incredible to believe, all the cruel parts and horrible slaughters wrought by these miscreants against the Christians through all places almost of the World, both in Asia, in Africa, but especially in Europe. Who is able to recite the innumerable Societies and Companies of the Greciane Martyr'd by the Turky Sword in Achaia, Attica, Thessalia, Macedonia, Epyrus, and all Peloponnesus? besides the Island of Rhodes, and other Islands and Cyclades adjacent in the Sea about, numbred to two and fifty; of the which also Patmos was one, where Saint John being banished, wrote his Revelations. Where did ever the Turky set any Foot, but the Blood of Christians there, without pity or measure, went to wrack? and what Place or Province is there almost through the World, where the Turky either have not pierced, or are not likely shortly to enter? In Thracia, and through all the Coasts of Danubius, in Bulgaria, Dalmatia, in Scrvia, Transilvania, Bosna in Hungaria, also in Austria, what havock hath been made by them of Christian mens Bodies, it will rue any Christian heart to remember. At the Siege of Moldavia, at the winning of Buda, of Pesta, of Alba, of Walpo, Strigonium, Soclosia, Tathe, Wisigradum, Novum Castellum in Dalmatia, Belgradum, Varadinum, Quinque Ecclesiæ: also at the Battel of Vienna, where Ladislaus King of Polony, with all his Army almost, through the rashness of the Popes Cardinal, were slain: At the winning moreover of Xabiacchus, Lyssus, Dynastrum: At the Siege of Gunza, and of the faithful Town Scorad, where the number of the Shot against their Walls, at the Siege thereof, were reckoned to Two thousand five hundred thirty nine. Likewise at the Siege of Vienna, where all the Christian Captives were brought before the whole Army and slain, and divers drawn in pieces with Horses: but especially at the winning of Constantinople, above mentioned; also at Croja and Methone, what beastly cruelty was shewed, it is unspeakable. For as in Constantinople, Mahumet the drunken Turk, never rose from Dinner, but he caused every day, for his disport, Three hundred Christian Captives of the Nobles of that City to be slain before his face: so in Methone, after that his Captain Omares had sent unto him at Constantinople, five hundred Prisoners of the Christians, the cruel Tyrant commanded them all to be cut and divided in sunder by the middle, and so being slain, to be thrown out into the Fields.

A brief recital of divers Towns and Isles of the Turk in Europe.

The cruelty of the Turk against the Citizens of Constantinople. Vide supra.

The cruelty of the Turk against the Prisoners of Methone. Ex Leonico the cruel Tyrant commanded them all to be cut and divided in sunder.

Leonicus Chalcondylas writing of the same Story, addeth moreover, a prodigious Narration (if it be true) of a brute Ox, which being in the Fields, and seeing the Carcases of the dead Bodies so cut in two, made there a loud noise after the lowing of his kind and nature: and afterwards coming to the Quarters of one of the dead Bodies lying in the Field, first took up the one half, and then coming again, took up likewise the other half, and so (as he could) joyned them both together. Which being espied of them which saw the doing of the brute Ox, and marvelling thereat, and word being brought thereof to Mahumet, he commanded the Quarters again to be brought where they were before, to prove whether the Beast will come again, who failed not (as the Author re-

Turcicis. lib. 10. A strange and prodigious work-master of a brute Beast toward a dead Christian Body.

cordeth) recorderth) but in like fort as before, taking the fragments of the dead Corps, laid them again together. It followeth more in the Author, how that Maumet, being advanced at the strange wonder of the Ox, commanded the Quarters of the Christian Mans body to be interred, and the Ox to be brought to his House, and much made of. Some faid it to be the body of a Venetian; some affirmed, that he was an Illyrian: but whatsoever he was, certain it is, That the Turk himself was much more Bestial than was the brute Ox; which being a Beast, shewed more sense of humanity to a dead man, than one man did to another. Ex Leonic. Chalcondyla.

The Bishop, with the Citizens of Methone slain of the Turk.

To this Cruelty add moreover, That beside these five hundred Methonians thus destroyed at Constantinople, in the said City of Methone, all the Towns-men also were slain by the forcefaid Captain Omares, and among them their Bishop likewise was put to death. Ex Andr. de Lacunna, & ex Wolfg. & aliis.

Ex Andrea de Lacunna & aliis.

Ex Turner Servia, instructore ad regem Hen. 8.

John Faber, in his Oration made before King Henry the Eighth, at the appointment of King Ferdinandus, and declaring therein the miserable Cruelty of the Turks toward all Christians, as also toward the Bishops and Ministers of the Church, testifieth, how that in Mitylene, in Constantinople, and Trapezunda, what Bishops and Arch-bishops, or other Ecclesiastical and Religious Persons the Turks could find, they brought them out of the City into the Fields, there to be slain like Oxen and Calves. The same Faber also writing of the Battel of Solymon in Hungary, where Ludovicus the King of Hungary was overthrown, declareth, That eight Bishops in the same Field were slain. And moreover, when the Arch-bishop of Strigon, and Paulus the Arch-bishop of Colocestris were found dead, Solyman caused them to be taken up, and to be Beheaded and chopt in small pieces. Anno 1526.

The cruelty of the Turk in Europe.

What Christian heart will not pity the incredible slaughter done by the Turks in Eubœa, where the said Faber testifieth, That innumerable people were sticked and gored upon flakes, divers were thrust thorow with a hot Iron, Children and Infants not yet weaned from the Mother, were dashed against the stones, and many cut asunder in the midst? Ex Johan. Fabro, & aliis.

The Prince of Servia slain, and slain of the Turk.

But never did Country taste and feel more the bitter and deadly Tyranny of the Turks, than did Rascia, called Mysia Inferior, and now Servia. Where (as writeth Wolfgangus Drechsterus) the Prince of the same Country being sent for, under fair pretence of words and promises, to come and speak with the Turk, after he was come of his own Gentleness, thinking no harm, was Apprehended, and wretchedly and falsly put to Death, and his Skin flain off, his Brother and Sister brought to Constantinople for a Triumph, and all the Nobles of his Country (as Faber addeth) had their Eyes put out, &c.

Let never Christian Prince trust the Turk.

Briefly to conclude, by the vehement and furious rage of these cursed Caitiffs, it may seem that Satan the Old Dragon, for the great hatred he beareth to Christ, hath stirred them up to be the Butchers of all Christian People, inflaming their beastly hearts with such malice and cruelty against the Name and Religion of Christ, that they degenerating from the nature of Men to Devils, neither by reason will be ruled, nor by any blood or slaughter satisfied. Like as in the Primitive Age of the Church, and in the time of Diocletian and Maximilian, when the Devil saw that he could not prevail against the Person of Christ which was risen again, he turned all his fury upon his silly servants, thinking by the Roman Emperors utterly to extinguish the Name and Profession of Christ out from the Earth: So in this later Age of the World, Satan being let loose again, rageth by the Turks, thinking to make no end of murthering and killing, till he have brought (as he intendeth) the whole Church of Christ, with all the Professors thereof, under foot. But the Lord (I trust) will once send a Constantine to vanquish proud Maxentius, Moses to drown indurate Pharaoh, Cyrus to subdue the stout Babylonian.

The Turks slaughter of the Devil, to resist against Christ.

The Turks are butchers of the Christians.

The miserable state of the Christians under the Turks.

And thus much hitherto touching our Christian Brethren which were slain & destroyed by these blasphemous Turky. Now for so much as besides these aforesaid, many other were pluckt away violently from their Country, from their wives and children, from liberty, and from all their possessions, into wretched captivity and extreme penury, it remaineth likewise to intreat somewhat also concerning the cruel manner of the Turky handling of the said Christian Captives. And first here is to be noted, that the Turk never cometh into Europe to war against the Christians, but there followeth after his Army a great number of brokers or merchants, such as buy men and children to sell again, bringing with them long chains in hope of great cheats. In the which chains they link them by fifty and fixty together, such as remain undestroyed with the sword, whom they buy of the spoils of them that rob and spoil the Christian Countries; which is lawful for any of the Turks Army to do, so that the tenth of their spoil or prey (whatsoever it be) be referred to the head Turk, that is, to the great master Thief.

KING Hen. 7.

The buying and selling of Christian captives under the Turks.

Of such as remain for tithe, if they be aged (of whom very few be referved alive, because little profit cometh of that age) they be sold to the use of husbandry or keeping of beasts. If they be young men or women, they be sent to certain places, there to be instructed in their Language and Arts, as shall be most profitable for their advantage, and such are called in their Tongue, Sarai: and the first care of the Turky is this, to make them deny the Christian Religion, and to be Circumcised: and after that they are appointed, every one as he seemeth most apt, either to the learning of their Laws, or else to learn the feats of War. Their first rudiment of War is to handle the Bow: first beginning with a weak Bow, and so as they grow in strength coming to a stronger Bow, and if they miss the Mark, they are sharply beaten; and their allowance is two pence or three pence a day, till they come and take wages to serve in War. Some are brought up for the purpose to be placed in the number of the wicked Janizaries, that is, the Order of the Turky champions, which is the most abominable condition of all other. Of these Janizaries, see before. And if any of the forefaid young men or children shall appear to excel in any Beauty, him they so cut, that no part of that which Nature giveth to man, remaineth to be seen in all his body; whereby while the freshness of age continueth, he is compelled to serve their abominable abomination; and when age cometh, then they serve instead of Eunuchs to wait upon Matrons, or to keep Horses and Mules, or else to be scullions and drudges in their kitchins.

Christian captives tithed of the Turk.

O wicked-nesse passing all misery.

Such as are young Maidens and beautiful, are deputed for concubines. They which be of mean beauty, serve for Matrons to their drudgery work in their houses and chambers, or else are put to spinning, and such other labours; but so, that it is not lawful for them either to profess their Christian Religion, or ever to hope for any liberty. And thus much of them who fall to the Turk by tithe.

The great danger of Christian Captives which fly out of Turkie.

O misery above all misery!

The manner and shift of our men in getting over the Sea.

The servitude of young women captives.

The other which are bought and sold amongst private subjects, first are allured with fair words and promises to take Circumcision: which if they will do, they are more favorably intreated; but all hope is taken from them of returning again into their Country, which if they attempt, the pain thereof is burning. And if such coming at length to liberty will marry, they may; but then their Children remain bond to the Lord, for him to sell at his pleasure; and therefore such as are wise amongst them will not marry. They which refuse to be Circumcised, are miserably handled; for example whereof, the Author (which giveth testimony hereof) doth infer his own experience. Such Captives as be expert in any manual Art or Occupation, can better shift for themselves; but contrariwise, they which have no Handicraft to live upon, are in worse case. And therefore such as have been brought up in Learning, or be Priests or Noble-men, and such other whose tender Education can abide no hardness, are the least reputed, and most of all other neglected of him that hath the sale or keeping of them, for that he seeth less profit to rise of them than of the other; and therefore no cost of rayment is bestowed upon them, but they are carried about bareheaded and barefoot, both Summer and Winter in frost and snow. And if any faint and be sick in the way, there is no resting for him in any Inn, but first he is driven forward with Whips, and if that will not serve, he is set peradventure upon some Horse; or if his weakness be such that he cannot sit, then is he laid overthwart the Horse upon his belly like a Calf; and if he chance to dye, they take off his garment, such as he hath, and throw him in a ditch.

Ex Bartholo. Georgievic. Peregrina fide, de offitiis Mauritar. Christianorum sub Turca.

In

KING Hen. 7.

In the way moreover, beside the common Chain which doth include them all, the hands also of every one are manacled, which is, because they should not harm their Leaders; for many times it hapned, that ten persons had the leading of fifty Captives; and when night came their feet also were fettered, so that they lodged in no House, but lay upon the ground all night.

The miserable calamity of Christian Women being in captivity under the Turks.

The young Women had a little more gentleness shewed, being carried in Paniers in the day time. But when night came, pity it was to hear the miserable crying out of such as were inclosed within, by reason of the filthy injuries which they suffered by their Carriers, insomuch that the young tender age of seven or eight years, as well of the one Sex as of the other, could not save them from the most filthy villany of the Bestial Turks.

The manner of Christian Captives how they are brought to Markets and sold.

When the Morning cometh, they are brought forth to the Market to to sale, where the Buyer, if he be disposed, plucking off their Garments, vieweth all the Bones and Joynts of their Body; and if he like them he giveth his price, and carrieth them away into miserable servitude, either to tilling of their Ground, or to pasture their Cattle, or to some other strange kind of Misery incredible to speak of: Insomuch that the Author reporteth, that he hath seen himself, certain of such Christian Captives yoked together like Horse and Oxen, and to draw the Plough. The Maid-servants likewise are kept in perpetual toil and work in close places, where neither they come in sight of any Man, neither be they permitted to have any talk with their fellow-servants, &c. Such as are committed to keep Beasts, lie abroad day and night in the wild Fields, without house and harbor, and so changing their Pasture go from Mountain to Mountain, of whom also, beside the Office of keeping the Beasts, other handy-labor is exacted at spare hours, such as pleaseth their Masters to put unto them.

Christians by their Captivity, put to draw in the Plough like Horses.

Out of this misery there is no way for them to flye, especially for them that are carried into Asia beyond the Seas; or if any do attempt so to do, he taketh his time chiefly about Harvest, when he may hide himself all the day-time in the Corn, or in Woods or Marishes, and find Food; and in the Night only he flyeth, and had rather be devoured of Wolves and other wild Beasts, than to return again to his Master. In their flying they use to take with them an Hatchet and Coasts, that when they come to the Sea side, they may cut down Trees, and bind together the ends of them, and so where the Sea at Hellespontus is narrowest, about the Sestos and Abidos, they take the Sea, sitting upon Trees, where, if the wind and tide do serve luckily, they may cut over in four or five hours. But the most part either perish in the Floods, or are driven back again upon the Coasts of Asia, or else be devoured of wild Beasts in Woods, or perish with Hunger and Famine. If any escape over the Sea alive into Europe, by the way they enter into no Town, but wander upon the Mountains, following only the North-Star for their guide.

The mani-fold dangers by the way in flying.

The misery of Christian Cities and Provinces which live under the Turks tribute.

As touching such Towns and Provinces which are won by the Turk, and wherein the Christians are suffered to live under tribute: First, All the Nobility there they kill and make away, the Church-men and Clergy hardly they spare. The Churches, with the Bells and all the Furniture thereof, either they cast down, or else they convert to the use of their own blasphemous Religion, leaving to the Christians certain old and blind Chappels, which when they decay, it is permitted to our men to repair them again for a great sum of Mony given to the Turk. Neither be they permitted to use any open Preaching or Ministration, but only in silence and by stealth to frequent together. Neither is it lawful for any Christian to bear Office within the City or Province, nor to bear Weapon; nor to wear any Garment like to the Turky. And if any contumely or blasphemy, be it never so great, be spoken against them, or against Christ, yet must thou bear it, and hold thy peace. Or if thou speak one word against their Religion, thou shalt be compelled (whether thou will or no) to be circumcised: And then if thou speak one word against Mahumet, thy punishment is Fire and Burning. And if it chance a Christian being on Horseback to meet, or pass by a Musulman, that is, a Turkish Priest, he must light from his Horse, and with a lowly look devoutly reverence and adore the Musulman: or if he do not, he is beaten down from his Horse with clubs and staves.

If Christians may not go like Turks, why should our Countrymen go like Papists? The Turks have their fire and faggots as well as our Papists. The Christians must light from their Horses meeting a Turkish Priest, and adore him.

Furthermore, for their Tribute they pay the fourth part of their substance and gain to the Turk; beside the ordinary Tribute of the Christians, which is to pay for every Poll within his Family a Ducket unto the Turk; which if the Parents cannot do, they are compelled to sell their Children into bondage. Other being not able to pay, go chained in Fetters from door to door begging, to make up their payment, or else must lye in perpetual Prison.

And yet notwithstanding, when the Christians have discharged all duties, it remaineth free for the Turky, to take up among the Christians children whom they best like, and them to Circumcise, and to take them away as being young from the sight of their Parents to far places, to be brought up for the Turky Wars, so that they may not return to them again; but first are taught to forget Christ, and then their Parents; so that if they come again amongst them, yet are they not able to know their kinsfolks and parents.

Another misery most lamentable in taking away Christian children from their Parents, to serve the Turk.

This misery passing all other miseries, no Man is able with Tongue to utter, or with words to express. What weeping and tears, with sorrow and lamentation; what groaning, sighs, and deep dolour, doth fear and rent asunder the woful hearts of the silly Parents at the plucking away of their Babes and Children? To see their Sons and their own Children, whom they have born and bred up to the service of Christ Jesus the Son of God, now to be drawn away violently from them to the warfare of Satan, and to fight against Christ? to see their Babes born of Christian blood, of Christians to be made Turky, and so to be plucked out of their arms, and out of their sight, without hope ever to return to them again? to live perpetually with aliens, barbarous and blasphemous Turky, and so to become of the number of them which are called fatherless and motherless?

O misery.

This is with tears rather than with words to be expressed.

Albeit the same Children afterward do greatly degenerate from the Faith of Christ, yet very many of them have privily about them the Gospel written of St. John, In principio erat verbum, &c. Which for a token or remembrance of their Christian Faith they carry under their Arm-hole, written in Greek and Arabick, who greatly desire, and long look for the revenging Sword of the Christians to come and deliver them out of their dolourous thraldom and captivity, according as the Turky themselves have a Prophefie, and greatly stand in fear of the fame. Whereof more shall be said (Christ willing) in the Chapter following.

Privy Gospellers in Turky.

An old Prophefie of the Turks touching the Sword of the Christians.

¶ And thus have ye heard the lamentable afflictions of our Christian Brethren under the cruel Tyranny and Captivity of the Turky, passing all other Captivities that ever have been to Gods people, either under Pharaoh in Egypt, or under Nebuchadnezzar in Babylon, or under Antiochus in the time of the Maccabees. Under the which Captivity, if it so please the Lord to have his Spouse the Church to be nurtured, his good will be done and obeyed. But if this Misery come by the negligence and discord of our Christian Guides and Leaders, then have we to pray and cry to our Lord God, either to give better hearts to our Guiders and Rulers, or else better Guides and Rulers to his Flock.

Necessary for many causes that the troubles of the Church be known.

And these Troubles and Afflictions of our Christian Brethren suffered by the Turky, I thought good and profitable for our Country People here of England to know, for so much as by the ignorance of these, and such like Histories worthy of consideration, I see much inconvenience doth follow. Whereby it cometh to pass, that because we Englishmen being far off from these Countries, and little knowing what misery is abroad, are the less moved with zeal and compassion to tender their Grievances, and to pray for them whose Troubles we know not. Whereupon also it followeth, that we not considering the miserable state of either, are the less grateful to God, when any Tranquillity by him to us is granted. And if any little Cloud of perturbation arise upon us, be it never so little, as poverty, loss of living, or a little banishment out of our Country for the Lords Cause, we make a great matter thereof, and all because we go no further than our own Country, and only feeling our own cross, do not compare that which we feel with the

the great crosses whereunto the Churches of Christ commonly in other places abroad are subject. Which if we did rightly understand, and earnestly consider, and ponder in our minds, neither would we so excessively forget our selves in time of our prosperity given us of God, nor yet so impatiently be troubled, as we are in time of our Adversity, and all because either we hear not, or else we ponder not the terrible crosses which the Lord layeth upon our other Brethren abroad in other Nations, as by this prefent story here prefixed may appear.

NOw consequently remaineth, as I have shewed hitherto what Tyranny hath been used of the Turky against Christs People, so to declare likewise how far this Tyranny of the Turky hath extended and spread it self, describing as in a Table, to the Christian Reader, what Lands, Countries and Kingdoms the Turky have won and got from Christiandom; to the intent, that when Christian Princes shall behold the greatnes of the Turky Dominions spread almost thorow all the World, and how little a part of Christianity remaineth behind, they may thereby understand the better how it is time now for them to bestir them, if ever they think to do any good in Gods Church. And therefore to make a compendious Draught, as in a brief Table, of such Countries, Kingdoms and Dominions, got from us by the Turky: We will first begin with Asia, describing what Tracts, Countries, Cities and Churches the Turk hath surprized, and violently pluckt away from the Society of Christian Dominions, taking only such as be most principal, and chiefly them that be in Scripture contained, for that it were too long to Discourse all and singular such Places by name, as the Turk hath under his Subjection.

The Greatnes of the Turky Dominions declared.

The World being divided commonly into three parts, Asia, Africa, and Europa; Asia is counted to be the greatest in compass, containing as much as both the other, and is divided into two Portions, the one called Asia Major; the other called Asia Minor. And although the Empire of the Turk extendeth unto them both; yet especially his Dominion standeth in the other Asia, which is called Asia Minor, which reacheth from the Coasts of Europa unto Armenia Major, beyond the River Euphrates, and comprehendeth these Regions and Cities following.

The

KING Hen. 7.

The Prophecies of the holy Scriptures considered, touching the coming up and final ruine and destruction of this wicked Kingdom of the TURK, with the Revelations and foreshewings also of other Authors concerning the same.

Prophecies confidered for the beginning and falling of the Turks Kingdom.

FOrsomuch as you have hitherto sufficiently heard to what quantity and largeness the Dominion of the Turks hath increased, and do understand what cruel tyranny these wretched miscreants have and do daily practice most heinously wheresoever they come against the feavants and professors of Christ; it shall not be unprofitable but rather necessary, and to our great comfort, to consider and examine in the Scriptures, with what Prophecies the holy Spirit of the Lord hath premonished and forewarned us before of these heavy Persecutions to come upon his people by this horrible Antichrist. For as the government and constitution of times and states of Monarchies and Policies fall not to us by blind chance, but be administred and allotted unto us from above; so it is not to be suppofed, that such a great alteration and mutation of Kingdoms, such a terrible and general Persecution of Gods people almost through all Christendom, and such a terror of the whole earth as is now moved and gendred by these Turks, cometh without the knowledge, sufferance, and determination of the Lord before, for such ends and purpoles as his divine wisdom doth best know. For the better evidence and testimony whereof, he hath left in his Scriptures sufficient instruction and declaration, whereby we may plainly see to our great comfort how these grievous afflictions and troubles of the Church, though they be sharp and heavy unto us, yet they come not by chance or by mans working only, but even as the Lord himself hath appointed it, and doth permit the same.

Two things to be considered in the time and order of the Old Testament. The Scriptures, and the people.

And first to begin with the time of the Old Testament, let us seriously advise and ponder, not only the Scriptures and Prophecies therein contained, but also let us consider the whole state, order and regiment of that people; the Church I mean of the Israelites. For although the Scriptures and Prophets of the Old Testament were properly sent to that people, and have their relation properly to things done, or that should be done in that Commonwealth, of which Prophets John Baptist was the last and made an end, as our Saviour himself witnesseth, saying, the Law and Prophets be unto the time of John. &c. Yet notwithstanding the said people of that Old Testament beareth a lively image and resemblance of the Universal Church which should follow, planted by the Son of God through the whole earth. So that as the Prophets of God speaking to them from the Mouth and Word of God, prophefied what should come to pass in that people; so likewise the whole course and History of those Israelites exemplifieth and beareth a prophetical Image to us, declaring what is to be looked for in the Universal Church of God dispersed through the World, planted in Christ Jesus his Son, according as Philip Melanthon, gravely gathering upon the same, testifieth in divers places in his Commentary upon the Prophet Daniel.

Phil. Melan. in Dan. Prophet.

Gen. 4.

As first the History of godly Abel slain by wicked Cain, what doth it import or prophesie, but the condition of the people and servants of God, which commonly go to wrack in this world, and are oppressed by the contrary part which belongeth not to God?

The like may be said also of Isaac and Ismael; of Jacob and Esau. Of whom those two which were the children of promise, and belonged to the Election of God, were persecuted in this world of the other which were rejected. Where moreover is to be noted concerning Ismael, that of his Stock after the flesh came the Saracens, which Sect the Turks do now profess and maintain. And as Ismael had but 12 Sons; so it were to be wished of God, that this Solyman, which is the 12th of the Turkish Generation, may be the laft. But of this better occasion shall follow (the Lord willing) hereafter.

The Saracens come of Ismael. Relembiance between the twelve Sons of Ismael, and the 12 Ottoman Turks. 4 Reg. 17.

Furthermore, of the twelve Tribes of Israel, the sacred History so reporteth, that after they had a long season continued together by the space of eight or nine hundred years, at length, for their idolatry and transgression of their forefathers Ten Tribes of them were cut off, and dispersed among the Gentiles an hundred and thirty years before the Captivity of Babylon; so that but two Tribes only remained free, and they also at last, after an hundred and thirty years, were captived under the Babylonians for a certain time. No otherwise hath it happned with the Church of Christ almoft in the Universal World, of which Church the greatest part, both in Asia, in Africa, and almoft in Europe) where the holy Apostles so laboured and travelled) we see now to be difparkled among the Turks, and their Candlesticks removed (the Lord of his great grace reduce them again, Amen.) So that of twelve parts of Christendom, which was once planted in Christ, scarce two parts remain clear, and they how long they shall so continue the Lord knoweth: And albeit through the mercy of the Lord they escape the danger of the Turks, yet have they been so beaten with the Pope, that they had been better almoft to have been in the Turks hands.

The old Church of the Israelites to be set as a representation or Image of the publick Church of Christ Jesus.

Again, After the said Israelites returned, being restored of Cyrus, let us consider well their story, the continuance of time, the manner of their regiments, and what afflictions they sustained in the time of the Macchabees, and we shall see a lively representation of these our days expressed in that Prophetical People, according as St. Paul writing of them sheweth how all things happned to them in Figures; that is, the actions and doings of that one Nation, be as Figures and Types of greater matters, what shall happen in these later times of the whole Church universally in Christ collected.

1 Cor. 10

So the transmigration and deliverance again of those two Tribes, declareth to us the affliction of Christs Church for sin; and yet that God will not utterly reject his people for his Sons sake, as by manifold examples of the Church hitherto may well appear.

The Church of the Jews a figure of Christs Church.

Again, The continuance of the Law first given by Moses unto the destruction of the said people by Titus, amounteth to 1564 years; so we counting the age of the New Testament, and reckoning from the day of our Redemption unto this present, be come now to the year 1534, lacking but only three and thirty years of the full number.

Ex Phil. Melanct. in Dan. cap 9.

The times and years of the old Church, compared with the new.

Likewise, In counting the years from their deliverance out of Captivity to the end of their diffolution, we find 564 years, during which year as the Church of the Jews was not governed under the authority of Kings, but the High Priests took all the power and authority to themselves; so we Christians, for the space especially of these later 564 years, what have we seen and felt, but only the juridiction and domination of the Pope and High Priests playing the Rex in all Countries, and ruling the whole? whereby, by the count of the years, it is to be thought the day of the Lords coming not to be far off.

The rule and domination of the Bishops in the Jews Common-wealth, and our Prelates compared.

Furthermore, in those later years of the Jews Kingdom, what troubles and afflictions that people sustained 300 years together, but chiefly, the last 166 years before the coming of Christ, by Antiochus and his fellows, the History of the Macchabees can report. Wherein we have also notoriously to understand the miserable vexations and persecutions of Christian Churches in these later ends of the World by Antichrist. For by Antiochus Antichrist (no doubt) is figured and represented. This Antiochus surnamed Magnus, and Antiochus Epiphanes his Son, came of the Stock of Selenchies Nicanor; much like as the Mahumets, the Turk, and Solymannus came of the stock of Ottomannus. Wherein this is to be noted and pondered, That like as of the said Selencus issued Twelve Syrian Kings one after another of that generation, which reigned over the Israelites with much severity and tyranny; so of this Devilish Generation of Ottomannus have come Twelve Turkish Tyrants, whereof this Solyman is now the twelfth; God grant he may be the last. And Antiochus beareth a figure of Antichrist.

The Family of Antiochus.

The Family of the Turks.

as the two laſt Antiochi, being Sons of the two Brethren, did fight together for the Kingdom, and in fighting were both ſlain, and ſhortly after the Kingdom fell to the Romans; ſo the Lord grant for Chriſts ſake, that the bloudy brood of this old Solyman, (which has reigned now ſix and forty years) may ſo fight together, and periſh in their own bloud, that the bloudy tyranny of theirs may come to a final end for ever, Amen.

And that the truth hereof may the better appear to ſuch as be diſpoſed to meditate more upon the matter, I thought good and profitable for the Reader, to ſet before his eyes, in Table-wiſe the Catalogue of both theſe Antichriſtian Families, with the names and ſucceſſion of the perſons, firſt of the Twelve Syrian Kings, then of the Twelve Ottomanni, in like number and order.

X. Bajazetes 2. He warred againſt his Brother Demes, which Demes was afterward poyſoned by Pope Alexander 6th. 33

XI. Zelymus, He poyſoned Bajazetes his Father, and his two Brethren Acomates and Corcutus, with all their Children, his own Couſins. 7

XII. Solymannus, He ſlew Muſtaphas his own Son, and was alſo the death of Gianger his ſecond Son. 46

Theſe two peſtilent Families and Generations, riſing out (doubtleſs) from the bottomleſs Pit, to plague the people of God, as in number of ſucceſſion they do not much differ; ſo in manner of their doings and wicked abominations they be as near agreeing, being both enemies alike to the People and Church of Chriſt, both murtherers and parricides of their own Brethren and Kindred, both blaſphemers of God, and troublers of the whole World. Wherein we have all to learn and note, by the way, the terrible anger of Almighty God againſt ſin, and wickedneſs of men.

Furthermore, who ſo is diſpoſed to conſider and caſt the courſe of times, and to mark how things be diſpoſed by the marvellous operation of Gods Providence, ſhall find the times alſo of theſe two adverſaries in much like ſort to concur and agree. For in conſidering with our ſelves both the Teſtaments and Churches of God, the firſt of the Jews, the ſecond of the Chriſtians; look what time had the Syrian Kings to rage then in Jeruſalem, the ſame proportion of time hath now the tyranny of the Turks to murther the Chriſtians; ſo that the one Antichriſt may well repreſent and prefigure the other. For as by the Book of Maccabees may appear, Antiochus Epiphanes was about the 191 year before the Paſſion of our Saviour, and day of our Redemption; ſo now calling the ſame number from this preſent year backward, we ſhall find it to be about the ſame year and time, when Bajazetes, the fourth Turk after Ottoman, began to remove his Imperial ſeat from Burſa in Bithynia to Adrianople in Europe, which is a City of Thracia. In which year and time began all the miſchief in Europe, as is to be ſeen before, and this was the year of our Lord 1375. Unto the which year if we add 191. it maketh 1566. according to the Prophecy of the Apocalyps, Chapter 20. where it is prophecied of Gog and Magog, that they ſhall compaſs about the Tents of the Saints, and the welbeloved City, by the which welbeloved City is meant (no doubt) Europa; and this was in the year aboveſaid 1375. Although touching the preciſe points of years and times, it is not for us greatly to be requiſite therein; but yet where diligence and ſtudious meditation may help to knowledge, I would not with negligence to be a pretence to ignorance. And thus much for the times of Antiochus and his fellows.

The time of Antichriſt examined by Prophecies.

One Antichriſt prefigured another.

Apoc. 20.

Now what cruelty this Antiochus exerciſed againſt the people of God, it is manifeſt in the Hiſtory of the Maccabees; where we read that this Antiochus in the 8th year of his Reign, in his ſecond coming to Jeruſalem, firſt gave forth in commandment, that all the Jews ſhould relinquith the Law of Moſes, and worſhip the Idol of Jupiter Olympius, which he ſet up in the Temple of Jeruſalem. The Books of Moſes and of the Prophets he burned. He ſet Garriſons of Soldiers to ward the Idol. In the City of Jeruſalem he cauſed the Feaſts and Revels of Bacchus to be kept, full of all filth and wickedneſs. Old Men Women and Virgins, ſuch as would not leave the Law of Moſes, with cruel torments he murthered. The Mothers that would not circumciſe their Children, he ſlew. The Children that were circumciſed he hanged up by the necks. The Temple he ſpoiled and waſted. The Altar of God, and Candleſtick of Gold, with the other ornaments and Furniture of the Temple, partly he caſt out, partly he carried away. Contrary to the Law of God he cauſed them to offer and to eat Swines fleſh. Great murther and ſlaughter he made of the people, cauſing them either to leave their law, or to loſe their lives. Among whom, beſides many other, with cruel torments, he put to death a godly Mother with her ſeven Sons, ſending his cruel Proclamations through the whole Land, that whoſoever kept the obſervances of the Sabbath, and other Rites of the Law, and refuſed to condeſcend to his abominations, ſhould be executed. By reaſon whereof the City of Jeruſalem was left void and deſolate of all good men, but there was a great number that were contented to follow and obey his idolatrous proceedings, and to flatter with the King, and became enemies unto their Brethren. Briefly, no kind of calamity, nor face of miſery could be ſhewed in any place, which was not there ſeen. Of the tyranny of this Antiochus it is hiſtoried at large in the Book of Maccabees; and Daniel prophecying before of the ſame, declareth that the people of the Jews deſerved no leſs for their ſins and tranſgreſſions.

{KING 1. Mac. 1. Hiſt. 7. Dan. 9.}

Antiochus a figure of the Turk.

By conſent of all Writers, this Antiochus beareth a figure of the great Antichriſt, which was to follow in the later end of the World, and is already come, and worketh what he can againſt us. Although, as Saint John ſaith, there have been, and be many Antichriſts, as parts and members of the body of Antichriſt, which are Forerunners; yet to ſpeak of the head and principal Antichriſt, and great enemy of Chriſts Church, he is come in the later end of the world, at what time ſhall be ſuch tribulation as never was ſeen before; whereby is meant (no doubt) the Turk, prefigured by this Antiochus. By this Antichriſt I do alſo mean all ſuch, which following the ſame Doctrine of the Turks, think to be ſaved by their works and demerits, and not by their Faith only in the Son of God, of what title and profeſſion elſe ſoever they be; eſpecially if they uſe the like force and violence for the ſame, as he doth, &c.

Ex Lyra in Gloſſ. ordin. c. 1 Macch.

The name of Antichriſt, what it containeth.

Of the tyranny of this Antiochus aforeſaid, and of the tribulations of the Church in the later times, both of the Jews Church, and alſo of the Chriſtian Church to come, let us hear and conſider the words of Daniel in the 11th Chapter, and alſo in his 7th Chapter, prophecying of the ſame as followeth:

Dan. 11. He ſhall return and fret againſt the holy Covenant; ſo ſhall he do, he ſhall even return and have intelligence with them that forſake the holy Covenant. And arms ſhall ſtand on his part, and they ſhall pollute the Sanctuary of ſtrength, and ſhall take away the daily Sacrifice, and they ſhall ſet up the abominable deſolation. And ſuch as wickedly break the Covenant ſhall flatter with him deceitfully; but the people that do know their God ſhall prevail and proſper. And they that underſtand among the people ſhall inſtruct many; yet they ſhall fall by ſword and by flame, by captivity and by ſpoil many days.

Now when they ſhall fall they ſhall be holpen with a little help, but many ſhall cleave unto them feignedly. And ſome of them of underſtanding ſhall fall to be tried, and to be purged, and to make them white, till the time be out; for there is a time appointed. And the King ſhall do what him liſt; he ſhall exalt himſelf, and magnifie himſelf againſt all that is God, and ſhall ſpeak marvellous things againſt the God of Gods, and ſhall proſper till the wrath be accompliſhed, for the determination is made. Neither ſhall he reguard the God of his Fathers, nor the deſires of women, nor care for any God; for he ſhall magnifie himſelf above all. But in his place ſhall he honour the God Mauzzim, and the God whom his Fathers knew not, ſhall he honour with gold and with ſilver, and with precious ſtones, and pleaſant things.

Thus ſhall he do in the holds of Mauzzim with a ſtrange God, whom he ſhall acknowledge; he ſhall increaſe his glory, and ſhall cauſe them to rule over many, and ſhall divide the land for gain. And at the end of time ſhall the King of the South puſh at him, and the King of the North ſhall come againſt him like a whirlwind, with Chariots, and with Horſemen, and with many Ships, and he ſhall enter into the Countrys, and ſhall overflow and paſs through. He ſhall enter alſo into a pleaſant land, and many Countries ſhall be overthrown; but theſe ſhall eſcape out of his hand, even Edom and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon. He ſhall ſtretch forth his hands alſo upon the Countrys, and the land of Egypt ſhall not eſcape, but he ſhall have power over the treaſures of gold and of ſilver, and over all the precious things of Egypt, and of the Lybians, and of the black Moors where he ſhall paſs. But he tidings out of the Eaſt and the North ſhall trouble him; and therefore he ſhall go forth with great wrath to deſtroy and root out many. And he ſhall plant the Tabernacles of his Palace between the Seas in the glorious and holy Mountain, yet he ſhall come to his end, and none ſhall help him.

To this place of Daniel above prefaced, might alſo be added the Prophecy of the ſaid Daniel written in the 7th Chapter, and much tending to the like effect; where he entreating of his Viſion of four Beaſts (which ſignifie the four Monarchies) and ſpeaking now of the fourth Monarchy, hath theſe words: Dan. 7.

After this, I ſaw in the viſions by night, and behold the fourth beaſt was grim and horrible, and marvellous ſtrong. It had great iron teeth; it devoured, and brake in pieces, and ſtamped the reſidue under his feet; and it was unlike the other Beaſts that were before it, for it had ten horns. As I conſidered the horns, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the firſt horns plucked away. And behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth ſpeaking proſumptuous things, and ſeemed more ſtout than the other. Which horn alſo (when I looked on) made battel with the Saints, and prevailed againſt them; until the old aged came, and judgment was given to the Saints of the higheſt, and till the appointed time was come, that the Saints ſhould have the Kingdom.

Thus have you heard the plain words of Daniel. In the which as he doth manifeſtly deſcribe the coming of Antichriſt the great adverſary, toward the later end of the Jews; ſo by the ſame Antiochus is figured alſo to us the great adverſary of Chriſt, which is the Turk.

Although ſome there be notwithſtanding, which with great learning and judgment do apply this place of Daniel above recited, not to the Turk, but rather to the Pope, and that for ſix or ſeven ſpecial cauſes herein touched and noted. Vide Rodul. Gualt. de Antichriſto.

The firſt is this, That the wicked tranſgreſſors of the Covenant ſhall joyn with him deceitfully and hypocritically, which ſhall pollute the Tabernacle of ſtrength, and take away the perpetual ſacrifice, and bring in the abomination of deſolation. The firſt note.

The ſecond note is, that the Prophet declareth, how the learned among the people ſhall teach many, and that they ſhall fall upon the ſword, into fire and captivity, and ſhall be baniſhed, whereby they ſhall be tryed, choſen, and made bright and pure, &c. All which (ſay they) is not among the Turks to be ſeen, but only in the Popes Church; where the faithful preachers and teachers of the people are ſlain and burned, and go to wrack, &c. Where likewiſe it followeth, that they ſhall be holpen againſt Antichriſt, and that many falſe brethren ſhould joyn unto them diſſemblingly, &c. To this they alledge, that the Chriſtians have no ſuch help againſt the Turk, whereunto ſuch falſe brethren ſhould joyn themſelves, as is and hath been commonly ſeen among the Chriſtians againſt the Pope, from time to time, almoſt in all Countries; as in Germany by the Proteſtants, and free Cities; in England in King Henry's time by the Lord Cromwel, and afterward by King Edward, and now by Queen Elizabeth; in Scotland by the godly Nobility; in France, by the Queen of Navar and her Son; and alſo by the Prince of Condy and the worthy Admiral, and his two brethren, and many others; in Flanders, by them whom the Regent called Beggers; ſo as was in the time of the Macchabees, againſt Antiochus. The 2d note. Helps of the Chriſtians againſt the Pope.

Thirdly, That the King ſhall exalt himſelf above all that hath the name of God, and ſhall lift up his mouth to ſpeak preſumptuouſly againſt God. The 3d note.

Fourthly, That he careth not for the deſires of women; which may ſeem to note how the Popes Doctrine ſhall forbid the honeſt and lawful marriage in Church-men. The 4th note.

The fifth ſpecialty which they apply to the Pope, is that which followeth in the Prophet ſaying, Neither ſhall he regard the God of his Fathers, nor any God; but Mauzzim inſtead of him ſhall ſet up his God Mauzzim, and ſhall worſ- The 5th note. the Popes God.

worship him with silver and gold, and precious stone, &c. which they do apply to the Pope, setting up his God of bread, and worshipping him with glittering golden ornaments, and most solemn service.

The sixth Note.

Sixthly, It followeth, and he shall increase them with much glory and riches, and shall divide unto them lands and possessions, &c. meaning that the Pope having dominion over treasures of gold and silver, and all precious things of the land, shall indue his Cardinals, Prelates, his flattering Doctors, with Friers Monks and Priests, and all such as shall take his part, with great priviledges, liberties, revenues and possessions. And thus I say, some there be which apply this Prophecy of the seventh and eleventh Chapters of Daniel unto the Bishop of Rome. Whom although I take to be an extream Persecutor of Christs Church; yet I judge rather those two Chapters of Daniel concerning the little horn in the middle of the ten horns, and the great destroyer of the pleasant Land and glorious holy Mountain, to mean first Antiochus, and by him secondly to mean the great Antichrist, the Turk; who hath now set already the Tabernacles of his Palace between the Seas, according to the Prophecies of Daniel, as is above-said.

The seventh and 11th. Chapters of Daniel mean the great Anti-christ, the Turk.

Ezek. chap. 38. 39. Gog and Magog.

Over and besides these Prophecies above alledged, there may be added also the Prophecy of Ezekiel, cap. 39. speaking of Gog and Magog; which as it may be applied to the oppression of the Jews under the heathen multitude, which stopped the building of the City, and under the Syrian Kings, &c. yet in the same also are expressed the calamities and afflictions of Christs Church in these later times, under the Saracens and the Turks, &c.

The Prophesies of the New Testament concerning the Turk. 2 Thess. 2.

Proceeding further in this matter, let us come now to the Prophesies of the New Testament, and mark the words of St. Paul, writing to the Thessalonians, which then were Christened, and now either are Turkish, or under the Turk, which words be these, Be ye not suddenly moved in your mind, nor troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as sent from us, as though the day of Christ were at hand. Let no man deceive you by any means, for the Lord will not come before there come a defection, or a departing first, and that wicked man be revealed, the son of perdition, which is an adversary, and is extolled above all power, and that which is called God; so that he shall sit in the Temple of God, boasting himself to be God, &c. Although this defection and departing may have a double understanding, as well of the Popes fect (which is gone and departed from the free justification by faith only in Christ through the promise of Grace) as of the Turks; yet leaving a while to speak of the Pope, because it appeareth more notoriously in the Turk, we will chiefly apply it to him; in whom so apply it doth agree, that unless this great defection from faith in so many Churches had hapned by the Turk, it had been hard to understand the Apostles mind, which now by the History of these Turks is eatie and evident to be known, considering what a ruin hath hapned to the Church of Christ by these miserable Turks, what Empires, Nations, Kingdoms, Countries, Towns and Cities be removed from the Name and profession of Christ, how many thousands, and infinite multitudes of Christian men and children, in Asia, in Africk, and in Europe, are carried away from Christs Church to Mahumets Religion, some to serve for the Turks Guard among the Janizaries, some for Soldiers, some for Miners, some for Gunners, to fight and war against the Christians; so that the most part of all the Churches, planted once by the Apostles, are now degenerated into Turks, only a small handful of Christians reserved yet in these West parts of Europe, of the which small residue what shall also become shortly, except Christ himself do help, Christ only himself doth know. How great this defection hath been, spoken of by St. Paul, thou mayest see (gentle Reader) in the Table above described.

The defection in time of Anti-christ declared.

Vide supra.

Notwithstanding this Text of the holy Apostle (as I aforesaid) may be verified also with no less reason upon the Bishop of Rome, than upon the Turk, but for that he is a man of sin, that is, his seat and City is a great maintainer of wickedness, and also for that he is an adversary, that is, contrary in all his doings and proceedings to Christ.

The place of Saint Paul, a Text applied to the Pope.

Thirdly, For that he sitteth in the Temple of God, and so did not Mahumet.

Fourthly, Because he is an exalter of himself, and sitteth more like a god than a man in Rome, whereof see more in the Book set forth in English, called, The Contestations of the Popes.

{KING Hen. 7.}

Fifthly, For that he seduceth, and hath seduced by his Apostatie the most part of all Christendom from the Doctrine and free promises of God, into a wrong and strange way of salvation, which is not to be justified freely before God only by our Faith in Christ his well beloved Son, (unto the which Faith the promise of God freely and graciously hath annexed all our salvation only, and to no other thing) but hath taught us to work our salvation by an infinite number of other things. Insomuch that he bindeth the necessity of our salvation also to this, that we must believe (if we will be saved) and receive him to be the Vicar of Christ in earth, &c.

Ex Bonifacio Carrensy.

But to return again unto the Turks, among all the Prophecies both of the Old Testament and of the New, there is none that painteth out the Antichristian Kingdom of the Turks, better than doth the Revelation of Saint John, whose words let us weigh and consider. Who in the Apocalyps, 9. where he speaketh of opening the Seventh and last Seal, (which signifieth the last age of the world) and there writing of the Seven Trumpets of the Seven Angels, at the sounding of the Sixth Angel saith, Loose the four Angels which are bound in the great River Euphrates. And the four Angels were loosed, which were ready both day, and hour, and month, and year, to slay the third part of men. And the number of Horsemen were twenty thousand times ten thousand: and I heard the number of them. And thus I saw in a vision horses, and them that sat on them, having fiery Habergions, and of Jacinth-stone, and of Brimstone, and the heads of the horses were as the heads of Lions, and out of their mouths went forth fire, and smoke, and brimstone; of these three plagues was the third part of men killed, that is, of the fire, smoke, and brimstone, which proceeded out of their mouths, &c.

Apoc. 9.

By the Seventh Seal is meant the seventh and last Age of the World, which last Age of the World is from Christ to the Judgment and Resurrection of the Dead.

The Seven Trumpets of the Seven Angels in the Apocalyps expounded.

By the Seven Angels with their Seven Trumpets is signified the Seven Plagues that come in this seventh and last Age of the World.

By the Sixth Trumpet of the sixth Angel is meant the sixth Plague coming last and next before the Plague of the great Judgment-day, which sixth Plague is here described to come by the East Kings, that is, by the Turks, as followeth to be seen.

The sixth Trumpet.

Loosing of the Angels upon the river Euphrates.

By loosing the Angels which had rule of the great River Euphrates, is signified the letting out of the East Kings, that is, the Turks out of Scythia, Tartaria, Persia, and out of Arabia, by whom the third part of Christendom shall be destroyed, as we see it this day hath come to pass.

Apoc. 9.

It followeth in the Prophecy, Their power shall be in their mouths, and in their tayls. For their tayls shall be like Serpents, having heads, and with them they hurt, &c. Meaning that these Turks with the words of their mouths shall threaten great destruction of fire and sword, to them that will not yield unto them, and in the end, when the Christians shall yield unto them, trusting to their promises, they like Serpents shall deceive them in the end, and kill them, as appeareth by the story of the Turks above past.

Ex Bonifac. 8. Extra. de Majorit. & obed.

The second reason. {Anno 1553}

The Four Beasts in the Apocal. meant the four Monarchies.

Apoc. 16

The like Prophecy also, after the like words and sense, is to be seen and read in the fifteenth Chapter of the Apocalyps, where Saint John entreating of seven Cups filled with the wrath of the Living God, given to the hands of seven Angels, by one of the four Beasts (that is, in the time of one of the four Monarchies, which was the Monarchy of Rome) speaketh likewise of the sixth Angel, which poured his vial of Gods wrath upon the great River Euphrates, and the waters thereof dried up, that the way of the Kings of the East should be prepared, &c.

By the sixth Angel with the sixth Vial is meant, as before the last Plague save one that shall come upon the Christians. By the Kings of the East are meant the Saracens,

{KING Hen. 7.}

Saracens, and twelve Ottoman Turks. By drying up the River of Euphrates, is signified the way of these Turks to be prepared by the Lords appointment, to come out of the East to the West parts of the World, to molest and afflict the Christians. It followeth more in the Text. And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs, come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet, for they are the spirits of devils, doing wonders, to go unto the Kings of the whole earth, to assemble and gather them together to the battel against the day of the great God omnipotent, &c. And it followeth shortly after, And he assembled them together into a place which is called in Hebrew Armagedon, that is, a trap or train of destruction. And immediately it followeth in the same place, And the seventh Angel poured out his Vial in the air, and a mighty voice came from Heaven, out of the Throne, saying, factum est, it is done or finished, &c. Whereby it is to be understood, that toward the last consummation of the World great force shall be seen, and a mighty Army of the enemies shall be collected and gathered against the People and Saints of the highest, and then cometh the consummation, with factum est, &c.

The Kings of the East, Loyling up of Euphrates. Isaiah.

Apoc. 9.

Wherefore it is not for nought that the holy Spirit of God in the same place, a little before the sixth Angel doth pour out his Vial, doth exhort all the faithful saying, Behold, I come like a thief in the night. Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and men see his filthiness, &c.

Idem. An exhortation of the Holy Ghost to the faithful.

Nicholas de Lyra, and Paulus Bishop of Burdens, and Matthias Dorinke writing upon the 13th Chapter of the Apocalyps, and expounding the mystery of the second Beast rising out of the earth, having the horns of a Lamb, &c. do apply the same to Mahumet and the Turks, with a solemn Declaration made upon the same. Which interpretation of theirs, although in some points it may seem to have some appearance of probability, neither can it be denied but that Mahumet and the Turk be pestilent and picked enemies of Christ our Lord, and most bitter Persecutors of his Church; yet as touching the proper and natural meaning of the Apostle in that place, speaking of the false Lamb, &c. it we consider well all the circumstances of that Beast, and mark the consequence of the Text, both of that which goth before and followeth after, we must needs grant, that Nicholas de Lyra with his fellows, and with all such like of the Popes School that follow that School, be deceived, and that the description and interpretation of that false horned Lamb must necessarily be applied only to the Bishop of Rome, and none other, which is to be proved by six principal causes or arguments.

Apoc. 13. The Prophecy of Apoc. 13. discussed.

The Beast having horns like the Lamb, must needs mean the Pope.

The first reason.

The first is, for that this Beast is described to bear the horns of a Lamb; By the which Lamb no doubt, is meant Christ. By the horns of the Lamb is signified the outward shew or resemblance of Christ our Saviour; which shew or resemblance can have no relation to Mahumet, for that he taketh himself to be above Christ, and Christ as an excellent Prophet of God sitting at his feet. Wherefore seeing Mahumet cometh neither as equal to Christ, nor as Vicar under Christ, this Prophecy cannot agree to him, but only to him which openly in plain words protesteth, that all Christs Lambs and Sheep not singularly, but universally through the whole world, are committed to him as Vicar of Christ, and successor of Peter, and that all men must confess the same of necessity, or else they are none of Christs flocp, &c. Wherein it is safie to see where the pretensed horns of the Lamb do grow.

The second Argument, And he spake like the Dragon, &c. A Lambs Horns and the Mouth of a Dragon do not agree together. And as they do not agree together in nature, so neither can they be found in any person, either Turk or other (if we judge truly) so lively, as in the Bishop of Rome. When thou heareth him call himself The Apostolical Bishop, The Vicar of Christ, The Successor of Peter, The Servant of Gods Servants, &c. Thou seest in him the two Horns of a Lamb, and wouldst think him to be a Lamb in deed, and such a one as would wash your feet for humility; but hear him speak, and you shall find him a Dragon. See and read the Epistle of Pope Martin the Fifth above mentioned, charging, commanding, and threatning Emperors, Kings, Dukes, Princes, Marquesses, Earls, Barons, Knights, Rectors, Consuls, Proconsuls with their Shires, Counties and Universities of their Kingdoms, Provinces, Cities, Towns, Castles, Villages, and other places. See the answer of Pope Urban the second, and his message to King William Rufus. Behold the works and doings of Pope Innocent against King John.

Vide supra.

The Pope hath the horns of a Lamb, but the mouth of a Dragon.

Note also the answer of another Pope to the King of England, which for the price of the Kings Head would not grant unto him the investing of his Bishops. Mark well the words and doings of Pope Hildebrand against the Emperor Henry the fourth; also of Pope Alexander the second, trading upon the neck of Fredericus Barbarossa, not to make a Lamb treading upon a Dragon, but like a Dragon treading upon a Lamb; so that his own Verse might be turned upon himself, Tanquam aspis & basiliscus super oviculum ambulans, & tanquam Leo & draco conculcans agnum. Confider moreover the behaviour, manner, condition, and property almoft of all the Popes which have been these fix hundred years, and what Dragon or Serpent could be more viperous than their own doings and words can speak and give teftimony againft themtelves.

The third reason.

It followeth moreover in the fame Prophecy of the Apocalyps for the third Argument, And he doth all the power of the first Beast presently before his face, and causeth the earth, and all the inhabitants therein, to honour the first Beast, the stripe of whose deadly wound was cured. &c.

This two deaths in the 13th chap. of the Apocalyps expounded.

In this Prophecy two things are to be noted; firft, what the firft Beaft is, whofe power the fecond Beaft doth execute. Secondly, what this fecond Beaft is which fo doth exercife his power in his tight. The firft of thefe Beafts in the Apocalyps defcribed, having feven heads and ten horns, muft needs fignifie the City of Rome, which may eafily be proved by two demonftrations. Firft, by the expofition of the 17 Chapter of the fame Apocalyps, where is declared and defcribed the faid Beaft to ftand of feven Hills, and to contain ten Kings, having the whole power of the Dragon given; and alfo the fame City to be named The Whore of Babylon, drunken with the bloud of the Saints. All which properties joyned together, can agree in no wife but only to the Heathen Empire of Rome, which City at that time of writing thefe Prophecies had the government of the whole world. The fecond demonftration or evidence may be reduced out of the Months affigned to this Beaft, Apoc. 13. For fo it is written, that this Beaft had power to make, that is, to work his malice againft Chrifts people forty two months, which months counted by Sabbaths of years, (that is, every month for feven years) maketh up the juft number of thofe years, in which the Primitive Church was under the terrible Perfecutions of the Heathen Emperors of Rome, as is afore fpecified.

A defcription of the City and Monarchy of Rome.

The defcription of the Beaft with the 2 Horns of the Lamb, Apoc. 13.

Which thing thus ftanding, proved and confeffed, that the firft Beaft muft needs fignifie the Empire and City of Rome, then muft it neceffarily follow that the fecond Beaft with the Lambs Horns, muft fignifie the Bifhop and Pope of the fame City of Rome. The reafon whereof is evident and apparent by that which followeth in the Prophecy, where it is declared, that the fecond Beaft, having two Horns of a Lamb, received and exercifed all the power of the firft Beaft, before or in the fight of the faid Beaft, which cannot be verified either in the Turks or in any other, but only in the Pope of Rome, who (as you fee) receiveth, ufurpeth and deriveth to himfelf all the power of that City and Monarchy of Rome; infomuch that he faith, that when Conftantine or Ludovicus yielded unto him the rule and Kingdom of that City, he gave him but his own, and that which of right and duty belonged to him before.

The Pope having all the rule and power of Rome.

And this authority or power over all the Empire of Rome he worketh not in Afia, or in Conftantinople as the Turk doth, but in the fight of the Beaft which gave him the power, that is, in the City of Rome it felf, which is the firft Beaft here in this Prophecy of the Apocalyps defcribed.

The fourth reason.

Fourthly, It followeth more, And he caufeth the earth, and all the inhabitants therein, to worfhip and honour the firft Beaft, which had a deadly wound, and was cured, &c. The interpretation of this part, as alfo of all the other parts of the same Chapter, standeth upon the definition of the first Beast; for it being granted, as cannot be denied, that the first Beast signifieth the City and Empire of Rome; it must consequently follow, that the Bishop (whom we call the Pope), of the said City of Rome, must be understood by the second Beast, forsomuch as neither Turk nor any other, but only the Bishop of Rome hath holden up the estimation and dignity of that City, which began to be in ruine and decay by the Vandalians, Gothi, Herulians and Lombards, about the year of our Lord 456, but afterward by the Bishop of Rome the pristine state and honour of that City revived again, and flourished in as great veneration as ever it did before. And that is it which the Holy Ghost seemeth here to mean of the first Beast, saying, That he had a wound of the Beast, and was cured. For lo it followeth.

The 5th reason.

Fifthly, And he caused all the inhabitants of the earth to make the image of the beast, which had the stripe of the sword and lived. And it was given to him to give life to the image of the beast, and to make the image thereof to speak, and to cause all them that worshipped not the image of the beast, to be killed; forcing all persons, both little and great, rich and poor, bond and free, to take the mark of the beast in their right hand, and in their foreheads, and that none might buy or sell, but they which had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name, &c.

Rome almost dead.

By giving life to the image of the beast, and making it to speak, is to be presupposed that the beast was at a near point of death, and lay speechless before, insomuch that the City of Rome began to lose and change his name, and was called a while Odacria, of Odacer King of the Herulians, which by dint of sword surprised the Romans; and yet notwithstanding, by the means of this Roman Prelate, the said City of Rome, which was then ready to give up the ghost, recovered his majesty and strength again, that it is hard to say, whether Rome did ever ruffle and rage in his tyranny before, in the time of Nero, Domitian, Diocletian, and other Emperors more tragically, than it hath done under the Pope; or whether that Rome had all Kings, Queens Princes, Dukes, Lords, and all subjects more under obedience and subjection, when the Emperors reigned, or now in the reign of the Pope. And therefore it is said not without cause of the Holy Ghost, That it is given to him, to give life and speech to the image of the beast, causing all them to be slain which would not worship the image of the beast, &c. As for example hereof, who seeth not what numbers and multitudes of Christian Men, Women and Children in all Countries hath been put to fire and sword? Stories of all times will declare, what havock hath been made of Christian bloud about the pretheminence and majority of the See of Rome; what Churches and Countries, both Greeks and Latines, have been excommunicated; what Kings have been depofed, and Emperors stripped from their Imperial Seat, and all becaufe they would not stoop and bend to the Image of the Beast, that is, to the Majesty and Title of Rome, advanced up so highly now by the Bishop thereof, as it was never higher before in the Reign of Nero or Diocletian. Wherefore taking the first Beast to signifie the Empire of Rome, which cannot be denied, it is plain, that the second Beast must necessarily be applied to the Pope and not to the Turk, forasmuch as the Turk seeketh nothing less than the advancement of that Empire, but rather striveth against it to pluck it down.

To give life to the Image of the beast.

The Image of Rome speaketh again as cruelly as ever it did.

Et faciet ut occidat quicunque adorauerit imaginem bestiæ. Apoc. 13.

The 6th reason. The number of the name of the Beast difcussed. 666.

a. The number of 7 thousand letters in Greek, wanteth a the full number of 666.

The fixth and last argument is grounded upon the number of the name of the Beast, expreft by the Holy Ghoft in the same Prophefie, by the Letters χξϛ. In which letters, although there lieth great darknefs and difficulty to be underftood, yet certain ancient Fathers which were Difciples and hearers of them which heard St. John himfelf, as Irenæus and other, do expound the faid Letters conjecturally, to contain the name of the Beast, and to be the name of a man under this word ΛΑΤΙΝΟΣ: Whereas elfe, no other name lightly of any perfon, either in Greek or Latine, will agree to the fame, fave only the forefaid named time, will agree to the fame, fave only the forefaid named ΛΑΤΙΝΟΣ. Although fome later Writers, giving their conjectures upon the fame, do find the name of Lateranus in Hebrew Letters to anfwer to the fame number. Some feign other names, as ἀντεμῶ or τῶτων, made words, which fignifie nothing, as Diclus, or Ludnuic, by Roman Letters, &c. But of all names properly fignifying any man, none cometh fo near to the number of this Myftery, (if it go by order of Letters (as doth the word ΛΑΤΙΝΟΣ aforefaid. And thus much by the way, and occafion of Nicholaus de Lyra, Paulus Burgen, Matthias Dorinkus, the Author of Fortalilium fidei, and other Commentaries more of the fame Faction; who writing upon this thirteenth Chapter of the Apocalyps, and not confidering the circumftances thereof, both are deceived themfelves, and deceive many other, applying that to the Turk, which cannot otherwife be verified, but only upon the Pope, as may appear fufficiently by the premifes. Not that I write this of any mood or malice, either to the City of Rome, or to the perfon of the Bifhop as being Gods creature; but being occafioned here to entreat of the Prophecies againft the Turks, I would with the Readers not to be deceived, but rightly to underftand the fimple Scriptures according as they lie, to the intent that the true meaning thereof, being bolted out, it may be the better known what Prophecies directly make againft thefe Turks, what otherwife.

{KING 1 Hist. 7.} {KING 1 Hist. 7.} Nichol. de Lyra, and other Popish Writers, deceived in the 13th Chapter of Apoc.

In the which Prophecies againft the Turks, now to proceed, let us come to the 20th Chapter of the Apocalyps, wherein the holy Scripture feemeth plainly and directly to notifie the faid Turks. The words of the Prophecy be thefe.

And I saw an Angel descending from Heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand; and he took the Dragon, the old Serpent, which is the Devil and Satanas, and bound him up for a thousand years, and cast him into the pit, and sealed him up, that he should not seduce the people any more, till the thousand years were expired; and after that he must be let loose for a little while, &c. Apoc. 20.

And it followeth after, And when the thousand years shall be compleat, Satanas shall be let out of his dungeon, and shall go abroad to seduce the people, which are on the four corners of the land of Gog and Magog, to assemble them to battel, whose number is like to the sands of the Sea. And they went up upon the latitude or breadth of the earth, and compassed about the tents of the Saints, and the welbeloved Cities, &c.

To the perfect underftanding of this Prophecy, three things are neceffary to be known. Firft, what is meant by binding up, and looting out of Satan as the old Dragon. Secondly, at what time and year firft he was chained up and fealed for a thoufand years. Thirdly, at what year and time thefe thoufand years did end, when as he fhould be looled out again for a little feafon. Which three points being well examined and marked, the Prophecy may eafily be underftood directly to be meant of the Turk. Albeit Anagogically fome part thereof may alfo be referred not unproperly unto the Pope, as is above notified.

The binding and loosing out of Satan explained by things to be noted in this Prophecy.

What is meant by binding up of Satan.

Firft, by binding and looling of Satanas feemeth to be meant the ceafing and ftaying of the cruel and horrible Perfecution of the Heathen Emperors of Rome againft the true Chriftians, as is to be feen in The Ten firft Perfecutions in the Primitive Church above defcribed in the former part of thefe Acts and Monuments, in the which moft bloudy Perfecutions, Satanas the Devil then raged without all meafure, till the time it pleafed Almighty God to ftop this old Serpent, and to tie him fhorter. And thus have you to underftand what is meant by the binding up of Satan for a thoufand years; whereby is fignified, that the Perfecution againft the Chriftians ftirred up by the Beaft (that is, in the Empire of Rome, through the inftigation of Satan) fhall not always continue, but fhall break up after a certain time, and fhall ceafe for a thoufand years, &c.

The time of binding up of Satan.

Now at what time and year this Perfecution, that is, the fury and rage of Satan fhould ceafe, is alfo declared in the Apocalyps before; where in the 11 and 13 Chapters we read, that the Beaft aforen mentioned fhall have power to work his malice and mifchief the fpace of 42 months, and no more, and then that Satan fhould be locked up for a thoufand years. The computation of which months, being counted by Sabbaths of years (after the example of the fixty nine Weeks of Daniel, Chapter 11.) it doth bring us to the juft year and time, when that terrible Perfecution in the Primitive Church fhould end, and fo it did.

{KING 1 Hist. 7.} did. For, give to every month a Sabbath of years, that is, reckon every month for feven years, and that maketh 294 years, which was the full time between the eighteenth year of Tiberius, (under whom Chrift fuffered) and the death of Maxentius the laft Perfecutor of the Primitive Church in Europe, fubdued by Conftantinus, as may appear by the calculating the years, months and days between the faid year of the Reign of Tiberius, and the later end of Maxentius; and fo have you the fupputation of the year and time when Satan was firft bound up, after he had raged in the Primitive Church two and forty months. Which months, as is faid, being counted by Sabbaths of years, after the ufual manner of the Scripture, amount to 294 years; and fo much was the full time between the Paffion of our Lord, which was in the 18th year of Tiberius, unto the laft year of Maxentius.

Supputation of years between the beginning and ceasing of the persecutions in the Primitive Church.

Vide supra.

The Pope proved to be that 2d Beast mentioned in the Apoc. 13

And here by the way cometh a note to be obferved, That forfomuch as by the number of thefe 42 months fpecified in the Apocalyps, the Empire of Rome muft neceffarily be confeffed to be the firft Beaft; therefore it muft by like neceffity follow, the Bifhop of Rome to be the fecond beaft, with the two Horns of the Lamb, for that he only hath and doth caufe the faid Empire of Rome to revive and to be magnified, and fo doth not the Turk, but rather laboureth to the contrary. Wherefore let every Chriftian man be wife, and beware betime how he taketh the mark of the Beaft, left peradventure it follow many of him, that he drink of that terrible Cup of wrath mentioned, Apoc. chap. 14.

Et hic liber an vine hæ Dei Apo. 14.

The 3d part of the Prophecy for the loosing out of Satan

Thirdly, It remaineth to be difcuffed touching the third point in this forefaid Prophefie, that as we have found out (through the help of Chrift) the year and time of Satans binding, fo we fearch out likewife the time and feafon of his loofing out, which by the teftimony of Scripture was approved to be a thoufand years after his binding up, and rightly according to the time appointed it came to paft. For if we number well by the Scripture the year of his binding up, which was from the Paffion of our Lord 294 years, and add thereto a thoufand years, it mounteth to 1294; which was the very year when Ottomannus the firft Turk began his Reign, which was the firft fpring and Wellhead of all thefe woful calamities that the Church of Chrift hath felt both in Afia, Africa and Europe, almoft thefe 300 years paft. For fo we find in Chronicles, that the Kingdom of the Turks being firft divided into four Families, Anno 1280. at length the Family of Ottomannus prevailed, and thereupon came thefe whom we now call Turks, which was about the fame time when Pope Boniface the 8th was Bifhop of Rome.

The beginning of the Turks Progress.

The time of Transubstantiation. The time of the Turks.

Where by the way, this is again to be noted, that after the decree of Tranfubftantiation was enacted in the Council of Lateran by Pope Innocent the third, the year of our Lord 1251, not long after, about the year of our Lord 1260, was ftirred up the Power and Arms of the Oguzians, and of Orthogules Father of Ottomannus, who about the year of our Lord 1294, began firft to vex the Chriftians about Pontus and Bithynia, and fo beginning his Kingdom, Anno 1300, reigned 28 years, as is afore mentioned.

Ex Lonicer. Chalcondyle lib. 1.

Mention was made before of Ezekiel prophefying againft Gog, whofe words divers Expofitors do apply againft the Turk, and are thefe, Thou fhalt come from thy place out of the North parts, thou and much people with thee, all riding upon horfes, a great and a mighty army, and thou fhalt come up againft my people of Israel as a cloud, to cover the Land. Thou fhalt be in the later days, and I will bring thee upon my land, that the Heathen may know me, when I fhall be fanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes. Thus faith the Lord God: Art not thou he, of whom I have fpoken in the old time by the hand of my fervants the Prophets of Israel, that prophefied in thofe days and years, that I would bring thee upon them? At the fame time alfo when Gog fhall come againft the Land of Israel, faith the Lord God, my wrath fhall arife in mine anger, for in mine indignation, and in the fire of my wrath have I fpoken it. Surely at that time there fhall be a great fhaking in the land of Israel, fo that the fifhes of the fea, the fowls of the heaven, the beafts of the field, and all that move and creep upon the earth, and all the men that are upon the earth fhall tremble at my prefence; the mountains fhall be overthrown; the ftars fhall fall, and every man fhall fall to the ground, &c.

The Prophecy of Ezek. 38.

The Prophecies of Methodius, Hildegardis, and other concerning the Reign and Ruine of the Turks.

Methodius Prophetius.

UNTO thefe teftimonies above excerpted out of the holy Scriptures, let us add alfo the Prophetical Revelations of Methodius, Hildegardis, Sibylla, and others. This Methodius is thought of fome to be the fame Methodius of whom Hieron and Suidas make mention; which was Bifhop firft of Olympus in Licia, then of Tyrus, and fuffered Martyrdom in the laft Perfecution of the Primitive Church under Diocleſian. Unto whom alſo Trithemius attributeth the Book entituled De quatuor noviſſimis temporibus. But that cannot be, forafmuch as the faid Methodius doth cite and alledge the Maſter of Sentences, namely, in his fecond Book, and fixth Diſtinction, which Maſter of Sentences followed more than a thoufand year after Chrift; befides certain other fabulous matters contained in the fame Book. Albeit, becauſe he fpeaketh there of many things concerning the ſtate of the Church under Antichriſt, and the Reformation of Religion, as ſeemeth rightly to come to paſs, and more is like to follow, I thought not to deſraud the Reader thereof, leaving the credit of the Author to his Arbitrement, to eſtem and judge of him as he feeth cauſe. Among divers other places of Methodius, prophecying of the later time, theſe words do follow. After that the children of Iſhmael had multiplied in their generations to an infinite and immerable multitude, in the deſart aforeſaid, they came out of the Wilderneſs of Araby, and entred into the habitable land, and fought with the Kings of the Gentiles, which were in the land of promiſe, and the land was filled with them. And after 70 Weeks, and half of their power wherewith they have ſubdued all the Kingdomſ of the Gentiles, their heart was exalted, ſeeing themſelves ſo to have prevailed, and to have conquered all things, &c. And afterward it followeth of the ſame matter in this ſort.

The Book of Methodius miſtaken.

The Propheſies of Methodius concerning the Turks.

It ſhall come to paſs that the ſaid Seed of Iſhmael ſhall iſſue out and obtain the whole World, with the Regions thereof, in the entring of Iconce, from the Land of Egypt unto Ethiopia and from the Flood Euphrates unto India; and from the River Tygris to the entring of Nabaot, the Kingdom of Jonithus, the Son of Noah; and from the North unto Rome and Illyricum, Egypt and Theſſalonica, and Albania, and ſo forth to the Sea Ponticum, which divideth the ſaid Kingdoms from Germany and France; and their yoke ſhall be double upon the necks of all Nations and Gentiles; neither ſhall there be Nation or Kingdom under Heaven, which ſhall be able to ſtand againſt them in Battel, until the number of eight weeks of years, &c.

Eight weeks of years, counting every week for a ſab. bath of years, that every day for a year, cometh to 56 years. Theſe ſtand or aſcertain of time concerning the coming of the Saracens.

* Briefly, as in a groſs ſumm, this ſhall ſuffice, to admonith the Reader touching the meaning and method of Methodius Prophecies, which Methodius, firſt deſcribing the long and tedious afflictions of Chriſts Church, maketh mention of the Seed of Iſhmael, which coming out of the parts and Deſerts of Araby, ſhall deſtroy (ſaith he) and vanquiſh the whole earth. So that the Chriſtians ſhall be given of God to the hands of the filthy Barbarians, to be ſlain, polluted, and captived; Perſia, Armenia, Cappadocia, Cilicia, Syria, Egypt, the Eaſt parts, Aſia, Spain, all Grecia, France, Germania, Agathonia, Sicilia. The Romans alſo ſhall be ſlain and put to flight: alſo the ſtands of the Seat ſhall be brought to deſolation and to captivity, and put to the ſword. The whole tribulation of the Chriſtians ſhall be without mercy or meaſure; the ranſom of Gold and Silver and other exactions intolerable, but eſpecially the dwellers of Egypt and Syria ſhall be moſt in the affliction of thoſe times: And Jeruſalem ſhall be filled with multitudes of people brought thither in captivity, from the four Winds which are under Heaven. So that Beaſts alſo, and Fowls, and Fiſh in the water, and the waters of the Sea ſhall be to them obedient. Cities and Towns, which were before full of people, ſhall be laid waſte. Women with child ſhall be ript; their children ſticked, Infants taken from their Mothers, and caſt in the Streets, and none ſhall bury them. The rulers and ſage of the People ſhall be ſlain, and thrown out to the Beaſts. Churches ſhall be ſpoiled; the Prieſts deſtroyed; Virgins deſtroired, and men compelled to sell their children, and the coming of them shall be chastisement without mercy, and with them shall go their four plagues, Captivity, Destruction, Perdition, and Desolation: with much more, which for brevity I overpass. And this affliction, saith he, shall last eight weeks. or Sabbaths of years, which I take to signifie eight hundred years, &c.

Chriſtians plagued by the Saracens.

The second state or alteration of the Christians relieved of their plagues and tribulations

Secondly, After these terrible Plagues thus described by Methodius upon the Christians, which he saith shall fall upon them for their wicked abominations recited in the first and second Chapter of Saint Paul to the Romans; the said Methodius afterward in this great distress of the Christians, being out of all hope and comfort of relief, declareth and speaketh of a certain King of the Greeks or Romans, which shall restore peace again to the Christians. In which peace they shall reedifie the Cities and Mansions again; the Priests shall be delivered from their grievances, and men at that time shall rest from their tribulations, and then shall the King of the Romans dwell in the City of Hierusalem a week or Sabbath, and a half of times, &c.

Christians abusing Gods benefits.

The third alteration by the coming of the Turks.

Thirdly, During the time of this peace the said Methodius saith, that men shall fall into licentious security, and careless life; and then according to the words of the Apostle, saying, When they shall say, Peace, peace, sudden destruction shall fall upon them: Then (saith he) shall be opened the Gates of the North, and the beastly people shall break in, which King Alexander the Great did close up within two mountains, making his prayer unto the Lord God, that he would bind up that bestial and execrable people, left with their filthy and detestable pollutions they should come out and pollute the holy Land. Whose intercession being heard, the Lord commanded them to be inclosed within two mountains in the North parts, to the deepness of twelve cubits, (which signifieth peradventure 1200 years) so that neither by witchcraft, nor by any means they could get out, or any might come unto them, until the time of the Lord appointed, which are (saith he) the later times, and then according to the Prophecy of Ezechiel, in the latter time of the consummation of the world, God and Magog out from the North shall come forth into the land of Israel, and shall work all this mischief against Christians above recited. And then (saith Methodius, proceeding in his Prophesies) shall the King of the Romans after he hath reigned in Jerusalem a Sabbath of times, and a half, that is, (saith Methodius) ten years and a half, take the Crown from his head, and yield it up to the Cross in Golgotha where Christ was crucified, and shall die. And the Cross with the Crown shall be taken into Heaven, which shall not appear again before the coming of the Lord.

The reign of Christian Kings in Hierusalem lasted 88 years. ann. 1187. By this resigning up the Crown to the Crucifix in Golgotha, is signified the ceasing of the Christians in Hierusalem till the coming of Christ. By the Tribe of Dan, and the City Coreyaim, Bethsaida, and Capernaum, to signifie Gods great vocation upon Antichrist.

Fourthly, It followeth then moreover in the Prophesies of Methodius, which declareth that when the week or Sabbath, and half week of times shall end, and when the King of Romans shall give up his Crown in Jerusalem, and die, Then immediately shall Antichrist the son of perdition begin to appear, and be born in Jewry, of the Tribe of Dan, whereof also came Judas Iscariot, and he shall be born (saith Methodius) in Chorofaim, and shall be bred in Bethsaida, and shall reign in Capernaum; to the which three Cities, Christ the Lord gave his third Vae. And when great tribulation shall encrease and multiply in the days of this Antichrist, and all Lordship and Dominion shall be destroyed, the Lord shall send his two faithful and dear servants, Enoch and Hely, to reprove and detect the false seducing and lying forgeries of this Antichrist, openly before all men; so that the people seeing themselves vainly beguiled and seduced by this son of perdition, coming out of the Temple dissemblingly, to the destruction of many, shall leave and flie from him, and join themselves to the said two holy Prophets. Which son of perdition and Antichrist seeing his proceedings so to be reproved, and brought into contempt, in his fury and anger shall kill the two Prophets of God. And then shall appear (saith Methodius) the sign of the coming of the Son of Man, and he shall come in the clouds of Heavenly glory, and shall destroy the enemy with the spirit of his mouth, &c.

The destruction of Antichrist.

INTERPRETATION.

{KING Hen. 7.}

The interpretation.

TO these Prophesies and testimonies of Methodius, what credit is to be given, I leave it to the Reader. But if the meaning of his Prophesies go by such order of times as is set and disposed in his Book; he seemeth to describe unto us four principal states and alterations of times to come.

The first state and alteration is by Mahumet and the Saracens, which be the off-spring and Sons of Ismael, coming out of Arabie in the time of Heraclius Emperor of Constantinople, Ann. 630, which rebelling against Heraclius increased and prevailed still more and more against the Christians both in Asia and Africa, and also in many places in Europe, especially in Spain and Italy.

The coming of the Saracens.

The second state and alteration he prophesieth to come by the Turk, which first coming out of the far parts of Scythia, that is, out of the North, first overcame the Saracens, subdued the Persians, and afterward joyning together with the Saracens, conquered the Kingdom of Hierusalem, about the year of our Lord 1187, then subdued Syria and most part of Asia, &c. And these be they which Methodius seemeth to mean of, speaking of the vile and miserable people cloſed up of the Lord God, at the intercession of Alexander the great Captain in the North, between two mountains the deepneſs of twelve cubits, left that filthy corrupt Nation should pollute the earth with their wickednes. Whereby are meant these Turks, which coming out from the uttermoſt parts of the North, that is, out of Scythia, and the Mountains of Caucasus, or elſe Imaus, were with-holden and kept back of Almighty God for Christs cauſe, that they might not harm his Church a long ſpace, during the time of twelve hundred years; yea, and then the ſins of the Christians ſo deſerving, they were permitted of Almighty God to break out, and to invade the Church; who now joyning together with the Saracens, have wrought and daily do work, all theſe grievances againſt our Chriſtian Brethren; as we ſee this day is come to paſs, and more is like to follow, except the hand of the Lord, which let them out, do pluck them in again.

The coming of the Turks.

Scythia juxta Caucaſum

Victory of the Christians got against the Saracens. Ex Vasco Tyreo.

The City of Hierusalem recovered by the Christians from the Saracens. Hieronymus ſaith poſſeſſed of the Chriſtians 88 years. Hieruſalem won from the Chriſtians by the Turks, Ann. 1187.

Moreover, in the mean space, between the reign of the Saracens and the Turks, where Methodius ſpeaketh of the reign of Romans, which ſhould reſtore quietneſs to the Church, and ſhould reign in Hieruſalem a Sabbath of times, and half a Sabbath; thereby ſeemeth to be underſtood the Voyage of Chriſtian Princes out of the Weſt-parts of Europe, under Gofridus Duke of Lotharing, and his two Brethren, and many other Chriſtian Princes, with 300000 Footmen, and 100000 Horſemen; who fighting againſt the Saracens, recovered again from them the City of Hieruſalem, in the year of our Lord 1099, which City before had been in their poſſeſſion the term of 490 years. After which Victory got, firſt Gofridus, then Baldwinus his Brother, and other after them, to the number of nine Chriſtian Kings reigned in Jeruſalem the ſpace of eighty eight years, and after that through the diſcord of the Chriſtians not agreeing amongſt themſelves, both Hieruſalem and Syria, with other parts of Aſia beſides, were ſubdued and won of the Turks, which to this day they keep ſtill. And this was in the year of our Lord 1187.

The neareſt of the Lords judgment.

About which year and time (as followeth in Methodius) when the City of Hieruſalem ſhall be won of the Turks, then ſhall Antichriſt begin to be born of the Tribe of Dan, of whom came Judas Iſcariot, and ſhall be born in Chorazaim, and bred in Bethſaida, and reign in Capernaum; meaning that this Antichriſt or ſon of perdition ſhall be full of Gods malediction, noted by Judas Iſcariot, and theſe three Cities againſt whom were ſpoken thrice Vae of the Lord.

The coming and marks of Antichriſt deſcribed.

And here is moreover to be noted, that Methodius ſaith not that Antichriſt ſhall be born among the Saracens or Turks, but among the people of God, and of the Tribe of Iſrael. Whereby is to be collected, that Antichriſt ſhall not come of the Saracens, nor Turks, but ſhall come up among the Chriſtians, and (ſaith Methodius) ſhall ſeem to come out of the Temple, to deceive many, &c. Whereby the Pope may ſeem, rather than the Saracen or the Turk, to be deſcribed, forſomuch as the Pope being elected, nouriſhed and reigning in the midſt of Gods people at Rome, ſitteth in the Temple, and very place of Chriſt, and (no doubt) deceiveth many, &c.

The time of Antichriſt.

Petrus Lombardus. Gratianus. Innocent. 3. Tranſubſtantiation. The firſt Perſecution by the Church of Rome. Dominick. Friar Francis. Ex Antonin. part 3. tit. 19 cap. 8.

The Orders of Friers begun.

And now to come to the time aſſigned of Methodius, here is to be added alſo, that which we read in Antoninus, Par. 3. that about this ſaid preſent time, a certain Biſhop of Florence preached that Antichriſt was then coming. But the Pope commanded him to keep ſilence, and to ſpeak no more thereof. Now why the Pope ſo did, and why he could not abide the preaching of Antichriſt, I refer it to them which lift to make more upon the matter. This is certain, that about this time here aſſigned by Methodius, came Petrus Lombardus, Gratianus, and Pope Innocent the Third, the firſt Authors and Patrons of Tranſubſtantiation. At which time alſo began the firſt Perſecution by the Church of Rome againſt the Albigenſes or Waldenſes, about Tolous, Biturges, and Avinion. Of whom 17000 the ſame time were ſlain, by the Popes Croſſed Soldiers. Among whom Frier Dominick was then the chiefeſt doer. About which time alſo was Frier Francis, of which two came the two Orders of Begging Friers: all which began much about one time together, Ann. 1215, which were near within twenty years after the Kingdom of the Chriſtians was taken of the Turks, according to the Prophecie aboveſaid.

The Pope exalting himſelf above Kings and Emperors.

It followeth moreover in Methodius, That in his time all Lordſhip and Domination ſhall ceaſe and give over, &c. The verity whereof we ſee now accompliſhed in the Pope. For where the Pope with his double Sword and Triple Crown doth come, there all Secular power muſt give place, both Emperors, Kings and Princes muſt ſtoop.

Notes of Antichriſt.

So King John yielded up his Crown to Pandulphus the Popes Legate, and was in his hands five days, An. 1217.

Childerick the French King had his Crown taken from him, and given to Pepin, Ann. 747.

Henry the Fourth Emperor, was forced to ſubmit himſelf and his Scepter to Pope Hildebrand, Ann. 1077.

Fredericus Barbaroſſa Emperor, in St. Marks Church in Venice, was faln to lay down his neck under Pope Alexanders feet, Ann. 1277. Which Frederick alſo before was faln to hold the Stirrop to Pope Adrian, &c.

What ſhould I ſpeak of the Ambaſſador of Venice, named Franciſcus Dandulus? who being ſent to Pope Clement the Fifth, was made to lye under the Popes Table like a Dog, and gather up the Crumbs, mentioned in Sabell. Ænn. 9. Lib. 7.

Henry the Third being Emperor, had his Diadem firſt ſet on with the feet of the Pope, and afterward ſtroken off from his head with the Popes foot again.

And what ſhall I ſpeak more hereof? when as Carolus Magnus ſubmitted himſelf ſo low to kiſs the feet of Pope Leo, Ann. 800.

It followeth then in the Prophecy of Methodius, That in the tribulation of thoſe days ſhall be ſent from God two ſpecial Prophets, Enoch and Hely, to reprove and diſcloſe the fraudulent falſhood of Antichriſt, and that many ſeeing his deluſion, ſhall forſake him, and follow them: Whereat Antichriſt being grieved, ſhall kill them, &c.

Enoch and Hely.

John Huſs and Hierome of Prague. Vid. in prima Tom. operum Joan. Huſ.

Ex Antonino Hieronym. of Prague & Teuphet and Martyr.

We never read yet in any ſtory of any ſuch two Prophets to be ſent either to the Saracens, or to the Turks: whereas againſt the Pope we read John Huſs, and Hierome of Prague, two learned Martyrs and Prophets of God to have been ſent, and to have reproved and deſcribed the Anatomy of Antichriſt, and at laſt to have been burned for their labour. And what Prophet can ſpeak more plainly, either Enoch or Hely, than did Hieronme of Prague, prophecying of the coming of Martin Luther, an hundred years after him? when the Pope and his fellows ſhould anſwer to God and to him. The time we ſee came juſt. Now let the Pope ſee with his fellows, what anſwer they can make.

The Prophecies of Brigit againſt Rome

It followeth further in Methodius, concluding his Prophetie, And then (ſaith he) ſhall appear the coming of the ſon of man in the clouds of Heaven, with celeſtial glory, &c.

Wherefore after the burning of theſe two notable Prophets, with many other thouſands burned alſo ſince their time by the Biſhop of Rome, it is to be thought that the coming of Chriſts judgment in the clouds, is not far off. Veni cito Domine, Amen.

And thus much touching Methodius, of whoſe Prophefies, how much or how little is to be eſteemed, I leave it indifferent unto the Reader. For me it ſhall ſuffice ſimply to have recited his words, as I find them in his Book contained; noting this by the way, that of this Book of Methodius, De noviſſimis temporibus, neither Hieronme in his Catalogue, nor Suidas, nor yet Aventinus in the place where he intreateth purpoſely of ſuch Prophelies, maketh any mention. As touching Hildegardis and Brigit, and other whom the French call Bardi, for their Songs and Prophetical Reliks, ſufficient hath been alledged before out of Aventinus: who in his third Book of Chronicles, writing of the teſtimonies of Hildegard, Brigit and Bardi, ſeemeth to ground upon them, That the Turks, whether we will or not, ſhall have their Imperial ſeat at Colen; and I pray God that it come not to paſs, that the Turk do give ſome attempt againſt England by the Seas, before that he come to Colen by land.

The Prophecies of Sibylla and Hildegardis.

Ex Erythræa Sibylla in Nazilegrabo Lincolnienſi ſcriptuli ſcripta.

Prophecies of Sibylla of Chriſt.

Brevity cauſeth me to cut off many teſtimonies and revelations of theſe above ſaid, or elſe I could here rehearſe the Prophetical words of Brigit, Lib. 4. Cap. 57. concerning the City and Church of Rome, which as the ſaith, muſt be purged and ſcoured with three things, to wit, with ſharp ſword, with fire, and with the plough, and that God will do with that City, as one that removeth plants out of one place unto another: and finally that the City of Rome ſhall ſuſtain the ſentence, as if a Judg ſhould command the skin to be ſlain off, the blood to be drawn from the fleſh to be cut in ſmall pieces, and the bones thereof to be broken, ſo that all the marrow may be quiſed from the ſame, &c. But for brevity I let Brigit paſs, and will declare ſomething out of Erythrea Sibylla, in her Book of Prophecies ſtanding in St. Georges Church in Venice; where the prophecying many thing of the Birth of Chriſt under Auguſtus, and of the Birth of John Baptiſt, and of Baptiſm, of the Apoſtles, of the Converſion of the Gentiles, and of Conſtantinus, &c. hath theſe words, After that the peaceable Bull ſhall conclude all the climes of the world under tributs, in thoſe days a heavenly Lamb ſhall come: and the days ſhall come, when the power of the flowing ſtream ſhall be magnified in water, and the Lion the Monarch ſhall be converted to the Lamb, which ſhall ſhine to all men, & ſubvert Kingdoms.

Prophecies of Sibylla of Chriſt.

Moreover ſaith Sibylla, In the later age God ſhall be humbled, and the Divine off-ſpring ſhall be abuſed, and Deity ſhall be joyned with Humanity, the Lamb ſhall lye in Hay, and God and man ſhall be bred up under a Maidens attendance, ſigns and wonders ſhall go before amongſt the circumciſed, &c. Alſo, An aged woman ſhall conceive a child, having having knowledg of things to come. The world shall marvel at Bootes (the Star) which shall be a leader to his birth. He having thirty two feet, and six thumbs, shall chuse himself out of fishers and abjects, the number of Twelve, and one Devil, not with sword nor with battel, &c. afterward this followeth moreover in Sibylla, saying, * The bealth of the Lamb lying shall be clothed with a few spoils of the Lion. Black shall be turned into red. He shall subdue the City of Æneas, and Kings, but in the Book of the Fishes: In dejection and poverty he shall conquer riches, and shall tread down pride with his own death. In the night he shall rise up, and be changed, he shall live and reign, and all these things shall be consummated, and regeneration (or new things) be made: at last he shall judge both good and evil, &c. And thus much briefly collected out of Sibylla Erythrea, concerning Christ our Lord.

* The Lamb lying, that is, the Church, without travel shall be maintained with some livelihood or goodness of the chief rulers.

Furthermore touching the state and course of the Church, and of Antichrist, it followeth in the said Sibylla, saying, Then shall four winged Beasts rise up in testimony, they shall sound out with Trumpets the name of the Lamb, sowing righteousness, and the Law irreprehensible. Against which Law the Beast shall gain-stand, and the abomination and froth of the Dragon. But a marvellous Star shall rise, having the Image of the four Beasts, and shall be in a marvellous multitude; he shall bring light to the Greeks, and shall illustrate the world. The Lake of the silver shall bring the name of the Lamb with power into the City of Æneas, unto the end of the world (or time.) Then in the City of Æneas the Star joyned shall loose such as were bound of the Devil, and thereof he shall rejoyce and glory, and glorious shall be his end, &c.

By these 4 Beasts is meant the 4 Monarchies of the World, that is, the multitude of all the Kingdom of the Gentiles, as in the Apocal. By the City of Æneas is meant Rome.

After this Sibylla writing (as it seemeth) of Antichrist, importeth these words, And it shall come to pass, that an horrible Beast shall come out of the East, whose roaring shall be heard to Africk, to the people of Carthage, which hath seven heads, and scepters innumerable, feet 663. He shall gainstand the Lamb, to blaspheme his Testament, encreasing the waters of the Dragon. The Kings and Princes of the world he shall burn in intolerable sweat, and they shall not diminish his feet. And then two stars like to the first star shall arise against the beast, and shall not prevail, till the abomination shall be come, and the will of the Lord shall be consummate. And again speaking of the same matter he inferreth these words of the foresaid two stars above mentioned. And toward the later days two bright stars shall arise, raising up men lying dead in their sins, being like to the first star, having the face of the four Beasts, which shall resist the beast, and the waters of the Dragon, testifying (or preaching) the name and law of the Lamb, the destruction of abomination and judgment, and shall diminish his waters, but they shall be weakned in the bread of afflictions, and they shall rise again in stronger force, &c.

The Prophecy of Sibylla of Antichrist. The 663 feet do mean the years of his reign.

These two stars seem to mean Enoch and Elias, who shall resist the beast, and be put to death by the Power of their Doctrine and again more strongly than before.

And shortly after, the said Sibylla speaking of the later judgment to come, declared how all the abominations of sins shall come before the Lamb; and that terrible fire shall fall from Heaven, which shall consume all earthly things created unto the top of Heaven, &c.

Ex libro cui titulus, vitus Ecclesiæ.

And thus much out of Sibylla, touching her Prophecies of Christ and Antichrist, according as I found them alledged of a certain Catholick Remish Writer, in his Book intituled Onus Ecclesiæ, excerpted, as he saith, out of the Library of St. George in the City of Venice.

Philip Melanthon in his Preface upon Bartholomæus Georgienitz Peregrinus, writing of the origine and manners of the Turks, alledged a certain Prophecy of Hiltenus, mentioned hereafter, which foretold that the Turks should bear rule in Italy and in Germany, Anno 1600.

{KING Hts.7.}

Now it remaineth, in conclusion of these Prophecies of the Turks, something to say of the Turks own Prophecies, concerning the enduring and ending of their own Kingdom, whose prophetical Prognostication, being taken out of their own Language, and their own Books, I thought here to insert, as I find it alledged in the Book of the foresaid Bartholomæus Georgienitz, as followeth:

A Turkish Prophecy in the Persian tongue, of the Reign and Ruine of the Turk.

Padisshahmoz. ghelur, Ciaforum memleketi alur, kenzul almai alur, Kapzeiler; iediy ladegh Gyaur kelechi eskmasse, on ikiyladegh onlaron beghlig eder: enfi iapar, baghi diker babesai bagblar, oplikezi olur, outchi yldensora Hristianon Kelecei eschar, ol Turchi getestine tus oburc.

The same in Latine.

Imperator noster veniet, ethnici Principis regnum capiet, rubrum quoque pomum capiet, in suam potestatem rediget: quod si septimum usque annum Christianorum gladius non insurrexit, usque ad duodecimum annum eis dominabitur. Domos ædificabit, vineas plantabit, hortos sepibus muniet, liberos procreabit, & post duodecimum annum, apparebit Christianorum gladius, qui Turcam quaqua versum in fugam aget.

By the Prince of the Gentiles, the Turk, do here mean the Kingdoms and Dominions of the Christians, whom they call Gentiles, because they are not circumcised after their manner.

The same in English.

OUR Emperor shall come; he shall get the Kingdom of the Gentiles Prince; also he shall take the red Apple, and shall bring it under his subjection; and if the sword of the Christians shall not rise unto the seventh year, he shall have dominion over them unto the twelfth year. He shall build Houses, plant Vineyards, shall hedge about his Orchards, shall procreate Children; and after the 12th year shall appear the sword of the Christians, which shall put the Turk to flight every where.

They which make declaration of this Turkish Prophecy, do expound this 12th year to signifie the 12th year after the winning of Constantinople; which Constantinople, say they, is meant by the red Apple; and after that twelve year, say they, shall rise the sword of the Christians, &c. And this Prophecy being written and translated out of the Persian Tongue, with this Exposition upon the same, it is to be found in the Book of Bartholomæus Georgienitz. Albeit, concerning the exposition thereof, it seemeth not to be true which is there spoken of the 12th year after the winning of Constantinople, being now 100 years since the winning thereof.

The Exposition of the Turky Prophecy, by Bartbol. Georgienitz.

Wherefore it may rather seem probable, that by the 7th and 12th year of the Turks, this to be the meaning, that if the 7th of the Ottoman Turks do escape the sword of the Christians, they shall continue, build and plant, &c. until the 12th Turk, which is this Solymannus, and then after that shall rise the Christians sword, which shall put them to flight, and vanquish them in all Quarters. And this Exposition may seem to accord with the place of Genesis; wherein is written of Ismael, that he had twelve Sons, and no more: So that this Solymannus being the 12th Turk after Ottomannus, may (by the grace of Christ) be the last; whom we heard credibly to be reported, at the Printing hereof, to be dead. But howsoever this Prophecy is to be taken, it appeareth by their own Oracles, that at length they shall be overcome by the Christians.

Another Exposition. Gen. 25.

{KING Hts.7.}

A Table describing the times and years of the Saracens, Turks and Tartarians, for the better explaining of the Story above prefixed.

The Saracens begin their reign.

Anno 632, began the Kingdom of the Saracens or Arabians, after the death of Mahumet the first King-leader of the mischief, which Saracens reigning in Babylon over Persia and Asia, continued about } 198 Years.

Anno 667, Jerusalem was taken of the Saracens. These Saracens after they had subdued Ormisda King of Persia, set up to themselves a new Kingdom, calling their chief Prince Califba, which signifieth a General Lord; and under him Seriphes, that is an under Prince; and again under him their Soldan; which is a ruler of Captains; under the which Soldans all the Provinces were divided. And thus ruled they the space above said of } 198 years.

The Egyptian Saracens, or Sultans.

Ann. 703. The Egyptians being weary of their subjection under the Romans, called for help of the Saracen Califba; and so calling off the Romans, submitted themselves to the Law of the Saracens, and had also their Califba, and their Babylon called Cairus, where their Califba continued unto Saraco or Syracinus } 447 years.

The Saracens Kingdom ceaseth

Ann. 810, Mauginetus, or Muchumetus the chief Sultan of Persia, being at variance with Imbraell the Sultan of Babylon, sent for the aid of the Turks out of Scythia: by whom when he had got the victory against the Babylonians, the said Turks shortly after conquered the Persians, and subdued their Country within the space of } 320 years.

Ann. 830, The Saracens being expulsed out of Asia by the Turks, wandred about Africk, Spain and Italy, and were in divers places dispersed, and so remain.

The Turky Kingdom beginneth.

Ann. 850, The Turks after they had expulsed the Saracens out of Asia, began to reign in Asia, in Persia, and in Arabia, and there reigned without interruption, till the coming of the Tartarians, the space of } 192 years.

Ann. 1009, The Turks wan the City of Hierusalem from the Saracens, which City the Sultan of Egypt wan again from the Turks shortly after, and possessed the same till the coming of Gotfridus.

Ann. 1051, Began the first King of the Turks, called Zaduke, to reign in Asia, and joyned League with Califba of Egypt, and there reigned till the conquest of Gotfridus and the Christians the space of } 46 years.

Ann. 1078, Solymannus Nephew to Affusalem the Turkish King in Asia, otherwise called Turquinia, subdued Cappadocia, which had continued now the space of } 500 years.

Ann. 1099, Gotfridus Bulion, Duke of Lotharing a Christian Prince, taking his Voyage into Asia with 700000 Christian Soldiers, first got the City of Nicea against the Sultan of the Turks; then Lycaonia, Silicia, Syria; afterward Mesopotamia, and Comagena: then Antiochia. Ann. 1098. and the next year recovered Jerusalem, being then in the hands of the Saracens, which they a little before had won from the Turks, as is aforesaid. After this Gotfridus succeeded eight Christian Kings, which kept the Kingdom of Jerusalem and Asia, both from the Turks and Saracens, the space of } 88 years.

Ann. 1100. The Georgians, which be a people of Armenia the greater, vanquished the Turks out of the Kingdom of Persia, after they had cut their King in pieces. Whereby the Turks flying to Cappadocia, there remained under Solomon, and joyned themselves to the Soldan of Egypt, and waxed then strong in Asia minor, called now Turquinia.

Anno 1170, When Almericus the Seventh King of Hierusalem after Gotfridus had overcome the Califba, or Sultan of Egypt, the Sultan being overcome, called for the help of Saracen the Sultan of Syria. This Saracen after he had expulsed the Christians out of Egypt, turned his power against the Sultan of Egypt, and vanquished him, took to himself the Kingdom of Egypt: which Kingdom he with his posterity did hold till the coming of the Tartarians, and the Mamaluches about the space of } 88 years.

Anno 1187, Saladinus the Nephew of Saracen the Sultan of Egypt, perceiving the distention among the Christian States of Palestina, got Antioch, where he slew Raymundus the Prince with his own hands: Then got Tiberias: From thence he went to Accon, where he took Guido King of Jerusalem, and Master of the Templars, prisoners; for whose ransom the Turk had Ascalon yielded up to him of the Christians. That done, he subdued Jerusalem, which had been in the hands of the Christians before, the space of } 88 years.

Anno 1189, Frederick the Emperor, Philip the French King, Richard King of England made their Voyage into Asia, where Frederick, washing in a River at Cilicia, died. In this voyage at the siege of Accon, Saladinus wan the field of men, of whom 60000 were slain in the chase. Accon at length was got of the Christians. King Richard got Cyprus. The two Kings fell at strife. Philip retired home without any good doing. King Richard laid siege to Jerusalem, but in vain, and so returning homeward, was taken near to Vienna in Austria, after he had taken truce before with the Soldan, upon such condition as pleased him. And this good speed had the Popes sending out against the Turks.

Ann. 1215, There was another Council holden at Rome by Pope Innocent the third, where was Enacted a new Article of our Faith for Transubstantiation of Bread and Wine to be turned into the Body and Blood of our Saviour. In this Council also great excitation was made by the Pope, and great preparation was through all Christendom to set forward for recovery of the Holy Land. A mighty army was collected of Dukes, Lords, Knights, Bishops and Prelates, that if Gods blessing had gone with them, they might have gone throughout all Asia and India.

Transubstantiation.

An. 1219, The Christians after eighteen months siege, got a certain Town in Egypt, called Damiata, or Elipolis, with much ado, but not much to the purpose. For afterward as the Christian Army of the Popes sending went about to besiege the City Cairus, or Babylon, the Sultan through his Libral train so intrapped and inclosed them within the danger of Nilus, that they were constrained to render again the City of Damiata, with their prisoners, and all the furniture thereof as they found it, into the Soldans hand, and glad so with their lives to pass pass forward to Tyre. Anno 1221.

In the mean time the Egyptian Turk caused the City of Jerusalem to be rased, that it should serve to no use to the Christians. What great thing else was done in that voyage, it doth not greatly appear in stories. Albeit Fredericus the Second Emperor was not unfruitfully there occupied, and much more might have done, had it not been for the violence and perfecution of the Bishop of Rome against him; whereby he was inforced to take truce with the Sultan for ten years, and so returned. After which things done, not many years after, at length the last City of all belonging to the Christians, which was Ptolomais, or Akers, was also taken from them by the Sultan, so that now the Christians had not one foot left in all Asia.

Vid. supra.

An. 1230. Thus the Christians being driven out of Asia by the Sultans and Turks, yet the faid Turks and Sultans did not long enjoy their victory. For ettsoons the Lord stirred up against them the Tartarians, who breaking into Asia by the Ports of Caspius subdued divers parts of Asia, namely about Comana, Colchos, Iberia, Albania, &c. These Tartarians as they had got many Captives in their wars; so for gain they used to ship them over customably to Alexandria in Egypt to be sold; which servants and captives Melechsala the great Sultan was glad to buy to serve him in his wars. Which captives and servants after they had continued a certain space in Egypt, and through their valiant service grew in favour and estimation with the said Melechsala, and began more to increase in number and strength; at length they flew him, and took to themselves the name and Kingdom of the Sultan. And thus ceased the stock of Saracen and Saladinus aforementioned, which continued in Egypt, about the space, as is said, of Tartarians. Terra Caspia.

Saladinus stock in Egypt ceaseth.

An. 1240. After the death of Melechsala, the Army of these foresaid Rascals and captives set up to themselves a King of their own company, whom they called Turquemenins. Who to fill up the number of their company that it should not diminish, devised this order, to get or to buy Christian mens children, taken young from their parents, and the mothers lap; whom they used so to bring up, to make them to deny Christ, and to be circumcised, and instructed in Mahumets Law, and afterward to be trained in the feats of war; and these were called Mamalucchi. Among whom this was their order, that none might be advanced to be King but out of their own number, or else chosen by them; neither that any should be made Knights or Horsemen, but only the Children of Christians which should deny Christ before, called Mamalucchi. Also it was among them provided, that to this dignity neither Saracens nor Jews should be admitted. Item, that the succession thereof should not descend to the children and off-spring of these Mamalucchi. Also that the succession of the Crown should not descend to the children of the foresaid Sultan, but should go by voice and election. The Tartarians with Turquemenins their King, about this time obtained Turquia, that is, Asia minor, from the Turks, and within two years after, prevailing against the Turks, expelled them from their Kingdom, and so continued these Mamalucchi reigning over Egypt, and a great part of Asia, till the time of Tomumbeius their last King, which was destroyed and hanged at the Gates of Memphis, by Zelymus the Turk, Father to this Selymnnus, as in his History is declared. These Mamalucchi continued the space of Mamalucchi in Egypt.

Vid. supra.

260 years.

Ann. 1245. These Tartarians ranging through the Countries of the Georgians, and all Armenia, came as far as Iconium, which was then the Imperial City of the Turks.

{KING Hen. 7.}

Ann. 1289. The Soldan of Egypt and Babylon got from the Christians Tripola, Tyrus, Sidon, and Berithus in Syria.

Ann. 1291. Lastly, Ptolomais, which also is called Akers, was supprised by the said Soldan, raced and cast down to the ground, and all the Christians therein (which were not many left) were slain. And this was the last City which the Christians had in Asia. So that now the Christians have not one foot (as is said before) left in all Asia. Thus the Egyptian Soldans and the Tartarians reigned and ranged over the most part of Asia above the Turks, till the reign of Ottomannus the Great Turk, about the space of 80 years.

¶ And thus have ye the whole discourse of the Turkish story, with their Names, Countries, Towns, Dominions, also with their times, continuance, interruptions and alterations, in order described, and in years distinguished: Which otherwise in most Authors and Writers be so confused, that it is hard to know distinctly, what difference is between the Saracens, Turks, Tartarians, the Sultans or Soldans, Mamalucches, or Janizaritis; what is their Calipha, their Seriphes, their Sultan, or Bassas; in what times they began, and how long, and in what order of years they reigned. All which in this present Table manifestly to thine eye may appear.

100 years.

¶ Wherein this thou hast moreover (gentle Reader) to consider, which is worthy the noting, how the Bishop of Rome all this season, from the first beginning of the Turks reign, hath not ceased from time to time continually, calling upon Christian Princes and subjects to take the Cross, and to war against the Turks; whereupon so many great voyages have been made to the Holy Land, and so many Battels fought against the Turk and Soldan for winning the holy Cross: and yet no lucky success hath followed thereof hitherto, nor ever came it prosperously forward, whatsoever through the exciting of that Bishop hath been attempted against that great enemy of the Lord: insomuch that the Christians have lost not only all that they had in Asia, but also are scarce able to defend that little they have in Europe against his violence. What the cause is of this hard luck of the Bishops doings, it is hard for man to define. Let men muse as their mind leadeth, and as the Gospel saith, He that hath eyes to see, let him see. This is certain, that as there hath lacked no care nor diligence in the Bishop of Rome, to stir men up to that business; so on the Princes behalf there hath lacked no courage nor strength of men, no contribution of expences, no supportation of charges, no furniture or ablement of war; only the blessing of God seemeth to have lacked. The reason and cause whereof I would it were so easie to be reformed, as it may be quickly confuted. For what man beholding the life of us Christians, will greatly marvel why the Lord goeth not with our army to fight against the Turks? And if my verdict might here have place, for me to add my censure, there appeareth to me another cause in this matter, yet greater than this aforesaid: which to make plain and evident, in full discourse of words, leisure now doth not permit. Briefly to touch what I conceive, my opinion is this, that if the sincere Doctrine of Christian Faith, delivered and left unto us in the word of God, had not been so corrupted in the Church of Rome; or if the Bishop of Rome would yet reclaim his impure Idolatry and prophanations, and admit Christ the Lamb of God stedfast alone, without our impure additions, to be our only justification, according to the free promise of Gods grace; I nothing doubt, but the power of this Faith, grounding only upon Christ the Son of God, had both framed our lives into a better disposition; and also soon would, or yet will bring down the pride of that proud Holofernes. But otherwise, if the Bishop of Rome will not gently give place to the mild voice of Gods word, I think not contrary, but he shall be compelled at last to give place and room to the Turk whether he will or not. And yet notwithstanding, when both the Turk and the Pope shall do against it what they can, the truth and grace of Gods Testament shall flourishe and increase by such means as the Lord shall work, which beginneth already (praise to the Lord) to come graciously and luckily forward in most places.

A Prayer against the Turks.

A Prayer against the Turks.

O Eternal Lord God, Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, Creator and disposer of all things, just, gracious, and wise only, in the name and reverence of thy Son Jesus, we prostrate our selves, desiring thine Omnipotent Majesty to look down upon these afflicted times of thy poor Creatures and Servants; relieve thy Church, increase our Faith, and confound our enemies: and as th'u hast grown thine only begotten Son unto us, promising with him life to all that shall believe upon his name; so incline the obedience of our Faith to thy promise in him, that our hearts may be far off from all other sinful additions and prophane inventions, which are besides him, and not in him, grounded upon thy will and promise. And grant (we beseech thee) to thy Church, more and more to see how terrible a thing it is, to set up any other means or help of Salvation, but only in him whom thou only hast sent and sealed: Reform thy Church with perfect doctrine and faithful teachers, that we seeing our own weakness, may put off our selves, and put on him without whom we can do nothing. So shall we stand strong, when nothing standeth in us, but thy Son alone, in whom thou art only pleased. Renew in this thy Church again the decayed Faith of thy Son Jesus, which may plentifully bring forth in us, not leaves only, but fruits of Christian life. And forgive our wretched Idolatry and blind fantasies past, wherewith we have provoked manifold ways thy delivered indignation against us. For our Hearts have been full of Idols, our Temples full of Images, our ways full of Hypocrisie: thy Sacraments prophaned, and thy religion turned to superstition because the Lanthorn of thy Word went not before us, therefore we have stumbled. Miserably we have walked hitherto, like Sons not of Sarah, but of Agar, and therefore these Turkish Agarens have risen up against us. Many hard and straight ways we have passed, but the ways of the Lord we have not found. Much cost we have bestowed on bread that sweeteth no hunger, but that bread which only feedeth and cometh freely we have not tasted. We have sailed far and near in Barks of our own building, but have not kept within the Ark only of thy promise, and therefore these floods have taken us. We have prayed much, but not in thine appointed Temple, and therefore we have not been heard. We have pleased and filled, but without thy favor, and therefore this unlucky ground of ours bringeth forth so many weeds. We do fish apace and that all night, but because we fish not on the right side of the Boat, in our fishing we catch never a fin. Our buildings be full of good intentions and great devotions, but because the ground-work is not surely laid upon the rock of thy promise, the East wind visiteth and shaketh them all to shivers. We walk and have walked long after the precepts and doctrines of men, having a shew of wisdom, but not a holding the head, where lyeth all our strength, and therefore these Philistin Turks have hitherto so prevailed against us. Briefly, all the parts and bones of the body be shaken out of place. Wherefore we beseech thee (O Lord) put to thy holy hand, and set them in the right joynt again. And finally, reduce this same thy mystical body again to his perfect and natural head, which is thine only Son Jesus Christ, and none other. For him only hast thou anointed and appointed. Neither is there any other head that can minister strength and nutriment to this body, but he alone: Forasmuch as all other heads be sinful, and are not able to stand in thy sight, but make this body rather worse than better. Only this thy welbeloved and perfect Son is he, in whom only dwelleth all our strength and fullness; him only we confess and knowledge. For whom and with whom, we beseech thee (O Lord God of hosts) grant to thy Church strength and victory against the malicious fury of these Turks, Saracens, Tartarians, against Gog and Magog, and all the malignant rable of Antichrist, enemies to thy Son Jesus our Lord and Saviour. Prevent their devices, overthrow their power, and dissolve their Kingdom, that the Kingdom of thy Son so long oppressed, may recover and flourish over all: and that they which wretchedly be fallen from thee, may happily be reduced again into the fold of thy Salvation, through Jesus Christ our only Mediator and most merciful Advocate. Amen.

Psal. 119. Gal. 4. Wisd. 5. Isai. 55. Gen. 6. Jud. 14. Jer. 12. Luke 6. Colos. 2.

{Ann. 1500} IN this long digression, wherein sufficiently hath been described the grievous and tedious persecution of the Saracens and Turks against the Christians, thou hast to understand (good Reader) and behold the image of a terrible Antichrist evidently appearing both by his own doings, and also by the Scriptures, Prophesied and declared to us before. Now in comparing the Turk with the Pope, if a question be asked, whether of them is the truer or greater Antichrist, it were easie to see and judge, that the Turk is the more open and manifest enemy against Christ and his Church. But if it be asked whether of them two hath been the more bloody and pernicious adversary to Christ and his members; or whether of them hath consumed and spilt more Christian blood, he with sword, or this with fire and sword together, neither is it a light matter to discern, neither is it my part here to discuss, which do only write the History, and the Acts of them both. Wherefore after the story of the Turks thus finished, now to reenter again there where we left, in describing the domestical troubles and persecutions here at home under the Bishop of Rome; after the burning of Bathram in Norfolk above declared. I signified also of another certain aged man, mentioned in an old written Chronicle borrowed of one in the Tower, intituled Polichron, (although I find not his name in the said Chronicle expressed) which suffered the pains of burning in Smithfield, about the same time, which was the year of our Lord, 1500. Ex Polychron

A question whether is the greater Antichrist the Turk or the Pope.

Robert and an old man Martyrs. Vide supra. Ex scripto Tolchronic.

This aged Father I suppose, is he of whom I find mention made in certain old Papers and Records of William Cary Citizen (albeit the day of the month doth a little differ) wherein is thus testified, That on the 20th day of July, Anno 1500, upon the day of Saint Margaret, there was an old man burned in Smithfield for an Heretick, and the same person upon the 10th day before he was burnt, would have stolen out of the Lollards Tower, and so falling out of the Tower, did foully hurt himself; whereupon he was carried in a Cart to his death, as he went to his burning.

In the foresaid Papers of ancient records aforementioned, furthermore declared, how in the year above prenoted, which was An. 1499. In the time of one Percival, many were taken for Heretics in Kent, and at Paul's Cross they bear Fagots and were abjured, and shortly after the same year there went thirteen Lollards afore the Procession in Paul's, and there were of them eight women and a young Lad, and the Lads Mother was one of the eight, and all the thirteen bear Fagots on their necks afore the Procession.

FOrsomuch as the world is come now to such a morality and peevish infertibility in these contentions and cavilling days of ours, that nothing can be to circumspectly written and buried, but that we live in danger of one Sycophant or another, which never will credit there, where they lift not to like: neither will they ever like that which seemeth prejudicial to their fiction, or not to serve the humor wherewith their fantasies be infected: therefore to stop the mouths of such carping cavillers with as much possibility as I may, be it known to all and singular such persons, who by evidence of truth and witness will be satisfied, that in the Town of Amersham be yet alive both men and women, which can and do bear witness of this that I shall declare. Also there is of the said company, one named William Page, an aged Father and yet alive, witness to the same. Also another named Agnes Wellerly Widow, being about the age of an hundred years, yet living and witness hereof: these in the days of King Henry the seventh, Anno 1505, in the Diocess of Lincoln in Buckinghamshire (William Smith being Bishop of the same Diocese) one William Tylsworth was burned in Amersham, in a Close called Stanley, about sixty years ago. At which time one Joan Clerk, being a married woman, which was the only daughter of the said William Tylsworth and a faithful woman, was compelled with her own hands to set fire to her dear Father: and at the same time her husband John Clerk did penance at her Fathers burning, and bear a Faggot, as did also.

And also divers of these men were afterward burned in the Cheek, as William Page, which at this present is alive, and likewise did bear a Faggot with the aforesaid. Furthermore, the foresaid Agnes Wotherly testifieth, that at the burning of this William Tylsworth, were 60 and above, that were put to bear Faggots for their Penance, of whom divers were injoyned to bear and wear Faggots at Lincoln the space of seven years, some at one time, some at another, &c. In which number was also one Robert Bartlet a rich man, who for his professions sake was put out of his Farm and Goods, and was condemned to be kept in the Monastry of Ashryge, where he wear on his right sleeve a square piece of Cloath, the space of seven years together.

It followeth moreover in the testimony of the forenamed, that about the same time of the burning of William Tylsworth (as the Amersham men do say) or the next day after) as recordeth the foresaid Agnes) was one Father Roberts burned at Buckingham. He was a Miller, and dwelled at Missenden: And at his burning there were about twenty persons that were compelled to bear Faggots, and to do such Penance as the wicked Pharisees did compel them. they two were burned both at one Fire, and there was William Littlepage (who is yet alive) compelled to be burned in the right Cheek, and Father Rogers, and Father Rever, alias Reive, which after was burned. This Father Rogers was in the Bishops Prison 14 weeks together, night and day, where he was so cruelly handled with cold, hunger and irons: that after his coming out of the said prison, he was so lame in his back, that he could never go upright as long as he lived, as can testifie divers honest men that be now living. Also there were thirty more burned in the right Cheek, and bear Faggots the same time. The cause was that they would talk against Superstition and Idolatry, and were desirous to hear and read the holy Scriptures. The manner of their burning in the Cheek was this: their necks were tyed fast to a post or stay with Towels, and their hands holden fast that they might not stir, and so the Iron being hot, was put to their Cheeks, and thus bear they the prints and marks of the Lord Jesus about them.

Men of Amersham burn in the Cheek for Gods word

The cruel handling of Thomas Chase of Amersham, wickedly strangled and martyred in the Bishops Prison at Wooburn, under William Smith Bishop of Lincoln.

AMong these aforesaid, which were so cruelly persecuted for the Gospel and Word of Christ, one Thomas Chase of Amersham, was one of them that {KING Hen.7.} that was thus cruelly handled: Which Thomas Chase by the report of such as did know him, was a man of a godly sober and honest behaviour, whose vertuous doings do yet remain in memory, and could not abide Idolatry and superstition, but many times would speak against it. Wherefore the ungodly and wicked did the more hate and despise him, and took him and brought him before the blind Bishop, being at that time at Wooburn in the County of Buckingham, and as it is written Acts 12. that wicked Herod did vex certain of the congregation, and killed James the Brother of John with the Sword; and because he saw that it pleased the Jews, &c. he proceeded farther, and had this same Thomas Chase before him, asking him, many questions touching the Romish Religion, with many taunts, checks, and rebukes, but what answer this godly man Thomas Chase made them, it is unknown. Howbeit it is to be supposed, that his answer was most zealous and godly in professing Christs true Religion and Gospel, and to the extirpation of Idolatry, and superstition, and hypocrisie, for that the said Thomas Chase was commanded to be put in the Bishops Prison, called little ease, in the Bishops house at Wooburn, which Prison had not been ministred unto him, had not his answers been found and upright. There Thomas Chase lay bound most painfully with Chains, Gyves, Manicles and Irons, oftentimes fore pined with hunger, where the Bishops Alms was daily brought unto him by his Chaplains: Which Alms was nothing else but checks, taunts, rebukes and threatnings, flouting and mockings. All which cruelty the godly Martyr took most quietly and patiently, remembring and having respect to Christs promises. Matth. 5. Blessed are they which suffer persecution for righteousnes sake, for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven: and as followeth, Blessed are ye when men revile you and persecute you, &c. When the Bishop with his band of Shavelings, perceived that by their daily practises of cruelty they could not prevail against him, but rather that he was the more fervent and earnest in professing Christs true Religion, and that he did tolerate and bear most patiently all their wickedness and cruelty ministred unto him, they imagined how and which way they might put him to death. left there should be a tumult or an uproare among the people. And as Richard Hun shortly after was hanged or strangled in Lollards Tower, about the year of our Lord, 1514, even so these blood-suckers most cruelly strangled and prest to death this said Thomas Chase in Prison, which most heartily called upon God to receive his spirit; as witnesseth a certain woman that kept him in Prison.

The Chase brought before the Bishop.

The Chase condemned to the Bishops Prison at Wooburn called little Ease.

A worthy Alms of a Bishop. The perfect patience and constancy of The Chase.

The Chase cruelly Murthered in the Bishops Prison.

After that these stinging Vipers, being of the wicked brood of Antichrist, had thus most cruelly and impiously murthered this faithful Christian, they were at their wits end, and could not tell what shift to make, to cloke their shameful murther withall: at last to blind the ignorant silly people, these bloody Butchers most slanderously caused it by their Ministers to be buried abroad, that the foresaid Thomas Chase had hanged himself in Prison; which was a most shameful and abominable lie, for the Prison was such, that a man could not stand upright, nor lie at ease, but stooping, as they do report that did know it. And besides that, this man had so many manicles and Irons upon him, that he could not well move either hand or foot, as the woman did declare that saw him dead, insomuch that they confessed that his blood-balke was broken by reason they had so vilely beaten him and bruised him. And yet these holy Catholicks had not made an end of their wicked act in this both killing and slandering of this godly Martyr; but to put out the remembrance of him, they caused him to be buried in the Wood called Norlandwood, in the High-way betwixt Wooburn and little Marlow, to the intent he should not be taken up again to be seen: And thus commonly are innocent men laid up by these Clerkly Clergy men. But be that is effectually true of himself hath promised at one time or at another, to clear his true servants, not with lies and fables, but by his own true Word. No secret, saith he, is so close, but once shall be opened; neither is any thing so hid, that shall not at the last be known clearly. Such a sweet Lord is God always to those that are his true servants. Blessed be his holy Name therefore for ever and ever. Amen.

The Chase falsly slandered to hang himself.

God bringeth to light the secret murthers of the Papists. Matth. 10. Luk. 12.

Thomas Harding being one of this company, thus molested and troubled, as is aforesaid, in the Town of Aversham, for the truth of the Gospel, after his Abjuration and Penance done, was again fought for, and brought to the Fire in the days of King Henry the Eighth and under D. Longland then Bishop of Lincoln, succeeding after Cardinal Wolsey. Of whose death and Martyrdom we shall likwise record (Christ willing and granting) in order when we shall come to the time and year of his suffering.

After the Martyrdom of these two, I read also of one Thomas Noris, who likewise for the same cause, that is for the Profession of Christs Gospel, was condemned by the Bishop, and burnt at Norwich, the last day of March, Anno 1507.

Th. Noris Martyr. {Anno 1507}

In the next year following, which was An. 1508, in the consistory of London, was convented Elizabeth Sampson, of the Parish of Aldermanbury, upon certain Articles, and specially for speaking against Pilgrimage and adoration of Images, as the Image of our Lady at Wilsdon, at Stanings, at Crome, at Walsingham, and the Image of Saint Savior of Barmondsey, and against the Sacrament of the Altar, and for that she had spoken these or like words; that our Lady of Wilsdon was but a burnt arse elf, and a burnt arse flock; and if she might have holpen men and women which go to her on Pilgrimage, she would not have suffered her tail to have been burnt: and what should folk worship our Lady of Wilsdon, or our Lady of Crome; for the one is but a burnt arse flock, and the other is but a Poppet: and better it were for the people to give their Alms at home to poor people, than to go on Pilgrimages. Also she called the Image of S. Saviour, Sim Saviour with kit lips, and that she said she could make as good bread, as that which the Priest occupied, and that it was not the body of Christ, but bread, for that Christ could not be both in Heaven and in Earth at one time. For these and certain other Articles, she was compelled to abjure before Master William Horsey, Chancellor, the day and year above written. Ex Regist. Lond.

¶ Laurence Gheast.

LAmentable it is to remember, and a thing almost infinite to comprehend the names, times, and persons of all them which have been slain by the rigour of the Popes Clergy, for the true maintaining of Christs cause, and of his Sacraments. Whose memory being registred in the book of Life, albeit it need not the commemoration of our stories, yet for the more confirmation of the Church, I thought it not unprofitable, the suffering and Martyrdom of them to be notified, which innocently have given their blood to be shed in Christs quarrel.

Laurence Gheast Martyr.

In the Catalogue of whom, next in order, cometh the memorial of Laurence Gheast, who was burned in Salisbury for the matter of the Sacrament, in the days of King Henry the Seventh: He was of a comely and tall personage, and otherwise (as appeareth) not unfriended; for the which the Bishop and the Clese were the more loath to burn him, but kept him in Prison the space of two years. This Laurence had a wife and seven children. Wherefore they thinking to expugne and perswade his mind, by stirring of his fatherly affection toward his Children, when the time came which they appointed for his burning, as he was at the stake, they brought before him his wife and his forefaid seven Children. At the sight whereof, although nature is commonly wont to work in other, yet in him Religion overcoming nature, made him constancy to remain unmoveable, in such sort, as when his wife exhort and desired him to favour himself, he again began to desire her to be content, and not to be a block in his way, for he was in a good course, running toward the mark of his Salvation: and so fire being put to him, he finished his life, renouncing not only wife and children, but also himself to follow Christ. As he was in burning one of the Bishops men threw a firebrand at his face. Whereat the Brother of Laurence standing by, ran at him with his Dagger, and would have slain him, had he not been otherwise staid.

Laurence would not be turned by his Wife nor Children.

Laurence died a Martyr.

Testified and witnessed by the credible report of one William Russel, an aged man dwelling of late in Coleman-street, who was there present the same time at the burning of Laurence, and was also himself buried in the Cheek, and one of the persecuted flock in those days, whose Daughter is yet living: the same is confirmed also with the testimony of one Richard Web, servant sometime to M. Latymer, who sojourning in the house of the said William Russel, heard him many times declare the same.

A notable story of a faithful woman burned in Cheaping-Sadbury.

A Faithfull Woman burned.

But amongst all the examples of God, whereof so many have suffered from time to time for Christ and his truth. I cannot tell if ever were any Martyrdom more notable and admirable, wherein the plain demonstration of Gods mighty power and judgment hath at any time been more evident against the persecutors of his flock, than at the burning of a certain godly Woman put to death in Cheaping-Sadbury, about the same time, under the Reign of King Henry the Seventh.

The constancy of which blessed Woman, as it is glorious for all true godly Christians to behold; so again the example of the Bishops Chancellor, which cruelly condemned the innocent, may offer a terrible spectacle to the eyes of all Papistical persecutors to consider, and to take example, which the living God grant they may, Amen. The name of the Town where she was Martyred, was, as is said, Cheaping-Sadbury. The name of the Woman is not as yet come to my knowledge. The name of the Chancellor, who condemned her, was called Doctor Whittington. The time of her burning was in the Reign and time of King Henry the Seventh, orderly therefore in this place and time to be inserted. Wherein is to be noted moreover the opportunity of this present History brought to my hands, and that in such convenient season, as I was drawing toward the end of the forefaid Kings Reign: so that it may appear to them which behold the opportunity of things, not to be without Gods holy will and providence, that this forefaid example should not lye hid and unremembred, but come to light and knowledge, and that in such order of placing, according as the due course of our story hitherto kept, requireth.

D. Whittington Chancellor a persecutor.

After this godly woman, and manly Martyr of Christ was condemned by the wretched Chancellor above named, Doctor Whittington, for the faithful profession of the truth, which the Papists then called Heresie, and the time now come when she should be brought to the place and pains of her Martyrdom, a great concourse of all the multitude, both in the Town and Country about (as the manner is in such times) was gathered to behold her end. Among whom was also the foresaid Doctor Whittington the Chancellor, there present to see the Execution done. Thus this faithful woman, and true servant of God, constantly persisting in the testimony of the truth, committing her cause to the Lord, gave over her life to the Fire, refusing no pains nor torments to keep her Conscience clear and unreprovable in the day of the Lord. The Sacrifice being ended, the people began to return homeward, coming from the burning of this blessed Martyr. It hapned in the mean time, that as the Catholick Executioners were busie in flaying this silly Lamb at the Towns side, a certain Butcher was as busie within the Town slaying of a Bull; which Bull he had fast bound in Ropes, ready to knock him on the head. But the Butcher (belike not so skilful in his Art of killing Beasts, as the Papists be in murdering Christians) as he was lifting his Axe to strike the Bull, failed in his stroke, and smote a little too low, or else how he smit, I know not: this was certain that the Bull, although somewhat grieved at the stroke, but yet not stricken down, put his strength to the Ropes, and brake loose from the Butcher into the Street, the very same time as the people were coming in great presse from the burning. Who seeing the Bull coming towards them, and suppoling him to be wild (as it was no other like) gave way for the Beast, every man shifting for himself as well as he might. Thus the people giving back, and making a lane for the Bull, he passed through the throng of them, touching neither man nor child, till he came where the Chancellor was. Against whom the Bull, as pricked with a sudden vehemency, ran full butt with his Horns, and taking him upon the pansch, gored him thorow and thorow, and so killed him immediately, carrying his guts, and trailing them with his Horns all the Street over, to the great admiration and wonder of all them that saw it.

A contention between Butchery and the Popes anathering ministers.

A rare and special example of the just punishment of God upon a persecutor D. Whittington slain of a Bull.

Although the carnal sense of man be blind in considering the works of the Lord, imputing many times to blind chance the things which properly pertain to Gods only praise and providence; yet in this so strange and so evident example, what man can be so dull or ignorant, which seeth not herein a plain miracle of Gods mighty power and judgment, both in the punishing of this wretched Chancellor, and also in admonishing all other like persecutors, by his example, to fear the Lord, and to abstain from the like cruelty?

Now for the credit of this story left I be said upon mine own head to commit to story things rashly, which I cannot justifie, therefore to stop such cavelling mouths, I will discharge my self with authority I trust sufficient, that is, with the witness of him which both was a Papist, and also present at the same time at the burning of the Woman, whose name was Rowland Webb: which Rowland, dwelling then in Cheaping-Sadbury, had a son named Richard Webb, servant sometime to Master Latimer, who also induring with him in time of his trouble six years together, was himself imprisoned and persecuted for the same cause. Unto the which Richard Webb, being now aged, then young, the foresaid Rowland his Father, to the intent to exhort him from the sect of Heresie (as he then called it) recited to him many times the burning of this woman, and withall added the story of the Bull aforesaid, which he himself did see and testifie. This Richard Webb is yet living, a witness of his own Fathers words and testimony, which I trust may satisfie all indifferent Readers, except only such as think no truth to be believed, but that only which is in their Portues.

And thus much concerning the state of the Church. Wherein isto be understood, what storms and persecutions have been raised up in all quarters against the flock and congregation of Christ, not only by the Turks, but also at home within our selves, by the Bishop of Rome and his retinue. Where also it is to be noted in the days and Reign of this King Henry the Seventh, how mightily the working of Gods Gospel hath multiplied and increased, and what great numbers of men and women have suffered for the same with us in England, as by these stories above past may be apparent.

Now these things declared, which to the Church matters be appertaining, consequently it remaineth something to intreat of the state likewise of the Common-wealth, which commonly doth follow the state of the Church. Where the Church is quietly and modestly governed,

The state of the Common-wealth commonly following the state of the Church.

{KING Hen. 7.} verned, and the flock of Christ defended by Godly Princes in peace and safety, from devouring and violence of bloody Wolves; the succes of civil estate, for the most part, there doth flourish, and the Princes long continue through Gods preservation, in prosperous rest and tranquility. Contrariwise, where either the Church of Christ through the negligence of Princes, or through their setting on, the poor members of Christ be persecuted and devoured; shortly after ensueth some just recompence of the Lord upon those

The duty of Princes to defend their subjects from the slaughter of the Church of Rome.

Princes, that either their lives do not long continue, or else they find not that quiet in the Commonwealth, which they look for. Examples hereof, as in all other ages be abundant, so in this present time be not lacking, whether we consider the state and condition of other Countries far off, or else of our own Country near at home.

And here not to wander in our story farther than to France only, let us a little behold the example of King Charles the eighth, who living in this Kings time, dyed also not long before him. This Charles is commended of Philippus Commineus, to be a moderate, valiant and victorious Prince, adorned with many special vertues to a Prince appertaining. And yet the same King, because he was slack and remiss in defence of Christs Church, neither did use his authority, nor took his occasion offered to him of God, to amend and reform the estate of the Bishop and Clergy of Rome when he might, he was therefore himself punished and cut off of the Lord, as by his story ensuing may right well appear. For so it is of him recorded, that being marvellously excited and provoked, of his own mind (contrary to the Counsel of most of his Nobles) he took his journey into Italy, neither being furnished with money, nor the season of the year being convenient thereunto. And that this may appear the better to proceed of the Lords doing, to the intent he would have the Church and Clergy of Rome reformed by the Princes Sword, which so vexed all Christendom at that time, we shall hear what is testified in the Commentaries of the said Philip Commineus, Lib. 3. de bello Neapolit. writing in this wife.

The Prophesie of Savanarola.

There was (saith he) in the City of Florence the same time a Dominick Friar, named Hieronymus Savanarola (of whom mention was made before) a man of a right godly and approved life: Who in the said City of Florence preached and Prophesied long before, that the French King should come with an Army into Italy, being stirred up of God to suppress the Tyrants of Italy, and none should withstand him. He should also come to the City of Pise and the state of Florence should be altered; all which happened true. He affirmed moreover to be signified to him of the Lord, that the Ecclesiastical state of the Church must be redressed Per vim armorum. i. by the Sword or force of Arms. Many things also he Prophesied of the Venetians, and of the French King, saying, that the King with some danger and difficulty should pass that journey, yet notwithstanding should overcome it and escape, albeit his strength were never so slender: for God would safely conduct him in that journey, and safely bring him home again. But because he had not done his Office, in amending the state of the Church, and in defending his people from injury, and from devouring, therefore it should come to pass (saith he) and that shortly, that some incommodity or detriment should happen to the King: or if he should escape that danger of his sickness and recover health, then if he did resist the cruelty of the wicked, and procure the safety of the poor and miserable, God would shew mercy unto him, &c. And this the said Hieronymus declared before to Commineus, one of the Kings Counselors, which was the writer of the Story, and required him to signifie the same unto the King; which so did, and he moreover, himself coming to the prefence of the King declared no less.

Vide Phil. Comineum de bello Neapol. lib. 5.

All which things as he had foretold, came directly to effect. For the King being but easily accompanied with a small power entred into Italy; where first he came to Asta, then to Genoa, and to Pisa, from thence proceeded to Florence, which also he obtained, displacing there Petrus Medices the Duke, who had ufed great Tyranny upon the Subjects. From thence he removed toward Rome, where a great part of the City Wall, at the coming of the French King fell down.

Afterward, when the King was entred into the City, and the Pope (who then took part with Alphonsus King of Neapolis against the French King) had immured himself within the mount of Adrian, the Wall of the Castle fell down of it self: whereby when the King was both occasioned, and exhorted also by his Captains to invade the Pope, and to depose him, and to reform the Church of Rome (which he might then easily have done, as it had pleased him) yet all these occasions offered so opportunely of God, moved not the King to do his duty, and to help the poor Church of Christ: wherefore shortly after, returning home into France from Neapolis, either the same year, or the next year following, he was stricken with a sudden sickness at Amboise, as he was looking on them that played at Tennis, and that in the flinking-pit place in all the Castle, where he fell down and died within 12 houres, according to the forewarning of Hieronymus, who wrote unto him a little before, both of his Sons death, and of his own, which was about the year of our Lord, 1498. Ex Philip. Comineo, lib. 5.

De bello Neapol. lib. 3.

Like examples we have many here also in this our Realm of England. So long as King John kept out of the Realm the Popes authority and power, he continued safe and quiet with his Nobles: but so soon as he brought the Realm under tribute and subjection to that foraign Bishop, God stirred up his Nobles against him, whereby he had much disquiet and trouble, and soon thereupon decayed.

Examples of Kings of England, which were blessed of God with long prosperity being enemies to the Bishops of Rome.

Of all the Kings of England, from William the Conquerer to this King Henry the Seventh, were none which either longer continued, or more prosperously flourished, than King Henry the Second, K. Henry the third, King Edward the first, King Edward the third, of whom the first, how stout he was in withstanding Thomas Becket and Pope Alexander the Third, is sufficiently before comprehended.

Augustus Reigned 56 years.

The second, which was Son of King John, albeit through the wretchedness of that time his power was not sufficient to repulse the Popes usurped jurisdiction out of the Realm, yet his will was good: at last he so defended and provided for his Subjects, that they took no great wrong at the Popes hands; who Reigned one year longer than Augustus Cæsar, which hath not commonly been seen in any Prince.

The third, which was King Edward the First, so vigilantly behaved himself for the publick commodity and safety of his people, that he defended them from all foraign power and hotility both of the Scots (then our enemies, now our friends) and also from the Bishop of Rome; taking part with them against us, as may appear above. Furthermore of the same King, and of his worthy Nobles and house of Parliament, how valiantly they stood in denyal of the Popes Subsidies, and also how the said King secluded out of his protection the Bishops, and especially the Archbishop Pecham, for standing with the Pope, read before.

Vide supra.

Vide supra.

Now as touching King Edward the Third, how little he regarded, how Princely he with his Nobles likewise resisted the Popes reservations and provisions, how he bridled the Archbishop John Stratford, and rejected the vain authority of the Bishop of Rome, both in defence of his Subjects, and also in defence of claiming his right title in the Realm of France, read before.

Vide supra. What difference between moderate Princes, and them that were perfect tutors.

Not that I do here affirm or define, as in a general rule, that worldly success and prosperity of life always follow the godly, which we see rather to be given more often to the wicked sort: but speaking of the duty of Princes, I note and observe by examples of Histories, that such Princes as have most defended the Church of Christ committed to their governance, from injury and violence of the Bishop of Rome, have not lacked at Gods hand great blessing and felicity: whereas contrariwise, they which either themselves have been persecutors of Christs members, or have not shielded them by their protection from foraign Tyranny and injuries, have lacked at Gods hand that protection, which the other had; as may appear by King Edward the Second, Richard the Third, King Henry the Fourth, King Henry the Fifth, King Henry the Sixth, &c. who because either negligently they have suffered, or cruelly caused such persecuting laws to be made and so much Christian blood injuriously to be devoured; therefore have they been the less prospered of the Lord, so that either they were depofed, or if they flourifhed for a while, yet they did not long continue, almoft not half the time of the other Kings before named.

And therefore, as the ftate of the Commonwealth doth commonly follow the ftate of the Church, as ye heard before; fo it had been to be wifhed, that this King Henry 7th being otherwife a prudent and temperate Prince, had not permitted the untemperate rage of the Popes Clergy fo much to have their wills over the poor flock of Chrift, as then they had; according as by thefe perfecutions above mentioned may appear. The which King Henry the Seventh, albeit he had a fufficient continuance, who had now Reigned 24 years, yet notwithftanding here cometh the fame thing to be noted, whereof I fpake before; That when the Church of Chrift beginneth to be injured with violence, and to go to wrack through mifforder and negligence, the State of the Commonwealth cannot there long endure without fome alteration, and ftroke of Gods correction. But howfoever this mark is to be taken, thus lieth the ftory: that after the burning and vexing of thefe poor fervants of Chrift above recited, when the perfecution began now in the Church to be hot, God calleth away the King, the fame year above mentioned, which was 1509, after he had Reigned the term of 24 years: Who if he had adjoyned a little more pitiful refpect, in protecting Chrifts poor members from the rage of the Popes Tyranny, to his other great vertues of fingular wifdom, excellent temperance, and moderate frugality; fo much had he been comparable with the beft of thofe Princes above comprehended, as he had been inferior but to a few: but this defect which lacked in him, was fupplied moft luckily (I bleaked be the Lord) by his pofterity fucceeding after him. Of whom in the next Volumn following (Chrift thereunto affifting us) we have to fpecifie more at large.

The death of King Henry.

Country men perfecuted.

Among many other things incident in the Reign of this King Henry the Seventh, I have overpaffed the Hiftory of certain godly perfons perfecuted in the Diocefs of Coventry and Lichfield, as we find them in the Regifters of the Diocefs recorded, here following.

The year of our Lord, 1485, March the 9th, amongft divers and fundry othe good men in Coventry, thefe nine here under named, were examined before John Bifhop of Coventry and Litchfield in Saint Michaels Church, upon thefe Articles following in order.

J. Blomfield.

Irft, John Blomfton was openly and publickly infamed, accufed, reported and appeached, that he was a very Heretick, becaufe he had preached, taught, holden and affirmed, that the power attributed to Saint Peter in the Church of God, by our Saviour Jefus Chrift immediately, did not ftit or paffe from him, to remain with his fucceffors.

The power of Peter fticketh not to his fucceffors.

Item, That there was as much vertue in an herb, as in the Image of the Virgin Mary.

Purgatory denyed.

Item, That Prayer and Alms avail not the dead; for incontinent after death, he goeth either to Heaven or Hell, whereupon he concludeth there is no Purgatory.

Item, That it was foolifhnefs to go on Pilgrimage to the Image of our Lady of Dancaffer, Walfingham, or of the Tower of the City of Coventry: for a man might as well worfhip the bleffed Virgin by the fire fide in the Kitchin, as in the aforefaid places, and as well might a man worfhip the Bleffed Virgin, when he feeth his Mother and Sifter, as in vifiting the Images, becaufe they be no more but dead ftocks and ftones.

Images not to be worfhipped.

Item, That he faid in Englifh with a frowning countenance, as it appeared: a vengeance on all fuch Horfon Prieftis, for they have great envy that a poor man fhould get his living among them.

Richard Higham.

Richard Higham of the fame City was accufed, &c. to be a very Heretick, becaufe he did hold that a Chriftian man being at the point of death, fhould renounce all his own works good and ill, and fubmit him to the mercy of God.

Item, That it was fondnefs to worfhip the Images of our Lady of Tower in the forefaid City, or of other Saints, for they are but ftocks and ftones.

Images referre rather to be burned than to be worfhipped.

Item, That if the Image of our Lady of Tower were put into the fire, it would make a good fire.

Item, That it were better to deal many unto poor folks, than to offer to the Image of Chrift and other Saints which are but dead ftocks and ftones.

{KING Hen. 7.} Robert Crowther.

Robert Crowther of the fame City was accufed, that he was an Heretick, becaufe he did hold, that whofo receiveth the Sacrament of the Altar in deadly fin, or out of charity, receiveth nothing but Bread and Wine.

Item, That neither Bifhop, nor Prieft, or Curates of Churches, have power in the Market of Penance to bind and loofe.

Item, That Pilgrimage to the Image of our Lady of Tower is foolifhnefs; for it is but a ftock or a ftone.

Against Pilgrimage.

John Smith.

John Smith was accufed to be a very Heretick, becaufe he did hold, that every man is bound to know the Lords Prayer, and the Creed in Englifh, if he might for thefe falfe Prieftis.

The Lords Prayer to be in Englifh.

Item, That who fo believed as the Church men did believe, believe ill: and that a man had need to frequent the Schools a good while, ere that he can attain to the knowledge of the true and right Faith.

Item, That no Prieft hath power to abfolve a man in the Market of Penance, from his fins.

Roger Brown.

Roger Brown of the fame City, was alfo accufed to be an Heretick, becaufe he did hold that no man ought to worfhip the Image of our Lady of Walfingham, nor the blood of Chrift at Hailes, but rather God Almighty, who would give him whatfoever he would ask.

Against Pilgrimage.

Item, That he held not up his hand, nor looked up, at the elevation of the Eucharift.

Item, That he promifed one to fhew him certain books of Herefie, if he would fwear that he would not utter them, and if he would credit them.

Item, That he did eat flefh in Lent, and was taken with the manner.

Flefh eating in Lent.

Item, If any man were not fhriven in his whole life long, and in the point of death would be confeffed, and could not, if he had no more but contrition only, he fhould pafs to joy without Purgatory: And if he were confeffed of any fin, and were enjoyned only to fay for Penance one Pater-Nofter, if he thought he fhould have any punifhment in Purgatory for that fin, he would never be confeffed for any fin.

Against Purgatory and confeffion Auricular.

Item, Becaufe he faid all is loft that is given to Prieftis.

Item, That there was no Purgatory, that would pardon all fins, without confeffion and fatisfaction.

Againft confeffion and fatisfaction. Tho. Butler.

Thomas Butler of the fame City was likewife openly accufed to be a very Heretick, becaufe he did hold that there were but two ways, that is to fay, to Heaven and to Hell.

Againft Purgatory.

Item, That no faithful man fhould abide any pain after the death of Chrift, for any fin, becaufe Chrift dyed for our fins.

Item, That there was no Purgatory; for every man immediately after death paffeth either to Heaven or Hell.

Againft Merits.

Item, That whofoever departeth in the faith of Chrift, and the Church, howfoever he hath lived, fhall be faved.

Item, That Prayers and Pilgrimages are nothing worth, and avail not to purchafe Heaven.

John Falks.

John Falks was accufed to be a very Heretick, becaufe he did affirm, That it was a foolifh thing to offer to the Image of our Lady, faying, Her head fhall be hoar or I offer to her: What is it but a block? If it could fpeak to me, I would give it an half peny worth of Ale.

Againft Images.

Item, That when the Prieft carrieth to the fick the Body of Chrift, why carrieth he not alfo the Blood of Chrift?

Item, That he did eat Cow-milk upon the firft Sunday of Lent.

Item, That as concerning the Sacrament of Penance and Abfolution, no Prieft hath power to abfoil any Man from his fins, when as he cannot make one Hair of his Head.

It is Herefie to fay a ftone is a ftone, and a block is a block.

Item, That the Image of our Lady was but a Stone or a Block.

R. Hilmin.

Richard Hilmin was accufed that he was a very Heretick, becaufe he did fay and maintain, That it was better to part with Mony to the Poor, than to give Tithes

{KING Hen. 7.}

Tithes to Prieſts, or to offer to the Images of our Lady; and that it were better to offer to Images made by God, than to the Images of God painted.

Item, That he had the Lords Prayer and the Salutation of the Angel and the Creed in Engliſh, and another Book did he fee and had, which contained the Epiſtles and Goſpels in Engliſh, and according to them would he live, and thereby believed to be ſaved.

Scripture in Engliſh.

Item, That no Prieſt ſpeaketh better in the Pulpit than that Book.

Item, That the Sacrament of the Altar is but Bread and that the Prieſts make it to blind the people.

Item, That a Prieſt whiles he is at Maſs, is a Prieſt; and after one Maſs done, till the beginning of another Maſs, he is no more than a Lay-man, and hath no more power than a meer Lay-man.

¶ After they were enforced to recant, they were aſſoiled and put to Penance.

Margery Goyt.

IN the year of our Lord 1488, the third of April, Margery Goyt, Wife of James Goyt of Auborn, was brought before the foreſaid John Biſhop of Coventry and Lichfield, who was there accuſed that ſhe ſaid, That that which the Prieſts lift over their heads at Maſs, was not the True and very Body of Chriſt: For if it were ſo, the Prieſts could not break it ſo lightly into four parts, and ſwallow it as they do: for the Lords Body hath Fleſh and Bones, ſo hath not that which the Prieſts receive.

Againſt the Sacrament of the Altar.

Item, That Prieſts buying forty Cakes for a half peny, and ſhewing them to the people, and ſaying, That of every of them they make the Body of Chriſt, do nothing but deceive the people and enrich themſelves.

Item, Seeing God in the beginning did create and make Man, how can it be that Man ſhould be able to make God?

¶ This Woman alſo was conſtrained to recant, and ſo was ſhe affoiled and did Penance.

Thus much I thought good here to inſert, touching theſe foreſaid Men of Coventry, eſpecially for this purpoſe, becauſe our cavilling adverſaries be wont to object againſt us the newneſs of Chriſts old and ancient Religion. To the intent therefore they may ſee this Doctrine, not to be ſo new as they report, I wiſh they would conſider both the Time and Articles here objected againſt theſe foreſaid perſons, as is above-premiſed.

I ſhould alſo in the ſame Reign of King Henry the Seventh, have induced that ſtory of Johannes Picus Earl of Miranadula, the mention of whoſe name partly is touched before. This Picus Earl of Mirandula, being but a young Man, was ſo excellently witted, and ſo ſingularly learned in all Sciences and in all Tongues, both Latin, Greek and Hebrew, Chaldee, and Arabe, that coming to Rome booted and ſpurred, he ſet up 90 Concluſions, to diſpute in the ſame with any in all Chriſtendom, whoſoever would come againſt him. Of which Concluſions divers were touching the matter of the Sacrament, &c. And when none was found in all Rome, nor in Europe, that openly would diſpute with him, privily and in corners certain of the Popes Clergy, Prelates, Lawyers and Friers, by the Pope appointed, conſulted together to enquire upon his Concluſions, whereupon they did articulate againſt him for ſuſpition of Herefie. And thus the unlearned Clergy of Rome privily circumvented and entangled this learned Earl in their ſnares of Herefie, againſt whom they durſt never openly diſpute. He died being of the age of 32 years, of ſuch wit and towardneſs, as is hard to ſay, whether ever Italy bred up a better. In his ſickneſs Charles the Eighth, then French King, moved with the fame of his Learning, came to viſit him. The Furniture of his Books coſt him 7000 Florens. A little before his death his mind was to give all away, and to take a Coul, to go about and Preach, but the Lord would not permit him. His ſtory, requireth a long tractation, which if place do ſerve, we will not peradventure forget. With two Popes, that is, with Pope Innocent, and Alexander the ſixth he had much vexation.

A brief note of Eccleſiaſtical Laws Ordained by Ancient Kings in this Realm.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws ordained by ancient Kings of this Realm.

FOrſomuch as it is, and hath been a perſuaſion long gendred in the heads of many, that the Biſhops of Rome be the univerſal heads of the whole Militant Church of Chriſt in Earth, and have always ſo continued from the beginning of the Primitive time; and that no Prince, King nor Emperor in his own Realm hath any intereſt to intermeddle with matters and Laws Eccleſiaſtical, but only the ſaid Biſhops of Rome: to refel and remove that Opinion out of the heads of all Engliſh-men, as a thing moſt falſe, and contrary both to Hiſtories of Time, and examples of ancient Kings and Governors of this Realm, I thought to fill up a little end of Paper here left, with ſome ſuch brief rehearſal of Laws deviſed and appointed by Kings and Rulers of this Land, for the ordering of the Church, and cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, to the intent that all the World may ſee that the Government of Chriſts Church here in Earth under Chriſt hath not depended only of the Pope from ancient time, but hath been rather directed by ſuch Kings and Princes as God here had placed under him to govern the people of this Realm of England, as followeth here in this preſent Table to be noted.

A brief recapitulation of Ancient Eccleſiaſtical Laws, by ſundry Kings of this Realm Ordained, for Government of the Church, before the Conqueſt.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws of King Inas, or Ina.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws of King Inas.

1. FIrſt, King Inas, who Reigned in this Land the year of our Lord 712, commanded the Miniſters ſhould frame their converſation of life according to the Laws prefcribed.

2. That Infants ſhould be Baptized within 30 days.

3. Item, That no Man Lay or Spiritual, Free or Bond, ſhould labour on the Sunday.

4. Item, He eſtabliſhed immunity of Churches, and Sanctuary. Alſo he took order for the true payment of the Church-duties, and of the firſt fruits of all that was ſown to be paid at the day of St. Martin.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws of King Alured, or Alfred.

King Alured's Laws.

1 KIng Alured after he had ordained divers judicial punifhments for violating the Holy Precepts of God commanded by Moſes, he alſo confirmed and enlarged the priviledge of Sanctuary; he laid double pain upon ſuch as committed offences in the Solemnities of certain Feaſts; Alſo againſt them that committed Sacrilege.

2. He made a Law againſt Prieſts committing Murther.

3. Alſo he made a Law againſt Whoredom, Adultery and Fornication.

4. He

4. He appointed days of Faſting and ceaſing from Labour.

5. Item, He ſet order for making and keeping Vows.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws of King Edward the Elder, and Gythrum the Dane King.

King Edward's Laws.

1. FIrſt, They agreed upon the Sanctuary; they forbad Gentiliſm and Paganiſm; they laid puniſhment upon the Clergy committing Theft, Perjury, or Murther, Fornication, or any capital crime.

2. They puniſhed Prieſts, that pretermitted their Office in pronouncing Feſtival, or Faſting-days.

3. They made a Law againſt all Labour, Buying and Selling upon the Sabbath; alſo for keeping of Feaſts.

Item, For no Execution to be done on the Sunday. Alſo againſt Witches and Sorcerers, &c.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws of King Ethelſtane.

King Ethelſtane's Laws.

1. KIng Ethelſtane, who Reigned the year of our Lord 924, commanded that every Village of his own ſhould give a monthly Corody to a poor perſon.

2. That fifty Pſalms ſhould be ſung daily in the Church, for the King, &c.

3. He alſo Ordained puniſhment for Witches and Sorcerers, &c.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws of King Edmund.

King Edmund's Laws.

1. AFter King Ethelſtane followed King Edmund about the year of our Lord 940, who eſtabliſhed and provided Laws againſt the unchaſte living of Churchmen.

2. Item, He made Laws concerning Tithes, with firſt Fruits of every Mans Crop, and Alms-mony duly to be paid.

3. Item, He Enacted, That Biſhops of their own proper charges ſhould repair Churches, and ſhould alſo admoniſh the King for the furniſhing of the ſame.

4. For Perjury alſo, and for Fighting within the Church, he ſet Laws and Pains.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws of King Edgar.

King Edgar's Laws.

1. KIng Edgar, who began his Reign about the year of our Lord 959, amongſt other Conſtitutions Eccleſiaſtical, Ordained, That the Sunday ſhould be kept Holy from Saturday at noon till Monday in the morning.

2. Item, He Ordained and Decreed concerning Liberties and Freedoms of the Church; for Tithes alſo, and firſt Fruits of Corn, and paying of Peter-pence.

3. Item, For Holy-days and Faſting-days.

4. Item, That Aſſemblies or Synods ſhould be kept twice every year, whereat as well the Biſhop of the Diocels ſhould be preſent, as the Civil Magiſtrate.

When Kings of England came firſt under the Popes ſubjection.

And thus ſtood the Government of this Realm of England all the time before the Conqueſt, till Pope Hildebrand, through the ſetting on of the Saxons, began firſt to bring the Emperor (which was Henry 4th*) under foot. Then followed the ſubduing of other Emperors, Kings, and Subjects after that; as namely here in* England, when Lanfrancus, Anſelmus, and Becket, went to complain of their Kings, and Governors, then brought they the Popes Judicial Authority firſt from Rome over this Land, both over Kings and Subjects; which ever ſince hath continued, till theſe later years. Albeit the ſaid Kings of this Realm of England being prudent Princes, and ſeeing right well the ambitious preſumption of thoſe Romiſh Biſhops, did what they could to ſhake off the yoke of their Supremacy, as appeareth by the Laws and Acts of their Parliaments, both in King Edward the Third's time, King Richard the Second, and King Henry the Fourth, above in their Parliament Notes ſpecified; yet for fear of other Foreign Princes, and the blind Opinion of their Subjects, ſuch was then the calamity of that time, that neither they could nor durſt compaſs that which fain they would; till at laſt the time of their Iniquity being compleat, through the Lords wonderful working, their Pride had a fall, as in the Volume enſuing (the Lord ſo granting) ſhall by proceſs of Hiſtory be declared.

King Ethelrede, Anno 979.

{KING Ethr. 7.}

KIng Ethelrede alſo, which ſucceeded after Edgar and Edward, appointed divers Laws for publick Regiment, whereof we find but few touching matters Eccleſiaſtical, for Tithes, Lights, Feaſts and nothing elſe, and therefore we paſs further to the Laws of Canutus.

King Ethelrede's Laws.

Eccleſiaſtical Laws of King Canutus.

King Canute's Laws.

Canutus the Dane King began to Reign in this Land in the year of our Lord 1016. The ſaid Canutus (as Ethelrede had done before) divided his Laws into Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal.

1. That Eccleſiaſtical perſons being accuſed of Fighting, Murder, or any other offence, ſhould purge themſelves thereof.

2. That Prieſts ſhould be degraded for Perjury, and put in Sureties of good behaviour.

3. He prayeth Prieſts, that they will live chaſt, and commanded other Religious.

4. He limited the Degrees of Marriage.

5. Item, He command Celebration of the Sabbath from Saturday at noon till Monday morning as Edgar had done before, forbidding Markets, Huntings, Labours, and Courtkeepings during the ſaid ſpace.

6. He Ordained each Chriſtian Man to come to the Houſel thrice yearly at the leaſt; That they ſearch and injure after Gods Law, and his Commandements.

7. That every Chriſtian Man underſtand the points of his Faith, and that at leaſt he learn perfectly the Lords Prayer and the Creed; and that whoſoever cannot, the ſame ſhall be excluded from the Euchariſt, and ſhall not be received to undertake for others in Baptiſm.

8. That Biſhops and Prieſts ſhould do their Duties; that they cry out and warn their Flocks when the Woolf cometh.

9. That at the Court of every Shire the Biſhop of the Diocels ſhall be preſent with the Sheriff, and that the one ſhall teach them Gods Law, and the other Mans Law, as ye heard in King Edgar's Laws before.

Kings of England before the Conqueſt Governors as well in Caules Eccleſiaſtical as Temporal

Many other Laws, both Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal, beſides theſe were enacted by theſe and other Kings here in England before the Conqueſt, but theſe be ſufficient to give the underſtanding Reader to conſider, how the Authority of the Biſhops of Rome, all this while, extended not ſo far to preſcribe Laws for Government of the Church, but that Kings and Princes of the Realm, as they be now, ſo were then full Governors here under Chriſt, as well in cauſes Eccleſiaſtical as Temporal, both in directing Orders, inſtituting Laws, in calling of Synods, and alſo in conferring Biſhopricks and Benefices, without any leave of the Romiſh Biſhops. Thus Odo, Dunſtane, Oſwold, Ethelwold, Adelmus, and Lanfrancus, although they ſet their Palls afterward from Rome, yet were they made Biſhops and Archbiſhops by Kings only, not by Popes.

{KING Hen. 7.}

The proud Primacy of Popes described, in order of their rising up by little and little, from faithful Bishops and Martyrs, to become Lords and Governors over Kings and Kingdoms, exalting themselves in the Temple of God, above all that is called God, &c. 2 Thessal. 2.

The Martyrdom of good Bishops under wicked Emperors in the Primitive Church.

IN the Description of the Primitive Church hath been (gentle Reader) set forth and exhibited before thine eyes the grievous afflictions and forceful torments, which through Gods secret sufferance fell upon the True Saints and Members of Christs Church in that time, especially upon the good Bishops, Ministers and Teachers of the Flock, of whom some were Scourged, some Beheaded, some Crucified, some Burned, some their Eyes put out, some one way, some another, miserably consumed: which days of woful calamity continued (as is forethewed) near the space of Three hundred years. During which time the Dear Spouse and Elect Church of God, being sharply assaulted on every side, had small rest, no joy, nor outward safety in this present World, but in much bitterness of heart, in continual tears and mourning under the Cross passed over their days, being spoiled, imprisoned, contemned, reviled, famished, tormented and martyred every where, who neither durst well tarry at home for fear and dread, and much less durst come abroad for the Enemies, but only by night, when they assembled as they might, sometime to sing Psalms and Hymns together. In all which their dreadful dangers, and sorrowful afflictions, notwithstanding the goodness of the Lord left them not desolate; but the more their outward tribulations did increase, the more their inward consolations did abound; and the farther off they seemed from the joys of this life, the more present was the Lord with them with grace and fortitude, to confirm and rejoyce their Souls. And though their Possessions and Riches in this World were lost and spoiled, yet were they enriched with Heavenly Gifts and Treasures from above an hundred fold. Then was True Religion truly felt in heart. Then was Christianity not in outward appearance shewed, but in inward affection received, and in the True Image of the Church, not in outward shew pretensed, but in her perfect state effectual. Then was the Name and Fear of God true in heart, not in lips alone dwelling. Faith then was fervent, Zeal ardent, Prayer not swimming in the lips, but groaned out to God from the bottom of the spirit. Then was no Pride in the Church, nor leisure to seek Riches, nor time to keep them. Contention for trifles was then so far from Christians, that well were they when they could meet to pray together against the Devil, author of all Dissention. Briefly, the whole Church of Christ Jesus, with all the members thereof, the farther it was from the type and shape of this World, the nearer it was to the blessed respect of Gods favour and supportation.

The true Riches of the Church described.

The first rising of the Bishops of Rome.

The first rising of the Bishops of Rome.

AFter this long time of trouble it pleased the Lord at length mercifully to look upon the Saints and Servants of his Son, to release their Captivity; to release their misery, and to bind up the old Dragon the Devil, which so long vexed them, whereby the Church began to aspire to some more liberty: and the Bishops which before were as abjects, utterly contemned of Emperors, through the Providence of God (which disposeth all things in his time after his own Will) began now of Emperors to be esteemed and had in price. Furthermore, as Emperors grew more in Devotion, so the Bishops more and more were exalted, not only in favour, but also preferred unto honour, insomuch that in short space they became not quarter Masters, but rather half Emperors with Emperors.

After this, in process of time, as Riches and Worldly wealth crept into the Clergy, and that the Devil had poured his Venom into the Church (as the Voice was heard the same time over Constantinople) so true Humility began to decay, and Pride to set in his foot, till at last they played as the Ivy doth with the Oak-tree, which first beginning with a goodly green shew, imbraceth him so long, till at length it overgroweth him, and so sucketh all his moisture from him, setting his Root fast in his Bark, till at last it both stifleth the Stock, and killeth the Branches, and so cometh to be a Nest for Owls and all unclean Birds. Not unlike therefore it was said of Augustine, Religio peperit divitias, & filia devoravit matrem; that is, Religion begat Riches, and the Daughter hath devoured the Mother. The verity whereof notoriously may appear above all other in the Church of Rome, and the Bishops of the same. For after that the Church of Rome, through favour of Emperors was indued with Lands, Donations, Possessions and Patrimonies, so that the Bishops thereof feeling the smack of Wealth, Ease and Prosperity, began to swell in Pomp and Pride; the more they flourished in this World, the more Gods Holy Spirit forsook them, till at last the said Bishops, who at the first were poor, creeping low upon the Ground, and were persecuted a long time, every Man treading upon them in this World, now of persecuted people, began to be persecutors of others, and to tread upon the necks even of Emperors, and to bring the heads of Kings and Princes under their Girdle. And not only that, but furthermore through Pride and Riches, they were so far gone from all Religion, that in the very end they became the great adversary of God (whom we call Antichrist) prophecied of so long before by the Spirit of God to come, sitting in the Temple of God, &c. Of whom thus we read in the Epistle of Paul, 2 Thess. 2. where he saith, We beseech you Brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our fellowship together in him, that ye be not suddainly moved in your mind, nor troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor letter, as it were from us, as though the day of Christ were at hand. Let no man in any wise deceive you, for that day shall not come except there come a departing first, and that man of sin be revealed, even the son of perdition, that adversary which exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped, so that he shall sit in the Temple of God, as God, and set forth himself as he were God, &c.

The Spiritual Riches of the Church turned to Worldly Riches. Ex Hist. Sozom. Discipuli. Look Rev. 3. and in his book of the profession of Penitence.

The great adversary called Antichrist, described by St. Paul, 2 Thess. 2.

By which words of St. Paul, we have divers things to understand: First, That the day of the Lords coming was not then near at hand. Secondly, The Apostle giving us a token before, to know when that day shall approach, biddeth us look for an adversary first to be revealed. Thirdly, To shew what adversary this shall be, he expresseth him not to be as a common adversary, such as were then in his time. For although Herod, Annas, and Caiaphas, the High Priests and Pharisees, Tertullus, Alexander the Coppersmith, Elymas and Simon Magus, and Nero the Emperor, in Paul's time were great adversaries: yet here he meaneth another besides these, greater than all the rest, not such a one as should be like to Priest, King or Emperor, but such as far exceeding the state of all Kings, Priests and Emperors, should be the Prince of Priests, should make Kings to stoop, and should tread upon the neck of Emperors, and make them to kiss his feet: Moreover, where the Apostle saith, That he shall sit in the Temple of God; thereby is meant, not the personal sitting of the Pope in the City only of Rome, but the Authority and Jurisdiction of his See exalted in the whole Universal Church, equal with God himself. For let Men give to the Pope that which he in his Laws, Decrees, and in his Pontifical requireth, and what difference is there between God and the Pope? If God set Laws and Ordinances, so doth he. If God have his Creatures, so hath he. If God require obedience, so doth he. If the breach of Gods Commandments are punished, much more be his. God hath his Religion, the Pope alſo hath his, yea for Gods one Religion, he hath an hundred. God hath inſtituted but a Vocatie, he hath an hundred. God hath inſtituted but a few Holy-days; for Gods one, he hath inſtituted forty. And if the Holy-day that God hath appointed be ſimplex, the Feaſt that the Pope appointeth, is duplex & triplex. Chriſt is the Head of the Church; ſo is the Pope. Chriſt giveth influence to his Body; ſo doth the Pope. Chriſt forgiveth ſin; the Pope doth no leſs. Chriſt expelleth evil ſpirits by his Power; ſo pretendeth the Pope by his Holy Water. Furthermore, where Chriſt went bare-foot upon the bare Ground, he with his Golden Shooes is carried on Mens Shoulders. And where Chriſt was called Sanctus Sanctorum; he is called Sanctorum Sanctiſſimus. Chriſt never practiſed but only the Spiritual Sword; he claimeth both Spiritual and Temporal. Chriſt bought the Church; he both buyeth and ſelleth the Church. And if it be neceſſary to believe Chriſt to be the Saviour of the World; ſo it is neceſſary to believe the Pope to be the head of the Church. Chriſt paid Tribute unto Ceſar; he maketh Ceſar pay Tribute unto him. Finally, the Crown of Chriſt was of ſharp Thorn; the Pope hath three Crowns of Gold upon his head, ſo far exceeding Chriſt the Son of God in glory of this World, as Chriſt exceedeth him in the Glory of Heaven. The image and patern of whoſe intolerable Pride and Exaltation, according as St. Paul doth deſcribe him in his Epiſtle aforeſaid, we have here ſet forth, not only in theſe Tables to be ſeen, and by his own Facts to be noted, but alſo in his own Words and Regiſters, Clementines, Extravagants, and Pontificals expreſſed, as in order (the Lord willing) ſhall follow.

The exaltation of Popes above Kings and Emperors, out of Hiſtories.

John Patriarch of Conſtantinople ſubdued by the Biſhop of Rome.

FIrſt, after that Italy and the City of Rome were overrun by the Gothes and Vandales, ſo that the Seat of the Empire was removed to Conſtantinople, then began Joannes Patriarch of Conſtantinople to put forth himſelf, and would needs be called Univerſall Biſhop of the World; but the Biſhop of Rome in no caſe would ſuffer that, and ſtopped it. After this came the Emperors Deputy, and Exarch of Ravenna to rule Italy, but the Biſhop of Rome through aid of the King of Lombards, ſoon quailed him.

The Emperors Lieutenant of Ravenna diſcharged by the Lombards and Romans Biſhops.

Not long after, about the year of our Lord 500, came Phocas the murderer, who ſlew the Emperor of Conſtantinople, his Maſter Mauritius and his Children. By which Phocas the Biſhops of Rome aſpired firſt to their preheminence, to be counted the head Biſhops over the whole Church, and ſo together with the Lombards began to rule the City of Rome. Afterwards when the Lombards would not yield unto him, in accomplihing his ambitious deſire, but would needs require of the Biſhop the ſaid City of Rome; he ſtirred up Pipinus, but firſt depoſed Childericus the King of France, and ſo thrulling him into an Abby, ſet up in his place Pipinus and his Son Carolus Magnus to put down the ſaid King of Lombards called Aiſtulphus. And ſo he tranſlated the Empire from Conſtantinople into France, dividing the ſpoil between him and them; ſo that the Kings of France had all the Poſſeſſions and Lands which before belonged to the Empire, and he to receive of them the quiet Poſſeſſion of the City of Rome, with ſuch Donations and Lordſhips, which now they challenge unto them under the name of St. Peter's Patrimony, which they falſly aſcribe to that Donation of Conſtantinus the great.

Boniface the Third obtained of Phocas to be called Univerſall Biſhop. Pope Zacharias pulleth down Childerick the French King, and ſetteth Pepine Ins his place.

Pipinus and Carolus Magnus ſet up by Pope Zachary.

How the Biſhops of Rome came firſt to be the head Biſhops of the Church.

Donations of Conſtantinus, Pipinus and others falſe and forged.

It followeth then in proceſs of time, after the days of Pipinus, Carolus and Ludovicus (who had indued theſe Biſhops of Rome, called now Popes, with large Poſſeſſions) when the Kings of France were not ſo appliable to their beck, to aid and maintain them againſt the Princes of Italy, who began then to pinch the ſaid Biſhops for their wrongful uſurped Goods, they practiſed with the Germans to reduce the Empire to Otho, firſt of that name, Duke of Spain, referring the Election thereof to ſeven Princes Electors of Germany, which was about An. 1002. notwithſtanding, reſerving ſtill in his hands the Negative voice, thinking thereby to enjoy that they had in quietneſs and ſecurity, and ſo did for a good ſpace.

At length, when ſome of theſe German Emperors alſo after Otho began a little to ſpurn againſt the ſaid Biſhops and Popes of Rome, ſome of them they accurſed, ſome they ſubdued and brought to the kiſſing of their feet, ſome they depoſed, and placed other in their Poſſeſſions.

So was Henry 4th by theſe Biſhops accurſed, the Emperor himſelf forced with his Wife and Child to wait attendance upon the Popes pleaſure three days and three nights in Winter, at the Gates of Canuſium. Read before. Beſides all this the ſaid Pope ſo fed up Rodulphus to be Emperor againſt him; who being ſlain in War, then the ſaid Pope Gregory 7th, not reſting thus, ſtirred up his own Son Henricus the 5th, to Fight againſt his own natural Father, and to depoſe him, which Henricus the 5th alſo himſelf afterward Accuſed and Excommunicated, and the Saxons at laſt fet up by the Biſhops to Fight againſt him.

Pope Innocent the Third againſt K. John.

After this, the Emperors began to be ſomewhat calmed, and more quiet, ſuffering the Biſhops to Reign as they lifted, till Frederick the firſt, called Barbaroſſa, came and began to ſtir Coals againſt them. Howbeit they hampered both him and his Son Henry in ſuch ſort, that they brought firſt the Neck of Frederick, in the Church of Venice, under their Feet to tread upon; and after the ſaid Biſhops, Crowning Henricus his Son in the Church of St. Peter, ſet his Crown on his Head with their Feet, and with their Feet ſpurned it off again, to make him know that the Popes of Rome had power both to Crown Emperors, and Depoſe them again. Whereof read before.

Emperors brought to kiſs the Popes Feet. Henricus the Fourth, ſeventh of that name, waited at the Popes Gate Three days. Rodulphus, and at laſt his own Son ſet up to Fight againſt him. Read before. Pope Alexander the Third treadeth upon the Neck of Frederick, the Emperour. Pope Celeſtine Crowneth Henry the Fifth, Emperour, with his Foote, and with his Foot ſpurneth the Crown from his Head again.

Then followed Philippus Brother to Henry aforeſaid, whom alſo the Popes Accuſed, about the year of our Lord 1198, and ſet up Otho Duke of Saxony. But when the ſaid Otho began to be ſo ſaucy, to diſpoſeſs the Biſhops of their Cities and Lands which they had encroached into their hands, they could not bear that, but incontinent they put him beſides the Cuſhion. The like alſo fell upon Otho the 4th, that followed after Philip, who was ſuffered no longer than four years to Reign, about the year of our Lord 1209.

Henricus 3. Gregory 9. Innocent 4. againſt Fredericus 2. Emperor.

At this time Fredericus the Second, the Son of Frederi-cus Barbaroſſa above-mentioned, was but young, whom the Biſhops of Rome ſuppoſing to find more mortified and tamed to their hand, advanced to be Emperor after his Father. But that fell out much contrary to their expectation. For he perceiving the immoderate Pomp and Pride of the Roman Biſhops, which he could in no caſe abide, ſo nettled them and cut their Combs, and waxed ſo ſtout againſt them, intending to extirp their Tyranny, and to reduce their pompous Riches to the ſtate and condition of the Primitive Church again, putting ſome of them to flight, and priſoning ſome of their Cardinals, that of three Popes, one after another, he was Accurſed, circumvented by Treaſon, at laſt Depoſed, and after that Poyſoned, and at laſt forſaken and died.

War raiſed by the Biſhops of Rome.

After this Frederick followed his Son Conradus, whom the forefaid Biſhops for his diſobedience ſoon diſpatched, executing againſt him in moral War the Lawes of Thu-vin, whereby he was at length driven into his Kingdom of Naples, and there deceaſed.

An Accuſation, &c.

This Conradus had a Son called Conradinus, Duke and Prince of Suevia. When this Conradinus, after the deceaſe of his Father came to enjoy his Kingdom of Naples, the ſaid Biſhops ſtirred up againſt him Charles the French Kings Brother, in ſuch ſort, that through craftly conveyance, both Conradinus which deſcended of the blood of ſo many Emperors, and alſo Frederick Duke of Auſtria, were both taken, and after much wretched handling in their miſerable indurance, unſeeming to their ſtate, at length were both brought under the Axe by the Popes procurement, and ſo both beheaded. And thus ended the Imperial ſtock of Frederick the Firſt, ſurnamed Barbaroſſa.

The Infelicety of Pope Boniface againſt Philip the French King.

The like as happed to Frederick the Emperor, had almoſt alſo fallen upon Philip the French King, by Pope Boniface the Eighth, who, becauſe he could not have his Commodities and Revenues out of France after his will, ſent out his Bulls and Letters Patents to diſplace King Philip aforeſaid, and to poſſeſs Albertus King of Romans in his room.

And thus hitherto in Foreign Stories. Now touching our Country Princes here in England, to ſpeak ſomewhat likewiſe of them: did not Pope Alexander the Third preſumptuouſly taking upon him where he had nothing to do, to intermeddle with the Kings Subjects, for the death of Becket the rebel, albeit the King ſufficiently cleared himſelf thereof; yet notwithſtanding, did he not wrongfully bring the ſaid K. Henry the Second to ſuch Penance as it pleaſed him to enjoyn, and alſo violently conſtrained him to ſwear obedience to the See of Some? The like alſo was ſhewed before in this ſtory to happen to King John his Son. For when the ſaid King like a valiant Prince had held out the tyranny of thoſe Biſhops ſeven years together, were not all the Churches in England barred up, and his Inheritance with all his Dominions given away by Pope Innocent the Third, to Ludovicus the French King, and he afterward compelled to ſubmit both himſelf, and to make his whole Realm fedotary to the Biſhops of Rome, and moreover the King himſelf driven alſo to ſurrender his Crown to Pandulphus the Popes Legate, and ſo continued as a private perſon five days, ſtanding at the Popes courteſie, whether to receive it again at his hands or no? And when the Nobles of the Realm roſe afterward againſt the King for the ſame, was not he then fain to ſeek and ſue to the foreſaid Pope for ſuccour, as by his own Letter, taken out of the publick Rolls, may appear?

And yet all this notwithſtanding that the ſaid K. John did ſo yield to the Pope, he was both purſued by his Nobles, and alſo in the end was Poyſoned by a ſubject of the Popes own Religion, a Monk of Swinſted; as I have ſufficiently to prove, not only by William Caxton above in my ſtory alledged, Pag. 332, but alſo have teſtimony of the moſt part of Chronicles for the ſame (a few only excepted) as of Thomas Gray in his French Chronicle; alſo of an other French Chronicle in Meeter; of Ramiphus Ceſtrenſis; Thomas Rudburn alſo doth witneſs the ſame; ſo doth Richard Rede, in novo Chronico ad tempora, Henr. 6. Ex D. Paulo 2 Theſſ. 2.

1. FOraſmuch as it ſtandeth upon neceſſity of Salvation, for every human Creature to be ſubject unto me the Pope of Rome, it ſhall be therefore requiſite and neceſſary for all Men that will be ſaved, to learn and know the Dignity of my See and Excellency of my Domination, as here is ſet forth according to the truth and very words of mine own Laws, in ſtyle as followeth: 2. Firſt my Inſtitution began in the Old Teſtament, and was conſummate and finiſhed in the New, in that my Prieſthood was prefigured by Aaron; And other Biſhops under me were prefigured by the Sons of Aaron, that were under him. 3. Neither is it to be thought that my Church of Rome hath been preferred by any General Council, but obtained the Primacy only by the Voice of the Goſpel, and the mouth of the Saviour. 4. And hath in it neither ſpot nor wrinkle, nor any ſuch like thing. 5. Wherefore as other Seats be all inferior to me, and as they cannot Abſolve me: ſo have they no power to bind me or to ſtand againſt me, no more than the Axe hath power to ſtand or preſume to bow him that heweth with it, or the Saw to preſume above him that ruleth it. 6. This is the Holy and Apoſtolick Mother-Church of all other Churches of Chriſt; 7. from whoſe Rules it is not meet that any perſon or perſons ſhould decline; but like as the Son of God came to do the Will of his Father, ſo muſt you do the Will of your Mother the Church, the head whereof is the Church of Rome. 8. And if any other perſon or perſons ſhall err from the ſaid Church, either let them be admoniſhed, or elſe their names taken, to be known who they be that ſwerve from the Cuſtoms of Rome. 9. Thus then foraſmuch as the holy Church of Rome whereof I am Governor, is ſet up to the whole World for a glaſs or example, reaſon would what thing ſoever the ſaid Church determineth, or ordaineth, that to be received of all Men for a general and a perpetual rule for ever. 10. Whereupon we ſee it now verified in this Church, that was fore-prophefied by Jeremy, ſaying, Behold, I have ſet thee up over Nations and Kingdoms, to pluck up and to break down, to build and to plant, &c. 11. Whoſo underſtandeth not the Prerogative of this my Prieſthood, let him look up to the Firmament, where he may ſee two great Lights, the Sun and the Moon, one ruling over the day, the other over the night; So in the Firmament of the Univerſal Church, 12. God hath ſet two great Dignities, the Authority of the Pope, and of the Emperor. Of the which two, this our Dignity is ſo much more weighties, as we have the greater charge to give account to God for Kings of the Earth; and the Laws of Men. 13. Wherefore it known to you Emperors, which know it alſo right well, that you depend upon the judgment of us; we muſt not be brought and reduced to your will. 14. For (as I ſaid) look what difference there is betwixt the Sun and the Moon, ſo great is the power of the Pope ruling over the day, that is, over the Spirituralty, above Emperors and Kings,

And although the said Emperor wrote to me, alledging the words of St. Peter, commanding us to submit our selves to every human Creature, as to Kings, Dukes, and other for the cause of God, &c. 1 Pet. 2. Yet in answering again in my Decretal, I expounded the mind and the words of St. Peter to pertain to his Subjects, and not his Successors, willing the said Emperor to consider the person of the speaker, and to whom it was spoken. For if the mind of Peter had been there to debase the Order of Priesthood, and to make us underlings to every human Creature, then every Jack might have dominion over Prelates; which maketh against the example of Christ; setting up the Order of Priesthood to bear Dominion over Kings, according to the saying of Jeremy,

It becometh not Sheep, nor belonged to their office to accuse their Shepherd. 29. For else why was Dioscorus Patriarch of Alexandria condemned and excommunicated at Chalcedon? Not for any cause of his Faith, but only for that he durst stand against Pope Leo, and durst Excommunicate the Bishop of Rome: for who is he that hath Authority to accuse the Seat of St. Peter? 30. Albeit I am not ignorant what St. Jerome writeth, that Paul would not have reprehended Peter, unless he had thought himself equal unto him. 31. Yet Jerome must thus be expounded by my Interpretation, that this equality betwixt Peter and Paul consisteth not in like Office of Dignity, but in pareneſs of Converſation. 32. So for gave Paul his licenſe to preach but Peter, and that by the Authority of God, saying, Separate to me Paul and Barnabas, &c. 33. Wherefore be it known to all Men, that my Church of Rome is Prince and Head of all Nations, 34. the Mother of the Faith, 35. the Foundation Cardinal, whereupon all Churches do depend, as the Door doth depend by the Hinges, 36. the ſtrif of all other Seats, without all ſpot or blemiſh. 37. And hath always full Authority in her hands to make new Laws and Decrements. And to alter Statutes, Privileges, Rights or Documents of Churches; to ſeparate things joyned, and to joyn things ſeparated upon right conſideration, either in whole or in part, either perſonally or generally. 48. Of the which Church of Rome I am head as a King is over his Judges, 49. the Vicar of St. Peter, 50. yea, not the Vicar of Peter properly, but the Vicar of Chriſt properly, and ſucceſſor of Peter, 51. Vicar of Jeſus Chriſt, 52. Rector of the Univerſal Church, 53. director of the Lords Univerſal flock. 54. Chief Magiſtrate of the whole World. 54. Cephas, i. caput, the head and chief of the Apoſtolick Church, 55. Univerſal Pope, and Diceſan in all places empt, as well as every Biſhop is in places not empt, 56. moſt mighty Priеſt, 57. Lex animata in terris. i. 58. a living Law in the Earth judged to have all Laws in the cheſt of my Breſt, 59. bearing the room of no pure Man, 60. being more God and not Man, but the admiration of the World, and a middle thing betwixt both. 61. Having both Swords in my power, both of the Spiritual and Temporal Juriſdiction, 62. ſo far ſurmounting the Authority of the Emperor, that I of mine own power alone without a Council, have Authority to depoſe him, or to transfer his Kingdom, and to give a new Election as I did to Frederick and divers other. 63. What power then or poteſtate in all the World is comparable to me, who have Authority to bind and looſe both in Heaven and Earth? 64. That is,

is, who have power both of Heavenly things, and alſo of Temporal things, 65. To whom Emperors and Kings be more inferior, than Lead is inferior to Gold. 66. For do you not ſee the necks of great Kings and Princes bend under our knees, yea and think themſelves happy and well defenced, if they may kiſs our hands? 67. Wherefore the faucineſs of Honorius the Emperor is to be reprehended, and his conſtitution abolished, who with his laity would take upon him to intermeddle, not only with the temporal Order, but alſo with matters Eccleſiaſtical, and Election of the Pope. 68. But here perceaſe ſome will object the examples and words of Chriſt, ſaying, That his Kingdom is not of this World, and where he being required to divide betwixt two Brethren their Heritage, did refuſe it. But that ought to be no prejudice to my power, 69. For if Peter, and I in Peter, if we I ſay, have Power to bind and looſe in Heaven, how much more then is it to be thought, that we have Power in Earth to looſe and to take away Empires, Kingdoms, Dukedoms, and what elſe ſoever mortal Men may have, and to give them where he will? 70. And if we have authority over Angels, which be the Governours of Princes, what then may we do upon their inferiours and ſervants? 71. And for that you ſhall not marvel that I ſay Angels be ſubject to us, you ſhall hear what my bleſſed Clerk Antoninus writeth of the matter, ſaying, That our power, of Peter and me is greater than the Angels in four things: 1. In juriſdiction. 2. In adminiſtration of Sacraments, 3. In knowledge, 4. and in reward, &c. 72. And again in Bulla Clementis, do I not there command in my Bull the Angels of Paradiſe, to abſolve the ſoul of Man out of Purgatory, and to bring it into the glory of Paradiſe? 73. And now beſides my Heavenly power, to ſpeak of mine Earthly juriſdiction, who did firſt Tranſlate the Empire from the Greeks to the Almains, but I? 74. And not only in the Empire am I Emperor, the place being empty, but all Eccleſiaſtical Benefices have full right and power to give, to Tranſlate, and to diſpoſe after my arbitrement. 75. Did not I Zacharias put down Childerick the old King of France, and ſet up Pipinus? 76. Did not I Gregorius the Seventh ſet up Robert Wyſard, and make him King of Sicilia and Duke of Capua? &c. 77. Did not I the ſame Gregorius alſo ſet up Rodulphus againſt Henry the Fourth Emperor? 78. And though this Hemricus was an Emperor of moſt ſtout courage, who ſtood 62 times in open field againſt his Enemies, 79. yet did not I Gregorius bring him coram nobis, and make him ſtand at my Gate three days and three nights bare-foot and bare-leg, with his Wife and Child, in the deep of Winter, both in Froſt and Snow, intreating for his abſolution, and after did excommunicate him again, ſo that he was twice Excommunicated in my days? 80. Again, did not I Paſchalis, after Gregory, ſet up the Son of the ſaid Henricus againſt his Father in War, to poſſeſs the Empire, and to put down his Father, and ſo he did? 81. Item, Did not I, Pope Alexander, bring under Henry the Second, King of England, for the death of Thomas Becket, and cauſe him to go bare-foot to his Tomb at Canterbury with bleeding feet? 82. Did not I Innocentius the Third, cauſe King John to kneel down at the feet of Pandulphus my Legate, and offer up his Crown to his hands; alſo to kiſs the feet of Stephen Langhton Biſhop of Canterbury, and beſides merced him in a thouſand Marks by year? 83. Did not I Urbanus the Second, put down Hugo Earl in Italy, diſcharging his Subjects from their Oath and Obedience to him? 84. Did not I Paſchalis Excommunicate alſo his Son Henry the 5th, and get out his of hands all his Right and Title of Elections and Donations of ſpiritual Promotions? Did not I Gelaſius the 2d bring the Captain of Cintius under, unto the kiſſing of my feet? And after Gelaſius, did not I Calixtus the 2d quail the foreſaid Emperor Henricus the 5th, and alſo bring in ſubjection Gregory, whom the ſaid Emperor had ſet up againſt me to be Pope, bringing him into Rome upon a Camel, his face to the Horſe tail, making him to hold the Horſe tail in his hand in ſtead of a Bridle? 85. Further, did not I Innocentius the 2d ſet up and make Lotharius to be Emperor for driving out Pope Anacletus out of Rome? 86. Did not I the ſaid Innocentius take the Dukedom of Sicile from the Empire, and make Roger to be King thereof, whereby afterward the Kingdom became the patrimony of Saint Peter? 87. Did not I Alexander the 3d ſuſpend all the Realm, and Churches of England for the Kings Marriage, Anno 1159? 88. But what do I ſpeak of Kings? Did not the ſaid Alexander bring the valiant Emperor Frederick the firſt to Venice, by reaſon of his Son Otho there taken priſoner, and there in Saint Marks Church made him fall down flat upon the ground while I ſet my foot upon his neck, ſaying the verſe of the Pſalm, Super aſpidem & baſiliſcum ambulabis? &c. 89. Did not I Adrianus Pope, an Engliſh-man born, Excommunicate Wm. King of Sicily, and refuſe his peace, which he offered? And had not he overcome me in plain field, I would have ſtaken him out of his Kingdom of Sicile, and Dukedom of Apulia. 90. Alſo did not I the ſaid Adrianus Control and Correct the foreſaid Fredericus Emperor, for holding the left Stirrup of my Horſe, when he ſhould have holden the right? 91. And afterward did not I Excommunicate and Curſe him, for that he was ſo faucy to ſet his own name in writing before mine? 92. And although a poor Fly afterward overcame and ſtrangled me, yet I made Kings and Emperors to ſtoop. 93. Did not I Innocentius the 3d deject Philippus, Brother to Frederick, from the Imperial Crown, being elected without my leave, and after ſet him up again? And alſo ſet up Otho of Brunſwick, and after did Excommunicate and alſo depoſe the ſame Four years, ſetting up the French King to War againſt him? 94. Then was Frederick the 2d ſet up by me, and Reigned 37 years; and yet 5 years before he died. 95. Did not I Honorius interdict him, for not reſtoring certain to their poſſeſſions at my requeſt? 96. Whom alſo Gregorius the 9th did Excommunicate twice together, and raiſed up the Venetians againſt him. 97. And at length Innocentius ſpoiled him of his Empire; after that he cauſed him to be poiſoned, at length to be ſtrangled by one Manfredus, and did Excommunicate his Son Conradus after him, not only depriving him of his right Inheritance, but alſo cauſed him with Frederick Duke of Auſtria to be beheaded. 98. Thus then did not I Excommunicate and depoſe all theſe Emperors in order? Henry the Fourth, Hemricus the Fifth, Fredericus the Firſt, Philippus, Otho the Fourth, Fredericus the Second, and Conradus his Son? 99. Did not I interdict King Henry the Eighth? 100. And all his Kingdom of England? 101. And will not his Prudence and Power prevented my practiſe, I had diſplaced him from his Kingdom alſo. Briefly, who is able to comprehend the greatneſs of my Power and of my Seat? 102. For by me only general Councils take their force and confirmation, 103. and the interpretation of the ſaid Councils, and of all other caſes hard and doubtful, ought to be referred and ſtand to my determination. 104. By me the Works of all Writers, whatſoever they be, either be reproved or allowed. 105. Then how much more ought my Writings and Decrees to be preferred before all other? 106. Inſomuch that my Letters and Epiſtles Decretal be equivalent with the general Councils, 107. And whereas God hath ordained all causes of Men to be judged by Men, he hath only reserved me, that is, the Pope of Rome, without all question of Men, unto his own judgment. 108. And therefore where all other creatures be under their Judge, only I, which in Earth am the Judge of all, can be judged of none, either of Emperor, nor the whole Clergy, nor of Kings, nor of the People. 109. For who hath power to judge upon his Judge? 110. This Judge am I, and that alone, without any other reliftance of any Council joyned to me. For I have Power upon Councils; Councils have no Power upon me. But if the Council determine amiss, it is in my authority alone to infringe it, or to condemn whom I luft without any Council. 111. And all for the Prehemineence of my Predecessor Bleffed Saint Peter, which by the voice of the Lord he received, and ever fhall retain. 112. Furthermore, and whereas all other Sentences and Judgments, both of Councils, Person or Persons, may and ought to be examined, 113. for that they may be corrupted four ways, by fear, by gifts, by hatred, by favour, only my Sentence and judgment muft ftand, 114. as given out of Heaven by the mouth of Peter himfelf, which no Man muft 115. break, nor retract, 116. no Man muft difpute or doubt of. 117. Yea, if my judgment, ftatute, or yoke feem fcarcely tolerable, yet for remembrance of Saint Peter it muft be humbly obeyed. 118. Yea and moreover Obedience is to be given, not only to fuch Decrees fet forth by me in time of my Popedom, but alfo to fuch as I do forefee and commit to writing before I be Pope. 119. And although it be thought by fome writers, to be given to all Men to err, and to be deceived, 120. yet neither am I a pure Man. 121. And again, the Sentence of my Apoftolick Seat is always conceived with fuch moderation, is concoct and digefted with fuch patience and reverence, and delivered out with fuch gravity and deliberation, that nothing is thought in it neceffary to be altered or detracted. 122. Wherefor it is manifeft, and teftified by the voice of Holy Biffhops, that the Dignity of this my Seat is to be reverenced through the whole World, in that all the faithful fubmit themfelves to it as to the head of the whole body: 123. Whereof it is fpoken to me by the Prophet, fpeaking of the Ark: If this be humbled, whither fhall you run for fuccour, and where fhall your glory become? Seeing then this is fo, that fo holy Biffhops and Scriptures do witneſs with me, what fhall we fay then to fuch as will take upon them to judge of my doings, to reprehend my proceedings, or to require Homage and Tribute of me to whom all other are fubject? 124. Againſt the firſt fort the Scripture fpeaketh, Deus. Thou oughteſt not to put thy Sithe into another Mans Corn. Which thing to attempt againſt me, what is it but plain Sacrilege? 125. According to my Canonifts, which thus define Sacrilege to conſift in three things: either when a Man judgeth of his Prelates judgment; or when the Holy-day is prophaned; or when reverence is not given to Laws and Canons. 126. Againſt the ſecond fort maketh the place of the Book of Kings, where we read the Ark of God was brought from Gaba to Jeruſalem, and in the way the Ark inclining by reaſon of the unruly Oxen, Ozias the Levite put to his hand to help, and therefore was ſtrucken of the Lord. By this Ark is ſignified the Prelates; by the inclination thereof, the fall of Prelates, 127. which alſo be ſignified by the Angels that Jacob did ſee going up and coming down the Ladder: 128. Alſo by the Prophet where he ſaith, He bowed down the Heavens and came down, &c. By Ozias, and by the unruly Oxen are meant our ſubjects. 129. Then like as Oziae was ſtricken for putting his hand to the Ark inclining, no more muſt Subjects rebuke their Prelates going awry. 130. Albeit, here may be anſwered again, that all be not Prelates which ſo be called; for it is not the name that maketh a Biſhop, but his life. 131. Againſt the third ſort of ſuch as would bring us under the tribute and exactions of ſecular Men, maketh the New Teſtament, where Peter was bid to give the Groat in the Fiſhes mouth, but not the head nor the body of the Fiſh; No more is the Head or Body of the Church ſubdued to Kings, but only that which is in the mouth, that is, the exterme things of the Church. And yet not tfey neither. 132. For ſo we read in the Book of Geneſis, that Pharaoh in time of dearth ſubdued all the Land of the Egyptians, but yet he Miniſtred to the Prieſts, ſo that he took neither their poſſeſſions from them, nor their liberty. If then Prelates of the Church muſt be neither judged, nor reprehended, nor exacted, how much more ought I to be free from the ſame, 133. which am the Biſhop of Biſhops, and head of Prelates? 134. For it is not to be thought that the caſe betwixt me and other Prelates; betwixt my See and other Churches, be like, 135. Although the whole Catholick and Apoſtolick Church make one Bride-chamber of Chriſt; yet the Catholick and Apoſtolick Church of Rome had the Prehemineince given over all other by the mouth of the Lord himſelf, ſaying to Peter, Thou art Peter, &c. 136. Thus a diſcretion and difference muſt be had in the Church as it was betwixt Aaron and his Children; 137. Betwixt the Seventy two Diſciples, and the Twelve Apoſtles; betwixt the other Apoſtles and Peter: 138. Wherefore it is to be concluded, that there muſt be an order and difference of Degrees in the Church betwixt Power, Superior and Inferior; without which order the Univerſity of the whole cannot conſiſt. 139. For as amongſt the Angelical Creatures above in Heaven there is ſet a difference and inequality of Powers and Orders, ſome be Angels, ſome Archangels, ſome Cherubins, and Seraphins: 140. So in the Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy of the Church militant in the Earth, Prieſts muſt not be equal with Biſhops, Biſhops muſt not be like in Order with Archbiſhops, with Patriarchs or Primates, 141. who contain under them three Archbiſhops, as a King containeth three Dukes under him. In the which number of Patriarchs cometh in the ſtate of 142. Cardinals or Principals, ſo called, becauſe as the Doorr turneth by his hinges, ſo the Univerſal Church ought to be ruled by them. 143. The next and higheſt Order above theſe is mine, which am Pope, differing in Power and Majority, and Honor reverential, from theſe and all other degrees of Men. 144. For the better declaration whereof, my Canoniſts make three kinds of power in Earth: Immediata, which is mine immediately from God; Derivata, which belongeth to other Inferior Prelates from me; 145. Miniſtrala, belonging to Emperors and Princes to Miniſter for me. For the which cauſe the annointing of Princes, and my confecration doth differ; for they are anointed only in the arms or ſhoulders, and I in the head, to ſignifie the difference of Power betwixt Princes and me. 146. This Order therefore of Prieſts, Biſhops, Archbiſhops, Patriarchs and other, as a thing moſt convenient, my Church of Rome hath ſet and inſtituted through all Churches, following therein, not only the example of the Angelical Army in Heaven, but alſo of the Apoſtles. 147. For amongſt them alſo there was not an uniform equality or inſtitution of one degree, 148. but a diverſity or diſtinction of Authority and Power. Albeit they were all Apoſtles together, yet it was granted notwithſtanding to Peter (themſelves alſo agreeing to the ſame) that he ſhould bear Dominion and Superiority over all the other Apoſtles; 149. And therefore he had his name given him Cephas, that is, head or beginning of the Apoſtlehood. 150. Whereupon the Order of Prieſthood firſt in the New Teſtament began in Peter, to whom it was ſaid, Thou art Peter, and upon thee I will build my Church, 151. And I will give thee the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven; And thou being converted confirm thy Brethren, 152. I have prayed for thee that thy faith ſhall not fail. Wherefore ſeeing ſuch power is given to Peter, 153. and to me in Peter, being his ſucceſſor, 154. who is he then in all the World that ought not to be ſubject to my Decrees which have ſuch Power in Heaven, in Hell, in Earth, with the quick and alſo the dead? 155. Commanding and granting in my Bull of Lead ſent to Vienna, unto all ſuch as died in their Peregrination to Rome, that the pain of Hell ſhould not touch them: And alſo that all ſuch as took the holy Croſs upon them ſhould every one at his requeſt, not only be delivered himſelf, but alſo deliver three or four ſouls whomſoever he would, out of Purgatory: 156. Again, having ſuch promiſe and aſſurance that my faith ſhall not fail, who then will not believe my Doctrine? For did not Chriſt himſelf firſt pray for Peter that his faith ſhould not fail? 157. Alſo have I not a ſure promiſe of Pauls own mouth, writing to my Church by theſe words; God is my witneſs whom I ſerve in my Spirit, in the Goſpel of his Son, that without ceaſing I make mention of you always in my Prayers? Rom. 1. 158. Wherefore as I condemn all ſuch worthily which will not obey my Decrees, to be diſpoſſeſſed of all their honour without reſtitution; 159. So all they that believe not my Doctrine, or ſtand againſt the privilege of the Church, eſpecially the Church of Rome, I pronounce them Hereticks: 160. And as the other before is to be called unjuſt, ſo this Man is to be called an Hereticke: 161. For why? he goeth againſt the faith, which goeth againſt her who is the Mother of Faith. 162. But here may riſe perceſe a doubt or ſcruple, that if my faith and knowledge ſtand ſo ſure by the promiſe of Chriſt, and by the continual Prayer of Saint Paul; whether is it true, or is it to be granted, that any other ſhould excel me in knowledge, or interpretation of holy Scripture? 163. For look whoſe knowledge is grounded on moſt reaſon, his words ſhould ſeem to be of more authority. 164. Whereunto I anſwer and grant, that many there be, and have been more abundantly indued with fuller grace of the Holy Ghoſt and greater excellency of knowledge; and therefore that the: tractations of Auguſtine, Jerom and others ought to be preferred before the conſtitutions of ſevers Popes; yet I ſay in determination of cauſes, becauſe they have not the vertue and heighit of that authority which is given to me, therefore in expounding of Scriptures they are to be preferred, but in deciding of matters they ftand inferior to my authority. By vertue of which authority, 165. both they themſelves be alſo ſwed for Doctors, and their Works approved, and alſo all other matters be ruled, through the Power of the Keys which is given to me immediately of Chriſt. Although I deny not but the ſame Keys be alſo committed to other Prelates, as they were to other Apoſtles beſides Peter, 166. yet it is one thing to have the Keys, another thing to have the uſe of the Keys. 167. Where fore here is to be noted a diſtinction of Keys, after the mind of my ſchool Doctors; one Key which is called Clavis ordinis, having authority to bind and looſe, but not over the perſons whom they bind and looſe, and this authority they take not immediately of Chriſt, but mediately by me the Vicar of Chriſt. The other Key is called Clavis juriſdictionis, which I the Vicar of Chriſt take immediately of him, having not only authority to bind and looſe, but alſo Dominion over them on whom this Key is exercifed. By the juriſdiction of which Key the fulneſs of my Power is ſo great, that whereas all other are Subjects; 168. yea and Emperors themſelves ought to ſubdue their executions to me: Only I am ſubject to no Creature, 169. no not to my ſelf, except I lift, In foro penitentiæ, to my ghoſtly Father ſubmitting my ſelf as a ſinner, but not as Pope. So that my papal Majeſty ever remaineth unpuniſhed; Superior to all Men, 170. whom all perſons ought to obey, 171. and follow, 172. whom no Man muſt judge nor accuſe of any Crime, either of Murder, Adultery, Simony, or ſuch like: 173. No man depoſe, but I my ſelf; 174. No man can Excommunicate me, yea though I Communicate with the Excommunicate, for no Canon bindeth me. Whom no Man muſt 175. For he that lieth to me is a Church Robber, 176. And who obeyeth not me is an Heretick, and an excommunicate Perſon. 177. For like as all the Jews were commanded to obey the High Prieſt of the Levitical Order, of what ſtate or condition ſoever they were; ſo are all Chriſtian men more and leſs bound to obey me Chriſts Lieutenant in Earth, Concerning the obedience or diſobedience of whom ye have in Deut. 17. 178. Where the common Gloſs ſaith, That he who denieth to the High Prieſt Obedientiam, ſubmiſſion and Condemneth, is much as he that denieth to God his Omnipotentiam. Thus then it appeareth, that the greateſt of my Prieſthood, 179. began in Melchiſedech, was ſolemnized in Aaron, continued in the Children of Aaron, perfectionated in Chriſt, repreſented in Peter, exalted in the Univerſal juriſdiction, and manifeſted in Silveſter, &c. So that through this Prehemineece of my Prieſthood, having all things ſubject to me, 180. it may ſeem well verified in me that was ſpoken of Chriſt, Pſalm 8. Omnia ſubjeciſti ſub pedibus ejus, Oves & Boves, & Univerſa pecora campi; Volucres cœli & piſces maris, &c. Thou haſt ſubdued all things under his Feet, Sheep and Oxen, and all Cattel of the Field, the Birds of Heaven, and Fiſh of the Sea, &c. 181. Where it is to be noted, that by Oxen, Jews and Hereticks; by Cattel of the Field, Pagans be ſignified. For although as yet they be out of the uſe of my Keys of binding and looſing, yet they be not out of the juriſdiction of my Keys, but if they return I may abſolve them. 182. By Sheep and all Cattel, are meant all Chriſtian men both great and leſs, whether they be Emperors, Princes, Prelates, or other. By Birds of the Air you may underſtand the Angels and Poteſtates of Heaven, who be all ſubject to me, in that I am greater than the Angels; and that in four things, as is afore declared; and have power to bind and looſe in Heaven, 183. and to give Heaven to them that fight in my Wars. 184. Laſtly, by the Fiſhes of the Sea, are ſignified the ſouls departed in pain or in Purgatory, as Gregory by his Prayer delivered the ſoul of Trajanus out of Hell, and I have Power to deliver out of Purgatory whom I pleaſe. 185. Laſtly, by the Fiſhes of the Sea are ſignified ſuch as be in Purgatory; informuch that they ſtand in need and neceſſity of other Mens help, and yet be in their journey Viatores, & de foro Papæ. i. Paſſengers and belonging to the Court of the Pope; therefore they may be relieved out of the Storehouſe of the Church, by the participation of Indulgence. And foraſmuch as ſome do object that my Pardons cannot extend to them that be departed, for that it was said to Peter, Whatsoever thou shalt loose upon Earth; and therefore seeing they are not upon Earth, they cannot be loosed of me: Here I answer again by my Doctors, that this word Super terram, &c. i. Upon the Earth, may be referred two manner of ways; First to him that is the Loofer, so that he which shall loose shall be upon the Earth; and so I grant that the Pope being dead, can loose no Man. Also it may be referred to him that is loosed, so that whosoever is loosed must be upon the Earth, or about the Earth; And so the souls in Purgatory may be loosed, which albeit they are not upon the Earth, yet they are about the Earth, at least they be not in Heaven. And because oftentimes one Question may rise upon another, and the heads of Men now adays are curious, a Man hearing now that I can deliver out of Purgatory, will ask here a question, Whether I be able alfo to empty all Purgatory at once, or not? To whom my Canonist Augustl. de Ancho. doth answer by a triple distinction: Quantum ad absolutam meam jurisdictionem, quantum ad ordinatam executionem, quantum ad divinam acceptationem. First touching my absolute jurisdiction, he saith, I am able to rid out all Purgatory together, for as many as be under my jurisdiction, as all be, except only Infants unbaptised, In Limbo, and Men departed only, Cum Baptismo flaminis, That is, with the Baptism of the Spirit, and such as have no Friends to do for them that wherefore pardons be given; these only excepted. For all other besides, the Pope (he saith) hath Power to release all Purgatory at once, as touching his absolute jurisdiction. Albeit Thomas Aquinas part 4. denieth the same, forsomuch as Christ himself (he saith) when he came down, did not utterly at once release all Purgatory. As touching my ordinary execution they hold, that I may if I will, but I ought not to do it. Thirdly, as concerning the Divine acceptation, that is, how God would accept it if I did it, that (they say) is unknown unto them, and to every Creature, yea, and to the Pope himself.

And to the intent I would all Men to fee and understand that I lack not witnesses moe besides these, if I list to bring them out, you shall hear the whole Quire of my divine Clergy brought out, with a full voice testifying in my behalf in their Books, Tractations, Distinctions, Titles, Glosses, and Summaries, as by their own words here followeth. The Pope (say they) being the Vicar of Jesus Christ through the whole World, in the Head of the living God, hath that Dominion and Lordship which Christ here in Earth would not have, although he had it in habitu, but gave it to Peter in Actu, that is, the Universal jurisdiction both of Spiritual things, and also of Temporal, which double jurisdiction was figuried by the two swords in the Gospel, and also by the offering of the wife men, who offered not only Incense, but also Gold, to signifie not only the spiritual Dominion, but also the Temporal to belong to Christ and to his Vicar. For as we read, The Earth is the Lords and the fulnes thereof; as Christ saith, All power is given to him both in Heaven and Earth: So it is to be affirmed inclusive, that the Vicar of Christ hath Power on things Celestial, Terrestrial, and Infernal. Which he took immediately of Christ; all other take it immediately by Peter and the Pope. Wherefore such as say that the Pope hath Dominion only on Spiritual things in the World, and not of Temporal, may be likned to the Counsellors of the Kings of Syria, 3 Reg. 20. which said, That the Gods of the Mountains be their Gods, and therefore they have overcome us; but let us fight against them in the low Meadows and in Vallies where they have no Power, and so we shall prevail over them. So evil Counsellors now adaies, through their pestiferous flattery, deceive Kings and Princes of the Earth; saying, Popes and Prelates be Gods of Mountains, that is, of Spiritual things only, but they be not Gods of Vallies, That is, they have no Dominion over Temporal things, and therefore let us fight with them in the Vallies, that is, in the Power of the Temporal possessions, and so we shall prevail over them. But what saith the Sentence of God to them, let us hear. Because (saith he) the Syrians say that the God of Mountains is their God, and not the God of Vallies, therefore I will give all this multitude into your hand, and ye shall know that I am the Lord. What can be more effectually spoken to set forth the Majesty of my jurisdiction, which I received immediately of the Lord; of the Lord, I say, and of no Man? For whereas Constantine the Emperor gave to Silvester, enduing him with this possession and patrimony; that is so to be expounded and taken not so much for a donation, as to be counted for a restitution made of that which tyrannously was taken from him before. And again whereas I have given at sundry times to Ludovicus the other Emperors, of my Temporal lands and possessions, yet that was done not so much for any recognising of Homage to them, as for keeping peace with them. For I owe to Emperors no due Obedience that they can claim; but they owe to me as to their Superior. And therefore for a diversity betwixt their degree and mine, in their consecration they take the Unction on their Arm, I on the Head. And as I am Superior to them, so am I Superior to all Laws, and free from all constitutions. Which am able of my self, and by my interpretation to prefer equity not being written before the Law written; having all Laws within the cheft of my Breft, as is aforesaid. And whatsoever this my See shall enact, approve or disprove, all Men ought to approve or reprove the same, without either judging, disputing, doubting or retracting. Such is the priviledge given of Christ, in the behalf of Peter, to the Church of Rome, 186. that what Country soever, Kingdom or Province, chusing to themselves Bishops and Ministers, although they agree with all other Christs faithful people in the name of Jesus, that is, in Faith and Charity, believing in the same God, and in Christ His true Son, and in the Holy Ghost, having also the same Creed; the same Evangelists and Scriptures of the Apostles: yet notwithstanding unless their Bishops and Ministers take their Origine and Ordination from this Apostolick Seat, they are to be counted not of the Church. So that succession of Faith only is not sufficient to make a Church, except the Ministers take their Ordination by them which have their succession from the Apostles. So their Faith, Supremacy, the Chair of Peter, Keys of Heaven, power to bind and loose, all these be inseparable to the Church of Rome: so that it is to be presumed, that God always providing, and Saint Peter helping the Bishoprick and Diocefs of Rome, it shall never fall from the Faith. And likewise it is to be presumed and presupposed that the Bishop of that Church is good and always Holy. Yea, and though he be not always good, or be destitute of his own merits, yet the merits of Saint Peter, Predecessor of that place, be sufficient for him, who hath bequeathed and left a perpetual dowry of merits, with inheritance of innocency, to his posterity, 178. yea, though he fall into Homicide or Adultery, he may sin, but yet he cannot be accused, but rather excused by the Murthers of Sampson, the Thefts of the Hebrews, the Adultery of Jacob, 188. And likewise, if any of his Clergy should be found embracing a Woman, it must be expounded and presupposed that he doth it to bless her. Furthermore, the Pope (say they) hath all the Dignities, and all Power of all Patriarchs. In his Primacy, he is Abel; In Government, the Ark of Noah; In Patriarchdom, Abraham; In Order, Melchisedec; In Dignity, Aaron; In Authority, Moses; In Seat-Judicial, Samuel; In Zeal, Helias, In Meekneſs, David; In Power, Peter; In Unction, Christ. (Nay, thou art Antichrist) My Power (they say) is greater than all the Saints. For whom I Constitute, no man may Infirm: I may favour and spare whom I pleaſe, 189. to take from one and to give to another. And if I be an Enemy to any man, all men ought to eſchew that perſon forthwith, and not tarry and look while I bid them ſo to do. All the Earth is my Diocefs, and I the Ordinary of all men, having the authority of the King of all Kings upon Subjects. I am all in all, and above all, 190. ſo that God himſelf and I the Vicar of God have both one Conſiſtory, 191. and I am able to do almoſt all that God can do, Clave non errante. 192. Item, It is ſaid of me, that I have an heavenly Arbitrement, and therefore am able to change the nature of things, Subſtantialia unius applicando alteri, and of nothing to make things to be; and of a Sentence that is nothing to make it ſtand in effect; In all things that I liſt, my will to ſtand for reaſon. For I am able by the Law to diſpenſe above the Law, and of Wrong to make Juſtice, in correcting Laws and changing them. You have heard hitherto what that Matrimony is not yet conſummate by carnal Copulation, it is but a ſmall matter for me to diſpenſe withall. In ſumma, if ye liſt briefly to hear the whole number of all ſuch caſes as properly do appertain to my Papal Diſpenſation, which come to the number of one and fifty Points, that no man may meddle withall but only I my ſelf alone, I will recite them firſt in Latin, then in Engliſh, as they be ſet forth in my Canonical Doctors.

The riches and possessions of the Pope.

After that I have now sufficiently declared my Power in Earth, in Heaven, and in Purgatory, how great it is, and what is the falsness thereof, in binding, loosing, commanding, permitting, electing, confirming, deposing, dispensing, doing and undoing, &c. I will entreat now a little of my Riches likewise, and great Possessions, that every man may see by my wealth and abundance of all things, Rents, Tythes, Tributes, my Silks, my purple Miters, Crowns, Gold, Silver, Pearls and Gems, Lands and Lordships, how God here prospereth and magnifieth his Vicar on the Earth. For to me pertaineth first the Imperial City of Rome; the Palace of Lateran, the Kingdom of Cicily is proper to me, Apulia and Capua be mine. Also the Kingdom of England and Ireland, be they not, or ought they not to be Tributaries {KING Hen. 7.} Tributaries to me? 214. To these I adjoyn also, besides other Provinces and Countries, both in the Occident and Orient, from the North to the South, these Dominions by name, 215. as *Surrianum, Montembordon, & Lunæ insulam, Corsicæ Regnum, Parvum Mantuam, Montemfeletes, Insulam Venetiarum, Ducatum Ferrariæ, Canellum, Caniodam, Ducatum Histriæ, Dalmatiam, Exarchatum Ravennæ, Faventiam, Cesenam, Castrum, Theriatus Roccam Mediolanum, Castrum Ceperianum, Castrum Cusianum, Terram Cornulariam, Ducatum Armini, Contam, Montem Ferretum, Montem Capineæ seu Olympicum, Castrum exforii. For in that I took them of him, I took them not as a gift (as is afore-mentioned) but as a restitution. And that I rendred them again to Otho, I did it not for any duty to him, but only for peace sake. What should I speak here of my daily Revenues, of my First-fruits, Annats, Palls, Indulgences, Bulls, Confessionals, Indults and Rescripts, Testaments, Dispensations, Priviledges, Elections, Prebends, religious Houses, and such like, which come to no small mass of money? Insomuch, that for one Pall to the Archbishop of Mentz, which was wont to be given for ten thousand 218. Florens, now it is grown to twenty seven thousand Florens, which I received of Jacobus the Archbishop, not long before Basil Council: Besides the Fruits of other Bishopricks in Germany, coming to the number of fifty, whereby what vantage cometh unto my Coffers, it may partly be conjectured. But what should I speak of Germany? 219. when the whole World is my Diocese, as my Canonists do say, and all men are bound to believe, 220. except they will imagine (as the Manichees do) two beginnings, which is false and heretical? For Moses & faith, In the beginning God made heaven and earth, and not in the beginnings. 221. Wherefore as I began, so I conclude, commanding, declaring, and pronouncing, to stand upon necessity of Salvation, for every humane Creature to be subject to me.
